desire to do it, and I am unable. What shall I do? one while the wounds of my brothers are before my eyes, and the form of a murder so dreadful; at another time, affection and the name of mother break my resolution. Wretch that I am! To my sorrow, brothers, will you prevail; but still prevail; so long as I myself shall follow the appeasing sacrifice that I shall give you, and you yourselves;" she thus said, and turning herself away, with trembling right hand she threw the fatal brand into the midst of the flames.

That billet either utters, or seems to utter, a groan, and, caught by the reluctant flames, it is consumed. Unsuspecting, and at a distance, Meleager is burned by that flame, and feels his entrails scorched by the secret fires; but with fortitude he supports the mighty pain. Still, he grieves that he dies by an inglorious death, and without shedding his blood, and says that the wounds of Ancæus were a happy lot. And while, with a sigh, he calls upon his aged father, and his brother, and his affectionate sisters, and with his last words the companion of his bed, perhaps, too, his mother as well; 285 viii. 522-545. the fire and his torments increase; and then again do they diminish. Both of them are extinguished together, and by degrees his spirit vanishes into the light air.

Lofty Calydon now lies prostrate. Young and old mourn, both people and nobles lament; and the Calydonian matrons of Evenus, tearing their hair, bewail him. Lying along upon the ground, his father pollutes his white hair and his aged features with dust, and chides his prolonged existence. But her own hand, conscious to itself of the ruthless deed, exacted punishment of the mother, the sword piercing her entrails. If a God had given me a mouth sounding with a hundred tongues, and an enlarged genius, and the whole of Helicon besides; still I could not enumerate the mournful expressions of his unhappy sisters. Regardless of shame, they beat their livid bosoms, and while the body still exists, they embrace it, and embrace it again; they give kisses to it, and they give kisses to the bier there set. After he is reduced to ashes, they pour them, when gathered up, to their breasts; and they lie prostrate around the tomb, and kissing his name cut out in the stone, they pour their tears upon his name. Them, the daughter of Latona, at length satiated with the calamities of the house of Parthaon, bears aloft on wings springing from their bodies, except Gorge, and the daughter-in-law of noble Alcmena; and she stretches long wings over their arms, and makes their mouths horny, and sends them, thus transformed, through the air.

EXPLANATION.

It is generally supposed that the story of the chase of the Calydonian boar, though embracing much of the fabulous, is still based upon historical facts. Homer, in the 9th book of the Iliad, alludes to it, though in somewhat 286 viii. 546-558. different terms from the account here given by Ovid; and from the ancient historians we learn, that Æneus, offering the first fruits to the Gods, forgot Diana in his sacrifices. A wild boar, the same year having ravaged some part of his dominions, and particularly a vineyard, on the cultivation of which he had bestowed much pains, these circumstances, combined, gave occasion for saying that the boar had been sent by Diana. As the wild beast had killed some country people, Meleager collected the neighbouring nobles, for the purpose of destroying it. Plexippus and Toxeus, having been killed, in the manner mentioned by the Poet, Althæa, their sister, in her grief, devoted her son to the Furies; and, perhaps, having used some magical incantations, the story of the fatal billet was invented.

Homer does not mention the death of Meleager; but, on the contrary, says that his mother, Althæa, was pacified. Some writers, however, think that he really was poisoned by his mother. The story of the change of the sisters of Meleager into birds is only the common poetical fiction, denoting the extent of their grief at the untimely death of their brother.

FABLE V.

Theseus, returning from the chase of the Calydonian boar, is stopped by an inundation of the river Acheloüs, and accepts of an invitation from the God of that river, to come to his grotto. After the repast, Acheloüs gives him the history of the five Naiads, who had been changed into the islands called Echinades, and an account of his own amour with the Nymph Perimele, whom, being thrown by her father into the sea, Neptune had transformed into an island.

In the meantime, Theseus having performed his part in the joint labour, was going to the Erecthean towers of Tritonis. But Acheloüs, swollen with rains, opposed his journey, and caused him delay as he was going. "Come," said he, "famous Cecropian, beneath my roof; and do not trust thyself to the rapid floods. They are wont to bear away strong beams, and to roll down stones, as they lie across, with immense roaring. I have seen high folds, contiguous to my banks, swept away, together with the flocks; nor was it of any avail there for the herd to be strong, nor for the horses to be swift. Many bodies, too, of young men has this torrent overwhelmed in its whirling eddies, when the snows of the mountains dissolved. Rest is the safer for thee; until the river runs within its usual bounds, until its own channel receives the flowing waters."

To this the son of Ægeus agreed; and replied, "I will make use of thy dwelling and of thy advice, Acheloüs;" and both he did make use of. He entered an abode built of pumice stone with its many holes, and the sand-stone far from smooth. The floor was moist with soft moss, shells with alternate rows of murex arched the roof. And now, Hyperion having measured out two parts of the light, Theseus and the companions of his labours lay down upon couches; on the one side the son of Ixion, on the other, Lelex, the hero of Troezen, having his temples now covered with thin grey hairs; and some others whom the river of the Acarnanians, overjoyed with a guest so great, had graced with the like honour. Immediately, some Nymphs, barefoot, furnished with the banquet the tables that were set before them; and the dainties being removed, they served up wine in bowls adorned with gems. Then the mighty hero, surveying the seas that lay beneath his eyes, said, "What place is this?" and he pointed with his finger; "and inform me what name that island bears; although it does not seem to be one only?" In answer to these words, the River said, "It is not, indeed, one object that we see; five countries lie there; they deceive through their distance. And that thou mayst be the less surprised at the deeds of the despised Diana, these were Naiads; who, when they had slain twice five bullocks, and had invited the Gods of the country to a sacrifice, kept a joyous festival, regardless of me. At this I swelled, and I was as great as I ever am, in my course, when I am the fullest; and, redoubled both in rage and in flood, I tore away woods from woods, and fields from fields; and together with the spot, I hurled the Nymphs into the sea, who then, at last, were mindful of me. My waves and those of the main divided the land, before continuous, and separated it into as many parts, as thou seest islands, called Echinades, in the midst of the waves.

"But yet, as thou thyself seest from afar, one island, see! was withdrawn far off from the rest, an island pleasing to me. The mariner calls it Perimele. This beloved Nymph did I deprive 288 viii. 591-610. of the name of a virgin. This her father, Hippodamas, took amiss, and pushed the body of his daughter, when about to bring forth, from a rock, into the sea. I received her; and bearing her up when swimming, I said, 'O thou bearer of the Trident, who hast obtained, by lot, next in rank to the heavens, the realms of the flowing waters, in which we sacred rivers end, and to which we run; come hither, Neptune, and graciously listen to me, as I pray. Her, whom I am bearing up, I have injured. If her father, Hippodamas, had been mild and reasonable, or if he had been less unnatural, he ought to have pitied her, and to have forgiven me. Give thy assistance; and grant a place, Neptune, I beseech thee, to her, plunged in the waters by the cruelty of her father; or allow her to become a place herself. Her, even, thus will I embrace.' The King of the ocean moved his head, and shook all the waters with his assent. The Nymph was afraid; but yet she swam. Her breast, as she was swimming, I myself touched, as it throbbed with a tremulous motion; and while I felt it, I perceived her whole body grow hard, and her breast become covered with earth growing over it. While I was speaking, fresh earth enclosed her floating limbs, and a heavy island grew upon her changed members."

EXPLANATION.

This story is simply based upon physical grounds. The river Acheloüs, running between Acarnania and Ætolia, and flowing into the Ionian Sea, carried with it a great quantity of sand and mud, which probably formed the islands at its mouth, called the Echinades. The same solution probably applies to the narrative of the fate of the Nymph Perimele.

FABLE VI.

Jupiter and Mercury, disguised in human shape, are received by Philemon and Baucis, after having been refused admittance by their neighbours. The Gods, in acknowledgment of their hospitality, transform their cottage into a temple, of which, at their own request, they are made the priest and priestess; and, after a long life, the worthy couple are changed into trees. The village where they live is laid under water, on account of the impiety of the inhabitants, and is turned into a lake. Acheloüs here relates the surprising changes of Proteus.

After these things the river was silent. The wondrous deed 289 viii. 613-642. had astonished them all. The son of Ixion laughed at them, believing the story; and as he was a despiser of the Gods, and of a haughty disposition, he said, "Acheloüs, thou dost relate a fiction, and dost deem the Gods more powerful than they are, if they both give and take away the form of things." At this all were amazed, and did not approve of such language; and before all, Lelex, ripe in understanding and age, spoke thus: "The power of heaven is immense, and has no limits; and whatever the Gods above will, 'tis done.

"And that thou mayst the less doubt of this, there is upon the Phrygian hills, an oak near to the lime tree, enclosed by a low wall. I, myself, have seen the spot; for Pittheus sent me into the land of Pelops, once governed by his father, Pelops. Not far thence is a standing water, formerly habitable ground, but now frequented by cormorants and coots, that delight in fens. Jupiter came hither in the shape of a man, and together with his parent, the grandson of Atlas, Mercury, the bearer of the Caduceus, having laid aside his wings. To a thousand houses did they go, asking for lodging and for rest. A thousand houses did the bolts fasten against them. Yet one received them, a small one indeed, thatched with straw, and the reeds of the marsh. But a pious old woman named Baucis, and Philemon of a like age, were united in their youthful years in that cottage, and in it, they grew old together; and by owning their poverty, they rendered it light, and not to be endured with discontented mind. It matters not, whether you ask for the masters there, or for the servants; the whole family are but two; the same persons both obey and command. When, therefore, the inhabitants of heaven reached this little abode, and, bending their necks, entered the humble door, the old man bade them rest their limbs on a bench set there; upon which the attentive Baucis threw a coarse cloth. Then she moves the warm embers on the hearth, and stirs 290 viii. 642-669. up the fire they had had the day before, and supplies it with leaves and dry bark, and with her aged breath kindles it into a flame; and brings out of the house faggots split into many pieces, and dry bits of branches, and breaks them, and puts them beneath a small boiler. Some pot-herbs, too, which her husband has gathered in the well-watered garden, she strips of their leaves.

“With a two-pronged fork Philemon lifts down a rusty side of bacon, that hangs from a black beam; and cuts off a small portion from the chine that has been kept so long; and when cut, softens it in boiling water. In the meantime, with discourse they beguile the intervening hours; and suffer not the length of time to be perceived. There is a beechen trough there, that hangs on a peg by its crooked handle; this is filled with warm water, and receives their limbs to refresh them. On the middle of the couch, its feet and frame being made of willow, is placed a cushion of soft sedge. This they cover with cloths, which they have not been accustomed to place there but on festive occasions; but even these cloths are coarse and old, though not unfitting for a couch of willow. The Gods seat themselves. The old woman, wearing an apron, and shaking with palsy, sets the table before them. But the third leg of the table is too short; a potsherd, placed beneath, makes it equal. After this, being placed beneath, has taken away the inequality, green mint rubs down the table thus made level. Here are set the double-tinted berries of the chaste Minerva, and cornel-berries, gathered in autumn, and preserved in a thin pickle; endive, too, and radishes, and a large piece of curdled milk, and eggs, that have been gently turned in the slow embers; all served in earthenware. After this, an embossed goblet of 291 viii. 669-599. similar clay is placed there; cups, too,

“There is now a short pause; the fire then sends up the warm repast; and wine kept no long time, is again put on; and then, set aside for a little time, it gives place to the second course. Here are nuts, and here are dried figs mixed with wrinkled dates, plums too, and fragrant apples in wide baskets, and grapes gathered from the purple vines. In the middle there is white honey-comb. Above all, there are welcome looks, and no indifferent and niggardly feelings. In the meanwhile, as oft as Baucis and the alarmed Philemon behold the goblet, when drunk off, replenish itself of its own accord, and the wine increase of itself, astonished at this singular event, they are frightened, and, with hands held up, they offer their prayers, and entreat pardon for their entertainment, and their want of preparation. There was a single goose, the guardian of their little cottage, which its owners were preparing to kill for the Deities, their guests. Swift with its wings, it wearied them, rendered slow by age, and it escaped them a long time, and at length seemed to fly for safety to the Gods themselves. The immortals forbade it to be killed, and said, ‘We are Divinities, and this impious neighbourhood shall suffer deserved punishment. To you it will be allowed to be free from this calamity; only leave your habitation, and attend our steps, and go together to the summit of the mountain.’

“They both obeyed; and, supported by staffs, they endeavoured to place their feet on the top of the high hill. They were now as far from the top, as an arrow discharged can go at once, when they turned their eyes, and beheld the other parts sinking in a morass, and their own abode alone remaining. While they were wondering at these things, and while they were bewailing the fate of their fellow countrymen, that old cottage of theirs, 292 viii. 699-734. too little for even two owners, was changed into a temple. Columns took the place of forked stakes, the thatch grew yellow, and the earth was covered with marble; the doors appeared carved, and the roof to be of gold. Then, the son of Saturn uttered such words as these with benign lips: 'Tell us, good old man, and thou, wife, worthy of a husband so good, what it is you desire?' Having spoken a few words to Baucis, Philemon discovered their joint request to the Gods: 'We desire to be your priests, and to have the care of your temple; and, since we have passed our years in harmony, let the same hour take us off both together; and let me not ever see the tomb of my wife, nor let me be destined to be buried by her.' Fulfilment attended their wishes. So long as life was granted, they were the keepers of the temple; and when, enervated by years and old age, they were standing, by chance, before the sacred steps, and were relating the fortunes of the spot, Baucis beheld Philemon, and the aged Philemon saw Baucis, too, shooting into leaf. And now the tops of the trees growing above their two faces, so long as they could they exchanged words with each other, and said together, 'Farewell! my spouse;' and at the same moment the branches covered their concealed faces. The inhabitants of Tyana still shew these adjoining trees, made of their two bodies. Old men, no romancers, (and there was no reason why they should wish to deceive me) told me this. I, indeed, saw garlands hanging on the branches, and placing there some fresh ones myself, I said, 'The good are the peculiar care of the Gods, and those who worshipped the Gods, are now worshipped themselves.'"

He had now ceased; and the thing itself and the relator of it had astonished them all; and especially Theseus, whom, desiring to hear of the wonderful actions of the Gods, the Calydonian river leaning on his elbow, addressed in words such as these: "There are, O most valiant hero, some things, whose form has been once changed, and then has continued under that change. There are some whose privilege it is to pass into many shapes, as thou, Proteus, inhabitant of the sea that embraces the earth. For people have seen thee one while a young man, and again a lion; at one time thou wast a furious boar, at another a serpent, which they dreaded to touch; and 293 viii 734-736. sometimes, horns rendered thee a bull. Ofttimes thou mightst be seen as a stone; often, too, as a tree. Sometimes imitating the appearance of flowing water, thou wast a river; sometimes fire, the very contrary of water."

EXPLANATION.

The story of Baucis and Philemon, which is here so beautifully related by the Poet, is a moral tale, which shows the merit of hospitality, and how, in some cases at least, virtue speedily brings its own reward. If the story is based upon any actual facts, the history of its origin is entirely unknown. Huet, the theologian, indeed, supposes that it is founded on the history of the reception of the Angels by Abraham. This is a bold surmise, but entirely in accordance with his position, that the greatest part of the fictions of the heathen mythology were mere glosses or perversions of the histories of the Old Testament. If derived from Scripture, the story is just as likely to be founded on the hospitable reception of the Prophet Elijah by the woman of Zarephath; and the miraculous increase of the wine in the goblet, calls to mind 'the barrel of meal that wasted not, and the cruse of oil that did not fail.' The story of the wretched fate of the inhospitable neighbours of Baucis and Philemon is thought, by some modern writers, to be founded upon the Scriptural account of the destruction of the wicked cities of the plain.

Ancient writers have made many attempts to solve the wondrous story of Proteus. Some say that he was an elegant orator, who charmed his auditors by the force of his eloquence. Lucian says that he was an actor of pantomime, so supple that he could assume various postures. Herodotus, Diodorus Siculus, and Clement of Alexandria, assert that he was an ancient king of Egypt, successor to Pheron, and that he lived at the time, of the Trojan war. Herodotus, who represents him as a prince of great wisdom and justice, does not make any allusion to his powers of transformation, which was his great merit in the eyes of the poets. Diodorus Siculus says that his alleged changes may have had their rise in a custom which Proteus had of adorning his helmet, sometimes with the skin of a panther, sometimes with that of a lion, and sometimes with that of a serpent, or of some other animal. When Lycophron states that Neptune saved Proteus from the fury of his children, by making him go through caverns from Pallene to Egypt, he follows the tradition which says that he originally came from that town in Thessaly, and that he retired thence to Egypt. Virgil, and Servius, his Commentator, assert that Proteus returned to Thessaly after the death of his children, who were slain by Hercules; in which assertion, however, they are not supported by Homer or Herodotus.

FABLE VII.

Acheloüs continues his narrative with the story of Metra, the daughter of Erisichthon, who is attacked with insatiable hunger, for having cut down an oak, in one of the groves of Ceres. Metra begs of Neptune, who was formerly in love with her, the power of transforming herself into different shapes; that she may be enabled, if possible, to satisfy the voracious appetite of her father. By these means, Erisichthon, being obliged to expose her for sale, in order to purchase himself food, always recovers her again; until, by his repeated sale of her, the fraud is discovered. He at last becomes the avenger of his own impiety, by devouring his own limbs.

“Nor has the wife of Autolycus, the daughter of Erisichthon, less privileges than he. Her father was one who despised the majesty of the Gods; and he offered them no honours on their altars. He is likewise said to have profaned with an axe

a grove of Ceres, and to have violated her ancient woods with the iron. In these there was standing an oak with an ancient trunk, a wood in itself alone, fillets and tablets, as memorials, and garlands, proofs of wishes that had been granted, surrounded the middle of it. Often, beneath this tree, did the Dryads lead up the festive dance; often, too, with hands joined in order, did they go round the compass of its trunk; and the girth of the oak made up three times five ells. The rest of the wood, too, lay as much under this oak as the grass lay beneath the whole of the wood. Yet not on that account even did the son of Triopas withhold the axe from it; and he ordered his servants to cut down the sacred oak; and when he saw them hesitate, thus ordered, the wicked wretch, snatching from one of them an axe, uttered these words: 'Were it not only beloved by a Goddess, but even were it a Goddess itself, it should now touch the ground with its leafy top.' Thus he said; and while he was poising his weapon for a side stroke, the Deoian oak shuddered, and uttered a groan; and 295 viii. 759-793. at once, its green leaves, and, with them, its acorns began to turn pale; and the long branches to be moistened with sweat. As soon as his impious hand had made an incision in its trunk, the blood flowed from the severed bark no otherwise than, as, at the time when the bull, a large victim, falls before the altars, the blood pours forth from his divided neck. All were amazed and one of the number attempted to hinder the wicked design, and to restrain the cruel axe. The Thessalian eyes him, and says, 'Take the reward of thy pious intentions,' and turns the axe from the tree upon the man, and hews off his head; and then hacks at the oak again; when such words as these are uttered from the middle of the oak: 'I, a Nymph, most pleasing to Ceres, am beneath this wood; I, now dying, foretell to thee that the punishment of thy deeds, the solace of my death, is at hand.'

"He pursued his wicked design; and, at last, weakened by numberless blows, and pulled downward with ropes, the tree fell down, and with its weight levelled a great part of the wood. All her sisters, the Dryads, being shocked at the loss of the grove and their own, in their grief repaired to Ceres, in black array, and requested the punishment of Erisichthon. She assented to their request, and the most beautiful Goddess, with the nodding of her head, shook the fields loaded with the heavy crops; and contrived for him a kind of punishment, lamentable, if he had not, for his crimes, been deserving of the sympathy of none, namely, to torment him with deadly Famine. And since that Goddess could not be approached by herself (for the Destinies do not allow Ceres and Famine to come together), in such words as these she addressed rustic Oreas, one of the mountain Deities: 'There is an icy region in the extreme part of Scythia, dreary soil, arid, desolate, without corn and without trees; there dwell drowsy Cold, and Paleness, and Trembling, and famishing Hunger; order her to bury herself in the breast of this sacrilegious wretch. Let no abundance of provisions overcome her; 296 viii. 793-824. and let her surpass my powers in the contest. And that the length of the road may not alarm thee, take my chariot, take the dragons, which thou mayst guide aloft with the reins;' and then she gave them to her.

"She, borne through the air on the chariot thus granted, arrived in Scythia; and, on the top of a steep mountain (they call it Caucasus), she unyoked the neck of the dragons, and beheld Famine, whom she was seeking, in a stony field, tearing up herbs, growing here and there, with her nails and with her teeth. Rough was her hair, her eyes hollow, paleness on her face, her lips white with scurf, her jaws rough with rustiness; her skin hard, through which her bowels might be seen; her dry bones were projecting beneath her crooked loins; instead of a belly, there was only the place for a belly. You would think her breast was hanging, and was only supported from the chine of the back. Leanness had, to appearance, increased her joints, and the caps of her knees were stiff, and excrescences projected from her overgrown ankles. Soon as Oreas beheld her at a distance (for she did not dare come near her), she delivered the commands of the Goddess; and, staying for so short a time, although she was at a distance from her, and although she had just come thither, still did she seem to feel hunger; and, turning the reins, she drove aloft the dragon's back to Hæmonia.

“Famine executes the orders of Ceres (although she is ever opposing her operations), and is borne by the winds through the air to the assigned abode, and immediately enters the bedchamber of the sacrilegious wretch, and embraces him, sunk in a deep sleep (for it is night-time), with her two wings. She breathes herself into the man, and blows upon his jaws, and his breast, and his face; and she scatters hunger through his empty veins. And having thus executed her commission, she forsakes the fruitful world, and returns to her famished abode, her wonted fields. Gentle sleep is still soothing Erisichthon with its balmy wings. In a vision of his 297 viii. 824-857. sleep he craves for food, and moves his jaws to no purpose, and tires his teeth grinding upon teeth, and wearies his throat deluded with imaginary food; and, instead of victuals, he devours in vain the yielding air. But when sleep is banished, his desire for eating is outrageous, and holds sway over his craving jaws, and his insatiate entrails. And no delay is there; he calls what the sea, what the earth, what the air produces, and complains of hunger with the tables set before him, and requires food in the midst of food. And what might be enough for whole cities, and what might be enough for a whole people, is not sufficient for one man. The more, too, he swallows down into his stomach, the more does he desire. And just as the ocean receives rivers from the whole earth, and yet is not satiated with water, and drinks up the rivers of distant countries, and as the devouring fire never refuses fuel, and burns up beams of wood without number, and the greater the quantity that is given to it, the more does it crave, and it is the more voracious through the very abundance of fuel; so do the jaws of the impious Erisichthon receive all victuals presented, and at the same time ask for more. In him all food is only a ground for more food, and there is always room vacant for eating still more.

so aid this employment of mine, no man has been for some time standing on this shore, myself only excepted, nor has any woman been standing here.' Her master believed her, and, turning his feet to go away, he paced the sands, and, thus deceived, withdrew. Her own shape was restored to her.

"But when her father found that his daughter had a body capable of being transformed, he often sold the granddaughter of Triopas to other masters. But she used to escape, sometimes as a mare, sometimes as a bird, now as a cow, now as a stag; and so provided a dishonest maintenance for her hungry parent. Yet, after this violence of his distemper had consumed all his provision, and had added fresh fuel to his dreadful malady: he himself, with mangling bites, began to tear his own limbs, and the miserable wretch used to feed his own body by diminishing it. But why do I dwell on the instances of others? I, too, O youths, have a power of often changing my body, though limited in the number of those changes. For, one while, I appear what I now am, another while I am wreathed as a snake; then as the leader of a herd, I receive strength in my horns. In my horns, I say, so long as I could. Now, one side of my forehead is deprived of its weapons, as thou seest thyself." Sighs followed his words.

EXPLANATION.

The story of Metra and Erisichthon has no other foundation, in all probability, than the diligent care which she took, as a dutiful daughter, to support her father, when he had ruined himself by his luxury and extravagance. She, probably, was a young woman, who, in the hour of need, could, in common parlance, 'turn her hand' to any useful employment. Some, however, suppose that, by her changes are meant the wages she received from those whom she served in the capacity of a slave, and which she gave to her father; and it must be remembered that, in ancient times, as money was scarce, the wages of domestics were often paid in kind. Other writers again suggest, less to the credit of the damsel, that her changes denote the price she received for her debaucheries. Ovid adds, that she married Autolycus, the robber, who stole the oxen of Eurytus. Callimachus also, in his Hymn to Ceres, gives the story of Erisichthon at length. He was the great grandfather of Ulysses, and was probably a man noted for his infidelity and impiety, as well as his riotous course of life. The story is probably of Eastern origin, and if a little expanded might vie with many of the interesting fictions which we read in the Arabian Night's Entertainments.

FABLE I.

Deïanira, the daughter of Æneus, having been wooed by several suitors, her father gives his consent that she shall marry him who proves to be the bravest of them. Her other suitors, having given way to Hercules and Acheloüs, they engage in single combat. Acheloüs, to gain the advantage over his rival, transforms himself into various shapes, and, at length, into that of a bull. These attempts are in vain, and Hercules overcomes him, and breaks off one of his horns. The Naiads, the daughters of Acheloüs, take it up, and fill it with the variety of fruits which Autumn affords; on which it obtains the name of the Horn of Plenty.

Theseus, the Neptunian hero, inquires what is the cause of his sighing, and of his forehead being mutilated; when thus begins the Calydonian river, having his unadorned hair crowned with reeds:

“A mournful task thou art exacting; for who, when overcome, is desirous to relate his own battles? yet I will relate them in order; nor was it so disgraceful to be overcome, as it is glorious to have engaged; and a conqueror so mighty affords me a great consolation. If, perchance, Deïanira, by her name, has at last reached thy ears, once she was a most beautiful maiden, and the envied hope of many a wooer; together with these, when the house of him, whom I desired as my father-in-law, was entered by me, I said, ‘Receive me, Oson of Parthaon, for thy son-in-law.’ Alcides, too, said the same; the others yielded to us two. He alleged that he was offering to the . damsel both Jupiter as a father-in-law, and the glory of his labours; the orders, too, of his step-mother, successfully executed. On the other hand

(I thought it disgraceful for a God to give way to a mortal, for then he was not a God), I said, 'Thou beholdest me, a king of the waters, flowing amid thy realms, with my winding course; nor am I some stranger sent thee for a son-in-law, from foreign lands, but I shall be one of thy people, and a part of thy state. Only let it not be to my prejudice, that the royal Juno does not hate me, and that all punishment, by labours enjoined, is afar from me. For, since thou, Hercules, dost boast thyself born of Alcmena for thy mother; Jupiter is either thy pretended sire, or thy real one through a criminal deed: by the adultery of thy mother art thou claiming a father. Choose, then, whether thou wouldst rather have Jupiter for thy pretended father, or that thou art sprung from him through a disgraceful deed?'

"While I was saying such things as these, for some time he looked at me with a scowling eye, and did not very successfully check his inflamed wrath; and he returned me just as many words as these: 'My right hand is better than my tongue. If only I do but prevail in fighting, do thou get the better in talking;' and then he fiercely attacked me. I was ashamed, after having so lately spoken big words, to yield. I threw on one side my green garment from off my body, and opposed my arms to his, and I held my hands bent inwards, from before my breast, on their guard, and I prepared my limbs for the combat. He sprinkled me with dust, taken up in the hollow of his hands, and, in his turn, grew yellow with the casting of yellow sand upon himself. And at one moment he aimed at my neck, at another my legs, as they shifted about, or you would suppose he was aiming at them; and he assaulted me on every side. My bulk defended me, and I was attacked in vain; no . otherwise than a mole, which the waves beat against with loud noise: it remains unshaken, and by its own weight is secure.

"We retire a little, and then again we rush together in conflict, and we stand firm, determined not to yield; foot, too, is joined to foot; and then I, bending forward full with my breast, press upon his fingers with my fingers, and his forehead with my forehead. In no different manner have I beheld the strong bulls engage, when the most beautiful mate in all the pasture is sought as the reward of the combat; the herds look on and tremble, uncertain which the mastery of so great a domain awaits. Thrice without effect did Alcides attempt to hurl away from him my breast, as it bore hard against him; the fourth time, he shook off my hold, and loosened my arms clasped around him; and, striking me with his hand, (I am resolved to confess the truth) he turned me quite round, and clung, a mighty load, to my back. If any credit is to be given me, (and, indeed, no glory is sought by me through an untrue narration) I seemed to myself as though weighed down with a mountain placed upon me. Yet, with great difficulty, I disengaged my arms streaming with much perspiration, and, with great exertion, I unlocked his firm grasp from my body. He pressed on me as I panted for breath, and prevented me from recovering my strength, and then seized hold of my neck. Then, at last, was the earth pressed by my knee, and with my mouth I bit the sand. Inferior in strength, I had recourse to my arts, and transformed into a long serpent, I escaped from the hero.

“After I had twisted my body into winding folds, and darted my forked tongue with dreadful hissings, the Tiryinthian laughed, and deriding my arts, he said, ‘It was the labour of my cradle to conquer serpents; and although, Acheloüs, thou shouldst excel other snakes, how large a part wilt thou, but one serpent, be of the Lernæan Echidna? By her very wounds was she multiplied, and not one head of her hundred in . number was cut off by me without danger to myself; but rather so that her neck became stronger, with two successors to the former head. Yet her I subdued, branching with serpents springing from each wound, and growing stronger by her disasters; and, so subdued, I slew her. What canst thou think will become of thee, who, changed into a fictitious serpent, art wielding arms that belong to another, and whom a form, obtained as a favour, is now disguising?' Thus he spoke; and he planted the grip of his fingers on the upper part of my neck. I was tortured, just as though my throat was squeezed with pincers; and I struggled hard to disengage my jaws from his fingers.

"Thus vanquished, too, there still remained for me my third form, that of a furious bull; with my limbs changed into those of a bull I renewed the fight. He threw his arms over my brawny neck, on the left side, and, dragging at me, followed me in my onward course; and seizing my horns, he fastened them in the hard ground, and felled me upon the deep sand. And that was not enough; while his relentless right hand was holding my stubborn horn, he broke it, and tore it away from my mutilated forehead. This, heaped with fruit and odoriferous flowers, the Naiads have consecrated, and the bounteous Goddess, Plenty, is enriched by my horn." Thus he said; but a Nymph, girt up after the manner of Diana, one of his handmaids, with her hair hanging loose on either side, came in, and brought the whole of the produce of Autumn in the most plentiful horn, and choice fruit for a second course.

Day comes on, and the rising sun striking the tops of the hills, the young men depart; nor do they stay till the stream has quiet restored to it, and a smooth course, and till the troubled waters subside. Acheloüs conceals his rustic features, and his mutilated horn, in the midst of the waves; yet the loss of this honour, taken from him, alone affects him; in other respects, he is unhurt. The injury, too, which has befallen his head, is now concealed with willow branches, or with reeds placed upon it.

EXPLANATION.

The river Acheloüs, which ran between Acarnania and Ætolia, often did considerable damage to those countries by its inundations, and, at the same time, by confounding or sweeping away the limits which separated those nations, it engaged them in continual warfare with each other. Hercules, who seems really to have been a person of great scientific skill, which he was ever ready to employ for the service of his fellow men, raised banks to it, and made its course so uniform and straight, that he was the means of establishing perpetual peace between these adjoining nations.

The early authors who recorded these events have narrated them under a thick and almost impenetrable veil of fiction. They say that Hercules engaged in combat with the God of that river, who immediately transformed himself into a serpent, by which was probably meant merely the serpentine windings of its course. Next they say, that the God changed himself into a bull, under which allegorical form they refer to the rapid and impetuous overflowing of its banks, ever rushing onwards, bearing down everything in its course, and leaving traces of its ravages throughout the country in its vicinity. This mode of description the more readily occurred to them in the case of Acheloüs, as from the roaring noise which they often make in their course, rivers in general were frequently represented under the figure of a bull, and, of course, as wearing horns, the great instruments of the havoc which they created.

It was said, then, that Hercules at length overcame this bull, and broke off one of his horns; by which was meant, according to Strabo, that he brought both the branches of the river into one channel. Again, this horn became the Horn of Plenty in that region; or, in other words, being withdrawn from its bed, the river left a large track of very fertile ground for agricultural purposes. As to the Cornucopia, or Horn of Plenty of the heathen Mythology, there is some variation in the accounts respecting it. Some writers say that by it was meant the horn of the goat Amalthea, which suckled Jupiter, and that the Nymphs gave it to Acheloüs, who again gave it in exchange for that of which Hercules afterwards deprived him. Deïanira, having given her hand to Hercules, as the recompense of the important services which he had rendered to her father, Æneus, it was fabled that she had been promised to Acheloüs, who was vanquished by his rival; and on this foundation was built the superstructure of the famous combat which the Poet here describes. After having remained for some time at the court of his father-in-law, Hercules was obliged to leave it, in consequence of having killed the son of Architritilus, who was the cupbearer of that prince.

FABLE II.

Hercules, returning with Deïanira, as the prize of his victory, entrusts her to the Centaur Nessus, to carry her over the river Evenus. Nessus seizes the opportunity of Hercules being on the other side of the river, and attempts to carry her off; on which Hercules, perceiving his design, shoots him with an arrow, and thus prevents its execution. The Centaur, when expiring, in order to gratify his revenge, gives Deïanira his tunic dipped in his blood, assuring her that it contains an effectual charm against all infidelity on the part of her husband. Afterwards, on hearing that Hercules is in love with Iole, Deïanira sends him the tunic, that it may have the supposed effect. As soon as he puts it on, he is affected with excruciating torments, and is seized with such violent fits of madness, that he throws Lychas, the bearer of the garment, into the sea, where he is changed into a rock. Hercules, then, in obedience to a response of the oracle, which he consults, prepares a funeral pile, and laying himself upon it, his friend Philoctetes applies the torch to it, on which the hero, having first recounted his labours, expires in the flames. After his body is consumed, Jupiter translates him to the heavens, and he is placed in the number of the Gods.

But a passion for this same maiden proved fatal to thee, fierce Nessus, pierced through the back with a swift arrow. For the son of Jupiter, as he was returning to his native city with his new-made wife, had now come to the rapid waters of the river Evenus. The stream was swollen to a greater extent than usual with the winter rains, and was full of whirlpools, and impassable. Nessus came up to him, regardless of himself, but feeling anxiety for his wife, both strong of limb, and well acquainted with the fords, and said, "Alcides, she shall be landed on yonder bank through my services, do thou employ thy strength in swimming;" and the Aonian hero entrusted to Nessus the Calydonian damsel full of alarm, and pale with apprehension, and equally dreading both the river and Nessus himself. Immediately, just as he was, loaded both with his quiver and the spoil of the lion, (for he had thrown his club and his crooked bow to the opposite side), he said, "Since I have undertaken it, the stream must be passed."

And he does not hesitate; nor does he seek out where the stream is the smoothest, and he spurns to be borne over by the compliance of the river. And now having reached the bank, and as he is taking up the bow which he had thrown over, he recognizes the voice of his wife; and as Nessus is preparing to rob him of what he has entrusted to his care, he cries out, "Whither, thou ravisher, does thy vain confidence in thy feet hurry thee? to thee am I speaking, Nessus, thou two-shaped monster. Listen; and do not carry off my property. If no regard for myself influences thee, still the wheel of thy father might have restrained thee from forbidden embraces. Thou shall not escape, however, although thou dost confide in thy powers of a horse; with a wound, and not with my feet, will I overtake thee." These last words he confirms by deeds, and pierces him through the back, as he is flying, with an arrow discharged at him. The barbed steel stands out from his breast; soon as it is wrenched out, the blood gushes forth from both wounds, mingled with the venom of the Lernæan poison. Nessus takes it out, and says to himself, "And yet I shall not die unrevenged;" and gives his garment, dyed in the warm blood, as a present to her whom he is carrying off, as though an incentive to love.

Long was the space of intervening time, and the feats of the mighty Hercules and the hatred of his step-mother had filled the earth. Returning victorious from Æchalia, he is preparing a sacrifice which he had vowed to Cenæan Jupiter, when tattling Rumour (who takes pleasure in adding false things to the truth, and from a very little beginning, swells to a great bulk by her lies) runs before to thy ears, Deïanira, to the effect that the son of Amphitryon is seized with a passion for Iole. As she loves him, she believes it; and being alarmed with the report of this new amour, at first she indulges in . tears and in her misery gives vent to her grief in weeping. Soon, however, she says, "But why do I weep? My rival will be delighted with these tears; and since she is coming I must make haste, and some contrivance must be resolved on while it is still possible, and while, as yet, another has not taken possession of my bed. Shall I complain, or shall I be silent? Shall I return to Calydon, or shall I stay here? Shall I depart from this abode? or, if nothing more, shall I oppose their entrance? What if, OMeleager, remembering that I am thy sister, I resolve on a desperate deed, and testify, by murdering my rival, how much, injury and a woman's grief can effect?"

Her mind wavers, amid various resolves. Before them all, she prefers to send the garment dyed in the blood of Nessus, to restore strength to his declining love. Not knowing herself what she is giving, she delivers the cause of her own sorrows to the unsuspecting Lichas, and bids him, in gentle words, to deliver this most fatal gift to her husband. In his ignorance, the hero receives it, and places upon his shoulders the venom of the Lernæan Echidna. He is placing frankincense

on the rising flames, and is offering the words of prayer, and pouring wine from the bowl upon the marble altars. The virulence of the bane waxes warm, and, melted by the flames, it runs, widely diffused over the limbs of Hercules. So long as he is able, he suppresses his groans with his wonted fortitude. After his endurance is overcome by his anguish, he pushes down the altars, and fills the woody Æta with his cries. There is no further delay; he attempts to tear off the deadly garment; but where it is torn off, it tears away the skin, and, shocking to relate, it either sticks to his limbs, being tried in vain to be pulled off, or it lays bare his mangled limbs, and his huge bones. The blood itself hisses, just as when a red hot plate of metal is dipped in cold water; and it boils with the burning poison. There is no limit to his misery; the devouring flames prey upon his entrails, and a livid perspiration flows from his whole body; his half-burnt sinews also crack; and his marrow being now dissolved by the subtle poison, lifting his hands towards the stars of heaven, . he exclaims, “Daughter of Saturn, satiate thyself with my anguish; satiate thyself, and look down from on high, O cruel Goddess, at this my destruction, and glut thy relentless heart. Or, if I am to be pitied even by an enemy (for an enemy I am to thee), take away a life insupportable through these dreadful agonies, hateful, too, to myself, and only destined to trouble. Death will be a gain to me. It becomes a stepmother to grant such a favour.

“And was it for this that I subdued Busiris, who polluted the temples of the Gods with the blood of strangers? And did I for this, withdraw from the savage Antæus the support given him by his mother? Did neither the triple shape of the Iberian shepherd, nor thy triple form, OCerberus, alarm me? And did you, my hands, seize the horns of the mighty bull? Does Elis, too, possess the result of your labours, and the Stymphalian waters, and the Parthenian grove as well? By your valour was it that the belt, inlaid with the gold of Thermodon, was gained, the apples too, guarded in vain by the wakeful dragon? And could neither the Centaurs resist me, nor yet the boar, the ravager of Arcadia? And was it not of no avail to the Hydra to grow through its own loss, and to recover double strength? And what besides? When I beheld the Thracian steeds fattened with human blood, and the mangers filled with mangled bodies, did I throw them down when thus beheld, and slay both the master and the horses themselves? And does the carcass of the Nemean lion lie crushed by these arms? With this neck did I support the heavens? . The unrelenting wife of Jupiter was weary of commanding, but I was still unwearied with doing. But now a new calamity is come upon me, to which resistance can be made neither by valour, nor by weapons, nor by arms. A consuming flame is pervading the inmost recesses of my lungs, and is preying on all my limbs. But Eurystheus still survives. And are there," says he, "any who can believe that the Deities exist?"

And then, racked with pain, he ranges along the lofty Æta, no otherwise than if a tiger should chance to carry the hunting spears fixed in his body, and the perpetrator of the deed should be taking to flight. Often might you have beheld him uttering groans, often shrieking aloud, often striving to tear away the whole of his garments, and levelling trees, and venting his fury against mountains, or stretching out his arms towards the heaven of his father. Lo! he espies Lichas, trembling and lying concealed in a hollow rock, and, as his pain has summoned together all his fury, he says, "Didst thou, Lichas, bring this fatal present; and shalt thou be the cause of my death?" He trembles, and turning pale, is alarmed, and timorously utters some words of excuse. As he is speaking, and endeavouring to clasp his knees with his hands, Alcides seizes hold of him, and whirling him round three or four times, he hurls him into the Eubœan waves, with greater force than if sent from an engine of war. As he soars aloft in the aerial breeze he grows hard; and as they say that showers freeze with the cold winds, and that thence snow is formed, and that from the snow, revolving in its descent, the soft body is compressed, and is then made round in many a hailstone, so have former ages declared, that, hurled through the air by the strong arms of Hercules, and bereft of blood through fear, and having no moisture left in him, he was transformed into hard stone. Even to this day, in the Eubœan sea, a small rock projects to a height, and . retains the traces of the human form. This, the sailors are afraid to tread upon, as though it could feel it; and they call it Lichas.

But thou, the famous offspring of Jupiter, having cut down, trees which lofty Cœta bore, and having raised them for a pile, dost order the son of Pœas to take the bow and the capacious quiver, and the arrows which are again to visit the Trojan realms; by whose assistance flames are put beneath the pile; and while the structure is being seized by the devouring fires, thou dost cover the summit of the heap of wood with the skin of the Nemean lion, and dost lie down with thy neck resting on thy club, with no other countenance than if thou art lying as a guest crowned with garlands, amid the full cups of wine.

And now, the flames, prevailing and spreading on every side, roared, and reached the limbs thus undismayed, and him who despised them. The Gods were alarmed for this protector of the earth; Saturnian Jupiter (for he perceived it) thus addressed them with joyful voice: "This fear of yours is my own delight, O ye Gods of heaven, and, with all my heart, I gladly congratulate myself that I am called the governor and the father of a grateful people, and that my progeny, too, is secure in your esteem. For, although this concern is given in return for his mighty exploits, still I myself am obliged by it. But, however, that your affectionate breasts may not be alarmed with vain fears, despise these flames of Cœta. He who has conquered all things, shall conquer the fires which you behold; nor shall he be sensible of the potency of the flame, but in the part of him which he derived from his mother. That part of him, which he derived from me, is immortal, and exempt and secure from death, and to be subdued by no flames. This, too, when disengaged from earth, I will receive into the celestial regions, and I trust that this act of mine will be agreeable to all the Deities. Yet if any one, if any one, I say, perchance should . grieve at Hercules being a Divinity, and should be unwilling that this honour should be conferred on him; still he shall know that he deserves it to be bestowed on him, and even against his will, shall approve of it."

To this the Gods assented; his royal spouse, too, seemed to bear the rest of his remarks with no discontented air, but only the last words with a countenance of discontent, and to take it amiss that she was so plainly pointed at. In the mean time, whatever was liable to be destroyed by flame, Mulciber consumed; and the figure of Hercules remained, not to be recognized; nor did he have anything derived from the form of his mother, and he only retained the traces of immortal Jupiter. And as when a serpent revived, by throwing off old age with his slough, is wont to be instinct with fresh life, and to glisten in his new-made scales; so, when the Tiryinthian hero has put off his mortal limbs, he flourishes in his more æthereal part, and begins to appear more majestic, and to become venerable in his august dignity. Him the omnipotent Father, taking up among encircling clouds, bears aloft amid the glittering stars, in his chariot drawn by its four steeds.

Hercules, leaving the court of Calydon with his wife, proceeded on the road to the city of Trachyn, in Thessaly, to atone for the accidental death of Eunomus, and to be absolved from it by Ceyx, who was the king of that territory. Being obliged to cross the river Evenus, which had overflowed its banks, the adventure happened with the Centaur Nessus, which the Poet has here related. We learn from other writers, that after Nessus had expired, he was buried on Mount Taphiusa; and Strabo informs us, that his tomb (in which, probably, the ashes of other Centaurs were deposited) sent forth so offensive a smell, that the Locrians, who were the inhabitants of the adjacent country, were surnamed the 'Ozolæ,' that is, the 'ill-smelling,' or 'stinking,' Locrians. Although the river Evenus lay in the road between Calydon and Trachyn, still it did not run through the middle of the latter city, as some authors have supposed; for in such case Hercules would have been more likely to have passed it by the aid of a bridge or of a boat, than to have recourse to the assistance of the Centaur Nessus, and to have availed himself of his acquaintance with the fords of the stream.

Hercules, in lapse of time, becoming tired of Deïanira, by whom he had one son, named Hyllus, fell in love with Iole, the daughter of Eurytus; and that prince, refusing to give her to him, he made war upon Æchalia, and, having slain Eurytus, he bore off his daughter. Upon his return from that expedition, he sent Lychas for the vestments which he had occasion to use in a sacrifice which it was his intention to offer. Deïanira, jealous on account . of his passion for Iole, sent him either a philtre or love potion, which unintentionally caused his death, or else a tunic smeared on the inside with a certain kind of pitch, found near Babylon, which, when thoroughly warmed, stuck fast to his skin; and this it is, most probably, which has been termed by poets and historians, the tunic of Nessus. It seems, however, pretty clear that Hercules fell into a languishing distemper, without any hopes of recovery, and, probably, in a fit of madness, he threw Lychas into the sea, which circumstance was made by the poets to account for the existence there of a rock known by that name.

Proceeding afterwards to Trachyn, he caused Deïanira to hang herself in despair; and, having consulted the oracle concerning his distemper, he was ordered to go with his friends to Mount Cæta, and there to raise a funeral pile. He understood the fatal answer, and immediately prepared to execute its commands. When the pile was ready, Hercules ascended it, and laid himself down with an air of resignation, on which Philoctetes kindled the fire, which consumed him. Some, however, of the ancient authors say, with more probability, that Hercules died at Trachyn, and that his corpse was burned on Mount Cæta. His apotheosis commenced at the ceremonial of his funeral, and, from the moment of his death, he was worshipped as a Demigod. Diodorus Siculus says that it was Iolus who first introduced this worship. It was also said that, as soon as Philoctetes had applied fire to the pile, it thundered, and the lightnings descending from heaven immediately consumed Hercules. A tomb was raised for him on Mount Cæta, with an altar, upon which a bull, a wild boar, and a he-goat were yearly sacrificed in his honour, at the time of his festival. The Thebans, and, after them, the other people of Greece, soon followed the example of the Trachinians, and temples and altars were raised to him in various places, where he was honoured as a Demigod.

FABLE III.

Juno, to be revenged on Alcmena for her amour with Jupiter, desires Ilithyïa, the Goddess who presides over births, not to assist her on the occasion of the birth of Hercules. Lucina complies with her request, and places herself on an altar at the gate of Alcmena's abode, where, by a magic spell, she increases her pains and impedes her delivery. Galanthis, one of her maids, seeing the Goddess at the door, imagines that she may possibly exercise some bad influence on her mistress's labour, and, to make her retire, declares that Alcmena is already delivered. Upon Ilithyïa withdrawing, Alcmena's pains are assuaged, and Hercules is born. The Goddess, to punish Galanthis for her officiousness, transforms her into a weazel, a creature which was supposed to bring forth its young through its mouth.

Atlas was sensible of this burden. Nor, as yet, had Eurystheus, the son of Sthenelus, laid aside his wrath against Hercules; . and, in his fury, he vented his hatred for the father against his offspring. But the Argive Alcmena, disquieted with prolonged anxieties for her son has Iole, to whom to disclose the complaints of her old age, to whom to relate the achievements of her son attested by all the world, or to whom to tell her own misfortunes. At the command of Hercules, Hyllus had received her both into his bed and his affections, and had filled her womb with a noble offspring. To her, thus Alcmena began her story: —

“May the Gods be propitious to thee at least; and may they shorten the tedious hours, at the hour when, having accomplished thy time, thou shalt be invoking Ilithyia, who presides over the trembling parturient women; her whom the influence of Juno rendered inexorable to myself. For, when now the natal hour of Hercules, destined for so many toils, was at hand, and the tenth sign of the Zodiac was laden with the great luminary, the heavy weight was extending my womb; and that which I bore was so great, that you might easily pronounce Jupiter to be the father of the concealed burden. And now I was no longer able to endure my labours: even now, too, as I am speaking, a cold shudder seizes my limbs, and a part of my pain is the remembrance of it. Tormented for seven nights, and during as many days, tired out with misery, and extending my arms towards heaven, with loud cries I used to invoke Lucina and the two Nixi. She came, indeed, but corrupted beforehand, and she had the intention to give my life to the vengeful Juno. And when she heard my groans, she seated herself upon that altar before the door, and pressing her left knee with her right knee, her fingers being joined together in form of a comb, she retarded my delivery; she uttered charms, . too, in a low voice; and those charms impeded the birth now begun. I struggled hard, and, in my frenzy, I vainly uttered reproaches against the ungrateful Jupiter, and I desired to die, and complained in words that would have moved even the hard stones. The Cadmeian matrons attended me, and offered up vows, and encouraged me in my pains.

“There was present one of my hand-maids of the lower class of people, Galanthis by name, with yellow hair, and active in the execution of my orders; one beloved for her good services. She perceived that something unusual was being done by the resentful Juno; and, while she was often going in and out of the door, she saw the Goddess, sitting upon the altar, and supporting her arms upon her knees, linked by the fingers; and then she said, ‘Whoever thou art, congratulate my mistress; the Argive Alcmena is delivered, and, having brought forth, she has gained her wishes.’ The Goddess who presides over pregnancy leaped up, and, struck with surprise, loosened her joined hands. I, myself, on the loosening of those bonds, was delivered. The story is, that Galanthis laughed, upon deceiving the Divinity. The cruel Goddess dragged her along thus laughing and seized by her very hair, and she hindered her as she attempted to raise her body from the earth, and changed her arms into fore feet.

“Her former activity still remains, and her back has not lost its colour; but her shape is different from her former one. Because she had assisted me in labour by a lying mouth, she brings forth from the mouth, and, just as before, she frequents my house.”

EXPLANATION.

According to Diodorus Siculus and Apollodorus, Amphitryon was the son of Alceus, the son of Perseus, and his wife, Alcmena, was the daughter of Electryon, also the son of Perseus; and thus they were cousins. When their marriage was about to take place, an unforeseen accident prevented it. Electryon, who was king of Mycenæ, being obliged to revenge the death of his children, whom the sons of Taphius, king of the Teleboans, had killed in combat, returned victorious, and brought back with him his flocks, which he had recovered from Taphius. Amphitryon, who went to meet his uncle, to congratulate him upon the success of his expedition, throwing his club at a cow, which happened to stray from the herd, unfortunately killed him. This accidental homicide lost him the kingdom of Mycenæ, which was to have formed the dower of Alcmena. Sthenelus, the brother of Electryon, taking advantage of the public indignation, which was the result of the accident, drove Amphitryon out of the country of Argos, and made himself master of his brother's dominions, which he left, at his death, to his son Eurystheus, the inveterate persecutor of Hercules.

Amphitryon, obliged to retire to Thebes, was there absolved by Creon; but when, as he thought, he was about to receive the hand of Alcmena, who accompanied him to the court of that prince, she declared that, not being satisfied with the revenge which her father had taken on the Teleboans, she would consent to be the prize of him who would undertake to declare war against them. Amphitryon accepted these conditions, and, forming an alliance with Creon, Cephalus, and some other princes, made a descent upon the islands which the enemy possessed, and, making himself master of them, bestowed one of them on his ally, Cephalus.

It was during this war that Hercules came into the world; and whether Amphitryon had secretly consummated his marriage before his departure, or whether he had returned privately to Thebes, or to Tirynthus, where Hercules was said to have been born, it was published, that Jupiter, to deceive Alcmena, had taken the form of her husband, and was the father of the infant Hercules. If this is not the true explanation of the story, it may have been invented to conceal some intrigue in which Alcmena was detected; or, in process of time, to account for the extraordinary strength and valour of Hercules, it may have been said that Jupiter, and not Amphitryon, was the father of Hercules. Indeed, we find Seneca, in one of his Tragedies, putting these words into the mouth of Hercules:—'Whether all that has been said upon this subject be held as undoubted truth, or whether it proves to be but a fable, and that my father was, after all, in reality, but a mortal; my mother's fault is sufficiently effaced by my valour, and I have merit sufficient to have had Jupiter for my father.' The more readily, perhaps, to account for the transcendent strength and prowess of Hercules, the story was invented, that Jupiter made the night on which he was received by Alcmena under the form of Amphitryon, as long as three, or, according to Plautus, Hyginus, and Seneca, nine nights. Some writers say that Alcmena brought forth twins, one of which, Iphiclus, was the son of Amphitryon, while Hercules had Jupiter for his father.

With respect to the metamorphosis of Galanthis, it is but a little episode here introduced by Ovid, to give greater plausibility to the other part of the story. It most probably originated in the resemblance of the names of that slave to that of the weazel, which the Greeks called γαλῆ. Ælian, indeed, tells us that the Thebans paid honour to that animal, because it had helped Alcmena in her labour. The more ancient poets also added, that Juno retarded the birth of Hercules till the mother of Eurystheus was delivered, which was the cause of his being the subject of that king; though others state that this came to pass by the command of the oracle of Delphi. This king of Mycenæ having ordered him to rid Greece of the numerous robbers and wild beasts that infested it, it is most probable that, as we learn from Dionysius of Halicarnassus, he performed this service at the head of the troops of Eurystheus. If this is the case, the persecutions which the poets have ascribed to the jealousy of Juno, really originated either in the policy or the jealousy of the court of Mycenæ.

As Ovid has here cursorily taken notice of the labours of Hercules, we may observe, that it is very probable that his history is embellished with the pretended adventures of many persons who bore his name, and, perhaps, with those of others besides. Cicero, in his 'Treatise on the Nature of the Gods,' mentions six persons who bore the name of Hercules; and possibly, after a minute examination, amuch greater number might be reckoned, many nations of antiquity having given the name to such great men of their own as had rendered themselves famous by their actions. Thus, we find one in Egypt in the time of Osiris, in Phœnicia, among the Gauls, in Spain, and in other countries. Confining ourselves to the Grecian Hercules, surnamed Alcides, we find that his exploits have generally been sung of by the poets, under the name of the Twelve Labours; but, on entering into the detail of them, we find them much more numerous. Killing some serpents in his youth, it was published, not only that he had done so, but that they had been sent by Juno for the purpose of destroying him. The forest of Nemea serving as a retreat for a great number of lions that ravaged the country, Hercules hunted them, and, killing the most furious of them, always wore his skin.

Several thieves, having made the neighbourhood of Lake Stymphalus, in Arcadia, their resort, he freed the country of them; the nails and wings which the poets gave them, in representing them as birds, being typical of their voracity and activity. The marshes of Lerna, near Argos, were infested by great numbers of serpents, which, as fast as they were destroyed, were replaced by new swarms; draining the marshes, and, probably, setting fire to the adjacent thickets or jungles, he destroyed these pestilent reptiles, on which it was fabled that he had destroyed the Hydra of Lerna, with its heads, which grew as fast as they were cut off. The forest of Erymanthus was full of wild boars, which laid waste all the neighbouring country: he destroyed them all, and brought one with him to the court of Eurystheus, of a size so monstrous, that the king was alarmed on seeing it, and was obliged to run and hide himself.

The stables of Augeas, king of Elis, were so filled with manure, by reason of the great quantity of oxen that he kept, that Hercules being 317 called upon to cleanse them, employed his engineering skill in bringing the river Alpheus through them. Having pursued a hind for a whole year, which Eurystheus had commanded him to take, it was circulated, probably on account of her untiring swiftness, that she had feet of brass. The river Acheloüs having overflowed the adjacent country, he raised banks to it, as already mentioned. Theseus was a prisoner in Epirus, where he had been with Pirithous, to bring away the daughter of Aidoneus. Hercules delivered him; and that was the foundation of the Fable which said that he had gone down to Hades, or Hell. In the cavern of Tænarus there was a monstrous serpent; this he was ordered to kill, and, probably, this gave rise to the story of Cerberus being chained by him. Pelias having been killed by his daughters, his son Acastus pursued them to the court of Admetus, who, refusing to deliver up Alcestis, of whom he was enamoured, was taken prisoner in an engagement, and was delivered by that princess, who herself offered to be his ransom. Hercules being then in Thessaly, he took her away from Acastus, who was about to put her to death, and returned her to Admetus. This, probably, was the foundation of the fable which stated, that he had recovered her from the Infernal Regions, after having vanquished death, and bound him in chains.

The Amazons were a nation of great celebrity in the time of Hercules, and their frequent victories had rendered them very formidable to their neighbours. Eurystheus ordered him to go and bring away the girdle of Hippolyta, or, in other words, to make war upon them, and to pillage their treasures. Embarking on the Euxine Sea, Hercules arrived on the banks of the Thermodon, and, giving battle to the female warriors, defeated them; killing some, and putting the rest to flight. He took Antiope, or Hippolyta, prisoner, whom he gave to Theseus; but her sister, Menalippa, redeemed herself by giving up the famous girdle, or, in other words, by paying a large ransom. It is very probable, that in that expedition, he slew Diomedes, the barbarous king of Thrace, and brought away his mares, which were said to have been fed by him on human flesh. In returning by way of Thessaly, he embarked in the expedition of the Argonauts; but, leaving them soon afterwards, he went to Troy, and delivered Hesione from the monster which was to have devoured her; but not receiving from Laomedon, the king, the recompense which had been promised him, he killed that prince, sacked the city, and brought away Hesione, whom he gave to Telamon, who had accompanied him on the expedition.

This is probably the extent of the labours of Hercules in Greece, Thrace, and Phrygia. The poets have made him engage in many other laborious undertakings in distant countries, which most probably ought not to be attributed to the Grecian Hercules. Among other stories told of him, it is said, that having set out to fight with Geryon, the king of Spain, he was so much incommoded by the heat of the sun, that his wrath was excited against the luminary, and he fired his arrows at it, on which, the Sun, struck with admiration at his spirited conduct, made him a present of a golden goblet. After this, embarking and arriving in Spain, he defeated Geryon, a prince who was famed for having three heads, which probably either meant that he reigned over the three Balearic islands of Maiorca, Minorca, and Iviza, or else that Hercules defeated three princes who were strictly allied. Having thence passed the straits of Gibraltar to go over to Africa, he fought with the Giant Antæus, who sought to oppose his landing. That prince was said to be a son of the Earth, and was reported to recover fresh strength every time he was thrown on the ground; consequently, Hercules was obliged to hold him in his arms, till he had squeezed him to death. The solution of this fable is most probably that Antæus, always finding succour in a country where he was known as a powerful monarch, Hercules took measures to deprive him of aid, by engaging him in a sea fight, and thereby defeated him, without much trouble, as well as the Pygmies, who were probably some African tribes of stunted stature, who came to his assistance.

Hercules, returning from these two expeditions, passed through Gaul with the herds of Geryon, and went into Italy, where Cacus, a celebrated robber, who had made the caverns of Mount Aventine his haunts, having stolen some of his oxen, he, with the assistance, according to Dionysius of Halicarnassus, of Evander and Faunus, destroyed him, and shared his spoils with his allies. In his journey from Africa, Hercules delivered Atlas from the enmity of Busiris, the tyrant of Egypt, whom he killed; and gave such good advice to the Mauritanian king, that it was said that he supported the heavens for some time on his own shoulders, to relieve those of Atlas. The latter, by way of acknowledgment of his services, made him a present of several fine sheep, or rather, according to Diodorus Siculus, of some orange and lemon trees, which he carried with him into Greece. These were represented as the golden apples watched by a dragon in the garden of the Hesperides. As the ocean there terminated the scene of his conquests, he was said to have raised two pillars on those shores, to signify the fact of his having been there, and the impossibility of proceeding any further.

The deliverance of Prometheus, as already mentioned; the death of the two brothers, the Cercopes, famous robbers; the defeat of the Bull of Marathon; the death of Lygis, who disputed the passage of the Alps with him; that of the giant Alcycaneus, who hurled at him a stone so vast that it crushed twenty-four men to death; that of Eryx, king of Sicily, whom he killed with a blow of the cestus, for refusing to deliver to him the oxen which he had stolen; the combat with Cycnus, which was terminated by a peal of thunder, which separated the combatants; another combat against the Giants in Gaul, during which, as it was said, Jupiter rained down vast quantities of stones; all these are also attributed to Hercules, besides many more stories, which, if diligently collected, would swell to a large volume.

The foregoing remarks on the history of Hercules, give us an insight into the ideas which, based upon the explanations given by the authors of antiquity, the Abbè Banier, one of the most accomplished scholars of his age, entertained on this subject. We will conclude with some very able and instructive remarks on this mythus, which we extract from Mr. Keightley's Mythology of Ancient Greece and Italy. He says —

“Various theories have been formed respecting the mythus of Hercules. It is evidently one of very remote antiquity, long perhaps, anterior to the 319 times of Homer. We confess that we cannot see any very valid reason for supposing no such real personage to have existed; for it will, perhaps, be found that mythology not unfrequently prefers to absolute fiction, the assuming of some real historic character, and making it the object of the marvels devised by lively and exuberant imagination, in order thereby to obtain more ready credence for the strange events which it creates. Such, then, may the real Hercules have been, — a Dorian, a Theban, or an Argive hero, whose feats of strength lived in the traditions of the people, and whom national vanity raised to the rank of a son of Zeus [Jupiter], and poetic fancy, as geographic knowledge extended, sent on journies throughout the known world, and accumulated in his person the fabled exploits of similar heroes of other regions.

which passes through the twelve signs of the Zodiac. This, probably, took place during the Alexandrian period. Some resemblance between his attributes and those of the Deity, with whom the Egyptian priests were pleased to identify him, may have given occasion to this notion; and he also bore some similitude to the God whom the Phœnicians chiefly worshipped, and who, it is probable, was the Sun. But we must steadily bear in mind, that Hercules was a hero in the popular legend long before any intercourse was opened between Greece and Egypt; and that, however (which is certainly not very likely) a God might be introduced from Phœnicia, the same could hardly be the case with a popular hero. — A very ingenious theory on the mythus of Hercules is given by Buttmann (Mythologus, vol.i., p. 246). Though acknowledging that Perseus, Theseus, and Hercules may have been real persons, he is disposed, from an attentive consideration of all the circumstances in the mythus of the last, to regard him as one of those poetical persons or personifications, who, as he says, have obtained such firm footing in the dark periods of antiquity, as to have acquired the complete air of historic personages.

“In his view of the life of Hercules, it is a mythus of extreme antiquity and great beauty, setting forth the ideal of human perfection, consecrated to the weal of mankind, or rather, in its original form, to that of his own nation. This perfection, according to the ideas of the heroic age, consists in the greatest bodily strength, united with the advantages of mind and soul recognised by that age. Such a hero is, he says, a man; but these noble qualities in him are of divine origin. He is, therefore, the son of the king of the Gods by a mortal mother. To render his perfection the more manifest, the Poet makes him to have a twin brother, the child of a mortal sire. As virtue is not to be learned, Hercules exhibits his strength and courage in infancy; he strangles the snakes, which fills his brother with terror. The character of the hero throughout life, as that of the avenger of injustice and punisher of evil, must exhibit itself in the boy as the wild instinct of nature; and the mythus makes him kill his tutor Linus with a blow of the lyre. When sent away by Amphytrion, he prepares himself, in the stillness and solitude of the shepherd's life, by feats of strength and courage, for his future task of purifying the earth of violence.

“ — The number of tasks may not originally have been twelve, though most accounts agree in that number, but they were all of a nature agreeable to the ideas of an heroic age — the destruction of monsters, and bringing home to his own country the valuable productions of other regions. These are, however, regarded by Buttmann as being chiefly allegorical. The Hydra, for instance, he takes to have been meant to represent the evils of democratic anarchy, with its numerous heads, against which, though one may not be able to effect anything, yet the union of even two may suffice to become dominant over it.

“The toils of the hero conclude with the greatest and most rare of all in the heroic age — the conquest over death. This is represented by his descent into the under world, and dragging Cerberus to light is a proof of his victory. In the old mythus, he was made to engage with and wound Hades; and the Alcestis of Euripides exhibits him in conflict with Death. But virtue, to be a useful example, must occasionally succumb to human weakness in the power of the evil principle. Hence, Hercules falls into fits of madness, sent on him by Hera [Juno]; and hence — he becomes the willing slave of Omphale, the fair queen of Lydia, and changes his club and lion's skin for the distaff and the female robe.

the pyre in a thunder-cloud, and the object of Hera's persecution being now accomplished, espouses youth, the daughter of his reconciled foe.

"Muller (Dorians, vol. i. part ii. ch. 11, 12) is also disposed to view in Hercules a personification of the highest powers of man in the heroic age. He regards him as having been the national hero of the Dorian race, and appropriates to him all the exploits of the hero in Thessaly, Ætolia, and Epirus, which last place he supposes to have been the original scene of the Geryoneia, which was afterwards transformed to the western stream of the ocean. He thinks, however, that the Argives had an ancient hero of perhaps the same name, to whom the Peloponnesus adventures belong, and whom the Dorians combined with their own hero. The servitude to Eurystheus, and the enmity of Hera, he looks on as inventions of the Dorians to justify their own invasion of the Peloponnesus. This critic also proves that the Theban Hercules had nothing to do with the Gods and traditions of the Cadmeians; and he thinks that it was the Dorian Heracleides who introduced the knowledge of him into Thebes, or that he came from Delphi with the worship of Apollo, a Deity with whom, as the tutelar God of the Dorians, he supposes their national hero to have been closely connected."

FABLE IV.

The Nymph Lotis, pursued by Priapus, in her flight, is changed into a tree. Dryope, going to sacrifice to the Naiads at the same spot, and ignorant of the circumstance, breaks a branch off the tree for her child, which she is carrying with her, and is subjected to a similar transformation. While Iole is relating these circumstances to Alcmena, she is surprised to see her brother Iolaüs restored to youth. The Poet here introduces the prediction of Themis concerning the children of Calirrhoë.

Thus she said; and, moved by the remembrance of her old servant, she heaved a deep sigh. Her daughter-in-law addressed her, thus grieving. "Even her form being taken away from one that was an alien to thy blood, affects thee, O mother. What if I were to relate to thee the wondrous fate of my own sister? although tears and sorrow hinder me, and forbid me to speak. Dryope, the most remarkable for her beauty of the Æchalian maids, was the only daughter of her mother (for my father had me by another wife). Deprived of her virginity, and having suffered violence from the God that owns Delphi and Delos, Andræmon married her, and he was esteemed fortunate in his wife.

"There is a lake that gives the appearance of a sloping shore, by its shelving border; groves of myrtle crown the upper part. Hither did Dryope come, unsuspecting of her fate; and, that thou mayst be the more indignant at her lot, she was about to offer garlands to the Nymphs. In her bosom, too, she was bearing her son, who had not yet completed his first year, a pleasing burden; and she was nursing him, with the help of her warm milk. Not far from the lake was blooming a watery lotus that vied with the Tyrian tints, in hope of future berries. Dryope had plucked thence some flowers, which she might give as playthings to her child; and I, too, was just on the point of doing the same; for I was present. I saw bloody drops fall from the flower, and the boughs shake with a tremulous quivering; for, as the swains say, now, at length, too late in their information, the Nymph Lotis, flying from the lust of Priapus, had transferred her changed form into this plant, her name being still preserved.

"Of this my sister was ignorant. When, in her alarm, she is endeavouring to retire and to depart, having adored the Nymphs, her feet are held fast by a root. She strives hard to tear them up, but she moves nothing except her upper parts. From below, a bark slowly grows up, and, by degrees, it envelopes the whole of her groin. When she sees this, endeavouring to tear her hair with her hands, she fills her hand with leaves, for leaves are covering all her head. But the boy Amphissos (for his grandfather Eurytus gave him this name) feels his mother's breast growing hard; nor does the milky stream follow upon his sucking. I was a spectator of thy cruel destiny, and I could give thee no help, my sister; and yet, as long as I could, I delayed the growing trunk and branches by embracing them; and, I confess it, I was desirous to be hidden beneath the same bark. Behold! her husband Andræmon and her most wretched father appear, and inquire for Dryope: on their inquiring for Dryope, I show them the lotus. They give kisses to the wood still warm with life, and, extended on the ground, they cling to the roots of their own tree. And now, dear sister, thou hadst nothing except thy face, that was not tree. Tears drop upon the leaves made out of thy changed body; and, while she can, and while her mouth gives passage to her voice, she pours forth such complaints as these into the air: —

“If any credit is to be given to the wretched, I swear by the Deities that I merited not this cruel usage. I suffer punishment without a crime. I lived in innocence; if I am speaking false, withered away, may I lose the leaves which I bear, and, cut down with axes, may I be burnt. Yet take this infant away from the branches of his mother, and give him to his nurse; and often, beneath my tree, make him drink milk, and beneath my tree let him play; and, when he shall be able to speak, make him salute his mother, and let him in sadness say, ‘Beneath this trunk is my mother concealed.’ Yet let him dread the ponds, and let him not pluck flowers from the trees; and let him think that all shrubs are the bodies of Goddesses. Farewell, dear husband; and thou, sister; and, thou my father; in whom, if there is any affection towards me, protect my branches from the wounds of the sharp pruning-knife, . and from the bite of the cattle. And since it is not allowed me to bend down towards you, stretch your limbs up hither, and come near for my kisses, while they can still be reached, and lift up my little son. More I cannot say. For the soft bark is now creeping along my white neck, and I am being enveloped at the top of my head. Remove your hands from my eyes; and, without your help, let the bark, closing over them, cover my dying eyes.' Her mouth ceased at once to speak, at once to exist; and long after her body was changed, were her newly formed branches still warm."

And now, while Iole was relating the wretched fate of her sister, and while Alcmena was drying away the tears of the daughter of Eurytus, with her fingers applied to her face, and still she herself was weeping, a novel event hushed all their sorrow; for Iolaüs stood at the lofty threshold, almost a boy again, and covering his cheeks with a down almost imperceptible, having his visage changed to that of the first years of manhood. Hebe, the daughter of Juno had granted him this favour, overcome by the solicitations of her husband. When she was about to swear that she would hereafter grant such favours to no one, Themis did not allow her. "For now," said she, "Thebes is commencing civil warfare, and Capaneus will not be able to be overcome, except by Jupiter, and the two brothers will engage in bloody combat, and the earth dividing, the prophet Amphiaraüs will see his destined shades, while he still lives; and the son avenging one parent, by the death of the other parent, will be dutiful and wicked in the same action; and confounded by his misfortunes, deprived both of his reason and of his home, he will be persecuted both by the features of the . Eumenides, and by the ghost of his mother; until his wife shall call upon him for the fatal gold, and the Phegeïan sword shall stab the side of their kinsman. Then, at last, shall Calirrhoë, the daughter of Acheloüs, suppliantly ask of mighty Jupiter these years of youth for her infant sons. Jupiter, concerned for them, will prescribe for them the

When Themis, foreseeing the future, had said these words with prophetic voice, the Gods above murmured in varying discourse; and the complaint was, why it might not be allowed others to grant the same gifts. Aurora, the daughter of Pallas, complained of the aged years of her husband; the gentle Ceres complained that Iasion was growing grey; Mulciber demanded for Erichonius a life to live over again; a concern for the future influenced Venus, too, and she made an offer to renew the years of Anchises.

EXPLANATION.

The adventure of Dryope is one of those narratives which have no connexion with the main story which the Poet is relating, and, if really founded on fact, it would almost baffle any attempt to guess at its origin. It is, most probably, built entirely upon the name of the damsel who was said to have met with the untimely and unnatural fate so well depicted by the Poet.

The name of Dryope comes, very probably, from the Greek word Δρῦς, ‘an oak,’ which tree has a considerable resemblance to the lotus tree. If we seek for an historical solution, perhaps Dryope was punished for attempting to profane a tree consecrated to the Gods, a crime of which Erisichon was guilty, and for which he was so signally punished. All the particulars that we know of Dryope are, that she was the daughter of Eurytus, and the sister of Iole; and that she was the wife of Andræmon.

Ovid says, that while Iole was relating this adventure to Alcmena, Iolaüs, who, according to some, was the son of Hercules, by Hebe, after his apotheosis, and, according to others, was the son of Iphiclus, the brother of Hercules, became young, at the intercession of that Goddess, who had

. appeased Juno. This was, probably, no other than a method of accounting for the great age to which and individual of the name of Iolaüs had lived.

Ovid then passes on to the surprising change in the children of Calirrhoë, the outline of which the story may be thus explained: — Amphiaraüs, foreseeing, (by the aid of the prophetic art, as we learn from Homer, Diodorus Siculus, Pliny and Statius), that the civil wars of Thebes, his native country, would prove fatal to him, retired from the court of Adrastus, King of Argos, whose sister he had married, to conceal himself in some place of safety. The Argives, to whom the oracle had declared, that Thebes could not be taken unless they had Amphiaraüs with their troops, searched for him in every direction; but their labour would have been in vain, if Eriphyle, his wife, gained by a necklace of great value, which her brother Adrastus gave her, had not discovered where he was. Discovered in his retreat, Amphiaraüs accompanied the Argives, and while, according to the rules of the soothsaying art, he was observing a flight of birds, in order to derive an augury from it, his horses fell down a precipice, and he lost his life. Statius and other writers, to describe this event in a poetical manner, say that the earth opened and swallowed up him and his chariot.

Amphiaraüs had engaged his son Alcmæon, in case he lost his life in the war, to kill Eriphyle; which injunction he performed as soon as he heard of the death of his father. Alcmæon, going to the court of Phegeus, to receive expiation for his crime, and to deliver himself from the persecution of the Furies, or, in other words, by the ceremonial of expiation, to tranquillize his troubled conscience, that prince received him with kindness, and gave him his daughter Alphisibæa in marriage. Alcmæon made her a present of his mother Eriphyle's necklace; but, having afterwards repudiated her to marry Calirrhoë, or Arsinoë, the daughter of Acheloüs, he went to demand the necklace from his brothers-in-law, who assassinated him.

Amphiterus and Acarnanus, who were his sons by Calirrhoë, revenged the death of their father when they were very young; and this it is, possibly, which is meant by the Poet when he says that the Goddess Hebe augmented the number of their years, the purpose being, to put them speedily in a position to enable them to avenge the death of their father.

Thus we see, that Iolaüs was, like Æson, who also renewed his youth, a person who, in his old age, gave marks of unusual vigour; while in Amphiterus and Arcananus, to whom Hebe added years, are depicted two young men, who, by a deed of blood, exacted retribution for the death of their father, at a time when they were in general only looked upon as mere children.

FABLE V.

Byblis falls in love with her brother Caunus, and her passion is inflamed to such a degree, that he is obliged to leave his native country, to avoid any encouragement of her incestuous flame. On this, she follows him; and, in her way through Caria, she is changed into a fountain.

Every God has some one to favour; and their jarring discord . is increasing by their various interests, until Jupiter opens his mouth, and says, "O, if you have any regard for me, to what rash steps are you proceeding? Does any one of you seem to himself so powerful as to overcome even the Fates? By the Fates has Iolaüs returned to those years which he has spent; by the Fates ought the sons of Calirrhoë to become young men, and not by ambition or by dint of arms. And do you, too, endure this as well with more contented mind, for even me do the Fates govern; could I but change them, declining years should not be making my son Æacus to bend beneath them; and Rhadamanthus should have the everlasting flower of age, together with my son, Minos, who is now looked down upon on account of the grievous weight of old age, and does not reign with the dignity with which once he did."

The words of Jupiter influenced the Divinities; and no one continued to complain when they saw Rhadamanthus and Æacus, and Minos, weary with years; Minos, who, when he was in the prime of life, had alarmed great nations with his very name. Then, however, he was enfeebled by age, and was alarmed by Miletus, the son of Deione, exulting in the strength of youth, and in Phœbus as his sire; and though believing that he was aiming at his kingdom, still he did not dare to drive him away from his native home. Of thy own accord, Miletus, thou didst fly, and in the swift ship thou didst pass over the Ægean waters, and in the land of Asia didst build a city, bearing the name of its founder. Here Cyane, the daughter of the river Mæander, that so often returns to the same place, while she was following the windings of her father's bank, of a body excelling in beauty, being known by thee, brought forth a double offspring, Byblis, with Caunus, her brother.

Byblis is an example that damsels only ought to love what it is allowed them to love; Byblis, seized with a passion for her brother, the descendant of Apollo, loved him not as a sister loves a brother, nor in such manner as she ought. At first, indeed, she understands nothing of the flame, and she . does not think that she is doing wrong in so often giving him kisses, and in throwing her arms round the neck of her brother; and for a long time she herself is deceived, by this resemblance of natural affection. By degrees this affection degenerates, and decked out, she comes to see her brother, and is too anxious to appear beautiful; and if there is any woman there more beautiful, she envies her. But, as yet she is not fully discovered to herself, and under that flame conceives no wishes; but still, inwardly she is agitated. At one moment she calls him sweetheart, at another, she hates the mention of his relationship; and now she prefers that he should call her Byblis, rather than sister. Still, while awake, she does not dare admit any criminal hopes into her mind; but when dissolved in soft sleep, she often sees the object which she is in love with. She seems to be even embracing her brother, and she blushes, though she is lying buried in sleep. Slumber departs; for a long time she is silent, and she recalls to memory the appearance of her dream, and thus she speaks with wavering mind:

“Ah, wretched me! What means this vision of the silent night? How far am I from wishing it real. Why have I seen this dream? He is, indeed, beautiful, even to envious eyes. He pleases me, too; and were he not my brother, I could love him, and he would be worthy of me. But it is my misfortune that I am his sister. So long as I strive, while awake, to commit no such attempt, let sleep often return with the like appearance. No witness is there in sleep; and yet there is the resemblance of the delight. O Venus and winged Cupid, together with thy voluptuous mother, how great the joys I experienced! how substantial the transport which affected me! How I lay dissolved in delight throughout my whole marrow! How pleasing to remember it; although short-lived was that pleasure, and the night sped onward rapidly, and was envious of my attempts at bliss. Oh, could I only be united to thee, by changing my name, how happily, Caunus, could I become the daughter-in-law of thy father! how happily, Caunus, couldst thou become the son-in-law of my father! O, that the Gods would grant that all things were in common with us, except our ancestors. Would that thou wast more nobly born than myself. For this reason then, most beautiful one, thou wilt make some stranger, whom I know not, another; but to me, who have unhappily got the same parents as thyself, thou wilt be nothing more than a brother. That tie alone we shall have, which bars all else. What, then, do my visions avail me? And what weight have dreams? And do dreams have any weight? The Gods fare better; for the Gods have their own sisters in marriage. Thus Saturn married Ops, related to him by blood; Ocean Tethys, the ruler of Olympus Juno. The Gods above have their privileges. Why do I attempt to reduce human customs to the rule of divine ordinances, and those so different? Either this forbidden flame shall be expelled from my heart, or if I cannot effect that, I pray that I may first perish, and that when dead I may be laid out on my bed, and that my brother may give me kisses as I lie. And besides, this matter requires the inclination of us both; suppose it pleases me; to him it will seem to be a crime. But the sons of Æolus did not shun the embraces of their sisters. But whence have I known of these? Why have I furnished myself with these precedents? Whither am I hurried onward? Far hence begone, ye lawless flames! and let not my brother be loved by me, but as it is lawful for a sister to love him. But yet, if he had been first seized with a passion for me, perhaps I might have indulged his desires. Am I then, myself, to court him, whom I would not have rejected, had he courted me? And canst thou speak out? And canst thou confess it? Love will compel me. I can. Or if shame shall restrain my lips, a private letter shall confess the latent flame."

This thought pleases her, this determines her wavering mind. She raises herself on her side, and leaning on her left elbow, she says, "He shall see it; let me confess my frantic passion. Ah, wretched me! How am I degrading myself! What flame is my mind now kindling!" And then, with trembling hand, she puts together the words well weighed. Her right hand holds the iron pen, the other, clean wax tablets. She begins, and then she hesitates; she writes, and then corrects what is written; she marks, and then scratches out; she alters, and condemns, and approves; and one while she throws them down when taken up, and at another time, she takes them up again, when thrown aside. What she would have, she knows not. Whatever she seems on the point of doing, is not to her taste. In her features are assurance mingled with shame. The word 'sister' is written; it seems as well to efface the word 'sister,' and then to write such words as these upon the smoothed wax: "Thy lover wishes thee that health which she, herself, is not to enjoy, unless thou shalt grant it. I am ashamed! Oh, I am ashamed to disclose my name! and shouldst thou inquire what it is I wish; without my name could I wish my cause to be pleaded, and that I might not be known as Byblis, until the hopes of enjoying my desires were realized. There might have been as a proof to thee of my wounded heart, my pale complexion, my falling away, my downcast looks, and my eyes often wet with tears, sighs, too, fetched without any seeming cause; frequent embraces too, and kisses, which, if perchance thou didst observe, could not be deemed to be those of a sister. Still I, myself, though I had a grievous wound in my soul, and although there was a raging fire within, have done everything, as the Gods are my witnesses, that at last I might be cured; and long, in my wretchedness, have I struggled to escape the ruthless weapon of Cupid; and I have endured more hardships than thou wouldst believe that a maiden could endure.

"Vanquished at length, I am forced to own my passion; and with timorous prayers, to entreat thy aid. Thou alone canst . save, thou destroy, one who loves thee. Choose which thou wilt do. She is not thy enemy who begs this; but one who, though most nearly connected with thee, desires to be still more closely connected, and to be united to thee in a nearer tie. Let aged men be acquainted with ordinances, and make inquiry what is lawful, and what is wicked, and what is proper; and let them employ themselves in considering the laws. A passion that dares all consequences is suited to our years. As yet, we know not what is lawful, and we believe that all things are lawful, and so follow the example of the great Gods. Neither a severe father, nor regard for character, nor fear, shall restrain us, if only the cause for fearing is removed. Under a brother's name will we conceal our stolen joys so sweet. I have the liberty of conversing with thee in private; and even before others do we give embraces, and exchange kisses. How little is it that is wanting! do have pity on the love of her who confesses it, and who would not confess it, did not extreme passion compel her; and merit not to be inscribed on my tomb as the cause of my death."

The filled tablets fall short for her hand, as it vainly inscribes such words as these, and the last line is placed in the margin. At once she seals up her own condemnation, with the impress of a signet, which she wets with her tears, for the moisture has deserted her tongue. Filled with shame, she then calls one of her male domestics, and gently addressing him in timorous tones, she said, "Carry these, most trusty one, to my," and, after a long pause, she added, "brother." While she was delivering them, the tablets, slipping from her hands, fell down. She was shocked by this omen, but still she sent them. The servant, having got a fit opportunity, goes to her brother and delivers the secret writing. The Mæandrian youth, seized with sudden anger, throws away the tablets so received, when he has read a part; and, with difficulty withholding his hands from the face of the trembling servant, he says, "Fly hence, O thou accursed pander to forbidden lust, who shouldst have given me satisfaction by thy death, if it was not that thy destruction would bring disgrace on my character." Frightened, he hastens . away, and reports to his mistress the threatening expressions of Caunus. Thou, Byblis, on hearing of his refusal, turnest pale, and thy breast, beset with an icy chill, is struck with alarm; yet when thy senses return, so, too, does thy frantic passion return, and thy tongue with difficulty utters such words as these, the air being struck by thy accents:

"And deservedly am I thus treated; for why, in my rashness, did I make the discovery of this wound? why have I so speedily committed words to a hasty letter, which ought rather to have been concealed? The feelings of his mind ought first to have been tried beforehand by me, with

ambiguous expressions. Lest he should not follow me in my course, I ought, with some part of my sail only, to have observed what kind of a breeze it was, and to have scudded over the sea in safety; whereas, now, I have filled my canvass with winds before untried. I am driven upon rocks in consequence; and sunk, I am buried beneath the whole ocean, and my sails have now no retreat. And besides, was I not forbidden, by unerring omens, to indulge my passion, at the time when the waxen tablets fell, as I ordered him to deliver them, and made my hopes sink to the ground? and ought not either the day to have been changed, or else my whole intentions; but rather, of the two, the day? Some God himself warned me, and gave me unerring signs, if I had not been deranged; and yet I ought to have spoken out myself, and not to have committed myself to writing, and personally lought to have discovered my passion; then he would have seen my tears, then he would have seen the features of her who loved him; I might have given utterance to more than what the letter contained. I might have thrown my arms around his reluctant neck, and have embraced his feet, and lying on the ground, I might have begged for life; and if I had been repelled, I might have seemed on the point of death. All this, I say, I might then have done; if each of these things could not singly have softened his obdurate feelings, yet all of them might.

“Perhaps, too, there may be some fault in the servant that . was sent. He did not wait on him at a convenient moment; he did not choose, I suppose, a fitting time; nor did he request both the hour and his attention to be disengaged. ‘Tis this that has undone me; for he was not born of a tigress, nor does he carry in his breast hard flints, or solid iron, or adamant; nor yet did he suck the milk of a lioness. He will yet be won. Again must he be attacked. And no weariness will I admit of in the accomplishment of my design, so long as this breath of mine shall remain. For the best thing (if I could only recall what has been destined) would have been,

not to have made the attempt; the next best thing is, to urge the accomplishment of what is begun; for he cannot (suppose I were to relinquish my design) ever be unmindful of this my attempt; and because I have desisted, I shall appear to have desired for but an instant, or even to have been trying him, and to have solicited him with the intention to betray; or, at least, I shall be thought not to have been overcome by this God, who with such intensity now burns, and has burnt my breast, but rather by lust. In fine, I cannot now be guiltless of a wicked deed; I have both written to him, and I have solicited him; my inclination has been defiled. Though I were to add nothing more, I cannot be pronounced innocent: as to what remains, 'twill add much to the gratifying of my wishes, but little to my criminality.'"

Thus she says; and (so great is the unsteadiness of her wavering mind) though she is loath to try him, she has a wish to try him, and she exceeds all bounds, and, to her misery, exposes herself to be often repulsed. At length, when there is now no end to this, he flies from his country and the commission of this crime, and founds a new city in a foreign land. But then, they say that the daughter of Miletus, in her sadness, was bereft of all understanding. Then did she tear her garments away from her breast, and in her frenzy beat her arms. And now she is openly raving, and she proclaims the unlawful hopes of unnatural lust. Deprived of these hopes, she deserts her native land, and her hated home, and follows the steps of her flying brother. And as the Ismarian Bacchanals, . son of Semele, aroused by thy thyrsus, celebrate thy triennial festivals, as they return, no otherwise did the Bubasian matrons see Byblis howling over the wide fields; leaving which, she wandered through the country of the Carians, and the warlike Leleges, and Lycia.

And now she has left behind Cragos, and Lymira, and the waves of Xanthus, and the mountain in which the Chimæra had fire in its middle parts, the breast and the face of a lioness, and the tail of a serpent. The woods at length fail thee; when thou, Byblis, wearied with following him, dost fall down, and laying thy tresses upon the hard ground, art silent, and dost press the fallen leaves with thy face. Often, too, do the Lelegeïan Nymphs endeavour to raise her in their tender arms; often do they advise her to curb her passion, and they apply consolation to a mind insensible to their advice. Silent does Byblis lie, and she tears the green herbs with her nails, and waters the grass with the stream of her tears. They say that the Naiads placed beneath these tears a channel which could never become dry; and what greater gift had they to bestow? Immediately, as drops from the cut bark of the pitch tree, or as the viscid bitumen distils from the impregnated earth, or as water which has frozen with the cold, at the approach of Favonius, gently blowing, melts away in the sun, so is Byblis, the descendant of Phœbus, dissolving in her tears, changed into a fountain, which even now, in those vallies, bears the name of its mistress, and flows beneath a gloomy oak.

EXPLANATION.

This shocking story has been also recounted by Antoninus Liberalis and both he and Ovid have embellished it with circumstances, which are the fruit of a lively imagination. They make Byblis travel over several countries in search of her brother, who flies from her extravagant passion, and they both agree in tracing her to Caria. There, according to Antoninus Liberalis, she was transformed into a Hamadryad, just as she was on . the point of throwing herself from the summit of a mountain. Ovid, on the other hand, says that she was changed into a fountain, which afterwards bore her name.

It is, however, most probable, that if the story is founded on truth, the whole of the circumstances happened in Caria; since we learn, both from Apollodorus and Pausanias, that Miletus, her father, went from the island of Crete to lead a colony into Caria, when he conquered a city, to which he gave his own name. Pausanias says, that all the men of the city being killed during the siege, the conquerors married their wives and daughters. Cyanea, the daughter of Mæander, fell to the share of Miletus, and Caunus and Byblis were the offspring of that marriage. Byblis, having conceived a criminal passion for her brother, he was obliged to leave his father's court, that he might avoid her importunities; upon which she died of grief. As she often went to weep by a fountain, which was outside of the town, those who related the adventure, magnified it, by stating that she was changed into the fountain, which, after her death, bore her name. We are informed by Photius, on the authority of the historian Conon, that it was Caunus who fell in love with Byblis, and that she hanged herself upon a walnut tree. Ovid also, in his 'Art of Love,' follows the tradition that she hanged herself. 'Arsit et est laqueo fortiter ultra nefas.' Miletus lived in the time of the first Minos, and, according to some writers, married his daughter Acallis; but, having disagreed with his father-in-law, he was obliged to leave Crete, and retired to Caria.

The Persians had certain state ordinances, by which their monarchs were enjoined to marry their own sisters; and, as Asia Minor was overrun by them at the time when Cræsus was conquered by Cyrus, it is possible that the story of Byblis and Caunus may have originated in the disgust which the natives felt for their conquerors, and as a covert reproach to them for sanctioning alliances of so incestuous a nature. While Ovid enters into details in the story, which trench on the rules of modesty and decorum, the moral of the tale, aided by some of his precepts, is not un instructive as a warning to youth to learn betimes how to regulate the passions.

FABLE VI.

Ligdus commands his wife Telethusa, who is pregnant, to destroy the infant, should it prove to be a girl; on which, the Goddess Isis appears to her in a dream, and, forbidding her to obey, promises her her protection. Telethusa is delivered of a daughter, who is called Iphis, and passes for a son. Iphis is afterwards married to Ianthe, on which, Isis, to reward her mother's piety, transforms her into a man.

The fame of this new prodigy would, perhaps, have filled the hundred cities of Crete, if Crete had not lately produced a nearer wonder of her own, in the change of Iphis.

For once on a time the Phæstian land adjoining to the Gnosian kingdom produced one Ligdus, of obscure name, a man of the freeborn class of common people. Nor were his means any greater than his rank, but his life and his honour were untainted. He startled the ears of his wife in her pregnancy, with these words, when her lying-in was near at hand: "Two things there are which I wish for; that thou mayst be delivered with very little pain, and that thou mayst bring forth a male child. The other alternative is a cause of greater trouble, and providence has denied us means for bringing up a female. The thing I abominate; but if a female should, by chance, be brought forth at thy delivery, (I command it with reluctance, forgive me, natural affection) let it be put to death." Thus he said, and they bathed their faces with tears streaming down; both he who commanded, and she to whom the commands were given. But yet Telethusa incessantly urged her husband, with fruitless entreaties, not to confine his hopes within a compass so limited. But Ligdus's resolution was fixed.

And now was she hardly able to bear her womb big with the burden ripe for birth; when in the middle of the night, under the form of a vision, the daughter of Inachus, attended by a train of her votaries, either stood, or seemed to stand, before her bed. The horns of the moon were upon her forehead, with ears of corn with their bright golden colour, and the royal ornament of the diadem; with her was the barking Anubis, and the holy Bubastis, and the particoloured Apis; he, too, who suppresses his voice, and with . his finger enjoins silence. There were the sistra too, and Osiris, never enough sought for; and the foreign serpent, filled with soporiferous poison. When thus the Goddess addressed her, as though roused from her sleep, and seeing all distinctly: “O Telethusa, one of my votaries, lay aside thy grievous cares, and evade the commands of thy husband; and do not hesitate, when Lucina shall have given thee ease by delivery, to bring up the child, whatever it shall be. I am a befriending Goddess, and, when invoked, I give assistance; and thou shalt not complain that thou hast worshipped an ungrateful Divinity.”

Thus she advises her, and then retires from her chamber. The Cretan matron arises joyful from her bed; and suppliantly raising her pure hands towards the stars of heaven, prays that her vision may be fulfilled. When her pains increased, and her burden forced itself into the light, and a girl was born to the father unaware of it, the mother ordered it to be brought up, pretending it was a boy; and the thing gained belief, nor was any one but the nurse acquainted with the fact. The father performed his vows, and gave the child the name of its grandfather. The grandfather had been called Iphis. The mother rejoiced in that name because it was common to both sexes, nor would she be deceiving any one by it. Her deception lay unperceived under this fraud, the result of natural affection. The child's dress was that of a boy; the face such, that, whether you gave it to a girl or to a boy, either would be beautiful. In the meantime the third year had now succeeded the tenth, when her father, Olphis, promised to thee, in marriage, the yellow-haired Iänthe, who was a virgin the most commended among all the women of Phæstus, for the endowments of her beauty; the daughter of the Dictæan Telestes. Equal was their age, their beauty equal; and they received their first instruction, the elements suited to their age, from the same preceptor.

Love, in consequence, touches the inexperienced breasts of them both, and inflicts on each an equal wound; but how different are their hopes! Iänthe awaits the time of their union, and of the ceremonial agreed upon, and believes that she, whom she thinks to be a man, will be her husband. Iphis is in love with her whom she despairs to be able to enjoy, and this very thing increases her flame; and, herself a maid, she burns with passion for a maid. And, with difficulty, suppressing her tears, she says, "What issue of my love awaits me, whom the anxieties unknown to any before, and so unnatural, of an unheard-of passion, have seized upon? if the Gods would spare me, (they ought to have destroyed me, and if they would not have destroyed me), at least they should have inflicted some natural evil, and one common to the human race. Passion for a cow does not inflame a cow, nor does that for mares inflame the mares. The ram inflames the ewes; its own female follows the buck. And so do birds couple; and among all animals, no female is seized with passion for a female. Would that I did not exist.

"Yet, lest Crete might not be the producer of all kinds of prodigies, the daughter of the Sun loved a bull; that is to say, a female loved a male. My passion, if I confess the truth, is more extravagant than that. Still she pursued the hopes of enjoyment; still, by a subtle contrivance, and under the form of a cow, did she couple with the bull, and her paramour was one that might be deceived. But though the ingenuity of the whole world were to centre here, though Dædalus himself were to fly back again with his waxen wings, what could he do? Could he, by his skilful arts, make me from a maiden into a youth? or could he transform . thee, Iänthe? But why dost thou not fortify thy mind, and recover thyself, Iphis? And why not shake off this passion, void of all reason, and senseless as it is? Consider what it was thou wast born (unless thou art deceiving thyself as well), and pursue that which is allowable, and love that which, as a woman, thou oughtst to love. Hope it is that produces, Hope it is that nourishes love. This, the very case itself deprives thee of. No guard is keeping thee away from her dear embrace; no care of a watchful husband, no father's severity; does not she herself deny thy solicitations. And yet she cannot be enjoyed by thee; nor, were everything possible done, couldst thou be blessed; not, though Gods and men were to do their utmost. And now, too, no portion of my desires is baffled, and the compliant Deities have granted me whatever they were able, and what I desire, my father wishes, she herself wishes, and so does my destined father-in-law; but nature, more powerful than all these, wills it not; she alone is an obstacle to me. Lo, the longed-for time approaches, and the wedding-day is at hand, when Iänthe should be mine; and yet she will not fall to my lot. In the midst of water, I shall be athirst. Why, Juno, guardian of the marriage rites, and why, Hymenæus, do you come to this ceremonial, where there is not the person who should marry the wife, and where both of us females, we are coupled in wedlock?"

After saying these words, she closes her lips. And no less does the other maid burn, and she prays thee, Hymenæus, to come quickly. Telethusa, dreading the same thing that she desires, at one time puts off the time of the wedding, and then raises delays, by feigning illness. Often, by way of excuse, she pretends omens and visions. But now she has exhausted all the resources of fiction; and the time for the marriage so long delayed is now at hand, and only one day remains; whereon she takes off the fillets for the hair from her own head and from that of her daughter, and embracing the altar with dishevelled locks, she says, "O Isis, thou who dost inhabit . Parætonium, and the Mareotic fields, and Pharos, and the Nile divided into its seven horns, give aid, I beseech thee, and ease me of my fears. Thee, Goddess, thee, I once beheld, and these thy symbols; and all of them I recognized; both thy attendants, and thy torches, and the sound of the sistra, and I noted thy commands with mindful care. That this girl now sees the light, that I, myself, am not punished, is the result of thy counsel, and thy admonition; pity us both, and aid us with thy assistance.”

Tears followed her words. The Goddess seemed to move, (and she really did move) her altars; and the doors of her temple shook. Her horns, too, shone, resembling those of the moon, and the tinkling sistrum sounded. The mother departs from the temple, not free from concern indeed, still pleased with this auspicious omen. Iphis follows her, her companion as she goes, with longer strides than she had been wont; her fairness does not continue on her face; both her strength is increased, and her features are more stern; and shorter is the length of her scattered locks. There is more vigour, also, than she had as a female. And now thou art a male, who so lately wast a female. Bring offerings to the temple, and rejoice with no hesitating confidence. They do bring their offerings to the temple. They add, too, an inscription; the inscription contains one short line: “Iphis, a male, offers the presents, which, as a female, he had vowed.”

The following morn has disclosed the wide world with the rays of the Sun; when Venus, and Juno, and Hymenæus, . repair to the social fires; and Iphis, now a youth, gains his dear länthé.

EXPLANATION.

The story of Iphis being changed from a young woman into a man, of which Ovid lays the scene in the isle of Crete, is one of those facts upon which ancient history is entirely silent. Perhaps, the origin of the story was a disguise of a damsel in male dress, carried on, for family reasons, even to the very point of marriage; or it may have been based upon an account of some remarkable instance of androgynous formation.

Ovid may possibly have invented the story himself, merely as a vehicle for showing how the Deities recompense piety and strict obedience to their injunctions.

BOOK THE TENTH.

FABLE I.

Eurydice, the wife of Orpheus, while sporting in the fields, with other Nymphs, is bitten by a serpent, which causes her death. After having mourned for her, Orpheus resolves to go down to the Infernal Regions in quest of her. Pluto and the Fates consent to her return, on condition that Orpheus shall not look on her till he is out of their dominions. His curiosity prevailing, he neglects this injunction, on which she is immediately snatched away from him, beyond the possibility of recovery. Upon this occasion, the Poet relates the story of a shepherd, who was turned into a rock by a look of Cerberus; and that of Olenus and Lethæa, who were transformed into stones.

Thence Hymenæus, clad in a saffron-coloured robe, passed through the unmeasured tract of air, and directed his course to the regions of the Ciconians, and, in vain, was invoked by the voice of Orpheus. He presented himself indeed, but he brought with him neither auspicious words, nor joyful looks, nor yet a happy omen. The torch, too, which he held, was hissing with a smoke that brought tears to the eyes, and as it was, it found no flames amid its waving. The issue was more disastrous than the omens; for the newmade bride, while she was strolling along the grass, attended by a train of Naiads, was killed, having received the sting of a serpent on her ankle.

After the Rhodopeian bard had sufficiently bewailed her in the upper realms of air, that he might try the shades below as well, he dared to descend to Styx by the Tænarian gate, and amid the phantom inhabitants and ghosts that had enjoyed . the tomb, he went to Persephone, and him that held these unpleasing realms, the Ruler of the shades; and touching his strings in concert with his words, he thus said, "O ye Deities of the world that lies beneath the earth, to which we all come at last, each that is born to mortality; if I may be allowed, and you suffer me to speak the truth, laying aside the artful expressions of a deceitful tongue; I have not descended hither from curiosity to see dark Tartarus, nor to bind the threefold throat of the Medusæan monster, bristling with serpents. But my wife was the cause of my coming; into whom a serpent, trodden upon by her, diffused its poison, and cut short her growing years. I was wishful to be able to endure this, and I will not deny that I have endeavoured to do so. Love has proved the stronger. That God is well known in the regions above. Whether he be so here, too, I am uncertain; but yet I imagine that even here he is; and if the story of the rape of former days is not untrue, 'twas love that united you two together. By these places filled with horrors, by this vast Chaos, and by the silence of these boundless realms, I entreat you, weave over again the quick-spun thread of the life of Eurydice.

"To you we all belong; and having staid but a little while above, sooner or later we all hasten to one abode. Hither are we all hastening. This is our last home; and you possess the most lasting dominion over the human race. She, too, when, in due season she shall have completed her allotted number of years, will be under your sway. The enjoyment of her I beg as a favour. But if the Fates deny me this privilege in behalf of my wife, I have determined that I will not return. Triumph in the death of us both."

As he said such things, and touched the strings to his words, the bloodless spirits wept. Tantalus did not catch at the retreating water, and the wheel of Ixion stood still, as though in amazement; the birds did not tear the liver of Tityus; and the granddaughters of Belus paused at their urns; thou, too, Sisyphus, didst seat thyself on thy stone. The story is, that then, for the first time, the cheeks of the Eumenides, overcome by his music, were wet with tears; nor could the royal consort, nor he who rules the infernal regions, endure . to deny him his request; and they called for Eurydice. She was among the shades newly arrived, and she advanced with a slow pace, by reason of her wound.

The Rhodopeian hero receives her, and, at the same time, this condition, that he turn not back his eyes until he has passed the Avernian vallies, or else that the grant will be revoked. The ascending path is mounted in deep silence, steep, dark, and enveloped in deepening gloom. And now they were not far from the verge of the upper earth. He, enamoured, fearing lest she should flag, and impatient to behold her, turned his eyes; and immediately she sank back again. She, hapless one! both stretching out her arms, and struggling to be grasped, and to grasp him, caught nothing but the fleeting air. And now, dying a second time, she did not at all complain of her husband; for why should she complain of being beloved? And now she pronounced the last farewell, which scarcely did he catch with his ears; and again was she hurried back to the same place.

No otherwise was Orpheus amazed at this twofold death of his wife, than he who, trembling, beheld the three necks of the dog, the middle one supporting chains; whom fear did not forsake, before his former nature deserted him, as stone gathered over his body: and than Olenus, who took on himself the crime of another, and was willing to appear guilty; and than thou, unhappy Lethæa, confiding in thy beauty; breasts, once most united, now rocks, which the watery Ida supports. The ferryman drove him away entreating, and, in vain, desiring again to cross the stream. Still, for seven days, in squalid guise did he sit on the banks without the gifts of Ceres. Vexation, . and sorrow of mind, and tears were his sustenance. Complaining that the Deities of Erebus were cruel, he betook himself to lofty Rhodope, and Hæmus, buffeted by the North winds. The third Titan had now ended the year bounded by the Fishes of the ocean; and Orpheus had avoided all intercourse with woman, either because it had ended in misfortune to him, or because he had given a promise to that effect. Yet a passion possessed many a female to unite herself to the bard, and many a one grieved when repulsed. He also was the first adviser of the people of Thrace to transfer their affections to tender youths; and, on this side of manhood, to enjoy the short spring of life, and its early flowers.

EXPLANATION.

Though Ovid has separated the adventures of Orpheus, whose death he does not relate till the beginning of the eleventh Book, we will here shortly enter upon an examination of some of the more important points of his history.

As, in his time, Poetry and Music were in a very low state of perfection, and as he excelled in both of those arts, it was said that he was the son of Apollo and the Muse Calliope; and it was added, that he charmed lions and tigers, and made even the trees sensible of the melodious tones of his lyre. These were mere hyperbolical expressions, which signified the wondrous charms of his eloquence and of his music combined, which he employed in cultivating the genius of a savage and uncouth people. Some conjecture that this personage originally came from Asia into Thrace, and suppose that he, together with Linus and Eumolpus, brought poetry and music into Greece, the use of which, till then, was unknown in that country; and that they introduced, at the same time, the worship of Ceres, Mars, and the orgies of Bacchus, which, from him who instituted them, received their name of 'Orphica.' Orpheus, too, is supposed to have united the office of high priest with that of king. Horace styles him the interpreter of the Gods; and he was said to have interposed with the Deities for the deliverance of the Argonauts from a dangerous tempest. It is thought that he passed some part of his life in Egypt, and became acquainted with many particulars of the ancient religion of the Egyptians, which he introduced into the theology of Greece. Some modern writers even go so far as to suggest that he learned from the 345 Hebrews, who were then sojourning in Egypt, the knowledge of the true God.

His wife, Eurydice, dying very young, he was inconsolable for her loss. To alleviate his grief, he went to Thesprotia, in Epirus, the natives of which region were said to possess incantations, for the purpose of raising the ghosts of the departed. Here, according to some accounts, being deceived by a phantom, which was made to appear before him, he died of sorrow; but, according to other writers, he renounced the society of mankind for ever and retired to the mountains of Thrace. His journey to that distant country gave occasion to say, that he descended to the Infernal Regions. This is the more likely, as he is supposed to have there promulgated his notions of the infernal world, which, according to Diodorus Siculus, he had learned among the Egyptians.

Tzetzes, however, assures us that this part of his history is founded on the circumstance, that Orpheus cured his wife of the bite of a serpent, which had till then been considered to be mortal; and that the poets gave an hyperbolical version of the story, in saying that he had rescued her from Hell. He says, too, that he had learned in Egypt the art of magic, which was much cultivated there, and especially the method of charming serpents.

After the loss of his wife, he retired to mount Rhodope, to assuage the violence of his grief. There, according to Ovid and other poets, the Mænades, or Bacchanals, to be revenged for his contempt of them and their rites, tore him in pieces; which story is somewhat diversified by the writers who relate that Venus, exasperated against Calliope, the mother of Orpheus, for having adjudged to Proserpine the possession of Adonis, caused the women of Thrace to become enamoured of her son, and to tear him in pieces while disputing the possession of him. An ancient author, quoted by Hyginus, says that Orpheus was killed by the stroke of a thunderbolt, while he was accompanying the Argonauts; and Apollodorus says the same. Diodorus Siculus calls him one of the kings of Thrace; while other writers, among whom are Cicero and Aristotle, assert that there never was such a person as Orpheus. The learned Vossius says, that the Phœnician word 'ariph,' which signifies 'learned,' gave rise to the story of Orpheus. Le Clerc thinks that in consequence of the same Greek word signifying 'an enchanter,' and also meaning 'a singer,' he acquired the reputation of having been a most skilful magician.

We may, perhaps, safely conclude, that Orpheus really did introduce the worship of many Gods into Greece; and that, possibly, while he promulgated the necessity of expiating crimes, he introduced exorcism, and brought magic into fashion in Greece. Lucian affirms that he was also the first to teach the elements of astronomy. Several works were attributed to him, which are now no longer in existence; among which were a Poem on the Expedition of the Argonauts, one on the War of the Giants, another on the Rape of Proserpine, and a fourth upon the Labours of Hercules. The Poem on the Argonautic Expedition, which now exists, and is attributed to him, is supposed to have been really written by a poet named Onomacritus, who lived in the sixth century B.C., in the time of Pisistratus.

After his death, Orpheus was reckoned in the number of Heroes or Demigods; and we are informed by Philostratus that his head was preserved at Lesbos, where it gave oracular responses. Orpheus is not mentioned by Homer or Hesiod. The learned scholar Lobeck, in his Aglaophamus, has entered very deeply into an investigation of the real nature of the discoveries and institutions ascribed to him.

FABLE II.

Orpheus, retiring to Mount Rhodope, by the charms of his music, attracts to himself all kinds of creatures, rocks, and trees; among the latter is the pine tree, only known since the transformation of Attis.

There was a hill, and upon the hill a most level space of a plain, which the blades of grass made green: all shade was wanting in the spot. After the bard, sprung from the Gods, had seated himself in this place, and touched his tuneful strings, ashade came over the spot. The tree of Chaonia was not absent, nor the grove of the Heliades, nor the mast-tree with its lofty branches, nor the tender lime-trees, nor yet the beech, and the virgin laurel, and the brittle hazels, and the oak, adapted for making spears, and the fir without knots, and the holm bending beneath its acorns, and the genial plane-tree, and the parti-coloured maple, and, together with them, the willows growing by the rivers, and the watery lotus, and the evergreen box, and the slender tamarisks, and the two-coloured myrtle, and the tine-tree, with its azure berries.

You, too, the ivy-trees, with your creeping tendrils, came, . and together, the branching vines, and the elms clothed with vines; the ashes, too, and the pitch-trees, and the arbut, laden with its blushing fruit, and the bending palm, the reward of the conqueror; the pine, too, with its tufted foliage, and bristling at the top, pleasing to the Mother of the Gods; since for this the Cybeleian Attis put off the human form, and hardened into that trunk.

EXPLANATION.

The story of Attis, or Athis, here briefly referred to, is related by the ancient writers in many different ways; so much so, that it is not possible to reconcile the discrepancy that exists between them. From Diodorus Siculus we learn that Cybele, the daughter of Mæon, King of Phrygia, falling in love with a young shepherd named Attis, her father ordered him to be put to death. In despair, at the loss of her lover, Cybele left her father's abode, and, accompanied by Marsyas, crossed the mountains of Phrygia. Apollo, (or, as Vossius supposes, some priest of that God,) touched with the misfortunes of the damsel, took her to the country of the Hyperboreans in Scythia, where she died. Some time after, the plague ravaging Phrygia, and the oracle being consulted, an answer was returned, that, to ensure the ceasing of the contagion, they must look for the body of Attis, and give it funeral rites, and render to Cybele the same honour which they were wont to pay to the Gods: all which was done with such scrupulous care, that in time she became one of the most esteemed Divinities.

Arnobius, says that Attis was a shepherd, with whom Cybele fell in love in her old age. Unmoved by her rank, and repelled by her faded charms, he despised her advances. Midas, King of Pessinus, on seeing this, destined his own daughter, Agdistis, for the young Attis. Fearing the resentment of Cybele, he caused the gates of the city to be shut on the day on which the marriage was to be solemnized. Cybele being informed of this, hastened to Pessinus, and, destroying the gates, met with Attis, who had concealed himself behind a pine tree, and caused him to be emasculated; on which Agdistis committed self-destruction in a fit of sorrow.

Servius, Lactantius, and St. Augustine, give another version of the story, which it is not necessary here to enlarge upon, any farther than to say, that it depicts the love of a powerful queen for a young man who repulsed her advances. Ovid, also, gives a similar account in the fourth Book of the Fasti, line 220. Other authors, quoted by Arnobius, have given some additional circumstances, the origin of which it is almost impossible to guess at. They say that a female called Nana, by touching a pomegranate or an almond tree, which grew from the blood of Agdistis whom Bacchus had slain, conceived Attis, who afterwards became very dear to Cybele.

All that we can conclude from these accounts, and more especially from that given by Ovid in the Fasti, is, that the worship of Cybele being established in Phrygia, Attis was one of her priests; and that, as he led the example of mutilating himself, all her other priests, who were called Galli, submitted to a similar operation, to the great surprise of the uninitiated, who were not slow in inventing some wonderful story to account for an act so extraordinary.

FABLE III.

Cyparissus is about to kill himself for having slain, by accident, a favourite deer; but, before he is able to execute his design, Apollo transforms him into a Cypress.

Amid this throng was present the cypress, resembling the cone, now a tree, but once a youth, beloved by that God who fits the lyre with the strings, and the bow with strings. For there was a large stag, sacred to the Nymphs who inhabit the Carthæan fields; and, with his horns extending afar, he himself afforded an ample shade to his own head. His horns were shining with gold, and a necklace studded with gems, falling upon his shoulders, hung down from his smooth round neck; a silver ball, fastened with little straps, played upon his forehead; . and pendants of brass, of equal size, shone on either ear around his hollow temples. He, too, void of fear, and laying aside his natural timorousness, used to frequent the houses, and to offer his neck to be patted by any hands, even though unknown to him.

But yet, above all others, he was pleasing to thee, Cyparissus, most beautiful of the nation of Cea. Thou wast wont to lead the stag to new pastures, and to the streams of running waters; sometimes thou didst wreath flowers of various colours about his horns, and at other times, seated on his back, like a horseman, first in this direction and then in that, thou didst guide his easy mouth with the purple bridle. 'Twas summer and the middle of the day, and the bending arms of the Crab, that loves the sea-shore, were glowing with the heat of the sun; the stag, fatigued, was reclining his body on the grassy earth, and was enjoying the coolness from the shade of a tree. By inadvertence the boy Cyparissus pierced him with a sharp javelin; and, when he saw him dying from the cruel wound, he resolved to attempt to die as well. What consolations did not Phœbus apply? and he advised him to grieve with moderation, and . according to the occasion. Still did he lament, and as a last favour, he requested this of the Gods above, that he might mourn for ever. And now, his blood quite exhausted by incessant weeping, his limbs began to be changed into a green colour, and the hair, which but lately hung from his snow-white forehead, to become a rough bush, and, astiffness being assumed, to point to the starry heavens with a tapering top. The God Phœbus lamented deeply, and in his sorrow he said, "Thou shalt be mourned by me, and shalt mourn for others, and shalt ever attend upon those who are sorrowing for the dead."

EXPLANATION.

Cyparissus, who, according to Ovid was born at Carthæa, atown in the isle of Cea, was probably a youth of considerable poetical talent and proficiency in the polite arts, which caused him to be deemed the favourite of Apollo. His transformation into a Cypress is founded on the resemblance between their names, that tree being called by the Greeks κυπάρισσος. The conclusion of the story is that Apollo, to console himself, enjoined that the Cypress tree should be the symbol of sorrow, or in other words that it should be used at funerals and be planted near graves and sepulchres; which fiction was most likely founded on the fact, that the tree was employed for those purposes; perhaps because its branches, almost destitute of leaves, have a somewhat melancholy aspect.

Some ancient writers also tell us that Cyparissus was a youth beloved by the God Sylvanus, for which reason that God is often represented with branches of Cypress in his hand.

FABLE IV.

Jupiter, charmed with the beauty of the youth Ganymede, transforms himself into an Eagle, for the purpose of carrying him off. He is taken up into Heaven, and is made the Cup-bearer of the Divinities.

Such a grove of trees had the bard attracted round him, and he sat in the midst of an assembly of wild beasts, and of a multitude . of birds. When he had sufficiently tried the strings struck with his thumb, and perceived that the various tones, though they gave different sounds, still harmonize, in this song he raised his voice: "Begin, my parent Muse, my song from Jove, all things submit to the sway of Jove. By me, often before has the power of Jove been sung. In loftier strains have I sung of the Giants, and the victorious thunderbolts scattered over the Phlegræan plains. Now is there occasion for a softer lyre; and let us sing of youths beloved by the Gods above, and of girls surprised by unlawful flames, who, by their wanton desires, have been deserving of punishment.

"The king of the Gods above was once inflamed with a passion for Ganymede, and something was found that Jupiter preferred to be, rather than what he was. Yet into no bird does he vouchsafe to be transformed, but that which can carry his bolts. And no delay is there. Striking the air with his fictitious wings, he carries off the youth of Ilium; who even now mingles his cups for him, and, much against the will of Juno, serves nectar to Jove."

EXPLANATION.

The rape of Ganymede is probably based upon an actual occurrence, which may be thus explained. Tros, the king of Troy, having conquered several of his neighbours, as Eusebius, Cedrenus, and Suidas relate, sent his son Ganymede into Lydia, accompanied by several of the nobles of his court, to offer sacrifice in the temple dedicated to Jupiter; Tantalus, the king of that country, who was ignorant of the designs of the Trojan king, took his people for spies, and put Ganymede in prison. He having been arrested in a temple of Jupiter, by order of a prince, whose ensign was an eagle, it gave occasion for the report that he had been carried off by Jupiter in the shape of an eagle.

The reason why Jupiter is said to have made Ganymede his cup-bearer . is difficult to conjecture, unless we suppose that he had served his father, in that employment at the Trojan court. The poets say that he was placed by the Gods among the Constellations, where he shines as Aquarius, or the Water-bearer.

The capture of Ganymede occasioned a protracted and bloody war between Tros and Tantalus; and after their death, Ilus, the son of Tros, continued it against Pelops, the son of Tantalus, and obliged him to quit his kingdom and retire to the court of Ænomaüs, king of Pisa, whose daughter he married, and by her had a son named Atreus, who was the father of Agamemnon and Menelaüs. Thus we see that probably Paris, the great grandson of Tros, carried off Helen, as a reprisal on Menelaüs, the great grandson of Tantalus, the persecutor of Ganymede. Agamemnon did not fail to turn this fact to his own advantage, by putting the Greeks in mind of the evils which his family had suffered from the kings of Troy.

FABLE V.

As Apollo is playing at quoits with the youth Hyacinthus, one of them, thrown by the Divinity, rebounds from the earth, and striking Hyacinthus on the head, kills him. From his blood springs up the flower which still bears his name.

“Phœbus would have placed thee too, descendant of Amycla, in the heavens, if the stern Fates had given him time to place thee there. Still, so far as is possible, thou art immortal; and as oft as the spring drives away the winter, and the Ram succeeds the watery Fish, so often dost thou spring up and blossom upon the green turf. Thee, beyond all others, did my father love, and Delphi, situate in the middle of the earth, was without its guardian Deity, while the God was frequenting the Eurotas, and the unfortified Sparta; and neither his lyre nor his arrows were held in esteem by him.

“Unmindful of his own dignity, he did not refuse to carry the nets, or to hold the dogs, or to go, as his companion, over the ridges of the rugged mountains; and by lengthened intimacy he augmented his flame. And now Titan was almost in his mid course between the approaching and the past night, and was at an equal distance from them both; when they stripped their bodies of their garments, and shone with the juice of the oily olive, and engaged in the game of the broad quoit. First, Phœbus tossed it, well poised, into the airy breeze, and clove the opposite clouds with its weight. After a long pause, the heavy mass fell on the hard ground, and showed skill united with strength. Immediately the Tænarian youth, in his thoughtlessness, and urged on by eagerness for the sport, hastened to take up the circlet; but the hard ground sent it back into the air with a rebound against thy face, Hyacinthus.

“Equally as pale as the youth does the Divinity himself turn; and he bears up thy sinking limbs; and at one moment he cherishes thee, at another, he stanches thy sad wound; and now he stops the fleeting life by the application of herbs. His skill is of no avail. The wound is incurable. As if, in a well-watered garden, any one should break down violets, or poppies, and lilies, as they adhere to their yellow stalks; drooping, they would suddenly hang down their languid heads, and could not support themselves; and would look towards the ground with their tops. So sink his dying features; and, forsaken by its vigour, the neck is a burden to itself, and reclines upon the shoulder. 'Son of Æbalus,' says Phœbus, 'thou fallest, deprived of thy early youth; and I look on thy wound as my own condemnation. Thou art the object of my grief, and the cause of my crime. With thy death is my right hand to be charged; I am the author of thy destruction. Yet what is my fault? unless to engage in sport can be termed a fault; unless it can be called a fault, too, to have loved thee. And oh! that I could give my life for thee, or together with thee; but since I am restrained by the decrees of destiny, thou shalt ever be with me, and shalt dwell on my mindful lips. The lyre struck with my hand, my songs, too, shall celebrate thee; and, becoming a new flower, by the inscription on thee, thou shalt imitate my lamentations. The time, too, shall come, at which a most valiant hero shall add his name to this flower, and it shall be read upon the same leaves.'

"While such things are being uttered by the prophetic lips of Apollo, behold! the blood which, poured on the ground, has stained the grass, ceases to be blood, and a flower springs up, more bright than the Tyrian purple, and it assumes the appearance which lilies have, were there not in this a purple hue, and in them that of silver. This was not enough for Phœbus, for 'twas he that was the author of this honour. He himself inscribed his own lamentations on the leaves, and the flower has 'ai, ai,' inscribed thereon; and the mournful characters there are traced. Nor is Sparta ashamed to have given birth . to Hyacinthus; and his honours continue to the present time; the Hyacinthian festival returns, too, each year, to be celebrated with the prescribed ceremonies, after the manner of former celebrations."

EXPLANATION.

Hyacinthus, as Pausanias relates, was a youth of Laconia. His father educated him with so much care, that he was looked upon as the favourite of Apollo, and of the Muses. As he was one day playing with his companions, he unfortunately received a blow on the head from a quoit, from the effects of which he died soon after. Some funeral verses were probably composed on the occasion; in which it was said, with the view of comforting his relations, that Boreas, jealous of the affection which Apollo had evinced for the youth, had turned aside the quoit with which they played; and thus, by degrees, in length of time the name of Apollo became inseparably connected with the story.

The Lacedæmonians each year celebrated a solemn festival near his tomb, where they offered sacrifices to him; and we are told by Athenæus, that they instituted games in his honour, which were called after his name. Pausanias makes mention of his tomb, upon which he says was engraved the figure of Apollo. His alleged change into the flower of the same name is probably solely owing to the similarity of their names. It is not very clear what flower it is that was known to the ancients under the name of Hyacinthus. Dioscorides believes it to be that called 'vaccinium' by the Romans, which is . of a purple colour, and on which can be traced, though imperfectly, the letters αἰ (alas!) mentioned by Ovid. The lamentations of Apollo, on the death of Hyacinthus, formed the subject of bitter, and, indeed, deserved raillery, for several of the satirical writers among the ancients.

FABLE VI.

Venus, incensed at the Cerastæ for polluting the island of Cyprus, which is sacred to her, with the human sacrifices which they offer to their Gods, transforms them into bulls;

and the Propœtides, as a punishment for their dissolute conduct, are transformed into rocks.

“But if, perchance, you were to ask of Amathus, abounding in metals, whether she would wish to have produced the Propœtides; she would deny it, as well as those whose foreheads were of old rugged with two horns, from which they also derived the name of Cerastæ. Before the doors of these was standing an altar of Jupiter Hospes, ascene of tragic horrors; if any stranger had seen it stained with blood, he would have supposed that sucking calves had been killed there, and Amathusian sheep; strangers were slain there. Genial Venus, offended at the wicked sacrifices there offered, was preparing to abandon her own cities and the Ophiusian lands. ‘But how,’ said she, ‘have these delightful spots, how have my cities offended? What criminality is there in them? Let the inhuman race rather suffer punishment by exile or by death, or if there is any middle course between death and exile; and what can that be, but the punishment of changing their shape?’

“While she is hesitating into what she shall change them, she turns her eyes towards their horns, and is put in mind that those may be left to them; and then she transforms their huge limbs into those of fierce bulls.

“And yet the obscene Propœtides presumed to deny that Venus is a Goddess; for which they are reported the first . of all women to have prostituted their bodies, with their beauty, through the anger of the Goddess. And when their shame was gone, and the blood of their face was hardened, they were, by a slight transition, changed into hard rocks.”

EXPLANATION.

The Cerastæ, a people of the island of Cyprus, were, perhaps, said to have been changed into bulls, to show the barbarous nature and rustic manners of those islanders, who stained their altars with the blood of strangers, in sacrifice to the Gods.

An equivocation of names also, probably, aided in originating the story. The island of Cyprus is surrounded with promontories which rise out of the sea, and whose pointed rocks appear at a distance like horns, from which it had the name of Cerastis, the Greek word κέρας, signifying a 'horn.' Thus, the inhabitants having the name of Cerastæ, it was most easy to invent a fiction of their having been once turned into oxen, to account the more readily for their bearing that name.

The Propœtides, who inhabited the same island, were females of very dissolute character. Justin, and other writers, mention a singular and horrible custom in that island, of prostituting young girls in the very temple of Venus. It was most probably the utter disregard of these women for common decency, that occasioned the poets to say that they were transformed into rocks.

FABLE VII.

Pygmalion, shocked by the dissolute lives of the Propœtides, throws off all fondness for the female sex, and resolves on leading a life of perpetual celibacy. Falling in love with a statue which he has made, Venus animates it; on which he marries this new object of his affections, and has a son by her, who gives his name to the island.

“When Pygmalion saw these women spending their lives in criminal pursuits, shocked at the vices which Nature had so plentifully imparted to the female disposition, he lived a single life without a wife, and for a long time was without a partner of his bed. In the meantime, he ingeniously carved a statue of snow-white ivory with wondrous skill; and gave it a beauty with which no woman can be born; and then conceived a passion for his own workmanship. The appearance was that of a real virgin, whom you might suppose to be alive, and if . modesty did not hinder her, to be desirous to move; so much did art lie concealed under his skill. Pygmalion admires it; and entertains, within his breast, aflame for this fictitious body.

“Often does he apply his hands to the work, to try whether it is a human body, or whether it is ivory; and yet he does not own it to be ivory. He gives it kisses, and fancies that they are returned, and speaks to it, and takes hold of it, and thinks that his fingers make an impression on the limbs which they touch, and is fearful lest a livid mark should come on her limbs when pressed. And one while he employs soft expressions, at another time he brings her presents that are agreeable to maidens, such as shells, and smooth pebbles, and little birds, and flowers of a thousand tints, and lilies, and painted balls, and tears of the Heliades, that have fallen from the trees. He decks her limbs, too, with clothing, and puts jewels on her fingers; he puts, too, along necklace on her neck. Smooth pendants hang from her ears, and bows from her breast. All things are becoming to her; and she does not seem less beautiful than when naked. He places her on coverings dyed with the Sidonian shell, and calls her the companion of his bed, and lays down her reclining neck upon soft feathers, as though it were sensible.

“A festival of Venus, much celebrated throughout all Cyprus, had now come; and heifers, with snow-white necks, having their spreading horns tipped with gold, fell, struck by the axe. Frankincense, too, was smoking, when, having made his offering, Pygmalion stood before the altar, and timorously said, ‘If ye Gods can grant all things, let my wife be, I pray,’ and he did not dare to say ‘this ivory maid,’ but ‘like to this statue of ivory.’ The golden Venus, as she herself was present at her own festival, understood what that prayer meant; and as an omen of the Divinity being favourable, thrice was the flame kindled up, and it sent up a tapering flame into the air. Soon as he returned, he repaired to the image of his maiden, and, lying along the couch, he gave her kisses. She seems to grow warm. Again he applies his mouth; . with his hands, too, he feels her breast. The pressed ivory becomes soft, and losing its hardness, yields to the fingers, and gives way, just as Hymettian wax grows soft in the sun, and being worked with the fingers is turned into many shapes, and becomes pliable by the very handling. While he is amazed, and is rejoicing, though with apprehension, and is fearing that he is deceived; the lover again and again touches the object of his desires with his hand. It is a real body; the veins throb, when touched with the thumb.

“Then, indeed, the Paphian hero conceives in his mind the most lavish expressions, with which to give thanks to Venus, and at length presses lips, no longer fictitious, with his own lips. The maiden, too, feels the kisses given her, and blushes; and raising her timorous eyes towards the light of day, she sees at once her lover and the heavens. The Goddess was present at the marriage which she thus effected. And now, the horns of the moon having been nine times gathered into a full orb, she brought forth Paphos; from whom the island derived its name.”

EXPLANATION.

The Pygmalion here mentioned must not be mistaken for the person of the same name, who was the brother of Dido, and king of Tyre. The story is most probably an allegory, which was based on the fact that Pygmalion being a man of virtuous principles, and disgusted with the vicious conduct of the women of Cyprus, took a great deal of care in training the mind and conduct of a young female, whom he kept at a distance from the contact of the prevailing vices; and whom, after having recovered her from the obdurate and rocky state to which the other females were reduced, he made his wife, and had a son by her named Paphos; who was said to have been the founder of the city of Cyprus, known by his name.

FABLE VIII.

Myrrha, the daughter of Cinyras and Cenchris, having conceived an incestuous passion for her own father, and despairing of satisfying it, attempts to hang herself. Her nurse surprises her in the act, and prevents her death. Myrrha, after repeated entreaties and assurances of assistance, discloses to her the cause of her despair. The nurse, by means of a stratagem, procures her the object of her desires, which being discovered by her father, he pursues his daughter with the intention of killing her. Myrrha flies from her father's dominions and being delivered of Adonis, is transformed into a tree.

“Yet, if Nature allows this crime to appear to have been committed, I congratulate the Ismarian matrons, and my own division of the globe. I congratulate this land, that it is afar from those regions which produced so great an abomination. Let the Panchæan land be rich in amomum, and let it produce cinnamon, and its zedoary, and frankincense distilling from its tree, and its other flowers, so long as it produces the myrrh-tree, as well. The new tree was not of so much worth as to be a recompense for the crime to which it owed its origin. Cupid himself denies, Myrrha, that it was his arrows that injured thee; and he defends his torches from that imputation; one of the three Sisters kindled this flame within thee, with a Stygian firebrand and with swelling vipers. It is a crime to hate a parent; but this love is a greater degree of wickedness than hatred. On every side worthy nobles are desiring thee in marriage, and throughout the whole East the youths come to the contest for thy bed. Choose out of all these one for thyself, Myrrha, so that, in all that number, there be not one person, namely, thy father.

“She, indeed, is sensible of her criminality, and struggles hard against her infamous passion, and says to herself, ‘Whither am I being carried away by my feelings? What am I attempting? I beseech you, O ye Gods, and natural affection, and ye sacred ties of parents, forbid this guilt: defend me from a crime so great! if, indeed, this be a crime. But yet the ties of parent and child are said not to forbid this kind of union; and other animals couple with no distinction. It is not considered shameful for the heifer to mate with her sire; his own daughter becomes the mate of the horse; the he-goat, too, consorts . with the flocks of which he is the father; and the bird conceives by him, from whose seed she herself was conceived. Happy they, to whom these things are allowed! The care of man has provided harsh laws, and what Nature permits, malignant ordinances forbid. And yet there are said to be nations in which both the mother is united to the son, and the daughter to the father, and natural affection is increased by a twofold passion. Ah, wretched me! that it was not my chance to be born there, and that I am injured by my lot being cast in this place! but why do I ruminate on these things? Forbidden hopes, begone! He is deserving to be beloved, but as a father only. Were I not, therefore, the daughter of the great Cinyras, with Cinyras I might be united. Now, because he is so much mine, he is not mine, and his very nearness of relationship is my misfortune.

““A stranger, I were more likely to succeed. I could wish to go far away hence, and to leave my native country, so I might but escape this crime. A fatal delusion detains me thus in love; that being present, I may look at Cinyras, and touch him, and talk with him, and give him kisses, if nothing more is allowed me. But canst thou hope for anything more, impious maid? and dost thou not perceive both how many laws, and how many names thou art confounding? Wilt thou be both the rival of thy mother, and the harlot of thy father? Wilt thou be called the sister of thy son, and the mother of thy brother? and wilt thou not dread the Sisters that have black snakes for their hair, whom guilty minds see threatening their eyes and their faces with their relentless torches? But do not thou conceive criminality in thy mind, so long as thou hast suffered none in body, and violate not the laws of all-powerful Nature by forbidden embraces. Suppose he were to be compliant, the action itself forbids thee; but he is virtuous, and regardful of what is right. And yet, O that there were a like infatuation in him!

“Thus she says; but Cinyras, whom an honourable crowd of suitors is causing to be in doubt what he is to do, inquires of herself, as he repeats their names, of which husband she would . wish to be the wife. At first she is silent; and, fixing her eyes upon her father’s countenance, she is in confusion, and fills her eyes with the warm tears. Cinyras, supposing this to be the effect of virgin bashfulness, bids her not weep, and dries her cheeks, and gives her kisses. On these being given, Myrrha is too much delighted; and, being questioned what sort of a husband she would have, she says, ‘One like thyself.’ But he praises the answer not really understood by him, and says, ‘Ever be thus affectionate.’ On mention being made of affection, the maiden, conscious of her guilt, fixed her eyes on the ground.

“It is now midnight, and sleep has dispelled the cares, and has eased the minds of mortals. But the virgin daughter of Cinyras, kept awake, is preyed upon by an unconquerable flame, and ruminates upon her wild desires. And one while she despairs, and at another she resolves to try; and is both ashamed, and yet is desirous, and is not certain what she is to do; and, just as a huge tree, wounded by the axe, when the last stroke now remains, is in doubt, as it were, on which side it is to fall, and is dreaded in each direction; so does her mind, shaken by varying passions, waver in uncertainty, this way and that, and receives an impulse in either direction; and no limit or repose is found for her love, but death: 'tis death that pleases her. She raises herself upright, and determines to insert her neck in a halter; and tying her girdle to the top of the door-post, she says, 'Farewell, dear Cinyras, and understand the cause of my death;' and then fits the noose to her pale neck.

"They say that the sound of her words reached the attentive ears of her nurse, as she was guarding the door of her foster-child. The old woman rises, and opens the door; and, seeing the instruments of the death she has contemplated, at the same moment she cries aloud, and smites herself, and rends her bosom, and snatching the girdle from her neck, tears it to pieces. And then, at last, she has time to weep, then to give her embraces, and to inquire into the occasion for the halter. The maid is silent, as . though dumb, and, without moving, looks upon the earth; and thus detected, is sorry for her attempt at death in this slow manner. The old woman still urges her; and laying bare her grey hair, and her withered breasts, begs her, by her cradle and by her first nourishment, to entrust her with that which is causing her grief. She, turning from her as she asks, heaves a sigh. The nurse is determined to find it out, and not to promise her fidelity only. 'Tell me,' says she, 'and allow me to give thee assistance; my old age is not an inactive one. If it is a frantic passion, I have the means of curing it with charms and herbs; if any one has hurt thee by spells, by magic rites shalt thou be cured; or if it is the anger of the Gods, that anger can be appeased by sacrifice. What more than these can I think of? No doubt thy fortunes and thy family are prosperous, and in the way of continuing so; thy mother and thy father are still surviving.' Myrrha, on hearing her father's name, heaves a sigh from the bottom of her heart. Nor, even yet, does her nurse apprehend in her mind any unlawful passion; and still she has a presentiment that it is something connected with love. Persisting in her purpose, she entreats her, whatever it is, to disclose it to her, and takes her, as she weeps, in her aged lap; and so embracing her in her feeble arms, she says, 'Daughter, I understand it; thou art in love, and in this case (lay aside thy fears) my assiduity will be of service to thee; nor shall thy father ever be aware of it.'

"Furious, she sprang away from her bosom; and pressing the bed with her face, she said, 'Depart, I entreat thee, and spare my wretched shame.' Upon the other insisting, she said, 'Either depart, or cease to inquire why it is I grieve; that which thou art striving to know, is impious.' The old woman is struck with horror, and stretches forth her hands palsied both with years and with fear, and suppliantly falls before the feet of her foster-child. And one while she soothes her, sometimes she terrifies her with the consequences, if she is not made acquainted with it; and then she threatens her with the discovery of the halter, and of her attempted destruction, and promises her good offices, if the passion is confided to her. She lifts up her head, and fills the breast of her nurse with tears bursting forth; and often endeavouring to confess, as often does she check her voice; and she covers her blushing face with her garments, and says, 'O, mother, happy in thy husband!' . Thus much she says; and then she sighs. A trembling shoots through the chilled limbs and the bones of her nurse, for she understands her; and her white hoariness stands bristling with stiff hair all over her head; and she adds many a word to drive away a passion so dreadful, if only she can. But the maiden is well aware that she is not advised to a false step; still she is resolved to die, if she does not enjoy him whom she loves. 'Live then,' says the nurse, 'thou shalt enjoy thy — —' and, not daring to say 'parent,' she is silent; and then she confirms her promise with an oath.

“The pious matrons were now celebrating the annual festival of Ceres, on which, having their bodies clothed with snow-white robes, they offer garlands made of ears of corn, as the first fruits of the harvest; and for nine nights . they reckon embraces, and the contact of a husband, among the things forbidden. Cenchreis, the king’s wife, is absent in that company, and attends the mysterious rites. Therefore, while his bed is without his lawful wife, the nurse, wickedly industrious, having found Cinyras overcome with wine, discloses to him a real passion, but under a feigned name, and praises the beauty of the damsel. On his enquiring the age of the maiden, she says, ‘She is of the same age as Myrrha.’ After she is commanded to bring her, and as soon as she has returned home, she says, ‘Rejoice, my fosterling, we have prevailed.’ The unhappy maid does not feel joy throughout her entire body, and her boding breast is sad. And still she does rejoice: so great is the discord in her mind.

“‘Twas the time when all things are silent, and Boötes had turned his wain with the pole obliquely directed among the Triones. She approaches to perpetrate her enormity. The golden moon flies from the heavens; black clouds conceal the hiding stars; the night is deprived of its fires. Thou, Icarus, dost conceal thy rising countenance; and thou, Erigone, raised to the heavens through thy affectionate love for thy father. Three times was she recalled by the presage of her foot stumbling; thrice did the funereal owl give an omen by its dismal cry. Yet onward she goes, and the gloom and the dark night lessen her shame. In her left hand she holds that of her nurse, the other, by groping, explores the secret road. And now she is arrived at the door of the chamber; and now she opens the door; now she is led in; but her knees tremble beneath her sinking hams, her colour and her blood vanish; and her courage deserts her as she moves along. The nearer she is to the commission of her crime, the more she dreads it, and she repents of her attempt, and could wish to be able to return unknown. The old woman leads her on by the hand as she lingers, and when she has delivered her up on her approach to the lofty bed, she says, 'Take her, Cinyras, she is thy . own,' and so unites their doomed bodies. The father receives his own bowels into the polluted bed, and allays her virgin fears, and encourages her as she trembles. Perhaps, too, he may have called her by a name suited to her age, and she may have called him 'father,' that the appropriate names might not be wanting in this deed of horror. Pregnant by her father, she departs from the chamber, and, in her impiety, bears his seed in her incestuous womb, and carries with her, criminality in her conception. The ensuing night repeats the guilty deed; nor on that night is there an end. At last, Cinyras, after so many embraces, longing to know who is his paramour, on lights being brought in, discovers both the crime and his own daughter.

"His words checked through grief, he draws his shining sword from the scabbard as it hangs. Myrrha flies, rescued from death by the gloom and the favour of a dark night; and wandering along the wide fields, she leaves the Arabians famed for their palms, and the Panchæan fields. And she wanders during nine horns of the returning moon; when, at length, being weary, she rests in the Sabæan country, and with difficulty she supports the burden of her womb. Then, uncertain what to wish, and between the fear of death and weariness of life, she uttered such a prayer as this: 'Oye Deities, if any of you favour those who are penitent; I have deserved severe punishment, and I do not shrink from it. But that, neither existing, I may pollute the living, nor dead, those who are departed, expel me from both these realms; and transforming me, deny me both life and death.' Some Divinity ever regards the penitent; at least, the last of her prayers found its Gods to execute it. For the earth closes over her legs as she speaks, and a root shoots forth obliquely through her bursting nails, as a firm support to her tall trunk. Her bones, too, become hard wood, and her marrow continuing in the middle, her blood changes into sap, her arms into great branches, her fingers into smaller ones; her skin grows hard with bark. And now the growing tree has run over her heavy womb, and has covered her breast, and . is ready to enclose her neck. She cannot endure delay, and sinks down to meet the approaching wood, and hides her features within the bark. Though she has lost her former senses together with her human shape, she still weeps on, and warm drops distil from the tree. There is a value even in her tears, and the myrrh distilling from the bark, retains the name of its mistress, and will be unheard-of in no future age.

“But the infant conceived in guilt grows beneath the wood, and seeks out a passage, by which he may extricate himself, having left his mother. Her pregnant womb swells in the middle of the tree. The burden distends the mother, nor have her pangs words of their own whereby to express themselves; nor can Lucina be invoked by her voice while bringing forth. Yet she is like one struggling to be delivered; and the bending tree utters frequent groans, and is moistened with falling tears. Gentle Lucina stands by the moaning boughs, and applies her hands, and utters words that promote delivery. The tree gapes open, in chinks, and through the cleft bark it discharges the living burden. The child cries; the Naiads, laying him on the soft grass, anoint him with the tears of his mother.

“Even Envy herself would have commended his face; for just as the bodies of naked Cupids are painted in a picture, such was he. But that their dress may not make any difference, either give to him or take away from them, the polished quivers.”

EXPLANATION.

Le Clerc, forming his ideas on what Lucian, Phurnutus, and other authors have said on the subject, explains the story of Cinyras and Myrrha in the following manner. Cynnor, or Cinyras, the grandfather of Adonis, having one day drunk to excess, fell asleep in a posture which violated the rules of decency. Mor, or Myrrha, his daughter-in-law, the wife of Ammon, together with her son Adonis, seeing him in that condition, acquainted her husband with her father's lapse. On his repeating this to Cinyras, the latter was so full of indignation, that he loaded Myrrha and Adonis with imprecations.

Loaded with the execrations of her father, Myrrha retired into Arabia, where she remained some time; and because Adonis passed some portion . of his youth there, the poets feigned that Myrrha was delivered of him in that country. Her transformation into a tree was only invented on account of the equivocal character of her name, 'Mor,' which meant in the Arabic language 'Myrrh.' It is very probable that the story was founded on a tradition among the Phœnicians of the history of Noah, and of the malediction which Ham drew on himself by his undutiful conduct towards his father.

FABLE IX.

Adonis is educated by the Naiads. His beauty makes a strong impression on the Goddess Venus, and, in her passion, she traverses the same wilds in pursuit of the youth, which his mother did, when flying from the wrath of her father. After chasing the wild beasts, she invites Adonis to a poplar shade, where she warns him of his danger in hunting lions, wild boars, and such formidable animals. On this occasion, too, she relates the adventures of Hippomenes and Atalanta. The beauty of the latter was such, that her charms daily attracted crowds of suitors. Having consulted the oracle, whether she shall marry, she is answered that a husband will certainly prove her destruction. On this, to avoid marrying, she makes it a rule to offer to run with her suitors, promising that she herself will be the prize of the victor, but only on condition that immediate death shall be the fate of those who are vanquished by her. As she excels in running, her design succeeds, and several suitors die in the attempt to win her. Hippomenes, smitten with her charms, is not daunted at their ill success; but boldly enters the lists, after imploring the aid of Venus. Atalanta is struck with his beauty, and is much embarrassed, whether she shall yield to the charms of the youth, or to the dissuasions of the oracle. Hippomenes attracts her attention in the race, by throwing down some golden apples which Venus has given him, and then, reaching the goal before her, he carries off the reward of victory. Venus, to punish his subsequent ingratitude towards her, raises his desires to such a pitch, that he incurs the resentment of Cybele, by defiling her shrine with the embraces of his mistress; on which they are both transformed into lions, and thenceforth draw the chariot of the Goddess.

“Winged time glides on insensibly and deceives us; and there is nothing more fleeting than years. He, born of his own sister and of his grandfather, who, so lately enclosed in a tree, was so lately born, and but just now a most beauteous infant, is now a youth, now a man, and now more beauteous than he was before. And now he pleases even Venus, and revenges the flames of his mother, kindled by her. For, while the boy that wears the quiver is giving kisses to his mother, he . unconsciously grazes her breast with a protruding arrow. The Goddess, wounded, pushed away her son with her hand. The wound was inflicted more deeply than it seemed to be, and at first had deceived even herself. Charmed with the beauty of the youth, she does not now care for the Cytherian shores, nor does she revisit Paphos, surrounded with the deep sea, and Cnidos, abounding in fish, or Amathus, rich in metals.

“She abandons even the skies; him she ever attends; and she who has been always accustomed to indulge in the shade, and to improve her beauty, by taking care of it, wanders over the tops of mountains, through the woods, and over bushy rocks, bare to the knee and with her robes tucked up after the manner of Diana, and she cheers on the dogs, and hunts animals that are harmless prey, either the fleet hares, or the stag with its lofty horns, or the hinds; she keeps afar from the fierce boars, and avoids the ravening wolves, and the bears armed with claws, and the lions glutted with the slaughter of the herds. Thee, too, Adonis, she counsels to fear them, if she can aught avail by advising thee. And she says, "Be brave against those animals that fly; boldness is not safe against those that are bold. Forbear, youth, to be rash at my hazard, and attack not the wild beasts to which nature has granted arms, lest thy thirst for glory should cost me dear. Neither thy age, nor thy beauty, nor other things which have made an impression on Venus, make any impression on lions and bristly boars, and the eyes and the tempers of wild beasts. The fierce boars carry lightning in their curving tusks; there is rage and fury unlimited in the tawny lions; and the whole race is odious to me."

"Upon his asking, what is the reason, she says, 'I will tell thee, and thou wilt be surprised at the prodigious result of a fault long since committed. But this toil to which I am unaccustomed has now fatigued me, and see! a convenient poplar invites us, by its shade, and the turf furnishes a couch. Here I am desirous to repose myself, together with thee;' and forthwith she rests herself on the ground, and presses at once the grass and himself. And with her neck reclining on the bosom of the youth, smiling, she thus says, and she mingles kisses in the midst of her words: —

"Perhaps thou mayst have heard how a certain damsel excelled the swiftest men in the contest of speed. That report was no idle tale; for she did excel them. Nor couldst thou have said, whether she was more distinguished in the merit of her swiftness, or in the excellence of her beauty. Upon her consulting the oracle about a husband, the God said to her, 'Thou hast no need, Atalanta, of a husband; avoid obtaining a husband. And yet thou wilt not avoid it, and, while still living, thou wilt lose thyself.' Alarmed with the response of the God, she lives a single life in the shady woods, and determinedly repulses the pressing multitude of her suitors with these conditions. 'I am not,' says she, 'to be gained, unless first surpassed in speed. Engage with me in running. Both a wife and a wedding shall be given as the reward of the swift; death shall be the recompense of the slow. Let that be the condition of the contest.' She, indeed, was cruel in this proposal; but (so great is the power of beauty) a rash multitude of suitors agreed to these terms. Hippomenes had sat, as a spectator, of this unreasonable race, and said, 'Is a wife sought by any one, amid dangers so great?' And thus he condemned the excessive ardour of the youths. But when he beheld her face, and her body with her clothes laid aside, such as mine is, or such as thine would be, Adonis, if thou wast to become a woman, he was astonished, and raising his hands, he said, 'Pardon me, ye whom I was just now censuring; the reward which you contended for was not yet known to me.'

"In commending her, he kindles the flame, and wishes that none of the young men may run more swiftly than she, and, in his envy, is apprehensive of it. 'But why,' says he, 'is my chance in this contest left untried? The Divinity himself assists the daring.' While Hippomenes is pondering such things within himself, the virgin flies with winged pace. Although she appears to the Aonian youth to go no less swiftly than the Scythian arrow, he admires her still more in her beauty, and the very speed makes her beautiful. The breeze that meets her bears back her pinions on her swift feet, and . her hair is thrown over her ivory shoulders and the leggings which are below her knees with their variegated border, and upon her virgin whiteness her body has contracted a blush; no otherwise than as when purple hangings over a whitened hall tint it with a shade of a similar colour. While the stranger is observing these things, the last course is run, and the victorious Atalanta is adorned with a festive crown. The vanquished utter sighs, and pay the penalty, according to the stipulation. Still, not awed by the end of these young men, he stands up in the midst; and fixing his eyes on the maiden, he says, 'Why dost thou seek an easy victory by conquering the inactive? Contend now with me. If fortune shall render me victorious, thou wilt not take it ill to be conquered by one so illustrious. For my father was Megareus, Onchestius his; Neptune was his grandsire; I am the great grandson of the king of the waves. Nor is my merit inferior to my extraction. Or if I shall be conquered, in the conquest of Hippomenes thou wilt have a great and honourable name.'

"As he utters such words as these, the daughter of Schoeneus regards him with a benign countenance, and is in doubt whether she shall wish to be overcome or to conquer; and thus she says: 'What Deity, a foe to the beautiful, wishes to undo this youth? and commands him, at the risk of a life so dear, to seek this alliance? In my own opinion, I am not of so great value. Nor yet am I moved by his beauty. Still, by this, too, I could be moved. But, 'tis because he is still a boy; 'tis not himself that affects me, but his age. And is it not, too, because he has courage and a mind undismayed by death? And is it not, besides, because he is reckoned fourth in descent from the monarch of the sea? And is it not, because he loves me, and thinks a marriage with me of so much worth as to perish for it, if cruel fortune should deny me to him? Stranger, while still thou mayst, begone, and abandon an alliance stained with blood. A match with me is cruelly hazardous. No woman will be unwilling to be married to thee; and thou mayst be desired even by a prudent maid. But why have I any concern for thee, when so many have already perished? Let him look to it; and let him die, since he is not warned by the fate of so many of my wooers, and is impelled onwards to weariness of life.

“Shall he then die because he was desirous with me to live? And shall he suffer an undeserved death, the reward of his love? My victory will not be able to support the odium of the deed. But it is no fault of mine. I wish thou wouldst desist! or since thou art thus mad, would that thou wast more fleet than I! But what a feminine look there is in his youthful face! Ah, wretched Hippomenes, I would that I had not been seen by thee! Thou wast worthy to have lived! And if I had been more fortunate; and if the vexatious Divinities had not denied me the blessings of marriage, thou wast one with whom I could have shared my bed.’ Thus she said; and as one inexperienced, and smitten by Cupid for the first time, not knowing what she is doing, she is in love, and yet does not know that she is in love.

“And now, both the people and her father, demanded the usual race, when Hippomenes, the descendant of Neptune, invoked me with anxious voice; ‘I entreat that Cytherea may favour my undertaking, and aid the passion that she has inspired in me.’ The breeze, not envious, wafted to me this tender prayer; I was moved, I confess it; nor was any long delay made in giving aid. There is a field, the natives call it by name the Tamasenian field, the choicest spot in the Cyprian land; this the elders of former days consecrated to me, and ordered to be added as an endowment for my temple. In the middle of this field a tree flourishes, with yellow foliage, and with branches tinkling with yellow gold. Hence, by chance as I was coming, I carried three golden apples, that I had plucked, in my hand; and being visible to none but him, I approached Hippomenes, and I showed him what was to be the use of them. The trumpets have now given the signal, when each of them darts precipitately from the starting place, and skims the surface of the sand with nimble feet. You might have thought them able to pace the sea with dry feet, and to run along the ears of white standing corn while erect. The shouts and the applause of the populace give courage to the youth, and the words of those who exclaim, 'Now, now, Hippomenes, is the moment to speed onward! make haste. Now use all thy strength! Away with delay! thou shalt be conqueror.' It is doubtful whether the Megarean hero, or the virgin daughter of Schœneus rejoiced the most at these sayings. Oh how often when she could have passed by him, did she slacken her speed, and then unwillingly left behind the features that long she had gazed upon.

"A parched panting is coming from his faint mouth, and the goal is still a great way off. Then, at length, the descendant of Neptune throws one of the three products of the tree. The virgin is amazed, and from a desire for the shining fruit, she turns from her course, and picks up the rolling gold. Hippomenes passes her. The theatres ring with applause. She . makes amends for her delay, and the time that she has lost, with a swift pace, and again she leaves the youth behind. And, retarded by the throwing of a second apple, again she overtakes the young man, and passes by him. The last part of the race now remained. 'And now,' said he, 'O Goddess, giver of this present, aid me;' and then with youthful might, he threw the shining gold, in an oblique direction, on one side of the plain, in order that she might return the more slowly. The maiden seemed to be in doubt, whether she should fetch it; I forced her to take it up, and added weight to the apple, when she had taken it up, and I impeded her, both by the heaviness of the burden, and the delay in reaching it. And that my narrative may not be more tedious than that race, the virgin was outrun, and the conqueror obtained the prize.

"And was I not, Adonis, deserving that he should return thanks to me, and the tribute of frankincense? but, in his ingratitude, he gave me neither thanks nor frankincense. I was thrown into a sudden passion; and provoked at being slighted, I provided by making an example, that I should not be despised in future times, and I aroused myself against them both. They were passing by a temple, concealed within a shady wood, which the famous Echion had formerly built for the Mother of the Gods, according to his vow; and the length of their journey moved them to take rest there. There, an unseasonable desire of caressing his wife seized Hippomenes, excited by my agency. Near the temple was a recess, with but little light, like a cave, covered with native pumice stone, one sacred from ancient religious observance; where the priest had conveyed many a wooden image of the ancient Gods. This he entered, and he defiled the sanctuary by a forbidden crime. The sacred images turned away their eyes, and the Mother of the Gods, crowned with turrets, was in doubt whether she should plunge these guilty ones in the Stygian stream. That seemed too light a punishment. Wherefore yellow manes cover their necks so lately smooth; their fingers are bent into claws, of their shoulders are made fore-legs; their whole weight passes . into their breasts. The surface of the sand is swept by their tails. Their look has anger in it; instead of words they utter growls; instead of chambers they haunt the woods; and dreadful to others, as lions, they champ the bits of Cybele with subdued jaws. Do thou, beloved by me, avoid these, and together with these, all kinds of wild beasts which turn not their backs in flight, but their breasts to the fight; lest thy courage should be fatal to us both."

EXPLANATION.

The Atalanta who is mentioned in this story was the daughter of Schoeneus, and the granddaughter of Athamas, whose misfortunes obliged him to retire into Bœotia, where he built a little town, which was called after his name, as we learn from Pausanias and Eustathius. Ovid omits to say that it was one of the conditions of the agreement, that the lover was to have the start in the race. According to some writers, the golden apples were from the gardens of the Hesperides; while, according to others, they were plucked by Venus in the isle of Cyprus. The story seems to be founded merely on the fact, that Hippomenes contrived by means of bribes to find the way to the favour of his mistress.

Apollodorus, however, relates the story in a different manner; he says that the father of Atalanta desiring to have sons, but no daughters, exposed her, on her birth, in a desert, that she might perish. A she-bear found the infant, and nourished it, until it was discovered by some hunters. As the damsel grew up, she made hunting her favourite pursuit, and slew two Centaurs, who offered her violence, with her arrows. On her parents pressing her to marry, she consented to be the wife of that man only who could outrun her, on condition that those who were conquered by her in the race should be put to death. Several of her suitors having failed in the attempt, one of the name of Melanion, by using a similar stratagem to that attributed by Ovid to Hippomenes, conquered her in the race, and became her husband. Having profaned the temple of Jupiter, they were transformed, Melanion into a lion, and Atalanta into a lioness. According to Apollodorus, her father's name was Iasius, though in his first book he says she was the daughter of Schoeneus. He also says that she was the same person that was present at the hunt of the Calydonian boar, though other writers represent them to have been different personages. Euripides makes Mænalus to have been the name of her father.

Atalanta had by Melanion, or, as some authors say, by Mars, a son named Parthenopæus, who was present at the Theban war. Ælian gives a long account of her history, which does not very much differ from the narrative of Apollodorus.

FABLE X.

Adonis being too ardent in the pursuit of a wild boar, the beast kills him, on which Venus changes his blood into a flower of crimson colour.

“She, indeed, thus warned him; and, harnessing her swans, winged her way through the air; but his courage stood in opposition to her advice. By chance, his dogs having followed its sure track, roused a boar, and the son of Cinyras pierced him, endeavouring to escape from the wood, with a wound from the side. Immediately the fierce boar, with his crooked snout, struck out the hunting-spear, stained with his blood, and then pursued him, trembling and seeking a safe retreat, and lodged his entire tusks in his groin, and stretched him expiring on the yellow sand.

“Cytherea, borne in her light chariot through the middle of the air, had not yet arrived at Cyprus upon the wings of her swans. She recognized afar his groans, as he was dying, and turned her white birds in that direction. And when, from the lofty sky, she beheld him half dead, and bathing his body in his own blood, she rapidly descended, and rent both her garments and her hair, and she smote her breast with her distracted hands. And complaining of the Fates, she says, ‘But, however, all things shall not be in your power; the memorials of my sorrow, Adonis, shall ever remain; and the representation of thy death, repeated yearly, shall exhibit an imitation of my mourning. But thy blood shall be changed into a flower. Was it formerly allowed thee, Persephone, to change the limbs of a female into fragrant mint; and shall the hero, the son of Cinyras, if changed, be a cause of displeasure against me?’ Having thus said, she sprinkles his blood with odoriferous nectar, which, touched by it, effervesces, just as the transparent bubbles are wont to rise in rainy weather. Nor was there a pause longer than a full hour, when a flower sprang up from the blood, of the same colour with it, such as . the pomegranates are wont to bear, which conceal their seeds beneath their tough rind. Yet the enjoyment of it is but short-lived; for the same winds which give it a name, beat it down, as it has but a slender hold, and is apt to fall by reason of its extreme slenderness.”

EXPLANATION.

Theocritus, Bion, Hyginus, and Antoninus Liberalis, beside several other authors, relate the history of the loves of Venus and Adonis. They inform us of many particulars which Ovid has here neglected to remark. They say that Mars, jealous of the passion which Venus had for Adonis, implored the aid of Diana, who, to gratify his revenge, sent the boar that destroyed the youth. According to some writers, it was Apollo himself that took the form of that animal; and they say that Adonis descending to the Infernal Regions, Proserpine fell in love with him, and refused to allow him to return, notwithstanding the orders of Jupiter. On this, the king of heaven fearing to displease both the Goddesses, referred the dispute to the Muse Calliope, who directed that Adonis should pass one half of his time with Venus on earth, and the other half in the Infernal Regions. They also tell us that it took up a year before the dispute could be determined, and that the Hours brought Adonis at last to the upper world, on which, Venus being dissatisfied with the decision of Calliope, instigated the women of Thrace to kill her son Orpheus.

The mythologists have considered this story to be based on grounds either historical or physical. Cicero, in his Discourse on the Nature of the Gods, says, that there were several persons who had the name of Venus, and that the fourth, surnamed Astarte, was a Syrian, who married Adonis, the son of Cinyras, king of Cyprus. Hunting in the forests of Mount Libanus, or Lebanon, he was wounded in the groin by a wild boar, which accident ultimately caused his death. Astarte caused the city of Byblos and all Syria to mourn for his loss; and, to keep his name and his sad fate in remembrance, established feasts in his honour, to be celebrated each year. Going still further, if we suppose the story to have originated in historical facts, it seems not improbable that Adonis did not die of his wound, and that, contrary to all expectation, he was cured; as the Syrians, after having mourned for several days during his festival, rejoiced as though he had been raised from the dead, at a second festival called 'The Return.' The worship both of Venus and Adonis probably originated in Syria, and was spread through Asia Minor into Greece; while the Carthaginians, a Phœnician colony introduced it into Sicily. The festival of Adonis is most amusingly described by Theocritus the Sicilian poet, in his 'Adoniazusæ.' Some authors have suggested that Adonis was the same with the Egyptian God Osiris, and that the affliction of Venus represented that of Isis at the death of her husband. According to Hesiod, Adonis was the son of Phœnix and Alphesibœa, while Panyasis says that he was son of Theias, the king of the Assyrians.

In support of the view which some commentators take of the story of Adonis having been founded on physical circumstance, we cannot do better than quote the able remarks of Mr. Keightley on the subject. He says (Mythology of Ancient Greece and Italy, p. 109)—"The tale of Adonis is apparently an Eastern mythus. His very name is Semitic (Hebrew 'Adon,' 'Lord'), and those of his parents also refer to that part of the world. He appears to be the same with the Thammuz, mentioned by the prophet Ezekiel, and to be a Phœnician personification of the sun who, during a part of the year is absent, or, as the legend expresses it, with the Goddess of the under world: during the remainder with Astarte, the regent of heaven. It is uncertain when the Adonia were first celebrated in Greece; but we find Plato alluding to the gardens of Adonis, as boxes of flowers used in them were called; and the ill fortune of the Athenian expedition to Sicily was in part ascribed to the circumstance of the fleet having sailed during that festival."

This notion of the mourning for Adonis being a testimony of grief for the absence of the Sun during the winter, is not, however, to be too readily acquiesced in. Lobeck (Aglaophamus, p.691), for example, asks, with some appearance of reason, why those nations whose heaven was mildest, and their winter shortest, should so bitterly bewail the regular changes of the seasons, as to feign that the Gods themselves were carried off or slain; and he shrewdly observes, that, in that case, the mournful and the joyful parts of the festival should have been held at different times of the year, and not joined together, as they were. He further inquires, whether the ancient writers, who esteemed these Gods to be so little superior to men, may not have believed them to have been really and not metaphorically put to death? And, in truth, it is not easy to give a satisfactory answer to these questions.

BOOK THE ELEVENTH.

FABLE I.

While Orpheus is singing to his lyre on Mount Rhodope, the women of Thrace celebrate their orgies. During that ceremony they take advantage of the opportunity to punish Orpheus for his indifference towards their sex; and, in the fury inspired by their rites, they beat him to death. His head and lyre are carried by the stream of the river Hebrus into the sea, and are cast on shore on the isle of Lesbos. A serpent, about to attack the head when thrown on shore, is changed into a stone, and the Bacchanals who have killed him are transformed into trees.

While with songs such as these, the Thracian poet is leading the woods and the natures of savage beasts, and the following rocks, lo! the matrons of the Ciconians, having their raving breasts covered with the skins of wild beasts, from the summit of a hill, espy Orpheus adapting his voice to the sounded strings of his harp. One of these, tossing her hair along the light breeze, says, "See! see! here is our contemner!" and hurls her spear at the melodious mouth of the bard of Apollo: but, being wreathed at the end with leaves, it makes a mark without any wound. The weapon of another is a stone, which, when thrown, is overpowered in the very air by the harmony of his voice and his lyre, and lies before his feet, asuppliant, as it were, for an attempt so daring.

But still this rash warfare increases, and all moderation departs, and direful fury reigns triumphant. And yet all their weapons would have been conquered by his music; but the vast clamour, and the Berecynthian pipe with the blown horns, and the tambourines, and the clapping of hands, and Bacchanalian yells, prevented the sound of the lyre from being heard. . Then, at last, the stones became red with the blood of the bard, now no longer heard. But first the Mænades lay hands on innumerable birds, even yet charmed with his voice as he sang, and serpents, and a throng of wild beasts, the glory of this audience of Orpheus; and after that, they turn upon Orpheus with blood-stained right hands; and they flock together, as the birds, if at any time they see the bird of night strolling about by day; and as when the stag that is doomed to die in the morning sand in the raised amphitheatre is a prey to the dogs; they both attack the bard, and hurl the thyrsi, covered with . green leaves, not made for such purposes as these. Some throw clods, some branches torn from trees, others flint stones. And that weapons may not be wanting for their fury, by chance some oxen are turning up the earth with the depressed ploughshare; and not far from thence, some strong-armed peasants, providing the harvest with plenteous sweat, are digging the hard fields; they, seeing this frantic troop, run away, and leave the implements of their labour; and there lie, dispersed throughout the deserted fields, harrows and heavy rakes, and long spades.

After they, in their rage, have seized upon these, and have torn to pieces the oxen with their threatening horns, they return to the destruction of the bard; and they impiously murder him, extending his hands, and then for the first time uttering words in vain, and making no effect on them with his voice. And (Oh Jupiter!) through those lips listened to by rocks, and understood by the senses of wild beasts, his life breathed forth, departs into the breezes. The mournful birds, the crowd of wild beasts, the hard stones, the woods that oft had followed thy song bewailed thee. Trees, too, shedding their foliage, mourned thee, losing their leaves. They say, too, that rivers swelled with their own tears; and the Naiads and Dryads had mourning garments of dark colour, and dishevelled hair. The limbs lie scattered in various places.

Thou, Hebrus, dost receive the head and the lyre; and (wondrous to relate!) while it rolls down the midst of the stream, the lyre complains in I know not what kind of mournful strain. His lifeless tongue, too, utters a mournful sound, to which the banks mournfully reply. And now, borne onward to the sea, they leave their native stream, and reach the shores of Methymnæan Lesbos. Here an infuriated serpent attacks the head thrown up on the foreign sands, and the hair besprinkled with the oozing blood. At last Phœbus comes to its aid, and drives it away as it tries to inflict its sting, and hardens the open jaws of the serpent . into stone, and makes solid its gaping mouth just as it is. His ghost descends under the earth, and he recognizes all the spots which he has formerly seen; and seeking Eurydice through the fields of the blessed, he finds her, and enfolds her in his eager arms. Here, one while, they walk together side by side, and at another time he follows her as she goes before, and again at another time, walking in front, precedes her; and now, in safety, Orpheus looks back upon his own Eurydice.

Yet Lyæus did not suffer this wickedness to go unpunished; and grieving for the loss of the bard of his sacred rites, he immediately fastened down in the woods, by a twisting root, all the Edonian matrons who had committed this crime. For he drew out the toes of her feet, just as each one had pursued him, and thrust them by their sharp points into the solid earth. And, as when a bird has entangled its leg in a snare, which the cunning fowler has concealed, and perceives that it is held fast, it beats its wings, and, fluttering, tightens the noose with its struggles; so, as each one of these had stuck fast, fixed in the ground, in her alarm, she attempted flight in vain; but the pliant root held her fast, and confined her, springing forward to escape. And while she is looking where her toes are, where, too, are her feet and her nails, she sees wood growing up upon her well-turned legs. Endeavouring, too, to smite her thigh, with grieving right hand, she strikes solid oak; her breast, too, becomes oak; her shoulders are oak. You would suppose that her extended arms are real boughs, and you would not be deceived in so supposing.

EXPLANATION.

Some of the ancient mythologists say that the story of the serpent, changed into stone for insulting the head of Orpheus, was founded on the history of a certain inhabitant of the isle of Lesbos, who was punished for attacking the reputation of Orpheus. This critic excited contempt, as a malignant and ignorant person, who endeavoured, as it were, to sting the character of the deceased poet, and therefore, by way of exposing his spite and stupidity, he was said to have been changed from a serpent into a stone. According to Philostratus, the poet's head was preserved in the temple of Apollo at Lesbos; and he tells us that Diomedes, and . Neoptolemus, the son of Achilles, brought Philoctetes to Troy, after having explained to him the oracular response which the head of Orpheus had given to him from the bottom of a cave at Lesbos.

The harp of Orpheus was preserved in the same temple; and so many wonders were reported of it, that Neanthus, the son of the tyrant Pytharus, purchased it of the priests of Apollo, believing that its sound would be sufficient to put rocks and trees in motion; but, according to Lucian, he succeeded so ill, that on his trying the harp, the dogs of the neighbouring villages fell upon him and tore him to pieces.

The transformation of the women of Thrace into trees, for the murder of Orpheus, is probably an allegory intended to show that these furious and ill-conditioned females did not escape punishment for their misdeeds; and that they were driven by society to pass the rest of their lives in woods and caverns.

FABLE II.

Bacchus, having punished the Thracian women for the murder of Orpheus, leaves Thrace. His tutor, Silenus, having become intoxicated, loses his companions, and is brought by some Phrygian peasants to Midas. He sends him to Bacchus, on which the God, in acknowledgment of his kindness, promises him whatever favour he may desire. Midas asks to be able to turn everything that he touches into gold. This power is granted; but, soon convinced of his folly, Midas begs the God to deprive him of it, on which he is ordered to bathe in the river Pactolus. He obeys the God, and communicates the power which he possesses to the stream; from which time that river has golden sands.

And this is not enough for Bacchus. He resolves to forsake the country itself, and, with a superior train, he repairs to the vineyards of his own Tymolus, and Pactolus; although it was not golden at that time, nor to be coveted for its precious sands. The usual throng, both Satyrs and Bacchanals, surround him, but Silenus is away. The Phrygian rustics took him, as he was staggering with age and wine, and, bound with garlands, they led him to their king, Midas, to whom, together with the Cecropian Eumolpus, the Thracian Orpheus had intrusted the mysterious orgies of Bacchus. Soon as he recognized this associate and companion of these rites, he hospitably kept a festival on the coming of this guest, for twice five days, and as many nights joined in succession.

“And now the eleventh Lucifer had closed the lofty host of the stars, when the king came rejoicing to the Lydian lands, and restored Silenus to the youth, his foster-child. To him the God, being glad at the recovery of his foster-father, gave the choice of desiring a favour, pleasing, indeed, but useless, as it turned out. He, destined to make a foolish use of the favour, says, ‘Cause that whatever I shall touch with my body shall be turned into yellow gold.’ Liber assents to his wish, and grants him the hurtful favour, and is grieved that he has not asked for something better. The Berecynthian hero departs joyful, and rejoices in his own misfortune, and tries the truth of his promise by touching everything. And, hardly believing himself, he pulls down a twig from a holm-oak, growing on a bough not lofty; the twig becomes gold. He takes up a stone from the ground; the stone, too, turns pale with gold. He touches a clod, also; by his potent touch the clod becomes a mass of gold. He plucks some dry ears of corn, that wheat is golden. He holds an apple taken from a tree, you would suppose that the Hesperides had given it. If he places his fingers upon the lofty door-posts, then the posts are seen to glisten. When, too, he has washed his hands in the liquid stream, the water flowing from his hands might have deceived Danaë. He scarcely can contain his own hopes in his mind, imagining everything to be of gold. As he is thus rejoicing, his servants set before him a table supplied with dainties, and not deficient in parched corn. But then, whether he touches the gifts of Ceres with his right hand, the gifts of Ceres, as gold, become hard; or if he attempts to bite the dainties with hungry teeth, those dainties, upon the application of his teeth, shine as yellow plates of gold. Bacchus, the grantor of this favour, he mingles with pure water; you could see liquid gold flowing through his jaws.

“Astonished at the novelty of his misfortune, being both rich and wretched, he wishes to escape from his wealth, and now he hates what but so lately he has wished for; no plenty relieves his hunger, dry thirst parches his throat, and he is deservedly tormented . by the now hated gold; and raising his hands towards heaven, and his shining arms, he says, “Grant me pardon, father Lenæus; I have done wrong, but have pity on me, I pray, and deliver me from this specious calamity!” Bacchus, the gentle Divinity among the Gods, restored him, as he confessed that he had done wrong, to his former state, and annulled his given promise, and the favour that was granted: "And that thou mayst not remain overlaid with thy gold, so unhappily desired, go," said he, "to the river adjoining to great Sardis, and trace thy way, meeting the waters as they fall from the height of the mountain, until thou comest to the rise of the stream. And plunge thy head beneath the bubbling spring, where it bursts forth most abundantly, and at once purge thy body, at once thy crime." The king placed himself beneath the waters prescribed; the golden virtue tinged the river, and departed from the human body into the stream. And even now, the fields, receiving the ore of this ancient vein of gold, are hard, growing of pallid colour, from their clods imbibing the gold.

EXPLANATION.

The ancients divided the Divinities into several classes, and in the last class, which Ovid calls the populace, or commonalty of the Gods, were the Satyrs and Sileni. The latter, according to Pausanias, were no other than Satyrs of advanced age. There seems, however, to have been one among them, to whom the name of Silenus was especially given, and to him the present story relates. According to Pindar and Pausanias he was born at Malea, in Laconia; while Theopompus, quoted by Ælian, represents him as being the son of a Nymph. He was inferior to the higher Divinities, but superior to man, in not being subject to mortality. He was represented as bald, flat-nosed, and red-faced, a perfect specimen of a drunken old man. He is often introduced either sitting on an ass, or reeling along on foot, with a thyrsus to support him.

He was said to have tended the education of the infant Bacchus, and indeed, according to the author whose works are quoted as those of Orpheus, he was an especial favourite of the Gods; while some writers represent him not as a drunken old man, but as a learned philosopher and a skilful commander. Lucian combines the two characters, and describes him as an aged man with large straight ears and a huge belly, wearing yellow clothes, and generally mounted on an ass, or supported by a staff, but, nevertheless, as being a skilful general. Hyginus says, that the Phrygian peasants found Midas near a fountain, into which, 386 according to Xenophon, some one had put wine, which had made him drunk. In his interview with Midas, according to Theopompus, as quoted by Ælian, they had a conversation concerning that unknown region of the earth, to which Plato refers under the name of the New Atlantis, and which, after long employing the speculations of the ancient philosophers, was realized to the moderns in the discovery of America. The passage is sufficiently curious to deserve to be quoted. He says, "Asia, Europe, and Libya, are but three islands, surrounded by the ocean; but beyond that ocean there is a vast continent, whose bounds are entirely unknown to us. The men and the animals of that country are much larger, and live much longer than those of this part of the world. Their towns are fine and magnificent; their customs are different from ours; and they are governed by different laws. They have two cities, one of which is called 'the Warlike,' and the other 'the Devout.' The inhabitants of the first city are much given to warfare, and make continual attacks upon their neighbours, whom they bring under their subjection. Those who inhabit the other city are peaceable, and blessed with plenty; the earth without toil or tillage furnishing them with abundance of the necessaries of life. Except their sick, they all live in the midst of riches and continual festivity and pleasure; but they are so just and righteous that the Gods themselves delight to go frequently and pass their time among them.

"The warlike people of the first city having extended their conquests in their own vast continent, made an irruption into ours, with a million of men, as far as the country of the Hyperboreans; but when they saw their mode of living, they deemed them to be unworthy of their notice, and returned home. These warriors rarely die of sickness; they delight in warfare, and generally lose their lives in battle. There is also in this new world another numerous people called Meropes; and in their country is a place called 'Anostus,' that is to say, 'not to be repassed,' because no one ever comes back from thence. It is a dreadful abyss, having no other than a reddish sort of light. There are two rivers in that place; one called the River of Sorrow, and the other the River of Mirth. Trees as large as planes grow about these rivers. Those who eat of the fruit of the trees growing near the River of Sorrow, pass their lives in affliction, weeping continually, even to their last breath; but such as eat of the fruit of the other trees, forget the past, and revert through the different stages of their life, and then die."

Ælian regards the passage as a mere fable, and the latter part is clearly allegorical. The mention of the two cities, 'the Warlike' and 'the Devout,' can hardly fail to remind us of Japan, with its spiritual and temporal capitals.

Some writers say, that Silenus was the king of Caria, and was the contemporary and friend of Midas, to whom his counsel proved of considerable service, in governing his dominions. He was probably called the foster-father or tutor, of Bacchus, because he introduced his worship into Phrygia and the neighbouring countries.

FABLE III.

Pan is so elated with the praises of some Nymphs who hear the music of his pipe, that he presumes to challenge Apollo to play with him. The mountain God, Tmolus, who is chosen umpire of the contest, decides in favour of Apollo, and the whole company approve of his judgment except Midas, who, for his stupidity in preferring Pan, receives a pair of asses' ears. He carefully conceals them till they are discovered by his barber, who publishes his deformity in a very singular manner.

He, abhorring riches, inhabited the woods and the fields, and followed Pan, who always dwells in caves of the mountains; but his obtuse understanding still remained, and the impulse of his foolish mind was fated again, as before, to be an injury to its owner. For the lofty Tmolus, looking far and wide over the sea, stands erect, steep with its lofty ascent; and extending in its descent on either side, is bounded on the one side by Sardis, on the other by the little Hypæpæ.

While Pan is there boasting of his strains to the charming Nymphs, and is warbling a little tune upon the reeds joined with wax, daring to despise the playing of Apollo in comparison with his own, he comes to the unequal contest under the arbitration of Tmolus. The aged umpire seats himself upon his own mountain, and frees his ears of the incumbering trees. His azure-coloured hair is only covered with oak, and acorns hang around his hollow temples. And looking at the God of the flocks, he says, "there is no delay in me, your umpire." He sounds his rustic reeds, and delights Midas with his uncouth music; for he, by chance, is present as he plays. After this the sacred Tmolus turns his face towards the countenance of Apollo; his words follow the direction of his face. He, having his yellow head wreathed with Parnassian laurel, sweeps the ground with his robe, soaked in Tyrian purple, and supports with his left hand his lyre, adorned with gems and Indian ivory; the other hand holds the plectrum. The very posture is that of an artist. He then touches the strings with a skilful thumb; charmed by the sweetness of which, Tmolus bids Pan to hold his reeds in submission to the lyre; and the judgment and decision of the sacred mountain pleases them all. Yet it is blamed, and is called unjust by the voice of Midas alone. But the Delian God does not allow his stupid ears to retain their human shape: but draws them out to a great length, and he fills them with grey hairs, and makes them unsteady at the lower part, and gives them the power of moving. The rest of his body is that of a man; in one part alone is he condemned to punishment; and he assumes the ears of the slowly moving ass.

He, indeed, concealed them, and endeavoured to veil his temples, laden with this foul disgrace, with a purple turban. But a servant, who was wont to cut his hair, when long, with the steel scissars, saw it; who, when he did not dare disclose the disgraceful thing he had seen, though desirous to publish it, and yet could not keep it secret, retired, and dug up the ground, and disclosed, in a low voice, what kind of ears he had beheld on his master, and whispered it to the earth cast up. And then he buried this discovery of his voice with the earth thrown in again, and, having covered up the ditch, departed in silence.

There, a grove, thick set with quivering reeds, began to rise; and as soon as it came to maturity, after a complete year, it betrayed its planter. For, moved by the gentle South wind, it repeated the words there buried, and disclosed the ears of his master.

EXPLANATION.

Midas, according to Pausanias, was the son of Gordius and Cybele, and reigned in the Greater Phrygia. Strabo says that he and his father kept their court near the river Sangar, in cities which, in the time of that author had become mean villages. As Midas was very rich, and at the same time very frugal, it was reported that whatever he touched was at once turned into gold; and Bacchus was probably introduced into his story, because Midas had favoured the introduction of his worship, and was consequently supposed to have owed his success to the good offices of that Divinity. He was probably the first who extracted gold from the sands of the river Pactolus, and in that circumstance the story may have originated. Strabo says that Midas found the treasures which he possessed in the mines of Mount Bermius. It was said that in his infancy some ants were seen to creep into his cradle, and to put grains of wheat in his mouth, which was supposed to portend that he would be rich and frugal.

As he was very stupid and ignorant, the fable of his preference of the music of Pan to that of Apollo was invented, to which was added, perhaps, as a mark of his stupidity, that the God gave him a pair of asses' ears. The scholiast of Aristophanes, to explain the story, says either it was intended to shew that Midas, like the ass, was very quick of hearing, or in other words, had numerous spies in all parts of his dominions; or, it was invented, because his usual place of residence was called Onouta, ὄνου ὠτα, 'the ears of an ass.' Strabo says that he took a draught of warm bullock's blood, from the effects of which he died; and, according to Plutarch, he did so to deliver himself from the frightful dreams with which he was tormented.

Tmolus, the king of Lydia, according to Clitophon, was the son of Mars and the Nymph Theogene, or, according to Eustathius, of Sipylus and Eptonia. Having violated Arriphe, a Nymph of Diana, he was, as a punishment, tossed by a bull, and falling on some sharp pointed stakes, he lost his life, and was buried on the mountain that afterwards bore his name.

FABLE IV.

Apollo and Neptune build the walls of Troy for king Laomedon, who refuses to give the Gods the reward which he has promised: on which Neptune punishes his perjury by an inundation of his country. Laomedon is then obliged to expose his daughter to a sea monster, in order to appease the God. Hercules delivers her; and Laomedon defrauds him likewise of the horses which he has promised him. In revenge, Hercules plunders the city of Troy, and carries off Hesione, whom he gives in marriage to his companion Telamon.

The son of Latona, having thus revenged himself, departs from Tmolus, and, borne through the liquid air, rests on the plains of Laomedon, on this side of the narrow sea of Helle, the daughter of Nephele. On the right hand of Sigæum and on the left of the lofty Rhœtæum, there is an ancient altar dedicated to the Panomphæan Thunderer. Thence, he sees Laomedon now first building the walls of rising Troy, and that this great undertaking is growing up with difficult labour, and requires no small resources. And then, with the trident-bearing father of the raging deep, he assumes a mortal form, and for the Phrygian king they build the walls, a sum of gold being agreed on for the defences.

The work is now finished; the king refuses the reward, and, as a completion of his perfidy, adds perjury to his false words. "Thou shalt not escape unpunished," says the king of the sea; and he drives all his waters towards the shores of covetous Troy. He turns the land, too, into the form of the sea, and carries off the wealth of the husbandmen, and overwhelms the fields with waves. Nor is this punishment sufficient: the daughter of the king, is also demanded for a sea monster. Chained to the rugged rocks, Alcides delivers her, and demands the promised reward, the horses agreed upon; and the recompense of so great a service being denied him, he captures the twice-perjured walls of conquered Troy. Nor does Telamon, a sharer in the warfare, come off without honour; and he obtains Hesione, who is given to him.

But Peleus was distinguished by a Goddess for his wife; nor was he more proud of the name of his grandfather than that of his father-in-law. Since, not to his lot alone did it fall to be the grandson of Jove; to him alone, was a Goddess given for a wife.

EXPLANATION.

Laomedon, being King of Troy, and the city being open and defenceless, he undertook to enclose it with walls, and succeeded so well, that the work was attributed to Apollo. The strong banks which he was obliged to raise to keep out the sea and to prevent inundations, were regarded as the work of Neptune. In time, these banks being broken down by tempests, it was reported that the God of the sea had thus revenged himself on Laomedon, for refusing him the reward which had been agreed upon between them. This story received the more ready credit from the circumstance mentioned by Herodotus and Eustathius, that this king used the treasure belonging to the temple of Neptune, in raising these embankments, and building the walls of his city; having promised the priests to restore it when he should be in a condition to do so; which promise he never performed. Homer says that Neptune and Apollo tended the flocks while all the subjects of Laomedon were engaged in building the walls.

When these embankments were laid under water, and a plague began to rage within the city, the Trojans were told by an oracle that to appease the God of the sea, they must sacrifice a virgin of the royal blood. The lot fell upon Hesione, and she was exposed to the fury of a sea-monster. Hercules offered to deliver her for a reward of six horses, and having succeeded, was refused his recompense by Laomedon; whom he slew, and then plundered his city. He then gave the kingdom to Podarces, the son of Laomedon, and Hesione to his companion Telamon, who had assisted him. This monster was probably an allegorical representation of the inundations of the sea; and Hesione having been made the price of him that could succeed in devising a remedy, she was said to have been exposed to the fury of a monster. The six horses promised by Laomedon were perhaps so many ships, which Hercules demanded for his recompense; and this is the more likely, as the ancients said that these horses were so light and swift, that they ran upon the waves, which story seems to point at the qualities of a galley or ship under sail.

Lycophron gives a more wonderful version of the story. He says that the monster, to which Hesione was exposed, devoured Hercules, and that he was three days in its belly, and came out, having lost all his hair. This is, probably, away of telling us that Hercules and his assistants were obliged to work in the water, which incommoded them very much. Palæphatus gives another explanation: he says that Hesione was about to be delivered up to a pirate, and that Hercules, on boarding his ship, was wounded, although afterwards victorious.

FABLES V. AND VI.

Proteus foretells that Thetis shall have a son, who shall be more powerful than his father, and shall exceed him in valour. Jupiter, who is in love with Thetis, is alarmed at this prediction, and yields her to Peleus. The Goddess flies from his advances by assuming various shapes, till, by the advice of Proteus, he holds her fast, and then having married her, she bears Achilles. Peleus goes afterwards to Ceyx, king of Trachyn, to expiate the death of his brother Phocus, whom he has killed. Ceyx is in a profound melancholy, and tells him how his brother Dædalion, in the transports of his grief for his daughter Chione, who had been slain for vying with Diana, has been transformed into a hawk. During this relation, Peleus is informed that a wolf which Psamathe has sent to revenge the death of Phocus, is destroying his herds. He endeavours to avert the wrath of the Goddess, but she is deaf to his entreaties, till, by the intercession of Thetis, she is appeased, and she turns the wolf into stone.

For the aged Proteus had said to Thetis, "Goddess of the waves, conceive; thou shalt be the mother of a youth, who

by his gallant actions shall surpass the deeds of his father, and shall be called greater than he." Therefore, lest the world might contain something greater than Jove, although he had felt no gentle flame in his breast, Jupiter avoided the embraces of Thetis, the Goddess of the sea, and commanded his grandson, . the son of Æacus, to succeed to his own pretensions, and rush into the embraces of the ocean maid. There is a bay of Hæmonia, curved into a bending arch; its arms project out; there, were the water but deeper, there would be a harbour, but the sea is just covering the surface of the sand. It has a firm shore, which retains not the impression of the foot, nor delays the step of the traveller, nor is covered with sea-weeds. There is a grove of myrtle at hand, planted with particoloured berries. In the middle there is a cave, whether formed by nature or art, it is doubtful; still, by art rather. To this, Thetis, thou wast wont often to come naked, seated on thy harnessed dolphin. There Peleus seized upon thee, as thou wast lying fast bound in sleep; and because, being tried by entreaties, thou didst resist, he resolved upon violence, clasping thy neck with both his arms. And, unless thou hadst had recourse to thy wonted arts, by frequently changing thy shape, he would have succeeded in his attempt. But, at one moment, thou wast a bird (still, as a bird he held thee fast); at another time a large tree: to that tree did Peleus cling. Thy third form was that of a spotted tiger; frightened by that, the son of Æacus loosened his arms from thy body.

Then pouring wine upon its waters, he worshipped the Gods of the sea, both with the entrails of sheep and with the smoke of frankincense; until the Carpathian prophet said, from the middle of the waves, "Son of Æacus, thou shalt gain the alliance desired by thee. Do thou only, when she shall be resting fast asleep in the cool cave, bind her unawares with cords and tenacious bonds. And let her not deceive thee, by imitating a hundred forms; but hold her fast, whatever she shall be, until she shall reassume the form which she had before." Proteus said this, and hid his face in the sea, and received his own waves at his closing words. Titan was now descending, and, with the pole of his chariot bent downward, was taking possession of the Hesperian main; when the beautiful Nereid, leaving the deep, entered her wonted place of repose. Hardly had Peleus well seized the virgin's limbs, when she changed her shape, until she perceived her limbs to be held fast, and her arms to be extended different ways. Then, at last, she sighed, and said, "Not without the aid of a Divinity, dost thou overcome me;" and then she appeared as Thetis again. The hero embraced her thus revealed, and enjoyed his wish, and by her was the father of great Achilles.

And happy was Peleus in his son, happy, too, in his wife, and one to whose lot all blessings had fallen, if you except the crime of his killing Phocus. The Trachinian land received him guilty of his brother's blood, and banished from his native home. Here Ceyx, sprung from Lucifer for his father, and having the comeliness of his sire in his face, held the sway without violence and without bloodshed, who, being sad at that time and unlike his former self, lamented the loss of his brother. After the son of Æacus, wearied, both with troubles and the length of the journey, has arrived there, and has entered the city with a few attending him, and has left the flocks of sheep and the herds which he has brought with him, not far from the walls, in a shady valley; when an opportunity is first afforded him of approaching the prince, extending the symbols of peace with his suppliant hand, he tells him who he is, and from whom descended. He only conceals his crime, and, dissembling as to the true reason of his banishment, he entreats him to aid him by a reception either in his city or in his territory. On the other hand, the Trachinian prince addresses him with gentle lips, in words such as these: "Peleus, our bounties are open even to the lowest ranks, nor do I hold an inhospitable sway. To this my inclination, thou bringest in addition as powerful inducements, an illustrious name, and Jupiter as thy grandsire. And do not lose thy time in entreaty; all that thou askest thou shalt have. Look upon all these things, whatever thou seest, as in part thy own: would that thou couldst behold them in better condition!” and then . he weeps. Pelcus and his companions enquire what it is that occasions grief so great. To them he thus speaks: —

“Perhaps you may think that this bird, which lives upon prey, and affrights all the birds, always had wings. It was a man; and as great is the vigour of its courage, as he who was Dædalion by name was active, and bold in war, and ready for violence; he was sprung from him, for his father, who summons forth Aurora, and withdraws the last from the heavens. Peace was cherished by me; the care of maintaining peace and my marriage contract was mine; cruel warfare pleased my brother; that prowess of his subdued both kings and nations, which, changed, now chases the Thisbean doves. Chione was his daughter, who, highly endowed with beauty, was pleasing to a thousand suitors, when marriageable at the age of twice seven years. By chance Phœbus, and the son of Maia, returning, the one from his own Delphi, the other from the heights of Cyllene, beheld her at the same moment, and at the same moment were inspired with passion. Apollo defers his hope of enjoyment until the hours of night; the other brooks no delay, and with his wand, that causes sleep, touches the maiden’s face. At the potent touch she lies entranced, and suffers violence from the God. Night has now bespangled the heavens with stars; Phœbus personates an old woman, and takes those delights before enjoyed in imagination. When her mature womb had completed the destined time, Autolycus was born, acrafty offspring of the stock of the God with winged feet, ingenious at every kind of theft, and who used, not degenerating from his father’s skill, to make white out of black, and black out of white. From Phœbus was born

“But what avails it for her to have brought forth two children, and to have been pleasing to two Gods, and to have sprung from a valiant father, and the Thunderer as her ancestor? . Is even glory thus prejudicial to many? To her, at least, it was a prejudice; who dared to prefer herself to Diana, and decried the charms of the Goddess. But violent wrath was excited in her, and she said, ‘We will please her by our deeds.’ And there was no delay: she bent her bow, and let fly an arrow from the string, and pierced with the reed the tongue that deserved it. The tongue was silent; nor did her voice, and the words which she attempted to utter, now follow; and life, with her blood, left her, as she endeavoured to speak. Oh hapless affection! What pain did I then endure in my heart, as her uncle, and what consolations did I give to my affectionate brother? These the father received no otherwise than rocks do the murmurs of the ocean, and he bitterly lamented his daughter thus snatched from him. But when he beheld her burning, four times had he an impulse to rush into the midst of the pile; thence repulsed, four times did he commit his swift limbs to flight, and, like an ox, bearing upon his galled neck the stings of hornets, he rushed where there was no path. Already did he seem to me to run faster than a human being, and you would have supposed that his feet had assumed wings. Therefore he outran all; and, made swift by the desire for death, he gained the heights of Parnassus.

“Apollo pitying him, when Dædalion would have thrown himself from the top of the rock, made him into a bird, and supported him, hovering in the air upon these sudden wings; and he gave him a curved beak, and crooked claws on his talons, his former courage, and strength greater in proportion than his body; and, now become a hawk, sufficiently benignant to none, he rages equally against all birds; and grieving himself, becomes the cause of grief to others."

While the son of Lucifer is relating these wonders about his brother, hastening with panting speed, Phocæan Antenor, the keeper of his herds, runs up to him. "Alas, Peleus! Peleus!" says he, "I am the messenger to thee of a great calamity;" and then Peleus bids him declare whatever news it is that he has brought; and the Trachinian hero himself is in suspense, and trembles through apprehension. The other tells his story: "I had driven the weary bullocks to the winding shore, when . the Sun at his height, in the midst of his course, could look back on as much of it as he could see to be now remaining; and a part of the oxen had bent their knees on the yellow sands, and, as they lay, viewed the expanse of the wide waters; some, with slow steps, were wandering here and there; others were swimming, and appearing with their lofty necks above the waves. A temple is hard by the sea, adorned neither with marble nor with gold, but made of solid beams, and shaded with an ancient grove; the Nereids and Nereus possess it. A sailor, while he was drying his nets upon the shore, told us that these were the Gods of the temple. Adjacent to this is a marsh, planted thickly with numerous willows, which the water of the stagnating waves of the sea has made into a swamp. From that spot, a huge monster, a wolf, roaring with a loud bellowing, alarms the neighbouring places, and comes forth from the thicket of the marsh, both having his thundering jaws covered with foam and with clotted blood, and his eyes suffused with red flame. Though he was raging both with fury and with hunger, still was he more excited by fury; for he did not care to satisfy his hunger by the slaughter of the oxen, and to satiate his dreadful appetite, but he mangled the whole herd, and, like a true foe, pulled each to the ground. Some, too, of ourselves, while we were defending them, wounded with his fatal bite, were killed. The shore and the nearest waves were red with blood, and the fens were filled with the lowings of the herd. But delay is dangerous, and the case does not allow us to hesitate: while anything is still left, let us all unite, and let us take up arms, arms, Isay, and in a body let us bear weapons."

Thus speaks the countryman. And the loss does not affect Peleus; but, remembering his crime, he considers that the bereaved Nereid has sent these misfortunes of his, as an offering to the departed Phocus. The Ætæan king commands his men to put on their armour, and to take up stout weapons; together with whom, he himself is preparing to go. But Halcyone, his wife, alarmed at the tumult, runs out, and not yet having arranged all her hair, even that which is arranged she throws in disorder; and clinging to the neck of her husband, she entreats him, both with words and tears, to send assistance without himself, and so to save two lives in one. . The son of Æacus says to her, "O queen, lay aside thy commendable and affectionate fears; the kindness of thy proposal is too great for me. It does not please me, that arms should be employed against this new monster. The Divinity of the sea must be adored." There is a lofty tower; a fire is upon the extreme summit, a place grateful to wearied ships. They go up there, and with sighs they behold the bulls lying scattered upon the sea shore, and the cruel ravager with blood-stained mouth, having his long hair stained with gore. Peleus, thence extending his hands towards the open sea, entreats the azure Psamathe to lay aside her wrath, and to give him her aid. But she is not moved by the words of the son of Æacus, thus entreating. Thetis, interceding on behalf of her husband, obtains that favour for him.

But still the wolf persists, not recalled from the furious slaughter, and keenly urged by the sweetness of the blood; until she changes him into marble, as he is fastening on the neck of a mangled heifer. His body preserves every thing except its colour. The colour of the stone shows that he is not now a wolf, and ought not now to be feared. Still, the Fates do not permit the banished Peleus to settle in this land: the wandering exile goes to the Magnetes, and there receives from the Hæmonian Acastus an expiation of the murder.

EXPLANATION.

Thetis being a woman of extraordinary beauty, it is not improbable, that in the Epithalamia that were composed on her marriage, it was asserted, that the Gods had contended for her hand, and had been forced to give way, in obedience to the superior power of destiny. Hyginus says that Prometheus was the only person that was acquainted with the oracle; and that he imparted it to Jupiter, on condition that he would deliver him from the eagle that tormented him: whereupon the God sent Hercules to Mount Caucasus, to perform his promise. It was on the occasion of this marriage that the Goddess Discord presented the golden apple, the dispute for which occasioned the Trojan war. The part of the story which relates how she assumed various forms, to avoid the advances of Peleus, is perhaps an ingenious method of stating, that having several suitors, she was originally disinclined to Peleus, and used every pretext to avoid him, until, by the advice of a wise friend, he found means to remove all the difficulties which opposed his alliance with her.

Some writers state that Thetis was the daughter of Chiron; but Euripides, in a fragment of his Iphigenia, tells us that Achilles, who was the son of this marriage, took a pride in carrying the figure of a Nereid on his shield. The three sons of Æacus were Peleus, Telamon, and Phocus; while they were playing at quoits, the latter accidentally received a blow from Peleus, which killed him. Ovid, however, seems here to imply that Peleus killed his brother purposely.

The story of Chione most probably took its rise from the difference between the inclinations of the two children that she bore. Autolycus, being cunning, and addicted to theft, he was styled the son of Mercury; while Philammon being a lover of music, Apollo was said to be his father. According to Pausanias, Autolycus was the son of Dædalion, and not of Chione. The story of the wolf, the minister of the vengeance of Psamathe, for the death of Phocus, is probably built on historical grounds. Æacus had two wives, Ægina and Psamathe, the sister of Thetis; by the first he had Peleus and Telamon; by the second, Phocus. Lycomedes, the king of Scyros, the brother of Psamathe, resolved to revenge the death of his nephew, whom Peleus had killed: and declared war against Ceyx, for receiving him into his dominions. The troops of Lycomedes ravaged the country, and carried away the flocks of Peleus: on which prayers and entreaties were resorted to, with the view of pacifying him; which object having been effected, he withdrew his troops. On this, it was rumoured that he was changed into a rock, after having ravaged the country like a wild beast, which comparison was perhaps suggested by the fact of his name being partly compounded of the word λυκὸς, 'a wolf.'

FABLE VII.

Ceyx, going to Claros, to consult the oracle about his brother's fate, is shipwrecked on the voyage. Juno sends Iris to the God of Sleep, who, at her request, dispatches Morpheus to Halcyone, in a dream, to inform her of the death of her husband. She awakes in the morning, full of solicitude, and goes to the shore where she finds the body of Ceyx thrown up by the waves. She is about to cast herself into the sea in despair, when the Gods transform them both into king-fishers.

In the mean time, Ceyx being disturbed in mind, both on account of the strange fate of his brother, and the wonders that had succeeded his brother, prepares to go to the Clarian

God, that he may consult the sacred oracle, the consolation of mortals: for the profane Phorbas, with his Phlegyans, renders the oracle of Delphi inaccessible. Yet he first makes thee acquainted with his design, most faithful Halcyone, whose bones receive a chill, and a paleness, much resembling boxwood, comes over her face, and her cheeks are wet with tears gushing forth. Three times attempting to speak, three times she moistens her face with tears, and, sobs interrupting her affectionate complaints, she says: —

“What fault of mine, my dearest, has changed thy mind? Where is that care of me, which once used to exist? Canst thou now be absent without anxiety, thy Halcyone being left behind? Now, is a long journey pleasing to thee? Now, am I dearer to thee when at a distance? But I suppose thy journey is by land, and I shall only grieve, and shall not fear as well, and my anxiety will be free from apprehension. The seas and the aspect of the stormy ocean affright me. And lately I beheld broken planks on the sea shore; and often have I read the names upon tombs, without bodies there buried. . And let not any deceitful assurance influence thy mind, that the grandson of Hippotas is thy father-in-law; who confines the strong winds in prison, and assuages the seas when he pleases. When, once let loose, the winds have taken possession of the deep, nothing is forbidden to them; every land and every sea is disregarded by them. Even the clouds of heaven do they insult, and by their bold onsets strike forth the brilliant fires. The more I know them, (for I do know them, and, when little, have often seen them in my father’s abode,) the more I think they are to be dreaded. But if thy resolution, my dear husband, cannot be altered by my entreaties, and if thou art but too determined to go; take me, too, as well. At least, we shall be tossed together; nor shall I fear anything, but what I shall be then suffering; and together we shall endure whatever shall happen; together we shall be carried over the wide seas.”

By such words and the tears of the daughter of Æolus, is her husband, son of the Morning Star, much affected; for the flame of love exists no less in him. But he neither wishes to abandon his proposed voyage, nor to admit Halcyone to a share in the danger; and he says, in answer, many things to console her timorous breast. And yet she does not, on that account, approve of his reasons. To them he adds this alleviation, with which alone he influences his affectionate wife: "All delay will, indeed, be tedious to me; but I swear to thee by the fire of my sire, (if only the fates allow me to return,) that I will come back before the moon has twice completed her orb." When, by these promises, a hope has been given her of his speedy return, he forthwith orders a ship, drawn out of the dock, to be launched in the sea, and to be supplied with its proper equipments. On seeing this, Halcyone again shuddered, as though presaging the future, and shed her flowing tears, and gave him embraces; and at last, in extreme misery, she said, with a sad voice, "Farewell!" and then she sank with all her body to the ground.

But the youths, while Ceyx is still seeking pretexts for delay, in double rows, draw the oars towards their hardy breasts, and cleave the main with equal strokes. She raises her weeping eyes, and sees her husband standing on the crooked stern, and by waving his hand making the first signs to her; and she returns the signals. When the land has receded further, and her eyes are unable to distinguish his countenance: still, while she can, she follows the retreating ship with her sight. When this too, borne onward, cannot be distinguished from the distance; still she looks at the sails waving from the top of the mast. When she no longer sees the sails; she anxiously seeks her deserted bed, and lays herself on the couch. The bed, and the spot, renew the tears of Halcyone, and remind her what part of herself is wanting.

They have now gone out of harbour, and the breeze shakes the rigging; the sailor urges the pendent oars towards their sides; and fixes the sailyards on the top of the mast, and spreads the canvass full from the mast, and catches the coming breezes. Either the smaller part, or, at least, not more than half her course, had now been cut by the ship, and both lands were at a . great distance, when, towards night, the sea began to grow white with swelling waves, and the boisterous East wind to blow with greater violence. Presently the master cries, "At once, lower the top sails, and furl the whole of the sail to the yards!" He orders, but the adverse storm impedes the execution; and the roaring of the sea does not allow any voice to be heard.

Yet, of their own accord, some hasten to draw in the oars, some to secure the sides, some to withdraw the sails from the winds. This one pumps up the waves, and pours back the sea into the sea; another takes off the yards. While these things are being done without any order, the raging storm is increasing, and the fierce winds wage war on every side, and stir up the furious main. The master of the ship is himself alarmed, and himself confesses that he does not know what is their present condition, nor what to order or forbid; so great is the amount of their misfortunes, and more powerful than all his skill. For the men are making a noise with their shouts, the cordage with its rattling, the heavy waves with the dashing of other waves, the skies with the thunder. The sea is upturned with billows, and appears to reach the heavens, and to sprinkle the surrounding clouds with its foam. And one while, when it turns up the yellow sands from the bottom, it is of the same colour with them; at another time it is blacker than the Stygian waves. Sometimes it is level, and is white with resounding foam. The Trachinian ship too, is influenced by these vicissitudes; and now aloft, as though from the summit of a mountain, it seems to look down upon the vallies and the depths of Acheron; at another moment, when the engulfing sea has surrounded it, sunk below, it seems to be looking at heaven above from the infernal waters. Struck on its side by the waves, it often sends forth a low crashing sound, and beaten against, it sounds with no less noise, than on an occasion when the iron battering ram, or the balista, is shaking the shattered towers. And as fierce lions are wont, gaining strength in their career, to rush with their breasts upon the weapons, and arms extended against them; so the water, when upon the rising of the winds it had rushed onwards, advanced against the rigging of the ship, and was much higher than it.

And now the bolts shrink, and despoiled of their covering of wax, the seams open wide, and afford a passage to the fatal waves. Behold! vast showers fall from the dissolving clouds, and you would believe that the whole of the heavens is descending into the deep, and that the swelling sea is ascending to the tracts of heaven. The sails are wet with the rain, and the waves of the ocean are mingled with the waters of the skies. The firmament is without its fires; and the gloomy night is oppressed both with its own darkness and that of the storm. Yet the lightnings disperse these, and give light as they flash; the waters are on fire with the flames of the thunder-bolts. And now, too, the waves make an inroad into the hollow texture of the ship; and as a soldier, superior to all the rest of the number, after he has often sprung forward against the fortifications of a defended city, at length gains his desires; and, inflamed with the desire of glory, though but one among a thousand more, he still mounts the wall, so, when the violent waves have beaten against the lofty sides, the fury of the tenth wave, rising more impetuously than the rest, rushes onward; and it ceases not to attack the wearied ship, before it descends within the walls, as it were, of the captured bark. Part, then, of the sea is still attempting to get into the ship, part is within it. All are now in alarm, with no less intensity than a city is wont to be alarmed, while some are undermining the walls without, and others within have possession of the walls. All art fails them, and their courage sinks; and as many shapes of death seem to rush and to break in upon them, as the waves that approach. One does not refrain from tears; another is stupefied; another calls those happy whom funeral rites . await; another, in his prayers, addresses the Gods, and lifting up his hands in vain to that heaven which he sees not, implores their aid. His brothers and his parent recur to the mind of another; to another, his home, with his pledges of affection, and so what has been left behind by each.

The remembrance of Halcyone affects Ceyx; on the lips of Ceyx there is nothing but Halcyone; and though her alone he regrets, still he rejoices that she is absent. Gladly, too, would he look back to the shore of his native land, and turn his last glance towards his home; but he knows not where it is. The sea is raging in a hurricane so vast, and all the sky is concealed beneath the shade brought on by the clouds of pitchy darkness, and the face of the night is redoubled in gloom. The mast is broken by the violence of the drenching tempest; the helm, too, is broken; and the undaunted wave, standing over its spoil, looks down like a conqueror, upon the waves as they encircle below. Nor, when precipitated, does it rush down less violently, than if any God were to hurl Athos or Pindus, torn up from its foundations, into the open sea; and with its weight and its violence together, it sinks the ship to the bottom. With her, a great part of the crew overwhelmed in the deep water, and not rising again to the air, meet their fate. Some seize hold of portions and broken pieces of the ship. Ceyx himself seizes a fragment of the wreck, with that hand with which he was wont to wield the sceptre, and in vain, alas! he invokes his father, and his father-in-law. But chiefly on his lips, as he swims, is his wife Halcyone. Her he thinks of, and her name he repeats: he prays the waves to impel his body before her eyes; and that when dead he may be entombed by the hands of his friends. While he still swims, he calls upon Halcyone far away, as often as the billows allow him to open his mouth, and in the very waves he murmurs her name. When, lo! adarkening arch of waters breaks over the middle of the waves, and buries his head sinking beneath the bursting billow. . Lucifer was obscured that night, and such that you could not have recognized him; and since he was not allowed to depart from the heavens, he concealed his face beneath thick clouds.

In the meantime, the daughter of Æolus, ignorant of so great misfortunes, reckons the nights; and now she hastens to prepare the garments for him to put on, and now, those which, when he comes, she herself may wear, and vainly promises herself his return. She, indeed, piously offers frankincense to all the Gods above; but, before all, she pays her adorations at the temple of Juno, and comes to the altars on behalf of her husband, who is not in existence. And she prays that her husband may be safe, and that he may return, and may prefer no woman before her. But this last alone can be her lot, out of so many of her wishes. But the Goddess endures not any longer to be supplicated on behalf of one who is dead; and, that she may repel her polluted hands from the altars, — she says, “Iris, most faithful messenger of my words, hasten quickly to the soporiferous court of Sleep, and command him, under the form of Ceyx who is dead, to send a vision to Halcyone, to relate her real misfortune.” Thus she says. Iris assumes garment of a thousand colours, and, marking the heavens . with her curving arch, she repairs to the abode of the king, Sleep, as bidden, concealed beneath a rock.

There is near the Cimmerians a cave with a long recess, ahollowed mountain, the home and the habitation of slothful Sleep, into which the Sun, whether rising, or in his mid course, or setting, can never come. Fogs mingled with darkness are exhaled from the ground, and it is a twilight with a dubious light. No wakeful bird, with the notes of his crested features, there calls forth the morn; nor do the watchful dogs, or the geese more sagacious than the dogs, break the silence with their voices. No wild beasts, no cattle, no boughs waving with the breeze, no loud outbursts of the human voice, there make any sound; mute Rest has there her abode. But from the bottom of the rock runs a stream, the waters of Lethe, through which the rivulet, trickling with a murmuring noise amid the sounding pebbles, invites sleep. Before the doors of the cavern, poppies bloom in abundance, and innumerable herbs, from the juice of which the humid night gathers sleep, and spreads it over the darkened Earth. There is no door in the whole dwelling, to make a noise by the turning of the hinges; no porter at the entrance. But in the middle is a couch, raised high upon black ebony, stuffed with feathers, of a dark colour, concealed by a dark coverlet; on which the God himself lies, his limbs dissolved in sloth. Around him lie, in every direction, imitating divers shapes, unsubstantial dreams as many as the harvest bears ears of corn, the wood green leaves, the shore the sands thrown up. Into this, soon as the maiden had entered, and had put aside with her hands the visions that were . in her way, the sacred house shone with the splendour of her garment, and the God, with difficulty lifting up his eyes sunk in languid sloth, again and again relapsing, and striking the upper part of his breast with his nodding chin, at last aroused himself from his dozing; and, raised on his elbow, he inquired why she had come; for he knew who she was.

But she replied, "Sleep, thou repose of all things; Sleep, thou gentlest of the Deities; thou peace of the mind, from which care flies, who dost soothe the hearts of men, wearied with the toils of the day, and refittest them for labour, command a vision, that resembles in similitude the real shape, to go to Halcyone, in Herculean Trachyn, in the form of the king, and to assume the form of one that has suffered shipwreck. Juno commands this." After Iris had executed her commission, she departed; for she could no longer endure the effects of the vapour; and, as soon as she perceived sleep creeping over her limbs, she took to flight, and departed along the bow by which she had come just before.

But Father Sleep, out of the multitude of his thousand sons, raises Morpheus, askilful artist, and an imitator of any human shape. No one more dexterously than he mimics the gait, and the countenance, and the mode of speaking; he adds the dress, too, and the words most commonly used by any one. But he imitates men only; for another one becomes a wild beast, becomes a bird, or becomes a serpent, with its lengthened body: this one, the Gods above call Icelos; the tribe of mortals, Phobetor. There is likewise a third, master of a different art, called Phantasos: he cleverly changes himself into earth, and stone, and water, and a tree, and all those things which are destitute of life. These are wont, by night, to show their features to kings and to generals, while others wander amid the people and the commonalty. These, Sleep, the aged God, passes by, and selects Morpheus alone from all his brothers, to execute the commands of the daughter of Thaumas; and again he . both drops his head, sunk in languid drowsiness, and shrinks back within the lofty couch.

Morpheus flies through the dark with wings that make no noise, and in a short space of intervening time arrives at the Hæmonian city; and, laying aside his wings from off his body, he assumes the form of Ceyx; and in that form, wan, and like one without blood, without garments, he stands before the bed of his wretched wife. The beard of the hero appears to be dripping, and the water to be falling thickly from his soaking hair. Then leaning on the bed, with tears running down his face, he says these words: "My most wretched wife, dost thou recognise thy Ceyx, or are my looks so changed with death? Observe me; thou wilt surely know me: and, instead of thy husband, thou wilt find the ghost of thy husband. Thy prayers, Halcyone, have availed me nothing; I have perished. Do not promise thyself, thus deceived, my return. The cloudy South wind caught my ship in the Ægean Sea, and dashed it to pieces, tossed by the mighty blasts; and the waves choked my utterance, in vain calling upon thy name. It is no untruthful messenger that tells thee this: thou dost not hear these things through vague rumours. I, myself, shipwrecked, in person, am telling thee my fate. Come, arise then, shed tears, and put on mourning; and do not send me unlamented to the phantom realms of Tartarus.”

To these words Morpheus adds a voice, which she may believe to be that of her husband. He seems, too, to be shedding real tears, and his hands have the gesture of Ceyx. As she weeps, Halcyone groans aloud, and moves her arms in her sleep, and catching at his body, grasps the air; and she cries aloud, “Stay, whither dost thou hurry? We will go together.” Disturbed by her own voice, and by the appearance of her husband, she shakes off sleep; and first she looks about there, to see if he, who has been so lately seen, is there; for the servants, roused by her voice, have brought in lights. After she has found him nowhere, she smites her face with her hands, and tears her garments from off her breast, and beats her breast itself. Nor cares she to loosen her hair; she tears it, and says to her nurse, as she inquires what is the occasion . of her sorrow: “Halcyone is no more! no more! with her own Ceyx is she dead. Away with words of comfort. He has perished by shipwreck. I have seen him, and I knew him; and as he departed, desirous to detain him, I extended my hands towards him. The ghost fled: but, yet it was the undoubted and the real ghost of my husband. It had not, indeed, if thou askest me that, his wonted features; nor was he looking cheerful with his former countenance. Hapless, I beheld him, pale, and naked, and with his hair still dripping. Lo! ill-fated man, he stood on this very spot;” and she seeks the prints of his footsteps, if any are left. “This it was, this is what I dreaded in my ill-boding mind, and I entreated that thou wouldst not, deserting me, follow the winds. But, I could have wished, since thou didst depart to perish, that, at least, thou hadst taken me as well.

To have gone with thee, yes, with thee, would have been an advantage to me; for then neither should I have spent any part of my life otherwise than together with thee, nor would my death have been divided from thee. Now, absent from thee, I perish; now, absent, I am tossed on the waves; and the sea has thee without me.

“My heart were more cruel than the sea itself, were I to strive to protract my life any further; and, were I to struggle to survive so great a misfortune. But I will not struggle, nor, hapless one, will I abandon thee; and, at least, I will now come to be thy companion. And, in the tomb, if the urn does not, yet the inscription shall unite us: if Itouch not thy bones with my bones, still will I unite thy name with my name.” Grief forbids her saying more, and wailings come between each word, and groans are heaved from her sorrow-stricken breast.

It is now morning: she goes forth from her abode to the sea-shore, and, wretched, repairs to that place from which she had seen him go, and says, “While he lingered, and while he was loosening the cables, at his departure, he gave me kisses upon this sea-shore;” and while she calls to recollection the incidents which she had observed with her eyes, and looks . out upon the sea, she observes on the flowing wave, I know not what object, like a body, within a distant space: and at first she is doubtful what it is. After the water has brought it a little nearer, and, although it is still distant, it is plain that it is a corpse. Ignorant who it may be, because it is ship-wrecked, she is moved at the omen, and, though unknown, would fain give it a tear. “Alas! thou wretched one!” she says, “whoever thou art; and if thou hast any wife!” Driven by the waves, the body approaches nearer. The more she looks at it, the less and the less is she mistress of her senses. And now she sees it brought close to the land, that now she can well distinguish it: it is her husband. “‘Tis he!” she exclaims, and, on the instant, she tears her face, her hair, and her garments; and, extending her trembling hands towards Ceyx, she says, "And is it thus, Oh dearest husband! is it thus, Oh ill-fated one! that thou dost return to me?"

A mole, made by the hand of man, adjoins the waves, which breaks the first fury of the ocean, and weakens the first shock of its waters. Upon that she leaped, and 'tis wondrous that she could. She flew, and beating the light air with her wings newly formed, she, awretched bird, skimmed the surface of the water. And, while she flew, her croaking mouth, with its slender bill, uttered a sound like that of one in sadness, and full of complaining. But when she touched the body, dumb, and without blood, embracing the beloved limbs with her new-made wings, in vain she gave him cold kisses with her hardened bill. The people were in doubt whether Ceyx was sensible of this, or whether, by the motion of the wave, he seemed to raise his countenance; but really he was sensible of it; and, at length, through the pity of the Gods above, both were changed into birds. Meeting with the same fate, even then their love remained. Nor, when now birds, is the conjugal tie dissolved: they couple, and they become parents; and for seven calm days, in the winter-time, does Halcyone brood upon her nest floating on the sea. Then the passage of the deep is safe; . Æolus keeps the winds in, and restrains them from sallying forth, and secures a smooth sea for his descendants.

According to the testimony of several of the ancient writers, Ceyx was the king of Trachyn, and was a prince of great knowledge and experience; and many had recourse to him to atone for the murders which they had committed, whether through imprudence or otherwise. Pausanias says that Eurystheus having summoned Ceyx to deliver up to him the children of Hercules, that prince, who was not able to maintain a war against so powerful a king, sent the youths to Theseus, who took them into his protection.

To recover from the melancholy consequent upon the death of his brother Dædalion and his niece Chione, he went to Claros to consult the oracle of Apollo, and was shipwrecked on his return; on which, his wife, Halcyone, was so afflicted, that she died of grief, or else threw herself into the sea, as Hyginus informs us. It was said that they were changed into the birds which we call kingfishers, a story which, probably, has no other foundation than the name of Halcyone, which signifies that bird; which by the ancients was considered to be the symbol of conjugal affection.

Apollodorus, however, does not give us so favourable an idea of the virtue of these persons as Ovid has done. According to him, it was their pride which proved the cause of their destruction. Jupiter enraged at Ceyx, because he had assumed his name as Halcyone had done that of Juno, changed them both into birds, he becoming a cormorant, and she a kingfisher. This story is remarkable for the beautiful and affecting manner in which it is told.

FABLE VIII.

The Nymph Hesperia flying from Æsacus, who is enamoured of her, is bitten by a serpent, and instantly dies from the effects of the wound. He is so afflicted at her death, that he throws himself into the sea, and is transformed into a didapper.

Some old man observes them as they fly over the widely extended seas, and commends their love, preserved to the end of their existence. One, close by, or the same, if chance so orders it, says, "This one, too, which you see, as it cuts through the sea, and having its legs drawn up," pointing at a didapper, with its wide throat, "was the son of a king. . And, if you want to come down to him in one lengthened series, his ancestors are Ilus, and Assaracus, and Ganymede, snatched away by Jupiter, and the aged Laomedon, and Priam, to whom were allotted the last days of Troy. He himself was the brother of Hector, and had he not experienced a strange fate in his early youth, perhaps he would have had a name not inferior to that of Hector; although the daughter of Dymas bore this last. Alexirhoë, the daughter of the two-horned Granicus, is said secretly to have brought forth Æsacus, under shady Ida.

“He loathed the cities, and distant from the splendid court, frequented the lonely mountains, and the unambitious fields; nor went but rarely among the throngs of Ilium. Yet, not having a breast either churlish, or impregnable to love, he espies Hesperie, the daughter of Cebrenus, on the banks of her sire, who has been often sought by him throughout all the woods, drying her locks, thrown over her shoulders, in the sun. The Nymph, thus seen, takes to flight, just as the frightened hind from the tawny wolf; and as the water-duck, surprised at a distance, having left her wonted stream, from the hawk. Her the Trojan hero pursues, and, swift with love, closely follows her, made swift by fear. Behold! a snake, lurking in the grass, with its barbed sting, wounds her foot as she flies, and leaves its venom in her body. With her flight is her life cut short. Frantic, he embraces her breathless, and cries aloud,—“I grieve, I grieve that ever I pursued thee. But I did not apprehend this; nor was it of so much value to me to conquer. We two have proved the destruction of wretched thee. The wound was given by the serpent; by me was the occasion given. I should be more guilty than he, did I not give the consolation for thy fate by my own death.” Thus he said; and from a rock which the hoarse waves had undermined, he hurled himself into the sea. Tethys, pitying him as he fell, received him softly, and covered him with feathers as he swam through the sea; and the power of obtaining . the death he sought was not granted to him. The lover is vexed that, against his will, he is obliged to live on, and that opposition is made to his spirit, desirous to depart from its wretched abode. And, as he has assumed newformed wings on his shoulders, he flies aloft, and again he throws his body in the waves: his feathers break the fall. Æsacus is enraged; and headlong he plunges into the deep, and incessantly tries the way of destruction. Love caused his leanness; the spaces between the joints of his legs are long; his neck remains long, and his head is far away from his body. He loves the sea, and has his name because he plunges in it.

EXPLANATION.

Ovid and Apollodorus agree that Æsacus was the son of Priam, and that he was changed into a didapper, or diver, but they differ in the other circumstances of his life. Instead of being the son of Alexirhoë, Apollodorus says that he was the son of Priam and Arisbe the daughter of Merope, his first wife; that his father made him marry Sterope, who dying very young, he was so afflicted at her death, that he threw himself into the sea. He also says that Priam having repudiated Arisbe to marry Hecuba, the daughter of Cisseus, Æsacus seeing his mother-in-law pregnant of her second son, foretold his father that her progeny would be the cause of a bloody war, which would end in the destruction of the kingdom of Troy; and that upon this prediction, the infant, when born, was exposed on Mount Ida.

Tzetzes adds, that Æsacus told his father that it was absolutely necessary to put to death both the mother and the infant which was born on that same day; on which Priam being informed that Cilla, the wife of Thymætes, being delivered on that day of a son, he ordered them both to be killed; thinking thereby to escape the realization of the prediction. Servius, on the authority of Euphorion, relates the story in much the same manner; but a poet quoted by Cicero in his first book on Divination, says that it was the oracle of Zelia, a little town at the foot of Mount Ida, which gave that answer as an interpretation of the dream of Hecuba. Pausanias says it was the sibyl Herophila who interpreted the dream, while other ancient writers state that it was Cassandra. Apollodorus says that Æsacus learned from his grandfather Merops the art of foretelling things to come.

BOOK THE TWELFTH.

FABLES I. AND II.

The Greeks assemble their troops at Aulis, to proceed against the city of Troy, and revenge the rape of Helen; but the fleet is detained in port by contrary winds. Calchas, the priest, after a prediction concerning the success of the expedition, declares that the weather will never be favourable till Agamemnon shall have sacrificed his daughter Iphigenia. She is immediately led to the altar for that purpose; but Diana, appeased by this act of obedience, carries away the maiden, and substitutes a hind in her place, on which a fair wind arises. Upon the Greeks landing at Troy, a battle is fought, in which Protesilaüs is killed by Hector, and Achilles kills Cygnus, a Trojan, on which his father Neptune transforms him into a swan.

His father Priam mourned him, not knowing that Æsacus, having assumed wings, was still living; Hector, too, with his brothers, made unavailing offerings at a tomb, that bore his name on it. The presence of Paris was wanting, at this mournful office: who, soon after, brought into his country a lengthened war, together with a ravished wife; and a thousand ships uniting together, followed him, and, together with them, the whole body of the Pelasgian nation. Nor would vengeance have been delayed, had not the raging winds made the seas impassable, and the Bœotian land detained in fishy Aulis the ships ready to depart. Here, when they had prepared a 415 xii. 11-44. sacrifice to Jupiter, after the manner of their country, as the ancient altar was heated with kindled fires, the Greeks beheld an azure-coloured serpent creep into a plane tree, which was standing near the sacrifice they had begun. There was on the top of the tree a nest of twice four birds, which the serpent seized together, and the dam as she fluttered around the scene of her loss, and he buried them in his greedy maw. All stood amazed. But Calchas, the son of Thestor, a soothsayer, foreseeing the truth, says, "Rejoice, Pelasgians, we shall conquer. Troy will fall, but the continuance of our toil will be long;" and he allots the nine birds to the years of the war. The serpent, just as he is, coiling around the green branches in the tree, becomes a stone, and, under the form of a serpent, retains that stone form.

Nereus continued boisterous in the Ionian waves, and did not impel the sails onwards; and there are some who think that Neptune favoured Troy, because he made the walls of the city. But not so the son of Thestor. For neither was he ignorant, nor did he conceal, that the wrath of the virgin Goddess must be appeased by the blood of a virgin. After the public good had prevailed over affection, and the king over the father, and Iphigenia, ready to offer her chaste blood, stood before the altar, while the priests were weeping; the Goddess was appeased, and cast a mist before their eyes, and, amid the service and the hurry of the rites, and the voices of the suppliants, is said to have changed Iphigenia, the Mycenian maiden, for a substituted hind. Wherefore, when the Goddess was appeased by a death which was more fitting, and at the same moment the wrath of Phœbe, and of the sea was past, the thousand ships received the winds astern, and having suffered much, they gained the Phrygian shore.

There is a spot in the middle of the world, between the land and the sea, and the regions of heaven, the confines of the threefold universe, whence is beheld whatever anywhere exists, although it may be in far distant regions, and every sound pierces the hollow ears. Of this place Fame is possessed, and chooses for herself a habitation on the top of a tower, and 416 xii. 45-78. has added innumerable avenues, and a thousand openings to her house, and has closed the entrances with no gates. Night and day are they open. It is all of sounding brass; it is all resounding, and it reechoes the voice, and repeats what it hears. Within there is no rest, and silence in no part. Nor yet is there a clamour, but the murmur of a low voice, such as is wont to arise from the waves of the sea, if one listens at a distance, or like the sound which the end of the thundering makes when Jupiter has clashed the black clouds together. A crowd occupies the hall; the fickle vulgar come and go; and a thousand rumours, false mixed with true, wander up and down, and circulate confused words. Of these, some fill the empty ears with conversation; some are carrying elsewhere what is told them; the measure of the fiction is ever on the increase, and each fresh narrator adds something to what he has heard. There, is Credulity, there, rash Mistake, and empty Joy, and alarmed Fears, and sudden Sedition, and Whispers of doubtful origin. She sees what things are done in heaven and on the sea, and on the earth; and she pries into the whole universe.

She has made it known that Grecian ships are on their way, with valiant troops: nor does the enemy appear in arms unlooked for. The Trojans oppose their landing, and defend the shore, and thou, Protesilaüs, art, by the decrees of fate, the first to fall by the spear of Hector; and the battles now commenced, and the courageous spirits of the Trojans, and Hector, till then unknown, cost the Greeks dear. Nor do the Phrygians experience at small expense of blood what the Grecian right hand can do. And now the Sigæan shores are red with blood: now Cygnus, the son of Neptune, has slain a thousand men. Now is Achilles pressing on in his chariot, and levelling the Trojan ranks, with the blow of his Peleian spear; and seeking through the lines either Cygnus or Hector, he engages with Cygnus: Hector is reserved for the tenth year. Then animating the horses, having their 417 xii. 78-105. white necks pressed with the yoke, he directed his chariot against the enemy, and brandishing his quivering

Thus far the grandson of Æacus. His heavy lance followed his words. But, although there was no missing in the unerring lance, yet it availed nothing, by the sharpness of its point, thus discharged; and as it only bruised his breast with a blunt stroke, the other said, "Thou son of a Goddess, (for by report have we known of thee beforehand) why art thou surprised that wounds are warded off from me? (for Achilles was surprised); not this helmet that thou seest tawny with the horse's mane, nor the hollowed shield, the burden of my left arm, are assistant to me; from them ornament alone is sought; for this cause, too, Mars is wont to take up arms. All the assistance of defensive armour shall be removed, and yet I shall come off unhurt. It is something to be born, not of a Nereid, but of one who rules both Nereus and his daughter, and the whole ocean."

Thus he spoke; and he hurled against the descendant of Æacus his dart, destined to stick in the rim of his shield; it broke through both the brass and the next nine folds of bull's hide; but stopping in the tenth circle of the hide, the hero wrenched it out, and again hurled the quivering weapon with a strong hand; again his body was without a wound, and unharmed, nor was a third spear able even to graze Cygnus, unprotected, and exposing himself. Achilles raged no otherwise than as a bull, in the open Circus, when with his dreadful horns he butts against the purple-coloured garments, used as the means of provoking him, and perceives that his wounds are evaded. Still, he examines whether the point has chanced to fall 418 xii. 105-132. from off the spear. It is still adhering to the shaft. "My hand then is weak," says he, "and it has spent all the strength it had before, upon one man. For decidedly it was strong enough, both when at first I overthrew the walls of Lyrnessus, or when I filled both Tenedos and Eëtionian Thebes with their own blood. Or when Caÿcus flowed empurpled with the slaughter of its people: and Telephus was twice sensible of the virtue of my spear. Here, too, where so many have been slain, heaps of whom I both have made along this shore, and I now behold, my right hand has proved mighty, and is mighty.”

Thus he spoke; and as if he distrusted what he had done before, he hurled his spear against Menœtes, one of the Lycian multitude, who was standing opposite, and he tore asunder both his coat of mail, and his breast beneath it. He beating the solid earth with his dying head, he drew the same weapon from out of the reeking wound, and said, “This is the hand, this the lance, with which I conquered but now. The same will I use against him; in his case, I pray that the event may prove the same.” Thus he said, and he hurled it at Cygnus, nor did the ashen lance miss him; and, not escaped by him, it resounded on his left shoulder: thence it was repelled, as though by a wall, or a solid rock. Yet Achilles saw Cygnus marked with blood, where he had been struck, and he rejoiced, but in vain. There was no wound; that was the blood of Menœtes.

Then indeed, raging, he leaps headlong from his lofty chariot, and hand to hand, with his gleaming sword striking at his fearless foe, he perceives that the shield and the helmet are pierced with his sword, and that his weapon, too, is blunted upon his hard body. He endures it no longer; and drawing back his shield, he three or four times strikes the face of the hero, and his hollow temples, with the hilt of the sword; and following, he presses onward as the other gives ground, and confounds him, and drives him on, and gives him no respite in his confusion. Horror seizes on him, and darkness swims before his eyes; and as he moves backwards his retreating steps, a stone in the middle of the field stands in his way. Impelled over this, with his breast upwards, Achilles throws Cygnus with great violence, and dashes him to the earth. Then, pressing down his breast with his shield and his hard knees, he draws tight the straps of his helmet; which, fastened beneath his pressed chin, squeeze close his throat, and take away his respiration and the passage of his breath.

He is preparing to strip his vanquished foe; he sees nothing but his armour, left behind. The God of the Ocean changed his body into a white bird, of which he so lately bore the name.

EXPLANATION.

It is not improbable that the prediction of Calchas, at Aulis, that the war against Troy would endure nine years, had no other foundation than his desire to check an enterprise which must be attended with much bloodshed, and difficulties of the most formidable nature. It is not unlikely, too, that this interpretation of the story of the serpent devouring the birds may have been planned by some of the Grecian generals, who did not dare openly to refuse their assistance to Agamemnon. The story of Iphigenia was, perhaps, founded on a similar policy. The ancient poets and historians are by no means agreed as to the fate of Iphigenia, as some say that she really was sacrificed, while others state that she was transformed into a she-bear, others into an old woman, and Nicander affirms that she was changed into a heifer.

There is no story more celebrated among the ancients than that of the intended immolation of Iphigenia. Euripides wrote two tragedies on the subject. Homer, however, makes no allusion to the story of Iphigenia; but he mentions Iphianassa, the daughter of Agamemnon, who was sent for, to be a hostage on his reconciliation with Achilles; she is probably the same person that is meant by the later poets, under the name of Iphigenia.

It has been suggested by some modern commentators, that the story of Iphigenia was founded on the sacrifice of his own daughter, by Jephtha, the judge of Israel, which circumstance happened much about the same time. The story of the substitution of the hind for the damsel, when about to be slain, was possibly founded on the substituted offering for Isaac when about to be offered by his father; for it is not probable that the people 420 xii. 146. of Greece were entirely ignorant of the existence of the books of Moses, and that wonderful narrative would be not unlikely to make an impression on minds ever ready to be attracted by the marvellous. Some writers have taken pains to show that Agamemnon did not sacrifice, or contemplate sacrificing, his own daughter, by asserting that the Iphigenia here mentioned was the daughter of Helen, who was educated by Clytemnestra, the wife of Agamemnon, and the sister of Helen. Pausanias also adopts this view, and gives for his authorities Euphorion of Chalcis, Alexander, Stesichorus, and the people of Argos, who preserved a tradition to the same effect.

Lucretius, Virgil, and Diodorus Siculus are in the number of those who assert that Iphigenia actually was immolated. According to Dictys the Cretan, and several of the ancient scholiasts, Ulysses having left the Grecian camp without the knowledge of Agamemnon, went to Argos, and returned with Iphigenia, under the pretext that her father intended to marry her to Achilles. Some writers state that Achilles was in love with Iphigenia; and that he was greatly enraged at Ulysses for bringing her to the camp, and opposed her sacrifice to the utmost of his power.

Ovid then proceeds to recount the adventures of the Greeks, after their arrival at Troy. An oracle had warned the Greeks, that he who should be the first to land on the Trojan shores, would inevitably be slain. Protesilaüs seeing that this prediction damped the courage of his companions, led the way, and sacrificed his life for the safety of his friends, being slain by Hector immediately on his landing. Cygnus, signaling himself by his bravery, attracted the attention of Achilles, who singled him out as a worthy antagonist. It was said that this hero was the son of Neptune; perhaps because he was powerful by sea, and the prince of some island in the Archipelago. He was said to be invulnerable, most probably because his shield was arrow-proof. The story of his transformation into a swan, has evidently no other foundation than the resemblance between his name and that of that bird.

FABLES III. AND IV.

A truce ensuing, the Grecian chiefs having assembled at a feast, express their surprise at the fact of Cygnus being invulnerable. Nestor, by way of showing a still more surprising instance, relates how the Nymph Cænis, the daughter of Elatus, having yielded to the caresses of Neptune, was transformed by him into a man, and made invulnerable. Cæneus being present at the wedding feast of Pirithoüs, the son of Ixion, where Eurytus was a guest, the latter, being elevated with wine, made an attempt upon Hippodamia, the bride; on which a quarrel arose between the Centaurs and the Lapithæ. After many on both sides had been slain, Cæneus still remained unhurt; on which, the Centaurs having heaped up trunks of trees upon him, he was pressed to death; Neptune then changed his body into a bird.

This toil and this combat brought on a cessation for many 421 xii. 146-174. days; and both sides rested, laying aside their arms. And while a watchful guard was keeping the Phrygian walls, and a watchful guard was keeping the Argive trenches, a festive day had arrived, on which Achilles, the conqueror of Cygnus, appeased Pallas with the blood of a heifer, adorned with fillets. As soon as he had placed its entrails upon the glowing altars, and the smell, acceptable to the Deities, mounted up to the skies, the sacred rites had their share, the other part was served up at the table. The chiefs reclined on couches, and sated their bodies with roasted flesh, and banished both their cares and their thirst with wine. No harps, no melody of voices, no long pipe of boxwood pierced with many a hole, delights them; but in discourse they pass the night, and valour is the subject-matter of their conversation. They relate the combats of the enemy and their own; and often do they delight to recount, in turn, both the dangers that they have encountered and that they have surmounted. For of what else should Achilles speak? or of what, in preference, should they speak before the great Achilles? But especially the recent victory over the conquered Cygnus was the subject of discourse. It seemed wonderful to them all, that the body of the youth was penetrable by no weapon, and was susceptible of no wounds, and that it blunted the steel itself. This same thing, the grandson of Æacus, this, the Greeks wondered at.

When thus Nestor says to them: “Cygnus has been the only despiser of weapons in your time, and penetrable by no blows. But I myself formerly saw the Perrhæbean Cæneus bear a thousand blows with his body unhurt; Cæneus the Perrhæbean, I say, who, famous for his achievements, inhabited Othrys. And that this, too, might be the more wondrous in 422 xii. 174-205. him, he was born a woman.” They are surprised, whoever are present, at the singular nature of this prodigy, and they beg him to tell the story. Among them, Achilles says, “Pray tell us, (for we all have the same desire to hear it,) O eloquent old man, the wisdom of our age; who was this Cæneus, and why changed to the opposite sex? in what war, and in the engagements of what contest was he known to thee? by whom was he conquered, if he was conquered by any one?”

Then the aged man replied: “Although tardy old age is a disadvantage to me, and many things which I saw in my early years escape me now, yet I remember most of them; and there is nothing, amid so many transactions of war and peace, that is more firmly fixed in my mind than that circumstance. And if extended age could make any one a witness of many deeds, I have lived two hundred years, and now my third century is being passed by me. Cænis, the daughter of Elatus, was remarkable for her charms; the most beauteous virgin among the Thessalian maids, and one sighed for in vain by the wishes of many wooers through the neighbouring cities, and through thy cities, Achilles, for she was thy countrywoman. Perhaps, too, Peleus would have attempted that alliance; but at that time the marriage of thy mother had either befallen him, or had been promised him. Cænis did not enter into any nuptial ties; and as she was walking along the lonely shore, she suffered violence from the God of the ocean. 'Twas thus that report stated; and when Neptune had experienced the pleasures of this new amour, he said, 'Be thy wishes secure from all repulse; choose whatever thou mayst desire.' The same report has related this too; Cænis replied, 'This mishap makes my desire extreme, that I may not be in a condition to suffer any such thing in future. Grant that I be no longer a woman, and thou wilt have granted me all.' She spoke these last words with a hoarser tone, and the voice might seem to be that of a man, as indeed it was.

"For now the God of the deep ocean had consented to her 423 xii. 206-238. wish; and had granted moreover that he should not be able to be pierced by any wounds, or to fall by any steel. Exulting in his privilege, the Atracian departed; and now spent his time in manly exercises, and roamed over the Peneïan plains. Pirithoüs, the son of the bold Ixion, had married Hippodame, and had bidden the cloud-born monsters to sit down at the tables ranged in order, in a cave shaded with trees. The Hæmonian nobles were there; I, too, was there, and the festive palace resounded with the confused rout. Lo! they sing the marriage song, and the halls smoke with the fires; the maiden, too, is there, remarkable for her beauty, surrounded by a crowd of matrons and newly married women. We all pronounce Pirithoüs fortunate in her for a wife; an omen which we had well nigh falsified. For thy breast, Eurytus, most savage of the savage Centaurs, is inflamed as much with wine as with seeing the maiden; and drunkenness, redoubled by lust, holds sway over thee. On the sudden the tables being upset, disturb the feast, and the bride is violently dragged away by her seized hair. Eurytus snatches up Hippodame, and the others such as each one fancies, or is able to seize; and there is all the appearance of a captured city. The house rings with the cries of women. Quickly we all rise; and first, Theseus says, 'What madness, Eurytus, is impelling thee, who, while I still live, dost provoke Pirithoüs, and, in thy ignorance, in one dost injure two?' And that the valiant hero may not say these things in vain, he pushes them off as they are pressing on, and takes her whom they have seized away from them as they grow furious.

"He says nothing in answer, nor, indeed, can he defend such actions by words; but he attacks the face of her protector with insolent hands, and strikes his generous breast. By chance, there is near at hand an ancient bowl, rough with projecting figures, which, huge as it is, the son of Ægeus, himself huger still, takes up and hurls full in his face. He, vomiting 424 xii. 239-266. both from his wounds and his mouth clots of blood, and brains and wine together, lying on his back, kicks on the soaking sand. The double-limbed Centaurs are inflamed at the death of their brother; and all vying, with one voice exclaim, 'To arms! to arms!' Wine gives them courage, and, in the first onset, cups hurled are flying about, and shattered casks and hollow cauldrons; things before adapted for a banquet, now for war and slaughter. First, the son of Ophion, Amycus, did not hesitate to spoil the interior of the house of its ornaments; and first, from the shrine he tore up a chandelier, thick set with blazing lamps; and lifting it on high, like him who attempts to break the white neck of the bull with sacrificial axe, he dashed it against the forehead of Celadon the Lapithean, and left his skull mashed into his face, no longer to be recognized. His eyes started out, and the bones of his face being dashed to pieces, his nose was driven back, and was fixed in the middle of his palate. Him, Belates the Pellæan, having torn away the foot of a maple table, laid flat on the ground, with his chin sunk upon his breast, and vomiting forth his teeth mixed with blood; and sent him, by a twofold wound, to the shades of Tartarus.

“As Gryneus stood next, looking at the smoking altar with a grim look, he said, ‘And why do we not make use of this?’ and then he raised an immense altar, together with its fire; and hurled it into the midst of the throng of the Lapithæ, and struck down two of them, Broteus and Orius. The mother of Orius was Mycale, who was known by her incantations to have often drawn down the horns of the struggling moon. On this Exadius says, ‘Thou shalt not go unpunished, if only the opportunity of getting a weapon is given me;’ and, as his weapon, 425 xii. 266-299. he wields the antlers of a votive stag, which were upon a lofty pine-tree. With the double branches of these, Gryneus is pierced through the eyes, and has those eyes scooped out. A part of them adheres to the antlers, a part runs down his beard, and hangs down clotted with gore. Lo! Rhœtus snatches up an immense flaming brand, from the middle of the altar, and on the right side breaks through the temples of Charaxus, covered with yellow hair. His locks, seized by the violent flames, burn like dry corn, and the blood seared in the wound emits a terrific noise in its hissing, such as the iron glowing in the flames is often wont to emit, which, when the smith has drawn it out with the crooked pincers, he plunges into the trough; whereon it whizzes, and, sinking in the bubbling water, hisses. Wounded, he shakes the devouring fire from his locks, and takes upon his shoulders the threshold, torn up out of the ground, a whole waggon-load, which its very weight hinders him from throwing full against the foe. The stony mass, too, bears down Cometes, a friend, who is standing at a short distance; nor does Rhœtus then restrain his joy, and he says, 'In such manner do I pray that the rest of the throng of thy party may be brave;' and then he increases the wound, redoubled with the half-burnt stake, and three or four times he breaks the sutures of his head with heavy blows, and its bones sink within the oozing brains.

"Victorious, he passes on to Evagrus, and Corythus, and Dryas; of which number, when Corythus, having his cheeks covered with their first down, has fallen, Evagrus says, 'What glory has been acquired by thee, in killing a boy?' Rhœtus permits him to say no more, and fiercely thrusts the glowing flames into the open mouth of the hero, as he is speaking, and through the mouth into the breast. Thee, too, cruel Dryas, he pursues, whirling the fire around his head, but the same issue does not await thee as well. Thou piercest him with a stake burnt at the end, while triumphing in the success of an uninterrupted slaughter, in the spot where the neck is united to the shoulder. Rhœtus groans aloud, and with difficulty wrenches the stake out of the hard bone, and, drenched in his own blood, he flies. Orneus flies, too, and Lycabas, and Medon, wounded in his right shoulder-blade, and Thaumias with Pisenor; Mermerus, too, who lately excelled all in speed of foot, but now goes more slowly from the wound he has received; Pholus, too, and Melaneus, and Abas a hunter of boars, and Astylos the augur, who has in vain dissuaded his own party from this warfare. He also says to Nessus, as he dreads the wounds, 'Fly not! for thou shalt be reserved for the bow of Hercules.' But Eurynomus and Lycidas, and Areos, and Imbreus did not escape death, all of whom the right hand of Dryas pierced right through. Thou, too, Crenæus, didst receive a wound in front, although thou didst turn thy back in flight; for looking back, thou didst receive the fatal steel between thy two eyes, where the nose is joined to the lower part of the forehead. In the midst of so much noise, Aphidas was lying fast asleep from the wine which he had drunk incessantly, and was not aroused, and in his languid hand was grasping the mixed bowl, stretched at full length upon the shaggy skin of a bear of Ossa. Soon as Phorbas beheld him from afar, wielding no arms, he inserted his fingers in the strap of his lance, and said, 'Drink thy wine mingled with the water of Styx;' and, delaying no longer, he hurled his javelin against the youth, and the ash pointed with steel was driven into his neck, as, by chance, he lay there on his back. His death happened without his being sensible of it; and the blood flowed from his full throat, both upon the couch and into the bowl itself.

"I saw Petræus endeavouring to tear up an acorn-bearing oak from the earth; and, as he was grasping it in his embrace, 427 xii. 328-364. and was shaking it on this side and that, and was moving about the loosened tree, the lance of Pirithoüs hurled at the ribs of Petræus, transfixed his struggling breast together with the tough oak. They said, too, that Lycus fell by the valour of Pirithoüs, and that Chromis fell by the hand of Pirithoüs. But each of them gave less glory to the conqueror, than Dictys and Helops gave. Helops was transfixed by the javelin, which passed right through his temples, and, hurled from the right side, penetrated to his left ear. Dictys, slipping from the steep point of a rock, while, in his fear, he is flying from the pursuing son of Ixion, falls down headlong, and, by the weight of his body, breaks a huge ash tree, and spits his own entrails upon it, thus broken. Aphareus advances as his avenger, and endeavours to hurl a stone torn away from the mountain. As he is endeavouring to do so, the son of Ægeus attacks him with an oaken club, and breaks the huge bones of his arm, and has neither leisure, nor, indeed, does he care to put his useless body to death; and he leaps upon the back of the tall Bianor, not used to bear any other than himself; and he fixes his knees in his ribs, and holding his long hair, seized with his left hand, shatters his face, and his threatening features, and his very hard temples, with the knotty oak. With his oak, too, he levels Nedymnus, and Lycotas the darter, and Hippasus having his breast covered with his flowing beard, and Ripheus, who towered above the topmost woods, and Tereus, who used to carry home the bears, caught in the Hæmonian mountains, alive and raging.

“Demoleon could not any longer endure Theseus enjoying this success in the combat, and he tried with vast efforts to tear up from the thick-set wood an aged pine; because he could not effect this, he hurled it, broken short, against his foe. But Theseus withdrew afar from the approaching missile, through the warning of Pallas; so at least he himself wished it to be thought. Yet the tree did not fall without effect: for it struck off from the throat of the tall Crantor, both his breast and his left shoulder. He, Achilles, had been the armour-bearer of thy father: him Amyntor, king of the Dolopians, 428 xii. 364-397. when conquered in war, had given to the son of Æacus, as a pledge and confirmation of peace. When Peleus saw him at a distance, mangled with a foul wound, he said, ‘Accept however, Crantor, most beloved of youths, this sacrifice;’ and, with a strong arm, and energy of intention, he hurled his ashen lance against Demoleon, which broke through the enclosures of his ribs, and quivered, sticking amid the bones. He draws out with his hand the shaft without the point; even that follows, with much difficulty; the point is retained within his lungs. The very pain gives vigour to his resolution; though wounded, he rears against the enemy, and tramples upon the hero with his horse’s feet. The other receives the re-echoing strokes upon his helmet and his shield, and defends his shoulders, and holds his arms extended before him, and through the shoulder-blades he pierces two breasts at one stroke. But first, from afar, he had consigned to death Phlegræus, and Hyles; in closer combat, Hiphinoüs and Clanis. To these is added Dorylas, who had his temples covered with a wolf’s skin, and the real horns of oxen reddened with much blood, that performed the duty of a cruel weapon.

“To him I said, for courage gave me strength, ‘Behold, how much thy horns are inferior to my steel;’ and then I threw my javelin. When he could not avoid this, he held up his right hand before his forehead, about to receive the blow; and to his forehead his hand was pinned. A shout arose; but Peleus struck him delaying, and overpowered by the painful wound, (for he was standing next to him) with his sword beneath the middle of his belly. He leaped forth, and fiercely dragged his own bowels on the ground, and trod on them thus dragged, and burst them thus trodden; and he entangled his legs, as well in them, and fell down, with his belly emptied of its inner parts. Nor did thy beauty, Cyllarus, save thee while fighting, if only we allow beauty to that monstrous nature of thine. His beard was beginning to grow; the colour of his beard was that of gold; and golden-coloured hair was hanging from his shoulders to the middle of his shoulder-blades. In his face there was a pleasing briskness; his neck, and his 429 xii. 397-435. shoulders, and his hands, and his breast were resembling the applauded statues of the artists, and so in those parts in which he was a man; nor was the shape of the horse beneath that shape, faulty and inferior to that of the man. Give him but the neck and the head of a horse, and he would be worthy of Castor. So fit is his back to be sat upon, so stands his breast erect with muscle; he is all over blacker than black pitch; yet his tail is white; the colour, too, of his legs is white. Many a female of his own kind longed for him; but Hylonome alone gained him, than whom no female more handsome lived in the lofty woods, among the half beasts. She alone attaches Cyllarus, both by her blandishments, and by loving, and by confessing that she loves him. Her care, too, of her person is as great as can be in those limbs: so that her hair is smoothed with a comb; so that she now decks herself with rosemary, now with violets or roses, and sometimes she wears white lilies; and twice a day she washes her face with streams that fall from the height of the Pagasæan wood; and twice she dips her body in the stream: and she throws over her shoulder or her left side no skins but what are becoming, and are those of choice beasts.

“Their love was equal: together they wandered upon the mountains; together they entered the caves; and then, too, together had they entered the Lapithæan house; together were they waging the fierce warfare. The author of the deed is unknown: but a javelin came from the left side, and pierced thee, Cyllarus, below the spot where the breast is joined to the neck. The heart, being pierced with a small wound, grew cold, together with the whole body, after the weapon was drawn out. Immediately, Hylonome receives his dying limbs, and cherishes the wound, by laying her hand on it, and places her mouth on his, and strives to stop the fleeting life. When she sees him dead, having uttered what the clamour hinders from reaching my ears, she falls upon the weapon that has pierced him, and as she dies, embraces her husband. He, too, now stands before my eyes, Phæocomes, namely, who had bound six lions’ skins together with connecting knots; covered all over, both horse and man. He, having discharged the trunk of a tree, which two yokes of oxen joined together could hardly have moved, battered the son of Phonolenus on the top of his head. The very broad round form of his skull was broken; and through his mouth, and 430 xii. 435-464. through his hollow nostrils, and his eyes, and his ears, his softened brains poured down; just as curdled milk is wont through the oaken twigs, or as any liquor flows under the weight of a well-pierced sieve, and is squeezed out thick through the numerous holes. But I, while he was preparing to strip him of his arms as he lay, (this thy sire knows,) plunged my sword into the lower part of his belly, as he was spoiling him. Chthonius, too, and Teleboas, lay pierced by my sword. The former was bearing a two-forked bough as his weapon, the latter a javelin; with his javelin he gave me a wound. You see the marks; look! the old scar is still visible.

“Then ought I to have been sent to the taking of Troy; then I might, if not have overcome, still have stayed the arms of the mighty Hector. But at that time Hector was not existing, or but a boy; and now my age is failing. Why tell thee of Periphas, the conqueror of the two-formed Pyretus? Why of Ampyx, who fixed his cornel-wood spear, without a point, full in the face of the four-footed Oëclus? Macareus, struck down the Pelethronian Erigdupus, by driving a crowbar into his breast. I remember, too, that a hunting spear, hurled by the hand of Nessus, was buried in the groin of Cymelus. And do not believe that Mopsus, the son of Ampycus, only foretold things to come; a two-formed monster was slain by Mopsus, darting at him, and Odites in vain attempted to speak, his tongue being nailed to his chin, and his chin to his throat. Cæneus had put five to death, Stiphelus, and Bromus, and Antimachus, and Helimus, and Pyracmos, wielding the axe. I do not remember their respective wounds, but I marked their numbers, and their names. Latreus, most huge both in his limbs and his body, sallied forth, armed with the spoils of Emathian Halesus, whom he had consigned to death. His age was between that of a youth, and an old man; 431 xii. 465-494. his vigour that of a youth; grey hairs variegated his temples. Conspicuous by his buckler, and his helmet, and his Macedonian pike; and turning his face towards both sides, he brandished his arms, and rode in one same round, and vaunting, poured forth thus many words into the yielding air: —

““And shall I put up with thee, too, Cænis? for to me thou shalt ever be a woman, to me always Cænis. Does not thy natal origin lower thy spirit? And does it not occur to thy mind for what foul deed thou didst get thy reward, and at what price the false resemblance to a man? Consider both what thou wast born, as well as what thou hast submitted to: go, and take up a distaff together with thy baskets, and twist the threads with thy thumb; leave warfare to men.’ As he is vaunting in such terms, Cæneus pierces his side, stretched in running, with a lance hurled at him, just where the man is joined to the horse. He raves with pain, and strikes at the exposed face of the Phylleian youth with his pike. It bounds back no otherwise than hail from the roof of a house; or than if any one were to beat a hollow drum with a little pebble. Hand to hand he encounters him, and strives to plunge his sword into his tough side; but the parts are impervious to his sword. 'Yet,' says he, 'thou shalt not escape me; with the middle of the sword shalt thou be slain, since the point is blunt;' and then he slants the sword against his side, and grasps his stomach with his long right arm. The blow produces an echo, as on a body of marble when struck; and the shivered blade flies different ways, upon striking his neck.

"After Cæneus had enough exposed his unhurt limbs to him in his amazement, 'Come now,' said he, 'let us try thy body with my steel;' and up to the hilt he plunged his fatal sword into his shoulder-blade, and extended his hand unseen into his entrails, and worked it about, and in the wound made a fresh wound. Lo! the double-limbed monsters, enraged, rush on 432 xii. 494-533. in an impetuous manner, and all of them hurl and thrust their weapons at him alone. Their weapons fall blunted. Unstabbed and bloodless the Elateian Cæneus remains from each blow. This strange thing makes them astonished. 'Oh great disgrace!' cries Monychus; 'a whole people, we are overcome by one, and that hardly a man; although, indeed, he is a man; and we by our dastardly actions, are what he once was. What signify our huge limbs? What our twofold strength? What that our twofold nature has united in us the stoutest animals in existence? I neither believe that we are born of a Goddess for our mother, nor of Ixion, who was so great a person, that he conceived hopes of even the supreme Juno. By a half male foe are we baffled. Heap upon him stones and beams, and entire mountains, and dash out his long-lived breath, by throwing whole woods upon him.

"Thus he said; and by chance having got a tree, thrown down by the power of the boisterous South wind, he threw it against the powerful foe: and he was an example to the rest; and in a short time, Othrys, thou wast bare of trees, and Pelion had no shades. Overwhelmed by this huge heap, Cæneus swelters beneath the weight of the trees, and bears on his brawny shoulders the piled-up oaks. But after the load has increased upon his face and his head, and his breath has no air to draw; at one moment he faints, at another he endeavours, in vain, to raise himself into the open air, and to throw off the wood cast upon him: and sometimes he moves it. Just as lo! we see, if lofty Ida is convulsed with earthquakes. The event is doubtful. Some gave out that his body was hurled to roomy Tartarus by the weight of the wood. The son of Ampycus denied this, and saw go forth into the liquid air, from amid the pile, a bird with tawny wings; which then was beheld by me for the first time, then, too, for the last. When Mopsus saw it with gentle flight surveying his camp, and making a noise around it with a vast clamour, following him both with his eyes and his feelings, he said, 'Hail! thou glory of the Lapithæan race, once the greatest of men, but now the only bird of thy kind, Cæneus.' This thing was credited from its assertor. Grief added resentment, and we bore it with disgust, that one was overpowered by foes so many. Nor did we cease to exercise our weapons, in shedding their blood, before a part of them was put to death, and flight and the night dispersed the rest."

EXPLANATION.

We learn from Diodorus Siculus, and other ancient authors, that the people of Thessaly, and those especially who lived near Mount Pelion, were the first who trained horses for riding, and used them as a substitute for chariots. Pliny the Elder says that they excelled all the other people of Greece in horsemanship, and that they carried it to such perfection, that the name of ἵππεύς, 'a horseman,' and that of 'Thessalian,' became synonymous. Again, the Thessalians, from their dexterity in killing the wild bulls that infested the neighbouring mountains, sometimes with darts or spears, and at other times in close engagement, acquired the name of Hippocentaurs, that is, 'horsemen that hunted bulls,' or simply κένταυροι, 'Centaur.'

It is not improbable that, because the Thessalians began to practise riding in the reign of Ixion, the poets made the Centaurs his sons; and they were said to have a cloud for their mother, which Jupiter put in the place of Juno, to baulk the attempt of Ixion on her virtue, because, according to Palæphatus, many of them lived in a city called Nephele, which, in Greek, signifies a cloud. As another method of accounting for their alleged descent from a cloud, it has been suggested that the Centaurs were a rapacious race of men, who ravaged the neighbouring country: that those who wrote the first accounts of them, in the ancient dialect of Greece, gave them the name of Nephelim, (the epithet of the giants of Scripture,) many Phœnician words having been imported in the early language of that country; and that in later times, finding them called by this name, the Greek word Nephelè, signifying 'a cloud,' persons readily adopted the fable that they were born of one.

The Centaurs being the descendants of Centaurus, the son of Ixion, and Pirithoüs being also the son of Ixion, by Dia, the former, declared war against Pirithoüs, asserting, that, as the descendants of Ixion, they had a right to share in the succession to his dominions. This quarrel, however, was made up, and they continued on friendly terms, until the attempt of Eurytus, or Eurytion, on Hippodamia, the bride of Pirithoüs, which was followed by the consequences here described by Ovid. The Centaurs are twice mentioned in the Iliad as φῆρες, or 'wild beasts,' and once under the name of

'Centaur.' Pindar is the first writer that mentions them as being of a twofold form, partly man, and partly horse. In the twenty-first Book of the Odyssey, line 295, Eurytion is said to have had his ears and nose cut off by way of punishment, and that, from that period, 'discord arose between the Centaurs and men.'

Buttman, (Mythologus, ii. p. 22, as quoted by Mr. Keightley), says that the names of Centaurs and Lapithæ are two purely poetic names, used to designate two opposite races of men, — the former, the rude horse-riding tribes, which tradition records to have been spread over the north of Greece: the latter, the more civilized race, which founded towns, and gradually drove their wild neighbours back into the mountains. He thinks 434 xii. 536-541. that the explanation of the word 'Centaur,' as 'Air-piercers,' (from κεντεῖν τὴν αὔραν) not an improbable one, for the idea is suggested by the figure of a Cossack leaning forward with his protruded lance as he gallops along. But he regards the idea of κένταυρος, having been in its origin simply κέντωρ, as much more probable, [it meaning simply 'the spurrer-on.'] Lapithæ may, he thinks, have signified 'Stone persuaders,' from λᾶς πείθειν, a poetic appellation for the builders of towns. He supposes Hippodamia to have been a Centauress, married to the prince of the Lapithæ, and thus accounts for the Centaurs having been at the wedding. Mr. Keightley, in his 'Mythology of Ancient Greece and Italy,' remarks that 'it is certainly not a little strange that a rude mountain race like the Centaurs should be viewed as horsemen; and the legend which ascribes the perfecting of the art of horsemanship to the Lapithæ, is unquestionably the more probable one. The name Centaur, which so much resembles the Greek verb κεντέω, 'to spur,' we fancy gave origin to the fiction. This derivation of it is, however, rather dubious.'

After the battle here described, the Centaurs retreated to the mountains of Arcadia. The Lapithæ pursuing them, drove them to the Promontory of Malea in Laconia, where,

according to Apollodorus, Neptune took them into his protection. Servius and Antimachus, as quoted by Comes Natalis, say that some of them fled to the Isle of the Sirens (or rather to that side of Italy which those Nymphs had made their abode); and that there they were destroyed by the voluptuous and debauched lives they led.

The fable of Cæneus, which Ovid has introduced, is perhaps simply founded on the prodigious strength and the goodness of the armour of a person of that name. The story of Halyonome killing herself on the body of Cyllarus, may possibly have been handed down by tradition. It is not unlikely that, if the Centaurs were horsemen, their women were not unacquainted with horsemanship; indeed, representations of female Centaurs are given, on ancient monuments, as drawing the chariot of Bacchus.

FABLES V. AND VI.

Periclymenus, the brother of Nestor, who has received from Neptune the power of transforming himself, is changed into an eagle, in a combat with Hercules; and in his flight is shot by him with an arrow. Neptune prays Apollo to avenge the death of Cygnus: because the Destinies will not permit him to do so himself. Apollo enters the Trojan camp in disguise, and directs the arrow which Paris aims at Achilles; who is mortally wounded in the heel, the only vulnerable part of his body.

As the Pylian related this fight between the Lapithæ and the Centaurs, but half human, Tlepolemus could not endure his sorrow for Alcides being passed by with silent lips, and said, "It is strange, old man, that thou shouldst have a forgetfulness of the exploits of Hercules; at least, my father himself used often to relate to me, that these cloud-begotten monsters were conquered by him." The Pylian, sad at this, said, "Why dost thou force me to call to mind my misfortunes, and to rip up my sorrows, concealed beneath years, and to confess my hatred of, and disgust at, thy father? He, indeed, ye Gods! performed things beyond all belief, and filled the world with his services; which I could rather wish could be denied; but we are in the habit of praising neither Deiphobus nor Polydamas, nor Hector himself: for who would commend an enemy? That father of thine once overthrew the walls of Messene, and demolished guiltless cities, Elis and Pylos, and carried the sword and flames into my abode. And, that I may say nothing of others whom he slew, we were twice six sons of Neleus, goodly youths; the twice six fell by the might of Hercules, myself alone excepted. And that the others were vanquished might have been endured; but the death of Periclymenus is wonderful; to whom Neptune, the founder of the Neleian family, had granted to be able to assume whatever shapes he might choose, and again, when assumed, to lay them aside. He, after he had in vain been turned into all other shapes, was turned into the form of the bird that is wont to carry the lightnings in his crooked talons, the most acceptable to the king of the Gods. Using the strength of that bird, his wings, and his crooked bill, together with his hooked talons, he tore the face of the hero. The Tirynthian hero aims at him his bow, too unerring, and hits him, as he moves his limbs aloft amid the clouds, and hovering in the air, just where the wing is joined to the side.

“Nor is the wound a great one, but his sinews, cut by the wound, fail him, and deny him motion and strength for flying. He fell down to the earth, his weakened pinions not catching the air; and where the smooth arrow had stuck in his wing, it was pressed still further by the weight of his pierced body, and it was driven, through the upper side, into the left part of the neck. Do I seem to be owing encomiums to the exploits of thy father Hercules, most graceful leader of the Rhodian fleet? Yet I will no further avenge my brothers, 436 xii. 576-602. than by being silent on his brave deeds: with thyself I have a firm friendship.” After the son of Neleus had said these things with his honied tongue, the gifts of Bacchus being resumed after the discourse of the aged man, they arose from their couches: the rest of the night was given to sleep.

But the God who commands the waters of the sea with his trident, laments, with the affection of a father, the body of his son, changed into the bird of the son of Sthenelus; and abhorring the ruthless Achilles, pursues his resentful wrath in more than an ordinary manner. And now, the war having been protracted for almost twice five years, with such words as these he addresses the unshorn Smintheus: "O thou, most acceptable to me, by far, of the sons of my brother, who, together with me, didst build the walls of Troy in vain; and dost thou not grieve when thou lookest upon these towers so soon to fall? or dost thou not lament that so many thousands are slain in defending these walls? and (not to recount them all) does not the ghost of Hector, dragged around his Pergamus, recur to thee? Though still the fierce Achilles, more blood-stained than war itself, lives on, the destroyer of our toil, let him but put himself in my power, I will make him feel what I can do with my triple spear. But since it is not allowed us to encounter the enemy in close fight, destroy him, when off his guard, with a secret shaft."

He nodded his assent; and the Delian God, indulging together both his own resentment and that of his uncle, veiled in a cloud, comes to the Trojan army, and in the midst of the slaughter of the men, he sees Paris, at intervals, scattering his darts among the ignoble Greeks; and, discovering himself to be a Divinity, he says, "Why dost thou waste thy arrows upon 437 xii. 602-628. the blood of the vulgar? If thou hast any concern for thy friends, turn upon the grandson of Æacus, and avenge thy slaughtered brothers." Thus he said; and pointing at the son of Peleus, mowing down the bodies of the Trojans with the sword, he turned his bow towards him, and directed his unerring arrow with a fatal right hand. This was the only thing at which,

after the death of Hector, the aged Priam could rejoice. And art thou then, Achilles, the conqueror of men so great, conquered by the cowardly ravisher of a Grecian wife? But if it had been fated for thee to fall by the hand of a woman, thou wouldst rather have fallen by the Thermodontean battle-axe.

Now that dread of the Phrygians, the glory and defence of the Pelasgian name, the grandson of Æacus, a head invincible in war, had been burnt: the same Divinity had armed him, and had burned him. He is now but ashes; and there remains of Achilles, so renowned, I know not what; that which will not well fill a little urn. But his glory lives, which can fill the whole world: this allowance is befitting that hero, and in this the son of Peleus is equal to himself, and knows not the empty Tartarus. Even his very shield gives occasion for war, that you may know to whom it belongs; and arms are wielded for arms. The son of Tydeus does not dare to claim them, nor Ajax, the son of Oïleus, nor the younger son of Atreus, nor he who is his superior both in war and age, nor any others; the hope of so much glory exists only in him begotten by Telamon and the son of Laërtes. The descendant of Tantalus removes from himself the burden and the odium of a decision, and orders the Argive leaders to sit in the midst of the camp, and transfers the judgment of the dispute to them all.

EXPLANATION.

Periclymenus was the son of Neleus and Chloris, as we are told by 438 Homer, Apollodorus, and other authors. According to these authors, Neleus, king of Orchomenus, was the son of Neptune, who assumed the form of the river Enipeus, the more easily to deceive Tyro, the daughter of Salmoneus. Neleus married Chloris, the daughter of Amphion, king of Thebes, who bore him eleven sons and one daughter, of which number, Homer names but three.

Periclymenus, the youngest of the family, was a warlike prince, and, according to Apollodorus, accompanied Jason in the expedition of the Argonauts. Hercules, after having instituted the Olympic games, marched into Messenia, and declared war with Neleus. The ancient writers differ as to the cause of this expedition; but they agree in stating, that Hercules made himself master of Pylos, a town which Neleus had built, as a refuge from the capricious humours of his brother Pelias; and that Neleus and all his children were killed, except Nestor, who had been brought up among the Geranians, and who afterwards reigned in Pylos. The story which here relates how Periclymenus transformed himself into an eagle, and was then killed by Hercules, may possibly mean, that having long resisted the attacks of his formidable enemy, he was at length put to flight, and slain by an arrow. It is said that Neptune had given him the power to metamorphose himself into different figures, very probably because his grandfather, who was a maritime prince, had taught him the art of war and various stratagems, which he industriously made use of, to avert the ruin of his family.

In relation to the story of the death of Achilles, Dictys the Cretan tells us, that Achilles having seen Polyxena, the daughter of Priam, along with Cassandra, as she was sacrificing to Apollo, fell in love with her, and demanded her in marriage and that Hector would not consent to it, except on condition of his betraying the Greeks. This demand, so injurious to his honour, provoked Achilles so much, that he forthwith slew Hector, and dragged his body round the walls of the city. He further says that when Priam went to demand the body of Hector, he took Polyxena with him, in order to soften Achilles. His design succeeded, and Priam then agreed to give her to him in marriage. On the day appointed for the solemnity in the temple of Apollo, Paris, concealing himself behind the altar, while Deiphobus pretended to embrace Achilles, wounded him in the heel, and killed him on the spot, either because the arrow was poisoned, or because he was wounded on the great tendon, which has since been called 'tendon Achillis,' a spot where a wound might very easily be mortal.

This story of the death of Achilles does not seem to have been known to Homer; for he appears, in the twenty-fourth book of the Odyssey, to insinuate that that hero died in battle, fighting for the Grecian cause.

After his death Achilles was honoured as a Demigod, and Strabo says that he had a temple near the promontory of Sigæum. Pausanias and Pliny the Elder make mention of an island in the Euxine Sea, where the memory of Achilles was expressly honoured, from which circumstances it had the name of Achillea.

BOOK THE THIRTEENTH.

FABLE I.

After the death of Achilles, Ajax and Ulysses contend for his armour; the Greek chiefs having adjudged it to the last, Ajax kills himself in despair, and his blood is changed into a flower. When Ulysses has brought Philoctetes, who is possessed of the arrows of Hercules, to the siege, and the destinies of Troy are thereby accomplished, the city is taken and sacked, and Hecuba becomes the slave of Ulysses.

The chiefs were seated; and a ring of the common people standing around, Ajax, the lord of the seven-fold shield, arose before them. And as he was impatient in his wrath, with stern features he looked back upon the Sigæan shores, and the fleet upon the shore, and, stretching out his hands, he said, "We are pleading, O Jupiter, our cause before the ships, and Ulysses vies with me! But he did not hesitate to yield to the flames of Hector, which I withstood, and which I drove from this fleet. It is safer, therefore, for him to contend with artful words than with his right hand. But neither does my talent lie in speaking, nor his in acting; and as great ability as I have in fierce warfare, so much has he in talking. Nor do I think, O Pelasgians, that my deeds need be related to you; for you have been eye-witnesses of them. Let Ulysses recount his, which he has performed without any witness, and of which night alone is conscious. I own that the prize that is sought is great; but the rival of Ajax lessens its value. It is no proud thing, great though it may be, to possess any thing 440 xiii. 18-38. which Ulysses has hoped for. Already has he obtained the reward of this contest, in which, when he shall have been worsted, he will be said to have contended with me. And I, if my prowess were to be questioned, should prevail by the nobleness of my birth, being the son of Telamon, who took the city of Troy under the valiant Hercules, and entered the Colchian shores in the Pagasæan ship. Æacus was his father, who there gives laws to the silent shades, where the heavy stone urges downward Sisyphus, the son of Æolus.

“The supreme Jupiter owns Æacus, and confesses that he is his offspring. Thus Ajax is the third from Jupiter. And yet, O Greeks, let not this line of descent avail me in this cause, if it be not common to me with the great Achilles. He was my cousin; I ask for what belonged to my cousin? Why does one descended from the blood of Sisyphus, and very like him in thefts and fraud, intrude the name of a strange family among the descendants of Æacus? Are the arms to be denied me, because I took up arms before him, and through the means of no informer? and shall one seem preferable who was the last to take them up, and who, by feigning madness, declined war, until the son of Nauplius, more cunning than he, but more unhappy for himself, discovered the contrivance of his cowardly mind, and dragged him forth to the arms which he had avoided. Now let him take the best arms who would have taken none. Let me be dishonoured, and stripped of the gifts that belonged to my cousin, who presented myself in the front of danger. And I could wish that that madness had been either real or believed so to be, and that he had never attended us as a companion to the Phrygian towers, this counsellor of evil! Then, son of Pœas, Lemnos would not have had thee exposed there through our guilt; who now, as they say, concealed in sylvan caves, art moving the very rocks with thy groans, and art wishing for the son of Laërtes what he has deserved; which, may the Gods, the Gods, I say, grant thee not to pray in vain.

disease and famine, is being clothed and fed by birds; and in shooting fowls, he is employing the shafts destined for the destruction of Troy. Still, he lives, because he did not accompany Ulysses. And the unhappy Palamedes would have preferred that he had been left behind; then he would have been living, or, at least, he would have had a death without any criminality. Him, Ulysses remembering too well the unlucky discovery of his madness, pretended to be betraying the Grecian interests, and proved his feigned charge, and shewed the Greeks the gold, which he had previously hidden in the ground. By exile then, or by death, has he withdrawn from the Greeks their 442 xiii. 61-89. best strength. Thus Ulysses fights, thus is he to be dreaded. Though he were to excel even the faithful Nestor in eloquence, yet he would never cause me to believe that the forsaking of Nestor was not a crime; who, when he implored the aid of Ulysses, retarded by the wound of his steed, and wearied with the years of old age, was deserted by his companion. The son of Tydeus knows full well that these charges are not invented by me, who calling on him often by name, rebuked him, and upbraided his trembling friend with his flight. The Gods above behold the affairs of men with just eyes. Lo! he wants help, himself, who gave it not; and as he left another, so was he doomed to be left: such law had he made for himself.

“He called aloud to his companions. I came, and I saw him trembling, and pale with fear, and shuddering at the impending death. I opposed the mass of my shield to the enemy, and covered him as he lay; and I preserved (and that is the least part of my praise) his dastardly life. If thou dost persist in vying, let us return to that place; restore the enemy, and thy wound, and thy wonted fear; and hide behind my shield, and under that contend with me. But, after I delivered him, he to whom his wounds before gave no strength for standing, fled, retarded by no wound whatever. Hector approaches, and brings the Gods along with him to battle, and where he rushes on, not only art thou alarmed, Ulysses, but even the valiant are; so great terror does he bring. Him, as he exulted in the successes of his bloodstained slaughter, in close conflict, I laid flat with a huge stone. Him demanding one with whom he might engage, did I alone withstand; and you, Greeks, prayed it might fall to my lot; and your prayers prevailed. 443 xiii. 89-116. If you inquire into the issue of this fight, I was not beaten by him.

“Lo! the Trojans bring fire and sword, and Jove, as well, against the Grecian fleet. Where is now the eloquent Ulysses? I, forsooth, protected a thousand ships, the hopes of your return, with my breast. Grant me the arms, in return for so many ships. But, if I may be allowed to speak the truth, a greater honour is sought for them than is for me, and our glory is united; and Ajax is sought for the arms, and not the arms by Ajax. Let the Ithacan Ulysses compare with these things Rhesus, and the unwarlike Dolon, and Helenus, the son of Priam, made captive with the ravished Pallas. By daylight nothing was done; nothing when Diomedes was afar. If once you give these arms for services so mean, divide them, and that of Diomedes would be the greater share of them. But, why these for the Ithacan? who, by stealth and unarmed, ever does his work, and deceives the unwary enemy by stratagem? The very brilliancy of his helmet, as it sparkles with bright gold, will betray his plans, and discover him as he lies hid. But neither will the Dulichian head, beneath the helm of Achilles, sustain a weight so great; and the spear from Pelion must be heavy and burdensome for unwarlike arms. Nor will the shield, embossed with the form of the great globe, beseem a dastard left hand, and one formed for theft. Why then, caitiff, dost thou ask for a gift that will but weaken thee? should the mistake of the Grecian people bestow it on thee, there would be a cause for thee to be stripped, not for thee to be dreaded by the enemy. Thy flight, too, (in which, alone, most dastardly wretch! thou dost excel all others,) will be retarded, when dragging a load so 444 xiii. 116-146. great. Besides, that shield of thine, which has so rarely experienced the conflict, is unhurt; for mine, which is gaping in a thousand wounds from bearing the darts, a new successor must be obtained. In fine, what need is there for words? Let us be tried in action. Let the arms of that brave hero be thrown in the midst of the enemy: order them to be fetched thence, and adorn him that brings them back, with them so brought off.”

The son of Telamon had now ended, and a murmur among the multitude ensued upon his closing words, until the Laërtian hero stood up, and fixing his eyes, for a short time, on the ground, raised them towards the chiefs, and opened his mouth in the accents that were looked for; nor was gracefulness wanting to his eloquent words.

“If my prayers had been of any avail together with yours, Pelasgians, the successor to a prize so great would not now be in question, and thou wouldst now be enjoying thine arms, and we thee, O Achilles. But since the unjust Fates have denied him to me and to yourselves, (and here he wiped his eyes with his hands as though shedding tears,) who could better succeed the great Achilles than he through whom the great Achilles joined the Greeks? Only let it not avail him that he seems to be as stupid as he really is; and let not my talents, which ever served you, O Greeks, be a prejudice to me: and let this eloquence of mine, if there is any, which now pleads for its possessor, and has often done so for yourselves, stand clear of envy, and let each man not disown his own advantages. For as to descent and ancestors, and the things which we have not made ourselves, I scarce call these our own. But, indeed, since Ajax boasts that he is the great grandson of Jove, Jupiter, too, is the founder of my family, and by just as many degrees am I distant from him. For Laërtes is my father, Arcesius his, Jupiter his; nor was any one of these ever condemned and banished. Through the mother, too, 445 xiii. 146-167. Cyllenian Mercury, another noble stock, is added to myself. On the side of either parent there was a God. But neither because I am more nobly born on my mother's side, nor because my father is innocent of his brother's blood, do I claim the arms now in question. By personal merit weigh the cause. So that it be no merit in Ajax that Telamon and Peleus were brothers; and so that not consanguinity, but the honour of merit, be regarded in the disposal of these spoils. Or if nearness of relationship and the next heir is sought, Peleus is his sire, and Pyrrhus is his son. What room, then, is there for Ajax? Let them be taken to Phthia or to Scyros. Nor is Teucer any less a cousin of Achilles than he; and yet does he sue for, does he expect to bear away the arms?

"Since then the contest is simply one of deeds; I, in truth, have done more than what it is easy for me to comprise in words. Yet I shall proceed in the order of events. Thetis, the Nereid mother, prescient of coming death, conceals her son by his dress. The disguise of the assumed dress deceived all, among whom was Ajax. Amid woman's trinkets I mixed arms such as would affect the mind of a man. And not yet had the hero thrown aside the dress of a maiden, when, as he was brandishing a shield and a spear, I said, 'O son of a Goddess, Pergamus reserves itself to fall through thee. Why, then, dost thou delay to overthrow the mighty Troy?' And then I laid my hands on him, and to brave deeds I sent forth the brave. His deeds then are my own. 'Twas I that subdued Telephus, as he fought with his lance; 'twas I that recovered him, vanquished, and begging for his life. That Thebes has fallen, is my doing. Believe me, that I took Lesbos, that I took Tenedos, Chrysa and Cylla, cities of Apollo, and Scyros too. Consider too, that the Lyrnessian walls were levelled with the ground, shaken by my right hand. And, not to mention other things, 'twas I, in fact, that found one who might slay the fierce Hector; through me the renowned Hector lies prostrate. By those arms through which Achilles was found out, I demand these arms. To him when living I gave them; after his death I ask them back again.

“After the grief of one had reached all the Greeks, and a thousand ships had filled the Eubœan Aulis, the breezes long expected were either not existing or adverse to the fleet; and the ruthless oracles commanded Agamemnon to slay his innocent daughter for the cruel Diana. This the father refuses, and is enraged against the Gods themselves, and, a king, he is still a father. By my words I swayed the gentle disposition of the parent to the public advantage. Now, indeed, I make this confession, and let the son of Atreus forgive me as I confess it; before a partial judge I upheld a difficult cause. Yet the good of the people and his brother, and the supreme power of the sceptre granted to him, influence him to balance praise against blood. I was sent, too, to the mother, who was not to be persuaded, but to be deceived with craft; to whom, if the son of Telamon had gone, until even now would our sails have been without wind. A bold envoy, too, I was sent to the towers of Ilium, and the senate-house of lofty Troy was seen and entered by me; and still was it filled with their heroes. Undaunted, I pleaded the cause which all Greece had entrusted to me; and I accused Paris, and I demanded back the plunder, and Helen as well; and I moved Priam and Antenor, related to Priam. But Paris and his brothers, and those who, under him, had been ravishers, scarce withheld their wicked hands; and this thou knowest, Menelaüs, and that was the first day of my danger in company with thee. It were a tedious matter to relate the things which, by my counsel and my valour, I have successfully executed in the duration of this tedious warfare.

“After the first encounter, the enemy for a long time kept themselves within the walls of the city, and there was 447 xiii. 209-237. no opportunity for open fight. At length, in the tenth year we fought. And what wast thou doing in the mean time, thou, who knowest of nothing but battles? what was the use of thee? But if thou inquirest into my actions: I lay ambuscades for the enemy; I surround the trenches with redoubts; I cheer our allies that they may bear with patient minds the tediousness of a protracted war; I show, too, how we are to be supported, and how to be armed; I am sent whither necessity requires. Lo! by the advice of Jove, the king, deceived by a form in his sleep, commands him to dismiss all care of the war thus begun. He is enabled, through the author of it, to defend his own cause. Ajax should not have allowed this, and should have demanded that Troy be razed. And he should have fought, the only thing he could do. Why, does he not stop them when about to depart? Why does he not take up arms, and why not suggest some course for the fickle multitude to pursue? This was not too much for him, who never says any thing but what is grand. Well, and didst thou take to flight? I was witness of it, and ashamed I was to see, when thou wast turning thy back, and wast preparing the sails of disgrace. Without delay, I exclaimed, 'What are you doing? What madness made you, O my friends, quit Troy, well nigh taken? And what, in this tenth year, are you carrying home but disgrace?'

"With these and other words, for which grief itself had made me eloquent, I brought back the resisting Greeks from the flying fleet. The son of Atreus calls together his allies, struck with terror; nor, even yet, does the son of Telamon dare to utter a word; yet Thersites dares to launch out against the kings with impudent remarks, although not unpunished by myself. I am aroused, and I incite the trembling citizens against the foe, and by my voice I reclaim their lost courage. From that time, whatever that man, whom I drew away as he 448 xiii. 237-266. was turning his back, may seem to have done bravely, is all my own. In fine, who of the Greeks is either praising thee, or resorts to thee; but with me the son of Tydeus shares his exploits; he praises me, and is ever confident while Ulysses is his companion. It is something, out of so many thousands of the Greeks, to be singled out alone by Diomedes. Nor was it lot that ordered me to go forth; and yet, despising the dangers of the night and of the enemy, I slew Dolon, one of the Phrygian race, who dared the same things that we dared; though not before I had compelled him to disclose everything, and had learned what perfidious Troy designed. Everything had I now discovered, and I had nothing further to find out, and I might now have returned, with my praises going before me. Not content with that, I sought the tent of Rhesus, and in his own camp slew himself and his attendants. And thus, as a conqueror, and having gained my own desires, I returned in the captured chariot, resembling a joyous triumph. Deny me the arms of him whose horses the enemy had demanded as the price for one night's service; and let Ajax be esteemed your greater benefactor.

“Why should I make reference to the troops of Lycian Sarpedon, mowed down by my sword? With much bloodshed I slew Coëranos, the son of Iphitus, and Alastor, and Chromius, and Alcander, and Halius, and Noëmon, and Prytanis, and I put to death Thoön, with Chersidamas, and Charops, and Ennomos, impelled by his relentless fate; five of less renown fell by my hand beneath the city walls. I, too, fellow-citizens, have wounds, honourable in their place. Believe not his crafty words; here! behold them.” And then, with his hand, he pulls aside his garment, and, “this is the breast,” says he, “that has been ever employed in your service.”

“But the son of Telamon has spent none of his blood on his friends for so many years, and he has a body without a 449 xiii. 266-299. single wound. But what signifies that, if he says that he bore arms for the Pelasgian fleet against both the Trojans and Jupiter himself? I confess it, he did bear them; nor is it any part of mine with malice to detract from the good deeds of others; but let him not alone lay claim to what belongs to all, and let him give to yourselves, as well, some of the honour. The descendant of Actor, safe under the appearance of Achilles, repelled the Trojans, with their defender, from the ships on the point of being burnt. He, too, unmindful of the king, and of the chiefs, and of myself, fancies that he alone dared to engage with Hector in combat, being the ninth in that duty, and preferred by favour of the lot. But yet, most brave chief, what was the issue of thy combat? Hector came off, injured by no wound. Ah, wretched me! with how much grief am I compelled to recollect that time at which Achilles, the bulwark of the Greeks, was slain: nor tears, nor grief, nor fear, hindered me from carrying his body aloft from the ground; on these shoulders, I say, on these shoulders I bore the body of Achilles, and his arms together with him, which now, too, I am endeavouring to bear off. I have strength to suffice for such a weight, and, assuredly, I have a soul that will be sensible of your honours.

“Was then, forsooth! his azure mother so anxious in her son’s behalf that the heavenly gifts, a work of so great ingenuity, a rough soldier, and one without any genius, should put on? For he will not understand the engravings on the shield; the ocean, and the earth, and the stars with the lofty heavens and the Pleiades, and the Hyades, and the Bear that avoids the sea, and the different cities, and the blazing sword of Orion; arms he insists on receiving, which he does not understand. What! and does he charge that I, avoiding the duties of this laborious war, came but late to the toil begun? and does he not perceive that in this he is defaming the brave Achilles? If he calls dissembling a crime, we have both of us dissembled. 450 xiii. 299-336. If delay stands for a fault, I was earlier than he. A fond wife detained me, a fond mother Achilles. The first part of our time was given to them, the rest to yourselves. I am not alarmed, if now I am unable to defend myself against this accusation, in common with so great a man. Yet he was found out by the dexterity of Ulysses, but not Ulysses by that of Ajax.

“And that we may not be surprised at his pouring out on me the reproaches of his silly tongue, against you, too, does he make objections worthy of shame. Is it base for me, with a false crime to have charged Palamedes, and honourable for you to have condemned him? But neither could Palamedes, the son of Nauplius, defend a crime so great, and so manifest; nor did you only hear the charges against him, but you witnessed them, and in the bribe itself the charge was established. Nor have I deserved to be accused, because Lemnos, the isle of Vulcan, still receives Philoctetes, the son of Pœas. Greeks, defend your own acts! for you consented to it. Nor yet shall I deny that I advised him to withdraw himself from the toils of the warfare and the voyage, and to try by rest to assuage his cruel pains. He consented, and still he lives. This advice was not only well-meant, but it was fortunate as well, when ‘twas enough to be well-meant. Since our prophets demand him for the purpose of destroying Troy, entrust not that to me. The son of Telamon will be better to go, and by his eloquence will soften the hero, maddened by diseases and anger, or by some wile will skilfully bring him thence. Sooner will Simois flow backward, and Ida stand without foliage, and Achaia promise aid to Troy, than, my breast being inactive in your interest, the skill of stupid Ajax shall avail the Greeks.

“Though thou be, relentless Philoctetes, enraged against thy friends and the king, and myself, though thou curse and devote my head, everlastingly, and though thou wish to have me in thy anguish thrown in thy way perchance, and to shed my blood; and though if I meet thee, so thou wilt have the opportunity of meeting me, still will I attempt thee, and will endeavour to bring thee back with me. And, if Fortune favours me, I will as surely be the possessor of thy arrows, as I was the possessor of the Dardanian prophet whom I took prisoner; and so I revealed the answers of the Deities and the fates of Troy; 451 xiii. 337-362. and as I carried off the hidden statue of the Phrygian Minerva from the midst of the enemy. And does Ajax, then, compare himself with me? The Fates, in fact, would not allow Troy to be captured without that statue. Where is the valiant Ajax? where are the boastful words of that mighty man? Why art thou trembling here? Why dares Ulysses to go through the guards, and to entrust himself to the night, and, through fell swords, to enter not only the walls of Troy, but even its highest towers, and to tear the Goddess from her shrine, and, thus torn, to bear her off amid the enemy?

“Had I not done these things, in vain would the son of Telamon been bearing the seven hides of the bulls on his left arm. On that night was the victory over Troy gained by me; then did I conquer Pergamus, when I rendered it capable of being conquered. Forbear by thy looks, and thy muttering, to show me the son of Tydeus; a part of the glory in these things is his own. Neither wast thou alone, when for the allied fleet thou didst grasp thy shield: a multitude was attending thee, while but one fell to me: who, did he not know that a fighting man is of less value than a wise one, and that the reward is not the due of the invincible right hand, would himself, too, have been suing for these arms; the more discreet Ajax would have been suing, and the fierce Eurypilus, and the son of the famous Andremon; no less, too would Idomeneus, and Meriones sprung from the same land, and the brother of the greater son of Atreus have sought them. But these, brave in action, (nor are they second to thee in war,) have all yielded to my wisdom. Thy right hand is of value in war, 452 xiii. 362-397. but thy temper is one that stands in need of my direction. Thou hast strength without intelligence; I have a care for the future. Thou art able to fight; with me, the son of Atreus chooses the proper time for fighting. Thou only art of service with thy body; I with my mind: and as much as he who guides the bark, is superior to the capacity of the rower, as much as the general is greater than the soldier, so much do I excel thee; and in my body there is an intellect that is superior to hands: in that lies all my vigour.

“But you, ye chieftains, give the reward to your watchful servant; and for the cares of so many years which I have passed in anxiety, grant this honour as a compensation for my services. Our toil is now at its close; I have removed the opposing Fates, and by rendering it capable of being taken, in effect I have taken the lofty Pergamus. Now, by our common hopes, and the walls of the Trojans doomed to fall, and by those Gods whom lately I took from the enemy, by anything that remains, through wisdom to be done; if, too, anything remains of bold enterprize, and to be recovered from a dangerous spot; if you think that anything is still wanting for the downfall of Troy; then remember me; or if you give not me the arms, concede them to this;” and then he discovers the fatal statue of Minerva.

The body of the chiefs is moved, and then, in fact appears what eloquence can do; and the fluent man receives the arms of a brave one. He, who so often has alone withstood both Hector, and the sword, and flames, and Jove himself, cannot now withstand his wrath alone, and grief conquers the man that is invincible. He seizes his sword, and he says: —“This, at least, is my own; or will Ulysses claim this, too, for himself. This must I use against myself; and the blade, which has often been wet with the blood of the Phrygians, will now be wet with the slaughter of its owner: that no one but Ajax himself, may be enabled to conquer Ajax.”

Thus he said; and he plunged the fatal sword into his breast, then for the first time suffering a wound, where it lay exposed to the steel. Nor were his hands able to draw out the weapon there fixed: the blood itself forced it out. And the earth, made red by the blood, produced a purple flower from the green turf, the same which had formerly been produced from the Æbalian wound. Letters common to that youth 453 xiii. 397-426. and to the hero, were inscribed in the middle of the leaves; the latter belonging to the name, the former to the lamentation.

The conqueror, Ulysses, set sail for the country of Hypsipyle, and of the illustrious Thoas, and the regions infamous for the slaughter there of the husbands of old; that he might bring back the arrows, the weapons of the Tiryinthian hero. After he had carried them back to the Greeks, their owner attending too, the concluding hand was put, at length, to this protracted war. Troy and Priam fell together; the wretched wife of Priam lost after every thing else her human form, and alarmed a foreign air with her barkings. Where the long Hellespont is reduced into a narrow compass, Ilium was in flames; nor had the flames yet ceased; and the altar of Jove had drunk up the scanty blood of the aged Priam. The priestess of Apollo dragged by the hair, extends her unavailing hands towards the heavens. The victorious Greeks drag along the Dardanian matrons, embracing, while they may, the statues of their country's Gods, and clinging to the burning temples, an envied spoil. Astyanax is hurled from those towers from which he was often wont, when shown by his mother, to behold his father, fighting for himself, and defending the kingdom of his ancestors.

And now Boreas bids them depart, and with a favourable breeze, the sails, as they wave, resound, and the sailors bid them take advantage of the winds. "Troy, farewell!" the Trojan women cry;—"We are torn away!" and they give kisses to the soil, and leave the smoking roofs of their country. The last that goes on board the fleet, a dreadful sight, is Hecuba, found amid the sepulchres of her children. Dulichian hands have dragged her away, while clinging to their tombs and giving kisses to their bones; yet the ashes of one has she taken out, 454 xiii. 426-438. and, so taken out, has carried with her in her bosom the ashes of Hector. On the tomb of Hector she leaves the grey hair of her head, an humble offering, her hair and her tears. There is opposite to Phrygia, where Troy stood, a land inhabited by the men of Bistonia. There, was the rich palace of Polymnestor, to whom thy father, Polydorus, entrusted thee, to be brought up privately, and removed thee afar from the Phrygian arms. A wise resolution; had he not added, as well, great riches, the reward of crime, the incentive of an avaricious disposition. When the fortunes of the Phrygians were ruined, the wicked king of the Phrygians took a sword, and plunged it in the throat of his fosterchild; and, as though the crime could be removed with the body, he hurled him lifeless from a rock into the waters below.

EXPLANATION.

It may with justice be said, that in the speeches of Ajax Telamon, and Ulysses, here given, the Poet has presented us with a masterpiece of genius; both in the lively colours in which he has described the two rivals, and the ingenious manner in which he has throughout sustained the contrast between their respective characters.

The ancient writers are not agreed upon the question, who was the mother of Ajax Telamon; Dares says that it was Hesione; while Apollodorus, Plutarch, Tzetzes and others, allege that it was Peribœa, the daughter of Alcatheüs, the son of Pelops. Pindar and Apollodorus say, that Hercules, on going to visit his friend Telamon, prayed to Jupiter that Telamon might have a son, whose skin should be as impenetrable as that of the Nemæan lion, which he then wore. As he prayed, he espied an eagle; upon which, he informed his friend that a favourable event awaited his prayer, and desired him to call his son after the name of an eagle, which in the Greek is αἰετὸς. The Scholiast on Sophocles, Suidas and Tzetzes, say further, that when Hercules returned to see Telamon, after the birth of Ajax, he covered him with the lion's skin, and that by this means Ajax became invulnerable except in that spot of his body, which was beneath the hole which the arrow of Hercules had made in the skin of the beast.

Dictys, Suidas, and Cedrenus affirm, that the dispute of Ulysses and Ajax Telamon was about the Palladium, to which each of them laid claim. They add, that the Grecian nobles, having adjudged it to Ulysses, Ajax threatened to slay them, and was found dead in his tent the next morning; but it is more generally stated to the effect here related by Ovid, that he killed himself, because he could not obtain the armour of Achilles. Filled with grief and anger combined, he became distracted; and after falling on some flocks, which in his madness he took for enemies, he at last stabbed himself with the sword which he had received from Hector. This account has been followed by Euripides, in his tragedy on the subject of the death of Ajax; and Homer seems to allude to this story, when he makes Ulysses say, that on his descent to the Infernal Regions, the shades of all 455 the Grecian heroes immediately met him, except that of Ajax, whose resentment at their former dispute about the armour of Achilles was still so warm, that he would not come near him. The Scholiast on Homer, and Eustathius, say that Agamemnon being much embarrassed how to behave in a dispute which might have proved fatal to the Grecian cause, ordered the Trojan prisoners to come before the council to give their opinion, as to which of them had done the most mischief; and that they answered in favour of Ulysses. The Scholiast on Aristophanes also adds, that Agamemnon, not satisfied with this enquiry, sent out spies to know what was the opinion of the Trojans on the relative merits of Ulysses and Ajax; and that upon their report, he decided in favour of Ulysses.

According to Pliny and Pausanias, Ajax was buried near the promontory of Sigæum, where a tomb was erected for him; though other writers, on the authority of Dictys, place his tomb on the promontory of Rhoëtæum. Horace speaks of him as being denied the honour of a funeral; but he evidently alludes to a passage in the tragedy of Sophocles, where the poet introduces Agamemnon as obstinately refusing to allow him burial, till he is softened by the entreaties of Teucer.

It is probable that Homer knew nothing of the story here mentioned relative to the concealment of Achilles, disguised in female apparel, by Thetis, in the court of Lycomedes, her brother; for speaking of the manner in which Achilles engaged in the war, he says that Nestor and Ulysses went to visit Peleus and Menœtius, and easily prevailed with them that Achilles and Patroclus should accompany them to the war. It was, however, at the court of Lycomedes that Achilles fell in love with and married Deidamia, by whom he had Pyrrhus, or Neoptolemus, who was present at the taking of Troy, at a very early age.

The story of Polydorus is related in the third Book of the Æneid, and is also told by Hyginus, with some variations. He says that Polydorus was sent by Priam to Polymnestor, king of Thrace, while he was yet in his cradle; and that Ilione, the daughter of Priam, distrusting the cruelty and avarice of Polymnestor, who was her husband, educated the child as her own son, and made their own son Deiphylus pass for Polydorus, the two infants being of the same age. He also says that the Greeks, after the taking of Troy, offered Electra to Polymnestor in marriage, on condition that he should divorce Ilione, and slay Polydorus, and that Polymnestor, having acceded to their proposal, unconsciously killed his own son Deiphylus. Polydorus going to consult the oracle concerning his future fortune, was told, that his father was dead, and his native city reduced to ashes; on which he imagined that the oracle had deceived him; but returning to Thrace, his sister informed him of the secret, on which he deprived Polymnestor of his sight.

FABLES III. AND IV.

In returning from Troy, the Greeks are stopped in Thrace by the shade of Achilles, who requests that Polyxena shall be sacrificed to his manes. While Hecuba is fetching water with which to bathe the body of her daughter, she espies the corpse of her son Polydorus. In her exasperations 456 xiii. 439-472. she repairs to the court of Polymnestor; and having torn out his eyes, is transformed into a bitch. Memnon, who has been slain by Achilles, is honoured with a magnificent funeral, and, at the prayer of Aurora, his ashes are transformed by Jupiter into birds, since called Memnonides.

On the Thracian shore the son of Atreus had moored his fleet, until the sea was calm, and until the wind was more propitious. Here, on a sudden, Achilles, as great as he was wont to be when alive, rises from the ground, bursting far and wide, and, like to one threatening, revives the countenance of that time when he fiercely attacked Agamemnon with his lawless sword. "And are you departing, unmindful of me, ye Greeks?" he says; "and is all grateful remembrance of my valour buried together with me? Do not so. And that my sepulchre may not be without honour, let Polyxena slain appease the ghost of Achilles." Thus he said; and his companions obeying the implacable shade, the noble and unfortunate maid, and more than an ordinary woman, torn from the bosom of her mother, which she now cherished almost alone, was led to the tomb, and became a sacrifice at his ruthless pile.

She, mindful of herself, after she was brought to the cruel altar, and had perceived that the savage rites were preparing for her; and when she saw Neoptolemus standing by, and wielding his sword, and fixing his eyes upon her countenance, said—"Quickly make use of this noble blood: in me there is no resistance: and do thou bury thy weapons either in my throat or in my breast!" and, at the same time she laid bare her throat and her breast; "should I, Polyxena, forsooth, either endure to be the slave of any person, or will any sacred Deity be appeased by such a sacrifice. I only wish that my death could be concealed from my mother. My mother is the impediment; and she lessens my joys at death. Yet it is not my death, but her own life, that should be lamented by her. Only, stand ye off, lest I should go to the Stygian shades not a free woman: if in this I demand what is just; and withhold the hands of males from the contact of a virgin. My blood will be the more acceptable to him, whoever it is that you are preparing to appease by my slaughter. Yet, if the last prayers of my lips move any of you,—’tis the daughter of king Priam, and not a captive that entreats — return 457 xiii. 472-505. my body unconsumed to my mother, and let her not purchase for me with gold, but with tears, the sad privilege of a sepulchre. When in former times she could, then used she to purchase with gold.”

Thus she said; but the people did not restrain those tears which she restrained. Even the priest himself, weeping and reluctant, divided her presented breast with the piercing steel. She, sinking to the earth on her failing knees, maintained an undaunted countenance to the last moment of her life. Even then was it her care, when she fell, to cover the features that ought to be concealed, and to preserve the honour of her chaste modesty. The Trojan matrons received her, and reckoned the children of Priam whom they had had to deplore; and how much blood one house had expended. And they lament thee, Oh virgin! and thee, Oh thou! so lately called a royal wife and a royal mother, once the resemblance of flourishing Asia, but now a worthless prey amid the plunder of Troy; which the conquering Ulysses would have declined as his, but that thou hadst brought Hector forth. And scarce did Hector find an owner for his mother. She, embracing the body bereft of a soul so brave, gave to that as well, those tears which so oft she had given for her country, her children, and her husband; and her tears she poured in his wounds. And she impressed kisses with her lips, and beat her breast now accustomed to it; and trailing her grey hairs in the clotted blood, many things indeed did she say, but these as well, as she tore her breast:

“My daughter, the last affliction (for what now remains?) to thy mother: my daughter, thou liest prostrate, and I behold thy wound as my own wounds. Lo! lest I should have lost any one of my children without bloodshed, thou, too, dost receive thy wound. Still, because thou wast a woman, I supposed thee safe from the sword; and yet, a woman, thou hast fallen by the sword. The same Achilles, the ruin of Troy, and the bereaver of myself, the same has destroyed thus many of thy brothers, and thyself. But, after he had fallen by the arrows of Paris and of Phœbus, ‘Now, at least,’ I said, ‘Achilles is no longer to be dreaded;’ and yet even now, was he to be dreaded by me. The very ashes of him, as he lies buried, rage against this family; and even in the tomb have we found him an enemy. For the descendant of Æacus have I been thus prolific. 458 xiii. 505-536. Great Ilion lies prostrate, and the public calamity is completed by a dreadful catastrophe; if indeed, it is completed. Pergamus alone remains for me: and my sorrow is still in its career. So lately the greatest woman in the world, powerful in so many sons-in-law, and children, and daughters-in-law, and in my husband, now I am dragged into exile, destitute, and torn away from the tombs of my kindred, as a present to Penelope. She, pointing me out to the matrons of Ithaca, as I tease my allotted task, will say, ‘This is that famous mother of Hector; this is the wife of Priam.’ And, now thou, who after the loss of so many children, alone didst alleviate the sorrows of thy mother, hast made the atonement at the tomb of the enemy. Atoning sacrifices for an enemy have I brought forth. For what purpose, lasting like iron, am I reserved? and why do I linger here? To what end dost thou, pernicious age, detain me? Why, ye cruel Deities, unless to the end that I may see fresh deaths, do ye relieve an aged woman of years so prolonged? Who could have supposed, that after the fall of Troy, Priam could have been pronounced happy? Blessed in his death, he has not beheld thee, my daughter, thus cut off; and at the same moment, he lost his life and his kingdom.

“But, I suppose, thou, a maiden of royal birth, wilt be honoured with funeral rites, and thy body will be deposited in the tombs of thy ancestors. This is not the fortune of thy house; tears and a handful of foreign sand will be thy lot, the only gifts of a mother. We have lost all; a child most dear to his mother, now alone remains as a reason for me to endure to live yet for a short time, once the youngest of all my male issue, Polydorus, entrusted on these coasts to the Ismarian king. Why, in the mean time, am I delaying to bathe her cruel wounds with the stream, her features, too, besmeared with dreadful blood?”

Thus she spoke; and with aged step she proceeded towards the shore, tearing her grey locks. “Give me an urn, ye Trojan women,” the unhappy mother had just said, in order that she might take up the flowing waters, when she beheld 459 xiii. 536-571. the body of Polydorus thrown up on the shore, and the great wounds made by the Thracian weapons. The Trojan women cried out aloud; with grief she was struck dumb; and very grief consumed both her voice and the tears that arose within; and much resembling a hard rock she became benumbed. And at one moment she fixed her eyes on the ground before her; and sometimes she raised her haggard features towards the skies; and now she viewed the features, now the wounds of her son, as he lay; the wounds especially; and she armed and prepared herself for vengeance by rage. Soon as she was inflamed by it, as though she still remained a queen, she determined to be revenged, and was wholly employed in devising a fitting form of punishment. And as the lioness rages when bereft of her sucking whelp, and having found the tracks of his feet, follows the enemy that she sees not; so Hecuba, after she had mingled rage with mourning, not forgetful of her spirit, but forgetful of her years, went to Polymnestor, the contriver of this dreadful murder, and demanded an interview; for that it was her wish to show him a concealed treasure left for him to give to her son.

The Odrysian king believes her, and, inured to the love of gain, comes to a secret spot. Then with soothing lips, he craftily says, "Away with delays, Hecuba, and give the present to thy son; all that thou givest, and what thou hast already given, I swear by the Gods above, shall be his." Sternly she eyes him as he speaks, and falsely swears; and she boils with heaving rage; and so flies on him, seized by a throng of the captive matrons, and thrusts her fingers into his perfidious eyes; and of their sight she despoils his cheeks, and plunges her hands into the sockets, ('tis rage that makes her strong); and, defiled with his guilty blood, she tears not his eyes, for they are not left, but the places for his eyes.

Provoked by the death of their king, the Thracian people begin to attack the Trojan matron with the hurling of darts and of stones. But she attacks the stones thrown at her with a hoarse noise, and with bites; and attempting to speak, her mouth just ready for the words, she barks aloud. The place still exists, and derives its name from the circumstance; and long remembering her ancient misfortunes, even then did she howl dismally through the Sithonian plains. Her sad fortune moved both her own Trojans, and her Pelasgian foes, and all the Gods as well; so much so, that even the wife and sister of Jove herself denied that Hecuba had deserved that fate.

Although she has favoured those same arms, there is not leisure for Aurora to be moved by the calamities and the fall of Troy. A nearer care and grief at home for her lost Memnon is afflicting her. Him his rosy-coloured mother saw perish by the spear of Achilles on the Phrygian plains. This she saw; and that colour with which the hours of the morning grow ruddy, turned pale, and the æther lay hid in clouds. But the parent could not endure to behold his limbs laid on the closing flames. But with loose hair, just as she was, she disdained not to fall down at the knees of great Jove, and to add these words to her tears: "Inferior to all the Goddesses which the golden æther does sustain, (for throughout all the world are my temples the fewest), still, a Goddess, I am come; not that thou shouldst grant me temples and days of sacrifice, and altars to be heated with fires. But if thou considerest how much I, a female, perform for thee, at the time when, with the early dawn, I keep the confines of the night, thou wouldst think that some reward ought to be given to me. But that is not my care, nor is such now the condition of Aurora such that she should demand the honours deserved by her. Bereft of my Memnon am I come; of him who, in vain, wielded valiant arms for his uncle, and who in his early years ('twas thus ye willed it,) was slain by the brave Achilles. Give him, I pray, supreme ruler of the Gods, some honour, as a solace for his death, and ease the wounds of a mother."

Jove nods his assent; when suddenly the lofty pile of Memnon sinks with its towering fires, and volumes of black smoke darken the light of day. Just as when the rivers exhale the rising fogs, and the sun is not admitted below them. The black embers fly, and rolling into one body, they thicken, and take a form, and assume heat and life from the flames. Their own lightness gives them wings; and first, like birds, and then real birds, they flutter with their wings. At once innumerable sisters are fluttering, whose natal origin is the same. And thrice do they go around the pile, and thrice does their clamour rise in concert into the air. In the fourth flight they separate their company. Then two fierce tribes 461 xiii. 612-622. wage war from opposite sides, and with their beaks and crooked claws expend their rage, and weary their wings and opposing breasts; and down their kindred bodies fall, a sacrifice to the entombed ashes, and they remember that from a great man they have received their birth. Their progenitor gives a name to these birds so suddenly formed, called Memnonides after him; when the Sun has run through the twelve signs of the Zodiac, they fight, doomed to perish in battle, in honour of their parent.

To others, therefore, it seemed a sad thing, that the daughter of Dymas was now barking; but Aurora was intent on her own sorrows; and even now she sheds the tears of affection, and sprinkles them in dew over all the world.

EXPLANATION.

The particulars which Ovid here gives of the misfortunes that befell the family of Priam, with the exception of a few circumstances, agree perfectly with the narratives of the ancient historians.

According to Dictys, Philostratus, and Hyginus, after Achilles was slain by the treachery of Paris, on the eve of his marriage with Polyxena, she became inconsolable at his death, and returning to the Grecian camp, she was kindly received by Agamemnon; but being unable to get the better of her despair, she stole out of the camp at night, and stabbed herself at the tomb of Achilles. Philostratus adds, that the ghost of Achilles appeared to Apollonius Tyanæus, the hero of his story, and gave him permission to ask him any questions he pleased, assuring him, that he would give him full information on the subject of them. Among other things, Apollonius desired to know if it was the truth that the Greeks had sacrificed Polyxena on his tomb; to which the ghost replied, that her grief made her take the resolution not to survive her intended husband, and that she had killed herself.

Other writers, agreeing with Ovid as to the manner of her death, tell us that it was Pyrrhus who sacrificed Polyxena to his father's shade, to revenge his death, of which, though innocently, she had been the cause. Pausanias, who says that this was the general opinion, avers, on what ground it is difficult to conceive, that Homer designedly omitted this fact, because it was so dishonourable to the Greeks; and in his description of the paintings at Delphi, by Polygnotus, of the destruction of Troy, he says that Polyxena was there represented as being led out to the tomb of Achilles, where she was sacrificed by the Greeks. He also says, that he had seen her story painted in the same manner at Pergamus, Athens, and other places. Many of the poets, and Virgil in the number, affirm 462 that Polyxena was sacrificed in Phrygia, near Troy, on the tomb of Achilles, he having desired it at his death; while Euripides says that it was in the Thracian Chersonesus, on a cenotaph, which was erected there in honour of Achilles: and that his ghost appearing, Calchas was consulted, who answered, that it was necessary to sacrifice Polyxena, which was accordingly done by Pyrrhus.

The ancient writers are divided as to the descent of Hecuba. Homer, who has been followed by his Scholiast, and by Ovid and Suidas, says that she was the daughter of Dymas, King of Phrygia. Euripides says that she was the daughter of Cissus, and with him Virgil and Servius agree. Apollodorus, again, makes her to be descended from Sangar and Merope. In the distribution of spoil after the siege of Troy, Hecuba fell to the share of Ulysses, and became his slave; but died soon after, in Thrace. Plautus and Servius allege that the Greeks themselves circulated the story of her transformation into a bitch, because she was perpetually railing at them, to provoke them to put her to death, rather than condemn her to pass her life as a slave. According to Strabo and Pomponius Mela, in their time, the place of her burial was still to be seen in Thrace. Euripides, in his Hecuba, has not followed this tradition, but represents her as complaining that the Greeks had chained her to the door of Agamemnon like a dog. Perhaps she became the slave of Agamemnon after Ulysses had left the army, on his return to Ithaca; and it is possible that the story of her transformation may have been solely founded on this tradition. She bore to Priam ten sons and seven daughters, and survived them all except Helenus; most of her sons having fallen by the hand of Achilles.

Many ancient writers, with whom Ovid here agrees, affirm that Memnon was the son of Tithonus, the brother of Priam, and Aurora, or Eos, the Goddess of the morn. They also say that he came to assist the Trojans with ten thousand Persians, and as many Æthiopians. Diodorus Siculus asserts that Memnon was said to have been the son of Aurora, because he left Phrygia, and went to settle in the East. It is not clear in what country he fixed his residence. Some say that it was at Susa, in Persia; others that it was in Egypt, or in Æthiopia, which perhaps amounts to the same, as Æthiopia was not in general distinguished from the Higher or Upper Egypt. Marsham is of opinion that Memnon was the same with Amenophis, one of the kings of Egypt: while Le Clerc considers him to have been the same person as Ham, the son of Noah; and Vossius identifies him with Boalcis, a God of the Syrians. It seems probable that he was an Egyptian, who had perhaps formed an alliance with the reigning family of Troy.

FABLES V. AND VI.

After the taking of Troy, Æneas escapes with his father and his son, and goes to Delos. Anius, the priest of Apollo, recounts to him how his daughters have been transformed into doves, and at parting they exchange presents. The Poet here introduces the story of the daughters of Orion, who, having sacrificed their lives for the safety of Thebes, when ravaged by a plague, two young men arise out of their ashes.

But yet the Fates do not allow the hope of Troy to be ruined even with its walls. The Cytherean hero bears on his shoulders the sacred relics and his father, another sacred relic, a venerable burden. In his affection, out of wealth so great, he selects that prize, and his own Ascanius, and with his flying fleet is borne through the seas from Antandros, and leaves the accursed thresholds of the Thracians, and the earth streaming with the blood of Polydorus; and, with good winds and favouring tide, he enters the city of Apollo, his companions attending him.

Anius, by whom, as king, men were, and by whom, as priest, Phœbus was duly provided for, received him both into his temple and his house, and showed him the city and the dedicated temples, and the two trunks of trees once grasped by Latona in her labour. Frankincense being given to the flames, and wine poured forth on the frankincense, and the entrails of slain oxen being duly burnt, they repair to the royal palace, and reclining on lofty couches, with flowing wine, they take the gifts of Ceres. Then the pious Anchises says, “O chosen priest of Phœbus, am I deceived? or didst thou not have a son, also, when first I beheld these walls, and twice two daughters, so far as I remember?” To him Anius replies, shaking his temples wreathed with snow-white fillets, and says, “Thou art not mistaken, greatest hero; thou didst see me the parent of five children, whom now (so great a vicissitude of fortune 464 xiii. 646-683. affects mankind) thou seest almost bereft of all. For what assistance is my absent son to me, whom Andros, a land so called after his name, possesses, holding that place and kingdom on behalf of his father?

“The Delian God granted him the art of augury; to my female progeny Liber gave other gifts, exceeding both wishes and belief. For, at the touch of my daughters, all things were transformed into corn, and the stream of wine, and the berry of Minerva; and in these were there rich advantages. When the son of Atreus, the destroyer of Troy, learned this (that thou mayst not suppose that we, too, did not in some degree feel your storms) using the force of arms, he dragged them reluctantly from the bosom of their father, and commanded them to feed, with their heavenly gifts, the Argive fleet. Whither each of them could, they made their escape. Eubœa was sought by two; and by as many of my daughters, was Andros, their brother's island, sought. The forces came, and threatened war if they were not given up. Natural affection, subdued by fear, surrendered to punishment those kindred breasts; and, that thou mayst be able to forgive a timid brother, there was no Æneas, no Hector to defend Andros, through whom you Trojans held out to the tenth year. And now chains were being provided for their captive arms. Lifting up towards heaven their arms still free, they said, 'Father Bacchus, give us thy aid!' and the author of their gift did give them aid; if destroying them, in a wondrous manner, be called giving aid. By what means they lost their shape, neither could I learn, nor can I now tell. The sum of their calamity is known to me: they assumed wings, and were changed into birds of thy consort, the snow-white doves."

With such and other discourse, after they have passed the time of feasting, the table being removed, they seek sleep. And they rise with the day, and repair to the oracle of Phoëbus, who bids them seek the ancient mother and the kindred shores. The king attends, and presents them with gifts when about to depart; a sceptre to Anchises, a scarf and a quiver to his grandson, and a goblet to Æneas, which formerly Therses, his Ismenian guest, had sent him from the Aonian shores; this 465 xiii. 683-712. Therses had sent to him, but the Mylean Alcon had made it, and had carved it with this long device:

There was a city, and you might point out its seven gates: these were in place of a name, and showed what city it was. Before the city was a funeral, and tombs, and fires, and funeral piles; and matrons, with hair dishevelled and naked breasts, expressed their grief; the Nymphs, too, seem to be weeping, and to mourn their springs dried up. Without foliage the bared tree runs straight up; the goats are gnawing the dried stones. Lo! he represents the daughters of Orion in the middle of Thebes; the one, as presenting her breast, more than woman's, with her bared throat; the other, thrusting a sword in her valorous wounds, as dying for her people, and as being borne, with an honoured funeral, through the city, and as being burnt in a conspicuous part of it; and then from the virgin embers, lest the race should fail, twin youths arising, whom Fame calls 'Coronæ,' and for their mothers' ashes leading the funeral procession.

Thus far for the figures that shine on the ancient brass; the summit of the goblet is rough with gilded acanthus. Nor do the Trojans return gifts of less value than those given; and to the priest they give an incense-box, to keep the frankincense; they give a bowl, too, and a crown, brilliant with gold and gems. Then recollecting that the Trojans, as Teucrians, derived their origin from the blood of Teucer, they make for Crete, and cannot long endure the air of that place; and, having left behind the hundred cities, they desire to reach the Ausonian harbours. A storm rages, and tosses the men to and fro; and winged Aëollo frightens them, when received in the unsafe harbours of the Strophades. And now, borne along, 466 xiii. 712-718. they have passed the Dulichian harbours, and Ithaca, and Same, and the Neritian abodes, the kingdom of the deceitful Ulysses; and they behold Ambracia, contended for in a dispute of the Deities, which now is renowned for the Actian Apollo, and the stone in the shape of the transformed judge, and the land of Dodona, vocal with its oaks; and the Chaonian bays, where the sons of the Molossian king escaped the unavailing flames, with wings attached to them.

EXPLANATION.

Virgil describes Anius as the king of Delos, and the priest of Apollo at the same time. 'Rex Anius, rex idem hominum Phœbique sacerdos.' Æneid, Book III. He was descended from Cadmus, through his mother Rhea, the daughter of Staphilus. Having engaged in some intrigue, as Diodorus Siculus conjectures, her father exposed her on the sea in an open boat, which drove to Delos, and she was there delivered of Anius, who afterwards became the king of the island. By his wife Dorippe he had three daughters, who were extremely frugal, and by means of the offerings and presents that were brought to the temple of Apollo, amassed a large store of provisions. During the siege of Troy, the Greeks sent Palamedes to Delos, to demand food for the army; and, as a security for his compliance with these demands, they exacted the daughters of Anius as hostages. The damsels soon afterwards finding means to escape, it was said that Bacchus, who was their kinsman through Cadmus, had transformed them into doves. Probably the story of their transforming every thing they touched, into wine, corn, and oil, was founded solely on their thriftiness and parsimony. Bochart, however, explains the story from the circumstance of their names being, as he conjectures, Oëno, Spermo, and Elai, which, in the old Phœnician dialect, signified wine, corn, and oil; and he thinks that the story was confirmed in general belief by the fact that large quantities of corn, wine, and oil were supplied from Delos to the Grecian army when before Troy.

In the reign of Orion, Thebes being devastated by a plague, the oracles were consulted, and the Thebans were told that the contagion would cease as soon as the daughters of the king should be sacrificed to the wrath of heaven. The two maidens immediately presented themselves at the altar; and on their immolation, the Gods were appeased, and the plague ceased. 467 This example of patriotism and fortitude filled the more youthful Thebans with so much emulation, that they shook off their former inactivity, and soon became conspicuous for their bravery: which sudden change gave occasion to the saying, that the ashes of these maidens had been transformed into men.

The Poet follows Æneas on his voyage, to gain an opportunity of referring to several other current stories. Among other places, he passes the city of Ambracia, about which the Gods had contended, and sees the rock into which the umpire of their dispute, who had decided in favour of Hercules, was changed. Ambracia was on the coast of Epirus, and gave its name to an adjacent inlet of the sea, called the Ambracian Gulf. Antoninus Liberalis tells us, on the authority of Nicander, that Apollo, Diana, and Hercules disputed about this city, and left the decision to Cragaleus, who gave it in favour of Hercules; on which, Apollo transformed him into a rock. Very possibly the meaning of this may be, that when the people of Ambracia were considering to which of these Deities they should dedicate their city, Cragaleus preferred Hercules to the other two, or, in other words, the feats of war to the cultivation of the arts and sciences. Apollo was said to have turned him into a stone, either because he met with his death near the promontory where a temple of Apollo stood, or to show the stupidity of his decision. Antoninus Liberalis is the only writer besides Ovid that makes mention of the adventure of the sons of the Molossian king; he tells us that Munychus, king of the Molossi, had three sons, Alcander, Megaletor, and Philæus, and a daughter named Hyperippe. Some robbers setting fire to their father's house, they were transformed by Jupiter into birds. This, in all probability, is a poetical way of saying that the youths escaped from the flames, contrary to universal expectation.

The opinions of writers have been very conflicting as to the origin of the oracle of Dodona. Silius Italicus says that two pigeons flew from Thebes in Egypt, one of which went to Libya, and occasioned the founding of the oracle of Jupiter Ammon; while the other settled upon an oak in Chaonia, and signified thereby to the inhabitants, that it was the will of heaven that there should be an oracle in that place. Herodotus says that two priestesses of Egyptian Thebes being carried off by some Phœnician merchants, one of them was sold to the Greeks, after which she settled in the forest of Dodona, where a little chapel was founded by her in honour of Jupiter, in which she gave responses. He adds, that they called her 'the dove,' because being a foreigner they did not understand her language. At length, having learned the language of the Pelasgians, it was said that the dove had spoken. On that foundation grew the tradition that the oaks themselves uttered oracular responses.

Notwithstanding this plausible account of Herodotus, it is not impossible that some equivocal expressions in the Hebrew and Arabian languages may have given rise to the story. 'Himan,' in the one language, signified 'a priest;' and 'Heman,' in the other, was the name for 'a pigeon.' Possibly those who found the former word in the history of ancient Greece, written in the dialect of the original Phœnician settlers, did not understand it, and by their mistake, caused it to be asserted that a dove had founded the 468 oracle of Dodona. Bochart tells us that the same word, in the Phœnician tongue, signifies either 'pigeons,' or 'women;' but the Abbè Sallier has gone still further, and has shown that, in the language of the ancient inhabitants of Epirus, the same word had the two significations mentioned by Bochart.

This oracle afterwards grew famous for its responses, and the priests used considerable ingenuity in the delivery of their answers. They cautiously kept all who came to consult them at a distance from the dark recess where the shrine was situated; and took care to deliver their responses in a manner so ambiguous, as to make people believe whatever they pleased. In this circumstance originates the variation in the descriptions of the oracle which the ancients have left us. According to some, it was the oaks that spoke; according to others, the beeches; while a third account was that pigeons gave the answers; and, lastly, it was said that the ringing of certain cauldrons there suspended, divulged the will of heaven. Stephanus Byzantinus has left a curious account of this contrivance of the cauldrons; he says that in that part of the forest of Dodona, where the oracle stood, there were two pillars erected, at a small distance from each other. On one there was placed a brazen vessel, about the size of an ordinary cauldron: and on the other a little boy, which was most probably a piece of mechanism, who held a brazen whip with several thongs which hung loose, and were easily moved. When the wind blew, the lashes struck against the vessel, and occasioned a noise while the wind continued. It was from them, he says, that the forest took the name of Dodona; 'dodo,' in the ancient language, signifying 'a cauldron.'

Strabo says that the responses were originally given by three priestesses: and he gives the reason why two priests were afterwards added to them. The Bœotians having been treacherously attacked by the people of Thrace during a truce which they had made, went to consult the oracle of Dodona; and the priestess answering them that if they would act impiously their design would succeed to their wish, the envoys suspected that this response had been suggested by the enemy, and burned her in revenge; after which they vindicated their cruelty by saying that if the priestess designed to deceive them, she well deserved her punishment; and that if she spoke with truthfulness, they had only followed the advice of the oracle. This argument not satisfying the people of the district, the Bœotian envoys were seized; but as they pleaded that it was unjust that two women already prejudiced against them should be their judges, two priests were added to decide the matter. These, in return for their being the occasion of putting them in an office so honourable and lucrative, acquitted the Bœotians; whose fellow countrymen were always in the habit from that time of addressing the priests when they consulted the oracle. These priests were called by the name of 'Selli.'

FABLE VII.

Polyphemus, one of the Cyclops, jealous of Acis, who is in love with Galatea, kills the youth with a rock which he hurls at him; on which, his blood is changed into a river which bears his name.

They make for the neighbouring land of the Phæacians, planted with beauteous fruit. After this, Epirus and Buthrotos, ruled over by the Phrygian prophet, and a fictitious Troy, are reached. Thence, acquainted with the future, all which, Helenus, the son of Priam, in his faithful instructions has forewarned them of, they enter Sicania. With three points this projects into the sea. Of these, Pachynos is turned towards the showery South: Lilybæum is exposed to the soft Zephyrs: but Peloros looks towards the Bear, free from the sea, and towards Boreas. By this part the Trojans enter; and with oars and favouring tide, at nightfall the fleet makes the Zancleæan sands. Scylla infests the right hand side, the restless Charybdis the left. This swallows and vomits forth again ships taken down; the other, having the face of a maiden, has her swarthy stomach surrounded with fierce dogs; and (if the poets have not left the whole a fiction) once on a time, too, she was a maiden. Many suitors courted her; who being repulsed, she, most beloved by the Nymphs of the ocean, went to the ocean Nymphs, and used to relate the eluded loves of the youths.

While Galatea was giving her hair to be combed, heaving sighs, she addressed her in such words as these: "And yet, O maiden, no ungentle race of men does woo thee; and as thou dost, thou art able to deny them with impunity. But I, whose sire is Nereus, whom the azure Doris bore, who am guarded, too, by a crowd of sisters, was not able, but through the waves, to escape the passion of the Cyclop;" and as she spoke, the tears choked her utterance. When, with her fingers like marble, the maiden had wiped these away, and had comforted 470 xiii. 747-782. the Goddess, "Tell me, dearest," said she, "and conceal not from me (for I am true to thee) the cause of thy grief.” In these words did the Nereid reply to the daughter of Cratæis: “Acis was the son of Faunus and of the Nymph Symæthis, a great delight, indeed, to his father and his mother, yet a still greater to me. For the charming youth had attached me to himself alone, and eight birth-days having a second time been passed, he had now marked his tender cheeks with the dubious down. Him I pursued; incessantly did the Cyclop me pursue. Nor can I, shouldst thou enquire, declare whether the hatred of the Cyclop, or the love of Acis, was the stronger in me. They were equal. O genial Venus! how great is the power of thy sway. For that savage, and one to be dreaded by the very woods, and beheld with impunity by no stranger, the contemner of great Olympus with the Gods themselves, now feels what love is; and, captivated with passion for me, he burns, forgetting his cattle and his caves.

“And now, Polyphemus, thou hast a care for thy looks, and now for the art of pleasing; now thou combest out thy stiffened hair with rakes, and now it pleases thee to cut thy shaggy beard with the sickle, and to look at thy fierce features in the water, and so to compose them. Thy love for carnage, and thy fierceness, and thy insatiate thirst for blood, now cease; and the ships both come and go in safety. Telemus, in the mean time arriving at the Sicilian Ætna, Telemus, the son of Eurymus, whom no omen had ever deceived, accosts the dreadful Polyphemus, and says, ‘The single eye that thou dost carry in the midst of thy forehead, Ulysses shall take away from thee.’ He laughed, and said, ‘O most silly of the prophets, thou art mistaken, for another has already taken it away.’ Thus does he slight him, in vain warning him of the truth; and he either burdens the shore, stalking along with huge strides, or, wearied, he returns to his shaded cave.

middle. His woolly flocks followed, there being no one to guide them. After the pine tree, which afforded him the 471
xiii. 782-816. service of a staff, but more fitted for sail-yards, was laid before his feet, and his pipe was taken up, formed of a hundred reeds; all the mountains were sensible of the piping of the shepherd: the waves, too, were sensible. I, lying hid within a rock, and reclining on the bosom of my own Acis, from afar caught such words as these with my ears, and marked them so heard in my mind: 'O Galatea, fairer than the leaf of the snow-white privet, more blooming than the meadows, more slender than the tall alder, brighter than glass, more wanton than the tender kid, smoother than the shells worn by continual floods, more pleasing than the winter's sun, or than the summer's shade, more beauteous than the apples, more sightly than the lofty plane tree, clearer than ice, sweeter than the ripened grape, softer than both the down of the swan, and than curdled milk, and, didst thou not fly me, more beauteous than a watered garden. And yet thou, the same Galatea, art wilder than the untamed bullocks, harder than the aged oak, more unstable than the waters, tougher than both the twigs of osier and than the white vines, more immoveable than these rocks, more violent than the torrent, prouder than the bepraised peacock, fiercer than the fire, rougher than the thistles, more cruel than the pregnant she-bear, more deaf than the ocean waves, more savage than the trodden water-snake: and, what I could especially wish to deprive thee of, fleeter not only than the deer when pursued by the loud barkings, but even than the winds and the fleeting air.

“But didst thou but know me well, thou wouldst repine at having fled, and thou thyself wouldst blame thy own hesitation, and wouldst strive to retain me. I have a part of the mountain for my cave, pendent with the native rock; in which the sun is not felt in the middle of the heat, nor is the winter felt: there are apples that load the boughs; there are grapes on the lengthening vines, resembling gold; and there are purple ones as well; both the one and the other do I reserve for thee. With thine own hands thou shalt thyself gather the soft strawberries growing beneath the woodland 472 xiii. 816-851. shade; thou thyself shalt pluck the cornels of autumn, and plums not only darkened with their black juice, but even of the choicest kinds, and resembling new wax. Nor, I being thy husband, will there be wanting to thee chesnuts, nor the fruit of the arbutue tree: every tree shall be at thy service. All this cattle is my own: many, too, are wandering in the valleys: many the wood conceals: many more are penned in my caves. Nor, shouldst thou ask me perchance, could I tell thee, how many there are; 'tis for the poor man to count his cattle. For the praises of these trust not me at all; in person thou thyself mayst see how they can hardly support with their legs their distended udders. Lambs, too, a smaller breed, are in the warm folds: there are kids, too, of equal age to them in other folds. Snow-white milk I always have: a part of it is kept for drinking, another part the liquified rennet hardens. Nor will common delights, and ordinary enjoyments alone fall to thy lot, such as does, and hares, and she-goats, or a pair of doves, or a nest taken from the tree top. I have found on the mountain summit the twin cubs of a shaggy she-bear, which can play with thee, so like each other that thou couldst scarce distinguish them. These I found, and I said, 'These for my mistress will I keep.'

“Do now but raise thy beauteous head from out of the azure sea; now, Galatea, come, and do not scorn my presents. Surely I know myself, and myself but lately I beheld in the reflection of the limpid water; and my figure pleased me as I saw it. See how huge I am. Not Jove, in heaven, is greater than this body; for thou art wont to tell how one Jupiter reigns, who he is I know not. Plenty of hair hangs over my grisly features, and, like a grove, overshadows my shoulders; nor think it uncomely that my body is rough, thick set with stiff bristles. A tree without leaves is unseemly; a horse is unseemly, unless a mane covers his tawny neck. Feathers cover the birds; their wool is an ornament to the sheep; a beard and rough hair upon their body is becoming to men. I have but one eye in the middle of my forehead, but it is like 473 xiii. 852-890. a large buckler. Well! and does not the Sun from the heavens behold all these things? and yet the Sun has but one eye. And, besides, in your seas does my father reign. Him do I offer thee for a father-in-law; only do take pity on a suppliant, and hear his prayer, for to thee alone do I give way. And I, who despise Jove, and the heavens, and the piercing lightnings, dread thee, daughter of Nereus; than the lightnings is thy wrath more dreadful to me. But I should be more patient under these slights, if thou didst avoid all men. For why, rejecting the Cyclop, dost thou love Acis? And why prefer Acis to my embraces? Yet, let him please himself, and let him please thee, too, Galatea, though I wish he could not; if only the opportunity is given, he shall find that I have strength proportioned to a body so vast. I will pull out his palpitating entrails; and I will scatter his torn limbs about the fields, and throughout thy waves, and thus let him be united to thee. For I burn: and my passion, thus slighted, rages with the greater fury; and I seem to be carrying in my breast Ætna, transferred there with all its flames; and yet, Galatea, thou art unmoved.'

“Having in vain uttered such complaints (for all this I saw), he rises; and like an enraged bull, when the heifer is taken away from him, he could not stand still, and he wandered in the wood, and the well known forests. When the savage monster espied me, and Acis unsuspecting and apprehensive of no such thing; and he exclaimed:—‘I see you, and I shall cause this to be the last union for your affection.’ And that voice was as loud as an enraged Cyclop ought, for his size, to have. Ætna trembled at the noise; but I, struck with horror, plunged into the adjoining sea. The hero, son of Symæthis, turned his back and fled, and cried, —‘Help me, Galatea, I entreat thee; help me, ye parents of hers; and admit me, now on the point of destruction, within your realms.' The Cyclop pursued, and hurled a fragment, torn from the mountain; and though the extreme angle only of the rock reached him, yet it entirely crushed Acis. But I did the only thing that was allowed by the Fates to be done, that Acis might assume the properties of his grandsire. The purple blood flowed from beneath the rock, and in a little time the redness began to vanish; and at first it became the colour of a stream muddied by a shower; and, in time, it became clear. Then the rock, that had been thrown, opened, 474 xiii. 890-897. and through the chinks, a reed vigorous and stately arose, and the hollow mouth of the rock resounded with the waters gushing forth. And, wondrous event! a youth suddenly emerged, as far as the midriff, having his new-made horns encircled with twining reeds. And he, but that he was of larger stature, and azure in all his features, was Acis still. But, even then, still it was Acis, changed into a river; and the stream has since retained that ancient name."

EXPLANATION.

Homer, who, in the ninth Book of the Odyssey, has entered fully into the subject of Polyphemus and the other Cyclops, does not recount this adventure, which Ovid has borrowed from Theocritus, the Sicilian poet. Some writers have suggested that Acis was a Sicilian youth, who, having met with a repulse from Galatea, threw himself into the river, which was afterwards called by his name. It is, however, more probable that this river was so called from the rapidity of its course. Indeed, the scholiast on Theocritus and Eustathius distinctly say that the stream was called Acis, because the swiftness of its course resembled that of an arrow, which was called ἀκίς, in the Greek language.

Homer, in describing the Cyclops, informs us that they were a lawless race, who, neglecting husbandry, lived on the spontaneous produce of a rich soil, and dwelling in mountain caves, devoted themselves entirely to the pleasures of a pastoral life. He says that they were men of monstrous stature, and had but one eye, in the middle of their forehead. Thucydides supposes them to have been the original inhabitants of Sicily. As their origin was unknown, it was said that they were the offspring of Neptune, or, in other words, that they had come by sea, to settle in Sicily. According to Justin, they retained possession of the island till the time of Cocalus; but in that point he disagrees with Homer, who represents them as being in the island after the time of Cocalus, who was a contemporary of Minos, and lived long before the Trojan war.

They inhabited the western parts of Sicily, near the promontories of Lilybæum and Drepanum; and from that circumstance, according to Bochart, they received their name. He supposes that the Cyclopes were so called from the Phœnician compound word Chek-lub, contracted for Chek-le-lub, which, according to him, was the name of the Gulf of Lilybæum. Because, in the Greek language κυκλὸς signified 'a circle,' and ὤψις, 'an eye,' it was given out that the name of Cyclops was given to them, because they had but one round eye in the middle of the forehead. It is possible that they may have acquired their character of being cannibals on true grounds, or, perhaps, only because they were noted for their extreme cruelty. Living near the volcanic mountain of Ætna, they were called the workmen of Vulcan; and Virgil describes them as forging the thunderbolts of Jupiter. Some writers represent them as having armed the three Deities, who divided the empire of the world: Jupiter with thunder; Pluto with his helmet; and Neptune with his trident. Statius represents them as the builders of the walls of Argos and Virgil as the founders of the gates of the Elysian fields. Aristotle supposes that they were the first builders of towers.

Diodorus Siculus and Tzetzes say that Polyphemus was king of a part of Sicily, when Ulysses landed there; who, falling in love with Elpe, the daughter of the king, carried her off. The Læstrygons, the neighbours of Polyphemus, pursued him, and obliged him to give up the damsel, who was brought back to her father. Ulysses, in relating the story to the Phæacians, artfully concealed circumstances so little to his credit, and with impunity invented the absurdities which he related concerning a country to which his audience were utter strangers.

FABLE VIII.

Glaucus having observed some fishes which he has laid upon the grass revive and leap again into the water, is desirous to try the influence of the grass on himself. Putting some of it into his mouth, he immediately becomes mad, and leaping into the sea, is transformed into a sea God.

Galatea ceases speaking, and the company breaking up, they depart; and the Nereids swim in the becalmed waves. Scylla returns, (for, in truth, she does not trust herself in the midst of the ocean) and either wanders about without garments on the thirsty sand, or, when she is tired, having lighted upon some lonely recess of the sea, cools her limbs in the enclosed waves. When, lo! cleaving the deep, Glaucus comes, a new-made inhabitant of the deep sea, his limbs having been lately transformed at Anthedon, near Eubœa; and he lingers from passion for the maiden now seen, and utters whatever words he thinks may detain her as she flies. Yet still she flies, and, swift through fear, she arrives at the top of a mountain, situate near the shore.

In front of the sea, there is a huge ridge, terminating in one summit, bending for a long distance over the waves, and without trees. Here she stands, and secured by the place, ignorant whether he is a monster or a God, she both admires his colour, and his flowing hair that covers his shoulders and his back, and how a wreathed fish closes the extremity of his groin. This he perceives; and leaning upon a rock that stands hard by, he says, “Maiden, I am no monster, no savage 476 xiii. 917-956. beast; I am a God of the waters: nor have Proteus, and Triton, and Palæmon, the son of Athamas, a more uncontrolled reign over the deep. Yet formerly I was a mortal; but, still, devoted to the deep sea, even then was I employed in it. For, at one time, I used to drag the nets that swept up the fish; at another time, seated on a rock, I managed the line with the rod. The shore was adjacent to a verdant meadow, one part of which was surrounded with water, the other with grass, which, neither the horned heifers had hurt with their browsing, nor had you, ye harmless sheep, nor you, ye shaggy goats, ever cropped it. No industrious bee took thence the collected blossoms, no festive garlands were gathered thence for the head; and no mower’s hands had ever cut it. I was the first to be seated on that turf, while I was drying the dripping nets. And that I might count in their order the fish that I had taken; I laid out those upon it which either chance had driven to my nets, or their own credulity to my barbed hooks.

“The thing is like a fiction (but of what use is it to me to coin fictions?); on touching the grass my prey began to move, and to shift their sides, and to skip about on the land, as though in the sea. And while I both paused and wondered, the whole batch flew off to the waves, and left behind their new master and the shore. I was amazed, and, in doubt for a long time, I considered what could be the cause; whether some Divinity had done this, or whether the juice of some herb. ‘And yet,’ said I, ‘what herb has these properties?’ and with my hand I plucked the grass, and I chewed it, so plucked, with my teeth. Hardly had my throat well swallowed the unknown juices, when I suddenly felt my entrails inwardly throb, and my mind taken possession of by the passions of another nature. Nor could I stay in that place; and I exclaimed, 'Farewell, land, never more to be revisited;' and plunged my body beneath the deep. The Gods of the sea vouchsafed me, on being received by them, kindred honours, and they entreated Oceanus and Tethys to take away from me whatever mortality I bore. By them was I purified; and a charm being repeated over me nine times, that washes away all guilt, I was commanded to put my breast beneath a hundred streams.

"There was no delay; rivers issuing from different springs, and whole seas, were poured over my head. Thus far I can relate to thee what happened worthy to be related, and thus far do I remember; but my understanding was not conscious of the rest. When it returned to me, I found myself different throughout all my body from what I was before, and not the same in mind. Then, for the first time, did I behold this beard, green with its deep colour, and my flowing hair, which I sweep along the spacious seas, and my huge shoulders, and my azurecoloured arms, and the extremities of my legs tapering in the form of a finny fish. But still, what does this form avail me, what to have pleased the ocean Deities, and what to be a God, if thou art not moved by these things?"

As he was saying such things as these, and about to say still more, Scylla left the God. He was enraged, and, provoked at the repulse, he repaired to the marvellous court of Circe, the daughter of Titan.

EXPLANATION.

The ancient writers mention three persons of the name of Glaucus: one was the son of Minos, the second of Hippolochus, and the third is the one here mentioned. Strabo calls him the son of Polybus, while other writers make him to have been the son of Phorbias, and others of Neptune. Being drowned, perhaps by accident, to do honour to his memory, it was promulgated that he had become a sea God, and the city of Anthedon, of which he was a native, worshipped him as such.

Athenæus says that he carried off Ariadne from the isle of Naxos, where Theseus had left her; on which Bacchus punished him by binding him to a vine. According to Diodorus Siculus, he appeared to the Argonauts, when overtaken by a storm. From Apollonius Rhodius we learn that he foretold to them that Hercules, and Castor and Pollux, would be received into the number of the Gods. It was also said, that in the battle which took place between Jason and the Tyrrhenians, he was the only person that escaped unwounded. Euripides, who is followed by Pausanias, says that he was the interpreter of Nereus, and was skilled in prophecy; and Nicander even says that it was from him that Apollo learned the art of prediction. Strabo and Philostratus say that he was metamorphosed into a Triton, which is a-kin to the description of his appearance here given by Ovid.

The place where he leaped into the sea was long remembered; and in the days of Pausanias 'Glaucus' Leap' was still pointed out by the people of Anthedon. It is not improbable that he drowned himself for some reason which tradition failed to hand down to posterity.

BOOK THE FOURTEENTH.

FABLE I.

Circe becomes enamoured of Glaucus, who complains to her of his repulse by Scylla. She endeavours, without success, to make him desert Scylla for herself. In revenge, she poisons the fountain where the Nymph is wont to bathe, and communicates to her a hideous form; which is so insupportable to Scylla, that she throws herself into the sea, and is transformed into a rock.

And now Glaucus, the Eubœan plougher of the swelling waves, had left behind Ætna, placed upon the jaws of the Giant, and the fields of the Cyclops, that had never experienced the harrow or the use of the plough, and that were never indebted to the yoked oxen; he had left Zancle, too, behind, and the opposite walls of Rhegium, and the sea, abundant cause of shipwreck, which, confined by the two shores, bounds the Ausonian and the Sicilian lands. Thence, swimming with his huge hands through the Etrurian seas, Glaucus arrived at the grass-clad hills, and the halls of Circe, the daughter of the Sun, filled with various wild beasts. Soon as he beheld her, after salutations were given and received, he said, "Do thou, a Goddess, have compassion on me a God; for thou alone (should I only seem deserving of it,) art able to relieve this passion of mine. Daughter of Titan, by none is it better known how great is the power of herbs, than by me, who have been transformed by their agency; and, that the cause of my passion may not be unknown to thee, Scylla has been beheld by me on the Italian shores, opposite the Messenian walls. I am ashamed to recount my promises, my entreaties, my caresses, and my rejected suit. But, do thou, if there is any power in incantations, utter the incantation with thy holy lips; 479 xiv. 21-50. or, if any herb is more efficacious, make use of the proved virtues of powerful herbs. But I do not request thee to cure me, and to heal these wounds; and there is no necessity for an end to them; but let her share in the flame." But Circe, (for no one has a temper more susceptible of such a passion, whether it is that the cause of it originates in herself, or whether it is that Venus, offended by her father's discovery, causes this,) utters such words as these: —

"Thou wilt more successfully court her who is willing, and who entertains similar desires, and who is captivated with an equal passion. Thou art worthy of it, and assuredly thou oughtst to be courted spontaneously; and, if thou givest any hopes, believe me, thou shalt be courted spontaneously. That thou mayst entertain no doubts, or lest confidence in thy own beauty may not exist, behold! I who am both a Goddess, and the daughter of the radiant Sun, and am so potent with my charms, and so potent with my herbs, wish to be thine. Despise her who despises thee; her, who is attached to thee, repay by like attachment, and, by one act, take vengeance on two individuals."

Glaucus answered her, making such attempts as these, —"Sooner shall foliage grow in the ocean, and sooner shall sea-weed spring up on the tops of the mountains, than my affections shall change, while Scylla is alive." The Goddess is indignant; and since she is not able to injure him, and as she loves him she does not wish to do so, she is enraged against her, who has been preferred to herself; and, offended with these crosses in love, she immediately bruises herbs, infamous for their horrid juices, and, when bruised, she mingles with them the incantations of Hecate. She puts on azure vestments too, and through the troop of fawning wild beasts she issues from the midst of her hall; and making for Rhegium, opposite to the rocks of Zancle, she enters the waves boiling with the tides; on these, as though on the firm shore, she impresses her footsteps, and with dry feet she skims along the surface of the waves.

There was a little bay, curving in the shape of a bent bow, a favourite retreat of Scylla, whither she used to retire from the influence both of the sea and of the weather, when the sun was at its height in his mid career, and made the smallest shadow from the head downwards. This the Goddess infects beforehand, and pollutes it with monster-breeding drugs; on it she sprinkles the juices distilled from the noxious root, and thrice nine times, with her magic lips, she mutters over the mysterious charm, enwrapped in the dubious language of strange words. Scylla comes; and she has now gone in up to the middle of her stomach, when she beholds her loins grow hideous with barking monsters; and, at first believing that they are no part of her own body, she flies from them and drives them off, and is in dread of the annoying mouths of the dogs; but those that she flies from, she carries along with herself; and as she examines the substance of her thighs, her legs, and her feet, she meets with Cerberean jaws in place of those parts. The fury of the dogs still continues, and the backs of savage monsters lying beneath her groin, cut short, and her prominent stomach, still adhere to them.

Glaucus, still in love, bewailed her, and fled from an alliance with Circe, who had thus too hostilely employed the potency of herbs. Scylla remained on that spot; and, at the first moment that an opportunity was given, in her hatred of Circe, she deprived Ulysses of his companions. Soon after, the same Scylla would have overwhelmed the Trojan ships, had she not been first transformed into a rock, which even now is prominent with its crags; this rock the sailor, too, avoids.

EXPLANATION.

According to Hesiod, Circe was the daughter of the Sun and of the Nymph Perse, and the sister of Pasiphaë, the wife of Minos. Homer makes her the sister of Æetes, the king of Colchis, while other authors represent her as the daughter of that monarch, and the sister of Medea. Being acquainted with the properties of simples, and having used her art in mixing poisonous draughts, she was generally looked upon as a sorceress. Apollonius Rhodius says that she poisoned her husband, the king of the Sarmatians, and that her father Apollo rescued her from the rage of her subjects, by transporting her in his chariot into Italy. Virgil and Ovid say that she inhabited one of the promontories of Italy, which afterwards bore her name, and which at the present day is known by the name of Monte Circello.

It is not improbable that the person who went by the name of Circe was never in Colchis or Thrace, and that she was styled the sister of Medea, merely on account of the similarity of their characters; that they both were called daughters of the Sun, because they understood the properties of simples; and that their pretended enchantments were only a poetical mode of describing the effect of their beauty, which drew many suitors after them, who lost themselves in the dissipation of a voluptuous life. Indeed, Strabo says, and very judiciously, as it would seem, that Homer having heard persons mention the expedition of Jason to Colchis, and hearing the stories of Medea and Circe, he took occasion to say, from the resemblance of their characters, that they were sisters.

According to some authors, Scylla was the daughter of Phorcys and Hecate; but as other writers say, of Typhon. Homer describes her in the following terms:—'She had a voice like that of a young whelp; no man, not even a God, could behold her without horror. She had twelve feet, six long necks, and at the end of each a monstrous head, whose mouth was provided with a triple row of teeth.' Another ancient writer says, that these heads were those of an insect, a dog, a lion, a whale, a Gorgon, and a human being. Virgil has in a great measure followed the description given by Homer. Between Messina and Reggio there is a narrow strait, where high crags project into the sea on each side. The part on the Sicilian side was called Charybdis, and that on the Italian shore was named Scylla. This spot has ever been famous for its dangerous whirlpools, and the extreme difficulty of its navigation. Several rapid currents meeting there, and the tide running through the strait with great impetuosity, the sea sends forth a dismal noise, not unlike that of the howling or barking of dogs, as Virgil has expressed it, in the words, 'Multis circum latrantibus undis.'

Palæphatus and FUSEBIUS, not satisfied with the story being based on such simple facts, assert that Scylla was a ship that belonged to certain Etrurian pirates, who used to infest the coasts of Sicily, and that it had the figure of a woman carved on its head, whose lower parts were surrounded with dogs. According to these writers, Ulysses escaped them; and then, using the privileges of a traveller, told the story to the credulous Phæacians in the marvellous terms in which Homer has related it. BOCHART, however, says that the two names were derived from the Phœnician language, in which 'Scol,' the root of Scylla, signified 'a ruin,' and Charybdis, 'a gulf.'

FABLE II.

Dido entertains Æneas in her palace, and falls in love with him. He afterwards abandons her, on which she stabs herself in despair. Jupiter transforms the Cercopes into apes; and the islands which they inhabit are afterwards called 'Pithecusæ,' from the Greek word signifying 'an ape.'

After the Trojan ships, with their oars, had passed by her and the ravening Charybdis; when now they had approached 482 xiv. 76-93. near the Ausonian shores, they were carried back by the winds to the Libyan coasts. The Sidonian Dido, she who was doomed not easily to endure the loss of her Phrygian husband, received Æneas, both in her home and her affection; on the pile, too, erected under the pretext of sacred rites, she fell upon the sword; and, herself deceived, she deceived all. Again, flying from the newly erected walls of the sandy regions, and being carried back to the seat of Eryx and the attached Acestes, he performs sacrifice, and pays honour to the tomb of his father. He now loosens from shore the ships which Iris, the minister of Juno, has almost burned; and passes by the realms of the son of Hippotas, and the regions that smoke with the heated sulphur, and leaves behind him the rocks of the Sirens, daughters of Acheloüs; and the ship, deprived of its pilot, coasts along Inarime and Prochyta, and Pithecusæ, situate on a barren hill, so called from the name of its inhabitants.

For the father of the Gods, once abhorring the frauds and perjuries of the Cercopians, and the crimes of the fraudulent race, changed these men into ugly animals; that these same 483 xiv. 93-100. beings might be able to appear unlike men, and yet like them. He both contracted their limbs, and flattened their noses; bent back from their foreheads; and he furrowed their faces with the wrinkles of old age. And he sent them into this spot, with the whole of their bodies covered with long yellow hair. Moreover, he first took away from them the use of language, and of their tongues, made for dreadful perjury; he only allowed them to be able to complain with a harsh jabbering.

EXPLANATION.

Although Ovid passes over the particulars of the visit of Æneas to Dido, and only mentions her death incidentally, we may give a few words to a story which has been rendered memorable by the beautiful poem of Virgil. Elisa, or Dido, was the daughter of Belus, king of Tyre. According to Justin,

at his death he left his crown to his son Pygmalion jointly with Dido, who was a woman of extraordinary beauty. She was afterwards married to her uncle Sicharbas, who is called Sichæus by Virgil. Being priest of Hercules, an office next in rank to that of king, he was possessed of immense treasures, which the known avarice of Pygmalion caused him to conceal in the earth. Pygmalion having caused him to be assassinated, at which Dido first expressed great resentment, she afterwards pretended a reconciliation, the better to cover the design which she had formed to escape from the kingdom.

Having secured the cooperation of several of the discontented Tyrians, she requested permission to visit Tyre, and to leave her melancholy retreat, where every thing contributed to increase her misery by recalling the remembrance of her deceased husband. Hoping to seize her treasures, Pygmalion granted her request. Putting her wealth on board ship, she mixed some bags filled with sand among those that contained gold, for the purpose of deceiving those whom the king had sent to observe her and to escort her to Tyre. When out at sea, she threw the bags overboard, to appease the spirit of her husband, as she pretended, by sacrificing those treasures that had cost him his life. Then addressing the officers that accompanied her, she assured them that they would meet with but a bad reception from the king for having permitted so much wealth to be wasted, and that it would be more advantageous for them to fly from his resentment. The officers embarking in her design, after they had taken on board some Tyrian nobles, who were privy to the plan, she offered sacrifice to Hercules, and again set sail. Landing in Cyprus, they carried off eighty young women, who were married to her companions. On discovering her flight, Pygmalion at first intended to pursue her; but the intreaties of his mother, and the remonstrances of the priests, caused him to abandon his design.

Having arrived on the coast of Africa, Dido bargained with the inhabitants of the coast for as much ground as she could encompass with a bull's hide. This being granted, she cut the hide into as many thongs as enclosed ground sufficient to build a fort upon; which was in consequence called 'Byrsa.' In making the foundation, an ox's head was dug up, 484 xiv. 101-102. which being supposed to portend slavery to the city, if built there, they removed to another spot, where, in digging, they found a horse's head, which was considered to be a more favourable omen. The story of the citadel being named from the bull's hide was very probably invented by the Greeks; who, finding in the Phœnician narrative of the foundation of Carthage, the citadel mentioned by the Tyrian name of 'Bostra,' which had that signification, and fancying, from its resemblance to their word βυρσᾶ, that it was derived from it, invented the fable of the hide.

Being pressed by Iarbas, king of Mauritania, to marry him, she asked for three months to come to a determination. The time expiring, she ordered a sacrifice to be made as an expiation to her husband's shade, and caused a pile to be erected, avowedly for the purpose of burning all that belonged to him. Ascending it, she pretended to expedite the sacrifice, and then despatched herself with a poniard. Virgil, wishing to deduce the hatred of the Romans and Carthaginians from the very time of Æneas, invented the story of the visit of Æneas to Dido; though he was perhaps guilty of a great anachronism in so doing, as the taking of Troy most probably preceded the foundation of Carthage by at least two centuries. Ovid has also related her story at length in the third book of the Fasti, and has followed Virgil's account of the treacherous conduct of Æneas, while he represents Iarbas as capturing her city after her death, and driving her sister Anna into exile. In the Phœnician language the word 'Dido' signified 'the bold woman,' and it is probable that Elisa only received that name after her death. Bochart has taken considerable pains to prove that she was the aunt of Jezebel, the famous, or rather infamous, wife of King Ahab.

The Poet then proceeds to say that Æneas saw the islands of the Cercopians on his way, whom Jupiter had transformed into apes. Æschines and Suidas say that there were two notorious robbers, inhabitants of an island adjacent to Sicily, named Candulus and Atlas, who committed outrages on all who approached the island. Being about to insult Jupiter himself, he transformed them into apes, from which circumstance the island received its name of Pithecusa. Sabinus says that they were called Cercopes, because in their treachery they were like monkeys, who fawn with their tails, when they design nothing but mischief. Zenobius places the Cercopes in Libya; and says that they were changed into rocks, for having offered to fight with Hercules.

FABLE III.

Apollo is enamoured of the Sibyl, and, to engage her affection, offers her as many years as she can grasp grains of sand. She forgets to ask that she may always continue in the bloom of youth, and consequently becomes gray and decrepit.

After he has passed by these, and has left the walls of Parthenope on the right hand, on the left side he approaches 485 xiv. 102-128. the tomb of the tuneful son of Æolus; and he enters the shores of Cumæ, regions abounding in the sedge of the swamp, and the cavern of the long-lived Sibyl, and entreats her, that through Avernus, he may visit the shade of his father. But she raises her countenance, a long time fixed on the ground; and at length, inspired by the influence of the God, she says, "Thou dost request a great thing, O hero, most renowned by thy achievements, whose right hand has been proved by the sword, whose affection has been proved by the flames. Yet, Trojan, lay aside all apprehension, thou shalt obtain thy request; and under my guidance thou shalt visit the abodes of Elysium, the most distant realms of the universe, and the beloved shade of thy parent. To virtue, no path is inaccessible.”

Thus she spoke, and she pointed out a branch refulgent with gold, in the woods of the Juno of Avernus, and commanded him to pluck it from its stem. Æneas obeyed; and he beheld the power of the dread Orcus, and his own ancestors, and the aged ghost of the magnanimous Anchises; he learned, too, the ordinances of those regions, and what dangers would have to be undergone by him in his future wars. Tracing back thence his weary steps along the path, he beguiled his labour in discourse with his Cumæan guide. And while he was pursuing his frightful journey along darkening shades, he said, “Whether thou art a Goddess personally, or whether thou art but a woman most favoured by the Deities, to me shalt thou always be equal to a Divinity; I will confess, too, that I exist through thy kindness, who hast willed that I should visit the abodes of death, and that I should escape those abodes of death when beheld by me. For this kindness, when I have emerged into the breezes of the air, I will erect a temple to thee, and I will give thee the honours of frankincense.”

The prophetess looks upon him, and, with heaving sighs, she says, “Neither am I a Goddess, nor do thou honour a human being with the tribute of the holy frankincense. And, that thou mayst not err in ignorance, life eternal and without end was offered me, had my virginity but yielded to Phoëbus, in love with me. But while he was hoping for this, while he was desiring to bribe me beforehand with gifts, he said: ‘Maiden of Cumæ, choose whatever thou mayst wish, thou shalt gain thy wish.’ I, pointing to a heap of collected dust, inconsiderately asked that as many birth-days might be my lot, as the dust contained particles. It escaped me to desire as well, at the same time, years vigorous with youth.

But yet he offered me these, and eternal youth, had I submitted to his desires. Having rejected the offers of Phoebus, I remain unmarried. But now my more vigorous years have passed by, and crazy old age approaches with its trembling step, and this must I long endure.

“For thou beholdest me, having now lived seven ages; it remains for me to equal the number of particles of the dust; yet to behold three hundred harvests, and three hundred vintages. The time will come, when length of days will make me diminutive from a person so large; and when my limbs, wasted by old age, will be reduced to the most trifling weight. Then I shall not seem to have once been beloved, nor once to have pleased a God. Even Phoebus himself will, perhaps, not recognize me; or, perhaps, he will deny that he loved me. To that degree shall I be said to be changed; and though perceived by none, I shall still be recognized by my voice. My voice the Destinies will leave me.”

EXPLANATION.

The early fathers of the church, and particularly Justin, in their works in defence of Christianity, made use of the Sibylline verses of the ancients. The Emperor Constantine, too, in his harangue before the Nicene Council, quoted them, as redounding to the advantage of Christianity; although he then stated that many persons did not believe that the Sibyls were the authors of them. St. Augustin, too, employs several of their alleged predictions to enforce the truths of the Christian religion.

Sebastian Castalio has warmly maintained the truth of the oracles contained in these verses, though he admits that they have been very much interpolated. Other writers, however, having carefully examined them, have pronounced them to be spurious, and so many pious frauds; which, perhaps, may be pronounced to be the general opinion at the present day. We will, however, shortly enquire how many

Sibyls of 487 antiquity there were, and when they lived; whether any of their works were ever promulgated for the perusal of the public, and whether the verses which still exist under their name have any ground to be considered genuine.

There is no doubt but that in ancient times there existed certain women, who, led by a frenzied enthusiasm, uttered obscure sentences, which passed for predictions with the credulous people who went to consult them. Virgil and Ovid represent Æneas as going to the cave of the Cumæan Sibyl, to learn from her the success of the wars he should be engaged in. Plato, Strabo, Plutarch, Pliny, Solinus, and Pausanias, with many other writers, have mentioned the Sibyls; and it would be absurd, with Faustus Socinus, to affirm that no Sibyls ever existed. Indeed, Plato and other authors of antiquity go so far as to say, that by their productions they were essentially the benefactors of mankind. Some mention but one Sibyl, who was born either at Babylon or at Erythræ, in Phrygia. Diodorus Siculus mentions one only, and assigns Delphi as her locality, calling her by the name of Daphne. Strabo and Stephanus Byzantinus mention two, the one of Gergæ, a little town near Troy, and the other of Mermessus, in the same country. Solinus reckons three; the Delphian, named Herophile, the Erythræan, and the Cumæan. According to Varro, their number amounted to ten, whose names, in the order of time which Pausanias assigns them, were as follows:

The first and the most ancient was the Delphian, who lived before the Trojan war. The second was the Erythræan, who was said to have been the first composer of acrostic verses, and who also lived before the Trojan war. The third was the Cumæan, who was mentioned by Nævius in his book on the first Punic war, and by Piso in his annals. She is the Sibyl spoken of in the Æneid, and her name was Deïphobe. The fourth was the Samian, called Pitho, though Eusebius calls her Herophile, and he makes her to have lived about the time of Numa Pompilius. The fifth, whose name was Amalthea, or Demophile, lived at Cumæ, in Asia Minor. The sixth was the Hellespontine Sibyl, born at Mermessus, near Troy. The seventh was the Libyan, mentioned by Euripides. Some suppose that she was the first who had the name of Sibyl, which was given to her by the people of Africa. The eighth was the Persian or Babylonian Sibyl, whom Suidas names Sambetha. The ninth was the Phrygian, who delivered her oracles at Ancyra, in Phrygia. The tenth was the Tiburtine, who was called Albunea, and prophesied near Tibur, or Tivoli, on the banks of the Anio. In the present story Ovid evidently intends to represent these various Sibyls as being the same person; and to account for her prolonged existence, by representing that Apollo had granted her a life to last for many ages.

Several ages before the Christian era, the Romans had a collection of verses, which were commonly attributed to the Sibyls. These they often consulted; and in the time of Tarquinius Superbus, two officers were appointed for the purpose of keeping the Sibylline books, whose business it was to look in them on the occasion of any public calamity, in order to see whether it had been foretold and to make their report to the Senate. The books were kept in a stone chest, beneath the temple of Jupiter Capitolinus. These Duumvirs continued until the year of Rome 388, when eight others being added, they formed the College of the Decemvirs. 488 About eighty-three years before the Christian era five other keepers of these books were added, who thus formed the body called the Quindecimvirs.

Dionysius of Halicarnassus, Aulus Gellius, Servius, and many other writers, state the following as the origin of the Sibylline books. An aged woman presented to Tarquinius Superbus three books that contained the oracles of the Sibyls, and demanded a large sum for them. The king refusing to buy them, she went and burned them; and returning, asked the same price for the remaining six, as she had done for the original number. Being again repulsed, she burnt three more, and coming back again, demanded the original price for the three that remained. Astonished at the circumstance, the king bought the books. Pliny and Solinus vary the story a little, in saying that the woman at first presented but three books, and that she destroyed two of them.

It is generally supposed, that on the burning of the Capitol, about eighty-three years before the Christian era, the Sibylline books of Tarquinius Superbus were destroyed in the flames. To repair the loss, the Romans despatched officers to various cities of Italy, and even to Asia and Africa, to collect whatever they could find, under the name of Sibylline oracles. P. Gabinius, M. Ottacilius, and L. Valerius brought back a large collection, of which the greater part was rejected, and the rest committed to the care of the Quindecimvirs. Augustus ordered a second revision of them; and, after a severe scrutiny, those which were deemed to be genuine, were deposited in a box, under a statue of Apollo Palatinus. Tiberius again had them examined, and some portion of them was then rejected. Finally, about the year A.D. 399, Stilicho, according to Rutilius Numatianus, or rather, the Emperor Honorius himself, ordered them to be burnt.

The so-called collection of Sibylline verses which now exists is generally looked upon as spurious; or if any part is genuine, it bears so small a proportion to the fictitious portion, that it has shared in the condemnation. Indeed, their very distinctness stamps them as forgeries; for they speak of the mysteries of Christianity in undisguised language, and the names of our Saviour and the Virgin Mary occur as openly as they do in the Holy Scriptures.

It is a singular assertion of St. Jerome, that the gift of prophecy was a reward to the Sibyls for their chastity. If such was the condition, we have a right to consider that the Deities were very partial in the distribution of their rewards, and in withholding them from the multitudes who, we are bound in charity to believe, were as deserving as the Sibyls themselves of the gift of vaticination.

FABLE IV.

Æneas arrives at Caieta, in Italy. Achæmenides, an Ithacan, who is on board his ship, meets his former companion Macareus there; and relates to him his escape from being devoured by Polyphemus. Macareus afterwards tells him how Ulysses had received winds from Æolus in a hide, and by that means had a prosperous voyage; till, on the 489 xiv. 154-181. bag being opened by the sailors in their curiosity, the winds rushed out, and raised a storm that drove them back to Æolia, and afterwards upon the coast of the Læstrygons.

While the Sibyl was relating such things as these, during the steep ascent, the Trojan Æneas emerged from the Stygian abodes to the Eubœan city, and the sacrifice being performed, after the usual manner, he approached the shores that not yet bore the name of his nurse; here, too, Macareus of Neritos, the companion of the experienced Ulysses, had rested, after the prolonged weariness of his toils. He recognized Achæmenides, once deserted in the midst of the crags of Ætna; and astonished that, thus unexpectedly found again, he was yet alive, he said, "What chance, or what God, Achæmenides, preserves thee? why is a barbarian vessel carrying thee, a Greek? What land is sought by thy bark?"

No longer ragged in his clothing, but now his own master, and wearing clothes tacked together with no thorns, Achæmenides says, "Again may I behold Polyphemus, and those jaws streaming with human blood, if my home and Ithaca be more delightful to me than this bark; if I venerate Æneas any less than my own father. And, though I were to do everything possible, I could never be sufficiently grateful.

'Tis he that has caused that I speak, and breathe, and behold the heavens and the luminary of the sun; and can I be ungrateful, and forgetful of this? 'Tis through him that this life of mine did not fall into the jaws of the Cyclop; and though I were, even now, to leave the light of life, I should either be buried in a tomb, or, at least, not in that paunch of his. What were my feelings at that moment (unless, indeed, terror deprived me of all sense and feeling), when, left behind, I saw you making for the open sea? I wished to shout aloud, but I was fearful of betraying myself to the enemy; the shouts of Ulysses were very nearly causing the destruction of even your ship. I beheld 490 xiv. 181-211. him when, having torn up a mountain, he hurled the immense rock in the midst of the waves; again I beheld him hurling huge stones, with his giant arms, just as though impelled by the powers of the engine of war. And, forgetful that I was not in it, I was now struck with horror lest the waves or the stones might overwhelm the ship.

“But when your flight had saved you from a cruel death, he, indeed, roaring with rage, paced about all Ætna, and groped out the woods with his hands, and, deprived of his eye, stumbled against the rocks; and stretching out his arms, stained with gore, into the sea, he cursed the Grecian race, and he said, ‘Oh! that any accident would bring back Ulysses to me, or any one of his companions, against whom my anger might find vent, whose entrails I might devour, whose living limbs I might mangle with my right hand, whose blood might drench my throat, whose crushed members might quiver beneath my teeth: how insignificant, or how trifling, then, would be the loss of my sight, that has been taken from me!’ This, and more, he said in his rage. Ghastly horror took possession of me, as I beheld his features, streaming even yet with blood, and the ruthless hands, and the round space deprived of the eye, and his limbs, and his beard matted with human blood. Death was before my eyes, and yet that was the least of my woes.

I imagined that now he was about to seize hold of me, and that now he was on the very point of swallowing my vitals within his own; in my mind was fixed the impress of that time when I beheld two bodies of my companions three or four times dashed against the ground. Throwing himself on the top of them, just like a shaggy lion, he stowed away their entrails, their flesh, their bones with the white marrow, and their quivering limbs, in his ravenous paunch. A trembling seized me; in my alarm I stood without blood in my features, as I beheld him both chewing and belching out his bloody banquet from his mouth, and vomiting pieces mingled with wine; and I fancied that such a doom was in readiness for wretched me.

The other relates how that Æolus rules over the Etrurian seas; Æolus, the grandson of Hippotas, who confines the winds in their prison, which the Dulichean chief had received, shut up in a leather bag, a wondrous gift; how, with a favouring breeze, he had proceeded for nine days, and had beheld the land he was bound for; and how, when the first morning after the ninth had arrived, his companions, influenced by envy and a desire for booty, supposing it to be gold, had cut the fastenings of the winds; and how, through these, the ship had gone back along the waves through which it had just come, and had returned to the harbour of the Æolian king.

“Thence,” said he, “we came to the ancient city of Lamus, the Læstrygon. Antiphates was reigning in that land. I was sent to him, two in number accompanying me; and with difficulty was safety procured by me and one companion, by flight; the third of us stained the accursed jaws of the Læstrygon with his blood. Antiphates pursued us as we fled, and called together his followers; they flocked together, and, without intermission, they showered both stones and beams, and they overwhelmed men, and ships, too, did they overwhelm; yet one, which carried us and Ulysses himself, escaped. A part of our companions thus lost, grieving and lamenting much we arrived at those regions which thou perceivest afar hence. Look! afar hence thou mayst perceive an island, that has been seen by me; and do thou, most righteous of the Trojans, thou son of a Goddess, 492 xiv. 247-253. (for, since the war is ended, thou art not, Æneas, to be called an enemy) I warn thee — avoid the shores of Circe.”

EXPLANATION.

Æolus, according to Servius and Varro, was the son of Hippotas, and about the time of the Trojan war reigned in those islands, which were formerly called ‘Vulcaniæ,’ but were afterwards entitled ‘Æoliæ,’ and are now known as the Lipari Islands. Homer mentions only one of these islands, which were seven in number. He calls it by the name of Æolia, and probably means the one which was called Lipara, and gave its name to the group, and which is now known as Strombolo. Æolus seems to have been a humane prince, who received with hospitality those who had the misfortune to be cast on his island. Diodorus Siculus says that he was especially careful to warn strangers of the shoals and dangerous places in the neighbouring seas. Pliny adds, that he applied himself to the study of the winds, by observing

Being considered as an authority on that subject, at a time when navigation was so little reduced to an art, the poets readily feigned that he was the master of the winds, and kept them pent up in caverns, under his control. The story of the winds being entrusted to Ulysses, which Ovid here copies from Homer, is merely a poetical method of saying, that Ulysses disregarded the advice of Æolus, and staying out at sea beyond the time he had been recommended, was caught in a violent tempest. It is possible that Homer may allude to some custom which prevailed among the ancients, similar to that of the Lapland witches in modern times, who pretend to sell a favourable wind, enclosed in a bag, to mariners. Homer speaks of the six sons and six daughters of Æolus; perhaps they were the twelve principal winds, upon which he had expended much pains in making accurate observations.

Bochart suggests that the isle of Lipara was called by the Phœnicians 'Nibara,' on account of its volcano, (that word signifying 'a torch,') which name was afterwards corrupted to Lipara.

FABLE V.

Achæmenides lands in the isle of Circe, and is sent to her palace with some of his companions. Giving them a favourable reception, she makes them drink of a certain liquor; and, on her touching them with a wand, they are immediately transformed into swine. Eurylochus, who has refused to drink, informs Ulysses, who immediately repairs to the palace, and obliges Circe to restore to his companions their former shape.

"We, too, having fastened our ships to the shores of Circe, remembering Antiphates and the cruel Cyclop, refused to go and enter her unknown abode. By lot were we chosen; that lot sent both me and the faithful Polytes, and Eurylochus, and 493 xiv. 253-283. Elpenor, too much addicted to wine, and twice nine companions, to the walls of Circe. Soon as we reached them, and stood at the threshold of her abode; a thousand wolves, and bears and lionesses mixed with the wolves, created fear through meeting them; but not one of them needed to be feared, and not one was there to make a wound on our bodies. They wagged their caressing tails in the air, and fawning, they attended our footsteps, until the female servants received us, and led us, through halls roofed with marble, to their mistress.

“She is sitting in a beautiful alcove, on her wonted throne, and clad in a splendid robe; over it she is arrayed in a garment of gold tissue. The Nereids and the Nymphs, together, who tease no fleeces with the motion of their fingers nor draw out the ductile threads, are placing the plants in due order, and arranging in baskets the flowers confusedly scattered, and the shrubs variegated in their hues. She herself prescribes the tasks that they perform; she herself is aware what is the use of every leaf; what combined virtue there is in them when mixed; and giving attention, she examines each herb as weighed. When she beheld us, having given and received a salutation, she gladdened her countenance, and granted every thing to our wishes. And without delay, she ordered the grains of parched barley to be mingled, and honey, and the strength of wine, and curds with pressed milk. Secretly, she added drugs to be concealed beneath this sweetness. We received the cups presented by her sacred right hand. Soon as, in our thirst, we quaffed them with parching mouth, and the ruthless Goddess, with her wand, touched the extremity of our hair (I am both ashamed, and yet I will tell of it), I began to grow rough with bristles, and no longer to be able to speak; and, instead of words, to utter a harsh noise, and to grovel on the ground with all my face. I felt, too, my mouth receive a hard skin, with its crooked snout, and my neck swell with muscles; and with the member with which, the moment before, 494 xiv. 283-314. I had received the cup, with the same did I impress my footsteps.

“With the rest who had suffered the same treatment (so powerful are enchanted potions) I was shut up in a pig-sty; and we perceived that Eurylochus, alone, had not the form of a swine; he, alone, escaped the proffered draught. And had he not escaped it, I should even, at this moment, have still been one of the bristle-clad animals; nor would Ulysses, having been informed by him of so direful a disaster, have come to Circe as our avenger. The Cyllenian peace-bearer had given him a white flower; the Gods above call it ‘Moly;’ it is supported by a black root. Protected by that, and at the same time by the instruction of the inhabitants of heaven, he entered the dwelling of Circe, and being invited to the treacherous draughts, he repelled her, while endeavouring to stroke his hair with her wand, and prevented her, in her terror, with his drawn sword. Upon that, her promise was given, and right hands were exchanged; and, being received into her couch, he required the bodies of his companions as his marriage gift.

“We are then sprinkled with the more favouring juices of harmless plants, and are smitten on the head with a blow from her inverted wand; and charms are repeated, the converse of the charms that had been uttered. The longer she chaunts them, the more erect are we raised from the ground; and the bristles fall off, and the fissure leaves our cloven feet; our shoulders return; our arms become attached to their upper parts. In tears, we embrace him also in tears; and we cling to the neck of our chief; nor do we utter any words before those that testify that we are grateful.

“The space of a year detained us there; and, as I was present for such a length of time, I saw many things; and many things I heard with my ears. This, too, among many other things I heard, which one of the four handmaids appointed for such rites, privately informed me of. For while Circe was passing her time apart with my chief, she pointed out 495 xiv. 314-328. to me a youthful statue made of snow-white marble, carrying a woodpecker on its head, erected in the hallowed temple, and bedecked with many a chaplet. When I asked, and desired to know who he was, and why he was venerated in the sacred temple, and why he carried that bird; she said:—'Listen, Macareus, learn hence, too, what is the power of my mistress, and give attention to what I say.'"

EXPLANATION.

Ulysses having stayed some time at the court of Circe, where all were immersed in luxury and indolence, begins to reflect on the degraded state to which he is reduced, and resolutely abandons so unworthy a mode of life. This resolution is here typified by the herb moly, the symbol of wisdom. His companions, changed into swine, are emblems of the condition to which a life of sensuality reduces its votaries; while the wolves, lions, and horses show that man in such a condition fails not to exhibit the various bad propensities of the brute creation. Thus was the prodigal son, mentioned in the New Testament, reduced to a level with the brutes, 'and fain would have filled his belly with the husks that the swine did eat.'

It is not improbable that Circe was the original from which the Eastern romancer depicted the enchantress queen Labè in the story of Beder and Giauhare in the Arabian Nights' Entertainments. They were both ladies of light reputation, both fond of exercising their magical power on strangers, and in exactly the same manner: and as Ulysses successfully resisted the charms of Circe, so Beder thwarted the designs of Labè; but here the parallel ends.

FABLE VI.

Circe, being enamoured of Picus, and being unable to shake his constancy to his wife Canens, transforms him into a woodpecker, and his retinue into various kinds of animals. Canens pines away with grief at the loss of her husband, and the place where she disappears afterwards bears her name.

“Picus, the son of Saturn, was a king in the regions of Ausonia, an admirer of horses useful in warfare. The form of this person was such as thou beholdest. Thou thyself here mayst view his comeliness, and thou mayst approve of his real form from this feigned resemblance of it. His disposition was equal to his beauty; and not yet, in his age, could he have beheld four times the Olympic contest celebrated each fifth year in the Grecian Elis. He had attracted, by his good looks, the Dryads, born in the hills of Latium; the Naiads, the fountain Deities, wooed him; Nymphs, which Albula, and which the 496 xiv. 328-354. waters of Numicus, and which those of Anio, and Almo but very short in its course, and the rapid Nar, and Farfarus, with its delightful shades, produced, and those which haunt the forest realms of the Scythian Diana, and the neighbouring streams.

“Yet, slighting all these, he was attached to one Nymph, whom, on the Palatine hill, Venilia is said once to have borne to the Ionian Janus. Soon as she was ripe with marriageable years, she was presented to Laurentine Picus, preferred by her before all others; wondrous, indeed, was she in her beauty, but more wondrous still, through her skill in singing; thence she was called Canens. She was wont, with her voice, to move the woods and the rocks, and to tame the wild beasts, and to stop the course of the long rivers, and to detain the fleeting birds. While she was singing her songs with her feminine voice, Picus had gone from his dwelling into the Laurentine fields, to pierce the wild boars there bred; and he was pressing the back of his spirited horse, and was carrying two javelins in his left hand, having a purple cloak fastened with yellow gold. The daughter of the Sun, too, had come into the same wood; and that she might pluck fresh plants on the fruitful hills, she had left behind the Circæan fields, so called after her own name.

“Hidden by the shrubs, soon as she beheld the youth, she was astounded; the plants which she had gathered fell from her bosom, and a flame seemed to pervade her entire marrow. As soon as she regained her presence of mind from so powerful a shock, she was about to confess what she desired; the speed of his horse, and the surrounding guards, caused that she 497 xiv. 354-389. could not approach. ‘And yet thou shalt not escape me,’ she said, ‘even shouldst thou be borne on the winds, if I only know myself, if all potency in herbs has not vanished, and if my charms do not deceive me.’ Thus she said; and she formed the phantom of a fictitious wild boar, with no substance, and commanded it to run past the eyes of the king, and to seem to go into a forest, thick set with trees, where the wood is most dense, and where the spot is inaccessible to a horse. There is no delay; Picus, forthwith, unconsciously follows the phantom of the prey; hastily too, he leaves the reeking back of his steed, and, in pursuit of a vain hope, wanders on foot in the lofty forest. She repeats prayers to herself, and utters magical incantations, and adores strange Gods in strange verses, with which she is wont both to darken the disk of the snow-white moon, and to draw the clouds that suck up the moisture, over the head of her father. Then does the sky become lowering at the repeating of the incantation, and the ground exhales its vapours; and his companions wander along the darkened paths, and his guards are separated from the king.

“She, having now gained a favourable place and opportunity, says, ‘O, most beauteous youth! by thy eyes, which have captivated mine, and by this graceful person, which makes me, though a Goddess, to be thy suppliant, favour my passion, and receive the Sun, that beholds all things, as thy father-in-law, and do not in thy cruelty despise Circe, the daughter of Titan.’ Thus she says. He roughly repels her and her entreaties: and he says, 'Whoever thou art, I am not for thee; another female holds me enthralled, and for a long space of time, I pray, may she so hold me. I will not pollute the conjugal ties with the love of a stranger, while the Fates shall preserve for me Canens, the daughter of Janus.' The daughter of Titan, having often repeated her entreaties in vain, says, 'Thou shalt not depart with impunity, nor shalt thou return to Canens; and by experience shalt thou learn what one slighted, what one in love, what a woman, can do; but that one in love, and slighted, and a woman, is Circe.'

“Then twice did she turn herself to the West, and twice to the East; thrice did she touch the youth with her wand; three charms did she repeat. He fled; wondering that he sped more swiftly than usual, he beheld wings on his body; 498 xiv. 390-419. and indignant that he was added suddenly as a strange bird to the Latian woods, he struck the wild oaks with his hard beak, and, in his anger, inflicted wounds on the long branches. His wings took the purple colour of his robe. The piece of gold that had formed a buckle, and had fastened his garment, became feathers, and his neck was encompassed with the colour of yellow gold; and nothing now remained to Picus of his former self, beyond the name.

“In the meantime his attendants, having, often in vain, called on Picus throughout the fields, and, having found him in no direction, meet with Circe, (for now she has cleared the air, and has allowed the clouds to be dispersed by the woods and the sun); and they charge her with just accusations, and demand back their king, and are using violence, and are preparing to attack her with ruthless weapons. She scatters noxious venom and poisonous extracts; and she summons together Night, and the Gods of Night, from Erebus and from Chaos, and she invokes Hecate in magic howlings. Wondrous to tell, the woods leap from their spot; the ground utters groans, the neighbouring trees become pallid, the grass becomes moist, besprinkled with drops of blood; the stones seem to send forth harsh lowings, the dogs seem to bark, and the ground to grow loathsome with black serpents, and unsubstantial ghosts of the departed appear to flit about. The multitude trembles, astonished at these prodigies; she touches their astonished faces, as they tremble, with her enchanted wand. From the touch of this, the monstrous forms of various wild beasts come upon the young men; his own form remains to no one of them.

“The setting Sun has now borne down upon the Tartessian shores; and in vain is her husband expected, both by the eyes and the longings of Canens. Her servants and the people run about through all the woods, and carry lights to meet him. Nor is it enough for the Nymph to weep, and to tear her hair, and to beat her breast; though all this she does, she rushes forth, and, in her distraction, she wanders through the Latian fields. Six nights, and as many returning lights of the Sun, beheld her, destitute of sleep and of food, going over hills and valleys, wherever chance led her. Tiber, last of all, beheld her, worn out with weeping and wandering, and reposing her body on his cold banks. There, with tears, she poured forth words attuned, lamenting, in a low voice, her very woes, as when the swan, now about to die, sings his own funereal dirge.

“At last, melting with grief, even to her thin marrow, she pined away, and by degrees vanished into light air. Yet the Fame of it became attached to the spot, which the ancient Muses have properly called Canens, after the name of the Nymph.’ During that long year, many such things as these were told me and were seen by me. Sluggish and inactive through idleness, we were ordered again to embark on the deep, again to set our sails. The daughter of Titan had said that dangerous paths, and a protracted voyage, and the perils of the raging sea were awaiting us. I was alarmed, I confess; and having reached these shores, here I remained.”

EXPLANATION.

When names occur in the ancient Mythology, of Oriental origin, we may conclude that they were imported into Greece and Italy from Egypt or Phœnicia; and that their stories were derived from the same sources; such as those of Adonis, Arethusa, Arachne, and Isis. Those that are derived from the Greek languages are attached to fictions of purely Greek origin, such as the fables of Daphne, Galantis, Cygnus, and the Myrmidons; and where the names are of Latin original, we may conclude that their stories originated in Italy: such, for instance, as those of Canens, Picus, Anna Perenna, Flora, Quirinus, and others.

To this rule there are certain exceptions; for both Greece and Italy occasionally appropriated each other's traditions, by substituting the names of one language for those of the other. Thus it would not be safe to affirm positively that the story of Portumnus and Matuta is of Latin origin, since Greece lays an equal claim to it under the names of Leucothoë and Palæmon, while, probably, Cadmus originally introduced it from Phœnicia, under the names of Ino and Melicerta.

Dionysius of Halicarnassus, on the authority of Cato the Censor and Asellius Sempronius, says that the original inhabitants of Italy were a Greek colony. Cato and Sempronius state that they were from Achaia, while Dionysius says that they came from Arcadia, under the command 500 xiv. 441-456. of Ænotrius. Picus is generally supposed to have been one of the aboriginal kings of Italy, who was afterwards Deified. Servius, in his Commentary on the seventh Book of the Æneid, informs us that Picus pretended to know future events, and made use of a woodpecker, which he had tamed, for the purpose of his auguries. On this ground, after his death, it was generally reported that he had been transformed into that bird, and he was ranked among the Dii Indigetes of Latium. Dying in his youth, his wife Canens retired to a solitary spot, where she ended her life, and the intensity of her grief gave rise to the fable that she had pined away into a sound.

It has been suggested that the story took its rise from the oracles of Mars among the Sabines, when a woodpecker was said to give the responses. According to Bochart, it arose from the confusion of the meaning of the Phœnician word 'picea,' which signified a 'diviner.' It is the exuberant fancy of Ovid alone which connects Picus with the story of Circe.

FABLES VII. AND VIII.

Turnus having demanded succour from Diomedes against Æneas, the Grecian prince, fearing the resentment of Venus, refuses to send him assistance; and relates how some of his followers have been transformed by Venus into birds. An Apulian shepherd surprising some Nymphs, insults them, on which he is changed into a wild olive tree.

Macareus had concluded. And the nurse of Æneas, now buried in a marble urn, had this short inscription on her tomb:—"My foster-child, of proved piety, here burned me, Caieta, preserved from the Argive flames, with that fire which was my due." The fastened cable is loosened from the grassy bank, and they leave far behind the wiles and the dwelling of the Goddess, of whom so ill a report has been given, and seek the groves where the Tiber, darkened with the shade of trees, breaks into the sea with his yellow sands. Æneas, too, gains the house and the daughter of Latinus, the son of Faunus; but not without warfare. A war is waged with a fierce nation, and Turnus is indignant on account of the wife that had been betrothed to him. All Etruria meets in battle with Latium, and long is doubtful victory struggled for with ardent arms. Each side increases his strength with foreign forces, and many take the part of the Rutulians, many that of the Trojan side. 501 xiv. 456-485. Nor had Æneas arrived in vain at the thresholds of Evander, but

Venus came in vain to the great city, of the exiled Diomedes. He, indeed, had founded a very great city under the Iapygian Daunus, and held the lands given to him in dower.

But after Venulus had executed the commands of Turnus, and had asked for aid, the Ætolian hero pleaded his resources as an excuse: that he was not wishful to commit the subjects of his father-in-law to a war, and that he had no men to arm of the nation of his own countrymen; “And that ye may not think this a pretext, although my grief be renewed at the bitter recollection, yet I will endure the recital of it. After lofty Ilion was burnt, and Pergamus had fed the Grecian flames, and the Narycian hero, having ravished the virgin, distributed that vengeance upon all, which he alone merited, on account of the virgin; we were dispersed and driven by the winds over the hostile seas; we Greeks had to endure lightning, darkness, rain, and the wrath both of the heavens and of the sea, and Caphareus, the completion of our misery. And not to detain you by relating these sad events in their order, Greece might then have appeared even to Priam, worthy of a tear. Yet the care of the armed universe preserved me, rescued from the waves.

“But again was I driven from Argos, the land of my fathers; and genial Venus exacted satisfaction in vengeance for her former wound: and so great hardships did I endure on the deep ocean, so great amid arms on shore, that many a time were they pronounced happy by me, whom the storm, common to all, and Caphareus, swallowed up in the threatening waves; and I wished that I had been one of them. My companions having now endured the utmost extremities, both in war and on the ocean, lost courage, and demanded an end of their wanderings. But Agmon, of impetuous temper, and 502 xiv. 485-513. then embittered as well by misfortunes, said, ‘What does there remain now, ye men, for your patience to refuse to endure? What has Cytherea, (supposing her to desire it), that she can do beyond this? For so long as greater evils are dreaded, there is room for prayers; but where one's lot is the most wretched possible, fear is trampled under foot, and the extremity of misfortune is free from apprehensions. Let Venus herself hear it, if she likes; let her hate, as she does hate, all the men under the rule of Diomedes. Yet all of us despise her hate, and this our great power is bought by us at great price.'

"With such expressions does the Pleuronian Agmon provoke Venus against her will, and revive her former anger. His words are approved of by a few. We, the greater number of his friends, rebuke Agmon: and as he is preparing to answer, his voice and the passage of his voice together become diminished; his hair changes into feathers; his neck newly formed, his breast and his back are covered with down; his arms assume longer feathers; and his elbows curve out into light wings. A great part of his foot receives toes; his mouth becomes stiff and hardened with horn, and has its end in a point. Lycus and Idas, and Nycteus, together with Rhetenor, and Abas, are all astounded at him; and while they are astounded, they assume a similar form; and the greater portion of my company fly off, and resound around the oars with the flapping of their wings. Shouldst thou inquire what was the form of these birds so suddenly made; although it was not that of swans, yet it was approaching to that of white swans. With difficulty, for my part, do I, the son-in-law of the Iapygian Daunus, possess these abodes and the parched fields with a very small remnant of my companions."

Thus far the grandson of Æneus. Venulus leaves the Calydonian realms and the Peucetian bays, and the 503 xiv. 513-526. Messapian fields. In these he beholds a cavern, which, overshadowed by a dense grove, and trickling with a smooth stream, the God Pan, the half goat, occupies; but once on a time the Nymphs possessed it. An Apulian shepherd alarmed them, scared away from that spot; and, at first, he terrified them with a sudden fear; afterwards, when their presence of mind returned, and they despised him as he followed, they formed dances, moving their feet to time. The shepherd abused them; and imitating them with grotesque capers, he added rustic abuse in filthy language. Nor was he silent, before the growing tree closed his throat. But from this tree and its sap you may understand what were his manners. For the wild olive, by its bitter berries, indicates the infamy of his tongue; the coarseness of his words passed into them.

EXPLANATION.

Latinus having been told by an oracle that a foreign prince should come into his country and marry his daughter Lavinia, received Æneas hospitably, and formed an alliance with him, promising him his daughter in marriage; on which Turnus, who was the nephew of Amata, his wife, and to whom Lavinia was betrothed, declared war against Æneas.

The ancient historians tell us, that, on returning from the siege of Troy, Diomedes found that his throne had been usurped by Cyllabarus, who had married his wife Ægiale. Not having sufficient forces to dispossess the intruder, he sought a retreat in Italy, where he built the city of Argyripa, or Argos Hippium. Diomedes having married the daughter of Daunus, quarrelled with his father-in-law, and was killed in fight; on which his companions fled to an adjacent island, which, from his name, was called Diomedea. It was afterwards reported, that on their flight they were changed into birds, and that Venus inflicted this punishment, in consequence of Diomedes having wounded her at the siege of Troy. Of this story a confused version is here presented by Ovid, who makes the transformation to take place in the lifetime of Diomedes. It is supposed that the fact of the island being the favourite resort of swans and herons, facilitated this story of their transformation. Pliny and Solinus add to this marvellous account by stating, that these birds fawned upon all Greeks who entered the island, and fled from the people of all other nations. Ovid says that the birds resembled swans, while other writers thought them to be herons, storks, or falcons.

The ancient authors are utterly silent as to the rude shepherd who was changed into a wild olive, but the story was probably derived by Ovid from some local tradition.

504 xiv. 527-558.

FABLES IX. AND X.

Turnus sets fire to the fleet of Æneas: but Cybele transforms the ships into sea Nymphs. After the death of Turnus, his capital, Ardea, is burnt, and a bird arises out of the flames. Venus obtains of Jupiter that her son, after so many heroic deeds, shall be received into the number of the Gods.

When the ambassador had returned thence, bringing word that the Ætolian arms had been refused them, the Rutulians carried on the warfare prepared for, without their forces; and much blood was shed on either side. Lo! Turnus bears the devouring torches against the ships, fabrics of pine; and those, whom the waves have spared, are now in dread of fire. And now the flames were burning the pitch and the wax, and the other elements of flame, and were mounting the lofty mast to the sails, and the benches of the curved ships were smoking; when the holy Mother of the Gods, remembering that these pines were cut down on the heights of Ida, filled the air with the tinkling of the clashing cymbal, and with the noise of the blown boxwood pipe. Borne through the yielding air by her harnessed lions, she said: "Turnus, in vain dost thou hurl the flames with thy sacrilegious right hand; I will save the ships, and the devouring flames shall not, with my permission, burn a portion, and the very limbs of my groves."

As the Goddess speaks, it thunders; and following the thunder, heavy showers fall, together with bounding hailstones; the brothers, sons of Astræus, arouse both the air and the swelling waves with sudden conflicts, and rush to the battle. The genial Mother, using the strength of one of these, first bursts the hempen cables of the Phrygian fleet, and carries the ships headlong, and buries them beneath the ocean. Their hardness being now softened, and their wood being changed into flesh, the crooked sterns are changed into the features of the head; the oars taper off in fingers and swimming feet; that which has been so before, is still the side; and the keel, laid below in the middle of the ship, is changed, for the purposes of the back bone. The cordage becomes soft hair, the yards become arms. Their colour is azure, as it was before. As Naiads of the ocean, with their virgin sports they agitate those waves, which before they dreaded; and, born on the rugged mountains, they inhabit the flowing sea; their origin 505 xiv. 558-589. influences them not. And yet, not forgetting how many dangers they endured on the boisterous ocean, often do they give a helping hand to the tossed ships; unless any one is carrying men of the Grecian race.

Still keeping in mind the Phrygian catastrophe, they hated the Pelasgians; and, with joyful countenances, they looked upon the fragments of the ship of him of Neritos; and with pleasure did they see the ship of Alcinoüs become hard upon the breakers, and stone growing over the wood.

There is a hope that, the fleet having received life in the form of sea Nymphs, the Rutulian may desist from the war through fear, on account of this prodigy. He persists, however, and each side has its own Deities; and they have courage, equal to the Gods. And now they do not seek kingdoms as a dower, nor the sceptre of a father-in-law, nor thee, virgin Lavinia, but only to conquer; and they wage the war through shame at desisting. At length, Venus sees the arms of her son victorious, and Turnus falls; Ardea falls, which, while Turnus lived, was called 'the mighty.' After ruthless flames consumed it, and its houses sank down amid the heated embers, a bird, then known for the first time, flew aloft from the midst of the heap, and beat the ashes with the flapping of its wings. The voice, the leanness, the paleness, and every thing that befits a captured city, and the very name of the city, remain in that bird; and Ardea itself is bewailed by the beating of its wings.

And now the merit of Æneas had obliged all the Deities, and Juno herself, to put an end to their former resentment; when, the power of the rising Iulus being now well established, the hero, the son of Cytherea, was ripe for heaven, Venus, too, had solicited the Gods above; and hanging round the neck of her parent had said: "My father, who hast never proved unkind to me at any time, I beseech thee now to be most indulgent to me; and to grant, dearest father, to my Æneas, who, born of my blood, has made thee a grandsire, 506 xiv. 589-608. a godhead, even though of the lowest class; so that thou only grant him one. It is enough to have once beheld the unsightly realms, enough to have once passed over the Stygian streams." The Gods assented; nor did his royal wife keep her countenance unmoved; but, with pleased countenance, she nodded assent. Then her father said; "You are worthy of the gift of heaven; both thou who askest, and he, for whom thou askest: receive, my daughter, what thou dost desire." Thus he decrees. She rejoices, and gives thanks to her parent; and, borne by her harnessed doves through the light air, she arrives at the Laurentine shores; where Numicius, covered with reeds, winds to the neighbouring sea with the waters of his stream. Him she bids to wash off from Æneas whatever is subject to death, and to bear it beneath the ocean in his silent course.

The horned river performed the commands of Venus; and with his waters washed away from Æneas whatever was mortal, and sprinkled him. His superior essence remained.

His mother anointed his body thus purified with divine odours, and touched his face with ambrosia, mingled with sweet nectar, and made him a God. Him the people of Quirinus, called Indiges, and endowed with a temple and with altars.

EXPLANATION.

It is asserted by some writers, that when the ships of Æneas were set on fire by Turnus, a tempest arose, which extinguished the flames; on which circumstance the story here related by Ovid was founded. Perhaps Virgil was the author of the fiction, as he is the first known to have related it, and is closely followed by Ovid in the account of the delivery of the ships.

The story of the heron arising out of the flames of Ardea seems to be 507 xiv. 609-624. founded on a very simple fact. It is merely a poetical method of accounting for the Latin name of that bird, which was very plentiful in the vicinity of the city of Ardea, and, perhaps, thence derived its name of 'ardea.' The story may have been the more readily suggested to the punning mind of Ovid, from the resemblance of the Latin verb 'ardeo,' signifying 'to burn,' to that name.

Some of the ancient authors say, that after killing Turnus and marrying Lavinia, Æneas was killed in battle with Mezentius, after a reign of three years, leaving his wife pregnant with a son, afterwards known by the name of Sylvius. His body not being found after the battle, it was given out that his Goddess mother had translated him to heaven, and he was thenceforth honoured by the name of Jupiter Indiges.

FABLE XI.

Vertumnus, enamoured of Pomona, assumes several shapes for the purpose of gaining her favour; and having transformed himself into an old woman, succeeds in effecting his object.

From that time Alba and the Latin state were under the sway of Ascanius with the two names; Sylvius succeeded him; sprung of whom, Latinus had a renewed name, together with the ancient sceptre. Alba succeeded the illustrious Latinus; Epitos sprang from him; and next to him were Capetus, and Capys; but Capys was the first of these. Tiberinus received the sovereignty after them; and, drowned in the waves of the Etrurian river, he gave his name to the stream. By him Remulus and the fierce Acrota were begotten; Remulus, who was the elder, an imitator of the lightnings, perished by the stroke of a thunder-bolt. Acrota, more moderate than his brother in his views, handed down the sceptre to the valiant Aventinus, who lies buried on the same mount over which he had reigned; and to that mountain he gave his name. And now Proca held sway over the Palatine nation.

Under this king Pomona lived; than her, no one among 508 xiv. 624-656. the Hamadryads of Latium more skilfully tended her gardens, and no one was more attentive to the produce of the trees; thence she derives her name. She cares not for woods, or streams; but she loves the country, and the boughs that bear the thriving fruit. Her right hand is not weighed down with a javelin, but with a curved pruning-knife, with which, at one time she crops the too luxuriant shoots, and reduces the branches that straggle without order; at another time, she is engrafting the sucker in the divided bark, and is so finding nourishment for a stranger nursling. Nor does she suffer them to endure thirst; she waters, too, the winding fibres of the twisting root with the flowing waters. This is her delight, this her pursuit; and no desire has she for love. But fearing the violence of the rustics, she closes her orchard within a wall, and both forbids and flies from the approach of males.

What did not the Satyrs do, a youthful crew expert at the dance, and the Pans with their brows wreathed with pine, and Sylvanus, ever more youthful than his years, and the God who scares the thieves either with his pruning-hook or with his groin, in order that they might gain her? But yet Vertumnus exceeded even these in his love, nor was he more fortunate than the rest. O! how often did he carry the ears of corn in a basket, under the guise of a hardy reaper; and he was the very picture of a reaper! Many a time, having his temples bound with fresh bay, he would appear to have been turning over the mowed grass. He often bore a whip in his sturdy hand, so that you would have sworn that he had that instant been unyoking the wearied oxen. A pruning-knife being given him, he was a woodman, and the pruner of the vine. Now he was carrying a ladder, and you would suppose he was going to gather fruit. Sometimes he was a soldier, with a sword, and sometimes a fisherman, taking up the rod; in fact, by means of many a shape, he often obtained access for himself, that he might enjoy the pleasure of gazing on her beauty.

He, too, having bound his brows with a coloured cap, leaning on a stick, with white hair placed around his temples, assumed the shape of an old woman, and entered the well-cultivated 509 xiv. 656-687. gardens, and admired the fruit; and he said, "So much better off art thou!" and then he gave her, thus commended, a few kisses, such as no real old woman ever could have given; and stooping, seated himself upon the grass, looking up at the branches bending under the load of autumn. There was an elm opposite, widely spread with swelling grapes; after he had praised it, together with the vine united to it, he said, "Aye, but if this trunk stood unwedded, without the vine, it would have nothing to attract beyond its leaves; this vine, too, while it finds rest against the elm, joined to it, if it were not united to it, would lie prostrate on the ground; and yet thou art not influenced by the example of this tree, and thou dost avoid marriage, and dost not care to be united. I only wish that thou wouldst desire it: Helen would not then be wooed by more suitors, nor she who caused the battles of the Lapithæ, nor the wife of Ulysses, so bold against the cowards. Even now, while thou dost avoid them courting thee, and dost turn away in disgust, a thousand suitors desire thee; both Demigod and Gods, and the Deities which inhabit the mountains of Alba.

“But thou, if thou art wise, and if thou dost wish to make a good match, and to listen to an old woman, (who loves thee more than them all, and more than thou dost believe) despise a common alliance, and choose for thyself Vertumnus, as the partner of thy couch; and take me as a surety for him. He is not better known, even to himself, than he is to me. He is not wandering about, straying here and there, throughout all the world; these spots only does he frequent; and he does not, like a great part of thy wooers, fall in love with her whom he sees last. Thou wilt be his first and his last love, and to thee alone does he devote his life. Besides, he is young, he has naturally the gift of gracefulness, he can readily change himself into every shape, and he will become whatever he shall be bidden, even shouldst thou bid him be everything. And 510 xiv. 687-698. besides, have you not both the same tastes? Is not he the first to have the fruits which are thy delight? and does he not hold thy gifts in his joyous right hand? But now he neither longs for the fruit plucked from the tree, nor the herbs that the garden produces, with their pleasant juices, nor anything else, but thyself. Have pity on his passion! and fancy that he who woos thee is here present, pleading with my lips; fear, too, the avenging Deities, and the Idalian Goddess, who abhors cruel hearts, and the vengeful anger of her of Rhamnus.

“And that thou mayst the more stand in awe of them, (for old age has given me the opportunity of knowing many things) I will relate some facts very well known throughout all Cyprus, by which thou mayst the more easily be persuaded and relent.”

EXPLANATION.

Among the Deities borrowed by the Romans from the people of Etruria, were Vertumnus and Pomona, who presided over gardens and fruits. Propertius represents Vertumnus as rejoicing at having left Tusculum for the Roman Forum. According to Varro and Festus, the Romans offered sacrifices to these Deities, and they had their respective temples and altars at Rome, the priest of Pomona being called ‘Flamen Pomonalis.’ It is probable that this story originated in the fancy of the Poet.

The name of Vertumnus, from ‘verto,’ ‘to change,’ perhaps relates to the vicissitudes of the seasons; and if this story refers to any tradition, its meaning may have been, that in his taking various forms, to please Pomona, the change of seasons requisite for bringing the fruits to ripeness was symbolized. It is possible that in the disguises of a labourer, a reaper, and an old woman, the Poet may intend to pourtray the spring, the harvest, and the winter.

There was a market at Rome, near the temple of this God, who was regarded as one of the tutelary Deities of the traders. Horace alludes to his temple which was in the Vicus Tuscus, or Etrurian Street, which led to the Circus Maximus. According to some authors, he was an ancient king of Etruria, who paid great attention to his gardens, and, after his death, was considered to have the tutelage of them.

FABLES XII. AND XIII.

Vertumnus relates to Pomona how Anaxarete was changed into a rock after her disdain of his advances had forced her lover Iphis to hang himself. After the death of Amulius and Numitor, Romulus builds Rome, and becomes the first king of it. Tatius declares war against him, and is favoured by Juno, while Venus protects the Romans. 511 xiv. 698-726. Romulus and Hersilia are added to the number of the Deities, under the names of Quirinus and Ora.

Iphis, born of an humble family, had beheld the noble Anaxarete, sprung from the race of the ancient Teucer; he had seen her, and had felt the flame in all his bones; and struggling a long time, when he could not subdue his passion by reason, he came suppliantly to her doors. And now having confessed to her nurse his unfortunate passion, he besought her, by the hopes she reposed in her nursling, not to be hard-hearted to him; and at another time, complimenting each of the numerous servants, he besought their kind interest with an anxious voice. He often gave his words to be borne on the flattering tablets; sometimes he fastened garlands, wet with the dew of his tears, upon the door-posts, and laid his tender side upon the hard threshold, and uttered reproaches against the obdurate bolt.

She, more deaf than the sea, swelling when the Constellation of the Kids is setting, and harder than the iron which the Norican fire refines, and than the rock which in its native state is yet held fast by the firm roots, despises, and laughs at him; and to her cruel deeds, in her pride, she adds boastful words, and deprives her lover of even hope. Iphis, unable to endure this prolonged pain, endured his torments no longer; and before her doors he spoke these words as his last: "Thou art the conquerer, Anaxarete; and no more annoyances wilt thou have to bear from me. Prepare the joyous triumph, invoke the God Pæan, and crown thyself with the shining laurel. For thou art the conqueror, and of my own will I die; do thou, woman of iron, rejoice. At least, thou wilt be obliged to commend something in me, and there will be one point in which I shall be pleasing to thee, and thou wilt confess my merits. Yet remember that my affection for thee has not ended sooner than my life; and that at the same moment I am about to be deprived of a twofold light. And report shall not come to thee as the 512 xiv. 726-753. messenger of my death; I myself will come, doubt it not; and I myself will be seen in person, that thou mayst satiate thy cruel eyes with my lifeless body. But if, ye Gods above, you take cognizance of the fortunes of mortals, be mindful of me; beyond this, my tongue is unable to pray; and cause me to be remembered in times far distant; and give those hours to Fame which you have taken away from my existence."

Thus he said; and raising his swimming eyes and his pallid arms to the door-posts, so often adorned by him with wreaths, when he had fastened a noose at the end of a halter upon the door; he said,—“Are these the garlands that delight thee, cruel and unnatural woman?” And he placed his head within it; but even then he was turned towards her; and he hung a hapless burden, by his strangled throat. The door, struck by the motion of his feet as they quivered, seemed to utter a sound, as of one groaning much, and flying open, it discovered the deed; the servants cried aloud, and after lifting him up in vain, they carried him to the house of his mother (for his father was dead). She received him into her bosom; and embracing the cold limbs of her child, after she had uttered the words that are natural to wretched mothers, and had performed the usual actions of wretched mothers, she was preceding the tearful funeral through the midst of the city, and was carrying his ghastly corpse on the bier, to be committed to the flames.

By chance, her house was near the road where the mournful procession was passing, and the sound of lamentation came to the ears of the hardhearted Anaxarete, whom now an avenging Deity pursued. Moved, however, she said:—“Let us behold these sad obsequies;” and she ascended to an upper room with wide windows. And scarce had she well 513 xiv. 753-785. seen Iphis laid out on the bier, when her eyes became stiffened, and a paleness coming on, the warm blood fled from her body. And as she endeavoured to turn her steps back again, she stood fixed there; and as she endeavoured to turn away her face, this too she was unable to do; and by degrees the stone, which already existed in her cruel breast, took possession of her limbs.

“And, that thou mayst not think this a fiction, Salamis still keeps the statue under the form of the maiden; it has also a temple under the name of ‘Venus, the looker-out.’ Remembering these things, O Nymph, lay aside this prolonged disdain, and unite thyself to one who loves thee. Then, may neither cold in the spring nip thy fruit in the bud, nor may the rude winds strike them off in blossom.” When the God, fitted for every shape, had in vain uttered these words, he returned to his youthful form, and took off from himself the garb of the old woman. And such did he appear to her, as, when the form of the sun, in all his brilliancy, has dispelled the opposing clouds, and has shone forth, no cloud intercepting his rays. And he now purposed violence, but there was no need for force, and the Nymph was captivated by the form of the God, and was sensible of a reciprocal wound.

Next, the soldiery of the wicked Amulius held sway over the realms of Ausonia; and by the aid of his grandsons, the aged Numitor gained the kingdom that he had lost; and on the festival of Pales, the walls of the City were founded. Tatius and the Sabine fathers waged war; and then, the way to the citadel being laid open, by a just retribution, Tarpeia lost her life, the arms being heaped upon her. On this, they, sprung from the town of Cures, just like silent wolves, suppressed their voices with their lips, and fell upon the bodies now overpowered by sleep, and rushed to the gates, which the son of Ilia had shut with a strong bolt. But Juno, the daughter of Saturn, herself opened one, and made not a sound at the turning of the hinge. Venus alone perceived that the bars of the gate had fallen down; and she would have shut it, were it not, that it is 514 xiv. 785-820. never allowed for a Deity to annul the acts of the other Gods. The Naiads of Ausonia occupied a spot near the temple of Janus, a place besprinkled by a cold fountain; of these she implored aid. Nor did the Nymphs resist, the Goddess making so fair a request; and they gave vent to the springs and the streams of the fountain. But not yet were the paths closed to the open temple of Janus, and the water had not stopped the way. They placed sulphur, with its faint blue light, beneath the plenteous fountain, and they applied fire to the hollowed channels, with smoking pitch.

By these and other violent means, the vapour penetrated to the very sources of the fountain; and you, ye waters, which, so lately, were able to rival the coldness of the Alps, yielded not in heat to the flames themselves. The two door-posts smoked with the flaming spray; and the gate, which was in vain left open for the fierce Sabines, was rendered impassable by this new-made fountain, until the warlike soldiers had assumed their arms. After Romulus had readily led them onward, and the Roman ground was covered with Sabine bodies, and was covered with its own people, and the accursed sword had mingled the blood of the son-in-law with the gore of the father-in-law; they determined that the war should end in peace, and that they would not contend with weapons to the last extremity, and that Tatius should share in the sovereignty.

Tatius was now dead, and thou, Romulus, wast giving laws in common to both peoples; when Mavors, his helmet laid aside, in such words as these addressed the Parent of both Gods and men: "The time is now come, O father, (since the Roman state is established on a strong foundation, and is no longer dependent on the guardianship of but one), for thee to give the reward which was promised to me, and to thy grandson so deserving of it, and, removed from earth, to admit him to heaven. Thou saidst to me once, a council of the Gods being present, (for I remember it, and with grateful mind I remarked the affectionate speech), he shall be one, whom thou shalt raise to the azure heaven. Let the tenor of thy words be now performed.”

The all-powerful God nodded in assent, and he obscured the air with thick clouds, and alarmed the City with thunder and lightning. Gradivus knew that this was a signal given to him for the promised removal; and, leaning on his lance, he boldly mounted behind his steeds, laden with the blood-stained pole of the chariot, and urged them on with the lash of the whip; and descending along the steep air, he stood on the summit of the hill of the woody Palatium; and he took away the son of Ilia, that moment giving out his royal ordinances to his own Quirites. His mortal body glided through the yielding air; just as the leaden plummet, discharged from the broad sling, is wont to dissolve itself in mid air. A beauteous appearance succeeded, one more suitable to the lofty couches of heaven, and a form, such as that of Quirinus arrayed in his regal robe. His wife was lamenting him as lost; when the royal Juno commanded Iris to descend to Hersilia, along her bending path; and thus to convey to the bereft wife her commands: —

“O matron, the especial glory of the Latian and of the Sabine race; thou woman, most worthy to have been before the wife of a hero so great, and now of Quirinus; cease thy weeping, and if thou hast a wish to see thy husband, under my guidance repair to the grove which flourishes on the hill of Quirinus, and overshadows the temple of the Roman king.” Iris obeys, and gliding down to earth along her tinted bow, she addressed Hersilia in the words enjoined. She, with a modest countenance, hardly raising her eyes, replies, “O Goddess, (for though it is not in my power to say who thou art, yet, still it is clear that thou art a Goddess), lead me, O lead me on, and present to me the features of my husband. If the Fates should but allow me to be enabled once to behold these, I will confess that I have beheld Heaven.”

There was no delay; with the virgin daughter of Thaumias she ascended the hill of Romulus. There, a star falling from the skies, fell upon the earth; the hair of Hersilia set on fire from the blaze of this, ascended with the star to the skies. 516 xiv. 849-851. The founder of the Roman city received her with his well-known hands; and, together with her body, he changed her former name; and he called her Ora; which Goddess is still united to Quirinus.

EXPLANATION.

We are not informed that the story of Iphis, hanging himself for love of Anaxarete, is based upon any actual occurrence, though probably it was, as Salamis is mentioned as the scene of it. The transformation of Anaxarete into a stone, seems only to be the usual metaphor employed by the poets to denote extreme insensibility.

Following the example of Homer, who represents the Gods as divided into the favourers of the Greeks and of the Trojans, he represents the Sabines as entering Rome, while Juno opens the gates for them; on which the Nymphs of the spot pour forth streams of flame, which oblige them to return. He tells the same story in the first Book of the Fasti, where Janus is introduced as taking credit to himself for doing what the Nymphs are here said to have effected.

As Dionysius of Halicarnassus gives some account of these transactions, on the authority of the ancient Roman historians, it will be sufficient here to give the substance thereof. Jealous of the increasing power of Romulus, the Sabines collected an army, and marched to attack his city. A virgin named Tarpeia, whose father commanded the guard, perceiving the golden bracelets which the Sabines wore on their arms, offered Tatius to open the gate to him, if he would give her these jewels. This condition being assented to, the enemy was admitted into the town; and Tarpeia, who is said by some writers only to have intended to disarm the Sabines, by demanding their bucklers, which she pretended were included in the original agreement, was killed on the spot, by the violence of the blows; Tatius having ordered that they should be thrown on her head.

The same historian says, that opinions were divided as to the death of Romulus, and that many writers had written, that as he was haranguing his army, the sky became overcast, and a thick darkness coming on, it was followed by a violent tempest, in which he disappeared; on which it was believed that Mars had taken him up to heaven. Others assert that he was killed by the citizens, for having sent back the hostages of the Veientes without their consent, and for assuming an air of superiority, which their lawless spirits could ill brook. For these reasons, his officers assassinated him, and cut his body in pieces; each of them carrying off some portion, that it might be privately interred. According to Livy, great consternation was the consequence of his death; and the people beginning to suspect that the senators had committed the crime, Julius Proculus asserted that Romulus had appeared to him, and assured him of the fact of his having been Deified. His speech on the occasion is given by Livy, and Ovid relates the same story in the second Book of the Fasti. On this, the Roman people paid him divine honours as a God, under the name of Quirinus, one of the epithets of Mars. He had a chief priest, who was called 'Flamen Quirinalis.'

His wife, Hersilia, also had divine honours paid to her, jointly with him, under the name of Ora, or 'Horta.' According to Plutarch, she had the latter name from the exhortation which she had given to the youths to distinguish themselves by courage.

BOOK THE FIFTEENTH.

FABLE I.

Myscelos is warned, in a dream, to leave Argos, and to settle in Italy. When on the point of departing, he is seized under a law which forbids the Argives to leave the city without the permission of the magistrates. Being brought up for judgment, through a miracle he is acquitted. He retires to Italy, where he builds the city of Crotona.

Meanwhile, one is being sought who can bear a weight of such magnitude, and can succeed a king so great. Fame, the harbinger of truth, destines the illustrious Numa for the sovereign power. He does not deem it sufficient to be acquainted with the ceremonials of the Sabine nation; in his expansive mind he conceives greater views, and inquires into the nature of things. 'Twas love of this pursuit, his country and cares left behind, that caused him to penetrate to the city of the stranger Hercules. To him, making the inquiry what founder it was that had erected a Grecian city on the Italian shores, one of the more aged natives, who was not unacquainted with the history of the past, thus replied: bearer, Hercules, addresses him: 'Come, now, desert thy native abodes; go, and repair to the pebbly streams of the distant Æsar.' And he utters . threats, many and fearful, if he does not obey: after that, at once both sleep and the God depart. The son of Alemon arises, and ponders his recent vision in his thoughtful mind; and for a long time his opinions are divided among themselves. The Deity orders him to depart; the laws forbid his going; and death has been awarded as the punishment of him who attempts to leave his country.

"The brilliant Sun had now hidden his shining head in the ocean, and darkest Night had put forth her starry face, when the same God seemed to be present, and to give the same commands, and to utter threats, more numerous and more severe, if he does not obey. He was alarmed; and now he was also preparing to transfer his country's home to a new settlement, when a rumour arose in the city, and he was accused of holding the laws in contempt. And, when the accusation had first been made, and his crime was evident, proved without a witness, the accused, in neglected garb, raising his face and his hands towards the Gods above, says, 'Oh thou! for whom the twice six labours have created the privilege of the heavens, aid me, I pray; for thou wast the cause of my offence.' It was the ancient custom, by means of white and black pebbles, with the one to condemn the accused, with the other to acquit them of the charge; and on this occasion thus was the sad sentence passed, and every black pebble was cast into the ruthless urn. Soon as it, being inverted, poured forth the pebbles to be counted, the colour of them all was changed from black to white, and the sentence, changed to a favourable one by the aid of Hercules, acquitted the son of Alemon.

"He gives thanks to the parent, the son of Amphitryon, and with favouring gales sails over the Ionian sea, and passes by the Lacedæmonian Tarentum, and Sybaris, and the Salentine Neæthus, and the bay of Thurium, and Temesa, and the fields of Iapyx; and having with difficulty coasted along the spots which skirt these shores, he finds the destined mouth of the river Æsar; and, not far thence, a mound, beneath which the ground was covering the sacred bones of Croton. And there, on the appointed land, did he found his walls, and he transferred the name of him that was there entombed to his city. By established tradition, it was known that such was the original of that place, and of the city built on the Italian coasts."

EXPLANATION.

To the story here told of Micylus, or Myscelus, as most of the ancient writers call him, another one was superadded. Suidas, on the authority of the Scholiast of Aristophanes, says that Myscelus, having consulted the oracle, concerning the colony which he was about to lead into a foreign country, was told that he must settle at the place where he should meet with rain in a clear sky, ἔξ αἰθρίας. His faith surmounting the apparent impossibility of having both fair and foul weather at the same moment, he obeyed the oracle, and put to sea; and, after experiencing many dangers, he landed in Italy. Being full of uncertainty where to fix his colony, he was reduced to great distress; on which his wife, whose name was Aithrias, with the view of comforting him, embraced him, and bedewed his face with her tears. He immediately adopted the presage, and understood the spot where he then was to be the site of his intended city.

Strabo says that Myscelus, who was so called from the smallness of his legs, designing to found a colony in a foreign land, arrived on the coast of Italy. Observing that the spot which the oracle had pointed out enjoyed a healthy climate, though the soil was not so fertile as in the adjacent plains, he went once more to consult the oracle; but was answered that he must not refuse what was offered him; an answer which was afterwards turned into a proverb. On this, he founded the city of Crotona, and another colony founded the city of Sybaris on the spot which he had preferred; a place which afterwards became infamous for its voluptuousness and profligacy.

FABLES II. AND III.

Pythagoras comes to the city of Crotona, and teaches the principles of his philosophy. His reputation draws Numa Pompilius to hear his discourses; on which he expounds his principles, and, more especially, enlarges on the transmigration of the soul, and the practice of eating animal food.

There was a man, a Samian by birth; but he had fled from both Samos and its rulers, and, through hatred of tyranny, . he was a voluntary exile. He too, mentally, held converse with the Gods, although far distant in the region of the heavens; and what nature refused to human vision, he viewed with the eyes of his mind. And when he had examined all things with his mind, and with watchful study, he gave them to be learned by the public; and he sought the crowds of people as they sat in silence, and wondered at the revealed origin of the vast universe, and the cause of things, and what nature meant, and what was God; whence came the snow, what was the cause of lightning; whether it was Jupiter, or whether the winds that thundered when the cloud was rent asunder; what it was that shook the earth; by what laws the stars took their course; and whatever besides lay concealed from mortals.

He, too, was the first to forbid animals to be served up at table, and he was the first that opened his lips, learned indeed, but still not obtaining credit, in such words as these: "Forbear, mortals, to pollute your bodies with such abominable food. There is the corn; there are the apples that bear down the branches by their weight, and there are the grapes swelling upon the vines; there are the herbs that are pleasant; there are some that can become tender, and be softened by the action of fire. The flowing milk, too, is not denied you, nor honey redolent of the bloom of the thyme. The lavish Earth yields her riches, and her agreeable food, and affords dainties without slaughter and bloodshed. The beasts satisfy their hunger with flesh; and yet not all of them; for the horse, and the sheep, and the herds subsist on grass. But those whose disposition is cruel and fierce, the Armenian tigers, and the raging lions, and the bears together with the wolves, revel in their diet with blood. Alas! what a crime is it, for entrails to be buried in entrails, and for one ravening body to grow fat on other carcasses crammed into it; and for one living creature to exist through the death of another living creature! And does, forsooth! amid so great an abundance, which the earth, that best of mothers, produces, nothing delight you but to gnaw with savage teeth the sad produce of your wounds, and to revive the habits of the Cyclops? And can you not appease the hunger of a voracious and ill-regulated stomach unless you first destroy another? But that age of old, to which we have given the name of 'Golden,' was blest in the . produce of the trees, and in the herbs which the earth produces, and it did not pollute the mouth with blood.

“Then, both did the birds move their wings in safety in the air, and the hare without fear wander in the midst of the fields; then its own credulity had not suspended the fish from the hook; every place was without treachery, and in dread of no injury, and was full of peace. Afterwards, some one, no good adviser (whoever among mortals he might have been), envied this simple food, and engulfed in his greedy paunch victuals made from a carcass; 'twas he that opened the path to wickedness; and I can believe that the steel, since stained with blood, first grew warm from the slaughter of wild beasts. And that had been sufficient. I confess that the bodies of animals that seek our destruction are put to death with no breach of the sacred laws; but, although they might be put to death, yet they were not to be eaten as well. Then this wickedness proceeded still further; and the swine is believed to have deserved death as the first victim, because it grubbed up the seeds with its turned-up snout, and cut short the hopes of the year. Having gnawed the vine, the goat was led for slaughter to the altars of the avenging Bacchus. Their own faults were the ruin of the two. But why have you deserved this, ye sheep? a harmless breed, and born for the service of man; who carry the nectar in your full udders; who afford your wool as soft coverings for us, and who assist us more by your life than by your death. Why have the oxen deserved this, an animal without guile and deceit, innocent, harmless, born to endure labour? In fact, the man is ungrateful, and not worthy of the gifts of the harvest, who could, just after taking off the weight of the curving plough, slaughter the tiller of his fields; who could strike, with the axe, that neck worn bare with labour, through which he had so oft turned up the hard ground, and had afforded so many a harvest.

“And it is not enough for such wickedness to be committed; they have imputed to the Gods themselves this abomination; and they believe that a Deity in the heavens can rejoice in the slaughter of the laborious ox. A victim free from a blemish, and most beautiful in form (for ‘tis being sightly that . brings destruction), adorned with garlands and gold, is placed upon the altars, and, in its ignorance, it hears one praying, and sees the corn, which it has helped to produce, placed on its forehead between its horns; and, felled, it stains with its blood the knives perhaps before seen by it in the limpid water. Immediately, they examine the entrails snatched from its throbbing breast, and in them they seek out the intentions of the Deities. Whence comes it that men have so great a hankering for forbidden food? Do you presume to feed on flesh, O race of mortals? Do it not, I beseech you; and give attention to my exhortations. And when you shall be presenting the limbs of slaughtered oxen to your palates, know and consider that you are devouring your tillers of the ground. And since a God impels me to speak, I will duly obey the God that so prompts me to speak; and I will pronounce my own Delphic warnings, and disclose the heavens themselves; and I will reveal the oracles of the Divine will. I will sing of wondrous things, never investigated by the intellects of the ancients, and things which have long lain concealed. It delights me to range among the lofty stars; it delights me, having left the earth and this sluggish spot far behind, to be borne amid the clouds, and to be supported on the shoulders of the mighty Atlas; and to look down from afar on minds wandering in uncertainty, and devoid of reason; and so to advise them alarmed and dreading extinction, and to unfold the range of things ordained by fate.

“O race! stricken by the alarms of icy death, why do you dread Styx? why the shades, why empty names, the stock subjects of the poets, and the atonements of an imaginary world? Whether the funeral pile consumes your bodies with flames, or old age with gradual dissolution, believe that they cannot suffer any injury. Souls are not subject to death; and having left their former abode, they ever inhabit new dwellings, and, there received, live on.

“I, myself, for I remember it, in the days of the Trojan war, was Euphorbus, the son of Panthoüs, in whose opposing breast once was planted the heavy spear of the younger son of Atreus. I lately recognised the shield, once the burden of my left arm, in the temple of Juno, at Argos, the realm of Abas. All things are ever changing; nothing perishes. The soul wanders about and comes from that spot to this, from this to that, and takes possession of any limbs whatever; it both passes from the beasts to human bodies, and so does our soul into the beasts; and in no lapse of time does it perish. And as the pliable wax is moulded into new forms, and no longer abides as it was before, nor preserves the same shape, but yet is still the same wax, so I tell you that the soul is ever the same, but passes into different forms. Therefore, that natural affection may not be vanquished by the craving of the appetite, cease, I warn you, to expel the souls of your kindred from their bodies by this dreadful slaughter; and let not blood be nourished with blood.

“And, since I am now borne over the wide ocean, and I have given my full sails to the winds, there is nothing in all the world that continues in the same state. All things are flowing onward, and every shape is assumed in a fleeting course. Even time itself glides on with a constant progress, no otherwise than a river. For neither can the river, nor the fleeting hour stop in its course; but, as wave is impelled by wave, and the one before is pressed on by that which follows, and itself presses on that before it; so do the moments similarly fly on, and similarly do they follow, and they are ever renewed. For the moment which was before, is past; and that which was not, now exists; and every minute is replaced. You see, too, the night emerge and proceed onward to the dawn, and this brilliant light of the day succeed the dark night. Nor is there the same appearance in the heavens, when all things in their weariness lie in the midst of repose, and when Lucifer is coming forth on his white steed; and, again, there is another appearance, when Aurora, the daughter of Pallas, preceding the day, tints the world about to be delivered to Phœbus. The disk itself of that God, when it is rising from beneath the earth, is of ruddy colour in the morning, and when it is hiding beneath the earth it is of a ruddy colour. At its height it is of brilliant whiteness, because there the nature of the æther . is purer, and far away, he avoids all infection from the earth. Nor can there ever be the same or a similar appearance of the nocturnal Diana; and always that of the present day is less than on the morrow, if she is on the increase; but greater if she is contracting her orb.

“And further. Do you not see the year, affording a resemblance of our life, assume four different appearances? for, in early Spring, it is mild, and like a nursling, and greatly resembling the age of youth. Then, the blade is shooting, and void of strength, it swells, and is flaccid, and delights the husbandman in his expectations. Then, all things are in blossom, and the genial meadow smiles with the tints of its flowers; and not as yet is there any vigour in the leaves. The year now waxing stronger, after the Spring, passes into the Summer; and in its youth it becomes robust. And indeed no season is there more vigorous, or more fruitful, or which glows with greater warmth. Autumn follows, the ardour of youth now removed, ripe, and placed between youth and old age, moderate in his temperature, with a few white hairs sprinkled over his temples. Then comes aged Winter, repulsive with his tremulous steps, either stript of his locks, or white with those which he has.

“Our own bodies too are changing always and without any intermission, and to-morrow we shall not be what we were or what we now are. The time was, when only as embryos, and the earliest hope of human beings, we lived in the womb of the mother. Nature applied her skilful hands, and willed not that our bodies should be tortured by being shut up within the entrails of the distended parent, and brought us forth from our dwelling into the vacant air. Brought to light, the infant lies without any strength; soon, like a quadruped, it uses its limbs after the manner of the brutes; and by degrees it stands upright, shaking, and with knees still unsteady, the sinews being supported by some assistance. Then he becomes strong and swift, and passes over the hours of youth; and the years of middle age, too, now past, he glides adown the steep path of declining age. This undermines and destroys the robustness of former years; and Milo, now grown old, weeps . when he sees the arms, which equalled those of Hercules in the massiveness of the solid muscles, hang weak and exhausted. The daughter of Tyndarus weeps, too, as she beholds in her mirror the wrinkles of old age, and enquires of herself why it is that she was twice ravished. Thou, Time, the consumer of all things, and thou, hateful Old Age, together destroy all things; and, by degrees ye consume each thing, decayed by the teeth of age, with a slow death.

“These things too, which we call elements, are not of unchanging duration; pay attention, and I will teach you what changes they undergo.

“The everlasting universe contains four elementary bodies. Two of these, namely, earth and water, are heavy, and are borne downwards by their weight; and as many are devoid of weight, and air, and fire still purer than air, nothing pressing them, seek the higher regions. Although these are separated in space, yet all things are made from them, and are resolved into them. Both the earth dissolving distils into flowing water; the water, too, evaporating, departs in the breezes and the air; its weight being removed again, the most subtle air shoots upwards into the fires of the æther on high. Thence do they return back again, and the same order is unravelled; for fire becoming gross, passes into dense air; this changes into water, and earth is formed of the water made dense. Nor does its own form remain to each; and nature, the renewer of all things, re-forms one shape from another. And, believe me, in this universe so vast, nothing perishes; but it varies and changes its appearance; and to begin to be something different from what it was before, is called being born; and to cease to be the same thing, is to be said to die. Whereas, perhaps, those things are transferred hither, and these things thither; yet, in the whole, all things ever exist.

“For my part, I cannot believe that anything lasts long under the same form. ‘Twas thus, ye ages, that ye came down to the iron from the gold; ‘tis thus, that thou hast so often changed the lot of various places. I have beheld that as sea, which once had been the most solid earth. I have seen land made from the sea; and far away from the ocean the sea-shells lay, . and old anchors were found there on the tops of the mountains. That which was a plain, a current of water has made into a valley, and by a flood the mountain has been levelled into a plain; the ground that was swampy is parched with dry sand; and places which have endured drought, are wet with standing pools. Here nature has opened fresh springs, but there she has shut them up; and rivers have burst forth, aroused by ancient earthquakes; or, vanishing, they have subsided.

“Thus, after the Lycus has been swallowed up by a chasm in the earth, it burst forth far thence, and springs up afresh at another mouth. Thus the great Erasinus is at one time swallowed up, and then flowing with its stream concealed, is cast up again on the Argive plains. They say, too, that the Mysus, tired of its spring and of its former banks, now flows in another direction, as the Caicus. The Amenanus, too, at one time flows, rolling along the Sicilian sands, and at another is dry, its springs being stopped up. Formerly, the water of the Anigros was used for drinking; it now pours out water which you would decline to touch; since, (unless all credit must be denied to the poets), the Centaurs, the double-limbed mortals, there washed the wounds which the bow of the club-bearing Hercules had made. And what besides? Does not the Hypanis too, which before was sweet, rising from the Scythian mountains, become impregnated . with bitter salts? Antissa, Pharos, and Phœnician Tyre, were once surrounded by waves; no one of these is now an island. The ancient inhabitants had Leucas annexed to the continent; now the sea surrounds it. Zancle, too, is said to have been united to Italy, until the sea cut off the neighbouring region, and repelled the land with its waves flowing between.

“Should you seek Helice and Buris, cities of Achaia, you will find them beneath the waves, and the sailors are still wont to point out these levelled towns, with their walls buried under water.

“There is a high hill near Trœzen of Pittheus, without any trees, once a very level surface of a plain, but now a hill; for (frightful to tell) the raging power of the winds, pent up in dark caverns, desiring to find some vent and having long struggled in vain to enjoy a freer air, as there was no opening in all their prison and it was not pervious to their blasts, swelled out the . extended earth, just as the breath of the mouth is wont to inflate a bladder, or the hide stripped from the two-horned goat. That swelling remained on the spot, and still preserves the appearance of a high hill, and has grown hard in length of time. Though many other instances may occur, either heard of by, or known to, yourselves, yet I will mention a few more. And besides, does not water, as well, both produce and receive new forms? In the middle of the day, thy waters, horned Ammon, are frozen, at the rising and at the setting of the sun they are warm. On applying its waters, Athamanis is said to kindle wood when the waning moon has shrunk into her smallest orb. The Ciconians have a river, which when drunk of, turns the entrails into stone, and lays a covering of marble on things that are touched by it. The Crathis and the Sybaris adjacent to it, in our own country, make the hair similar in hue to amber and gold.

“And, what is still more wonderful, there are some streams which are able to change, not only bodies, but even the mind. By whom has not Salmacis, with its obscene waters, been . heard of? Who has not heard, too, of that lake of Æthiopia, of which, if any body drinks with his mouth, he either becomes mad, or falls into a sleep wondrous for its heaviness? Whoever quenches his thirst from the Clitorian spring hates wine, and in his sobriety takes pleasure in pure water. Whether it is that there is a virtue in the water, the opposite of heating wine, or whether, as the natives tell us, after the son of Amithaon, by his charms and his herbs, had delivered the raving daughters of Proetus from the Furies, he threw the medicines for the mind in that stream; and a hatred of wine remained in those waters.

“The river Lyncestis flows unlike that stream in its effect; for as soon as any one has drunk of it with immoderate throat, he reels, just as if he had been drinking unmixed wine. There is a place in Arcadia, (the ancients called it Pheneos,) suspicious for the twofold nature of its water. Stand in dread of it at night; if drunk of in the night time, it is injurious; in the daytime, it is drunk of without any ill effects. So lakes and rivers have, some, one property, and some another. There was a time when Ortygia was floating on the waves, . now it is fixed. The Argo dreaded the Symplegades tossed by the assaults of the waves dashing against them; they now stand immoveable, and resist the attacks of the winds.

“Nor will Ætna, which burns with its sulphureous furnaces, always be a fiery mountain; nor yet was it always fiery. For, if the earth is an animal, and is alive, and has lungs that breathe forth flames in many a place, it may change the passages for its breathing, and oft as it is moved, may close these caverns and open others; or if the light winds are shut up in its lowermost caverns, and strike rocks against rocks, and matter that contains the elements of flame, and it takes fire at the concussion, the winds once calmed, the caverns will become cool; or, if the bituminous qualities take fire, or yellow sulphur is being dried up with a smouldering smoke, still, when the earth shall no longer give food and unctuous fuel to the flame, its energies being exhausted in length of time, and when nutriment shall be wanting to its devouring nature, it will not be able to endure hunger, and left destitute, it will desert its flames.

“The story is, that in the far Northern Pallene there are persons, who are wont to have their bodies covered with light feathers, when they have nine times entered the Tritonian lake. For my part I do not believe it; but the Scythian women, as well, having their limbs sprinkled with poison, are said to employ the same arts. But if we are to give any credit to things proved by experience, do you not see that whatever bodies are consumed by length of time, or by dissolving heat, are changed into small animals? Come too, bury some choice bullocks just slain, it is a thing well ascertained by experience, that flower-gathering bees are produced . promiscuously from the putrefying entrails. These, after the manner of their producers, inhabit the fields, delight in toil, and labour in hope. The warlike steed, buried in the ground, is the source of the hornet. If you take off the bending claws from the crab of the sea-shore, and bury the rest in the earth, a scorpion will come forth from the part so buried, and will threaten with its crooked tail.

“The silkworms, too, that are wont to cover the leaves with their white threads, a thing observable by husbandmen, change their forms into that of the deadly moth. Mud contains seed that generate green frogs; and it produces them deprived of feet; soon it gives them legs adapted for swimming; and that the same may be fitted for long leaps, the length of the hinder ones exceeds that of the fore legs. And it is not a cub which the bear produces at the moment of birth, but a mass of flesh hardly alive. By licking, the mother forms it into limbs, and brings it into a shape, such as she herself has. Do you not see, that the offspring of the honey bees, which the hexagonal cell conceals, are produced without limbs, and that they assume both feet and wings only after a time. Unless he knew it was the case, could any one suppose it possible that the bird of Juno, which carries stars on its tail, and the eagle, the armour-bearer of Jove, and the doves of Cytherea, and all the race of birds, are produced from the middle portion of an egg? There are . some who believe that human marrow changes into a serpent, when the spine has putrefied in the enclosed sepulchre.

“But these which I have named derive their origin from other particulars; there is one bird which renews and reproduces itself. The Assyrians call it the Phoenix. It lives not on corn or grass, but on drops of frankincense, and the juices of the amomum. This bird, when it has completed the five ages of its life, with its talons and its crooked beak constructs for itself a nest in the branches of a holm-oak, or on the top of a quivering palm. As soon as it has strewed in this cassia and ears of sweet spikenard and bruised cinnamon with yellow myrrh, it lays itself down on it, and finishes its life in the midst of odours. They say that thence, from the body of its parent, is reproduced a little Phoenix, which is destined to live as many years. When time has given it strength, and it is able to bear the weight, it lightens the branches of the lofty tree of the burden of the nest, and dutifully carries both its own cradle and the sepulchre of its parent; and, having reached the city of Hyperion through the yielding air, it lays it down before the sacred doors in the temple of Hyperion.

“And if there is any wondrous novelty in these things, still more may we be surprised that the hyæna changes its sex, and that the one which has just now, as a female, submitted to the embrace of the male, is now become a male itself. That animal, too, which feeds upon the winds and the air, immediately assumes, from its contact, any colour whatever. Conquered India presented her lynxes to Bacchus crowned with clusters; and, as they tell, whatever the bladder of these discharges . is changed into stone, and hardens by contact with the air. So coral, too, as soon as it has come up to the air becomes hard; beneath the waves it was a soft plant. “The day will fail me, and Phœbus will bathe his panting steeds in the deep sea, before I can embrace in my discourse all things that are changed into new forms. So in lapse of time, we see nations change, and these gaining strength, while those are falling. So Troy was great, both in her riches and her men, and for ten years could afford so much blood; whereas, now laid low, she only shows her ancient ruins, and, instead of her wealth, she points at the tombs of her ancestors. Sparta was famed; great Mycenæ flourished; so, too, the citadel of Cecrops, and that of Amphion. Now Sparta is a contemptible spot; lofty Mycenæ is laid low. What now is Thebes, the city of Ædipus, but a mere story? What remains of Athens, the city of Pandion, but its name?

“Now, too, there is a report that Dardanian Rome is rising; which, close to the waters of Tiber that rises in the Apennines, is laying the foundations of her greatness beneath a vast structure. She then, in her growth, is changing her form, and will one day be the mistress of the boundless earth. So they say that the soothsayers, and the oracles, revealers of destiny, declare; and, so far as I recollect, Helenus, the son of Priam, said to Æneas, as he was lamenting, and in doubt as to his safety, when now the Trojan state was sinking, ‘Son of a Goddess, if thou dost thyself well understand the presentiment of my mind, Troy shall not, thou being preserved, entirely fall. The flames and the sword shall afford thee a passage. Thou shalt go, and, together with thee, thou shalt bear ruined Pergamus; until a foreign soil, more friendly than thy native land, shall be the lot of Troy and thyself. Even now do I see that our Phrygian . posterity are destined to build a city, so great as neither now exists, nor will exist, nor has been seen in former times. Through a long lapse of ages, other distinguished men shall make it powerful, but one born of the blood of Iulus shall make it the mistress of the world. After the earth shall have enjoyed his presence, the æthereal abodes shall gain him, and heaven shall be his destination.’ Remembering it, I call to mind that Helenus prophesied this to Æneas, who bore the Penates from Troy; and I rejoice that my kindred walls are rising apace, and that to such good purpose for the Phrygians the Pelasgians conquered.

“But that we may not range afar with steeds that forget to hasten to the goal; the heavens, and whatever there is beneath them, and the earth, and whatever is upon it, change their form. We too, who are a portion of the universe, (since we are not only bodies, but are fleeting souls as well, and can enter into beasts as our abode, and be hidden within the breasts of the cattle), should allow those bodies which may contain the souls of our parents, or of our brothers, or of those allied with us by some tie, or of men at all events, to be safe and unmolested; and we ought not to fill our entrails with victuals fit for Thyestes. How greatly he disgraces himself, how in his impiety does he prepare himself for shedding human blood, who cuts the throat of the calf with the knife, and gives a deaf ear to its lowings! or who can kill the kid as it sends forth cries like those of a child; or who can feed upon the bird to which he himself has given food. How much is there wanting in these instances for downright criminality? A short step only is there thence to it!”

“Let the bull plough, or let it owe its death to aged years; let the sheep furnish us a defence against the shivering Boreas; let the well-fed she-goats afford their udders to be pressed by the hand. Away with your nets, and your springes and snares and treacherous contrivances; deceive not the bird with the bird-limed twig; deceive not the deer with the dreaded feather . foils; and do not conceal the barbed hooks in the deceitful bait. If any thing is noxious, destroy it, but even then only destroy it. Let your appetites abstain from it for food, and let them consume a more befitting sustenance.”

EXPLANATION.

The Poet having now exhausted nearly all the transformations which ancient history afforded him, proceeds to enlist in the number some of the real phenomena of nature, together with some imaginary ones.

As Pythagoras was considered to have pursued metaphysical studies more deeply, perhaps, than any other of the ancient philosophers, Ovid could not have introduced a personage more fitted to discuss these subjects. Having travelled through Asia, it is supposed that Pythagoras passed into Italy, and settled at Crotona, to promulgate there the philosophical principles which he had acquired in his travels through Egypt and Asia Minor.

The Pythagorean philosophy was well-suited for the purpose of mingling its doctrines with the fabulous narratives of the Poet, as it consisted, in great part, of the doctrine of an endless series of transformations. Its main features may be reduced to two general heads; the first of which was the doctrine of the Metempsychosis, or continual transmigration of souls from one body into another. Pythagoras is supposed not to have originated this doctrine, but to have received it from the Egyptians, by whose priesthood there is little doubt that it was generally promulgated. Some writers have suggested that this transmigration was only taught by Pythagoras in a metaphorical sense; as, for instance, when he said that the souls of men were transferred to beasts, it was only to teach us that irregular passions render us brutes; on examination, however, we shall find that there is no ground to doubt that he intended his doctrines to be understood according to the literal meaning of his words; indeed, the more strongly to enforce his doctrine by a personal illustration, he was in the habit of promulgating that he remembered to have been Euphorbus, at the time of the siege of Troy, and that his soul, after several other transmigrations, had at last entered the body which it then inhabited, under the name of Pythagoras. In consequence of this doctrine, it was a favourite tenet of his followers to abstain from eating the flesh of animals, for fear of unconsciously devouring some friend or kinsman.

The second feature of this philosophy consisted in the elucidation of the changes that happen in the physical world, a long series of which is here set forth by the Poet; truth being mingled at random with fiction. While some of his facts are based upon truth, others seem to have only emanated from the fertile invention of the travellers of those days; of the latter kind are the stories of the river of Thrace, whose waters petrified those who drank of it; the fountains that kindled wood, that caused a change of sex, that created an aversion to wine, that transformed men into birds, and fables of a similar nature; such, too, are those stories which were generally believed by even the educated men of antiquity, . but which the wisdom of modern times has long since shown to be utterly baseless, as, for instance, that bees grew from the entrails of the ox, and hornets from those of the horse. The principle of Pythagoras, that everything is continually changing and that nothing perishes, is true to a certain extent; but in his times, and even in those of Ovid, philosophy was not sufficiently advanced to speak with precision on the subject, and to discover the true boundary between truth and fiction.

FABLES IV. V. AND VI.

Egeria, the wife of Numa, is inconsolable after his death, and is changed into a fountain. The horses of Hippolytus being frightened by a sea-monster, he is killed by being thrown from his chariot, and becomes a God, under the name of Virbius. Tages, the Diviner, arises out of a clod of earth. The lance of Romulus is changed into a cornel-tree. Cippus becomes horned, and goes into voluntary banishment, rather than his country should be deprived of its liberty by his means.

With his mind cultivated with precepts such as these and others, they say that Numa returned to his country, and, being voluntarily invited, received the sovereignty of the Roman people. Blest with a Nymph for his wife, and the Muses for his guides, he taught the rites of sacrifice, and brought over to the arts of peace a race inured to savage warfare. After, full of years, he had finished his reign and his life, the Latian matrons and the people and the Senators lamented Numa at his death. But his wife, leaving the city, lay hid, concealed in the thick groves of the valley of Aricia, and by her groans and lamentations disturbed the sacred rites of Diana, brought thither by Orestes. Ah! how oft did the Nymphs of the grove and of the lake entreat her not to do so, and utter soothing words. Ah! how often did the hero, the son of Theseus, say to her as she wept, "Put an end to it; for thy lot is not the only one to be lamented. Consider the like calamities of others, thou wilt then bear thine own better. And would that an example, not my own, could lighten thy grief! yet even my own can do so."

"I suppose, in discourse it has reached thy ears that a certain Hippolytus met with his death through the credulity of his father, by the deceit of his wicked step-mother. Thou wilt . wonder, and I shall hardly be able to prove it; but yet I am he. In former times, the daughter of Pasiphaë, having tempted me in vain, pretended that I wished to defile the couch of my father, a thing that she herself wished to do; and having turned the accusation against me, (whether it was more through dread of discovery, or through mortification at her repulse) she charged me. And my father expelled me, thus innocent, from the city, and as I went he uttered imprecations against my head, with ruthless prayers. I was going to Trœzen, the city of Pittheus, in my flying chariot, and I was now proceeding along the shores of the Corinthian gulf, when the sea was aroused, and an enormous mass of waters seemed to bend and to grow in the form of a mountain, and to send forth a roaring noise, and to burst asunder at its very summit. Thence, the waves being divided, a horned bull was sent forth, and erect in the light air as far as his breast, he vomited forth a quantity of sea-water from his nostrils and his open mouth. The hearts of my attendants quailed; my mind remained without fear, intent

only on my exile, when the fierce horses turned their necks towards the sea, and were terrified, with ears erect; and they were alarmed with dread of the monster, and precipitated the chariot over the lofty rocks. I struggled, with unavailing hand, to guide the bridle covered with white foam, and, throwing myself backwards, I pulled back the loosened reins. And, indeed, the madness of my steeds would not have exceeded that strength of mine, had not the wheel, by running against a stump, been broken and disjoined just where it turns round on the long axle-tree.

“I was hurled from my chariot; and, the reins entwined around my limbs, you might have seen my palpitating entrails dragged, my sinews fasten upon the stump, my limbs partly torn to pieces and partly left behind, being caught by various obstacles, my bones in their breaking emit a loud noise, and my exhausted breath become exhaled, and not a part in my body which you could recognize; and the whole of me formed but one continued wound. And canst thou, Nymph, or dost thou venture to compare thy misfortune to mine? I have visited, too, the realms deprived of light, and I have bathed my lacerated body in . the waves of Phlegethon. Nor could life have been restored me, but through the powerful remedies of the son of Apollo. After I had received it, through potent herbs and the Pæonian aid, much against the will of Pluto, then Cynthia threw around me thick clouds, that I might not, by my presence, increase his anger at this favour; and that I might be safe, and be seen in security, she gave me a more aged appearance, and left me no features that could be recognized. For a long time she was doubtful whether she should give me Crete or Delos for me to possess. Delos and Crete being abandoned, she placed me here, and, at the same time, she ordered me to lay aside my name, which might have reminded me of my steeds, and she said, ‘Thou, the same who wast Hippolytus, be thou now Virbius.’ From that time I have inhabited this grove; and, as one of the lower Gods, I lie concealed under the protection of my mistress, and to her am I devoted.”

But yet the misfortunes of others were not able to alleviate the grief of Egeria; and, throwing herself down at the base of the hill, she dissolved into tears; until, moved by her affection as she grieved, the sister of Phoëbus formed a cool fountain from her body, and dissolved her limbs in ever-flowing waters.

But this new circumstance surprised the Nymphs; and the son of the Amazon was astonished, in no other manner than as when the Etrurian ploughman beheld the fate-revealing clod in the midst of the fields move at first of its own accord and no one touching it, and afterwards assume a human form, and lose that of earth, and open its new-made mouth with the decrees of future destiny. The natives called him Tages. He was the first to teach the Etrurian nation to foretell future events.

Or, as when Romulus once saw his lance, fixed in the Palatine hill, suddenly shoot forth; which now stood there with a root newly-formed, and not with the iron point driven in; and, now no longer as a dart, but as a tree with limber twigs, it sent forth, for the admiring spectators, a shade that was not looked for.

Or, as when Cippus beheld his horns in the water of the stream, (for he did see them) and, believing that there was a false representation in the reflection, often returning his fingers to his forehead, he touched what he saw. And now, no longer condemning his own eyesight, he stood still, as he was returning victorious from the conquest of the enemy; and raising his eyes towards heaven, and his hands in the same direction, he exclaimed, “Ye Gods above! whatever is portended by this prodigy, if it is auspicious, then be it auspicious to my country and to the people of Quirinus; but if unfortunate, be it so for myself.” And then he made atonement at the grassy altars built of green turf, with odoriferous fires, and presented wine in bowls, and consulted the panting entrails of slaughtered sheep what the meaning of it was. Soon as the soothsayer of the Etrurian nation had inspected them, he beheld in them the great beginnings of future events, but still not clearly. But when he raised his searching eyes from the entrails of the sheep, to the horns of Cippus, he said, "Hail, O king! for thee, Cippus, thee and thy horns shall this place and the Latian towers obey. Only do thou lay aside all delay; hasten to enter the gates wide open; thus the fates command thee. For, once received within the City, thou shalt be king, and thou shalt safely enjoy a lasting sceptre." He retreated backwards, and turning his stern visage away from the walls of the City, he exclaimed, "Far, O far away may the Gods drive such omens! Much more righteously shall I pass my life in exile, than if the Capitol were to see me a king."

Thus he says; and forthwith he convokes the people and the dignified Senate; but first, he veils his horns with laurel that betokens peace, and he stands upon a mound raised by his brave soldiers; and praying to the Gods after the ancient manner, "Behold!" says he, "one is here who will be king, if you do not expel him from the City. I will tell you who he is by a sign, and not by name. He wears horns on his forehead; the augur predicts to you, that if he enters the City, he shall give you laws as his slaves. He, indeed, was able to . enter the open gates, but I have opposed him; although no one is more nearly allied with him than myself. Forbid your City to this man, ye Romans, or, if he shall deserve it, bind him with heavy fetters; or else end your fears by the death of the destined tyrant."

As the murmur which arises among the groves of the slender pine, when the furious East wind whistles among them, or as that which the waves of the ocean produce, if any one hears them from afar, such is the noise of the crowd. But yet amid the confused words of the shouting multitude, one cry is distinguished, "Which is he?" And then they examine the foreheads, and seek the predicted horns.

Cippus again addresses them: "Him whom you require, ye now have;" and, despite of the people, throwing the chaplet from his head, he exhibits his temples, remarkable for two horns. All cast down their eyes, and utter groans, and (who would have supposed it?) they unwillingly look upon that head famed for its merits. And no longer suffering it to be deprived of its honours, they place upon it the festive chaplet. But the nobles, Cippus, since thou art forbidden to enter the city, give thee as much land, as a mark of honour, as thou canst, with the oxen yoked to the pressed plough, make the circuit of from the rising of the sun to its setting. They carve, too, the horns, imitating their wondrous form, on the door-posts adorned with brass, there to remain for long ages.

EXPLANATION.

Ovid, following the notion that was generally entertained of the wisdom of Numa, pretends that before he was elected to the sovereignty he went to Crotona, for the purpose of studying under Pythagoras; but he is guilty of a considerable anachronism in this instance, as Pythagoras was not born till very many years after the time of Numa. According to Livy, Pythagoras flourished in the time of Servius Tullius, the sixth Roman king, about one hundred and fifty years after Numa. Modern authors are of opinion that upwards of two hundred years intervened between the days of Numa and Pythagoras. Besides, Dionysius of Halicarnassus distinctly asserts that the city of Crotona was only built in the fourth year of the reign of Numa Pompilius.

Numa is said to have been in the habit of retiring to the Arician grove, to consult the Nymph Egeria upon the laws which he was about to promulgate for the benefit of his subjects. It is probable, that to ensure 541 their observance the more effectually, he wished the people to believe that his enactments were compiled under the inspection of one who partook of the immortal nature, and that in so doing he followed the example of previous lawgivers. Zamolxis pretended that the laws which he gave to the Scythians were dictated to him by his attendant genius or spirit. The first Minos affirmed that Jupiter was the author of the ordinances which he gave to the people of Crete, while Lycurgus attributed his to Apollo. It is not improbable that in this they imitated the example of Moses, a tradition of whose reception of the laws on Mount Sinai they may have received from the people of Phœnicia.

Dionysius of Halicarnassus has an interesting passage relative to Numa, which throws some light upon his alleged intercourse with the Nymph Egeria. His words are—'The Romans affirm that Numa was never engaged in any warlike expedition; but that he passed his whole reign in profound peace: that his first care was to encourage piety and justice in his dominions, and to civilize his people by good and wholesome laws. His profound skill in governing made him pass for being inspired, and gave rise to many fabulous stories. Some have said that he had secret interviews with the Nymph Egeria; others, that he frequently consulted one of the Muses, and was instructed by her in the art of government. Numa was desirous to confirm the people in this opinion; but because some hesitated to believe his bare affirmation, and others went so far as to call his alleged converse with the Deities a fiction, he took an opportunity to give them such proofs of it, that the most sceptical among them should have no room left for suspicion. This he effected in the following manner. He one day invited several of the nobles to his palace, and showed them the plainness of the apartments, where no rich furniture was to be seen, nor any thing like an attempt at splendour; and how even the most ordinary necessaries were wanting for anything like a great entertainment; after which, he dismissed them with an invitation to come to sup with him on the same night. At the appointed hour his guests arrived; they were received on stately couches; the tables were decked with a variety of plate, and were loaded with the most exquisite dainties. The guests were struck with the sumptuousness and profusion of the entertainment, and considering how impossible it was for any man to have made such preparations in so short a time, were persuaded that his communication with heaven was not a fiction, and that he must have had the aid of the celestial powers to do things of a nature so extraordinary. 'But,' as the same author says, 'those who were not so ready at adopting fabulous narratives as a part of history, say that it was the policy of Numa which led him to feign a conversation with the Nymph Egeria, to make his laws respected by his people, and that he thence followed the example of the Greek sages, who adopted the same method of enforcing the authority of their laws with the people.'

The Romans were so persuaded of the fact of Numa's conferences with the Nymph Egeria, that they went into the grove of Aricia to seek her; but finding nothing but a fountain in the spot which he used to frequent, they promulgated the story of the transformation of the Nymph. St. Augustin, speaking on this subject, says that Numa made use 542 of the waters of that fountain in the divination which was performed by the aid of water, and was called Hydromancy.

Theseus having left Ariadne in the isle of Naxos, flattered himself with the hopes of marrying her sister Phædra. Deucalion, succeeding Minos in Crete immediately after his death, sent Phædra to Athens. On arriving there, she fell in love with Hippolytus, the son of Theseus, who had been brought up at Trœzen by Pittheus. As she did not dare to request of Theseus that his son might be brought from the court of Pittheus, she built a temple to Venus near Trœzen, that she might the more frequently have the opportunity of seeing Hippolytus, and called it by the name of Hippolyteum. According to Euripides, this youth was wise, chaste, and an enemy to all voluptuousness. He spent his time in hunting and chariot racing, with other exercises which formed the pursuits of youths of high station. According to Plutarch, it was at the time when Theseus was a prisoner in Epirus, that Phædra took the opportunity of disclosing to Hippolytus the violence of her passion for him. Her declaration being but ill received, she grew desperate on his refusal to comply with her desires, and was about to commit self-destruction, when her nurse suggested the necessity of revenging the virtuous disdain of the youth.

Theseus having been liberated by Hercules, Phædra, being fearful lest the intrigue should come to his knowledge, hanged herself, having first written a letter to inform him that she could not survive an attempt which Hippolytus had made on her virtue. Plutarch, Servius and Hyginus, following Euripides, give this account of her death. But Seneca, in his Hippolytus, says that she only appeared before her husband in extreme grief, holding a sword in her hand to signify the violence which Hippolytus had offered her. On this, Theseus implored the assistance of Neptune, who sent a monster out of the sea, to frighten his horses, as he was driving along the sea-shore: on which, they took fright, and throwing him from his chariot, he was killed. It has been suggested that the true meaning of this is, that Theseus having ordered his son to come and justify himself, he made so much haste that his horses ran away with him; and his chariot being dashed over the rocks, he was killed.

Seneca also differs from the other writers, in saying that Phædra did not put herself to death till she had heard of the catastrophe of Hippolytus, on which she stabbed herself. The people of Træzen, regretting his loss, decreed him divine honours, built a temple, and appointed a priest to offer yearly sacrifices to him. Euripides says, that the young women of Træzen, when about to be married, cut off their hair and carried it to the temple of Hippolytus. It was also promulgated that the Gods had translated him to the heavens, where he was changed into the Constellation, called by the Latins 'Auriga,' or 'the Charioteer.' Later authors, whom Ovid here follows, added, that Æsculapius restored him to life, and that he afterwards appeared in Italy under the name of Virbius. This story was probably invented as a source of profit by the priesthood, who were desirous to find some good reason for introducing his worship into the Arician grove near Rome. This story is mentioned by Apollodorus, who quotes the author of the Naupactan verses in favour of it, and by the Scholiasts of Euripides and Pindar.

The ancient Etrurians were great adepts in the art of divination; their favourite method of exercising which was by the inspection of the entrails of beasts, and the observation of the flight of birds; and from them, as we learn from Cicero in his book on Divination, the system spread over the whole of Italy. Tages is supposed to have been the first who taught this art, and he wrote treatises upon it, which, according to Plutarch, were quoted by ancient authors. It not being known whence he came, or who were his parents, he was called, in the language of the poets, a son of the earth. Ammianus Marcellinus speaks of him as being said to have sprung out of the earth in Etruria.

Ovid next makes a passing allusion to the spear of Romulus, which, when thrown by him from the Mount Aventine towards the Capitol, sticking in the ground was converted into a tree, which immediately put forth leaves. This prodigy was taken for a presage of the future greatness of Rome: and Plutarch, in his life of Romulus, says that so long as this tree stood, the Republic flourished. It began to wither in the time of the first civil war; and Julius Cæsar having afterwards ordered a building to be erected near where it stood, the workmen cutting some of its roots in sinking the foundations, it soon after died. It is hardly probable that a cornel tree would stand in a thronged city for nearly seven hundred years; and it is, therefore, most likely, that care was taken to renovate it from time to time, by planting slips from the former tree.

The story of Genucius Cippus is one of those strange fables with which the Roman history is diversified. Valerius Maximus gives the following account of it. He says that Cippus, going one day out of Rome, suddenly found that something which resembled horns was growing out of his forehead. Surprised at an event so extraordinary, he consulted the augurs, who said that he would be chosen king, if he ever entered the city again. As the royal power was abhorred in Rome, he preferred a voluntary banishment to revisiting Rome on those terms. Struck with this heroism, the Romans erected a brazen statue with horns over the gate by which he departed, and it was afterwards called 'Porta raudusculana,' because the ancient Latin name of brass was 'raudus,' 'rodus,' or 'rudus.' The fact is, however, as Ovid represents it, that Cippus was not going out of Rome, but returning to it, when the prodigy happened; he having been to convey assistance to the Consul Valerius. The Senate also conferred certain lands on Cippus, as a reward for his patriotism. He lived about two hundred and forty years before the Christian era. Pliny the Elder considers the story of the horns of Cippus as much a fable as that of Actæon. It appears, however, that the account of the horns may have possibly been founded on fact, as excrescences resembling them have appeared on the bodies of individuals. Bayle makes mention of a girl of Palermo, who had little horns all over her body, like those of a young calf. In the Ashmolean museum at Oxford, a substance much resembling the horn of a goat is shown, which is said to have sprung from the forehead of a female named Mary Davis, whose likeness is there shown. The excrescence was most probably produced by a deranged secretion of the hair, and something of a similar nature may perhaps have befallen Genucius Cippus, which, of course, would be made the most of in those ages of superstition. Valerius Maximus, with all his credulity, does not say that they were real horns that made their appearance, but that they were 'just like horns.'

It is not improbable that the story originally was, that Cippus, on his return to Rome, dreamt that he had horns on his head, and that having consulted the augurs, and received the answer mentioned by Ovid, he preferred to suffer exile, rather than enslave his country; and that, in length of time, the more wonderful part of the story was added to it.

FABLE VII.

Rome being wasted by a pestilence, the Delphian oracle is consulted; and the answer is given, that to cause it to cease Æsculapius must be brought to Rome. On this, ambassadors are sent to Epidaurus to demand the God. The people refuse to part with him; but he appears to one of the Romans in a dream, and consents to go. On his arrival at Rome the contagion ceases, and a Temple is built in his honour.

Relate, now, ye Muses, the guardian Deities of poets (for you know, and remote antiquity conceals it not from you), whence it is that the Island surrounded by the channel of the Tiber introduced the son of Coronis into the sacred rites of the City of Romulus. A dire contagion had once infected the Latian air, and the pale bodies were deformed by a consumption that dried up the blood. When, wearied with so many deaths, they found that mortal endeavours availed nothing, and that the skill of physicians had no effect, they sought the aid of heaven, and they repaired to Delphi which occupies the centre spot of the world, the oracle of Phœbus, and entreated that he would aid their distressed circumstances by a response productive of health, and put an end to the woes of a City so great. Both the spot, and the laurels, and the quivers which it has, shook at the same moment, and the tripod gave this answer from the recesses of the shrine, and struck with awe their astonished breasts:

—“What here thou dost seek, O Roman, thou mightst have sought in a nearer spot: and now seek it in a nearer spot; thou hast no need of Apollo to diminish thy grief, but of the son of Apollo. Go with a good omen, and invite my son.”

After the prudent Senate had received the commands of the . Deity, they enquired what city the youthful son of Phoebus inhabited; and they sent some to reach the coasts of Epidaurus with the winds. Soon as those sent had reached them in the curving ship, they repaired to the council and the Grecian elders, and besought them to grant them the Divinity, who by his presence could put an end to the mortality of the Ausonian nation; for that so the unerring response had directed. Their opinions were divided, and differed; and some thought that aid ought not to be refused. Many refused it, and advised them not to part with their own protector, and to give up their own guardian Deity. While they were deliberating, twilight had now expelled the waning day, and the shadow of the earth had brought darkness over the world; when, in thy sleep, the saving God seemed, O Roman, to be standing before thy couch; but just as he is wont to be in his temple; and, holding a rustic staff in his left hand, he seemed to be stroking the long hair of his beard with his right, and to utter such words as these from his kindly breast—“Lay aside thy fears; I will come, and I will leave these my statues. Only observe now this serpent, which with its folds entwines around this staff, and accurately mark it with thine eyes, that thou mayst be able to know it again. Into this shall I be changed; but I shall be greater, and I shall appear to be of a size as great as that into which heavenly bodies ought to be transformed.”

Forthwith, with these words, the God departs; and with his words and the God sleep departs, and genial light follows upon the departure of sleep. The following morn has now dispersed the starry fires; uncertain what to do, the nobles meet together in the sumptuous temple of the God then sought, and beseech him to indicate, by celestial tokens, in what spot he would wish to abide. Hardly have they well ceased, when the God, all glittering with gold, in the form of a serpent, with crest erect, sends forth a hissing, as a notice of his approach; and in his coming, he shakes both his statue, the altars, the doors, the marble pavement, and the gilded roof, and as far as the breast he stands erect in the midst of the temple, and rolls around his eyes that sparkle with fire. The frightened multitude is alarmed; the priest, having his chaste hair bound with a white fillet, recognizes the Deity and exclaims, "The God! . Behold the God! Whoever you are that are present, be of good omen, both with your words and your feelings. Mayst thou, most beauteous one, be beheld to our advantage; and mayst thou aid the nations that perform thy sacred rites." Whoever are present, adore the Deity as bidden; and all repeat the words of the priest over again; and the descendants of Æneas give a pious omen, both with their feelings, and in their words. To these the God shows favour; and with crest erected, he gives a hiss, a sure token, repeated thrice with his vibrating tongue. Then he glides down the polished steps, and turns back his head, and, about to depart, he looks back upon his ancient altars, and salutes his wonted abode and the temple that so long he has inhabited. Then, with his vast bulk, he glides along the ground covered with the strewn flowers, and coils his folds, and through the midst of the city repairs to the harbour protected by its winding quay.

Here he stops; and seeming to dismiss his train, and the dutiful attendance of the accompanying crowd, with a placid countenance, he places his body in the Ausonian ship. It is sensible of the weight of the God; and the ship now laden with the Divinity for its freight, the descendants of Æneas rejoice; and a bull having first been slain on the sea-shore, they loosen the twisted cables of the bark bedecked with garlands. A gentle breeze has now impelled the ship. The God is conspicuous aloft, and pressing upon the crooked stern with his neck laid upon it, he looks down upon the azure waters; and with the gentle Zephyrs along the Ionian sea, on the sixth rising of the daughter of Pallas, he makes Italy, and is borne along the Lacinian shores, ennobled by the temple of the Goddess Juno, and the Scylacean coasts. He leaves Iapygia behind, and flies from the Amphissian rocks with the oars on the left side; on the right side he passes by the steep Ceraunia, and Romechium, and Caulon, and Narycia, and he crosses the sea and the straits of the Sicilian Pelorus, and the abodes of the king the grandson of Hippotas, and the mines of Temesa; and then he makes for Leucosia, and the rose-beds of the warm Pæstum. Then he coasts by Capreæ, and the promontory of Minerva, and the hills ennobled with the Surrentine vines, and the city of Hercules, and Stabiæ, and Parthenope made for retirement, and after it the temple of the Cumæan Sibyl. Next, the warm springs are passed by, and Linternum, that bears mastick trees; and then Vulturinus, that carries much sand along with its tide, and Sinuessa, that abounds with snow-white snakes, and the pestilential Minturnæ, and she for whom her foster-child erected the tomb, and the abode of Antiphates, and Trachas, surrounded by the marsh, and the land of Circe, and Antium, with its rocky coast.

After the sailors have steered the sail-bearing ship hither (for now the sea is aroused), the Deity unfolds his coils, and gliding with many a fold and in vast coils, he enters the temple of his parent, that skirts the yellow shore. The sea now becalmed, the God of Epidaurus leaves the altars of his sire; and having enjoyed the hospitality of the Deity, thus related to him, he furrows the sands of the sea-shore with the dragging of his rattling scales, and reclining against the helm of the ship, he places his head upon the lofty stern; until he comes to Castrum, and the sacred abodes of Lavinium, and the mouths of the Tiber. Hither, all the people indiscriminately, a crowd both of matrons and of men, rush to meet him; they, too, Vesta! who tend thy fires; and with joyous shouts they welcome the God. And where the swift ship is steered through the tide running out, altars being erected in a line, the frankincense crackles along the banks on either side, and perfumes the air with its smoke; the felled victim too, with its blood makes warm the knives thrust into it.

And now he has entered Rome, the sovereign of the world. The serpent rises erect, and lifts his neck that reclines against the top of the mast, and looks around for a habitation suited for himself. There is a spot, where the river flowing around, is divided into two parts; it is called "the Island." The river in the direction of each side extends its arms of equal length, the dry land lying in the middle. Hither, the serpent, son of Phœbus, betakes himself from the Latian ship; and he puts an end to the mourning, having resumed his celestial form. And thus did he come, the restorer of health, to the City.

EXPLANATION.

The story here narrated by Ovid is derived from the Roman history, to which we will shortly refer for an explanation.

Under the consulate of Quintus Fabius Gurges, and Decimus Junius Brutus Scæva, Rome was ravaged by a frightful pestilence. The resources of physic having been exhausted, the Sibylline books were consulted to ascertain by what expedient the calamity might be put an end to, and they found that the plague would not cease till they had brought Æsculapius from Epidaurus to Rome. Being then engaged in war, they postponed their application to the Epidaurians for a year, at the end of which time they despatched an embassy to Epidaurus; on which a serpent was delivered to them, which the priests of the Deity . assured them was the God himself. Taking it on board their ship, the delegates set sail. When near Antium, they were obliged to put in there by stress of weather, and the serpent, escaping from the ship, remained three days on shore; after which it came on board of its own accord, and they continued their voyage. On arriving at the Island of the Tiber the serpent escaped, and concealed itself amid the reeds; and as they, in their credulity, fancied that the God had chosen the place for his habitation, they built a temple there in his honour. From this period, which was about the year of Rome 462, the worship of Æsculapius was introduced in the city, and to him recourse was had in cases of disease, and especially in times of pestilence.

FABLE VIII.

Julius Cæsar is assassinated in the Senate-house, and by the intercession of Venus, his ancestor, he is changed into a star. The Poet concludes his work with a compliment to Augustus, and a promise of immortality to himself.

And still, he came a stranger to our temples; Cæsar is a Deity in his own city; whom, alike distinguished both in war and peace, wars ending with triumphs, his government at home, and the rapid glory of his exploits, did not more tend to change into a new planet, and a star with brilliant train, than did his own progeny. For of all the acts of Cæsar, there is not one more ennobling than that he was the father of this our Cæsar. Was it, forsooth, a greater thing to have conquered the Britons surrounded by the ocean, and to have steered his victorious ships along the seven-mouthed streams of the Nile that bears the papyrus, and to have added to the people of Quirinus the rebellious Numidians and the Cinyphian Juba, and Pontus proud of the fame of Mithridates, and to have deserved many a triumph, and to have enjoyed some, than it was to have been the father of a personage so great, under whose tutelage over the world, you, ye Gods above, have shewn excessive care for the human race? That he then might not be sprung from mortal seed, 'twas fit that Julius should be made a Divinity. When the resplendent mother of . Æneas was sensible of this; and when she saw that a sad death was in preparation for the Pontiff, and that the arms of the conspirators were brandished; she turned pale, and said to each of the Deities, as she met them: —

“Behold, on how vast a scale treason is plotted against me, and with how great perfidy that life is sought, which alone remains for me from the Dardanian Iulus. Shall I alone be everlastingly harassed by justified anxieties? I, whom one while the Calydonian lance of the son of Tydeus is wounding, and at another time the walls of Troy, defended in vain, are grieving? I, who have seen my son driven about in protracted wanderings, tossed on the ocean, entering the abodes of the departed, and waging war with Turnus; or, if we confess the truth, with Juno rather? But, why am I now calling to mind the ancient misfortunes of my own offspring? Present apprehensions do not allow me to remember things of former days. Against me, you behold how the impious swords are now being whetted. Avert them, I entreat; hinder this crime, and do not, by the murder of the priest, extinguish the flames of Vesta.”

Such expressions as these did Venus, full of anxiety, vainly let fall throughout the heavens, and she moved the Gods above. Although they were not able to frustrate the iron decrees of the aged sisters, yet they afforded no unerring tokens of approaching woe. They say, that arms resounding amid the black clouds, and dreadful blasts of the trumpet, and clarions heard through the heavens, forewarned men of the crime. The sad face too of the sun gave a livid light to the alarmed earth. Often did torches seem to be burning in the midst of the stars; often did drops of blood fall in the showers. The azure-coloured Lucifer had his light tinted with a dark iron colour; the chariot of the moon was besprinkled with blood. The Stygian owl gave omens of ill in a thousand places; in a thousand places did the ivory statues shed tears; dirges, too, are said to have been heard, and threatening expressions in the sacred groves. No victim gave an omen of good; the entrails, too, showed that great tumults were imminent; and the extremity of the liver was found cut off among the entrails. They say, too, that in the Forum, and around the houses and the temples of the Gods, the dogs were howling by night; and that the ghosts of the departed were walking, and that the City was . shaken by earthquakes. But still the warnings of the Gods could not avert treachery and the approach of Fate, and drawn swords were carried into a temple; and no other place in the whole City than the Senate-house pleased them for this crime and this atrocious murder.

But then did Cytherea beat her breast with both her hands, and attempt to hide the descendant of Æneas in a cloud, in which, long since, Paris was conveyed from the hostile son of Atreus, and Æneas had escaped from the sword of Diomedes. In such words as these did her father Jove address her: “Dost thou, my daughter, unaided, attempt to change the insuperable decrees of Fate? Thou, thyself, mayst enter the abode of the three sisters, and there thou wilt behold the register of future events, wrought with vast labour, of brass and of solid iron; these, safe and destined for eternity, fear neither the thundering shock of the heavens, nor the rage of the lightnings, nor any source of destruction. There wilt thou find the destinies of thy descendants engraved in everlasting adamant. I myself have read them, and I have marked them in my mind; I will repeat them, that thou mayst not still be ignorant of the future. He (on whose account, Cytherea, thou art thus anxious), has completed his time, those years being ended which he owed to the earth. Thou, with his son, who, as the heir to his glory, will bear the burden of government devolving on him, wilt cause him, as a Deity, to reach the heavens, and to be worshipped in temples; and he, as a most valiant avenger of his murdered parent, will have us to aid him in his battles. The conquered walls of Mutina, besieged under his auspices, shall sue for peace; Pharsalia shall be sensible of him, and Philippi, again drenched with Emathian gore; and the name of one renowned as Great, shall be subdued in the Sicilian waves; the Egyptian dame too, the wife of the Roman . general, shall fall, vainly trusting in that alliance; and in vain shall she threaten, that our own Capitol shall be obedient to her Canopus. Why should I recount to thee the regions of barbarism, and nations situate in either ocean? Whatever the habitable world contains, shall be his; the sea, too, shall be subject to him. Peace being granted to the earth, he will turn his attention to civil rights, and, as a most upright legislator, he will enact laws. After his own example, too, will he regulate manners; and, looking forward to the days of future time, and of his coming posterity, he will order the offspring born of his hallowed wife to assume both his own name and his cares. Nor shall he, until as an aged man he shall have equalled his glories with like years, arrive at the abodes of heaven and his kindred stars. Meanwhile, change this soul, snatched from the murdered body, into a beam of light, that eternally the Deified Julius may look down from his lofty abode upon our Capitol and Forum.”

Hardly had he uttered these words, when the genial Venus, perceived by none, stood in the very midst of the Senate-house, and snatched the soul, just liberated from the body, away from the limbs of her own Cæsar, and, not suffering it to dissolve in air, she bore it amid the stars of heaven. And as she bore it, she perceived it assume a train of light and become inflamed; and she dropped it from her bosom. Above the moon it takes its flight, and, as a star, it glitters, carrying a flaming train with a lengthened track; and, as he beholds the illustrious deeds of his son, he confesses that they are superior to his own, and rejoices that he is surpassed by him. Although Augustus forbids his own actions to be lauded before those of his father, still Fame, in her freedom and subject to no commands, prefers him against his will; and, in this one point, she disobeys him. Thus does Atreus yield to the glories of the great Agamemnon; thus does Theseus excel Ægeus, and thus Achilles Peleus. In fine, that I may use examples that equal themselves, thus too, is Saturn inferior to Jove. Jupiter rules the abodes of heaven and the realms of the threefold world: the earth is under Augustus: each of them is a father and a ruler. Ye Gods, the companions of Æneas, for whom both the sword and the flames made a way; and you, ye native Deities, and thou, Quirinus, the father of the City, and thou, Gradivus, the son of the invincible Quirinus, and thou, Vesta, held sacred among the Penates of Cæsar; and, with the Vesta of Cæsar, thou, Phœbus, enshrined in thy abode, and thou, Jupiter, who aloft dost possess the Tarpeian heights, and whatever other Deities it is lawful and righteous for a Poet to invoke; late, I pray, may be that day, and protracted beyond my life, on which the person of Augustus, leaving that world which he rules, shall approach the heavens: and when gone, may he propitiously listen to those who invoke him.

And now I have completed a work, which neither the anger of Jove, nor fire, nor steel, nor consuming time will be able to destroy! Let that day, which has no power but over this body of mine, put an end to the term of my uncertain life, when it will. Yet, in my better part, I shall be raised immortal above the lofty stars, and indelible shall be my name. And wherever the Roman power is extended throughout the vanquished earth, I shall be read by the lips of nations, and (if the presages of Poets have aught of truth) throughout all ages shall I survive in fame.

EXPLANATION.

The Poet having fulfilled his promise, and having brought down his work from the beginning of the world to his own times, concludes it with the apotheosis of Julius Cæsar. He here takes an opportunity of complimenting Augustus, as being more worthy of divine honours than even his predecessor, while he promises him a long and glorious reign. Augustus, however, had not to wait for death to receive divine honours, as he enjoyed the glory of seeing himself worshipped as a Deity and adored at altars erected to him, even in his lifetime. According to 554 Appian, he was but twenty-eight years of age when he was ranked among the tutelar Divinities by all the cities of the empire.

The Romans, who deduced their origin from Æneas, were flattered at the idea of Venus interesting herself in behalf of her posterity, and securing the honours of an apotheosis for Julius Cæsar. The historical circumstances which Ovid here refers to were the following: — After Julius Cæsar had been murdered in the Senate house, Augustus ordered public games to be instituted in his honour. We learn from Suetonius, that during their celebration a new star, or rather a comet, made its appearance, on which it was promulgated that the soul of the deified Julius had taken its place among the stars, and that Venus had procured him that honour. It was then remembered, that the light of the Sun had been unusually pallid the whole year following the death of Cæsar; this which is generally supposed to have been caused by some spots which then appeared on the disk of the sun, was ascribed to the grief of Apollo. Various persons were found to assert various prodigies. Some said that it had rained blood, others that the moon and stars had been obscured; while others, still more imaginative, asserted that beasts had uttered words, and that the dead had risen from their graves.

The sorrow of the Gods and of nature at the untimely death of Julius being thus manifested, Augustus proceeded to found a temple in his honour, established priests for his service, and erected a statue of him with a star on its forehead. He was afterwards represented in the attitude of ascending to the heavens, and wielding a sceptre in his hand. While flatterers complimented Augustus upon the care which he had taken to enrol his predecessor among the Deities, there were some, the poet Manilius being of the number, who considered that heaven was almost over-peopled by him. Augustus, however, was not the sole author of the story of the apotheosis of Julius Cæsar. The people had previously attempted to deify him, though opposed by Cicero and Dolabella. In the funeral oration which was delivered over Julius Cæsar by Antony, he spoke of him as a God, and the populace, moved by his eloquence, and struck at his blood-stained garments and his body covered with wounds, were filled with indignation against the conspirators, and were about to take the corpse to the Capitol, there to be buried; but the priests would not permit it, and had it brought back to the Forum, where it was burnt. Dio Cassius says, that the Roman people raised an altar on the spot where the body had been burnt, and endeavoured to make libations and to offer sacrifices there, as to a Divinity, but that the Consuls overthrew the altar. Suetonius says, that a pillar was also erected to him, of about twenty feet in height, with the inscription, 'parenti patriæ,' 'To the father of his country,' and that for some time persons resorted to that spot to offer sacrifices and to make vows. He adds, that he was made a Divinity by a public decree, but he does not say at what time.

Translated by James G. Frazer

Formed of six books in elegiacs, this long poem was written while Ovid was in exile at Tomis, following his mysterious banishment by the Emperor. The poem categorises in detail the Roman calendar, explaining the origins and customs of important Roman festivals, digressing on mythical stories and giving astronomical and agricultural information appropriate to the season. The unusual poem analyses the first semester of the year, with each book dedicated to a different month of the Roman calendar, from January to June. Ovid had most likely planned to cover the entire year, but was unable to finish the work, probably due to the conditions of his exile.

The poem was probably initially dedicated to Augustus, but the death of the Emperor prompted Ovid to change the dedication to honour Germanicus. Rich in cultural and religious information, Fasti is also one of Ovid's finest literary works, forming a unique contribution to Roman elegiac poetry.

BOOK I

The order of the calendar throughout the Latin year, its causes, and the starry signs that set beneath the earth and rise again, of these I'll sing. Caesar Germanicus, accept with brow serene this work and steer the passage of my timid bark. Spurn not the honour slight, but come propitious as a god to take the homage vowed to thee. Here shalt thou read afresh of holy rites unearthed from annals old, and learn how every day has earned its own peculiar mark. There too shalt thou find the festivals pertaining to thy house; often the names of thy sire and grandsire will meet thee on the page. The laurels that are theirs and that adorn the pained calendar, thou too shalt win in company with thy brother Drusus. Let others sing of Caesar's wars; my theme be Caesar's altars and the days he added to the sacred roll. Approve my effort to rehearse the praises of thy kin, and cast out quaking terrors from my heart. Show thyself mild to me; so shalt thou lend vigour to my song: at thy look my Muse must stand or fall. Submitted to the judgement of a learned prince my page doth shiver, even as if sent to the Clarian god to read. On thy accomplished lips what eloquence attends, we have seen, when it took civic arms in defence of trembling prisoners at the bar. And when to poetry thy fancy turns, we know how broad the current of thy genius flows. If it is right and lawful, guide a poet's reins, thyself a poet, that under thy auspices the year may run its entire course happy.

When the founder of the City was setting the calendar in order, he ordained that there should be twice five months in his year. To be sure, Romulus, thou wert better versed in swords than stars, and to conquer thy neighbours was thy main concern. Yet, Caesar, there is a reason that may have moved him, and for his error he might urge a plea. The time that suffices for a child to come forth from its mother's womb, he deemed sufficient for a year. For just so many months after her husband's funeral a wife supports the signs of sorrow in her widowed home. These things, then, Quirinus in his striped gown had in view, when to the simple folk he gave his laws to regulate the year. The month of Mars was the first, and that of Venus the second; she was the author of the race, and he his sire. The third month took its name from the old, and the fourth from the young ; the months that trooped after were distinguished by numbers. But Numa overlooked not Janus and the ancestral shades, and so to the ancient months he prefixed two.

But that you may not be unversed in the rules of the different days, not every morning brings the same round of duty. That day is unlawful on which the three words may not be spoken ; that day is lawful on which the courts of law are open. But you must not suppose that every day keeps its rules throughout its whole length: a lawful day may have been unlawful in the morning; for as soon as the inwards have been offered to the god, all words may lawfully be spoken, and the honoured praetor enjoys free speech. There are days, too, on which the people may lawfully be penned in the polling-booths ; there are also days that come round ever in a cycle of nine, The worship of Juno claims Ausonia's Kalends: on the Ides a bigger white ewe-land falls to Jupiter: the Nones lack a guardian god. The day next after all these days - make no mistake - is black. The omen is drawn from the event; for on those days Rome suffered grievous losses under the frown of Marsh. These remarks apply to the whole calendar; I have made them once for all, that I may not be forced to break the thread of my discourse.

KAL. IAN. 1st

See Janus comes, Germanicus, the herald of a lucky year to thee, and in my song takes precedence. Two-headed Janus, opener of the softly gliding year, thou who alone of the celestials dost behold thy back, O come propitious to the chiefs whose toil ensures peace to the fruitful earth, peace to the sea. And come propitious to thy senators and to the people of Quirinus, and by thy nod unbar the temples white. A happy morning dawns. Fair speech, fair thoughts I crave! Now must good words be spoken on a good day. Let ears be rid of suits, and banish mad disputes forthwith! Thou rancorous tongue, adjourn thy wagging! Dost mark how the sky sparkles with fragrant fires, and how Cilician saffron crackles on the kindled hearths? The flame with its own splendour beats upon the temples' gold roof. In spotless garments the procession wends to the Tarpeian towers ; the people wear the colour of festal day; and now new rods of office lead the way, new purple gleams, and a new weight is felt by the far-sewn ivory chair. Heifers, unbroken to the yoke, offer their necks to the axe, heifers that cropped the sward on the true Faliscan plains. When from his citadel Jupiter looks abroad on the whole globe, naught but the Roman empire meets his eye. Hail, happy day! and evermore return still happier, day worthy to be kept holy by a people the masters of the world.

But what god am I to say thou art, Janus of double-shape? for Greece hath no divinity like thee. The reason, too, unfold why alone of all the heavenly one thou doest see both back and front. While thus I mused, the tablets in my hand, methought the house grew brighter than it was before. Then of a sudden sacred Janus, in his two-headed shape, offered his double visage to my wondering eyes. A terror seized me, I felt my hair stiffen with fear, and with a sudden chill my bosom froze. He, holding in his right hand his staff and in his left the key, to me these accents uttered from his front mouth: "Dismiss thy fear, thy answer take, laborious singer of the days, and mark my words. The ancients called me Chaos, for a being from of old am I; observe the long, long ages of which my song shall tell. Yon lucid air and the three others bodies, fire, water, earth, were huddled all in one. When once, through the discord of its elements, the mass parted, dissolved, and went in diverse ways to seek new homes, flame sought the height, air filled the nearer space, while earth and sea sank in the middle deep. 'Twas then that I, till that time a mere ball, a shapeless lump, assumed the face and members of a god. And even now, small index of my erst chaotic state, my front and back look just the same. Now hear the other reason for the shape you ask about, that you may know it and my office too. Whate'er you see anywhere - sky, sea, clouds, earth - all things are closed and opened by my hand. The guardianship of this vast universe is in my hands alone, and none but me may rule the wheeling pole. When I choose to send forth peace from tranquil halls, she freely walks the ways unhindered. But with blood and slaughter the whole world would welter, did not the bars unbending hold the barricadoed wars. I sit at heaven's gate with the gentle Hours; my office regulates the goings and the comings of Jupiter himself. Hence Janus is my name ; but when the priest offers me a barley cake and spelt mingled with salt, you would laugh to hear the names he gives me, for on his sacrificial lips I'm now Patulcius and now Clusius called. Thus rude antiquity made shift to work my changing functions with the change of name. My business I have told. Now learn the reason for my shape, though already you perceive it in part. Every door has two fronts, this way and that, whereof one faces the people and the other the house-god; and just as your human porter, seated at the threshold of the house-door, sees who goes out and in, so I, the porter of the heavenly court, behold at once both East and West. Thou seest Hecate's faces turned in three directions that she may guard the crossroads where they branch three several ways; and lest I should lose time by twisting my neck, I am free to look both ways without budging.”

Thus spake the god, and by a look promised that, were I fain to ask him more, he would not grudge reply. I plucked up courage, thanked the god composedly, and with eyes turned to the ground I spoke in few: “Come, say, why doth the new year begin in the cold season? Better had it begun in spring. Then all things flower, then time renews his age, and new from out the teeming vine-shoot swells the bud; in fresh-formed leaves the tree is draped, and from earth’s surface sprouts the blade of corn. Birds with their warblings winnow the warm air; the cattle frisk and wanton in the meads. Then suns are sweet, forth comes the stranger swallow and builds her clayey structure under the loft beam. Then the field submits to tillage and is renewed by the plough. That is the season which rightly should have been called New Year.”

Thus questioned I at length; he answered prompt and tersely, throwing his words into twain verses, thus: “Midwinter is the beginning of the new sun and the end of the old one. Phoebus and the year take their start from the same point.”

Next I wondered why the first day was not exempt from lawsuits. “Hear the cause,” quoth Janus. “I assigned the birthday of the year to business, lest from the auspice idleness infects the whole. For the same reason every man just handsels his calling, nor does more than but attest his usual work.”

Next I asked, “Why, Janus, while I propitiate other divinities, do I bring incense and wine first of all to thee?” Quoth he, “It is that through me, who guard the thresholds, you may have access to whatever gods you please.” “But why are glad words spoken on thy Kalends? and why do we give and receive good wishes?” Then, leaning on the staff he bore in his right hand, the god replied: “Omens are wont,” said he, "to wait upon beginnings. At the first word ye prick up anxious ears; from the first bird he sees the augur takes his cue. (On the first day) the temples and ears of the gods are open, the tongue utters no fruitless prayers, and words have weight." So Janus ended. I kept not silence long, but caught up his last words with my own: "What mean the gifts of dates and wrinkled figs?" I said, "and honey glistening in snow-white jar?" "It is for the sake of the omen," said he, "that the event may answer to the flavour, and that the whole course of the years may be sweet, like its beginning."

"I see," said I, "why sweets are given. But tell me, too, the reason for the gift of cash, that I may be sure of every point in thy festival." The god laughed, and "Oh," quoth he, "how little you know about the age you live in if you fancy that honey is sweeter than cash in hand! Why, even in Saturn's reign I hardly saw a soul who did not in his heart find lucre sweet. As time went on the love of pelf grew, till now it is at its height and scarcely can go farther. Wealth is more valued now than in the years of old, when the people were poor, when Rome was new, when a small hut sufficed to lodge Quirinus, son of Mars, and the river sedge supplied a scanty bedding. Jupiter had hardly room to stand upright in his cramped shrine, and in his right hand was a thunderbolt of clay. They decked with leaves the Capitol, which now they deck with gems, and the senator himself fed his own sheep. It was no shame to take one's peaceful rest on straw and to pillow the head on hay. The praetor put aside the plough to judge the people, and to own a light piece of silver plate was a crime. But ever since the Fortune of this place has raised her head on high, and Rome with her crest has touched the topmost gods, riches have grown and with them the frantic lust of wealth, and they who have the most possessions still crave for more. They strive to gain that they may waste, and then to repair their wasted fortunes, and thus they feed their vices by ringing the changes on them.

So he whose belly swells with dropsy, the more he drinks, the thirstier he grows. Nowadays nothing but money counts: fortune brings honours, friendships; the poor man everywhere lies low. And still you ask me, What's the use of omens drawn from cash, and why do ancient coppers tickle your palms! In the olden times the gifts were coppers, but now gold gives a better omen, and the old-fashioned coin has been vanquished and made way for the new. We, too, are tickled by golden temples, though we approve of the ancient ones: such majesty befits a gold. We praise the past, but use the present years; yet are both customs worthy to be kept."

He closed his admonitions; but again in calm speech, as before, I addressed the god who bears the key: "I have learned much indeed; but why is the figure of a ship stamped on one side of the copper coin, and a two-headed figure on the other?" "Under the double image," said he, "you might have recognized myself, if the long lapse of time had not worn the type away. Now for the reason of the ship. In a ship the sickle-bearing god came to the Tuscan river after wandering over the world. I remember how Saturn was received in this land: he had been driven by Jupiter from the celestial realms. From that time the folk long retained the name of Saturnian, and the country, too, was called Latium from the hiding (latente) of the god. But a pious posterity inscribed a ship on the copper money to commemorate the coming of the stranger god. Myself inhabited the ground whose left side is lapped by sandy Tiber's glassy wave. Here, where now is Rome, green forest stood unfilled, and all this mighty region was but pasture for a few kine. My castle was the hill which the present age is accustomed to call by my name and dub Janiculum. I reigned in days when earth could bear with gods, and divinities moved freely in the abodes of men. The sin of mortals had not yet put Justice to flight (she was the last of the celestials to forsake the earth): honour's self, not fear, ruled the people without appeal to force: toil there was none to expound the right to righteous men. I had naught to do with war: guardian was I of peace and doorways, and these," quoth he, showing the key, "these be the arms I bear."

The god now closed his lips. Then I thus opened mine, using my voice to lure the voice divine. "Since there are so many archways, why dost thou stand thus consecrated in one alone, here where thou hast a temple adjoining two forums? "Stroking with his hand the beard that fell upon his breast, he straightway told the warlike deeds of Oebalian Tadius, and how the traitress keeper, bribed by armlets, led the silent Sabines the way to the summit of the citadel. "From there," quoth he, "a steep slope, the same by which even now ye descend, led down into the valleys and the forums. And now the foe had reached the gate from which Saturn's envious daughter had removed the opposing bars. Fearing to engage in fight with so redoubtable a deity, I slyly had recourse to a device of my own craft, and by the power I wield I opened the fountains' mouths and spouted out a sudden gush of water; but first I threw sulphur into the water channels, that the boiling liquid might bar the way against Tadius. This service done, and the Sabines repulsed, the place now rendered safe, resumed its former aspect. An altar was set up for me, joined to a little shrine: in its flames it burns the sacrificial spelt and cake."

"But why hide in time of peace and open thy gates when men take arms?" Without delay he rendered me the reason that I sought. "My fate, unbarred, stands open wide, that when the people hath gone forth to war, the road for their return may be open too. I bar the doors in time of peace, lest peace depart, and under Caesar's star I shall be long shut up." He spoke, and lifting up his eyes that saw in opposite directions, he surveyed all that the whole world held. Peace reigned, and on the Rhine already, Germanicus, they triumph had been won, when the river yielded up her waters to thy slaves. O Janus, let the pace and the ministers of peace endure for aye, and grant that its author may never forgot his handiwork.

But now for what I have been allowed to learn from the calendar itself. On this day the senate dedicated two temples. The island, which the river hems in with its parted waters, received him whom the nymph Coronis bore to Phoebus. Jupiter has his share of the site. One place found room for both, and the temples of the mighty grandsire and the grandson are joined together.

III. NON. 3rd

What is to stop me if I should tell also of the stars, their risings and their settings? That was part of my promise. Ah happy souls, who first took thought to know these things and scale the heavenly mansions! Well may we believe they lifted up their heads alike above the frailties and the homes of men. Their lofty natures neither love nor wine did breaks, nor civil business nor the toils of war; no low ambition tempted them, nor glory's tinsel sheen, nor lust of hoarded pelf. The distant stars they brought within our ken, and heaven itself made subject to their wit. So man may reach the sky: no need that Ossa on Olympus should be piled, and that Pelion's peak should touch the topmost stars. Under these leaders we, too, will plum the sky and give their own days to the wandering signs.

Therefore when the third night before the Nones has come, and the ground is sprinkled and drenched with heavenly dew, you shall look in vain for the claws of the eight-footed Crag: headlong he'll plunge beneath the western waves.

NON. 5th

Should the Nones be at hand, showers discharged from sable clouds will be your sign, at the rising of the Lyre.

V. ID. 9th

Add four successive days to the Nones, and on the Agonal morn Janus must be appeased. The day may take its name from the attendant who, in garb succinct, fells at a blow the victim of the gods; for just before he dyes the brandished knife in the warm blood, he always asks if he is to proceed (agatne), and not until he is bidden does he proceed. Some believe that the day is named Agonal from the driving of the victims, because the sheep do not come but are driven (agantur) to the altar. Others think the ancients called this festival Agnalia ("festival of the lambs"), dropping a single letter from its proper place. Or perhaps, because the victim fears the knives mirrored in the water before they strike, the day may have been so styled from the brute's agony. It may be also that the day took a Greek name from the games (agones) which were wont to be held in olden times. In the ancient tongue, too, agonia meant a sheep, and that last, in my judgement, is the true reason of the name. And though that is not certain, still the King of the Sacred Rites is bound to placate the divinities by sacrificing the mate of a woolly ewe. The victim is so called because it is felled by a victorious right hand; the hostia (sacrificial victim) takes its name from conquered hostes (foes).

Of old the means to win the goodwill of gods for man were spelt and the sparkling grains of pure salt. As yet no foreign ship. As yet no foreign ship had brought across the ocean waves the bark-stilled myrrh; the Euphrates had sent no incense, India no balm. And the red saffron's filaments were still unknown. The altar was content to smoke with savine, and the laurel burned with crackling loud. To garlands woven of meadow flowers he who could violets add was rich indeed. The knife that now lays bare the bowels of the slaughtered bull had in the sacred rites no work to do. The first to joy in blood of greedy sow was Ceres, who avenged her crops by the just slaughter of the guilty beast; for she learned that in early spring the grain, milky with sweet juices, had been rooted up by the snout of bristly swine. The swine was punished: terrified by her example, billy-goat, you should have spared the vine-shoot. Watching a he-goat nibbling at a vine somebody vented his ill-humour in these words: "Pray gnaw the vine, thou he-goat; yet when thou standest at the altar, the vine will yield something that can be sprinkled on thy horns." The words came true. Thy foe, Bacchus, is given up to thee for punishment, and wine out-poured is sprinkled on his horns. The sow suffered for her crime, and the she-goat suffered, too, for hers.

But the ox and you, ye peaceful sheep, what was your sing? Aristaeus wept because he saw his bees killed, root and branch, and the unfinished hives abandoned. Scarce could his azure mother soothe his grief, when to her speech she these last words subjoined. "Stay, boy, thy tears! Thy losses Proteus will retrieve and will show thee how to make good all that is gone. But lest he elude thee by shifting his shape, see that strong bonds do shackle both his hands." The stripling made his way to the seer, and bound fast the arms, relaxed in slumber, of the Old Man of the Sea. By his art the wizard changed his real figure for a semblance false: but soon, by the cords mastered, to his true form returned. Then lifting up his dripping face and azure beard. "Dost ask," said he, "in what way thou mayest repair the loss of thy bees? Kill a heifer and bury its carcass in the earth. The buried heifer will give the thing thou seekest of me." The shepherd did his bidding: swarms of bees hive out of the putrid beeve: one life snuffed out brought to the birth a thousand.

Death claims the sheep: shameless it cropped the holy herbs which a pious beldame used to offer to the rural gods.

What creature is safe, when even the wool-bearing sheep and ploughing oxen lay down their lives upon the altars? Persia propitiates the ray-crowned Hyperion with a horse, for no sluggish victim may be offered to the swift god. Because a hind was once sacrificed to the twin Diana in room of a maiden, a hind is even now felled for her, though not in a maiden's stead. I have seen the entrails of a dog offered to the Goddess of the Triple Roads (Trivia) by the Sapaean and those whose homes border on thy snows, Mount Haemus. A young ass, too, is slain in honour of the stiff guardian of the country-side: the cause is shameful, but beseems the god.

A feast of ivy-berried Bacchus, thou wast wont to hold, O Greece, a feast which the third winter brought about at the appointed time. Thither came, too, the gods who wait upon Lyaeus and all the jocund crew, Pans and young amorous Satyrs, and goddesses that haunt rivers and lonely wilds. Thither, too, came old Silenus on an ass with hollow back, and the Crimson One who by his lewd image scares the timid birds. They lit upon a dingle meet for joyous wassails, and there they laid them down on grassy beds. Liber bestowed the wine: each had brought his garland: a stream supplied water in plenty to dilute the wine. Naiads were there, some with flowing locks uncombed, others with tresses neatly bound. One waits upon the revellers with tunic tucked above her knee; another through her ripped robe reveals her breast; another bares her shoulder; one trails her skirt along the grass; no shoes cumber their dainty feet. So some in Satyrs kindle amorous fires, and some in thee, whose brows are wreathed with pine. Thou too, Silenus, burnest for the nymphs, insatiate lecher! 'Tis wantonness alone forbids thee to grow old.

But crimson Priapus, glory and guard of gardens, lost his heart to Lotis, singled out of the whole bevy. For her he longs, for her he prays, for her alone he sighs; he gives her signs by nodding and woos by making marks. But the lovely are disdainful, and pride on beauty waits: she flouted him and cast at him a scornful look. 'Twas night, and wine makes drowsy, so here and there they lay overcome with sleep. Weary with frolic, Lotis, the farthest of them all, sank to her rest on the grassy ground under the maple boughs. Up rose her lover, and holding his breath stole secretly and silently on tiptoe to the fair. When he reached the lonely pallet of the snow-white nymph, he drew his breath so warily that no a sound escaped. And no upon the sward fast by he balanced on his toes, but still the nymph slept sound. He joyed, and drawing from off her feet the quilt, he set him, happy lover! to snatch the wished-for hour. But lo, Silenus saddle-ass, with raucous weasand braying, gave out an ill-timed roar! The nymph in terror started up, pushed off Priapus, and flying gave the alarm to the whole grove; but, ready to enter the lists of love, the god in the moonlight was laughed at by all. The author of the hubbub paid for it with his life, and he is now the victim dear to the Hellespontine god.

Ye birds, the solace of the countryside, ye haunters of the woods, ye harmless race, that built your nests and warm your eggs under your plumes, and with glib voices utter descant sweet, ye were inviolate once; but all that avails not, because ye are accused of chattering, and the gods opine that ye reveal their thoughts. Nor is the charge untrue; for the nearer ye are to the gods, the truer are the signs ye give, whether by wing or voice. Long time immune, the brood of birds was slaughtered then at last, and the gods gloated on the guts of the talebearing fowls. That is why the white dove, torn from her mate, is often burned upon Idalian hearths; nor did his saving of the Capitol protect the goose from yielding up his liver on a charger to thee, daughter of Inachus ; by night to Goddess Night the crested owl is slain, because with wakeful notes he summons up the warm day.

Meanwhile the bright constellation of the Dolphin rises above the sea, and from his native water puts forth his face.

IV. ID. 10th

The morrow marks midwinter; what remains of winter will be equal to what has gone before.

III. ID. 11th

When next his wife quits Tithonus' couch, she shall behold the rite pontifical of the Arcadian goddess. Thee, too, sister of Turnus, the same morn enshrined t the spot where the Virgin Water circles the Field of Mars. Whence shall I learn the causes and manner of these rites? Who will pilot my bark in mid ocean? Thyself, enlighten me, O thou (Carmentis), who dost take thy name from song (carmen), be kind to my emprise, lest I should fail to give thee honour due. The land that rose before the moon (if we may take its word for it) derives its name from the great Arcas. Of that land came Evander, who, though illustrious on both sides, yet was the nobler for the blood of his sacred mother (Carmentis), who, soon as her soul conceived the heavenly fire, chanted with voice inspired by the god prophetic strains.

She had foretold that troubles were at hand for her son and for herself, and much beside she had forecast, which time proved true. Too true, indeed, the mother proved when, banished with her, the youth forsook Arcaida and the god of his Parrhasian home. He wept, but she, his mother, said, "Check, prithee, thy tears; bear like a man thy fortune. 'Twas fated so; no fault of thine has banished thee, the deed is God's; an offended god has driven thee from the city. What thou dost endure is not the punishment of sin but heaven's ire: in great misfortunes it is something to be unstained by crime. As each man's conscience is, so doth it, for his deeds, conceive within his breast or hope or fear. Nor mourn these sufferings as if thou wert the first to suffer; such storms have whelmed the mighty. Cadmus endured the same, he, who of old, driven from Tyrian coasts, halted an exile on Aonian soil. Tydeus endured the same, and Pagasaeon Jason too, and others more of whom it were long to tell. Every land is to the brave his country, as to the fish the sea, as to the bird whatever place stands open in the void world. Nor does the wild tempest rage the whole year long; for thee, too, trust me, there will be spring-time yet."

Cheered by his parent's words, Evander cleft in his ship the billows and made the Hesperian land. And now at sage Carmentis' bidding he had steered his bark into a river and was stemming the Tuscan stream. Carmentis spied the river bank, where it is bordered by Tarentum's shallow pool ; she, also spied the huts dotted about these solitudes. And even as she was, with streaming hair she stood before the poop and sternly stayed the steersman's hand; then stretching out her arms to the right bank, she thrice stamped wildly on the pinewood deck. Hardly, yea hardly did Evander hold her back from leaping in her haste to land. "All hail!" she cried, "Gods of the Promised Land! And hail! thou country that shalt give new gods to heaven! Hail rivers and fountains, which to this hospitable land pertain! Hail nymphs of the groves and bands of Naiads! May the sight of you be of good omen to my son and me! And happy be the foot that touches yonder bank! Am I deceived? or shall yon hills by stately walls be hid, and from this spot of earth, shall all the earth take law? The promise runs that the whole world shall one day belong to yonder mountains. Who could believe that the place was big with such a fate? Anon Dardanian barks shall ground upon these shores: here, too, a woman shall be the source of a new war. Pallas, my grandson dear, why don those fatal arms? Ah, put them on! By no mean champion shalt thou be avenged. Howbeit, conquered Troy, thou shalt yet conquer and from they fall shalt rise again: thy very ruin overwhelms the dwellings of thy foes. Ye conquering flames, consume Neptunian Pergamum! Shall that prevent its ashes from o'ertopping all the world? Anon pious Aeneas shall hither bring his sacred burden, and, burden no whit less sacred, his own sire; Vesta, admit the gods of Ilium! The time will come when the same hand shall guard you and the world, and when a god shall in his own person hold he sacred rites. In the line of Augustus the guardianship of the fatherland shall abide: it is decreed that his house shall hold the reins of empire. Thereafter the god's son and grandson, despite his own refusal, shall support with heavenly mind the weight his father bore; and even as I myself shall one day be sanctified at eternal altars, so shall Julia Augusta be a new divinity." When in these words she had brought her story down to our own time, her prophetic tongue stopped short at the middle of her discourse. Landing from his ships, Evander stood an exile on the Latian sward, fortunate indeed to have that ground for place of exile! But little time elapsed until new dwellings rose, and of all the Ausonian mounts not one surpassed the Arcadian.

Lo! the club-bearer hither drives the Erythean kine; a long road he had travelled across the world; and while he is kindly entertained in the Tegean house, the kine unguarded stray about the spacious fields. When morning broke, roused from his sleep the Tirynthian drover perceived that of the tale two bulls were missing. He sought but found no tracks of the noiselessly stolen beasts. Fierce Cacus had dragged the bulls backwards into his cave, Cacus the terror and shame of the Aventine wood, to neighbours and to strangers no small curse. Grim was his aspect, huge his frame, his strength to match; the monster's sire was Mulciber. For house he had a cavern vast with long recesses, hidden so that hardly could the wild beasts themselves discover it. Above the doorway skulls and arms of men were fastened pendent, while the ground bristled and bleached with human bones. The son of Jove was going off with the loss of part of the herd, when the stolen cattle lowed hoarsely. "I accept the recall," quoth he, and following the sound he came, intent on vengeance, through the woods to the unholy cave. But the robber had blocked the entrance with a barricade of crag, scarcely could twice five yoke of oxen have stirred that mass. Hercules shoved it with his shoulders - the shoulders on which the sky itself had once rested - and by the shock he loosened the vast bulk. Its overthrow was followed by a crash that startled even the upper air, and the battered ground sank under the ponderous weight. At first Cacus fought hand to hand, and waged battle fierce with rocks and logs. But when these naught availed him, worsted he had recourse to his sire's tricks, and belched flames from his roaring mouth; at every blast you might deem that Typhoeus blew, and that a sudden blaze shot out from Etna's fires. But Alcides was too quick for him; up he heaved the triple-knotted club, and brought it thrice, yea four times down full on the foeman's face. He fell, vomiting smoke mixed with blood, and dying beat the ground with his broad breast.

Of the bulls the victor sacrificed one to thee, Jupiter, and invited Evander and the swains to the feast; and for himself he set up the altar which is called the Greatest at the spot where a part of the City takes its name from an ox. Nor did Evander's mother hide the truth that the time was at hand when earth would have done with its hero Hercules. But the happy prophetess, even as she lived in highest favour with the gods, so now herself a goddess hath she this day in Janus' month all to herself.

On the Ides the chaste priest offers in the flames the bowels of a gelded ram in the temple of great Jove. On that day, too, every province was restored to our people, and thy grandsire received the title of Augustus. Peruse the legends graved on the waxen images ranged round noble halls; titles so lofty never were bestowed on man before. Africa named her conqueror after herself; another by his style attests Isaurian or Cretan power subdued: one gloried in Numidians laid low, another in Messana, while from the city of Numantia yet a third drew his renown. To Germany did Drusus owe his title and his death: woe's me! that all that goodness should be so short-lived! Did Caesar take his titles from the vanquished, then must he assume as many names as there are tribes in the whole world. Some have earned fame from single enemies, taking their names either from a necklace won or from a raven confederate in the fight. Pompey, thy name of Great is the measure of thy deeds, but he who conquered thee was greater still in name. No surname can rank above that which the Fabii bear: for their services their family was called the Greatest. But yet the honours bestowed on all of these are human: Augustus alone bears a name that ranks with Jove supreme. Holy things are by the fathers called august: the epithet august is applied to temples that have been duly dedicated by priestly hands: from the same root come augury and all such augmentation as Jupiter grants by his power. May he augment our prince's empire and augment his years, and may an oaken crown protect your doors. Under the auspices of the gods may the same omens, which attended the sire, wait upon the heir of so great a surname, when he takes upon himself the burden of the world.

XVIII. KAL. FEB. 15th

When the third sun shall look back on the past Ides, the sacred rites will be repeated in honour of the Parrhasian goddess. For of old Ausonian matrons drove in carriages (carpenta), which I ween were also called after Evander's parent (Carmentis). Afterwards the honour was taken from them, and every matron vowed not to propagate the line of her ungrateful spouse by giving birth to offspring; and lest she should bear children, she rashly by a secret thrust discharged the growing burden from her womb. They say the senate reprimanded the wives for their daring cruelty, but restored the right of which they had been mulcted; and they ordained that now two festivals be held alike in honour of the Teagean mother to promote the birth of boys and girls. It is not lawful to bring leather into her shrine, lest her pure hearths should be defiled by skins of slaughtered beasts. If thou hast any love of ancient rites, attend the prayers offered to her: you shall hear names you never knew before. Porrima and Postverta are palacated, whether they be thy sisters, Maenalian goddess, or companions of thine exile: the one is thought to have sung of what was long ago (porro), the other of what should come to pass hereafter (venturum postmodo).

XVII. KAL. 16th

Fair goddess, thee the next morning set in thy snow-white fane, where high Moneta lifts her steps sublime : well shalt thou, Concord, o'ersee the Latin throng, now that consecrated hands have stablished thee. Furius the vanquisher of the Etruscan folk, had vowed the ancient temple, and he kept his vow. The cause was that the common folk had taken up arms and seceded from the nobles, and Rome dreaded her own puissance. The recent cause was better: Germany presented her dishevelled locks at thy command, leader revered; hence didst thou offer the spoil of the vanquished people, and didst build a temple to that goddess whom thou thyself dost worship. That goddess thy mother did stablish both by her life and by an altar, she who alone was found worthy to share the bed of mighty Jupiter.

XVI. KAL. 17th

When that is over, thou wilt quit Capricorn, O Phoebus, and wilt take thy course through the sign of the youth who carries water (Aquarius).

X. KAL. 23rd

When the seventh sun, reckoned from that day, shall have set in the sea, the Lyre will shine no longer anywhere in the sky.

IX. KAL. 24th

After the setting of that constellation (the Lyre), the fire that glitters in the middle of the Lion's breast will be sunk below the horizon at nightfall.

Three or four times I searched the record of the calendar, but nowhere did I find the Day of Sowing. Seeing me puzzled, the Muse observed, "That day is appointed by the priests. Why look for movable feasts in the calendar? And while the day of the feast may shift, the season is fixed: it is when the seed has been sown and field fertilized." Ye steers, take your stand with garlands on your heads at the full crib: with the warm spring your toil will return. Let the swain hang up on the post the plough that has earned its rest: in winter the ground fears every wound inflicted by the share. Thou bailiff, when the sowing is done, let the land rest, and let the men who tilled the land rest also. Let the parish keep festival; purify the parish, ye husbandmen, and offer the yearly cakes on the parish hearths. Propitiate Earth and Ceres, the mothers of the corn, with their own spelt and flesh of teeming sow.

Ceres and Earth discharge a common function: the one lends to the corn its vital force, the other lends it room. "Partners in labour, ye who reformed the days of old and replaced acorns of the oak by food more profitable, O satisfy the eager husbandmen with boundless crops, that they may reap the due reward of their tillage. O grant unto the tender seeds unbroken increase; let no the sprouting shoot be nipped by chilly snows. When we sow, let the sky be cloudless and winds blow fair; but when the seed is buried, then sprinkle it with water from the sky. Forbid the birds - pests of the tilled land - to devastate the fields of corn with their destructive flocks. You too, ye ants, O spare the sown grain; so shall ye have a more abundant booty after the harvest. Meantime may no scurfy mildew blight the growing crop nor foul weather blanch it to a sickly hue; may it neither shrivel up nor swell unduly and be choked by its own rank luxuriance. May the fields be free from darnel, that spoils the eyes, and may no barren wild oats spring from the tilled ground. May the farm yield, with manifold interest, crops of wheat, of barley, and of spelt, which twice shall bear the fire." These petitions I offer for you, ye husbandmen, and do ye offer them yourselves, and may the two goddesses grant our prayers. Long time did wars engage mankind; the sword was handier than the share; the plough ox was ousted by the charger; hoes were idle, mattocks were turned into javelins, and a helmet was made out of a heavy rake. Thanks be to the gods and to thy house! Under your foot long time War has been laid in chains. Yoke the ox, commit the seed to the ploughed earth. Peace is the nurse of Ceres, and Ceres is the foster-child of Peace.

VI. KAL. 27th

On the sixth day before the coming Kalends a temple was dedicated to Leda's divine sons ; brothers of the race of the gods founded that temple for the brother gods beside Juturna's pools.

III. KAL. 30th

The course of my song hath led me to the altar of Peace. The day will be the second from the end of the month. Come, Peace, they dainty tresses wreathed with Actian laurels, and let thy gentle presence abide in the whole world. So but there be nor foes nor food for triumphs, thou shalt be unto our chiefs a glory greater than war. May the soldier bear arms only to check the armed aggressor, and may the fierce trumpet blare for naught but solemn pomp! May the world near and far dread the sons of Aeneas, and if there be any land that feared not Rome, may it love Rome instead! Add incense, ye priests, to the flames that burn on the alter of Peace, let a white victim fall with wine anointed brow, and ask of the gods, who lend a favouring ear to pious prayers, that the house, which is the warranty of peace, with peace may last for ever.

But now the first part of my labour is done, and with the month of which it treats the book doth end.

BOOK II

January is over. The year progresses with my song: even as this second month, so may my second book proceed.

My elegiacs, now for the first time ye do sail with ampler canvas spread: As I remember, up till now your theme was slender. Myself I found you pliant ministers of love, when in the morn of youth I toyed with verse. Myself now sing of sacred rites and of the seasons marked in the calendar: who could think that this could come of that? Herein is all my soldiership: I bear the only arms I can: my right hand is not all unserviceable. If I can neither hurl the javelin with brawny arm, nor bestride the back of war horse; if there is no helmet on my head, no sharp sword at my belt - at such weapons any man may be a master of fence - still do I rehearse with hearty zeal thy titles, Caesar, and pursue thy march of glory. Come, then, and if the conquest of the foe leaves thee a vacant hour, O cast a kindly glance upon my gifts.

Our Roman fathers gave the name of februa to instruments of purifications: even to this day there are many proofs that such was the meaning of the word. The pontiffs ask the King and the Flamen for woolen cloths, which in the tongue of the ancients had the name of februa. When houses are swept out, the toasted spelt and slat which the officer gets as means of cleansing are called by the same name. The same name is given to the bough, which, cut from a pure tree, wreathes with its leaves the holy brows of the priests. I myself have seen the Flamen's wife (Flaminica) begging for februa; at her request for februa a twig of pine was given her. In short, anything used to cleanse our bodies went by that name in the time of our unshorn forefathers. The month is called after these things, because the Luperci purify the whole ground with strips of hide, which are their instruments of cleansing, or because the season is pure when once peace-offerings have been made at the graves and the days devoted to the dead are past. Our sires believed that every sin and every cause of ill could be wiped out by rites and purgation.

Greece set the example: she deems that the guilty can rid themselves of their crimes by being purified. Peleus cleansed Acrorides, and Acastus cleansed Peleus himself from the blood of Phocus by the Haemonian waters. Wafted through the void by bridled dragons, the Phasian witch received a welcome, which she little deserved at the hands of trusting Aegeus. The son of Amphiaraus said to Naupactian Achelous, "O rid me of my sin," and the other did rid him of his sin. Fond fools alack! to fancy murder's gruesome stain by river water could be washed away! But yet, lest you should err through ignorance of the ancient order, know that the month of Janus was of old the first, even as now it is; the month that follows January was the last of the old year. Thy worship too, O Terminus, formed the close of the sacred rites. For the month of Janus came first because the door (janua) comes first; that month was nethermost which to the nether shades was consecrated. Afterwards the Decemvirs are believed to have joined together times which had been parted by a long interval.

KAL. FEB. 1st

At the beginning of the month Saviour (Sospita) Juno, the neighbour of the Phrygian Mother Goddess. If you ask, where are now the temples which on those Kalends were dedicated to the goddess? tumbled down they are with the long lapse of time. All the rest had in like sort gone to wrack and ruin, had it not been for the far-seeing care of our sacred chief, under whom the shrines feel not the touch of eld; and not content with doing favours to mankind he does them to the gods. O saintly soul, who dost build and rebuild the temples, I pray the powers above may take such care of thee as thou of them! May the celestials grant thee the length of years which thou bestowest on them, and may they stand on guard before thy house!

Then, too, the grove of Alernus is thronged with worshippers, fast by the spot where Tiber, coming from afar, makes for the ocean waves. At Numa's sanctuary, at the Thunderer's fane upon the Capitol, and on the summit of Jove's citadel a sheep is slain. Often, muffled in clouds, the sky discharges heavy rains, or under fallen snow the earth is hid.

IV. NON. 2nd

When the next sun, before he sinks into the western waves, shall from his purple steeds undo the jewelled yoke, someone that night, looking up at the stars, shall say, "Where is to-day the Lyre, he will mark that the back of the Lion also has of a sudden plunged into the watery waste.

III. NON. 3rd

The Dolphin, which of late thou didst see fretted with stars, will on the next night escape thy gaze. (He was raised to heaven) either because he was a lucky go-between in love's intrigues, or because he carried the Lesbian lyre and the lyre's master. What see, what land knows not Arion? By his son he used to stay the running waters. Often at his voice the wolf in pursuit of the lamb stood still, often the lamb halted fleeing from the ravening wolf; often hounds and hares have couched in the same covert, and the hind upon the rock has stood beside the lioness: at peace the chattering crow has sat with Pallas' bird, and the dove has been neighbour to the hawk. 'Tis said that Cynthia oft hath stood entranced, tuneful Arion, at thy notes, as if the notes had been struck by her brother's hand. Arion's fame had filled Sicilian cities, and by the music of his lyre he had charmed the Ausonian land. Thence wending homewards, he took ship and carried with him the wealth his art had won. Perhaps, poor wretch, thou didst dread the winds and waves, but in sooth the sea was safer for thee than thy ship. For the helmsman took his stand with a drawn sword, and the rest of the conspiring gang had weapons in their hands. What wouldst thou with a sword? Steer the crazy bark, thou mariner; these weapons ill befit thy hands. Quaking with fear the bard, "I deprecate not death," said he, "but let me take my lyre and play a little." They gave him leave and laughed at the delay. He took the crown that might well, Phoebus, become thy locks; he donned his robe twice dipped in Tyrian purple: touched by his thumb, the strings gave back a music all their own, such notes as the swan chants in mournful numbers when the cruel shaft has pierced his snowy brow. Straightway, with all his finery on, he leaped plump down into the waves: the refluent water splashed the azure poop. Thereupon they say (it sounds past credence) a dolphin did submit his arched back to the unusual weight; seated there Arion grasped his lyre and paid his fare in song, and with his chant he charmed the ocean waves. The gods see pious deeds: Jupiter received the dolphin among the constellations, and bade him have nine stars.

NON. 5th

Now could I wish for a thousand tongues and for that soul of thine, Maeonides, which glorified Achilles, while I sing in distichs the sacred Nones. This is the greatest honour that is heaped upon the calendar. My genius faints: the burden is beyond my strength: this day above all others is to be sung by me. Fool that I was, how durst I lay so great a weight on elegiac verse? the theme was one for the heroic stanza. Holy

Father of thy Country, this title hath been conferred on thee by the people, by the senate, and by us, the knights. But history had already conferred it; yet didst thou also receive, though late, thy title true; long time hadst thou been the Father of the World. Thou bearest on earth the name which Jupiter bears in high heaven: of men thou art the father, he of the gods. Romulus, thou must yield pride of place. Caesar by his guardian care makes great thy city walls: the walls thou gavest to the city were such as Remus could o'erleap. Thy power was felt by Tadius, the little Cures, and Caenina; under Caesar's leadership whate'er the sun beholds on either side is Roman. Thou didst own a little stretch of conquered land: all that exists beneath the canopy of Jove is Caesar's own. Thou didst rape wives: Caesar bade them under his rule be chaste. Thou didst admit the guilty to thy grove: he hath repelled the wrong. Thine was a rule of force: under Caesar it is the laws that reign. Thou didst the name of master bearer : he bears the name of prince. Thou hast an accuser in thy brother Remus: Caesar pardoned foemen. To heaven thy father raised thee: to heaven Caesar raised his sire.

Already the Idaean boy shows himself down to the waist, and pours a stream of water mixed with nectar. Now joy too, ye who shrink from the north wind; from out the west a softer gale doth blow.

V. ID. 9th

When five days later the Morning Star has lifted up its radiance bright from out the ocean waves, then is the time that spring begins. But yet be not deceived, cold days are still in store for thee, indeed they are: departing winter leaves behind great tokens of himself.

III. ID. 11th

Come the third night, thou shalt straightway remark that the Bear-Ward has thrust forth both his feet. Among the Hamadryads in the train of the archeress Diana one of the sacred band was called Callisto. Laying her hand on the bow of the goddess, "Thou bow," quoth she, "which thus I touch, bear witness to my virginity." Cynthia approved the vow, and said, "Keep but thy plighted troth and thou shalt be the foremost of my company." Her troth she would have kept if she had not been fair. With mortals she was on her guard; it was with Jove she sinned. Of wild beasts in the forest Phoebe had chased full many a score, and home she was returning at noon or after noon. No sooner had she reached the grove - the grove where the thick holm-oaks cast a gloom and in the midst a deep fountain of cool water rose - than the goddess spake: "Here in the wood," quoth she, "let's bathe, thou maid of Arcady." At the false name of maid the other blushed. The goddess spoke to the nymphs as well, and they put off their robes. Callisto was ashamed and bashfully delayed. But when she doffed her tunic, too plainly, self-convicted, her big belly betrayed the weight she bore. To whom the goddess spake: "Daughter of Lycaon forsworn, forsake the company of maids and defile not the pure waters." Ten times the horned moon had filled her orb afresh, when she who had been thought a maid was proved a mother. The injured Juno raged and changed the damsel's shape. Why so? Against her will Jove ravished her. And when in the leman she beheld the ugly features of the brute, quoth Juno, "Let Jupiter now court her embraces." But she, who of late had been beloved by highest Jove, now roamed, a shaggy she-bear, the mountains wild. The child she had conceived in sin was now in his third lustre when his mother met him. She indeed, as if she knew him, stood distraught and growled; a growl was all the mother's speech. Her the stripling with his sharp javelin would have pierced, but that hey both were caught up into the mansions on high. As constellations they sparkle beside each other. First comes what we call the Bear; the Bear-Ward seems to follow at her back. Still Saturn's daughter frets and begs grey Tethys never to touch and wash with her waters the Bear of Maenalus.

IDUS. 13th

On the Ides the altars of rustic Faunus smoke, there where the island breaks the parted waters. This was the day on which thrice a hundred and thrice two Fabii fell by Veientine arms. A single house had undertaken the defence and burden of the city: the right hands of a single clan proffered and drew their swords. From the same camp a noble soldiery marched forth, of whom any one was fit to be a leader. The nearest way is by the right-hand arch of Carmentis' gate: go not that way, whoe'er thou art: 'tis ominous. By it, the rumour runs, the three hundred Fabii went forth. No blame attaches to the gate, but still 'tis ominous. When at quick pace they reached the rushing Cremera (it flowed turbid with winter rain) they pitched their camp on the spot, and with drawn swords broke through the Tyrrhenian array right valiantly, even as lions of the Libyan breed attack herds scattered through spacious fields. The foemen flee dispersed, stabbed in the back with wounds dishonourable: with Tuscan blood the earth is red. So yet again, so oft they fall. When open victory was denied them, they set an ambush of armed men in wait. A plain there was, bounded by hills and forest, where the mountain beasts could find commodious lair. In the midst the foe left a few of their number and some scattered herds: the rest of the host lurked hidden in the thickets. Lo, as a torrent, swollen by rain or snow which the warm West Wind has melted, sweeps across the cornfields, across the roads, nor keeps its waters pent within the wonted limit of its banks, so the Fabii rushed here and there broadcast about the vale; all that they saw they felled; no other fear they knew. Whither away, ye scions of an illustrious house? 'Tis ill to trust the foe. O noble hearts and simple, beware of treacherous blades! By fraud is valour vanquished: from every hand the foe leaps forth into the open plain, and every side they hold. What can a handful of the brave do against so many thousands? Or what help is left for them in such extremity? As a boar, driven afar from the woods by the pack, scatters the swift hounds with thunderous snout, but soon himself is slain, so do they die not unavenged, giving and taking wounds alternately. One day send forth to war the Fabii all: one day undid all they were sent to war. Yes may we believe that the gods themselves took thought to save the seed of the Herculean house; for a boy under age, too young to bear arms, was left alone of all the Fabian clan, to the end, no doubt, that thou, Maximus, mightest one day be born to save the commonwealth by biding time.

XVI. KAL. MART. 14th

Three constellations lie grouped together – the Raven, the Snake, and the Bowl, which stands midway between the other two. On the Ides they are invisible: they rise the following night, Why the three are so closely linked together, I will tell to thee in verse. It chanced that Phoebus was preparing a solemn feast for Jupiter: my tale shall not waste time. “Go, my bird,” said Phoebus, “that naught may delay the pious rites, and bring a little water from running springs.” The raven caught up a gilded bowl in his hooked claws and flew aloft on his airy journey. A fig-tree stood loaded with fruit still unripe: the raven tried it with his beak, but it was not fit to gather. Unmindful of his orders he perched, 'tis said, under the tree to wait till the fruit should sweeten lingeringly. And when at last he ate his fill, he snatched a long water-snake in his black talons, and returning to his master brought back a lying tale: “This snake was the cause of my delay: he blocked the living water: he kept the spring from flowing and me from doing my duty." "You aggravate your fault," quoth Phoebus, "by your lies, and dare attempt to cheat the god of prophecy by fibs? But as for you, you shall drink cool water from no spring until the figs upon the tree grow juicy." He spake, and for a perpetual memorial of this ancient incident the constellations of the Snake, the Bird, and the Bowl now sparkle side by side.

XV. KAL. 15th

The third morn after the Ides beholds the naked Luperci, and then, too, come the rites of two-horned Faunus. Declare, Pierian Muses, the origin of the rites, and from what quarter they were fetched and reached our Latin homes. The Arcadians of old are said to have worshipped Pan, the god of cattle, him who haunts the Arcadian ridges. Witness Mount Pholoe, witness the Stymphalian waters, and the Ladon that seaward runs with rapid current: witness the ridges of the Nonacrine grove begirt with pinewoods: witness high Tricrene and the Parrhasian snows. There Pan was the deity of herds, and there, too, of mares; he received gifts for keeping safe the sheep. Evander brought with him across the sea his woodland deities; where now the city stands, there was then naught but the city's site. Hence we worship the god, and the Flamen Dialis still performs in the olden way the rites brought hither by the Pelasgians. You ask, Why then do the Luperci run? and why do they strip themselves and bear their bodies naked, for so it is their wont to run? The god himself loves to scamper, fleet of foot, about the high mountains, and he himself takes suddenly to flight. The god himself is nude and bids his ministers go nude: besides, raiment sorted not well with running. The Arcadians are said to have possessed their land before the birth of Jove, and that folk is older than the moon. Their life was like that of beasts, unprofitably spent; artless as yet and raw was the common corn: water scooped up in two hollows of the hands to them was nectar. No bull panted under the weight of the bent ploughshare: no land was under the dominion of the husbandman: there was as yet no use for horses, every man carried his own weight: the sheep went clothed in its own wool. Under the open sky they lived and went about naked, inured to heavy showers and rainy winds. Even to this day the unclad ministers recall the memory of the olden custom and attest what comforts the ancients knew.

But to explain why Faunus should particularly eschew the use of drapery a merry tale is handed down from days of old. As chance would have it, the Tiryinthian youth was walking in the company of his mistress ; Faunus saw them both from a high ridge. He saw and burned. "Ye mountain elves (spirits)," quoth he. "I'm done with you. Yon shall be my true flame." As the Maeonian damsel tripped along, her scented locks streamed down her shoulders; her bosom shone resplendent with golden braid. A golden parasol kept off the sun's warm beams; and yet it was the hands of Hercules that bore it up. Now had she reached the grove of Bacchus and the vineyards of Tmolus, and dewy Hesperus rode on his dusky steed. She passed within a cave, whereof the fretted roof was all of tufa and of living rock, and at the mouth there ran a babbling brook. While the attendants were making ready the viands and the wine for the wassail, she arrayed Alcides in her own garb. She gave him gauzy tunics in Gaetolian purple dipped; she gave him the dainty girdle, which but now had girt her waist. For his belly the girdle was too small; he undid the clasps of the tunics to thrust out his big hands. The bracelets he had broken, not made to fit those arms; his fig feet split the little shoes. She herself took the heavy club, the lion's skin, and the lesser weapons stored in their quiver. In such array they feasted, in such array they resigned themselves to slumber, and lay down apart on beds set side by side; the reason was that they were preparing to celebrate in all purity, when day should dawn, a festival in honour of the discoverer of the vine.

'Twas midnight. What durst not wanton love essay? Through the gloom came Faunus to the dewy cave, and when he saw the attendants in drunken slumber sunk, he conceived a hope that their masters might be as sound asleep. He entered and, rash lecher, he wandered to and fro; with hands outstretched before him he felt his cautious way. At last he reached by groping the beds, where they were spread, and at his first move fortune smiled on hi. When he felt the bristly skin of the tawny lion, he stayed his hand in terror, and thunderstruck recoiled, as oft on seeing a snake a wayfarer freezes in alarm. Then he touched the soft drapes of the next couch, and its deceptive touch beguiled him. He mounted and reclined on the nearer side, his swollen penis harder than horn, and meanwhile pulling up the bottom edge of the garment; there he met legs that bristled with thick rough hair. Before he could go further, the Tiryinthian hero abruptly thrust him away, and down he fell from the top of the bed. There was a crash. Omphale called for her attendants and demanded a light: torches were brought in, and the truth was out. After his heavy fall from the high couch Faunus groaned and scarce could lift himself from the hard ground. Alcides laughed, as did all who saw him lying; the Lydian wench laughed also at her lover. Thus betrayed by vesture, the god loves not garments which deceive the eye, and bids his worshippers come naked to his rites.

To foreign reasons add, my Muse, some Latin ones, and let my steed career in his own dusty course. A she-goat had been sacrificed as usual to hoof-footed Faunus, and a crowd had come by invitation to partake of the scanty repast. While the priests were dressing the inwards, stuck on willow spits, the sun then riding in mid heaven, Romulus and his brother and the shepherd youth were exercising their naked bodies in the sunshine on the plain; they tried in sport the strength of their arms by crow-bars and javelins and by hurling ponderous stones. Cried a shepherd from a height, "O Romulus and Remus, robbers are driving off the bullocks across the pathless lands." To arm would have been tedious; out went the brothers both in opposite directions; but 'twas Remus who fell in with the freebooters and brought the booty back. On his return he drew the hissing inwards from the spits and said, "None but the victor surely shall eat these." He did as he had said, he and the Fabii together. Thither came Romulus foiled, and saw the empty tables and bare bones. He laughed, and grieved that Remus and the Fabii could have conquered when his own Quintilii could not. The fame of the deed endures: they run stripped, and the success of that day enjoys a lasting fame.

Perhaps you may also ask why that place is called the Lupercal, and what is the reason for denoting the day by such a name. Silvia, a Vestal, had given birth to heavenly babes, what time her uncle sat upon the throne. He ordered the infant boys to be carried away and drowned in the river. Rash man! one of those babes will yet be Romulus. Reluctantly his servants carry out the mournful orders (though they weep) and bear the twins to the place appointed. It chanced that the Albula, which took the names of Tiber from Tiberinus, drowned in its waves, was swollen with winter rain: where now the forums are, and where the valley of the Circus Maximus lies, you might see boats floating about. Hither when they were come, for farther they could not go, one or other of them said: "But how like they are! how beautiful is each! Yet of the two this one has more vigour. If lineage may be inferred from features, unless appearances deceive me, I fancy that some god is in you - but if some god were indeed the author of your being, he would come to your rescue in so perilous an hour; surely their mother would bring aid, if only aid she lacked not, she who as borne and lost her children in a single day. Ye bodies, born together to die together, together pass beneath the waves!" He ended, and from his bosom he laid down the twins. Both squalled alike: you would fancy they understood. With wet cheeks the bearers wended their homeward way. The hollow ark in which the babes were laid supported them on the surface of the water: ah me! how big a fate the little plank upbore! The ark drifted towards a shady wood, and, as the water gradually shoaled, it grounded on the mud. There was a tree (traces of it still remain), which is now called the Rumina fig-tree, but was once the Romulan fig-tree. A she-wolf which had cast her whelps came, wondrous to tell, to the abandoned twins: who could believe that the brute would not harm the boys? Far from harming, she helped them; and they whom ruthless kinsfolk would have killed with their own hands were suckled by a wolf! She halted and fawned on the tender babes with her tail, and licked into shape their two bodies with her tongue. You might know they were scions of Mars: fearless, they sucked her dugs and were fed on a supply of milk that was never meant for them. The she-wolf (lupa) gave her name to the place, and the place gave their name to the Luperci. Great is the reward the nurse has got for the milk she gave. Why should not the Luperci have been named after the Arcadian mountain? Lycaean Faunus has temples in Arcadia.

Thou bride, why tarry? Neither potent herbs, nor prayer, nor magic spells shall make of thee a mother; submit with patience to the blows dealt by a fruitful hand, soon will your husband's sire enjoy the wished for name of grandsire. For there was a day when a hard lot ordained that wives but seldom gave their mates the pledges of the womb. Cried Romulus (for this befell when he was on the throne). "What boots it me to have ravished the Sabine women, if the wrong I did has brought me not strength but only war? Better it were our sons had never wed." Under the Esquiline Mount a sacred grove, untouched by woodman's axe for many a year, went by the name of the great Juno. Hither when they had come, husband and wives alike in supplication bowed the knee, when of sudden the tops of the trees shook and trembled, and wondrous words the goddess spake in her own holy grove: "Let the sacred he-goat," said she, "go in to Italian matrons." At the ambiguous words the crowd stood struck with terror. There was a certain augur (his name has dropped out with the long years, but he had lately come an exile from the Etruscan land): he slew a he-goat, and at his bidding the damsels offered their backs to be beaten with thongs cut from the hide. When in her tenth circuit the moon was renewing her horns, the husband was suddenly made a father and the wife a mother. Thanks to Lucina! this name, goddess, thou didst take from the sacred grove (lucus), or because with thee is the fount of light (lucis). Gracious Lucina, spare, I pray, women with child, and gently lift the ripe burden from the womb.

When that day has dawned, then trust no more the winds: at that season the breezes keep not faith; fickle are the blasts, and for six days the door of the Aeolian gaol unbarred stands wide. Now the light Water-Carrier (Aquarius) sets with his tilted urn: next in turn do thou, O Fish, receive the heavenly steeds. They say that thou and thy brother (for ye are constellations that sparkle side by side) did support twain gods upon your backs. Once on a time Dione, fleeing from the dreadful Typhon, when Jupiter bore arms in defence of heaven, came to the Euphrates, accompanied by the little Cupid, and sat down by the brink of the Palestinian water. Poplars and reeds crowned the top of the banks, and willows offered hope that the fugitives also could find covert there. While she lay hid, the grove rustled in the wind. She turned pale with fear, and thought that bands of foes were near. Holding her child in her lap, "To the rescue, nymphs!" she said, "and to two deities bring help!" Without delay she sprang forward. Twin fish received her on their backs, wherefore they now possess the stars, a guerdon meet. Hence scrupulous Syrians count it sin to serve up such fry upon the table, and will not defile their mouths with fish.

XIII. KAL. 17th

Next day is vacant, but the third is dedicated to Quirinus, who is so called (he was Romulus before) either because the ancient Sabines called a spear curis, and by his weapon the warlike god won his place among the stars; or because the Quirites gave their own name to their king; or because he united Cures to Rome. For when the father, lord of arms, saw the new walls and the many wars waged by the hand of Romulus, "O Jupiter," he said, "the Roman power hath strength: it needs not the services of my offspring. To the sire give back the son. Though one of the two has perished, the one who is left to me will suffice both for himself and for Remus. Thou myself hast said to me that there will be one whom thou wilt exalt to the blue heavens. Let the word of Jupiter be kept." Jupiter nodded assent. At his nod both the poles shook, and Atlas shifted the burden of the sky. There is a place which the ancients call the She-goat's Marsh. It chanced that there, Romulus, thou wast judging thy people. The sun vanished and rising clouds obscured the heaven, and there fell a heavy shower of rain in torrents. Then it thundered, then the sky was riven by shooting flames. The people fled, and the king upon his father's steeds soared to the stars. There was mourning, and the senators were falsely charged with murder, and haply that suspicion might have stuck in the popular mind. But Julius Proculus was coming from Alba Longa; the moon was shining, and there was no need of a torch, when of a sudden the hedges on his left shook and trembled. He recoiled and his hair bristled up. It seemed to him that Romulus, fair of aspect, in stature more than human, and clad in a goodly robe, stood there in the middle of the road and said, "Forbid the Quirites to mourn, let them not profane my divinity by their tears. Bid the pious throng bring incense and propitiate the new Quirinus, and bid them cultivate the arts their fathers cultivated, the art of war." So he ordered, and from the other other's eyes he vanished into thin air. Proculus called the peoples together and reported the words as he had been bid. Temples were built to the god, and the hill also was named after him, and the rites observed by our fathers come round on fixed days.

Learn also why the same day is called the Feast of Fools. The reason for the name is trifling but apt. The earth of old was tilled by men unlearned: war's hardships wearied their active frames. More glory was to be won by the sword than by the curved plough; the neglected farm yielded its master but a small return. Yet spelt the ancients sowed, and spelt they reaped; of the cut spelt they offered the first-fruits to Ceres. Taught by experience they toasted the spelt on the fire, and many losses they incurred through their own fault. For at one time they would sweep up the black ashes instead of spelt, and at another time the fire caught the huts themselves. So they made the oven into a goddess of that name (Fornax); delighted with her, the farmers prayed that she would temper the heat to the corn committed to her charge. At the present day the Prime Warden (Curio Maximus) proclaims in a set form of words the time for holding the Feast of Ovens (Fornacalia), and he celebrates the rites at no fixed date; and round about the Forum hang many tablets, on which every ward has its own particular mark. The foolish part of the people know not which is their own ward, but hold the feast on the last day to which it can be postponed.

IX. KAL. 21st

Honour is paid, also, to the grave. Appease the souls of your fathers and bring small gifts to the tombs erected to them. Ghosts ask but little: they value piety more than a costly gift: no greedy gods are they who in the world below do haunt the banks of Styx. A tile wreathed with votive garlands, a sprinkling of corn, a few grains of salt, bread soaked in wine, and some loose violets, these are offerings enough: set these on a potsherd and leave it in the middle of the road. Not that I forbid larger offerings, but even these suffice to appease the shades: add prayers and the appropriate words at the hearths set up for the purpose. This custom was introduced into thy lands, righteous Latinus, by Aeneas, fit patron of piety. He to his father's spirit solemn offerings brought; from him the peoples learned the pious rites.

But once upon a time, waging long wars with martial arms, they did neglect the All Souls' Days. The negligence was not unpunished; for tis said that from that ominous day Rome grew hot with the funeral fires that burned without the city. They say, though I can hardly think it, that the ancestral souls did issue from the tombs and make their moan in the hours of stilly night; and hideous ghosts, a shadowy throng, they say, did howl about the city streets and the wide fields. Afterwards the honours which had been omitted were again paid to the tombs, and so a limit was put to prodigies and funerals.

But while these rites are being performed, ye ladies change not your widowed state: let the nuptial torch of pine wait till the days are pure. And O, thou damsel, who to thine eager mother shalt appear all ripe for marriage, let not the bent-back spear comb down the maiden hair! O God of Marriage (Hymenaeus), hide thy torches, and from these sombre fires bear them away! Far other are the torches that light up the rueful grave. Screen, too, the gods by shutting up the temple doors; let no incense burn upon the altars, no fire upon the hearths. Now do the unsubstantial souls and buried dead wander about, now doth the ghost batten upon his dole. But this only lasts until there remain as many days of the month as there are feet in my couplets. That day they name the Feralia, because they carry (ferunt) to the dead their dues: it is the last day for propitiating the ghosts.

Lo, an old hag, seated among girls, performs rites in honour of Tacita ("the Silent Goddess"), but herself is not silent. With three fingers she puts three lumps of incense under the threshold, where the little mouse has made for herself a secret path. Then she binds enchanted threads together with dark lead, and mumbles seven black beans in her mouth; and she roasts in the fire the head of a small fish which she has sewed up, made fast with pitch, and pierced through and through with a bronze needle. She also drops wine on it, and the wine that is left over she or her companions drink, but she gets the larger share. Then as she goes off she says, "We have bound fast hostile tongues and unfriendly mouths." So exit the old woman drunk.

At once you will ask of me, "Who is the goddess Muta ('the Mute')?" Hear what I learned from the old men gone in years. Conquered by exceeding love of Juturna, Jupiter submitted to many things which so great a god ought not to bear. For now she would hide in the woods among the hazel-thickets, now she would leap down into her sister waters. The god called together all the nymphs who dwell in Latium, and thus in the midst of the troop he spake aloud: "Your sister is her own enemy, and shuns that union with the supreme god which is all for her good. Pray look to her interests and to mine, for what is a great pleasure to me will be a great boon to your sister. When she flees, stop her on the edge of the bank, lest she plunge into the water of the river." He spake. Assent was given by all the nymphs of Tiber and by those who haunt, Ilia divine, thy wedding bowers. It chanced there was a Naiad nymph, Lara by name; but her old name was the first syllable repeated twice, and that was given her to mark her failing. Many a time Almo had said to her, "My daughter, hold thy tongue," but hold it she did not. No sooner did she reach the pools of her sister Juturna than, "Fly the banks," said she, and reported the words of Jupiter. She even visited Juno and, after expressing her pity for married dames, "Your husband," quoth she, "is in love with the Naiad Juturna." Jupiter fumed and wrenched from her the tongue she had used so indiscreetly. He also called for Mercury. "Take her to the deadland," said he, "that's the place for mutes. A nymph she is, but a nymph of the infernal marsh she'll be." The orders of Jupiter were obeyed. On their way they came to a grove: then it was, they say, that she won the heart of her divine conductor. He would have used force; for want of words she pleased with a look, and all in vain she strove to speak with her dumb lips. She went with child, and bore twins, who guard the cross-roads and ever keep watch in our city: they are the Lares.

VIII. KAL. 22nd

The next day received its name of Caristia from dear (cari) kinsfolk. A crowd of near relations comes to meet the family gods. Sweet it is, no doubt, to recall our thoughts to the living soon as they have dwelt upon the grave and on the dear ones dead and gone; sweet, too, after so many lost, to look upon those of our blood who are left, and to count kin with them. Come none but the innocent! Far, far from here be the unnatural brother, and the mother who is harsh to her own offspring, he whose father lives too long, he who reckons up his mother's years, and the unkind mother-in-law who hates and maltreats her daughter-in-law. Here is no place for the brothers, scions of Tantalus, for Jason's wife, for her who gave to husbandmen the toasted seeds, for Procne and her sister, for Tereus, cruel to them both, and for him, who'er he be, who amasses wealth by crime. Give incense to the family gods, ye virtuous ones (on that day above all others Concord is said to lend her gentle presence); and offer food, that the Lares, in their girt-up robes, may feed at the platter presented to them as a pledge of the homage that they love. And now, when dank night invites to slumber calm, fill high the wine-cup for the prayer and say, "Hail to you! hail to thee, Father of thy Country, Caesar the Good!" and let good speech attend the pouring wine.

XII. KAL. 23rd

When the night had passed, see to it that the god who marks the boundaries of the tilled lands receives his wonted honour. O Terminus, whether thou art a stone or stump buried in the field, thou too hast been deified from days of yore. Thou art crowned by two owners on opposite sides; they bring thee two garlands and two cakes. An altar is built. Hither the husbandman's rustic wife brings with her own hands on a potsherd the fire which she has taken from the warm hearth. The old man chops wood, and deftly piles up the billets, and strives to fix the branches in the solid earth: then he nurses the kindling flames with dry bark, the boy stands by and holds the broad basket in his hands. When from the basket he had thrice thrown corn into the midst of the fire, the little daughter presents the cut honeycombs. Others hold vessels of wine. A portion of each is cast into the flames. The company dressed in white look on and hold their peace. Terminus himself, at the meeting of the bounds, is sprinkled with the blood of a slaughtered lamb, and grumbles not when a suckling pig is given him. The simple neighbours meet and hold a feast, and sing thy praises, holy Terminus: "Thou dost set bounds to peoples and cities and vast kingdoms; without thee every field would be a root of wrangling. Thou courtest no favour thou art bribed by no gold: the lands entrusted to thee thou dost guard in loyal good faith. If thou of old hadst marked the bounds of the Thyrean land, three hundred men had not been done to death, nor had the name of Othryades been read on the piled arms. O how he made his fatherland to bleed! What happened when the new Capitol was being built? Why, the whole company of gods withdrew before Jupiter and made room for him; but Terminus, as the ancients relate, remained where he was found in the shrine, and shares the temple with great Jupiter. Even to this day there is a small hole in the roof of the temple, that he may see naught above him but the stars. From that abide in that station in which thou hast been placed. Yield not an inch to a neighbour, though he ask thee, lest thou shouldst seem to value man above Jupiter. And whether they beat thee with ploughshares or with rakes, cry out, 'This is thy land, and that is his.'" There is a way that leads folk to the Laurentine fields, the kingdom once sought by the Dardanian chief: on that way the sixth milestone from the City witnesses the sacrifice of the woolly sheep's guts to thee, Terminus. The land of other nations has a fixed boundary: the circuit of Rome is the circuit of the world.

VI. KAL 24th

Now have I to tell of the Flight of the King : from it the sixth day from the end of the month has taken its name. The last to reign over the Roman people was Tarquin, a man unjust, yet puissant in arms. He had taken some cities and overturned others, and had made Gabii his own by foul play. For the king's three sons the youngest, true scion of his proud sire, came in the silent night into the midst of the foes. They drew their swords. "Slay an unarmed man!" said he. "'Tis what my brothers would desire, and Tarquin, my sire, who gashed my back with cruel scourge." In order that he might urge this plea, he had submitted to a scourging. The moon shone. They beheld the youth and sheathed their swords, for they saw the scars on his back, where he drew down his robe. They even wept and begged that he would side with them in war. The cunning knave assented to their unwary suit. No sooner was he installed in power than he sent a friend to ask his father to show him the way of destroying Gabii. Below the palace lay a garden trim of odoriferous plants, whereof the ground was cleft by a book of purling water: there Tarquin received the secret message of his son, and with his staff he mowed the tallest lilies. When the messenger returned and told of the cropped lilies, "I take," quoth the son, "my father's bidding." Without delay, he put to the sword the chief men of the city of Gabii and surrendered the walls, now bereft of their native leaders.

Behold. O horrid sight! from between the altars a snake came forth and snatched the sacrificial meat from the dead fires. Phoebus was consulted. An oracle was delivered in these terms: "He who shall first have kissed his mother will be victorious." Each one of the credulous company, not understanding the god, hastened to kiss his mother. The prudent Brutus feigned to be a fool, in order that from thy snares, Tarquin the Proud, dread king, he might be safe; lying prone he kissed his mother Earth, but they thought he had stumbled and fallen. Meantime the Roman legions had compassed Ardea, and the city suffered a long and lingering siege. While there was naught to do, and the foe feared to join battle, they made merry in the camp; the soldiers took their ease. Young Tarquin entertained his comrades with feast and wine: among them the king's son spake: "While Ardea keeps us here on tenterhooks with sluggish war, and suffers us not to carry back our arms to the gods of our fathers, what of the loyalty of the marriage-bed? and are we as dear to our wives as they to us?" Each praised his wife: in their eagerness dispute ran high, and every tongue and heart grew hot with the deep draughts of wine. Then up and spake the man who from Collatia took his famous name :

“No need of words! Trust deeds! There’s night enough. To horse! and ride we to the City.” They saying pleased them; the steeds are bridled and bear their masters to the journey’s end. The royal palace first they seek: no sentinel was at the door. Lo, they find the king’s daughters-in-law, their necks draped with garlands, keeping their vigils over the wine. Thence they galloped to Lucretia, before whose bed were baskets full of soft wool. By a dim light the handmaids were spinning their allotted stints of yarn. Amongst them the lady spoke on accents soft: “Haste ye now, haste, my girls! The cloak our hands have wrought must to your master be instantly dispatched. But what news have ye? For more news comes your way. How much do they say of the war is yet to come? Hereafter thou shalt be vanquished and fall: Ardea, thou dost resist thy betters, thou jade, that keepest perforce our husbands far away! If only they came back! But mine is rash, and with drawn sword he rushes anywhere. I faint, I die, oft as the image of my soldier spouse steals on my mind and strikes a chill into my breast.” She ended weeping, dropped the stretched yarn, and buried her face in her lap. The gesture was becoming; becoming, too, her modest tears; her face was worthy of its peer, her soul. “Fear not, I’ve come,” her husband said. She revived and on her spouse’s neck she hung, a burden sweet.

Meanwhile the royal youth caught fire and fury, and transported by blind love he raved. Her figure pleased him, and that snowy hue, that yellow hair, and artless grace; pleasing, too, her words and voice and virtue incorruptible; and the less hope he had, the hotter his desire. Now had the bird, the herald of the dawn, uttered his chant, when the young men retraced their steps to camp. Meantime the image of his absent love preyed on his senses crazed. “‘Twas thus she sat, ‘twas thus she dressed, ‘twas thus she spun the yarn, ‘twas thus her tresses lay fallen on her neck; that was her look, these were her words, that was her colour, that her form, and that her lovely face.” As after a great gale the surge subsides, and yet he billow heaves, lashed by the wind now fallen, so, though absent now that winsome form and far away, the love which by its presence it had struck into his heart remained. He burned, and, goaded by the pricks of an unrighteous love, he plotted violence and guile against an innocent bed. "The issue is in doubt. We'll dare the utmost," said he. "Let her look to it! God and fortune help the daring. By daring we captured Gabii too."

So saying he girt his sword at his side and best rode his horse's back. The bronze-bound gate of Collatia opened for him just as the sun was making ready to hide his face. In the guise of a guest the foe found his way into the home of Collatinus. He was welcomed kindly, for he came of kindred blood. How was her heart deceived! All unaware she, hapless dame, prepared a meal for her own foes. His repast over, the hour of slumber came. 'Twas night, and not a taper shone in the whole house. He rose, and from the gilded scabbard he drew his sword, and came into thy chamber, virtuous spouse. And when he touched the bed, "The steel is in my hand, Lucretia," said the king's son "and I that speak am a Tarquin." She answered never a word. Voice and power of speech and thought itself fled from her breast. But she trembled, as trembles a little lamb that, caught straying from the fold, lies low under a ravening wolf. What could she do? Should she struggle? In a struggle a woman will always be worsted. Should she cry out? But in his clutch was a sword to silence her. Should she fly? His hands pressed heavy on her breast, the breast that till then had never known the touch of a stranger hand. Her lover foe is urgent with prayers, with bribes, with threats; but still he cannot move her by prayers, by bribes, by threats. "Resistance is vain," said he, "I'll rob thee of honour and of life. I, the adulterer, will bear false witness to thine adultery. I'll kill a slave, and rumour will have it that thou wert caught with him." Overcome by fear of infamy, the dame gave way. Why, victor, dost thou joy? This victory will ruin thee. Alack how dear a single night did cost thy kingdom!

And now the day had dawned. She sat with hair dishevelled, like a mother who must attend the funeral byre of her son. Her aged sire and faithful spouse she summoned from the camp, and both came without delay. When they saw her plight, they asked why she mourned, whose obsequies she was preparing, or what ill had befallen her. She was long silent, and for shame hid her face in her robe: her tears flowed like a running stream. On this side and on that her father and her spouse did soothe her grief and pray her to tell, and in blind fear they wept and quaked. Thrice she essayed to speak, and thrice gave o'er, and when the fourth time she summoned up courage she did not for that lift up her eyes. "Must I owe this too to Tarquin? Must I utter," quoth she, "must I utter, woe's me, with my own lips my own disgrace?" And what she can she tells. The end she left unsaid, but wept and a blush o'erspread her matron cheeks. Her husband and her sire pardoned the deed enforced. She said, "The pardon that you give, I do refuse myself." Without delay, she stabbed her breast with the steel she had hidden, and weltering in her blood fell at her father's feet. Even then in dying she took care to sink down decently: that was her thought even as she fell. Lo, heedless of appearances, the husband and father fling themselves on her body, moaning their common loss. Brutus came, and then at last belied his name; for from the half-dead body he snatched the weapon stuck in it, and holding the knife, that dripped with noble blood, he fearless spake these words of menace: "By this brave blood and chaste, and by the ghost, who shall be god to me, I swear to be avenged on Tarquin and on his banished brood. Too long have I dissembled my manly worth." At these words, even as she lay, she moved her lightless eyes and seemed by the stirring of her hair to ratify the speech. They bore her to burial, that matron of manly courage; and tears and indignation followed in her train. The gaping wound was exposed for all to see. With a cry Brutus assembled the Quirites and rehearsed the king's foul deeds. Tarquin and his brood were banished. A consul undertook the government for a year. That day was the last of kingly rule.

Do I err? or has the swallow come, the harbinger of spring, and does he not fear lest winter should turn and come again? Yet often, Procne,<sup>71</sup> wilt thou complain that thou hast made too much haste, and thy husband Tereus will be glad at the cold thou feelest.

III. KAL. 27th

And now two nights of the second month are left, and Mars urges on the swift steeds yoked to his chariot. The day has kept the appropriate name of Equirria ("horse-races"), derived from the races which the god himself beholds in his own plain. Thou Marching God (Gradivus), in thine own right thou comest. Thy season demands a place in my song, and the month marked by the name is at hand.

PR. KAL. 28th

We have come to port, for the book ends with the month. From this pinot may my bark now sail in other waters.

BOOK III

Come, warlike Mars; lay down thy shield and spear for a brief space, and from thy helmet loose thy glistening locks. Haply thou mayest ask, What has a poet to do with Mars? From thee the month which now I sing doth take its name. Thyself dost see that fierce wars are waged by Minerva's hands. Is she for that the less at leisure for the liberal arts? After the pattern of Pallas take a time to put aside the lance. Thou shalt find something to do unarmed. Then, too, wast thou unarmed when the Roman priestess captivated thee, that thou mightest bestow upon this city a great seed.

Silvia the Vestal (for why not start from her?) went in the morning to fetch water to wash the holy things. When she had come to where the path ran gently down the sloping bank, she set down her earthenware pitcher from her head. Weary, she sat her on the ground and opened her bosom to catch the breezes, and composed her ruffled hair. While she sat, the shady willows and the tuneful birds and the soft murmur of the water induced to sleep. Sweet slumber overpowered and crept stealthily over her eyes, and her languid hand dropped from her chin. Mars saw her; the sight inspired him with desire, and his desire was followed by possession, but by his power divine he hid his stolen joys. Sleep left her; she lay big, for already within her womb there was Rome's founder. Languid she rose, nor knew why she rose so languid, and leaning on a tree she spake these words: "Useful and fortunate, I pray, may that turn out which I saw in a vision of sleep. Or was the vision too clear for sleep? Methought I was by the fire of Ilium, when the woolen fillet slipped from my hair and fell before the sacred hearth. From the fillet there sprang a wondrous sight - two palm-trees side by side. Of them one was the taller and by its heavy boughs spread a canopy over the whole world, and with its foliage touched the topmost stars. Lo, mine uncle wielded an axe against the trees; the warning terrified me and my heart did throb with fear. A woodpecker – the bird of Mars and a she-wolf fought in defence of the twin trunks, and by their help both of the palms were saved.” She finished speaking, and by a feeble effort lifted the full pitcher; she had filed it while she was telling her vision. Meanwhile her belly swelled with a heavenly burden, for Remus was growing, and growing, too, was Quirinus.

When now two heavenly signs remained for the bright god to traverse, before the year could complete its course and run out, Silvia became a mother. The images of Vesta are said to have covered their eyes with their virgin hands; certainly the altar of the goddess trembled, when her priestess was brought to bed, and the terrified flame sank under its own ashes. When Amulius learned of this, scorner of justice that he was (for he had vanquished his brother and robbed him of power), he ordered the twins to be sunk in the river. The water shrank from such a crime, and the boys were left on dry land. Who knows not that the infants thrive on the milk of a wild beast, and that a woodpecker often brought food to the abandoned babes? Nor would I pass thee by in silence, Larentia, nurse of so great a nation, nor the help that thou didst give, poor Faustulus. Your honour will find its place when I come to tell of the Larentalia; that festival falls in December, the month dear to the mirthful spirits. Thrice six years old was the progeny of Mars, and already under their yellow hair sprouted a fresh young beard: to all the husbandmen and masters of herds the brothers, sons of Ilia, gave judgement by request. Often they came home glad at blood of robbers spilt, and to their own domain drove back the raided kine. When they heard the secret of their birth, their spirits rose with the revelation of their sire, and they thought shame to have a name in a few huts. Amulius fell, pierced by the sword of Romulus, and the kingdom was restored to their aged grandfather. Walls were built, which, small though they were, it had been better for Remus not to have overleaped. And now what of late had been woods and pastoral solitudes was a city, when thus the father of the eternal city spake: "Umpire of war, from whose blood I am believed to have sprung (and to confirm that belief I will give many proofs), we name the beginning of the Roman year after thee; the first month shall be called by my father's name." The promise was kept; he did call the month by his father's name: this pious deed is said to have been well pleasing to the god. And yet the earlier ages had worshipped Mars above all gods ; therein a warlike folk followed their bent. Pallas is worshipped by the sons of Cecrops, Diana by Minoan Crete, Vulcan by the Hypsipylia land, Juno by Sparta and Pelopid Mycenae, while the Maenalian country worships Faunus, whose head is crowned with pine., Mars was the god to be revered by Latium, for that he is the patron of the sword; 'twas the sword that won for a fierce race empire and glory.

If you are at leixure, look into the foreign calendars, and you shall find in them also a month named after Mars. It was the third month in the Alban calendar, the fifth in the Faliscan, the sixth among thy peoples, land of the Hernicans. The Arician calendar is in agreement with the Alban and with that of the city whose lofty walls were built by the hand of Telegonus. It is the fifth month in the calendar of the Laurentines, the tenth in the calendar of the hardy Aequians, the fourth in the calendar of the folk of Cures, and the soldierly Pelignians agree with their Sabine forefathers; both peoples reckon Mars the god of the fourth month. In order that he might take precedence of all these, Romulus assigned the beginning of the year to the author of his being.

Nor had the ancients as many Kalends as we have now: their year was short by two months. Conquered Greece had not yet transmitted her arts to the victors; her people were eloquent but hardly brave. The doughty warrior understood the art of Rome, and he who could throw javelins was eloquent. Who then had noticed the Hyades or the Pleiads, daughters of Atlas, or that there were two poles in the firmament? and that there are two Bears, of which the Sidonians steer by Cynosura, while the Grecian mariners keeps his eye on Helice? and that the signs which the brother travels through in a long year the horses of the sister traverse in a single month? The stars ran their courses free and unmarked throughout the year; yet everybody agreed that they were gods. Heaven's gliding ensigns were beyond their reach, not so their own, to lose which was a great crime. Their ensigns were of hay, but as deep reverence was paid to hay as now you see paid to the eagles. A long pole carried the hanging bundles (maniples); from them the private (maniplaris) soldier takes his name. Hence through ignorance and lack of science they reckoned lustres, each of which was too short by ten months. A year was counted when the moon had returned to the full for the tenth time: that number was then in great honour, whether because that is the number of fingers by which we are wont to count, or because a woman brings forth in twice five months, or because the numerals increase up to ten, and from that we start a fresh round. Hence Romulus divided the hundred senators into ten groups, and instituted ten companies of spear-men (hastate); and just so many companies there were of first-line men (principes), and also of javelin-men (pilani); and so too with the men who served on horses furnished by the state. Nay, Romulus assigned just the same number of divisions to the tribes, the Titienses, the Ramnes, as they are called, and the Luceres. Therefore in his arrangement of the year he kept the familiar number. That is the period for which a sad wife mourns for her husband.

If you would convince yourself that the Kalends of March were really the beginning of the year, you may refer to the following proofs: the laurel-branch of the flamens, after remaining in its place the whole year, is removed (on that day), and fresh leaves are put in the place of honour; then the king's door is green with the tree of Phoebus, which is set at it; and at thy portal, Old Chapel of the Wards, the same things is done ; the withered laurel is withdrawn from the Ilian hearth, that Vesta also may make a brave show, dressed in fresh leaves. Besides 'tis said that a new fire is lighted in her secret shrine, and the rekindled flame gains strength. And to my thinking no small proof that the years of old began with March is furnished by the observation that Anna Perenna begins to be worshipped in this month. With March, too, the magistrates are recorded to have entered on office, down to the time when, faithless Carthaginians, thou didst wage thy war. Lastly, the month of Quintilis is the fifth (quintus) month, reckoned from March, and with its begin the months which take their names from numbers. (Numa) Pompilius, who was escorted to Rome from the lands where olives grow, was the first to perceive that two months were lacking to the year, whether he learned that from the Samian sage who though that we could be born again, or whether it was his Egeria who taught him. Nevertheless the calendar was still erratic down to the time when Caesar took it, like so much else, in charge. That god, the founder of a mighty line, did not deem the matter beneath his attention. Fain was he to foreknow that heaven which was his promised home; he would not enter as a stranger god mansions unknown. He is said to have drawn up an exact table of the periods within which the sun returns to his proper signs. To three hundred and give days he added ten time six days and fifth part of the whole day. That is the measure of the year.

The single day compounded of the (five) parts is to be added to the lustre.

KAL. MART. 1st

“If bards may list to secret promptings of the gods, as surely rumour thinks they may, tell me, thou Marching God (Gradivus), why matrons keep thy feast, whereas thou art apter to receive service from men.” Thus I inquired, and thus did Mars answer me, laying aside his helmet, though in his right hand he kept his throwing spear: “Now for the first time in the year am I, a god of war, invoked to promote the pursuits of peace, and I march into new camps, nor does it irk me so to do; upon this function also do I love to dwell, lest Minerva should fancy that such power is hers alone. They answer take, laborious singer of the Latin days, and write my words on memory’s tablets. If you would trace it back to its beginning, Rome was but little, nevertheless in that little town was hope of this great city. The walls were already standing, boundaries too cramped for future peoples, but then deemed to large for their inhabitants. If you ask what my son’s palace was, behold yon house of reeds and straw. There on the litter did he take the boon of peaceful sleep, and yet from that same bed he passed among the stars.

Already the Roman had a name that reached beyond his city, but neither wife nor wife’s father had he. Wealthy neighbours scorned to take poor men for their sons-in-law; hardly did they believe that I myself was the author of the breed. It told against the Romans that they dwelt in cattle-stalls, and fed sheep, and owned a few acres of waste land. Birds and beasts mate each with its kind, and a snake has some female of which to breed. The right of intermarriage is granted to peoples far away; yet was there no people that would wed with Romans. I chafed and bestowed on thee, Romulus, thy father’s temper. ‘A truce to prayers!’ I said,

'What thou seekest, arms will give.' Romulus prepared a feast for Consus. The rest that happened on that day Consus will tell thee, when thou shalt come to sing of his rites. Cures and all who suffered the same wrong were furious: then for the first time did a father wage war upon his daughters' husbands. And now the ravished brides could claim the style of mothers also, and yet the war between the kindred folks kept lingering on, when the wives assembled by appointment in the temple of Juno. Among them my son's wife thus made bold to speak: 'O wives ravished alike - for that is a trait we have in common - no longer may we dawdle in our duties to our kin. The battle is set in array, but choose for which side ye will pray the gods to intervene: on one side stand our husbands in arms and on the other side your sires: the question is whether ye prefer to be widows or orphans. I will give you a piece of advice both bold and dutiful.' She gave the advice: they obeyed, and unbound their hair, and clad their bodies in the sad weeds of mourners. Already the armies were drawn up in array, alert for carnage; already the bugle was about to give the signal for battle, when the ravished wives interposed between their fathers and husbands, bearing at their bosom the dear pledges of love, their babes. When with their streaming hair they reached the middle of the plain, they knelt down on the ground, and the grandchildren stretched out their little arms to their grandfathers with winsome cries, as if they understood. Such as could cried 'Grandfather!' to him whom then they saw for the first time; such as could hardly do it were forced to try. The weapons and the passions of the warriors fall, and laying their swords aside fathers-in-law and sons-in-law grasp each other's hands. They praise and embrace their daughters, and the grandsire carried his grandchild on his shield; that was a sweeter use to which to put the shield.

Hence the duty, no light one, of celebrating the first day, my Kalends, is incumbent on Oebalian mothers, either because, boldly thrusting themselves on the bare blades, they by their tears did end these martial wars; or else mothers duly observe the rites on my day, because Ilia was happily made a mother by me. Moreover, frosty winter then at last retires, and shorn by the cold, return to the trees, and moist within the tender shoot the bud doth swell; now too the rank grass, long hidden, discovers secret paths whereby to lift its head in air. Now is the field fruitful, now is the hour for breeding cattle, now doth the bird upon the bough construct a nest and home; 'tis right that Latin mothers should observe the fruitful season, for in their travail they both fight and pray. Add to this that where the Roman king kept watch, on the hill which now bears the name of Esquiline, a temple was founded, if I remember aright, on this very day by the Latin matrons in honour of Juno.

But why should I spin out the time and burden your memory with various reasons? The answer that you seek stands out plainly before your eyes. My mother loves brides; a crowd of mothers throngs my temple; so pious a reason is above all becoming to her and me." Bring ye flowers to the goddess; this goddess delights in flowering plants; with fresh flowers wreath your heads. Say ye, "Thou, Lucina, hast bestowed on us the light (Lucem) of life"; say ye, "thou dost hear the prayer of women in travail." But let her who is with child unbind her hair before she prays, in order that the goddess may gently unbind her teeming womb.

Who will now tell me why the Salii bear the heavenly weapons of Mars and sing of Mamurius? Inform me, thou nymph who on Diana's grove and lake dost wait; thou nymph, wife of Numa, come tell of thine own deeds. In the Arician vale there is a lake begirt by shady woods and hallowed by religion of old. Here Hippolytus lies hid, who by the reins of his steeds was rent in pieces: hence no horses enter that grove. The long fence is draped with hanging threads, and many a tablet there attests the merit of the goddess. Often doth a woman, whose prayer has been answered, carry from the City burning torches, while garlands wreath her brows. The strong of hand and fleet of foot do there reign kings, and each is slain thereafter even as himself has slain. A pebbly brook flows down with fitful murmur; oft have I drunk of it, but in little sips. Egeria it is who doth supply the water, goddess dear to the Camenae ; she was wife and councillor to Numa. At first the Quirites were too prone to fly to arms; Numa resolved to soften their fierce temper by force of law and fear of gods. Hence laws were made, that the stronger might not in all things have his way, and rites, handed down from the fathers, began to be piously observed. Men put off savagery, justice was more puissant than arms, citizen thought shame to fight with citizen, and he who but now had shown himself truculent would at the sight of an altar be transformed and offer wine and salted spelt on the warm hearths.

Lo, through the clouds the father of the gods scatters red lightnings, then clears the sky after the torrent rain: never before or since did hurtling fires fall thicker. The king quaked, and terror filled the hearts of the common folk. To the king the goddess spake: "Fear not over much. It is possible to expiate the thunderbolt, and the wrath of angry Jove can be averted. But Picus and Faunus, each of them a deity native to Roman soil, will be able to teach the ritual of expiation. They will teach it only upon compulsion. Catch them and clap them in bonds." And she revealed the ruse by which they could be caught. Under the Aventine there lay a grove black with the shade of holm-oaks; at sight of it you could say, "There is a spirit here." A sword was in the midst, and, veiled by green moss, there trickled from a rock a rill of never-failing water. At it Faunus and Picus were wont to drink alone. Hither King Numa came, and sacrificed a sheep to the spring, and set out bowls full of fragrant wine. Then with his folk he hid him close within a cave. To their accustomed springs the woodland spirits came, and slaked their thirst with copious draughts of wine. Sleep followed the debauch; from the chill cave Numa came forth and thrust the sleeper's hands into tight shackles. When slumber left them, they tried and strained to burst the shackles, but the more they strained the stronger held the shackles. Then Numa spake, and thus, shaking his horns, Faunus replied: "Thou askest great things, such as it is not lawful for thee to learn by our disclosure: divinities like ours have their appointed bounds. Rustic deities are we, who have dominion in the mountains high: Jove has the mastery over his own weapons. Him thou couldst never of thyself draw down from heaven, but haply thou mayest yet be able, if only thou wilt make use of our help." So Faunus said. Picus was of the like opinion: "But take our shackles off," quoth he; "Jupiter will come hither, drawn by powerful art. Witness my promise, cloudy Styx."

What they did when they were let out of the trap, what spells they spoke, and by what art they dragged Jupiter from his home above, 'twere sin for man to know. My song shall deal with lawful things, such as the lips of pious bard may speak. They drew (eliciunt) thee from the sky, O Jupiter, whence later generations to this day celebrate thee by the name of Elicius. Sure it is the tops of the Aventine trees did quiver, and the earth sank down under the weight of Jupiter. The king's heart throbbed, the blood shrank from his whole body, and his bristling hair stood stiff. When he came to himself, "King and father of the high gods," he said, "vouchsafe expiations sure for thunderbolts, if with pure hands we have touched thine offerings, and if for that which now we ask a pious tongue doth pray." The god granted his prayer, but hid the truth in sayings dark and tortuous, and alarmed the man by an ambiguous utterance. "Cut off the head," said he. The king answered him, "We will obey. We'll cut an onion, dug up in my garden." The god added, "A man's." "Thou shalt get," said the other, "his hair." The god demanded a life, and Numa answered him, "A fish's life." The god laughed and said, "See to it that by these things thou dost expiate my bolts, O man whom none may keep from converse with the gods! But when to-morrow's sun shall have put forth his full orb, I will give thee pure pledges of empire." He spake, and in a loud peal of thunder was wafted above the riven sky, leaving Numa worshipping. The king returned joyful and told the Quirites of what had passed. They were slow and loth to believe his saying. "But surely," said he, "we shall be believed if the event follow my words. Behold, all ye here present, hearken to what to-morrow shall bring forth. When the sun shall have lifted his full orb above the earth. Jupiter will give sure pledges of empire." They separated full of doubt, and thought it long to await the promised sigh; their belief hung on the coming day. Soft was the earth with hoar frost spread like dew at morn, when the people gathered at the threshold of their king. Forth he came and sat him down in their midst upon a throne of maple wood; unnumbered men stood round him silent.

Scarcely had Phoebus shown a rim above the horizon: their anxious minds with hope and fear did quake. The king took his stand, and, his head veiled in a snow-white hood, lifted up his hands, hands which the gods already knew so well. And thus he spoke: "The time has come to receive the promised boon; fulfil thy promise, Jupiter." Even while he spoke, the sun had already lifted his full orb above the horizon, and a loud crash rang out from heaven's vault. Thrice did the god thunder from a cloudless sky, thrice did he hurl his bolts. Take my word for it: what I say is wonderful but true. At the zenith the sky began to yawn; the multitude and their leader lifted up their eyes. Lo, swaying gently in the light breeze, a shield fell down. The people sent up a shout that reached the stars. The king lifted from the ground the gift, but not till he had sacrificed a heifer, which had never submitted her neck to the burden of the yoke, and he called the shield ancile, because it was cut away (recisum) on all sides, and there was no angle that you could mark. Then, remembering that the fate of empire was bound up with it, he formed a very shrewd design. He ordered that many shields should be made, wrought after the same pattern, in order to deceive a traitor's eyes. That task was finished by Mamurius; whether he was more perfect in character or in smithcraft would be a difficult question to decide. Bountiful Numa said to him, "Ask a reward for your service. If I have a reputation for honesty, you shall not ask in vain." He had already named the Salii from their dancing (saltus), and had given them arms and a song to be sung to a certain tune. Then Mamurius made answer thus: "Give me glory for my reward, and let my name be chanted at the end of the song." Hence the priests pay the reward that was promised for the work of old, and they invoke Mamurius.

If, damsel, thou wouldst wed, put off the wedding, however great the haste ye both may be in; short delay hath great advantage. Weapons excite to battle, and battle ill assorts with married folk; when the weapons shall have been stored away, the omens will be more favourable. On these days, too, the robed wife of the Flamen Dialis with peaked cap must keep her hair uncombed.

When the third night of the month has altered its risings, one of the two Fishes will have disappeared. For there are two: one of them is next neighbour to the South Winds, the other to the North Winds; each of them takes its name from the wind.

III. NON. 5th

When from her saffron cheeks Tithonus' spouse shall have begun to shed the dew at the time of the fifth morn, the constellation, whether it be the Bear-ward or the sluggard Bootes, will have sunk and will escape thy sight. But not so will the Grape-gatherer escape thee. The origin of that constellation also can be briefly told. 'Tis said that the unshorn Ampelus, son of a nymph and a satyr, was loved by Bacchus on the Ismarian hills. Upon him the god bestowed a vine that trailed from an elm's leafy boughs, and still the vine takes from the boy its name. While he rashly culled the gaudy grapes upon a branch, he tumbled down; Liber bore the lost youth to the stars.

When the sixth sun climbs up Olympus' steep from ocean, and through the ether takes his way on his winged steeds, all ye, whoe'er ye are, who worship at the shrine of the chaste Vesta, wish the goddess joy and offer incense on the Ilian hearth. To Caesar's countless titles, which he has preferred to earn, was added the honour of the pontificate. Over the eternal fire the divinity of Caesar, no less eternal, doth preside: the pledges of empire thou seest side by side. Ye gods of ancient Troy, ye worthiest prize to him who bore ye, ye whose weight did save Aeneas from the foe, a priest of the line of Aeneas handles your kindred divinities; Vesta, do thou guard his kindred head! Nursed by his sacred hand, ye fires live well. O live undying, flame and leader both, I pray.

NON. 7th

The Nones of March have only one mark in the calendar, because they think that on that day the temple of Veiovis was consecrated in front of the two groves. When Rolumus surrounded the grove with a high stone wall, "Take refuge here," said he, "whoe'er thou art; thou shalt be safe." O from how small a beginning the Roman took his rise! How little to be envied was that multitude of old! But that the strangeness of the name may not prove a stumbling-block to you in your ignorance, learn who that god is, and why he is so called. He is the Young Jupiter: look on his youthful face; look then on his hand, its holds no thunderbolts. Jupiter assumed the thunderbolts after the giants dared attempt to win the sky; at first he was unarmed. Ossa balzed with the new fires (of his thunderbolts); Pelion, too, higher than Ossa, and Olympus, fixed in the solid ground. A she-goat also stands (beside the image of Veiovis); the Cretan nymphs are said to have fed the god; it was the she-goat that gave her milk to the infant Jove. Now I am called on to explain the name. Countrymen call stunted spelt vegrandia, and what is little they call vesca. If that is the meaning of the word, may I not suspect that the shrine of Veiovis is the shrine of the little Jupiter?

And now when the stars shall spangle the blue sky, look up: you will see the neck of the Gorgonian steed. He is said to have leaped forth from the teeming neck of the slain Medusa, his mane bespattered with blood. As he glided above the clouds and beneath the stars, the sky served him as solid ground, and his wing served him for a foot. Soon indignantly he champed the unwonted bit, when his light hoof struck out the Aonian spring. Now he enjoys the sky, to which aforetime he soared on wings, and he sparkles bright with fifteen stars.

VII. ID. 8th

Straightway at the fall of night shalt thou see the Cnossian Crown. It was through the fault of Theseus that Ariadne was made a goddess. Already had she happily exchanged a perjured spouse for Bacchus, she who gave to a thankless man a clue to gather up. Joying in her lot of love, "Why like a rustic maiden did I weep?" quoth she; "his faithlessness has been my gain." Meantime Liber had conquered the straight-haired Indians and returned, loaded with treasure, from the eastern world. Amongst the fair captive girls there was one, the daughter of a king, who pleased Bacchus all too well. His loving spouse wept, and pacing the winding shore with dishevelled locks she uttered these words: "Lo, yet again, ye billows, list to my like complaint! Lo, yet again, ye sands, receive my tears! I used to say, I remember, 'Foresworn and faithless Theseus!' He deserted me: now Bacchus does me the same wrong. Now again I will cry, 'Let no woman trust a man!' My case has been repeated, only the name is changed. Would that my lot had ended where it first began! So at this moment had I been no more. Why, Liber, didst thou save me to die on desert sands? I might have ended my griefs once and for all. Bacchus, thou light o' love! lighter than the leaves that wreath thy brows! Bacchus, whom I have known only that I should weep! Hast thou dared to trouble our so harmonious loves by bringing a leman before mine eyes? Ah, where is plighted troth? Where are the oaths that thou wast wont to swear? Woe's me, how often must I speak these self-same words! Thou wast wont to blame Theseus; thou wast wont thyself to dub him deceiver; judged by thyself, thine is the fouler sin. Let no man know of this, and let me burn with pangs unuttered, lest they should think that I deserve to be deceived so oft. Above all I would desire the thing were kept from Theseus, that he may not joy to know thee a partner in his guilt. But I suppose a leman fair has been preferred to dusky me: - may that hue fall to my foes! But what does that matter? She is dearer to thee for the very blemish. What art thou about? She defiles thee by her embrace. Bacchus, keep faith, nor prefer any woman to a wife's love. I have learned to love my love for ever. The horns of a handsome bull won my mother's heart, thine won mine. But my love was cause for praise: hers was shameful. Let me not suffer for my love; thou thyself, Bacchus, didst not suffer for avowing thy flame to me. No wonder that thou dost make me burn; they say thou wert born in the fire and wert snatched from the fire by thy father's hand. I am she to whom thou wert wont to promise heaven. Ah me! what guerdon to I reap instead of heaven!" She finished speaking. Long time had Liber heard her plaint, for as it chanced he followed close behind. He put his arms about her, with kisses dried her tears, and "Let us fare together," quoth he, "to heaven's height. As thou hast shared my bed, so shalt thou share my name, for in thy changed state thy name shall be Libera; and I will see to it that with thee there shall be a memorial of thy crown, that crown which Vulcan gave to Venus, and she to thee." He did as he had said and changed the nine jewels of her crown into fires. Now the golden crown doth sparkle with nine stars.

When he who bears the purple day on his swift car shall six times have lifted up his disc and as often sunk it low, thou shalt a second time behold horse races (Equirria) on that grassy plain whose side is hugged by Tiber's winding waters. But if perchance the wave has overflowed and floods the plain, the dusty Caelian hill shall receive the horses.

IDUS 15th

On the Ides is held the jovial feast of Anna Perenna not far from the banks, O Tiber, who comest from afar. The common folk come, and scattered here and there over the green grass they drink, every lad reclining beside his lass. Some camp under the open sky; a few pitch tents; some make a leafy hut of boughs. Others set up reeds in place of rigid pillars, and stretching out their robes place them upon the reeds. But they grow warm with sun and wine, and they pray for as many years as they take cups, and they count the cups they drink. There shall you find a man who drains as many goblets as Nestor numbered years, and a woman who would live to the Sibyl's age if cups could work the charm. There they sing the ditties they picked up in the theatres, beating time to the words with nimble hands; they set the bowl down, and trip in dances, lubberly, while the spruce sweetheart skips about with streaming hair. On the way home they reel, a spectacle for vulgar eyes, and the crowd that meets them calls them "blest." I met the procession lately; I thought it notable; a drunk old woman lugged a drunk old man.

But since erroneous rumours are rife as to who this goddess is, I am resolved to throw no cloak about her tale. Poor Dido had burned with the fire of love for Aeneas; she had burned, too, on a pyre built for her doom. Her ashes were collected, and on the marble of her tomb was this short stanza, which she herself dying had left: "Aeneas caused her death and lent the blade: Dido by her own hand in dust was laid."

Straightway the Numidians invaded the defenceless realm, and Iarbas the Moor captured and took possession of the palace; and remembering how she had spurned his suit, "Lo, now," quoth he, "I enjoy Elissa's bridal bower, I whom she so oft repelled." The Tyrians fled hither and thither, as each one chanced to stray, even as bees oft wander doubtfully when they have lost their king. Anna was driven from home, and weeping left her sister's walls; but first she paid the honours due to her dead sister. The soft ashes drank unguents mixed with tears, and they received an offering of hair clipped from her head. And thrice she said, "Farewell!" thrice she took the ashes up and pressed them to her lips, and under them she thought she saw her sister. Having found a ship and comrades to share her flight, she glided before the wind, looking back at the city's walls, her sister's darling work.

There is a fertile island Melite, lashed by the waves of the Libyan sea and neighbour to the barren Cosyra. Anna steered for it, trusting to the king's hospitality, which she had known of old; for Battus there was king, a wealthy host. When he learned the misfortunes of the two sisters, "This land," said he, "small though it be, is thine," and he would have observed the duties of hospitality to the end, but that he feared Pygmalion's mighty power. For the third time the reaped corn had been carried to the threshing-floor to be stripped of the husk, and for the third time the new wine had poured into the hollow vats. Twice had the sun traversed the signs of the zodiac, and a third year was passing, when Anna was compelled to seek a new land of exile. Her brother came and demanded her surrender with threat of war. The king loathed arms and said to Anna, "We are unwarlike. Do thou seek safety in flight." At his bidding she fled and committed her bark to the wind and the waves. Her brother was more cruel than any sea. Near the fishy streams of stony Crathis there is a champain small; the natives call it Camere. Thither she bent her course, and was no farther off than nine shots of a sling, when the sails at first dropped and flapped in the puffs of wind. "Cleave the water with the oars," the seaman said. And while they made ready to furl the sails with the ropes, the swift south wind struck the curved poop and swept the ship, despite the captain's efforts, into the open sea; the land receded from their sight. The surge assails them, and from its lowest depths the ocean is upheaved: the hull gulps down the foaming waters. Seamanship is powerless against the wind, and the steersman no longer handles the helm, so he too resorts to prayers for help. The Phoenician exile is tossed on the swelling waves and hides her wet eyes in her robe: then for the first time did she call her sister Dido happy, and happy any woman who anywhere did tread dry land. A mighty blast pulled the ship to the Laurentine shore; she went down and perished, but all on board got safe to land.

By this time Aeneas had gained the kingdom and the daughter of Latinus and had blended the two peoples. While, accompanied by Achates alone, he paced barefoot a lonely path on the shore with which his wife had dowered him, he spied Anna wandering, nor could bring himself to think that it was she. Why should she come into the Latin land? thought he to himself. Meantime, "'Tis Anna!" cried Achates. At the sound of the name she looked up. Alas! what should she do? should she flee? where should she look for the earth to yawn for her? Her hapless sister's fate rose up before her eyes. The Cytherean hero perceived her distress and accosted her; yet did he weep, touched by memory of thee, Elissa. "Anna, by this land which in days gone by thou usedst to hear a happier fate had granted me; and by the gods who followed me and here of late have found a home, I swear that they did often chide my loiterings. Nor yet did I dread her death; far from me was that fear. Woe's me! her courage surpassed belief. Tell not the tale. I saw the unseemly wounds upon her body what time I dared to visit the house of Tartarus. But thou, whether thine own resolve or some god has brought thee to our shores, do thou enjoy my kingdom's comforts. Much our gratitude doth owe to thee, and something, too, to Elissa. Welcome shalt thou be for thine own sake and welcome for thy sister's." She believed his words, for no other hope was left her, and she told her wanderings. And when she entered the palace, clad in Tyrian finery, Aeneas opened his lips, while the rest of the assembly kept silence: "My wife Lavinia, I have a dutiful reason for entrusting this lady to thy care; when I was shipwrecked I consumed her substance. She is of Tyrian descent; she owns a kingdom on the Libyan coast; I pray thee, love her as a dear sister."

Lavinia promised everything, but in the silence of her heart she hid her fancied wrong and dissembled her fears; and though she saw many presents carried before her eyes, still she thought that many were also sent secretly. She had not decided what to do. She hated like a fury, and hatched a plot, and longed to die avenged. 'Twas night: before her sister's bed it seemed that Dido stood, her unkempt hair dabbled in blood. "Fly, fly this dismal house," she seemed to say, "O falter not!!" At the word a blast did slam the creaking door. Up she leaped, and quick she threw herself out of the low window upon the ground: her very fear had made her bold. And as soon as terror carried her clad in her ungirt tunic, she ran as runs a frightened doe that hears the wolves. 'Tis thought the horned Numicius swept her away in his swollen stream and hid her in his pools. Meanwhile a clamour loud they sought the lost Sidonian lady through the fields: traces and footprints met their eyes: on coming to the banks they found her tracks upon the banks. The conscious river checked and hushed his stream. Herself appeared to speak: "I am a nymph of the calm Numicius. In a perennial river I hide, and Anna Perenna is my name." Straightway they feast joyfully in the fields over which they had roamed, and toast themselves and the day in deep draughts of wine.

Some think that this goddess is the moon, because the moon fills up the measure of the year (annus) by her months; others deem that she is Themis; others suppose that she is the Inachian cow. You shall find some to say that thou, Anna, art a nymph, daughter of Azan, and that thou didst give Jupiter his first food. Yet another report, which I will relate, ahs come to my ears, and it is not far from what we may take as true. The common folk of old, not yet protected by tribunes, had fled, and abode upon the top of the Sacred Mount ; now, too, the provisions which they had brought with them and the bread fit for human use had failed them. There was a certain Anna, born at suburban

Bovillae, a poor old woman, but very industrious. She, with her grey hair bound up in a light cap, used to mould country cakes with tremulous hand, and it was her wont at morn to distribute them piping hot among the people: the supply was welcome to the people. When peace was made at home, they set up a statue to Perenna, because she had supplied them in their time of need.

Now it remains for me to tell why girls chant ribald songs; for they assemble and sing certain scurrilous verses. When Anna had been but lately made a goddess, the Marching God (Gradivus) came to her, and taking her aside spoke as follows: "Thou art worshipping in my month, I have joined my season to thine: I have great hope in the serve that thou canst render me. An armed god myself, I have fallen in love with the armed goddess Minerva ; I burn and for a long time have nursed this wound. She and I are deities alike in our pursuits; contrive to unite us. That office well befits thee, kind old dame." So he spoke. She duped the god by a false promise, and kept him dangling on in foolish hope by dubious delays. When he often pressed her, "I have done thy bidding," said she, "she is conquered and has yielded at last to thine entreaties." The lover believed her and made ready the bridal chamber. Thither they escorted Anna, like a bride, with a veil upon her face. When he would have kissed her, Mars suddenly perceived Anna; now shame, now anger moved the god befooled. The new goddess laughed at dear Minerva's lover. Never did anything please Venus more than that. So old jokes are cracked and ribald songs are sung, and people love to remember how Anna choused the great god.

I was about to pass by in silence the swords that stabbed the prince, when Vesta spoke thus from her chaste hearth: "Doubt not to recall them: he was my priest, it was at me these sacrilegious hands struck with the steel. I myself carried the man away, and left naught but his wraith behind; what fell by the sword was Caesar's shade." Transported to the sky he saw the halls of Jupiter, and in the great Forum he owns a temple dedicated to him. But all the daring sinners who, in defiance of the gods' will, profaned the pontiff's head, lie low in death, the death they merited. Witness Philippi and they whose scattered bones whiten the ground. This, this was Caesar's work, his duty, his first task by righteous arms to avenge his father.

XVII. KAL. APR. 16th

When the next dawn shall have refreshed the tender grass, the Scorpion will be visible in his first part.

XVI. KAL. 17th

The third day after the Ides is a very popular celebration of Bacchus. O Bacchus, be gracious to thy bard while he sings of thy festival. But I shall not tell of Semele ; if Jupiter had not brought his thunderbolts with him to her, thou hadst been born an unarmed wight. Nor shall I tell how, in order that thou mightest be born as a boy in due time, the function of a mother was completed in thy father's body. It were long to relate the triumphs won by the god over the Sithonians and the Scythians, and how he subdued the peoples of India, that incense-bearing land. I will say naught of him who fell a mournful prey to his own Theban mother, nor of Lycurgus, whom frenzy drove to hack at his own son. Lo now, fain would I speak of the Tyrrhenian monsters, men suddenly transformed into fish, but that is not the business of this song; the business of this song is to set forth the reasons why a planter of vines hawks cakes to the people. Before they birth, Liber, the altars were without offerings, and grass grew on the cold hearths. They tell how, after subjugating the Ganges and the whole East, though didst set apart first-fruits for great Jupiter. Thou were the first to offer cinnamon and incense from the conquered lands, and the roast flesh of oxen led in triumph.

Libations (libamina) derive their name from their author, and so do cakes (liba), because part of them is offered on the hallowed hearths. Cakes are made for the god, because he delights in sweet juices, and they say that honey was discovered by Bacchus. Attended by the satyrs he was going from sandy Hebrus (my tale includes a pleasant jest), and had come to Rhodope and flowery Pangaeus, when the cymbals in the hands of his companions clashed. Lo, drawn by the tinkle, winged things, as yet unknown, assemble, and the bees follow the sounding brass. Liber collected the stranglers and shut them up in a hollow tree; and he was rewarded by the discovery of honey. Once the satyrs and the bald-pated ancient had tasted it, they sought for the yellow combs in every grove. In a hollow elm the old fellow heard the humming of a swarm; he spied the combs and kept his counsel. And sitting lazily on the back of an ass, and leaning upon a branch stump he greedily reached at the honey stored in the bole. Thousands of hornets gathered, and thrust their stings into his bald pate, and left their mark on his snub-nosed face. Headlong he fell, and the ass kicked him, while he called to his comrades and implored their help. The satyrs ran to the spot and laughed at their parent's swollen face: he limped on his hurt knee. Bacchus himself laughed and taught him to smear mud on his wounds; Silenus took the hint and smudged his face with mire. The father god enjoys honey, and it is right that we should give to its discoverer golden honey infused in hot cakes.

The reason why a woman presides at the festival is plain enough: Bacchus rouses bands of women by his thyrsus. You ask why it is an old woman who does it. That age is more addicted to wine, and loves the bounty of the teeming vine. Why is she wreathed with ivy? Ivy is most dear to Bacchus. Why that is so can also soon be told. They say that when the stepmother was searching for the boy, the nymphs of Nysa screened the cradle in ivy leaves.

It remains for me to discover why the gown of liberty is given to boys, fair Bacchus, on thy day, and a youth, and thy age is midway between the two; or it may be that, because thou art a father, fathers commend to thy care and divine keeping the pledges that they love, their sons; or it may be that because thou art Liber, the gown of liberty is assumed and a freer (liberior) life is entered upon under thine auspices. Or was it because, in the days when the ancients tilled the fields more diligently, and a senator laboured on his ancestral land, when a consul exchanged the bent plough for the rods and exes of office, and it was no crime to have horny hands, the country folk used to come to the City for the games (but that was an honour paid to the gods, not a concession to the popular tastes, the discoverer of the grape held on his own day those games which now he shares with the torch-bearing goddess ); and the day therefore seemed not unsuitable for conferring the gown, in order that a crowd might gather round the novice? Thou Father God, hither turn thy horned head, mild and propitious, and to the favouring breezes spread the sails of my poetic art!

On this day, if I remember aright, and on the preceding day, there is a procession to the Argei. What the Argei are, will be told in the proper place. The star of the Kite slopes downwards towards the Lycaonian Bear: on that night it becomes visible. If you would know what raised the bird to heaven. Saturn had been dethroned by Jupiter. In his wrath he stirred up the strong Titans to take arms and sought the help the Fates allowed him. There was a bull born of its mother Earth, a wondrous monster, the hinder part whereof was a serpent: him, at the warning of the three Fates, grim Styx had shut up in gloomy woods enclosed by a triple wall. There was an oracle that he who should burn the inwards of the bull in the flames would be able to conquer the eternal gods. Briareus sacrificed him with an axe made of adamant, and was just about to put the entrails on the fire: Jupiter commanded the birds to snatch them away; the kite brought them to him and was promoted to the stars for his services.

XIV - XI. KAL. 19th - 22nd

After an interval of one day rites are performed in honour of Minerva, which get their name from a group of five days. The first day is bloodless, and it is unlawful to combat with the sword, because Minerva was born on that day. The second day and three besides are celebrated by the spreading of sand : the warlike goddess delights in drawn swords. Ye boys and tender girls, pray now to Pallas; he who shall have won the favour of Pallas will be learned. When once they have won the favour of Pallas, let girls learn to card the wool and to unload the full distaffs. She also teaches how to traverse the upright warp with the shuttle, and she drives home the loose threads with the comb. Worship her, thou who dost remove stains from damaged garments; worship her, thou who dost make ready the brazen caldrons for the fleeces. If Pallas frown, no man shall make shoes well, though he were more skilful than Tychius ; and though he were more adroit with his hands than Epeus of old, yet shall he be helpless, if Pallas be angry with him. Ye too, who banish sicknesses by Phoebus' art, bring from your earnings a few gifts to the goddess. And spurn her not, ye schoolmasters, ye tribe too often cheated of your income, she attracts new pupils; and spurn her not, thou who dost ply the graving tool and paint pictures in encaustic colours, and thou who dost mould the stone with deft hand. She is the goddess of a thousand works: certainly she is the goddess of song; may she be friendly to my pursuits, if I deserve it.

Where the Caelian Mount descends from the height into the plain, at the point where the street is not level but nearly level, you may see the small shrine of Minerva Capta, which the goddess owned for the first time upon her birthday. The origin of the name Capta is doubtful. We call ingenuity "capital"; the goddess herself is ingenious. Did she get name of Capta because she is said to have leapt forth motherless with her shield from the crown of her father's head (caput)? Or because she came to us as a captive at the conquest of the Falerii? This very fact is attested by an ancient inscription. Or was it because she has a law which ordains capital punishment for receiving objects stolen from that place? From whatsoever source thou doest derive the title, O Pallas, do thou hold thine aegis ever before our leaders.

X. KAL. 23rd

The last day of the five reminds us to purify the melodious trumpets and to sacrifice to the strong god.

Now you can look up to the sun and say, "Yesterday he set foot on the fleece of the Phrixean sheep." By the guile of a wicked stepmother the seeds had been roasted, so that no corn sprouted in the wonted way. A messenger was sent to the tripods to report, by a sure oracle, what remedy the Delphic god would prescribe for the dearth. But he, corrupted like the seed, brought word that the oracle demanded the death of Helle and the stripling Phrixus; and when the citizens, the season, and Ino compelled the reluctant king to submit to the wicked command, Phrixus and his sister, their brows veiled with fillets, stood together before the altars and bewailed the fate they shared. Their mother spied them, as by chance she hovered in the air, and thunder-struck she beat her naked breast with her hand: then, accompanied by clouds, she leaped down into the dragon-begotten city and snatched from it her children, and that they might take to flight, a ram all glistening with gold was delivered to them. The ram bore the two over wide seas. It is said that the sister relaxed the hold of her left hand on the ram's horn, when she gave her own name to the water. Her brother almost perished with her in attempting to succour her as she fell, and in holding out his hands at the utmost stretch. He wept at losing her who had shared his double peril, wotting not that she was wedded to the blue god. On reaching the shore the ram was made a constellation, but his golden fleece was carried to Colchian homes.

When thrice the Morning Star shall have heralded the coming Dawn, you shall reckon the time of day equal to the time of night.

III. KAL. 30th

When four times from that day the shepherd shall have folded the cloying kids, and four times the grass shall have whitened under the fresh dew, it will be time to adore Janus, and gentle Concord with him, and Roman Safety, and the altar of Peace.

The moon rules the months: the period of this month also ends with the worship of the Moon on the Aventine Hill.

BOOK IV

“O gracious Mother of the Twin Loves, “ said I, “grant me thy favour.” The goddess looked back at the poet. “What wouldst thou with me?” she said, “surely thou wast wont to sing of loftier themes. Has thou an old wound rankling in thy tender breast?” “Goddess,” I answered, “thou wottest of my wound.” She laughed, and straightway the sky was serene in that quarter. “Hurt or whole, did I desert thy standards? Thou, thou hast ever been the task I set myself. In my young years I toyed with themes to match, and gave offence to none; now my steeds treat a larger field. I sing the seasons, and their causes, and the starry signs that set beneath the earth and rise again, drawing my lore from annals old. We have come to the fourth month in which thou art honoured above all others, and thou knowest, Venus that both the poet and the month are thine.” The goddess was moved, and touching my brows lightly with myrtle of Cythera, “Complete,” said she, “the work thou hast begun.” I felt her inspiration, and suddenly my eyes were opened to the causes of the days: proceed, my bark, while still thou mayest and the breezes blow.

Yet if any part of the calendar should interest thee, Caesar, thou hast in April matter of concern. This month thou hast inherited by a great pedigree, and it has been made thine by virtue of thine adoption into a noble house. When the Ilian sire was putting the long year on record, he saw the relationship and commemorated the authors of thy race: and as he gave the first lot in order of the months to fierce Mars, because he was the immediate cause of his own birth, so he willed that the place of the second month should belong to Venus, because he traced his descent from her through many generations. In seeking the origin of his race, he turned over the roll of the centuries and came at last to the gods whose blood he shared. How, prithee, should he not know that Dardanus was born of Electra, daughter of Atlas, and that Electra had lain with Jupiter? Dardanus had a son Erichthonius, who begat Tros; and Tros begat Assaracus, and Assaracus begat Capys. Next came Anchises, with whom Venus did not disdain to share the name of parent. Of them was born Aeneas, whose piety was proved when on his shoulders through the fire he bore the holy things and his own sire, a charge as holy. Now at last have we come to the lucky name of Julius, through whom the Julian house reaches back to Teucrian ancestors. He had a son Postumus, who, because he was born in the deep woods, was called Silvius among the Latin folk. He was thy father, Latinus; Latinus was succeeded by Alba, and next to Alba on the list was Epytus. He gave to his son Capys, a Trojan name, revived for the purpose, and he was also the grandfather of Calpetus. And when Tiberinus possessed his father's kingdom after the death of Calpetus, he was drowned, it is said, in a deep pool of the Tuscan river. Yet before that he had seen the birth of a son Agrippa and of a grandson Remulus; but Remulus, they say, was struck by Levin-bolts. After them came Aventinus, from whom the place and also the hill took their name. After him the kingdom passed to Proca, who was succeeded by Numitor, brother of hard-hearted Amulius. Ilia and Lausus were born to Numitor. Lausus fell by his uncle's sword: Ilia found favour in the eyes of Mars and gave birth to thee, Quirinus, and thy twin brother Remus. He always averred that his parents were Venus and Mars, and he deserved to be believed when he said so; and that his descendants after him might know the truth, he assigned successive perios to the gods of his race.

But I surmise that the month of Venus took its name from the Greek language: the goddess was called after the foam of the sea. Nor need you wonder that a thing was called by a Greek name, for the Italian land was Greater Greece. Evander had come to Italy with a fleet full of people; Alcides also had come; both of them were Greeks by race. As a guest, the club-bearing hero fed his herd on the Aventine grass, and the great god drank of the Albula. The Neritian chief also came : witness the Laestrygones and the shore which still bears the name of Circe. Already the walls of Telegonus were standing, and the walls of moist Tibur, built by Argive hands. Driven from home by the tragic doom of Atrides, Halaesus had come, after whom the Faliscan land deems that it takes its name. Add to these Antenor, who advised the Trojans to make peace, and (Diomedes) the Oenid, son-in-law to Apulian Daunus. Aeneas from the flames of Ilium brought his gods into our land, arriving late and after Antenor. He had a comrade, Solymus, who came from Phrygian Ida; from him the walls of Sulmo take their name - cool Sulmo, my native town, Germanicus. Woe's me, how far is Sulmo from the Scythian land! Therefore shall I so far away - but check, my Muse, thy plaints; 'tis not for thee to warble sacred themes on mournful strings.

Where doth not sallow envy find a way? Some there are who grudge thee the honour of the month, and would snatch it from thee, Venus. For they say that April was named from the open (apertum) season, because spring then opens (aperit) all things, and the sharp frost-bound cold departs, and the earth unlocks her teeming soil, though kindly Venus claims the month and lays her hand on it. She indeed sways, and well deserves to sway, the world entire; she owns a kingdom second to that of no god; she gives laws to heaven and earth and to her native sea, and by her inspiration she keeps every species in being. She created all the gods - 'twere long to number them; she bestowed on seeds and trees their origins. She drew rude-minded men together and taught them to pair each with his mate. What but bland pleasure brings into being the whole brood of birds? Cattle, too, would not come together, were loose love wanting. The savage ram butts at the wether, but would not hurt the forehead of the ewe he loves. The bull, whom all the woodland pastures, all the groves do dread, puts off his fierceness and follows the heifer. The same force preserves all living things under the broad bosom of the deep, and fills the waters with unnumbered fish. That force first stripped man of his savage garb; from it he learned decent attire and personal cleanliness. A lover was the first, they say, to serenade by night the mistress who denied him entrance, while he sang at her barred door, and to win the heart of a coy maid was eloquence indeed; every man then pleaded his own cause. This goddess has been the mother of a thousand arts; the wish to please has given birth to many inventions that were unknown before.

And shall any man dare rob this goddess of the honour of giving her name to the second month? Far from me be such a frenzy. Besides, while everywhere the goddess is powerful and her temples are thronged with worshippers, she possesses yet more authority in our city. Venus, O Roman, bore arms for thy Troy, what time she groaned at the spear wound in her dainty hand ; and by a Trojan's verdict she defeated two heavenly goddesses. Ah would that they had not remembered their defeat! And she was called the bride of Assaracus' son, in order, to be sure, that in time to come great Caesar might count the Julian line among his sires. And no season was more fitting for Venus than spring. In spring the landscape glistens; soft is the soil in spring; now the corn pushes its blades through the cleft ground; now the vine-shoot protrudes its buds in the swelling bark. Lovely Venus deserves the lovely season and is attached, as usual, to her dear Mars: in spring she bids the curved ships fare across her natal seas and fear no more the threats of winter.

KAL. APR. 1st

Duly do ye worship the goddess, ye Latin mothers and brides, and ye, too, who wear not the fillets and long robe. Take off the golden necklaces from the marble neck of the goddess ; take off her gauds; the goddess must be washed from top to toe. Then dry her neck and restore to it her golden necklaces; now give her other flowers, now give her the fresh-blown rose. Ye, too, she herself bids bathe under the green myrtle, and there is a certain reason for her command; learn what it is. Naked, she was drying on the shore her oozy locks, when the satyrs, a wanton crew, espied the goddess. She perceived it, and screened her body by myrtle interposed: that done, she was safe, and she bids you do the same. Learn now why ye give incense to Virile Fortune in the place which reeks of warm water. All women strip when they enter that place, and every blemish on the naked body is plain to see; Virile Fortune undertakes to conceal the blemish and to hide it from the men, and this she does for the consideration of a little incense. Nor grudge to take poppy pounded with snowy milk and liquid honey squeezed from the comb; when Venus was first escorted to her eager spouse, she drank that draught: from that time she was a bride. Propitiate her with supplications; beauty and virtue and good fame are in her keeping. In the time of our forefathers Rome had fallen from a state of chastity, and the ancients consulted the old woman of Cumae. She ordered a temple to be built to Venus, and when that was duly done, Venus took the name of Changer of the Heart (Verticordia) from the event. Fairest of goddesses, ever behold the sons of Aenas with look benign, and guard thine offspring's numerous wives.

While I speak, the Scorpion, the tip of whose swung tail strikes fear, plunges into the green waters.

IV. NON. 2nd

When the night has passed, and the sky has just begun to blush, and dew-besprinkled birds are twittering plaintively, and the wayfarer, who all night long has waked, lays down his half-burnt torch, and the swain goes forth to his accustomed toil, the Pleiads will commence to lighten the burden that rests on their father's shoulders; seven are they usually called, but six they usually are; whether it be that six of the sisters were embraced by gods (for they say that Sterope lay with Mars, Alcyone and fair Celaeno with Neptune, and Maia, Electra, and Taygete with Jupiter); the seventh, Merope, was married to a mortal man, to Sisyphus, and she repents of it, and from shame at the deed she alone of the sisters hides herself; or whether it be that Electra could not, brook to behold the fall of Troy, and so covered her eyes with her hand.

PR. NON. 4th

Let the sky revolve thrice on its never-resting axis; let Titan thrice yoke and thrice unyoke his steeds, straightway the Berecyntian flute will blow a blast on its bent horn, and the festival of the Idaean Mother will have come. Eunuchs will march and thump their hollow drums, and cymbals clashed on cymbals will give out their tinkling notes: seated on the unmanly necks of her attendants, the goddess herself will be borne with howls through the streets in the City's midst. The state is clattering, the games are calling. To your places, Quirites! and in the empty law-courts let the war of suitors cease!

I would put many questions, but I am daunted by the shrill cymbal's clash and the bent flute's thrilling drone. "Grant me, goddess, someone whom I may question." The Cybelean goddess spied her learned granddaughters and bade them attend to my inquiry. "Mindful of her command, ye nurslings of Helicon, disclose the reason why the Great Goddess delights in perpetual din." So did I speak, and Erato did thus reply (it fell to her to speak of Venus' month, because her own name is derived from tender love): "Saturn was given this oracle: 'Thou best of kings, thou shalt be ousted of thy sceptre by thy son.' In fear, the god devoured his offspring as fast as they were born, and he kept them sunk in his bowels. Many a time did Rhea grumble, to be so often big with child, yet never be a mother; she repined at her own fruitfulness. Then Jove was born. The testimony of antiquity passes for good; pray do not shake the general faith. A stone concealed in a garment went down the heavenly throat ; so had fate decreed that the sire should be beguiled. Now rang steep Ida loud and long with clangorous music, that the boy might pule in safety with his infant mouth. Some beat their shields, others their empty helmets with staves; that was the task of the Curetes and that, too, of the Corybantes. The secret was kept, and the ancient deed is still acted in mimicry; the attendants of the goddess thump the brass and rumbling leather; cymbals they strike instead of helmets, and drums instead of shields; the flute plays, as of yore, the Phrygian airs."

The goddess ended. I began: "Why for her sake doth the fierce breed of lions yield their unwonted manes to the curved yoke?" I ended. She began: "Tis thought, the wildness of the brute was tamed by her: that she testifies by her (lion-drawn) car." But why is her head weighted with a turreted crown? Is it because she gave towers to the first cities?" The goddess nodded assent.

"Whence came," said I, "the impulse to cut their members?" When I was silent, the Pierian goddess began to speak: "In the woods a Phrygian boy of handsome face, Attis by name, had attached the tower-bearing goddess to himself by a chaste passion. She wished that he should be kept for herself and should guard her temple, and she said, 'Resolve to be a boy for ever.' He promised obedience, and, 'If I lie,' quoth he, 'may the love for which I break faith be my last love of all.' He broke faith; for, meeting the nymph Sagaritis, he ceased to be what he had been before. For that the angry goddess wreaked vengeance. By wounds inflicted on the tree she cut down the Naiad, who perished thus; for the fate of the Naiad was bound up with the tree. Attis went mad, and, imagining that the roof of the chamber was falling in, he fled and ran for the top of Mount Dindymus. And he kept crying, at one moment. 'Take away the torches!' at another, 'Remove the whips!' And of the swore that the Stygian goddesses were visible to him. He mangled, too, his body with a sharp stone, and trailed his long hair in the filthy dust; and his cry was, 'I have deserved it! With my blood I pay the penalty that is my due. Ah, perish the parts that were my ruin! Ah, let them perish,' still he said. He retrenched the burden of his groin, and of a sudden was bereft of every sign of manhood. His madness set an example, and still his unmanly ministers cut their vile members while they toss their hair." In such words the Aonian Muse eloquently answered my question as to the cause of the madness of the votaries.

"Instruct me, too, I pray, my guide, whence was she fetched, whence came? Was she always in our city?" "The Mother Goddess ever loved Dindymus, and Cybele, and Ida, with its delightful springs, and the realm of Ilium. When Aeneas carried Troy to the Italian fields, the goddess almost followed the ships that bore the sacred things; but she felt that fate did not yet call for intervention of her divinity in Latium, and she remained behind in her accustomed place. Afterwards, when mighty Rome had already seen five centuries, and had lifted up her head above the conquered world, the priest consulted the fateful words of the Euboean song. They say that what he found ran thus: 'The Mother is absent; thou Roman, I bid thee seek the Mother. When she shall come, she must be received by chaste hands.' The ambiguity of the dark oracle puzzled the senators to know who the Parent was, and where she was to be sought. Paeon was consulted and said, 'Fetch the Mother of the Gods; she is to be found on Mount Ida.' Nobles were sent. The sceptre of Phrygia was then held by Attalus; he refused the favour to the Ausonian lords. Wonders to tell, the earth trembled and rumbled long, and in her shrine thus did the goddess speak: 'Twas my own will that they should send for me. Tarry not: let me go, it is my wish. Rome is a place meet to be the resort of every god.' Quaking with terror at the words Attalus said, 'Go forth. Thou wilt still be ours. Rome traces its origin to Phrygian ancestors.' Straightway unnumbered axes fell those pinewoods which had supplied the pious Phrygian with timber in his flight: a thousand hands assemble, and the Mother of the Gods is lodged in a hollow ship painted in encaustic colours. She is borne in perfect safety across the waters of her son and comes to the long strait named after the sister of Phrixus ; she passes Rhoeteum, where the tide runs fast, and the Sigeian shores, and Tenedos, and Eetion's ancient realm. Leaving Lesbos behind, she came next to the Cyclades and to the wave that breaks on the Carystian shoals. She passed the Icarian Sea also, where Icarus lost his wings that slipped, and where he gave his name to a great water. Then she left Crete on the larboard and the Pelopian billows on the starboard, and steered for Cythera, the sacred isle of Venus. Thence she passed to the Trinacrian Sea, where Brotnes and Steropes and Acmonides are wont to dip the white-hot iron. She skirted the African main, and beheld astern to larboard the Sardinian realms, and made Ausonia.

"She had reached the mouth where the Tiber divides to join the sea and flows with ampler sweep. All the knights and gave senators, mixed up with the common folk, came to meet her at the mouth of the Tuscan river. With them walked mothers and daughters and brides, and the virgins who tended the sacred hearths. The men wearied their arms by tugging lustily at the rope; hardly did the foreign ship make head against the stream. A drought had long prevailed; the grass was parched and burnt; the loaded bark sank in the muddy shallows. Every man who lent a hand toiled beyond his strength and cheered on the workers by his cries. Yet the ship stuck fast, like an island firmly fixed in the middle of the sea. Astonished at the portent, the men did stand and quake. Claudia Quinta traced her descent from Clausus of old, and her beauty matched her nobility. Chaste was she, though not reputed so. Rumour unkind had wronged her, and a false charge had been trumped up against her: it told against her that she dressed sprucely, that she walked abroad with her hair dressed in varied fashion, that she had a ready tongue for gruff old men. Conscious of innocence, she laughed at fame's untruths; but we of the multitude are prone to think the worst. When she had stepped forth from the procession of the chaste matrons, and taken up the pure water of the river in her hands, she thrice let it drip on her head, and thrice lifted her palms to heaven (all who looked on her thought that she was out of her very mind), and bending the knee she fixed her eyes on the image of the goddess, and with dishevelled hair uttered these words: 'Thou fruitful Mother of the Gods, graciously accept thy suppliant's prayers on one condition. They say I am not chaste. If thou dost condemn me, I will confess my guilt; convicted by the verdict of the goddess, I will pay the penalty with my life. But if I am free of crime, give by thine act a proof of my innocency, and, chaste as thou art, do thou yield to my chaste hands.' She spoke, and drew the rope with a slight effort. My story is a strange one, but it is attested by the stage. The goddess was moved, and followed her leader, and by following bore witness in her favour: a sound of joy was wafted to the stars. They came to a bend in the river, where the stream turns away to the left ; men of old named it the Halls of Tiber. Night drew on; they tied the rope to an oaken stump, and after a repast disposed themselves to slumber light. At dawn of day they loosed the rope from the oaken stump; but first they set down a brazier and put incense on it, and crowned the poop, and sacrificed an unblemished heifer that had known neither the yoke nor the bull. There is a place where the smooth Almo flows into the Tiber, and the lesser river loses its name in the great one. There a hoary-headed priest in purple robes washed the Mistress and her holy things in the waters of Almo. The attendants howled, the mad flute blew, and hands unmanly beat the leathern drums. Attended by a crowd, Claudia walked in front with joyful face, her chastity at last vindicated by the testimony of the goddess. The goddess herself, seated in a wagon, drove in through the Capene Gate; fresh flowers were scattered on the yoked oxen. Nasica received her. The name of the founder of the temple has not survived; now it is Augustus; formerly it was Metellus."

Here Erato stopped. There was a pause to give me time to put the rest of my questions. "Why," said I, "does the goddess collect money in small coins?" "The people contributed their coppers, with which Metellus built her fane," said she; "hence the custom of giving a small coin abides." I asked why then more than at other times people entertain each other to feasts and hold banquets for which they issue invitations. "Because," said she, "the Berecyntian goddess luckily changed her home, people try to get the same good luck by going from house to house." I was about to ask why the Megalesia are the first games of the year in our city, when the goddess took my meaning and said, "She gave birth to the gods. They gave place to their parent, and the Mother has the honour of precedence." "Why then do we give the name of Galii to the men who unman themselves, when the Gallic land is so far from Phrygia?" "Between," said she, "green Cybele and high Celaenae a river of mad water flows, 'tis named the Gallus. Who drinks of it goes mad. Far hence depart, ye who care to be of sound mind. Who drinks of it goes mad." "They think no shame," said I, "to set a dish of herbs on the tables of the Mistress. Is there a good reason at the bottom of it?" "People of old," she answered, "are reported to have subsisted on pure milk and such herbs as the earth bore of its free will. White cheese is mixed with pounded herbs, that the ancient goddess may know the ancient foods."

NON. 5th

When the next Dawn shall have shone in the sky, and the stars have vanished, and the Moon shall have unyoked her snow white steeds, he who shall say, "On this day of old the temple of Public Fortune was dedicated on the hill of Quirinus" will tell the truth.

VIII. ID. 6th

It was, I remember, the third day of the games, when a certain elderly man, who sat next to me at the show, observed to me, "This was the famous day when on the Libyan shores Caesar crushed proud Juba's treacherous host. Caesar was my commander; under him I am proud to have served as colonel: at his hands did I receive my commission. This seat I won in war, and thou didst win in peace, by reason of thine office in the College of the Ten." We were about to say more when a sudden shower of rain parted us; the Balance hung in heaven released the heavenly waters.

V. ID. 9th

But before the last day shall have put an end to the shows, sworded Orion will have sunk in the sea.

IV. ID. 10th

When the next Dawn shall have looked on victorious Rome, and the stars shall have been put to flight and given place to the sun, the Circus will be thronged with a procession and an array of the gods, and the horses, fleet as the wind, will contend for the first palm.

PR. ID. 12th

Next come the games of Ceres. There is no need to declare the reason; the bounty and the services of the goddess are manifest. The bread of the first mortals consisted of the green herbs which the earth yielded without solicitation; and now they plucked the living grass from the turf, and now the tender leaves of tree-tops furnished a feast. Afterwards the acorn became known; it was well when they had found the acorn, and the sturdy oak offered a splendid affluence. Ceres was the first who invited man to better sustenance and exchanged acorns for more useful food. She forced bulls to yield their necks to the yoke; then for the first time did the upturned soil behold the sun. Copper was now held in esteem; iron ore still lay concealed; ah, would that it had been hidden for ever! Ceres delights in peace; and you, ye husbandmen, pray for perpetual peace and for a pacific prince. You may give the goddess spelt, and the compliment of spurting salt, and grains of incense on old hearths; and if there is no incense, kindle resinous torches. Good Ceres is content with little, if that little be but pure. Ye attendants, with tucked up robes, take the knives away from the ox; let the ox plough; sacrifice the lazy sow. The axe should never smite the neck that fits the yoke; let him live and often labour in the hard soil.

The subject requires that I should narrate the rape of the Virgin: in my narrative you will read much that you knew before; a few particulars will be new to you.

The Trinacrian land got its name from its natural position: it runs out into the vast ocean in three rocky capes. It is the favourite home of Ceres: she owns many cities, among them fertile Henna with its well-tilled soil. Cool Arethusa had invited the mothers of the gods, and the yellow-haired goddess had also come to the sacred banquet. Attended as usual by her wonted damsels, her daughter roamed bare-foot through the familiar meadows. In a shady vale there is a spot moist with the abundant spray of a high waterfall. All the hues that nature owns were there displayed, and the pied earth was bright with various flowers. As soon as she espied it, "Come hither, comrades," she said, "and with me bring home lapfuls of flowers." The bauble booty lured their girlish minds, and they were too busy to feel fatigue. One filled baskets plaited of supple withes, another loaded her lap, another the loose folds of her robe; one gathered marigolds, another paid heed to beds of violets; another nipped off the heads of poppies with her nails; some are attracted by the hyacinth, others lingered over amaranth; some love thyme, others corn poppies and melilot; full many a rose was culled, and flowers without a name. Persephone herself plucked dainty crocuses and white lilies. Intent on gathering, she, little by little, strayed far, and it chanced that none of her companions followed their mistress. Her father's brother saw her, and no sooner did he see her than he swiftly carried her off and bore her on his dusky steeds into his own realm. She in sooth cried out, "Ho, dearest mother, they are carrying me away!" and she rent the bosom of her robe. Meantime a road is opened up for Dis; for his steeds can hardly brook the unaccustomed daylight. But when the band of playmates attending her had heaped their baskets with flowers, they cried out, "Persephone, come to the gifts we have for thee!" When she answered not their call, they filled the mountain with shrieks, and smote their bare bosoms with their sad hands.

Ceres was startled by the loud lament; she had just come to Henna, and straightway, "Woe's me! my daughter," said she, "where art thou?" Distraught she hurried along, even as we hear that Thracian Maenads rush with streaming hair. As a cow, whose calf has been torn from her udder, bellows and seeks her offspring through every grove, so the goddess did not stifle her groans and ran at speed, starting from the plains of Henna. From there she lit on prints of the girlish feet and marked the traces of the familiar figure on the ground. Perhaps that day had been the last of her wanderings if swine had not foiled the trail she found. Already in her course she had passed Leontini, and the river Amenanus, and the grassy banks of Acis. She had passed Cyane, and the spring of gently flowing Anapus, and the Gelas with its whirlpools not to be approached. She had left behind Ortygia and Megara and the Pantagias, and the place where the sea receives the water of the Symaethus, and the caves of the Cyclopes, burnt by the forges set up in them, and the place that takes its name from a curved sickle, and Himera, and Didyme, and Acragas, and Tauromenum, and the Mylae, where are the rich pastures of the sacred kine. Next she came to Camerina, and Thapsus, and the Tempe of Halorus, and where Eryx lies for ever open to the western breeze. Already had she traversed Pelorias, and Lilybaeum, and Pachynum, the three horns of her land. And wherever she set her foot she filled every place with her sad plaints, as when the bird doth mourn her Itys lost. In turn she cried, now "Persephone!" now "Daughter!" She cried and shouted either name by turns; but neither did Persephone hear Ceres, nor the daughter hear her mother; both names by turns died away. And whether she spied a shepherd or a husbandman at work, her one question was, "Did a girl pass this way?" Now o'er the landscape stole a sober hue, and darkness hid the world; now the watchful dogs were hushed. Lofty Etna lies over the mouth of huge Typhoeus, whose fiery breath sets the ground aglow. There the goddess kindled two pine-trees to serve her as a light; hence to this day a torch is given out at the rites of Ceres. There is a cave all fretted with the seams of scolloped pumice, a region not to be approached by man or beast. Soon as she came hither, she yoked the bitter serpents to her car and roamed, unwetted, o'er the ocean waves. She shunned the Syrtes, and Zanclean Charybdis, and you, ye Nisaeen hounds, monsters of shipwreck; she shunned the Adriatic, stretching far and wide, and Corinth of the double seas.

Thus she came to thy havens, land of Attica. There for the first time she sat her down most rueful on a cold stone: that stone even now the Cecropids call the Sorrowful. For many days she tarried motionless under the open sky, patiently enduring the moonlight and the rain. Not a place but has its own peculiar destiny: what now is named the Eleusis of Ceres was then the plot of land of aged Celeus. He carried home acorns and blackberries, knocked from bramble bushes, and dry wood to feed the blazing hearth. A little daughter drove two nanny-goats back from the mountain, and an infant son was sick in his cradle. "Mother," said the maid - the goddess was touched by the name of mother - "what does thou all alone in solitary places?" The old man, too, halted, despite the load he bore, and prayed that she would pass beneath the roof of his poor cottage. She refused. She had disguised herself as an old dame and covered her hair with a cap. When he pressed her, she answered thus: "Be happy! may a parent's joy be thine for ever! My daughter has been taken from me. Alas! how much better is thy lot than mine!" She spoke, and like a tear (for gods can never weep) a crystal drop fell on her bosom warm. They wept with her, those tender hearts, the old man and the maid; and these were the words of the worthy old man: "So may the ravished daughter, whose loss thou weapest, be restored safe to thee, as thou shalt arise, nor scorn the shelter of my humble hut." The goddess answered him. "Lead on; thou hast found the way to force me"; and she rose from the stone and followed the old man. As he led her and she followed, he told her how his son was sick and sleepless, kept wakeful by his ills. As she was about to pass within the lowly dwelling, she plucked a smooth, a slumberous poppy that grew on the waste ground; and as she plucked, 'tis said she tasted it forgetfully, and so unwitting stayed her long hunger. Hence, because she broke her fast at nightfall, she initiates time their meal by the appearance of the stars. When she crossed the threshold, she saw the household plunged in grief; all hope of saving the child was gone. The goddess greeted the mother (her name was Metanira) and deigned to put her lips to the child's lips. His pallor fled, and strength of a sudden was visibly imparted to his frame; such vigour flowed from lips divine. There was joy in the whole household, that is, in mother, father, and daughter; for they three were the whole household. Anon they set out a repast - curds liquefied in milk, and apples, and golden honey in the comb. Kind Ceres abstained, and gave the child poppies to drink in warm milk to make him sleep. It was midnight, and there reigned the silence of peaceful sleep; the goddess took up Triptolemus in her lap, and thrice she stroked him with her hand, and spoke three spells, spells not to be rehearsed by mortal tongue, and on the hearth she buried the boy's body in live embers, that the fire might purge away the burden of humanity. His fond-foolish mother awoke from sleep and distractedly cried out, "What doest thou?" and she snatched his body from the fire. To her the goddess said: "Meaning no wrong, thou hast done grievous wrong: my bounty has been baffled by a mother's fear. That boys of yours will indeed be mortal, but he will be the first to plough and sow and reap a guerdon from the turned-up soil."

She said, and forth she fared, trailing a cloud behind her, and passed to her dragons, then soared aloft in her winged car. She left behind bold Sunium, and the snug harbour of Piraeus, and the coast that lies on the right hand. From there she came to the Aegean, where she beheld all the Cyclades; she skimmed the wild Ionian and the Icarian Sea; and passing through the cities of Asia she made for the long Hellespont, and pursued aloft a roving course, this way and that. For now she looked down on the incense-gathering Arabs, and now on the Indians: beneath her lay on one side Libya, on the other side Meroe, and the parched land. Now she visited the western rivers, the Rhine, the Rhone, the Po, and thee, Tiber, future parent of a mighty water. Whither do I stray? 'Twere endless to tell of the lands over which she wandered. No spot in the world did Ceres leave unvisited. She wandered also in the sky, and accosted the constellations that lie next to the cold pole and never dip in the ocean wave. "Ye Parrhasian stars, reveal to a wretched mother her daughter Persephone; for ye can know all things, since never do ye plunge under the waters of the sea." So she spoke, and Helice answered her thus: "Night is blameless. Ask of the Sun concerning the ravished maid: far and wide he sees the things that are done by day." Appealed to, the Sun said, "To spare thee vain trouble, she whom thou seekest is wedded to Jove's brother and rules the third realm."

After long moaning to herself she thus addressed the Thunderer, and in her face there were deep lines of sorrow: "If thou dost remember by whom I got Persephone, she ought to have half of thy care. By wandering round the world I have learned naught but the knowledge of the wrong: the ravisher enjoys the reward of his crime. But neither did Persephone deserve a robber husband, nor was it meet that in this fashion we should find a son-in-law. What worse wrong could I have suffered if Gyges had been victorious and I his captive, than now I have sustained while thou art sceptered king of heaven? But let him escape unpunished; I'll put up with it nor ask for vengeance; only let him restore her and repair his former deeds by new." Jupiter soothed her, and on the plea of love excused the deed. "He is not a son-in-law," said he, "to put us to shame: I myself am not a white more noble: my royalty is in the sky, another owns the waters, and another void of chaos. But if haply thy mind is set immutably, and thou art resolved to break the bonds of wedlock, once contracted, come let us try to do so, if only she has kept her fast; if not, she will be the wife of her infernal spouse." The Herald God received his orders and assumed his wings: he flew to Tartarus and returning sooner than he was looked for brought tidings sure of what he had seen. "The ravished Maid," said he, "did break her fast on three grains enclosed in the tough rind of a pomegranate." Her rueful parent grieved no less than if her daughter had just been reft from her, and it was long before she was herself again, and hardly then. And thus she spoke: "For me, too, heaven is no home; order that I too be admitted to the Taenarian vale. " And she would have done so, if Jupiter had not promised that Persephone should be in heaven for twice three months. Then at last Ceres recovered her looks and her spirits, and set wreaths of corn ears on her hair; and the laggard fields yielded plenteous harvest, and the threshing-floor could hardly hold the high-piled sheaves. White is Ceres' proper colour; put on white robes at Ceres' festival; now no one wears dun-coloured wool.

ID. 13th

The Ides of April belong to Jupiter under the title of Victor: a temple was dedicated to him on that day. On that day, too, if I mistake not, Liberty began to win a hall well worthy of our people.

XVIII. KAL. MAI. 14th

On the next day steer for safe harbours, thou mariner: the wind from the west will be mixed with hail. Yet be that as it may, on that day, a day of hail, Caesar in battle-array smote hip and thigh his foes at Modena.

XVII. KAL. 15th

When the third day shall have dawned after the Ides of Venus, ye pontiffs, offer in sacrifice a pregnant (forda) cow. Forda is a cow with calf and fruitful, so called from ferendo ("bearing"): they think that fetus is derived from the same root. Now are the cattle big with young; the ground, too, is big with seed: to teeming Earth is given a teeming victim. Some are slain in the citadel of Jupiter; the wards (Curiae) get thrice ten cows, and are splashed and drenched with blood in plenty. But when the attendants have torn the calves from the bowels of their dams, and put the cut entrails on the smoking hearths, the eldest (Vestal) Virgin burns the calves in the fire, that their ashes may purify the people on the day of Pales. When Numa was king, the harvest did not answer to the labour bestowed on it; the husbandman was deceived, and his prayers were offered in vain. For at one time the year was dry, the north winds blowing cold; at another time the fields were rank with ceaseless rain; often at its first sprouting the crop balked its owner, and the light oats overran the choked soil, and the cattle dropped their unripe young before the time, and often the ewe perished in giving birth to her lamb. There was an ancient wood, long unprofaned by the axe, left sacred to the god of Maenalus. He to the quiet mind gave answers in the silence of the night. Here Numa sacrificed two ewes. The first fell in honour of Faunus, the second fell in honour of gentle Sleep: the fleeces of both were spread on the hard ground. Twice the king's unshorn head was sprinkled with water from a spring; twice he veiled his brows with beechen leaves. He refrained from the pleasures of love; no flesh might be served up to him at table; he might wear no ring on his fingers. Covered with a rough garment he laid him down on the fresh fleeces after worshipping the god in the appropriate words. Meantime, her clam brow wreathed with poppies, Night drew on, and in her train brought darkling dreams. Faunus was come, and setting his hard hoof on the sheep's fleeces uttered these words on the right side of the bed: "O King, thou must appease Earth by the death of two cows, let one heifer yield two lives in sacrifice." Fear banished sleep: Numa pondered the vision, and revolved in his mind the dark sayings and mysterious commands. His wife, the darling of the grove, extricated him from his doubts and said: "What is demanded of thee are the inwards of a pregnant cow." The inwards of a pregnant cow were offered; the year proved more fruitful, and earth and cattle yielded increase.

XVI. KAL. 16th

This day once on a time Cytherea commanded to go faster and hurried the galloping horses down hill, that on the next day the youthful Augustus might receive the sooner the title of emperor for his victories in war.

XV. KAL. 17th

But when you shall have counted the fourth day after the Ides, the Hyades will set in the sea that night.

XIII. KAL. 19th

When the third morn shall have risen after the disappearance of the Hyades, the horse will be in the Circus, each team in its separate stall. I must therefore explain the reason why foxes are let loose with torches tied to their burning backs. The land of Carseoli is cold and not suited for the growth of olives, but the soil is well adapted for corn. By it I journeyed on my way to the Pelignian land, my native country, a country small but always supplied with never-falling water. There I entered, as usual, the house of an old host; Phoebus had already unyoked his spent steeds. My host was wont to tell me many things, and among them matters which were to be embodied in my present work. "In yonder plain," said he, and he pointed it out, "a thrifty countrywoman had a small croft, she and her sturdy spouse. He tilled his own land, whether the work called for the plough, or the curved sickle, or the hoe. She would now sweep the cottage, supported on props; now she would set the eggs to be hatched under the plumage of the brooding hen; or she gathered green mallows or white mushrooms, or warmed the low hearth with welcome fire. And yet she diligently employed her hands at the loom, and armed herself against the threats of winter. She had a son, in childhood frolicsome, who now had seen twice five years and two more. He in a valley at the end of a willow copse caught a vixen fox which had carried off many farmyard fowls. The captive brute he wrapped in straw and hay, and set a light to her; she escaped the hands that would have burned her. Where she fled, she set fire to the crops that clothed the fields, and a breeze fanned the devouring flames. The incident is forgotten, but a memorial of it survives; for to this day a certain law of Carseoli forbids to name a fox; and to punish the species a fox is burned at the festival of Ceres, thus perishing itself in the way it destroyed the crops."

XII. KAL. 20th

When next day Memnon's saffron-robed mother on her rosy steeds shall come to view the far-spread lands, the sun departs from the sign of the leader of the woolly flock, the ram which betrayed Helle ; and when he has passed out of that sign, a larger victim meets him. Whether that victim is a cow or a bull, it is not easy to know; the fore part is visible, the hinder part is hid. But whether the sign be a bull or a cow, it enjoys this reward of love against the will of Juno.

XI. KAL. 21st

The night has gone, and Dawn comes up. I am called upon to sing of the Parilia, and not in vain shall be the call, if kindly Pales favours me. O kindly Pales, favour me when I sing of pastoral rites, if I pay my respects to thy festival. Sure it is that I have often brought with full hands the ashes of the calf and the beanstraws, chaste means of expiation. Sure it is that I have leaped over the flames ranged three in a row, and the moist laurel-bough has sprinkled water on me. The goddess is moved and favours the work I have in hand. My bark is launched; now fair winds fill my sails.

The people, go fetch materials for fumigation from the Virgin's altar. Vesta will give them; by Vesta's gift ye shall be pure. The materials for fumigation will be the blood of a horse and the ashes of a calf; the third thing will be the empty stalks of hard beans. Shepherd, do thou purify thy well-fed sheep at fall of twilight; first sprinkle the ground with water and sweep it with a broom. Deck the sheepfold with leaves and branches fastened to it; adorn the door and cover it with a long festoon. Make blue smoke with pure sulphur, and let the sheep, touched with the smoking sulphur, bleat. Burn wood of male olives and pine and savines, and let the singed laurel crackle in the midst of the hearth. And let a basket of millet accompany cakes of millet; the rural goddess particularly delights in that food. Add viands and a pail of milk, such as she loves; and when the viands have been cut up, pray to sylvan Pales, offering warm milk to her. Say, "O, take thought alike for the cattle and the cattle's masters; ward off from my stalls all harm, O let it flee away! If I have fed my sheep on holy ground, or sat me down under a sacred tree, and my sheep unwittingly have browsed on graves; if I have entered a forbidden grove, or the nymphs and the half-goat god have been put to flight at sight of me; if my pruning-knife has robbed a sacred copse of a shady bough, to fill a basket with leaves for sick sheep, pardon my fault. Count it not against me if I have sheltered my flock in a rustic shrine till the hail left off, and may I not suffer for having troubled the pools: forgive it, nymphs, if the trampling of hoofs has made your waters turbid. Do thou, goddess, appease for us the springs and their divinities; appease the gods dispersed through every grove. May we not see the Dryads, or Diana's baths, nor Faunus, when he lies in the fields at noon. Drive far away diseases: may men and beasts be hale, and hale too the sagacious pack of watch-dogs. May I drive home my flocks as numerous as they were at morn, nor sign as I bring back fleeces snatched from the wolf. Avert dire hunger. Let grass and leaves abound, and water both to wash and drink. Full udders may I milk; may my cheese bring in money; may the sieve of wicker-work give passage to the liquid whey: lustful be the ram, and may his mate conceive and bear, and many a lamb be in my fold. And let the wool grow so soft that it could not fret the skin of girls nor chafe the tenderest hands. May my prayer be granted, and we will year by year make great cakes for Pales, the shepherd's mistress." With these things is the goddess to be propitiated; these words pronounce times, facing the east, and wash thy hands in living dew. Then mayest thou set a wooden bowl to serve as mixer, and mayest quaff the snow-white milk and purple must; anon leap with nimble foot and straining thews across the burning heaps of crackling straw.

I have set forth the custom; it remains for me to tell its origin. The multitude of explanations creates doubt and thwarts me at the outset. Devouring fire purges all things and melts the dross from out the metals; therefore it purges the shepherd and the sheep. Or are we to suppose that, because all things are composed of opposite principles, fire and water – those two discordant deities – therefore our fathers did conjoin these elements and though meet to touch the body with fire and sprinkled water? Or did they deem these two important because they contain the source of life, the exile loses the use of them, and by them the bride is made a wife? Some suppose (though I can hardly do so) that the allusion is to Phaethon and Deucalion's flood. Some people also say that when shepherds were knocking stones together, a spark suddenly leaped forth; the first indeed was lost, but the second was caught in straw; is that the reason of the flame at the Parilia? Or is the custom rather based on the piety of Aeneas, whom, even in the hour of defeat, the fire allowed to pass unscathed? Or is it haply nearer the truth that, when Rome was founded, orders were given to transfer the household gods to the new houses, and in changing homes the husbandmen set fire to their country houses and to the cottages they were about to abandon, and that they and their cattle leaped through the flames? Which happens even to the present time on the birthday of Rome.

The subject of itself furnishes a theme for the poet. We have arrived at the foundation of the City. Great Quirinus, help me to sing thy deeds. Already the brother of Numitor had suffered punishment, and all the shepherd folk were subject to the twins. The twins agreed to draw the swains together and found a city; the doubt was which of the two should found it. Romulus said, "There needs no contest. Great faith is put in birds; let's try the birds." The proposal was accepted. One of the two betook him to the rocks of the wooded Palatine; the other hied at morn to the top of the Aventine. Remus saw six birds; Romulus saw twice six, one after the other: they stood by their compact, and Romulus was accorded the government of the city. A suitable day was chosen on which he should mark out the line of the walls with the plough. The festival of Pales was at hand; on that day the work began. A trench was dug down to the solid rock; fruits of the earth were thrown into the bottom of it, and with them earth fetched from the neighbouring soil. The trench was filled up with mould, and on the top was set an altar, and a fire was duly lit on a new hearth. Then pressing on the plough-handle he drew a furrow to mark out the line of the walls: the yoke was borne by a white cow and snow-white steer. The king spoke thus: "O Jupiter, and Father Mavors, and Mother Vesta, stand by me as I found the city! O take heed, all ye gods whom piety bids summon! Under your auspices may this my fabric rise! May it enjoy long life and dominion over a conquered world! May East and West be subject unto it!" So he prayed. Jupiter vouchsafed omens by thunder on the left and lightnings flashing in the leftward sky. Glad at the augury, the citizens laid the foundations, and in short time the new wall stood. The work was urged on by Celer, whom Romulus himself had named and said, "Celer, be this thy are; let no man cross the walls nor the trench which the share hath made: who dares to do so, put him to death." Ignorant of this, Remus began to mock the lowly walls and say, "Shall these protect the people?" And straightway he leaped across them. Instantly Celer struck the rash man with a shovel. Covered with blood, Remus sank on the stony ground. When the king heard of this, he smothered the springing tears and kept his grief locked up within his breast. He would not weep in public; he set an example of fortitude, and "So fare," quoth he, "the foe who shall cross my walls." Yet he granted funeral honours, and could no longer bear to check his tears, and the affection which he had dissembled was plain to see. When they set down the bier, he gave it a last kiss, and said, "Snatched from thy brother, loath to part, brother, farewell!" With that he anointed the body before committing it to the flames. Faustulus and Acca, her mournful hair unbound, did the same. Then the Quirites, though not yet known by that name, wept for the youth, and last of all a light was put the pyre, wet with their tears. A city arose destined to set its victorious foot upon the neck of the whole earth; who at that time could have believed such a prophecy? Rule the universe, O Rome, and mayest thou often have several of that name, and whenso'er thou standest sublime in a conquered world, may all else reach not up to thy shoulders!

IX. KAL. 23rd

I have told of Pales, I will now tell of the festival of the Vinalia; but there is one day interposed between the two. Ye common wenches, celebrate the divinity of Venus: Venus favours the earnings of ladies of a liberal profession. Offer incense and pray for beauty and popular favour; pray to be charming and witty; give to the Queen her own myrtle and the mint she loves, and bands or rushes hid in clustered roses. Now is the time to throng her temple next the Colline gate; the temple takes its name from the Sicilian hill. When Claudius carried Arethusian Syracuse by force of arms, and captured thee, too, Eryx, in war, Venus was transferred to Rome in obedience to an oracle of the long-lived Sibyl, and chose to be worshipped in the city of her offspring. You ask, Why then do they call the Vinalia a festival of Venus? And why does that day belong to Jupiter? There was war to decide whether Turnus or Aeneas should be the husband of Latin Amata's daughter: Turnus sued the help of the Etruscans. Mezentius was famous and a haughty man-at-arms; might was he on horseback, but mightier still on foot. Turnus and the Rutulians attempted to win him to their side. To these overtures the Tuscan chief thus replied: "My valour costs me dear. Witness my wounds and those weapons which oft I have bedabbled with my blood. You ask my help: divide with me the next new wine from your vats - surely no great reward. Delay there need be none: 'tis yours to give, and mine to conquer. How would Aeneas wish you had refused my suit!" The Rutulians consented. Mezentius donned his arms, Aeneas donned them too, and thus he spoke to Jupiter. "The foe has pledged his vintage to the Tyrrhenian king; Jupiter, thou shalt have the new wine from the Latin vines." The better vows prevailed: huge Mezentius fell, and with his breast indignant smote the ground. Autumn came round, stained with the trodden grapes; the wine that was his due was justly paid to Jupiter. Hence the day is called the Vinalia: Jupiter claims it for his own, and loves to be present at his own feast.

VII. KAL. 25th

When April shall have six days left, the season of spring will be in mid course, and in vain will you look for the Ram of Helle, daughter of Athamas ; the rains will be your sign, and the constellation of the Dog will rise.

On that day, as I was returning from Nomentum to Rome, a white-robed crowd clogged the middle of the road. A flamen was on his way to the grove of ancient Mildew (Robigo), to throw the entrails of a dog and the entrails of a sheep into the flames. Straightway I went up to him to inform myself of the rite. Thy flamen, O Quirinus, pronounced these words: "Thou scaly Mildew, spare the sprouting corn, and let the smooth top quiver on the surface of the ground. O let the crops, nursed by the stars of a propitious sky, grow till they are ripe for the sickle. No feeble power is thine: the corn on which thou hast set thy mark, the sad husbandman gives up for lost. Nor winds, nor showers, nor glistening frost, that nips the fallow corn, harm it so much as when the sun warms the wet stalks; then, dread goddess, is the hour to wreak thy wrath. O spare, I pray, and take thy scabby hands from off the harvest! Harm not the tilth; 'tis enough that thou hast the power to harm. Grip not the tender crops, but rather grip the hard iron. Forestall the destroyer. Better that thou shouldst gnaw at swords and baneful weapons. There is no need of them: the world is at peace. Now let the rustic gear, the rakes, and the hard hoe, and the curved share be burnished bright; but let rust defile the arms, and when one essays to draw the sword from the scabbard, let him feel it stick from long disuse. But do not thou profane the corn, and ever may the husbandman be able to pay his vows to thee in thine absence." So he spoke. On his right hand hung a napkin with a loose nap, and he had a bowl of wine and a casket of incense. The incense, and wine, and sheep's guts, and the foul entrails of a filthy dog, he put upon the hearth - we saw him do it. Then to me he said, "Thou askest why an unwonted victim is assigned to these rites?" Indeed, I had asked the question. "Learn the cause," the flamen said. "There is a Dog (they call it the Icarian dog), and when that constellation rises the earth is parched and dry, and the crop ripens too soon. This dog is put on the altar instead of the starry dog, and the only reason why this happens is his name."

IV. PR. KAL. 28th - 30th

When the spouse of Tithonus has left the brother of Phrygian Assaracus, and thrice has lifted up her radiant light in the vast firmament, there comes a goddess decked with garlands of a thousand varied flowers, and the stage enjoys a customary license of mirth. The rites of Flora also extend into the Kalends of May. Then I will resume the theme: now a loftier task is laid upon me. O Vesta, take thy day! Vesta has been received in the home of her kinsman: so have the Fathers righteously decreed. Phoebus owns part of the house; another part has been given up to Vesta; what remains is occupied by Caesar himself. Long live the laurels of the Palatine! Long live the house wreathed with oaken boughs! A single house holds three eternal gods.

BOOK V

You ask whence I suppose the name of the month of May to be derived. The reason is not quite clearly known to me. As a wayfarer stands in doubt, and knows not which way to go, when he sees roads in all directions, so, because it is possible to assign different reasons, I know not where to turn; the very abundance of choice is an embarrassment. Declare to me, ye who haunt the springs of Aganippian Hippocrene, those dear traces of the Medusaeon steed. The goddesses disagreed; of them Polyhymnia began the first; the others were silent, and noted her saying in their mind. "After chaos, as soon as the three elements were given to the world, and the whole creation resolved itself into new species, the earth subsided by its own weight, and drew the seas after it, but the sky was borne to the highest regions by its own lightness; the sun, too, not checked by gravity, and the stars, and you, ye horses of the moon, ye bounded high. But for a long time neither did Earth yield pride of place to Sky, nor did the other heavenly bodies to Phoebus; their honours were all equal. Often someone of the common sort of gods would dare to sit upon the throne which thou, Saturn, didst own; not one of the upstart deities took the outer side of Ocean, and Themis was often relegated to the lowest place, until Honour and comely Reverence with her calm look united in lawful wedlock. From them sprang Majesty, then the goddess reckons her parents, she who became great on the very day she was born. Without delay she took her seat high in the midst of Olympus, a golden figure far seen in purple vest. With her sat Modesty and Fear. You might see every divinity modelling his aspect upon hers. Straightway respect for dignities made its way into their minds; the worthy got their due, and nobody though much of himself. This state of things in heaven lasted for many a year, till fate banished the elder god from heaven's citadel. Earth brought forth the Giants, a fierce brood, enormous monsters, who durst assault Jove's mansion; she gave them a thousand hands, and snakes for legs, and said, 'Take arms against the great gods.' They set themselves to pile up the mountains to the topmost stars and to harass great Jupiter in war. From heaven's citadel Jupiter hurled thunderbolts and turned the ponderous weights upon their movers. These weapons of the gods protected Majesty well; she survived and has been worshipped ever since. Hence she sits beside Jupiter, she is Jupiter's most faithful guardian: she assures to him his sceptre's peaceful tenure. She came also to earth. Romulus and Numa worshipped her, and other after them, each in his time. She keeps fathers and mothers in honour due; she bears boys and maidens company; she enhances the lictor's rods and the ivory chair of office; she rides aloft in triumph on the festooned steeds." Polyhymnia ended. Clio and Thalia, mistress of the curved lyre, approved her words. Urania took up the tale; all kept silence and not a voice but hers could be heard. "Great was of old the reverence for the hoary head, and wrinkled old was valued at its true worth. Martial exploits and doughty wars were work for youths, who in defence of their own gods kept watch and ward. In strength unequal, and for arms unfit, age often stood the country in good stead by its advice. The senate-house was then open only to men of mature years, and the very name of senate signifies a ripe old age. The elders legislated for the people, and certain laws defined the age at which office might be sought. An elder man used to walk between younger men, at which they did not repine, and if he had only one companion, the elder walked on the inner side. Who would dare to talk bawdy in the presence of an old man? Old age conferred a right of censorship. This Romulus perceived, and on the men of his choice he bestowed the title of Fathers: on them the government of the new city was conferred. Hence I incline to think that the elders (maiores) gave their own name to the month of May: they considered the interests of their own class. And Numitor may have said, 'Romulus, grant this month to the old men,' and the grandson may not have been able to resist his grandsire. No slight proof of the proposed honour is furnished by the next month, the month of June, which is named after young men (iuvenes)."

Then Calliope, her unkempt hair bound up with ivy, thus began, first of her choir: "Tethys, the Titaness, who wedded of old by Ocean, who encompasses the earth, far as it stretches, with his flowing waters. Their daughter Pelione, as report has it, was united to Atlas, who upholds the sky, and she gave birth to the Pleiads. Of them Maia is said to have surpassed her sisters in beauty and to have lain with Sovran Jove. She on the ridge of Mount Cyllene, wooded with cypresses, gave birth to him who speeds through the air on winged foot. Him the Arcadians, and hurrying Ladon, and huge Maenalus - that land accounted older than the moon - worship with honours due. An exile from Arcadia, Evander came to the Latin fields and brought his gods on shipboard. On the spot where now stands Rome, the capital of the world, there were trees, and grass, and a few sheep, and here and there a cottage. When they had come hither, 'Halt ye,' said his prophetic mother, 'for that rural scene will be place of empire.' The Nonacrian hero obeyed the prophetess his mother, and halted as a stranger in a foreign land. He taught the natives many sacred rites, but first of all the rites of two-horned Faunus and of the wing-footed god. Faunus, thou half-goat god, thou art worshipped by the Luperci in their loin-cloths what time the severed hides purify the crowded streets. But thou didst bestow thy mother's name upon the month, O thou inventor of the curved lyre, patron of thieves. Nor was this the first proof thou didst give of thine affection: thou art supposed to have given to the lyre seven strings, the number of the Pleiads." Calliopea ended in her turn, and was praised by the voices of her sisters. What ma I to do? Each side has the same number of votes. May the favour of all the Muses alike attend me, and let me never praise anyone of them more or less than the rest.

KAL. MAI. 1st

Begin the work with Jupiter. On the first night is visible the star that tended the cradle of Jupiter ; the rainy sign of the Olenian She-goat rises. She has her place in the sky as a reward for the milk she gave the babe. The Naiad Amalthea, famous on the Cretan Mount Ida, is said to have hidden Jupiter in the woods. She owned a she-goat, conspicuous among the Dictaeon flocks, the fair dam of two kids; her airy horns bent over on her back; her udder was such as the nurse of Jove might have. She suckled the god. But she broke a horn on a tree, and was short of half her charm. The nymph picked it up, wrapped it in fresh herds, and carried it, full of fruit, to the lips of Jove. He, when he had gained the kingdom of heaven and sat on his father's throne, and there was nothing greater than unconquered Jove, made his nurse and her horn of plenty into stars: the horn still keeps its mistress' name.

The Kalends of May witnessed the foundation of an altar to the Guardian Lares, together with small images of the gods. Curius indeed had vowed them, but length of time destroys many things, and age prolonged wears out a stone. The reason for the epithet applied to them is that they guard all things by their eyes. They also stand for us, and preside over the City walls, and they are present and bring us aid. But a dog, carved out of the same stone, used to stand before their feet. What was the reason for its standing with the Lar? Both guard the house: both are faithful to their master: cross-roads are dear to the god, cross-roads are dear to dogs: the Lar and Diana's pack give chase to thieves; and wakeful are the Lares, and wakeful too are dogs. I sought for the images of the twin gods, but by the force of yearlong time they had decayed. In the City there are a thousand Lares, and the Genius of the chief, who handed them over to the public; the parishes worship the three divities.

Whither do I stray? The month of August has a rightful claim to that subject of my verse: meantime the Good Goddess must be the theme of my song. There is a natural knoll, which gives its name to the place; they call it the Rock ; it forms a good part of the hill. On it Remus took his stand in vain, what time, birds of the Palatine, ye did vouchsafe the first omens to his brother. There, on the gentle slope of the ridge, the Senate founded a temple which abhors the eyes of males. It was dedicated to an heiress of the ancient name of Clausi, who in her virgin body had never known a man ; Livia restored it, that she might imitate her husband and follow him in everything.

VI. NON. 2nd

When next Hyperion's daughter on the steeds of morn shall lift her rosy lamp, and the stars are put to flight, the cold north-west wind will sleek the topmost corn-ears, and white sails will put out from Calabrian waters. But no sooner shall the dusk of twilight lead on the night, than no single part of the whole flock of the Hyades will be invisible. The head of the Bull sparkles radiant with seven flames, which the Grecian sailor calls the Hyades after the word for rain (hyein). Some think that they nursed Bacchus; some believe that they are the granddaughters of Tethys and old Ocean. Not yet did Atlas stand bearing the burden of Olympus upon his shoulders when Hyas was born, of loveliness far-seen; to him and to the nymphs did Aethra, of the stock of Ocean, give birth in due time, but Hyas was the elder. While the down was fresh upon his cheeks, he was the terror of the bucks that shied at his snares, and he was glad to bag a hare. But when with his years his manly spirit grew, he dared to close with boars and shaggy lioness, and while he sought out the lair and the whelps of a lioness with young, he himself fell a blood-stained prey to the Libyan brute. For Hyas his mother wept, and for Hyas his sad sisters, and Atlas, soon to bow his neck to the burden of the pole, yet the love of the sisters exceeded that of both parents: it won for them a place in the sky, but Hyas gave them their name (of Hyades).

“Come, Mother of Flowers, that we may honour thee with merry games; last month I put off giving thee thy due. Thou dost being in April and passest into the time of May ; the one month claims thee as it flies, the other as it comes. Since the borders of the months are thine and appertain to thee, either of the two is a fitting time to sing thy praises. The games of the circus and the victor’s palm, acclaimed by the spectators, fall in this month; let my song run side by side with the shows in the circus. Tell me thyself who thou art; the opinion of men is fallacious; thou wilt be the best voucher of thine own name.”

So I spoke, and the goddess answered my question thus, and while she spoke, her lips breathed vernal roses: “I who now am called Flora was formerly Chloris: a Greek letter of my name is corrupted in the Latin speech. Chloris I was, a nymph of the happy fields where, as you have heard, dwelt fortunate men of old. Modesty shrinks from describing my figure; but it procured the hand of a god for my mother’s daughter. ‘Twas spring, and I was roaming; Zephyr caught sight of me: I retired; he pursued and I fled; but he was the stronger, and Boreas had given his brother full right of rape by daring to carry off the prize from the house of Erechtheus. However, he made amends for his violence by giving me the name of bride, and in my marriage-bed I have naught to complain of. I enjoy perpetual spring; most buxom is the year ever; ever the tree is clothed with leaves, the ground with pasture. In the fields that are my dower, I have a fruitful garden, fanned by the breeze and watered by a spring of running water. This garden my husband filled with noble flowers and said, 'Goddess, be queen of flowers.' Oft did I wish to count the colours in the beds, but could not; the number was past counting. Soon as the dewy rime is shaken from the leaves, and the varied foliage is warmed by the sunbeams, the Hours assemble, clad in dappled weeds, and cull my gifts in light baskets. Straightway the Graces draw near, and twine garlands and wreaths to bind their heavenly hair. I was the first to scatter new seeds among the countless peoples; till then the earth had been of but one colour. I was the first to make a flower out of Therapnaean blood, and on its petals the lament remains inscribed. Thou, too, Narcissus, hast a name in the trim gardens, unhappy thou in that thou hadst not a double of thyself. What need to tell of Crocus, and Attis, and the son of Cinyras, from whose wounds by my art doth beauty spring?

Mars, too, was brought to birth my contrivance; perhaps you do not know it, and I pray that Jupiter, who thus far knows it not, may never know it. Holy Juno grieved that Jupiter had not needed her services when Minerva was born without a mother. She went to complain of her husband's doings to Ocean; tired by the journey, she halted at my door. As soon as I set eyes on her, 'What brings thee here,' I said, 'daughter of Saturn?' She set forth her journey's goal, adding its reason. I consoled her with friendly words. 'My grief,' quoth she, 'is not to be assuaged with words. If Jupiter has become a father without the use of a wife, and unites both titles in his single person, why should I despair of becoming a mother without a husband, and of bringing forth without contact with a man, always supposing that I am chaste? I will try all the drugs in the wide world, and I will explore the seas and the depths of Tartarus.' Her speech would have flowed on, but on my face there was a sudden look of doubt. 'Thou seemest, nymph,' said she, 'the to have some power to help me.' Thrice did I wish to promise help, but thrice my tongue was tied: the anger of great Jupiter filled me with fear. 'Help me, I pray,' she said, 'the helper's name will be kept secret, and I will call on the divinity of the Stygian water to be my witness. 'Thy wish,' quoth I, 'will be accomplished by a flower that was sent me from the fields of Olenus. It is the only flower of the kind in my garden.' He who gave it me said, 'Touch also with this a barren heifer; she will be a mother.' I touched, and without delay she was a mother. Straightway I plucked with my thumb the clinging flower and touched Juno, and she conceived when it touched her bosom. And now being with child, she passed to Thrace and left the shores of the Propontis; her wish was granted, and Mars was born. In memory of the birth he owed to me, he said, 'Do thou also have a place in the city of Romulus.'

"Perhaps you may think that I am queen only of dainty garlands; but my divinity has to do also with the tilled fields. If the crops have blossomed well, the threshing-floor will be piled high; if the vines have blossomed well, there will be wine; if the olive-trees have blossomed well, most buxom will be the year; and the fruitage will be according to the time of blossoming. If once the blossom is nipped, the vetches and beans wither, and thy lentils, O Nile that comest from afar, do likewise wither. Wines also bloom, laboriously stored in great cellars, and a scum covers their surface in the jars. Honey is my gift. 'Tis I who call the winged creatures, which yield honey, to the violet, and the clover, and the grey thyme. ['Tis I, too, who discharge the same function when in youthful years spirits run riot and bodies are robust.]"

I silently admired her as she spoke thus. But she said, "Thou art free to learn the answers to any questions thou mayest put." "Say, goddess," I replied, "what is the origin of the games." Scarce had I ended when she answered me. "The other instruments of luxury were not yet in vogue: the rich man owned either cattle or broad lands; hence came the name for rich, and hence the name for money itself. But already some amassed wealth from unlawful sources: it had become a custom to graze the public pastures, the thing was suffered long, and no penalty was exacted. Common folk had no champion to protect their share in public property; and at last it was deemed the sign of a poor spirit in a man to graze his cattle on his own land. Such licence was brought to the notice of the plebeian aediles, the Publicii ; till then men's hearts had failed them. The case was tried before the people: the guilty were fined: the champions were praised for their public spirit. Part of the fine was given to me; and the winners of the suit instituted new games with great applause. With part of the fine they contracted for making a way up the slope, which then was a steep rock: now it is a serviceable road, and they call it the Publician road."

I had thought that the shows were annual; the goddess denied it and added to her former discourse a second speech. "We, too, are touched by honour; we delight in festivals and altars; we heavenly beings are a greedy gang. Often by sinning has a man disposed the gods against him, and a sacrificial victim has been a sop for crimes. Often have I seen Jupiter, when he was just about to launch his thunderbolts, hold his hand on the receipt of incense. But if we are neglected, we avenge the wrong by heavenly penalties, and our wrath exceeds just bounds. Remember Thestiades : he was burnt by flames afar; the reason was that no fire blazed on Phoebe's altar. Remember Tantalides : the same goddess detained the fleet; she a virgin, yet she twice avenged her slighted hearths. Unhappy Hippolytus, fain wouldst thou have worshipped Dione when thy scared steeds were rending thee asunder! 'Twere long to tell of cases of forgetfulness redressed by forfeitures. I myself was once neglected by the Roman senate. What was I to do? By what could I show my resentment? What punishment exact for the slight put on me? In my gloom I relinquished my office. I guarded not the countryside, and the fruitful garden was naught to me. The lilies had dropped; you might see the violets withering, and the tendrils of the crimson saffron languishing. Often Zephyrus said to me, 'Spoil not thine own dowry.' But my dowry was worthless in my sight. The olive-trees were in blossom; the wanton winds blighted them: the crops were in blossom; the crop was blasted by the hail: the vines were promising; the sky grew black under the south wind, and the leaves were shaken down by a sudden shower. I did not will it so, nor am I cruel in my anger; but I did not care to ward off these ills. The senate assembled and voted an annual festival to my divinity if the year should prove fruitful. I accepted the vow. The consuls Laenas and Postumius celebrated the games which had been vowed to me."

I was about to ask why these games are marked by greater wantonness and broader jests; but it occurred to me that the divinity is not strait-laced, and that the gifts she brings lend themselves to delights. The brows of wassailers are wreathed with stitched garlands, and the polished table is buried under a shower of roses. Maudlin the guest dances, his hair bound with linden bark, and all unwitting plies the tipsy art. Maudlin the lover sings at the hard threshold of his lady fair: soft garlands crown his perfumed locks. No serious business does he do whose brow is garlanded; no water of the running brook is quaffed by such as twine their hair with flowers: so long as they stream, Achelous, was dashed with no juice of grapes, none cared to pluck the rose. Bacchus loves flowers; that he delights in a floral crown, you may know from Ariadne's clustered stars. A rakish stage fits Flora well; she is not, believe me she is not, to be counted among your buskined goddesses. The reason why a crowd of drabs frequents these games is not hard to discover. She is none of your glum, none of your high-flown ones: she wishes her rites to be open to the common herd; and she warns us to use life's flower, while it still blooms: for the thorn, she reminds us, is flouted when the roses have fallen away.

But why is it that whereas white robes are given out at the festival of Ceres, Flora is neatly clad in attire of many colours? Is it because the harvest whitens when the ears are ripe, but flowers are of every hue and every shape? She nodded assent and at the motion of her tresses the flowers dropped down, as falls the rose cast by a hand upon a table.

There yet remained the lights, the reason whereof escaped me; when the goddess thus removed my doubts: "Lights are thought to befit my days either because the fields do glow with purple flowers; or because neither flowers nor flames are of a dull colour, and the splendour of both attracts the eye; or because nocturnal licence befits my revels. The third reason comes nearest the truth."

"There is yet a small matter about which it remains, with thy leave, to put a question." "thou hast my leave." Said she. "Why, instead of Libyan lionesses, are unwarlike roes and shy hares pent in thy nets?" She replied that her province was not woods, but gardens and fields, where no fierce beast may come.

Her tale was ended, and she vanished into thin air. A fragrance lingered; you could know a goddess had been there. That Naso's lay may bloom for aye, O strew, I pray thee, goddess, thy boons upon my breast!

V. NON. 34rd.

In less than four nights the semi-human Chiron, who is compounded with the body of a tawny horse, will put forth his stars. Pelion is a mountain of Haemonia which looks southward: its top is green with pinewoods: the rest is draped with oaks. It was the home of Philyra's son. There remains an ancient rocky cave, which they say was inhabited by the righteous old man. He is believed to have employed, in strumming the lyre, those hands which were one day to send Hector to death. Alcides had come after accomplishing a part of his labours, and little but the last orders remained for the hero to obey. You might see standing by chance together the two masters of the fate of Troy, on the one side the boyish descendant of Aeacus, on the other the son of Jupiter. The Philyrean hero received Hercules hospitably and asked the reason of his coming, and Hercules informed him. Meantime Chiron looked askance at the club and lion's skin and said, "Man worthy of those arms, and arms worthy the man!" Nor could Achilles keep his hands from daring to touch the skin all shaggy with bristles. And while the old man fingered the shafts clotted with poison, one of the arrows fell out of the quiver and stuck in his left foot. Chiron groaned and drew the steel from his body; Alcides groaned too, and so did the Haemonian boy. The centaur himself, however, compounded herbs gathered on the Pagasaeon hills and tended the wound with diverse remedies; but the gnawing poison defied all remedies, and the bane soaked into the bones and the whole body. The blood of the Lernaean hydra, mingled with the Centaur's blood, left no time for rescue. Achilles, bathed in tears, stood before him as before a father; so would he have wept for Peleus at he point of death. Often he fondled the feeble hands with his own loving hands; the teacher reaped the reward of the character he had moulded. Often Achilles kissed him, and often said to him as he lay there, "Live, I pray thee, and do not forsake me, dear father." The ninth day was come when thou, most righteous Chiron, didst gird thy body with twice seven stars.

III. NON. 5th

The curved Lyre would wish to follow the Centaur, but the road is not yet clear. The third night will be the proper time.

PR. NON. 6th

The Scorpion will be visible from its middle in the sky, when we say that to-morrow the Nones will dawn.

VII. ID 9th

When from that day the Evening Star shall thrice have shown his beauteous face, and thrice the vanquished stars shall have retreated before Phoebus, there will be celebrated an olden rite, the nocturnal Lemuria: it will bring offerings to the silent ghosts. The year was formerly shorter, and the pious rites of purification (februa) were unknown, and thou, two-headed Janus, wast not the leader of the months. Yet even then people brought gifts to the ashes of the dead, as their due, and the grandson paid his respects to the tomb of his buried grandsire. It was the month of May, so named after our forefathers (maiores), and it still retains part of the ancient custom. When midnight has come and lends silence to sleep, and dogs and all ye varied fowls are hushed, the worshipper who bears the olden rite in mind and fears the gods arises; no knots constrict his feet; and he makes a sign with his thumb in the middle of his closed fingers, lest in his silence an unsubstantial shade should meet him. And after washing his hands clean in spring water, he turns, and first he receives black beans and throws them away with face averted; but while he throws them, he says: "These I cast; with these beans I redeem me and min." This he says nine times, without looking back: the shade is thought to gather the beans, and to follow unseen behind. Again he touches water, and clashes Temesan bronze, and asks the shade to go out of his house. When he has said nine times, "Ghost of my fathers, go forth!" he looks back, and thinks that he has duly performed the sacred rites.

Why the day was called Lemuria, and what is the origin of the name, escapes me; it is for some god to discover it. Son of the Pleiad, thou reverend master of the puissant wand, inform me: oft hast thou seen the palace of the Stygian Jove. At my prayer the Bearer of the Herald's Staff (Caducifer) was come. Learn the cause of the name; the god himself made it known. When Romulus had buried his brother's ghost in the grave, and the obsequies had been paid to the too nimble Remus, unhappy Faustulus and Acca, with streaming hair, sprinkled the burnt bones with their tears. Then at twilight's fall they sadly took the homeward way, and flung themselves on their hard couch, just as it was. The gory ghost of Remus seemed to stand at the bedside and to speak these words in a faint murmur: "Look on me, who shared the half, the full half of your tender care, behold what I am come to, and what I was of late! A little while ago I might have been the foremost of my people, if but the birds had assigned the throne to me. Now I am an empty wrath, escaped from the flames of the pyre; that is all that remains of the once great Remus. Alas, where is my father Mars? If only you spoke the truth, and it was he who sent the wild beast's dugs to suckle the abandoned babes. A citizen's rash hand undid him whom the she-wolf saved; O how far more merciful was she! Ferocious Celer, mayest thou yield up thy cruel soul through wounds, and pass like me all bloody underneath the earth! My brother willed not this: his love's a match for mine: he let fall upon my death - 'twas all he could - his tears. Pray him by your tears, by your fosterage, that he would celebrate a day by signal honour done to me." As the ghost gave this charge, they yearned to embrace him and stretched forth their arms; the slippery shade escaped the clasping hands. When the vision fled and carried slumber with it, the pair reported to the king his brother's words. Romulus complied, and gave the name Remuria to the day on which due worship is paid to buried ancestors. In the course of ages the rough letter, which stood at the beginning of the name, was changed into the smooth; and soon the souls of the silent multitude were also called Lemures: that is the meaning of the word, that is the force of the expression. But the ancients shut the temples on these days, as even now you see them closed at the season sacred to the dead. The times are unsuitable for the marriage both of a widow and a maid: she who marries then, will not live long. For the same reason, if you give weight to proverbs, the people say bad women wed in May. But these three festivals fall about the same time, though not on three consecutive days.

V. ID. 11th

If you look for Boeotian Orion in the middle of these three days, you will be disappointed. I must now sing of the cause of the constellation. Jupiter, and his brother who reigns in the deep sea, and Mercury, were journeying together. It was the time when the yoked kine draw home the upturned plough, and the lamb lies down and drinks the milk of the full ewe. An old man Hyrieus, who cultivated a tiny farm, chanced to see them as he stood before his little cottage; and thus he spoke: "Long is the way, but short the hours of daylight left, and my door is open to strangers." He enforced his words by a look, and again invited them. They accepted the offer and dissembled their divinity. They passed beneath the old man's roof, begrimed with black smoke; a little fire was glimmering in the log of yesterday. He knelt and blew up the flames with his breath, and drawing forth the stumps of torches he chopped them up. Two pipkins stood on the fire; the lesser contained beans, the other kitchen herbs; both boiled, each under the pressure of its lid. While he waited, he served out red wine with shaky hand. The god of the sea received the first cup. When he had drained it, "Now serve the drink," said he, "to Jupiter in order." At the word Jupiter the old man paled. When he recovered himself, he sacrificed the ox that ploughed his poor land, and he roasted it in a great fire; and the wine which s a boy he had laid up in his early years, he brought forth stored in its smoky jar. And straightway they reclined on mattresses stuffed with river sedge and covered with linen, but lowly still. The table shone, now with the viands, now with the wine set down on it: the bowl was of red earthenware, the cups were beechen wood. Quoth Jupiter: "If thou has any fancy, choose: all will be thine." The clam old man thus spoke: "I had a dear wife, whose love I won in the flower of early youth. Where is she now? you ask. The urn her ashes holds. To her I swore, an called you gods to witness, 'Thou shalt be my only spouse.' I gave my word, and I keep it. But a different wish is mine: I would be, not a husband, but a father." All the gods assented; all took their stand at the bullock's hide - I am ashamed to describe what followed - then they covered the reeking hide by throwing earth on it: when ten months had passed, a boy was born. Him Hyrieus called Orion on account of the mode of his begetting : the first letter of his name has lost its ancient sound. He grew to an enormous size; the Delian goddess took him to be her companion; he was her guardian, he her attendant. Heedless words excite the wrath of gods. "There is no wild beast," said he, "which I cannot master." Earth egged on a scorpion: its mission was to attack the Goddess Mother of Twins with its hooked fangs. Orion threw himself in the way. Latona set him among the shining stars, and said, "Take thy well-earned reward."

IV. ID. 12th

But why do Orion and the other stars haste to withdraw from the sky? And why does night shorten her course? Why does the bright day, heralded by the Morning Star, raise its radiant light faster than usual from the watery main? Do I err, or was there a clash of arms? I err not, there was a clash of arms, Mars comes, and at his coming he gave the sign of war. The Avenger descends himself from heaven to behold his own honours and his splendid temple in the forum of Augustus. The god is huge, and so is the structure: no otherwise ought Mars to dwell in his son's city. That shrine is worthy of trophies won from giants; from its might the Marching God fitly open his fierce campaigns, whether an impious foe shall assail us from the eastern world or whether another will have to be vanquished where the sun goes down. The god of arms surveys the pinnacles of the lofty edifice, and approves that the highest places should be filled by the unconquered gods. He surveys on the doors weapons of diverse shapes, and arms of lands subdued by his soldiery. On this side he sees Aeneas laden with his dear burden, and many an ancestor of the noble Julian line. On the other side he sees Romulus carrying on his shoulders the arms of the conquered leader, and their famous deeds inscribed beneath the statues arranged in order. He beholds, too, the name of Augustus on the front of the temple; and the building seems to him still greater, when he reads the name of Caesar. Augustus has vowed it in his youth at the time when he took up arms in duty's cause. Deeds so great were worthy to inaugurate a prince's reign. While the loyal troops stood on the one side, and the conspirators on the other, he stretched forth his hands and spoke these words: "If my father, Vesta's priest, is my warrant for waging war, and I do now prepare to avenge both his divinity and hers, come, Mars, and glut the sword with knavish blood, and grant thy favour to the better cause. Thou shalt receive a temple, and shalt be called Avenger, when victory is mine." So he vowed, and returned rejoicing from the routing of the foe. Nor is he content to have earned once for all the surname of Avenger for Mars: he tracks down the standards detained by the hands of the Parthians. These were a nation whom their plains, their horses, and their arrows rendered safe, and surrounding rivers made inaccessible. The pride of the nation had been fostered by the deaths of Crassus and his son, when soldiers, general, and standards perished together. The Parthians kept the Roman standards, the glory of war, and a foe was the standard-bearer of the Roman eagle. That shame would have endured till now, had not Ausonia's empire been guarded by Caesar's powerful arms. He put an end to the old reproach, to the disgrace of the whole generation: the recovered standards knew their true owners again. What now availed thee, thou Parthian, the arrows thou art wont to shoot behind thy back? What availed thy deserts? What the use of the fleet steed? Thou bringest back the eagles; thou tenderest, too, thy conquered bows. Now thou hast no tokens of our shame. Justly have the temple and the title of Avenger been given to the god, who has earned that title twice over; and the well-deserved honour has paid the debt incurred by the vow. Quirites, celebrate the solemn games in the Circus: the stage seems little to befit a valiant god.

III. ID. 13th

You will behold all the Pleiads, even the whole bevy of sisters, when there shall be one night remaining before the Ides. Then summer begins, as I learn from sure authorities, and the season of warm spring comes to an end.

PR. ID. 14th

The day before the Ides marks the time when the Bull lifts his starry front. This constellation is explained by a familiar tale. Jupiter in the shape of a bull offered his back to the Tyrian maid and wore horns on his false brow. She held the bull's mane in her right hand, her drapery in her left; and her very fear lent her fresh grace. The breeze fills the robe on her bosom, its stirs her yellow hair; Sidonian damsel, thus indeed it became thee to meet the gaze of Jove. Oft did she withdraw her girlish soles from the sea, and feared the contact of the dashing wave; often the god knowingly plunged his back into the billows, that she might cling the closer to his neck. On reaching the shore, Jupiter stood without any horns, and the bull was turned into the god. The bull passed into the sky: thou, Sidonian damsel, wast got with child by Jupiter, and a third part of the earth doth bear thy name. Others say that this constellation is the Pharian heifer, which from a human being was made a cow, and from a cow was made a goddess.

Then, too, the Virgin is wont to throw the rush-made effigies of ancient men from the oaken bridge. He who believes that after sixty years men were put to death, accuses our forefathers of a wicked crime. There is an old tradition, that when the land was called Saturnia those words were spoken by soothsaying Jove: "Do ye cast into the water of the Tuscan river two of the people as a sacrifice to the Ancient who bears the sickle." The gloomy rite was performed, so runs the tale, in the Leucadian manner every year, until the Tiryinthian hero came to these fields; he cast men of straw into the water, and now dummies are thrown after the example set by Hercules. Some think that the young men used to hurl the feeble old men from the bridges, in order that they themselves alone should have the vote. O Tiber, inform me of the truth: thy bank is older than the City: thou canst well know the origin of the rite. The Tiber raised his reed-crowned head from the mid channel, and opened his hoarse mouth to utter these words: "These regions I have seen when they were solitary grass-lands without any city walls: scattered kin pastured on either bank; and I, the Tiber, whom the nations now both know and fear, was then a thing to be despised even by cattle. You often hear mention of the name of Arcadian Evander ; he came from far and churned my waters with his oars. Alcides also came, attended by a troop of Greeks. At that time, if I remember aright, my name was Albula. The Pallantian hero received him hospitably; and Cacus got at last the punishment he deserved. The victorious Hercules departed and carried off with him the kine, the booty he had taken from Erythea. But his companions refused to go farther: a great part of them had come from Argos, which they abandoned. On these hills they set their hope and their home; yet were they often touched by the sweet love of their native land, and one of them in dying gave this brief charge: 'Throw me into the Tiber, that, borne upon his waves, my empty dust may pass to the Inachian shore.' His heir disliked the charge of sepulture thus laid on him: the dead stranger was buried in Ausonian ground, and an effigy of rushes was thrown into the Tiber in stead of him, that it might return to his Greek home across the waters wide." Thus far did Tiber speak, then passed into the dripping cave of living rock: ye nimble waters checked your flow.

IDUS 15th

Come, thou famed grandson of Atlas, thou whom of old upon the Arcadian mountains one of the Pleiads bore to Jupiter. Thou arbiter of peace and war to gods above and gods below, thou who dost ply thy way on winged foot; thou who dost delight in the music of the lyre, and dost delight too in the wrestling-school, glistening with oil; thou by whose instruction the tongue learns to discourse elegantly, the senate founded for thee on the Ides a temple looking toward the Circus: since then the day has been thy festival. All who make a business of selling their wares give thee incense and beg that thou wouldst grant them gain. There is a water of Mercury near the Capene Gate: if you care to take the word of those who have tried it, there is a divinity in the water. Hither comes the merchant with his tunic girt up, and, ceremonially pure, draws water in a fumigated jar to carry it away. With the water he wets a laurel bough, and with the wet bough he sprinkles all the goods that soon are to change owners; he sprinkles, too, his own hair with the dripping laurel and recites prayers in a voice accustomed to deceive. "Wash away the perjuries of past time," says he, "wash away my glozing words of the past day. Whether I have called thee to witness, or have falsely invoked the great divinity of Jupiter, in the expectation that he would not hear, or whether I have knowingly taken in vain the name of any other god or goddess, let the swift south winds carry away the wicked words, and may to-morrow open the door for me to fresh perjuries, and may the gods above not care if I shall utter any! Only grant me profits, grant me joy of profit made, and see to it that I enjoy cheating the buyer!" At such prayers Mercury laughs from on high, remembering that he himself stole the Ortygian kine.

XIII. KAL. IVN. 20th

But I put up a far better prayer. Unfold to me, I beseech thee, at what time Pheobus passes into the sign of the Twins. "When thou shalt see," he answered, "that as many days of the month remain over as are the labours of Hercules." "Tell me," I replied, "the cause of this constellation." The god in answer explained the cause in eloquent speech. The brother Tyndarids, the one a horseman, the other a boxer, had ravished and carried away Phoebe and Phoebe's sister. Idas and his brother prepare for war and demand the restitution of their brides; for both of them had covenanted with Leucippus to be his sons-in-law. Love prompts the one pair to demand the restitution of their brides; for both of them had covenanted with Leucippus to be his sons-in-law. Love prompts the one pair to demand the restitution, the other to refuse it; each pair is spurred on to fight by the like motive.

The Oebalids might have escaped their pursuers by superior speed; but it seemed base to win by rapid flight. There is a place free from trees, a suitable ground for a fight: in that place they took their stand (its name is Aphidna). Pierced through the breast by the sword of Lynceus – a wound he had not looked for – Castor fell to the ground. Pollux comes up to avenge him, and runs Lynceus through with his spear at the point where the neck joins on to and presses upon the shoulders. Idas attacked him, and scarcely was repulsed by the fire of Jupiter; yet they say that his weapon was not wrested from his right hand by the thunderbolt. And already the lofty heavens opened its door for thee, Pollux, when thou sadist, “Hear my words, O Father. The heaven that thou dost give to me alone, O share between us two; one-half the gift will be greater than the whole.” He spoke, and redeemed his brother from death by changing places with him alternately. Both stars are helpful to the storm-tossed bark.

XII. KAL. 21st

He who would learn what the Agonia re, may turn back to January, though they have a place in the calendar at this season also.

XI. KAL. 22nd

In the night that follows the day the dog of Erigone rises : I have the explanation of this constellation in another place.

X. KAL. 23rd

The next day belongs to Vulcan; they call it Tubilustria. The trumpets which he makes are then cleansed and purified.

IX. KAL. 24th

The next place is marked by four letters, which, read in order, signify either the custom of the sacred rites or the Flight of the King.

VIII. KAL 25th

Nor will I pass thee over, thou Public Fortune of the powerful people, to whom a temple was dedicated next day. When that day shall have sunk into Amphitrite's wealth of waters, thou wilt see the beak of the tawny bird, dear to Jupiter.

VII. KAL. 26th; VI. KAL. 27th

The coming morn will remove Bootes from thy sight, and next day the constellation of Hyas will be visible.

BOOK VI

The explanations of this month's name also are doubtful. I will state them all, and you shall choose which one you please. I'll sing the truth, but some will say I lied, and think that no deities were ever seen by mortal. There is a god within us. It is when he stirs us that our bosom warms; it is his impulse that sows the seeds of inspiration. I have a peculiar right to see the faces of the gods, whether because I am a bard, or because I sing of sacred things. There is a grove where trees grow thick, a spot sequestered from every sound except the purl of water.

There I was musing on what might be the origin of the month just begun, and was meditating on its name. Lo, I beheld the goddesses, but not those whom the teacher of ploughing beheld when he followed his Ascraean sheep ; nor those whom Priam's son compared in watery Ida's dells ; yet one there was of these. Of these there was one, the sister of her husband: she it was, I recognized, who stands within Jove's citadel. I shivered, and, speechless though I was, my pallid hue betrayed my feeling; then the goddess herself removed the fears she had inspired. For she said, "O poet, minstrel of the Roman year, thou who hast dared to chronicle great things in slender couplets, thou hast won for thyself the right to look upon a celestial divinity by undertaking to celebrate the festivals in thy numbers. But lest thou should be ignorant and led astray by vulgar error, know that June takes its name from mine. It is something to have married Jupiter and to be Jupiter's sister. I know not whether I am prouder of him as brother or as husband. If descent is considered, I was the first to call Saturn by the name of father: I was the first child whom fate bestowed on him. Rome was once named Saturnia after my sire: this land was the next he came to after heaven. If the marriage-bed counts for much, I am called the consort of the Thunderer, and my temple is joined to that of Tarpeian Jupiter. If a leman could give her name to the month of May, shall a like honour be grudged to me? To what purpose, then, am I called Queen and chief of goddesses? Why did they put a golden sceptre in my right hand? Shall the days (lucēs) make up a month and I be called Lucina after them, and yet shall I take a name from not a single month? Then indeed might I repent of having loyally laid aside my anger at the offspring of Electra and the Dardanian house. I had a double cause of anger: I fretted at the rape of Ganymede, and my beauty was misprized by the Idaean judge. It might repent me that I cherish not the battlements of Carthage, since my chariot and arms are there. It might repent me that I have laid Sparta, and Argos, and my Mycenae, and ancient Samos, under the heel of Latium; add to these old Tatiū, and the Faliscans, who worship Juno, and whom I nevertheless suffered to succumb to the Romans. Yet let me not repent, for there is no people dearer to me: here may I be worshipped, here may I occupy the temple with my own Jupiter. Mavors himself hath said to me, 'I entrust these walls to thee. Thou shalt be mighty in the city of thy grandson.' His words have been fulfilled: I am celebrated at a hundred altars, and no the least of my honours is that of the month (named after me). Nevertheless it is not Rome alone that does me that honour: the inhabitants of neighbouring towns pay me the same compliment. Look at the calendar of woodland Aricia, and the calendars of the Laurentine folk and of my own Lanuvium; there, too, there is a month of June. Look at Tibur and at the sacred walls of the Praenestine goddess: there shalt thou read of Juno's season. Yet Romulus did not found these towns; but Rome was the city of my grandson."

So Juno ended. I looked back. The wife of Hercules stood by, and in her face were signs of vigour. "If my mother were to bid me retire from heaven outright," quoth she, "I would not tarry against my mother's will. Now, too, I do not content about the name of this season. I coax, and I act the part almost of a petitioner, and I should prefer to maintain my right by prayer alone. Thou thyself mayest haply favour my cause. My mother owns the golden Capitol, where she shares the temple, and, as is right, occupies the summit along with Jupiter. But all my glory comes from the naming of the month; the honour about which they tease me is the only one I enjoy. What harm was it if thou didst, O Roman, bestow the title of a month upon the wife of Hercules, and if posterity remembered and ratified the gift? This land also owes me something on account of my great husband. Hither he drove the captured kine: here Cacus, ill protected by the flames, his father's gift, dyed with his blood the soil of the Aventine. But I am called to nearer themes. Romulus divided and distributed the people into two parts according to their years. The one was the readier to give counsel, the other to fight; the one age advised war, the other waged it. So he decreed, and he distinguished the months by the same token. June is the month of the young (iuvenes); the preceding is the month of the old."

So she spoke, and in the heat of rivalry the goddesses might have engaged in dispute, wherein anger might have belied their natural affection. But Concord came, at once the deity and the work of the pacific chief, her long tresses twined with Apollo's laurel. When she had told how Tatius and brave Quirinus, and their two kingdoms and peoples, had united in one, and how fathers-in-law and sons-in-law were received in a common home, "The months of June," quoth she, "gets its name from their junction."

Thus were three causes pleaded. But pardon me, ye goddesses; the matter is not one to be decided by my judgement. Depart from me all equal. Pergamum was ruined by him who adjudged the prize of beauty: two goddesses mar more than one can make.

KAL. IVN. 1st

The first day is given to thee, Carna. She is the goddess of the hinge: by her divine power she opens what is closed, and closes what is open. Time has dimmed the tradition which sets forth how she acquired the powers she owns, but you shall learn it from my song. Near to the Tiber lies an ancient grove of Alernus ; the pontiffs still bring sacrifices thither. There a nymph was born (men of old named her Cranaë), often wooed in vain by many suitors. Her wont it was to scour the countryside and chase the wild beasts with her darts, and in the hollow vale to stretch the knotty nets. No quiver had she, yet they thought that she was Phoebus' sister; and, Phoebus, thou needst not have been ashamed of her. If any youth spoke to her words of love, she straightway made him this answer: "In this place there is too much of light, and with the light too much of shame; if thou wilt lead to a more retired cave, I'll follow." While he confidingly went in front, she no sooner reached the bushes than she halted, and hid herself, and was nowise to be found. Janus had seen her, and the sight had roused his passion; to the hard-hearted nymph he used soft words. The nymph as usual bade him seek a more sequestered cave, and she pretended to follow at his heels, but deserted her leader. Fond fool! Janus sees what goes on behind his back; vain is thine effort; he sees thy hiding-place behind him. Vain is thine effort, lo! said I. For he caught thee in his embrace as thou didst lurk beneath a rock, and having worked his will he said: "In return for our dalliance be thine the control of hinges; take that for the price of thy lost maidenhood." So saying, he gave her a thorn - and white it was - wherewith she could repel all doleful harm from doors.

There are greedy birds, not those that cheated Phineus' maw of its repast, though from those they are descended. Big is their head, goggle their eyes, their beaks are formed for rapine, their feathers blotched with grey, their claws fitted with hooks. They fly by night and attack nurseless children, and defile their bodies, snatched from their cradles. They are said to rend the flesh of sucklings with their beaks, and their throats are full of the blood which they have drunk. Screech-owl is their name, but the reason of the name is that they are wont to screech horribly by night. Whether, therefore, they are born birds, or are made such by enchantment and are nothing but beldames transformed into fowls by a Marsian spell, they came into the chambers of Proca. In the chambers Proca, a child five days old, was a fresh prey for the birds. They sucked the infant with their greedy tongues, and the poor child squalled and craved help. Alarmed by the cry of her fosterling, the nurse ran to him and found his cheeks scored by their rigid claws. What was she to do? The colour of the child's face was like the common hue of late leaves nipped by an early frost. She went to Cranaë and told what had befallen. Cranaë said, "Lay fear aside; thy nursling will be safe." She went to the cradle; mother and father were weeping. "Restrain your tears," she said, "I myself will heal the child." Straightway she thrice touched the doorposts, one after the other, with arbutus leaves; thrice with arbutus leaves she marked the threshold. She sprinkled the entrance with water (and the water was drugged), and she held the raw inwards of a sow just two months old. And thus she spoke: "Ye birds of night, spare the child's inwards: a small victim falls for a small child. Take, I pray ye, a heart for a heart, entrails for entrails. This life we give you for a better life." When she had thus sacrificed, she set the severed inwards in the open air, and forbade those present at the sacrifice to look back at them. A rod of Janus, taken from the white-thorn, was placed where a small window gave light to the chambers. After that, it is said that the birds did not violate the cradle, and the boy recovered his former colour.

You ask why fat bacon is eaten on these Kalends, and why beans are mixed with hot spelt. She is a goddess of the olden time, and subsists upon the foods to which she was inured before; no voluptuary is she to run after foreign viands. Fish still swam unharmed by the people of that age, and oysters safe in their shells. Latium knew not the fowl that rich Ionia supplies, nor the bird that delights in Pygmy blood ; and in the peacock naught but the feathers pleased, nor had the earth before sent captured beasts. The pig was prized, people feasted on the slaughtered swine: the ground yielded only beans and hard spelt. Whoever eats at the same time these two foods on the Kalends of the sixth month, they affirm that nothing can hurt his bowels.

They say, too, that the temple of Juno Moneta was founded in fulfilment of thy vow, Camillus, on the summit of the citadel : formerly it had been in the house of Manlius, who once protected Capitoline Jupiter against the Gallic arms. Great gods, how well had it been for him if in that fight he had fallen in defence of thy throne, O Jupiter on high! He lived to perish, condemned on a charge of aiming at the crown: that was the title that length of years reserved for him.

The same day is a festival of Mars, whose temple, set beside the Covered Way, is seen afar without the walls from the Capene Gate. Thou, too, O Storm, didst deserve a shrine, by our avowal, what time the fleet was nearly overwhelmed in Corsican waters. These monuments set up by men are plain for all to see: if you look for stars, the bird of great Jupiter with its hooked talons then rises.

IV. NON. 2nd

The next day calls up the Hyades, which form the horns of the Bull's forehead; and the earth is soaked with heavy rain.

III. NON. 3rd

When twice the morning shall have passed, and twice Phoebus shall have repeated his rising, and twice the crops shall have been wetted by the fallen dew, on that day Bellona is said to have been consecrated in the Tuscan war, and ever she comes gracious to Latium. Her founder was Appius, who, when peace was refused to Pyrrhus, saw clearly in his mind, though from the light of day he was cut off. A small open space commands from the temple a view of the top of the Circus. There stands a little pillar of no little note. From it the custom is to hurl by hand a spear, war's harbinger, when it has been resolved to take arms against a king and peoples.

PR. NON. 4th

The other part of the Circus is protected by Guardian Hercules: the god holds office in virtue of the Euboean oracle. The time of his taking office is the day before the Nones. If you ask about the inscription, it was Sulla who approved the work.

NON. 5th

I inquired whether I should refer the Nones to Sancus, or to Fidius, or to thee, Father Semo; then Sancus said to me: "To whomsoever of them thou mayest give it, the honour will still be mine: I bear the three names: so willed the people of Cures." Accordingly the Sabines of old bestowed on him a shrine, and established it on the Quirinal hill.

VIII. ID. 6th

I have a daughter, and I pray she may outlive me; I shall always be happy while she survives. When I would give her to a son-in-law, I inquired what items were suitable for weddings and what should be avoided. Then it was shown to me that June after the sacred Ides is good for brides and good for bridegrooms, but the first part of this month was found to be unsuitable for marriages; for the holy wife of the Flamen Dialis spoke thus to me: "Until the calm Tiber shall have carried down to the sea on its yellow current the filth from the temple of Ilian Vesta, it is not lawful for me to comb down my hair with a toothed comb, or cut my nails with iron, or touch my husband, though he is the priest of Jupiter, and though he was given to me for life. Thou, too, be in no hurry; thy daughter will better wed when Vesta's fire shall shine on a clean floor."

VII. ID. 7th

On the third morn after the Nones it is said that Phoebe chases away (the grandson of) Lycaon, and the Bear has none behind her to fear. Then I remember that I saw games held on the sward of the Field of Mars, and that they were named thine, O smooth Tiber. The day is a festival for those who draw their dripping lines and hide their bronze hooks under little baits.

VI. ID. 8th

The mind also has its divinity. We see that a sanctuary was vowed to Mind during the terror of thy war, thou treacherous Carthaginian. Thou didst renew the war, thou Carthaginian, and, thunder-struck by the consul's death, all dreaded the Moorish bands. Fear had driven out hope, when the Senate made vows to Mind, and straightway she came better disposed. The day on which the vows paid to the goddess is separated from the coming Ides by six intermediate days.

V. ID. 9th

O Vesta, grant me thy favour! In thy service now ope my lips, if it is lawful for me to come to thy sacred rites. I was wrapt up in prayer; I felt the heavenly deity, and the glad ground gleamed with a purple light. Not indeed that I saw thee, O goddess (far from me be the lies of poets!), nor was it meet that a man should look upon thee; but my ignorance was enlightened and my errors corrected without the help of an instructor. They say that Rome had forty times celebrated the Parilia when the goddess, Guardian of Fire, was received in her temple; it was the work of that peaceful king, than whom no man of more god-fearing temper was ever born in Sabine land. The buildings which now you see roofed with bronze you might then have seen roofed with thatch, and the walls were woven of tough osiers. This little spot, which now supports the Hall of Vesta, was then the great palace of unshorn Numa. Yet the shape of the temple, as it now exists, is said to have been its shape of old, and it is based on a sound reason. Vesta is the same as the Earth; under both of them is a perpetual fire; the earth and the hearth are symbols of the home. The earth is like a ball, resting on no prop; so great a weight hangs on the air beneath it. Its own power of rotation keeps its orb balanced; it has no angle which could press on any part; and since it is placed in the middle of the world and touches no side more or less, if it were not convex, it would be nearer to some part than to another, and the universe would not have the earth as its central weight. There stands a globe hung by Syracusan art in closed air, a small image of the vast vault of heaven, and the earth is equally distant from the top and bottom. That is brought about by its round shape. The form of the temple is similar: there is no projecting angle in it; a dome protects it from the showers of rain.

You ask why the goddess is tended by virgin ministers. Of that also I will discover the true causes. They say that Juno and Ceres were born of Ops by Saturn's seed; the third daughter was Vesta. The other two married; both are reported to have had offspring; of the three one remained, who refused to submit to a husband. What wonder if a virgin delights in a virgin minister and allows only chaste hands to touch her sacred things? Conceive of Vesta as naught but the living flame, and you see that no bodies are born of flame. Rightly, therefore, is she a virgin who neither gives nor takes seeds, and she loves companions in her virginity.

Long did I foolishly think that there were images of Vesta: afterwards I learned that there are none under her curved dome. An undying fire is hidden in that temple; but there is no effigy of Vesta nor of the fire. The earth stands by its own power; Vesta is so called from standing by power (vi stando); and the reason of her Greek name may be similar. But the hearth (focus) is so named from the flames, and because it fosters (fovet) all things; yet formerly it stood in the first room of the house. Hence, too, I am of opinion that the vestibule took its name; it is from there that in praying we begin by addressing Vesta, who occupies the first place: it used to be the custom of old to sit on long benches in front of the hearth and to suppose that the gods were present at the table; even now, when sacrifices are offered to ancient Vacuna, they stand and sit in front of her hearths. Something of olden custom has come down to our time: a clean platter contains the food offered to Vesta. Loaves are hung on asses decked with wreaths, and flowery garlands veil the rough millstones. Husbandmen used formerly to toast only spelt in the ovens, and the goddess of ovens has her own sacred rites : the hearth of itself baked the bread that was put under the ashes, and a broken tile was laid on the warm floor. Hence the baker honours the hearth and the mistress of hearths and the she-ass that turns the millstones of pumice.

Shall I pass over or relate thy disgrace, rubicund Priapus? It is a short story, but a very merry one. Cybele, whose brow is crowned with a coronet of towers, invited the eternal gods to her feast. She invited all the satyrs and those rural divinities, the nymphs. Silenus came, though nobody had asked him. It is unlawful, and it would be tedious, to narrate the banquet of the gods: the livelong night was passed in deep potations. Some roamed at haphazard in the vales of shady Ida; some lay and stretched their limbs at ease on the soft grass; some played; some slept; some, arm linked in arm, thrice beat with rapid foot the verdant ground. Vesta lay and careless took her peaceful rest, just as she was, her head low laid and propped upon a sod. But the ruddy guardian of gardens courted nymphs and goddesses, and to and fro he turned his roving steps. He spied Vesta too; it is doubtful whether he took her for a nymph or knew her to be Vesta; he himself said that he knew her not. He conceived a wanton hope, and tried to approach her furtively; he walked on tiptoe with throbbing heart. It chanced that old Silenus had left the ass, on which he rode, on the banks of a babbling brook. The god of the long Hellespont was going to begin, when the ass uttered an ill-timed bray. Frightened by the deep voice, the goddess started up; the whole troop flocked together; Priapus made his escape between hands that would have stopped him. Lampsacus is wont to sacrifice this animal to Priapus, saying: "We fitly give to the flames the innards of the tell-tale." That animal, goddess, thou dost adorn with necklaces of loaves in memory of the event: work comes to a stop: the mills are empty and silent.

I will explain the meaning of an altar of Baker Jupiter, which stands on the citadel of the Thunderer and is more famous for its name than for its value. The Capitol was surrounded and hard pressed by fierce Gauls: the long siege had already caused a famine. Having summoned the celestial gods to his royal throne, Jupiter said to Mars,

“Begin.” Straightway Mars made answer, “Forsooth, nobody knows the plight of my people, and this my sorrow needs to find utterance in complaint. But if thou dost require me to declare in brief the sad and shameful tale: Rome lies at the foot of the Alpine foe. Is this that Rome, O Jupiter, to which was promised the domination of the world? is this that Rome which thou didst purpose to make the mistress of the earth? Already she had crushed her neighbours and the Etruscan hosts. Hope was in full career, but now she is driven from her own hearth and home. We have seen old men decked in embroidered robes – the symbol of the triumphs they had won – cut down within their bronze-lined halls. We have seen the pledges of Ilian Vesta removed from their proper seat : plainly the Romans think that some gods exist. But if they were to look back to the citadel in which ye dwell, and to see so many of your homes beleaguered, they would know that the worship of the gods is of no avail, and that incense offered by an anxious hand is thrown away. And would that they could find a clear field of battle! Let them take arms, and, if they cannot conquer, then let them fall! As it is, starving and dreading a coward’s death, they are shut up and pressed hard on their own hill by a barbarous mob.” Then Venus and Quirinus, in the pomp of augur’s staff and striped gown, and Vesta pleaded hard for their own Latium. Jupiter replied, “A general providence is charged with the defence of yonder walls. Gaul will be vanquished and will pay the penalty. Only do thou, Vesta, look to it that the corn which is lacking may be thought to abound, and do not abandon thy proper seat. Let all the grain that is yet unground be crushed in the hollow mill, let it be kneaded by hand and roasted by fire in the oven.” So Jupiter commanded, and the virgin daughter of Saturn assented to her brother’s command, the time being the hour of midnight. Now sleep had overcome the wearied leaders. Jupiter chode them, and with his sacred lips informed them of his will. "Arise and from the topmost battlements cast into the midst of the foe the last resource which ye would wish to yield." Sleep left them, and moved by the strange riddle they inquired what resource they were bidden to yield against their will. They thought it must be corn. They threw down the gifts of the Corn-goddess, which, in falling, clattered upon the helmets and the long shields of the foe. The hope that the citadel could be reduced by famine now vanished: the enemy was repulsed and a white altar set up to Baker Jupiter.

It chanced that at the festival of Vesta I was returning by that way which now joins the New Way to the Roman Forum, Hither I saw a matron coming down barefoot: amazed I held my peace and halted. An old woman of the neighbourhood perceived me, and bidding me sit down she addressed me in quavering tones, shaking her head. "This ground, where now are the forums, was once occupied by wet swamps: a ditch was drenched with the water that overflowed from the river. That Lake of Curtius, which supports dry altars, is now solid ground, but formerly it was a lake. Where now the processions are wont to defile through the Velabrum to the Circus, there was naught but willows and hollow canes; often the roysterer, returning home over the waters of the suburb, used to tip a stave and rap out tipsy words at passing sailors. Yonder god (Vertumnus), whose name is appropriate to various shapes, had not yet derived it from damming back the river (averso amne). Here, too, there was a grove overgrown with bulrushes and reeds, and a marsh not to be trodden with booted feet. The pools have receded, and the river confines its water within its banks, and the ground is now dry; but the old custom survives." The old woman thus explained the custom. "Farewell, good old dame," said I; "may what remains of life to thee be easy all!"

The rest of the tale I had learned long since in my boyish years; yet not on that account may I pass it over in silence.

Ilus, descendant of Dardanus, had lately founded a new city (Ilus was still rich and possessed the wealth of Asia); a celestial image of armed Minerva is believed to have leaped won on the hills of the Ilian city. (I was anxious to see it: I saw the temple and the place; that is all that is left here; the image of Pallas is in Rome.) Smintheus was consulted, and in the dim light of his shady grove he gave this answer with no lying lips: "Preserve the heavenly goddess, so shall ye preserve the city. She will transfer with herself the seat of empire." Ilus preserved the image of the goddess and kept it shut up on the top of the citadel; the charge of it descended to his heir Laomedon. In Priam's reign the image was not well preserved. Such was the goddess's own will ever since judgement was given against her in the contest of beauty. Whether it was the descendant of Adrastus, or the guileful Ulysses, or Aeneas, they say someone carried it off; the culprit is uncertain; the thing is now at Rome: Vesta guards it, because she sees all things by her light that never fails.

Alas, how alarmed the Senate was when the temple of Vesta caught fire, and the goddess was almost buried under her own roof! Holy fires blazed, fed by wicked fires, and a profane flame was blent with a pious flame. Amazed the priestesses wept with streaming hair; fear had bereft them of bodily strength. Metellus rushed into their midst and in a loud voice cried, "Hasten ye to the rescue! There is no help in weeping. Take up in your virgin hands the pledges given by fate; it is not by prayers but by deed that they can be saved. Woe's me, do ye hesitate?" said he. He saw that they hesitate?" said he. He saw that they hesitated and sank trembling on their knees. He took up water, and lifting up his hands, "Pardon me, ye sacred things," said he, "I, a man, will enter a place where no man should set foot. If it is a crime, let the punishment of the deed fall on me! May I pay with my head the penalty, so Rome go free!" With these words he burst in. The goddess whom he carried off approved the deed and was saved by the devotion of her pontiff.

Ye sacred flames, now ye shine bright under Caesar's rule; the fire is now and will continue to be on the Ilian hearths, and it will not be told that under his leadership any priestess defiled her sacred fillets, and none shall be buried in the live ground. That is the doom of her who proves unchaste; because she is put away in the earth which she contaminated, since Earth and Vesta are one and the same deity.

Then did Brutus win his surname from the Gallaecan foe, and dyed the Spanish ground with blood. To be sure, sorrow is sometimes blent with joy, lest festivals spell unmingled gladness for the people: Crassus lost the eagles, his son, and his soldiers at the Euphrates, and perished last of all himself. "Why exult, thou Parthian?" said the goddess; "thou shalt send back the standards, and there will be an avenger who shall exact punishment for the slaughter of Crassus."

IV. ID. 10th

But as soon as the long-eared asses are stripped of their violets, and the rough millstones grind the fruits of Ceres, the sailor, sitting at the poop, says, "We shall see the Dolphin, when the day is put to flight and dank night has mounted up."

III. ID. 11th

Now, Phrygian Tithonus, thou dost complain that thou art abandoned by thy spouse, and the watchful Morning Star comes forth from the eastern waters. Go, good mothers (the Matralia is your festival), and offer to the Theban goddess the yellow cakes that are her due. Adjoining the bridges and the great Circus is an open space of far renown, which takes its name from the statue of an ox : there, on this day, it is said, Servius consecrated with his own sceptered hands a temple of Mother Matuta. Who the goddess is, why she excludes (for exclude she does) female slaves from the threshold of her temple, and why she calls for toasted cakes, do thou, O Bacchus, whose locks are twined with clustered grapes and ivy, (explain and) guide the poet's course, if the house of the goddess is also thine. Through the compliance of Jupiter with her request Semele was consumed with fire : Ino received thee, young Bacchus, and zealously nursed thee with the utmost care. Juno swelled with rage that Ino should rear the son who had been snatched from his leman mother; but that son was of the blood of Ino's sister. Hence Athamas was haunted by the furies and by a delusive vision, and little Learchus, thou didst fall by thy father's hand. His sorrowful mother committed the shade of Learchus to the tomb and paid all the honours due to the mournful pyre. She, too, after tearing her rueful hair, leaped forth and snatched thee, Melicertes, from thy cradle. A land there is, shrunk with narrow limits, which repels twin seas, and, single in itself, is lashed by twofold waters. Thither came Ino, clasping her son in her frenzied embrace, and hurled herself and him from a high ridge into the deep. Panope and her hundred sisters received them scatheless, and smoothly gliding bore them through their realms. They reached the mouth of thick-eddying Tiber before Ino had yet received the name of Leucothea and before her boy was called Palaemon. There was a sacred grove: it is doubtful whether it should be called the grove of Semele or the grove of Stimula: they say that it was inhabited by Ausonian Maenads. Ino inquired of them what was their nation; she learned that they were Arcadians and that Evander was king of the place.

Dissembling her godhead, the daughter of Saturn slyly incited the Latian Bacchanals by glozing words: "Too easy souls! O blinded hearts! This stranger comes no friend to our assemblies. Her aim is treacherous, she would learn our sacred rites. Yet she has a pledge by which we can ensure her punishment." Scarce had she ended, when the Thyiads, with their locks streaming down their necks, filled the air with their howls, and laid hands on Ino, and strove to pluck the boy from her. She invoked the gods whom still she knew not: "Ye gods and men of the land, succour a wretched mother!" The cry reached the neighbouring rocks of the Aventine. The Oetaean hero had driven the Iberian kine to the river bank; he heard and hurried at full speed towards the voice. At the approach of Hercules the women, who but a moment before had been ready to use violence, turned their backs shamefully in womanish flight. "What would'st thou here, O sister of Bacchus's mother?" quoth Hercules, for he recognized her: "doth the same deity who harasses me harass the also?" She told him her story in part, but part the presence of her son induced her to suppress; for she was ashamed to have been goaded into crime by the furies. Rumour - for she is fleet - flew far on pulsing wings, and thy name, Ino, was on many lips. It is said that as a guest thou didst enter the home of loyal Carmentis and there didst stay thy long hunger. The Tegean priestess is reported to have made cakes in haste with her own hand and to have quickly backed them on the hearth. Even to this day she loves cakes at the festival of the Matralia. Rustic civility was dearer to her than the refinements of art. "Now," said Ino, "reveal to me, O prophetess, my future fate, so far as it is lawful; I pray thee, add this favour to the hospitality I have already received." A brief pause ensued, and then the prophetess assumed her heavenly powers, and all her bosom swelled with majesty divine. Of a sudden you could hardly know her again; so holier, so taller far was she than she had been but now. "Glad tidings I will sing: rejoice, Ino, thy labours are over," said she. "O come propitious to this people evermore! Thou shalt be a divinity in the sea: thy son, too, shall have his home in the ocean. Take ye both different names in your own waters. Thou shalt be called Leucothea by the Greeks and Matuta by our people: thy son will have all authority over harbours; he whom we name Portunus will be named Palaemon in his own tongue. Go, I pray ye, be friendly, both of ye, to our country!" Ino bowed assent, she gave her promise. Their troubles ceased: they changed their names: he is a god and she a goddess.

You ask why she forbids female slaves to approach her? She hates them, and the source of her hatred, with her leave, I will tell in verse. One of thy handmaids, daughter of Cadmus, used often to submit to the embraces of thy husband. The caitiff Athamas loved her secretly, and from her he learned that his wife gave toasted seed-corn to the husbandmen. You yourself, indeed, denied it, but rumour affirmed it. That is why you hate the service of a woman slave. Nevertheless let not an affectionate mother pray to her on behalf of her own offspring: she herself proved to be no lucky parent. You will do better to commend to her care the progeny of another; she was more serviceable to Bacchus than to her own children. They relate that she said to thee, Rutilius, "Whither doest thou hasten? On my day in thy consulship thou shalt fall by the hand of a Marsian foe." Her words were fulfilled, and the stream of the Tolenus flowed purple, its water mingled with blood. When the next year was come, Didius, slain on the same day, doubled the forces of the foe.

The same day, Fortune, is thine, and the same founder, and he same place. But who is yonder figure that is hidden in robes thrown one upon the other? It is Servius: so much is certain, but different causes are assigned for this concealment, and my mind, too, is haunted by doubt. While the goddess timidly confessed her furtive love, and blushed to think that as a celestial being she should made with a mere man (for she burned with a deep, an onvermastering passion for the king, and he was the only man for whom she was not blind), she was wont to enter his house by a small window (fenestra); hence the gate bears the name of Fenestella ("the Little Window"). To this day she is ashamed and hides the loved features beneath a veil, and the king's face is covered by many a robe. Or is the truth rather that after the murder of Tullius the common folk were bewildered by the death of the gentle chief, there were no bounds to their grief, and their sorrow increased with the sight of his statue, until they hid him by putting robes on him?

A third reason must be expounded in my verse at greater length, though I will rein in my steeds. Having accomplished her marriage by means of crime, Tullia used to incite her husband by these words: "What boots is that we are will matched, thou by my sister's murder, and I by thy brother's, if we are content to lead a life of virtue? Better that my husband and thy wife had lived, if we do not dare attempt some greater enterprise. I offer as my dower the head and kingdom of my father: if thou art a man, go to, exact the promised dower. Crime is a thing for kings. Kill thy wife's father and seize the kingdom, and dye our hands in my sire's blood." Instigated by such words, he, private man though he was, took his seat upon the lofty throne; the mob, astounded, rushed to arms. Hence blood and slaughter, and the weak old man was overpowered: his son-in-law (Tarquin) the Proud snatched the sceptre from his father-in-law. Servius himself, at the foot of the Esquiline hill, where was his palace, fell murdered and bleeding on the hard ground. Driving in a coach to her father's home, his daughter passed along the middle of the streets, erect and haughty. When he saw her father's corpse, the driver burst into tears and drew up. She chode him in these terms: "Wilt thou go on, or dost thou wait to reap the bitter fruit of this thy loyalty? Drive, I say, the reluctant wheels across his very face!" A sure proof of the deed is the name of the street called Wicked after her;

the event is branded with eternal infamy. Yet after that she dared to touch the temple, her father's monument: strange but true the tale I'll tell. There was a statue seated on a throne in the likeness of Tullius: it is said to have put its hand to its eyes, and a voice was heard, "Hide my face, lest it should see the execrable visage of my own daughter." The statue was covered by a robe lent for the purpose: Fortune forbade the garment to be moved, and thus she spoke from her own temple: "That day on which the statue of Servius shall be laid bare by unmuffling his face will be the first day of modesty cast to the winds." Ye matrons, refrain from touching the forbidden garments; enough it is to utter prayers in solemn tones. Let him who was the seventh king in our city always keep his head covered with Roman drapery. This temple was once burnt, yet the fire spared the statue: Mulciber himself rescued his son. For the father of Tullius was Vulcan, his mother was the beautiful Ocesia of Corniculum. After performing with her the sacred rites in due form, Tanaquil ordered Ocesia to pour wine on the hearth, which had been adorned. There among the ashes there was, or seemed to be, the shape of the male organ; but rather the shape was really there. Ordered by her mistress, the captive Ocesia sat down at the hearth. She conceived Servius, who thus was begotten of seed from heaven. His begetter gave a token of his paternity when he touched the head of Servius with gleaming fire, and when on the king's hair there blazed a cap of flame.

To thee, too, Concordia, Livia dedicated a magnificent shrine, which she presented to her dear husband. But learn this, thou age to come: where Livia's colonnade now stands, there once stood a huge palace. The single house was like the fabric of a city; it occupied a space larger than that occupied by the walls of many a town. It was levelled with the ground, not on a charge of treason, but because its luxury was deemed harmful. Caesar brooked to overthrow so vast a structure, and to destroy so much wealth, to which he was himself the heir. That is the way to exercise the censorship; that is the way to set an example, when an upholder of law does himself what he warns others to do.

The next day has no mark attached to it which you can note. On the Ides a temple was dedicated to Unconquered Jupiter. And now I am bidden to tell of the Lesser Quinquatrus. Now favour my undertaking, thou yellow-haired Minerva. "Why does the flute-player march at large through the whole City? What mean the masks? What means the long gown?" So did I speak, and thus did Tritonia answer me, when she had laid aside her spear - would that I could report the very words of the learned goddess! "In the times of your ancestors of yore the flute-player was much employed and was always held in great honour. The flute played in temples, it played at games, it played at mournful funerals. The labour was sweetened by its reward; but a time followed which of a sudden broke the practice of the pleasing art. Moreover, the aedile had ordered that the musicians who accompanied funeral processions should be ten, no more. The flute-players went into exile from the City and retired to Tibur : once upon a time Tibur was a place of exile! The hollow flute was missed in the theatre, missed at the altars; no dirge accompanied the bier on the last march. At Tibur there was a certain man who had been a slave, but had long been free, a man worthy of any rank. In his country place he made ready a banquet and invited the tuneful throng; they gathered to the festal board. It was night, and their eyes and heads swam with wine, when a messenger arrived with a made-up tale, and thus he spoke (to the freedman): 'Break up the banquet without delay, for see here comes the master of thy rod!' Immediately the guests bestirred their limbs, reeling with heady wine; their shaky legs or stood or slipped. But the master of the house, 'Off with you all!' says he, and when they dawdled he packed them in a wain that was well lined with rushes. The time, the motion, and the wine allured to slumber, and the tipsy crew fancied that they were on their way back to Tibur. And now the wain had entered the city of Rome by the Esquiline, and at morn it stood in the middle of the Forum. In order to deceive the Senate as to their persons and their number, Plautius commanded that their faces should be covered with masks; and he mingled others with them and ordered them to wear long garments, to the end that women flute-players might be added to the band. In that way he thought that the return of the exiles could be best concealed, lest they should be censured for having come back against the orders of their guild. The plan was approved, and now they are allowed to wear their new garb on the Ides and to sing merry words to the old tunes."

When she had thus instructed me, "It only remains for me to learn," said I, "why that day is called Quinquatrus." "A festival of mine," quoth she, "is celebrated under that name in the month of March, and among my inventions is also the guild of flute-players. I was the first, by piercing boxwood with holes wide apart, to produce the music of the long flute. The sound was pleasing; but in the water that reflected my face I saw my virgin cheeks puffed up. 'I value not the art so high; farewell, my flute!' said I, and threw it away; it fell on the turf of the river-bank. A satyr found it and at first beheld it with wonder; he knew not its use, but perceived that, when he blew into it, the flute gave forth a note, and with the help of his fingers he alternately let out and kept in his breath. And now he bragged of his skill among the nymphs and challenged Phoebus; but, vanquished by Phoebus, he was hanged and his body flayed of its skin. Yet am I the inventress and foundress of this music; that is why the profession keeps my days holy."

XVII. KAL IVL. 15th

The third day will come, on which thou, O Thyone of Dodona, wilt stand visible on the brow of Agenor's bull. It is the day on which thou, O Tiber, dost send the filth of Vesta's temple down the Etruscan water to the sea.

XVI. KAL. 16th

If any trust can be put in the winds, spread your canvas to the West Wind, ye mariners; tomorrow it will blow fair upon your waters.

XV. KAL. 17th; XIV. KAL. 18th

But when the father of the Heliades shall have dipped his rays in the billows, and heaven's twin poles are girdled by the stars serene, the offspring of Hyrieus shall lift his mighty shoulders above the earth: on the next night the Dolphin will be visible. That constellation once indeed beheld the Volscians and the Aequians put to flight upon thy plains, O land of Algidus; whence thou, Tubertus, didst win a famous triumph over the neighbouring folks and didst later ride victorious in a car drawn by snow-white horses.

XIII. KAL. 19th

Now twice six days of the month are left, but to that number add one day; the sun departs from the Twins, and the constellation of the Crab blames red. Pallas begins to be worshipped on the Aventine hill.

XII. KAL 20th

Now, Laomedon, thy son's wife rises, and having risen she dispels the night, and the dank hoar-frost flees from the meadows. The temple is said to have been dedicated to Summanus, whoever he may be, at the time when thou, Pyrrhus, wast a terror to the Romans.

XI. KAL. 21st

When that day also has been received by Galatea in her father's waters, and all the world is sunk in untroubled sleep, there rises above the horizon the young man blasted by the bolts of his grandsire and stretches out his hands, entwined with twin snakes. Familiar, too, the wrong that Theseus did, when, too confiding, he did curse his son to death. Doomed by his piety, the youth was journeying to Troezen, when a bull cleft with his breast the waters in the path. Fear seized the startled steeds; in vain their master held them back, they dragged him along the crags and flinty rocks. Hippolytus fell from the car, and, his limbs entangled by the reins, his mangled body was whirled along, till he gave up the ghost, much to Diana's rage. "There is no need for grief," said the son of Coronis, "for I will restore the pious youth to life all unscathed, and to my leech-craft gloomy fate shall yield." Straightway he drew from an ivory casket simples that before had stood Glaucus' ghost in good stead, what time the seer went down to pluck the herbs he had remarked, and the snake was succoured by a snake. Thrice he touched the youth's breast, thrice he spoke healing words; then Hippolytus lifted his head, low laid upon the ground. He found a hiding-place in a sacred grove and in the depths of Dictynna's own woodland; he became Virbius of the Arician Lake. But Clymenus and Clotho grieved, she that life's broken thread should be respun, he that his kingdom's rights should be infringed. Fearing the example thus set, Jupiter aimed a thunderbolt at him who used the resources of a too potent art. Phoebus, thou didst complain. But Aesculapius is a god, be reconciled to thy parent: he did himself for thy sake what he forbids others to do.

X. KAL. 22nd

However great thy haste to conquer, O Caesar, I would not have thee march, if the auspices forbade. Be Flaminius and the Trasimenean shores thy witnesses that the kind gods give many warnings by means of birds. If you ask the date of that ancient disaster, incurred through recklessness, it was the tenth day from the end of the month.

IX. KAL. 23rd

The next day is luckier: on it Masinissa defeated Syphax, and Hasdrubal fell by his own sword.

VIII. KAL. 24th

Time slips away, and we grow old with silent lapse of years; there is no bridle that can curb the flying days. How quickly has come round the festival of Fors Fortuna! Yet seven days and June will be over. Come, Quirites, celebrate with joy the goddess Fors! On Tiber's bank she has her royal foundations. Speed some of you on foot, and some in the swift boat, and think no shame to return tipsy home from your ramble. Ye flower-crowned skiffs, bear bands of youthful revellers, and let them quaff deep draughts of wine on the bosom of the stream. The common folk worship this goddess because the founder of her temple is said to have been of their number and to have risen to the crown from humble rank. Her worship is also appropriate for slaves, because Tullius, who instituted the neighbouring temples of the fickle goddess, was born of a slave woman.

VI. KAL. 26th

Lo, returning from the suburban shrine, a maudlin worshipper thus hails the stars: "Orion, thy belt is now invisible, and perhaps it will be invisible to-morrow: after that it will be within my ken." But if he had not been tipsy, he would have said that the solstice would fall on the same day.

V. KAL. 27th

Next morn the Lares were given a sanctuary on the spot where many a wreath is twined by deft hands. At the same time was built the temple of Jupiter Stator, which Romulus of old founded in front o the Palatine hill.

III. KAL. 29th

When as many days of the month remain as the Fates have names, a temple was dedicated to thee, Quirinus, god of the striped gown.

PR. KAL. 30th

To-morrow is the birthday of the Kalends of July. Pierides, put the last touches to my undertaking. Tell me, Pierides, who associated you with him to whom his stepmother was forced to yield reluctantly. So I spoke, and Clio answered me thus: "Thou dost behold the monument of that famous Philip from whom the chaste Marcia is descended, Marcia who derives her name from sacrificial Ancus, and whose beauty matches her noble birth. In her the figure answers to the soul; in her we find lineage and beauty and genius all at once. Nor deem our praise of figure base; on the same ground we praise great goddesses. The mother's sister of Caesar was once married to that Philip. O florious dame! O lady worthy of that sacred house!" So Clio sang. Her learned sisters chimed in; Alcides bowed assent and twanged his lyre.

IBIS

Translated by Henry T. Riley

Possessing a unique place in Roman literature, this elegiac 'curse' poem of 644 lines purports to attack an enemy that is harming the poet during his exile. At the beginning of the poem, Ovid explains that his poetry will no longer be benign in purpose, but will instead be used to attack his enemy. The poem's title refers to Callimachus' Ibis, which was written several hundred years previously by the Ancient Greek poet to attack his rival Apollonius of Rhodes. Ovid uses mythical examples to condemn his enemy in the afterlife, explaining evil prodigies that attended his birth, wishing that the torments of mythological characters will inflict his enemy. The poem ends with a prayer that the gods render the curse effective.

'Ovid in Exile' by Ion Theodorescu-Sion, 1915

THE INVECTIVE AGAINST THE IBIS.

Up to this time, twice five lustra having now been passed by me, every verse of my Muse has been inoffensive, and not a single letter of Naso's exists, out of so many thousands that have been written, that can be read as injurious. My books, too, have hurt no one but myself; when the life of the author was lost through his Art of Love. One man (and that very circumstance is a great reproach) does not permit my credit for inoffensiveness to be lasting. Whoever he is (for I will still, in some measure, be silent on his name) he forces my unused hands to take up weapons. He does not allow me, removed afar to the cold rising of the North wind, to be concealed in my place of exile. In his cruelty, he torments the wounds that seek for rest, and he bandies my name about the whole of the Forum. Nor does he allow her, who is bound to me by the lasting tie of marriage, to lament the death of her wretched husband. While I am clinging to the shattered remains of my vessel, he strives to seize the planks of my shipwreck. He, too, who ought to extinguish the sudden conflagration, like a plunderer, snatches his booty from the midst of the fire. He strives that subsistence may be wanting to my exiled old age; alas! how much more worthy was he himself of my misfortunes! The Gods deemed otherwise; of whom he is by far the greatest to me, who willed not my wanderings to be destitute. To him, then, whenever I shall be allowed, I shall always return deserved thanks for a disposition so merciful. Pontus shall hear of these things; perhaps the same Divinity may cause a nearer country to testify them for me. But I will be deservedly an enemy to thee, however wretched, who hast, cruel man, trod upon me when lying prostrate. Water shall sooner cease to be the antagonist of fire, and the light of the Sun shall be joined with the Moon; the same portion of the heavens shall send forth the West winds and those of the East; and the warm South wind shall blow from the cold North pole; a fresh-born concord, too, shall arise between the smoke of the ashes of Eteocles and Polyinces, the brothers, which the old enmity separated even on the lighted funeral pile; Spring, too, shall mingle with Autumn, and Summer with Midwinter; and the West and the East shall be the same spot, before, having laid aside the arms which I have assumed, there shall be the friendship, thou wretch, between me and thee which thou hast broken by thy crimes: before this resentment can ever cease in length of time, or time and season can moderate my hatred. There will be that peace between us, so long as my life shall last, which there is wont to be between the wolves and the weak sheep. I, indeed, will commence the first warfare in the verse with which I have begun, although wars are not wont to be waged in this measure. And, as the lance of the light-armed soldier, not yet heated for the combat, is first aimed at the ground strewed with the yellow sand; so will I not at first aim at thee with the sharp steel; nor shall my spear at once strike at thy hated head, neither will I mention thy name, or thy actions in this book; and I will suffer thee, for a little time, to conceal who thou art. Afterwards, shouldst thou persist, the bold lambic measure shall provide me with weapons against thee, steeped in the blood of Lycambes.

At present, I curse thee and thine, in the same manner in which Callimachus, the son of Battus, curses his enemy, the Ibis. And as he does, I will involve my lines in dark fables, although I am not accustomed to practise this kind of composition. Emulating his obscurities in his Ibis, I shall be pronounced forgetful of my taste and of my skill. And as I do not disclose to inquirers, for the present who thou art, do thou as well, in the meantime take the name of Ibis. As my lines will contain some obscurity, so be the whole tenor of thy life overcast. I will cause some one to read these lines to thee on thy birthday, and on the Calends of Janus, with no deceiving lips.

Ye Gods of the sea and of the land, and ye who, together with Jove, possess realms still better than these between the opposite poles, I pray all of you to turn hither your attention, and to allow due weight to attend my wishes. And do thou, Earth, and thou Ocean with thy waves, and thou Æther on high, receive my prayers; ye stars too, and thou form of the Sun, surrounded with rays; thou Moon too, who never shinest with the same aspect with which thou didst the day before; thou Night too, awful in the appearance of thy shades: and ye Destinies as well, who spin your appointed task with three-fold fingers; and thou, Lethe, river of the water that sanctions no false oath, that rollest through the vallies of hell with terrific roar and you Furies, who they say, are seated before the dark doors of the dungeon, with your locks wreathed with twisted vipers; and you, too, the commonalty of the Divinities, ye Fauns, and Satyrs, and Lares, and Streams, and Nymphs, and thou race of Demigods. And lastly, all ye Gods both old and young, from ancient Chaos down to our time, assist, while imprecatory verses are being repeated against this perfidious head, and anger and resentment are performing their part; favour my desires all of you, each in his order, and let no fraction of my wishes be unrealized. Let the things that I pray for come to pass, that he may suppose that they were not my sayings, but the words of the son-in-law of Pasiphaë. May he suffer, too, those punishments, which I shall omit; may he be wretched to an extent beyond my imagination. And let not my prayers that execrate a fictitious name, prevail the less for that reason, or influence in a less degree the great Gods.

I accurse him, whom my mind understands as the Ibis; who knows that by his crimes he has deserved this execration, i am guilty of no delay; as the priest, I will go through the prayers resolved on by me. Whoever ye be, that are present at my rites, aid me, all of you, with your words. Whoever ye be, that are present at my rites, utter words of sadness; and approach the Ibis with tearful cheeks; meet him with inauspicious words, and with the left foot advanced; and let black vestments clothe your bodies. And thou too, Ibis, why dost thou hesitate to assume the mournful fillets? the altar, as thou seest, is now standing ready for thy doom. The procession is prepared for thee; be there no delay in the fulfilment of my vows of ill omen for thee. Victim accursed, extend thy throat for my knives. May the earth deny thee its produce, the stream its waters; may the wind, and may the air deny thee their breezes. May the sun be no longer bright for thee, nor the moon shining: may all the stars fade from before thy eyes. Let neither Vulcan, God of fire, nor air afford thee their use: let neither the land nor the sea afford thee a passage. An exile and in need, mayst thou wander; mayst thou visit the thresholds of others; and mayst thou beg a little morsel with tremulous lips. Let neither thy body nor thy weakened mind be free from complaining pain; and may the night prove more tormenting to thee than the day, the day than the night. Mayst thou ever be wretched; and mayst thou be pitied by none. Let both man and woman rejoice in thy misfortunes. Let hatred be added to thy tears, and when thou art enduring a multitude of woes, mayst thou be deemed worthy of still more. May too, which seldom happens, the hateful appearance of thy sorrow be deprived of the usual interest. May the occasion of death not be wanting to thee, but may its opportunity be denied thee: may life, forced upon thee, never meet with the death that is longed for. May thy breath, only after a prolonged struggle, forsake thy agonized limbs: and may it torment thee first by a lengthened procrastination.

These things will come to pass. Phoebus himself, this moment, gave me signs of the future, and a bird of bad omen flew on my left hand. Assuredly, I will always believe that what I wish will influence the Gods above; and, perfidious wretch! I shall ever be nourished by the hope of thy destruction. That day will come to pass, which will hereafter take thee away from me; that day will come to pass, which comes but slowly for me. And may that day, which approaches but tardily for me, first take away this life, often the object of thy attacks, before this resentment ever fade in length of years, or time or season modify my hatred. So long as the Thracian shall fight with the javelins, the lazyges with the bow, so long as the Ganges shall be warm, the Danube be cold; so long as the mountains shall have their oaks, the plains their soft pasturage, so long as the Etrurian Tiber shall have yellow waters, so long with thee will I wage war; even death shall not put an end to my wrath, but to one ghost shall it give ruthless arms against another spirit. Then, too, when I shall have flitted into vacant air, my lifeless phantom shall still hate thy shade; even then, as a ghost, I will approach, not unforgetful of thy crimes, and, a skeleton form, I will attack thy face. Whether I shall be worn out by length of years, a thing I would not desire, or whether I shall depart by a death caused by my own hand; whether I shall be tost in shipwreck along the boundless waves, and the fish from afar shall prey on my entrails; whether foreign birds shall tear my limbs, or whether wolves shall stain their jaws with my blood; or whether any one shall deign to deposit me in the earth, or to give my lifeless body to an humble pile; whatever I shall be, I shall struggle to escape from the Stygian regions, and, as my own avenger, I will extend my cold hands to thy features. In thy watchings thou shalt behold me; seeming to be present in the silent darkness of night, I will disturb thy sleep. In fine, whatever thou shalt be doing, I will hover before thy face and thy eyes, and I will wail; in no spot shalt thou be at rest. The twisted thongs shall send forth their sounds, and the torches, wreathed with snakes, shall ever be smoking before thy conscience-stricken face; by these Furies, while yet living, thou shalt be tormented, and by the same when dead. Thy life will prove shorter than thy punishment. Obsequies and the tears of thy friends, shall not be thy lot; undeplord shalt thou be thrown out. Thou shalt be dragged by the hand of the executioner, amid the shouts of the people, and the hook shall be fixed amid thy bones. The very flames, which devour everything, shall fly from thee; the retributive earth shall reject thy hated carcase with disgust. With talons and bill shall the sluggish vulture drag thy entrails, and the greedy dogs shall tear asunder thy perfidious heart. Over thy body, too, (although thou mayst be elated at such a compliment), there shall be strife among the insatiate wolves. Thou wilt be banished to a spot far away from the Elysian Plains, and thou wilt inhabit the abodes which the guilty crowd occupies. Sisyphus is there, both rolling his stone and catching it as it falls; and Ixion, who is whirled, fastened to the circumference of the revolving wheel; the Danaides, too, grand-daughters of Belus, who bear on their shoulders the water that ever flows away, the daughters-in-law of Ægyptus, a blood-stained crowd; Tantalus, the father of Pelops, catches at the apples, ever at hand, and the same person is ever thirsting for, yet ever abounding with the flowing water; Tityus, too, who at his crown many hundred yards distant from his feet, there affords his entrails, as the due of the ever-present bird. There one of the Furies will lacerate thy sides with a whip, that thou mayst confess the number of thy crimes; another one will give thy tom limbs to the dragons of Tartarus; the third will roast thy smoking cheeks with fire. Thy guilty shade shall be tormented in a thousand ways, and Æacus shall be quite refined in thy tortures. To thee shall he transfer the torments of those men of olden time; thou shalt be a cause of rest to the shades of the ancients. Sisyphus, thou shalt have one, to whom thou mayst hand over thy burden that ever rolls back again; the rapid wheels shall now whirl the limbs of a new victim. He it shall be, who shall in vain catch at the boughs and the water; he shall feed the bird with his undiminished entrails.

No other end shall terminate the punishment of this death, and no hour shall be the last for miseries so great. I will mention a few of the number; just as though any one were to pick leaves from Ida, or skim water from the surface of the Libyan sea. For, I can neither recount how many flowers spring up in the Sicilian Hybla, nor how many ears of saffron the Sicilian land produces; nor yet with how many hailstones Athos is made white, when the ruthless storm rages on the wings of the North wind. Nor yet could all thy woes be enumerated by my voice, even though thou shouldst give me multiplied mouths. Sorrows will come upon thee, O wretched man so many and so great, that I could fancy that even I could be forced to weep. Those tears will make me happy unceasingly; then will those tears be far sweeter to me than laughter. Of ill omen wast thou born; thus did the Gods will; and there was no star favouring or propitious at thy birth. No Venus shone, no Jupiter, at that hour; neither Sun nor Moon was in a favourable position. Mercury, whom the beautiful Maia bore to the great Jove, did not afford thee his light situate with any kind influence for thee. The stars of Mars, and of the old man with the scythe, ruthless and foreboding no tranquillity, overwhelmed thee. The day, too, of thy birth, that thou mightst see nothing but what was sinister, was foul and lowering with clouds o'ercast. This was the day to which Calamitous Allia gives a name in the Calendar; a day which produced the Ibis as well, a public disgrace. Soon as he, falling from the womb of his impure mother, came in contact with the Cinyphian ground with his filthy body, the owl of the night sat on an opposite house-top and uttered his ill-boding notes with funereal voice. Forthwith the Furies washed him in the sedge of the swamp, where the deep waters had overflowed from the Stygian pools. They besmeared his breast with the venom of the serpent of Erebus, and thrice did they clap their blood-stained hands; they filled, too, his infant throat with the milk of a bitch; this was the first nourishment that entered the mouth of the child. Thence does the fosterling imbibe the savage nature of his nurse; and, throughout all the Forum, does he bark out his canine words. They swathed his limbs, too, with clouts dipped in rust, which they snatched from a funereal pile that had been shamelessly deserted. And, that it might not lie down, supported by the bare earth, they placed his youthful head upon the flint stones. And, when now they were about to depart, they waved near his eyes, and before his face, torches made of green branches. The infant cried, soon as he came in contact with the pungent smoke; when thus spoke one Sister of the three: "Those tears have we destined for thee to endless time, which shall ever flow with a cause to excite them." She spoke. Clotho ordered her promises to take effect, and, with envenomed hand, she spun the black warp. And that she might not have to pronounce the lengthened foreboding of his days, she said, "There will be a Poet who shall foretell thy destiny."

I am that Poet; from me shalt thou learn thy sorrows; if only the Gods give their own energy to my words; and if the confirmation of events, which thou shalt find to be true throughout thy griefs, is consequent upon my lines. And that thou mayst not be tortured without the precedents of former ages, may thy woes be no lighter than those of the Trojans. Mayst thou, too, on thy gangrened foot bear wounds as numerous as Philoctetes, the Pæantian hero, the heir of the club-bearing Hercules. Mayst thou feel no less pain than Telephus, he who sucked the udder of the hind, and who received the wound of Achilles in arms, his cure as a friend; or than Bellerophon, who fell headlong from his horse upon the Aleïan plains, whose beauty was nearly his own destruction. Mayst thou see that which Phoenix, the son of Amyntor did; and, deprived of thy eyes, mayst thou tremblingly grope thy way with the assisting stick. And mayst thou see no better, than Ædipus, whom Antigone, his own daughter guided; whose criminality either | parent experienced. Mayst thou be just as Tiresias, the old man celebrated in the prophetic art of Apollo, after he was chosen umpire in the sportive dispute: just, too, as Phineus was, by whose directions the dove was given as the forerunner and guide of the bark, the work of Pallas; and like Polymnestor, who lost his eyes, by which, to his sorrow, he had beheld the gold; eyes which the bereft mother offered as an atoning sacrifice to the shades of her son. Like the shepherd of Ætna, whose future calamities Telemus, the son of Eurymus, had previously prophecied. Like the two sons of Phineus, whom the same person deprived of sight that gave it to them; like Thamyras and the person of Demodocus. May one mutilate thy members, just as Saturn cut off those parts, whence he had derived his origin. And may Neptune be no more favourable to thee on the boisterous waves, than he was to Ceyx, whose brother and wife suddenly became birds; and to Ulysses, the sagacious man, upon whom Ino, the sister of Semele, took compassion, as he clung to the shattered remnants of his ship. Or, that one only may not have been acquainted with that kind of punishment, let thy divided entrails be torn asunder by horses going different ways. Or, mayst thou endure thyself what Regulus, who thought it shameful to be redeemed, bore from the Punic general. And may no Divinity be present to aid thee; as it was with Priam, to whom the altar of Hercean Jove, as a place of refuge, was of no avail. And just as Thessalus was precipitated from the heights of Ossa, mayst thou be hurled as well from the rocky steep; or may thy limbs be a prey to greedy snakes, just like those of Euryalus, who received the sceptre after him. Or may the boiling stream of water poured over thee hasten thy death, like that of Minos; and just as Prometheus, mayst thou feed the fowls of the air with thy blood far from guiltless, but not so with impunity. Or, like the son of Etracus, the fifth from the thrice great Hercules, mayst thou be hurled, when slain, into the boundless ocean. Or may some boy, loved with a disgraceful affection, hate thee and wound thee with the ruthless sword, like Philip, the son of Amyntas.

May, too, no draughts he mingled for thee, less treacherous, than were for him, who was born of Jove wearing the horns. Or mayst thou perish, suspended in the manner of the captive Achæus, who was miserably hanged, the gold-bearing stream attesting it. Or may a tile, hurled by the hand of the foe, crush thee, as it did him, who was famous with the kindred surname of the son of Achilles. And may thy bones repose no more quietly than those of Pyrrhus, which, scattered about, were strewed in the roads of Ambracia. And mayst thou die, just like the daughter of the descendant of Æacus, by the impelled darts; from Ceres it is not possible to conceal this wickedness. And, like the grandson of the King, just now mentioned in my verse, mayst thou drink extract of cantharides, a parent administering it. Or may some adulterous woman be called virtuous for thy murder; just as she was called virtuous, by whose avenging hand Leucon fell. And, mayst thou together with thyself, throw on the pile the dearest pledges of affection; an end which Sardanapalus experienced for his life. And may the sands, driven by the South wind, cover thy face, as they did that of Camhyses, who attempted to profane the temple of Libyan Jove. May the crumbling ashes consume thy bones, as they did of those who were slain by the treachery of the second Darius. Or, may cold and hunger be the cause of thy death, as with Neocles, that once was banished from olive-bearing Sicyon. Or, as he, of Atarna, mayst thou be disgracefully carried to thy superior, sewed up in the hide of a bull. Mayst thou also be stabbed in thy chamber, after the manner of Alexander of Pheræ, who was put to death by the sword of his wife. And, mayst thou, like Aleuas of Larissa, find, by thy wounds, those to be unfaithful, whom thou deemest trustworthy. And, just like Milo, under whose tyranny Pisa was tormented, mayst thou be precipitated alive in the subterranean waters. May those bolts, too, strike thee, which were sent by Jupiter against Adimantus, who ruled the realms of Phlius. Or, like, in days of old, Lenæus, from the regions of Amastris, mayst thou be deserted, naked on the ground, that is called by the name.

of Achilles. And just as either Eurydamas was thrice dragged around the pile of Thrasyllus, by Larissæan wheels, or, as Hector, who, with his body, made the circuit of the walls not destined to last, which he had frequently defended; and as, when the daughter of Hippomenes suffered a new kind of punishment, her adulterer is said to have been dragged on the Actæan soil: so, when thy odious life shall have left thy limbs, may avenging horses drag thy filthy carcase. May some protecting rock transfix thy entrails; as were once those of the Greeks, returning from Troy, transfixed in the Eubæan strait. And as the bold ravisher, Ajax, the son of Oileus, perished by lightning and the waves; so may fire aid the waves that are to overwhelm thee. May thy infatuated mind, too, be frenzied by the Furies, as with Marsyas, who, when flayed, had but one wound in the whole of his body. And, as with Lycurgus, the son of Dryas, who held the realms of Rhodope, who had not the same regard for both his feet. As it happened, too, in former times, to Hercules, at (Eta, and to the son-in-law of the Dragons, and to Orestes, the father of Tisamenus, and to Alcmæon, the husband of Callirhoë. And may thy wife be no more chaste than Ægile, that matron, at whom Tydeus might blush for a daughter-in-law; and, than Hypermnestra, the Locrian, who had intercourse with the brother of her husband, concealing it by the death of her handmaid. May the Gods also make thee able to rejoice in a wife, as faithful as Amphiaräus, the son-in-law of Talaus, and Agamemnon, the son-in-law of Tyndarus, did; and, as true as the Danaïdes, the grand-daughters of Belus, who, daring to contrive the death of their cousins, are overwhelmed everlastingly with water up to their necks. May she burn, too, with the flame of Byblis, and of Canace, as though with that of a torch; and be not thy sister known to thee, but in a criminal manner. Shouldst thou have a daughter; may she be as Pelopea was to Thyestes, Myrrha to her own father, and Nyctimene to hers; and may she be no more affectionate, or attached to the person of her father, than thy daughter was to thee, Pterelas, or thine to thee, Nisus; and, than Tullia, who made the place accursed by the fame of her wickedness, and crushed the limbs of her father with the wheels driven over them. Mayst thou die as the youths did, whose heads the summits of the gates of Pisa once supported; and, as Ænomaüs, who stained the ground that had been often bathed in that of the wretched Suitors, more deservedly with his own blood. And, as Myrtilus, the charioteer, did, the betrayer of the remorseless tyrant, who gave its new name to the Myrtoan sea. And, as those who, in vain, sought Atalanta, the damsel swift of foot; until she was caught, overtaken through the three apples. And as those who entered the irremeable retreats of the darkened habitation, that concealed the form of the wondrous monster, the Minotaur. Like those Trojans, whose six bodies, along with other six, Achilles, the son of Æacus, in his rage, placed upon the lofty pile. Like those, whom we read that the Sphynx devoted to a horrid death, when deceived by the obscurities of her ambiguous language. Like those who were slain in the temple of the Bistonian Minerva; on which account even now the face of the Goddess is covered. Like those, who once, as food, made the mangers of the Thracian king red with blood. Like those who were exposed to the lions of Therodamas, and like those who were sacrificed at the Tauric rites of the Goddess worshipped by Thoas. Like those whom voracious Scylla, and Charybdis, opposite to Scylla, snatched trembling from the Dulichian ship: like those whom Polyphemus despatched into his vast paunch: like those who entered into the houses of the Læstrygons. Like those whom the Punic general drowned in the waters of the well, and made the stream white with the dust thrown in.

Just as the twice six maid servants of Penelope, the daughter of Icarus, and her suitors perished, and like Melanthius, too, who furnished those suitors with arms against the life of his master. Just as Antæus, the wrestler, who lies prostrate, thrown by the Aonian stranger, one who (wondrous to relate) was conqueror after he had fallen. Like those whom the strong arms of Antæus crushed; and those whom the Lemnian multitude put to a cruel death: like him, who, the discoverer of cruel rites, slain as a victim, brought down the showers of rain after a length of time. As Busiris, the brother of Antæus, strewed the altars with that blood which, injustice, he ought, and was slain himself, after the example he had set: and as Diomedes, who, in his impiety, fed his terrible steeds with human entrails, in place of the blade containing the grain: like the two that were slain, on different occasions, by the same avenger, Nessus, and Eurytion, the son-in-law of Dexamenus. Like thy great grandson, Saturn, Periphetas, whom Æscidapius, the son of Coronis, from his own City saw yield up his life. Like Sinnis and Scyron, the robbers, and Procrustes, the son of Polypemon, and the Minotaur, who was a man in one part, a bull in another. Like him, too, who, surveying the waters of this sea and of that, used to let the pine trees pressed down spring up from the ground into the air; and like the body of Cercyon, which Ceres beheld, with joyful countenance, dying by the hand of Theseus. May these curses, which my anger calls down with merited prayers, be thy lot, or others not more tolerable than these woes. Just as Achæmenides, deserted on Sicilian Ætna, was, when he beheld the Trojan sails approach.

Such, too, as was the fortune of the two-named Irus, and of those who post themselves as beggars on the bridge, a fortune which shall be more intolerable to thee. In vain may Plutus, the son of Ceres, ever be loved by thee; and may he, ever sought, desert thy fortunes. And as the soft sand gives way under the pressure of the foot, as the water ebbs and flows, so may thy possessions always melt in some indescribable manner; and, slipping through the midst of thy hands, may they ever flow away. Mayst thou, when filled, be wasted by insatiate hunger, like the father of the damsel who was wont to assume various forms. And may no loathing of human flesh come on thee; and in the only respect that thou canst, thou shalt be the Tydeus of the present day. And mayst thou perpetrate some crime, by reason of which the steeds of the horror-stricken Sun may again be turned from the West towards the East. Thou shalt repeat the foul banquet of the table of Lycaon, and thou shalt attempt to deceive Jupiter by the false appearance of thy viands. I wish, too, that some one would try the power of the Divinity, by serving thee up; that thou mayst be the son of Tantalus, and the boy of Tereus. And may thy limbs be scattered over the wide fields, as those were which arrested the progress of the father of Medea. Mayst thou imitate the real bulls in the brass of Perillus, with a voice adapted to the figure of the bull. And, like the cruel Phalaris, thy tongue first cut out with the sword, mayst thou lament in imitation of the bull, enclosed in Paphian brass. And whilst thou shalt desire to return to the years of a more youthful age, mayst thou be outwitted like Pelias, the aged father-in-law of Admetus. On horseback mayst thou be swallowed, like Curtius, in the gulf of the pervading swamp, only so that there be no glory in thy deed. And mayst thou perish, like those sprung from the teeth sown in the Grecian fields by the Sidonian hand of Cadmus. May the direful imprecations fall upon thy head which the grandson of Pentheus uttered, and the brother of Medusa; and those with which, in the little book, the bird was accursed, which purges its own body with water injected. And mayst thou endure as many wounds as Osiris is said to have borne, from whose rites the knife is said to be absent. And mayst thou insanely hack thy worthless members to the Phrygian tune, like those whom Mother Cybele influences.

From a man mayst thou be made neither man nor woman, like Atys; and mayst thou shake the jarring tambourine with effeminate hand. Mayst thou, too, suddenly be changed into a lion, the beast of the great Mother Cybele, just as the conqueror, and she that was conquered in the foot-race, were transformed. And, that Limone alone may not have experienced that punishment, may the horse tear thy entrails, too, with savage tooth. Or, as he of Cassandria, not less cruel than that tyrant, mayst thou, wounded, be entombed in the earth heaped on thee. Or, as Perseus, the descendant of Abas, of the Cycneian hero, mayst thou, shut up, be precipitated into the waves of the deep; or mayst thou be slain, a victim at the sacred altars of Phoebus; a death which Theudotus received at the hands of a cruel enemy. Or may Abdera devote thee on the appointed days, and may multitudes of stones, in a shower, be hurled upon thee so devoted.

Or mayst thou be struck by the three-forked bolt of Jove, like Capaneus, the son of Hipponoüs, and like Atrax, the father of Dositheö; like Semele, the sister of Autonoë; like Jasius, whose aunt was Maia; like him, who badly guided the horses that in his rashness he had desired. Like Salmoneus, the eruel son of Æolus; like him born of the same parent as she was sprung from, who, as the Bear, ever avoids the flowing waters. As Macedo, with her husband, was struck by the swift lightnings, so, I pray, mayst thou fall by the fires of the heavenly avenger. Mayst thou also be a prey to the dogs, by which Latonian Delos may not be approached, Thasus, the priest of Apollo, having been tom by them, before his time; and who pulled in pieces him who beheld the bath of the modest Diana, and Linus, the grandson of Crotopus. And mayst thou not be more lightly stung by the venomous serpents than Eurydice, the daughter-in-law of the old man Oeagrus, and of Calliope; than Opheltis, the son of Hypsipyle; than Laocoon, who was the first to pierce with his sharp spear the wood of the suspected horse. And mayst thou not approach the lofty stairs more cautiously than Elpenor, and mayst thou feel the effects of wine in the same manner as he did. And mayst thou fall, as much vanquished as each Dryopian that aided the inhuman Thiodamas, who called them to arms; as much as Cacus, who fell slaughtered in his own cave, betrayed by the voice of the heifer shut up there; as much as Lichas, who bore the gifts dipped in the Lernæan venom, and who dyed the Eubœan waves with his own blood. Or mayst thou come to Tartarus from the steep rock, like him who read the Socratic book upon death; like him who beheld the deceiving sails of the ship of Theseus; like the boy Astyanaæ, who was hurled from the towers of Troy; like Ino, the nurse of the infant Bacchus, who was his aunt; like him, the cause of whose death was the invention of the saw. Like the Lydian virgin, who threw herself from the lofty rocks, and who had uttered opprobrious expressions to the reluctant Deity. May a pregnant lioness, a native of thy country, meet thee on thy paternal soil, and may she be the cause of thy death, resembling that of Phayllus, king of Ambracia. May, too, the boar which slew the son of Lycurgus, and Adonis, who was born of a tree, and the bold Idmon, tear thee as well; and may he, even when dead, give thee a wound, as with him, upon whose face the head of the transfixed boar fell. Or mayst thou be like him whom a pine-nut slew with a similar fate, and mayst thou be as the Phrygian, and the hunter of Berecynthus. Should thy ship touch upon the Minoïan sands, may the Cretan multitude take thee to be a Corcyræan. Mayst thou enter a house about to fall, like the offspring of Aleuas, when the Constellation was propitious to the man who was the son of Leoprepis. And, like either Evenus or Tiberinus, drowned in the rapid stream, mayst thou give a name to the flowing river. And may thy head, a fit prey for wild beasts, be a prey for man, cut off like that of the son of Astacus, from thy muticarcass. And, as they say that Broteas did, in his desirous for death, mayst thou place thy limbs to be burnt on the lighted pile: Shut up in a cage, mayst thou suffer death, like the compiler of the history, that availed him nothing. May, too, thy insolent tongue prove thy destruction, as it was the ruin of the inventor of the abusive lambics. Like him, too, who slandered Athens in his limping verse, mayst thou perish, despised, for want of food. And, as the poet of the satirical lyre is said to have perished, may thy breach of faith be the cause of thy ruin. And, as the serpent gave the wound to Orestes, the son of Agamemnon, mayst thou, too, perish from a sting containing venom. May the first night of thy marriage be the last of thy life: Eupolis and his new made bride died in this manner. As they say that Lycophron the Tragedian perished, so may an arrow stand fixed in thy vitals. Or, torn in pieces, mayst thou be scattered in the woods, by the hands of thy relations; just as Pentheus was scattered about, at Thebes, who was descended from Cadmus changed into a dragon for his grandsire. And mayst thou be drawn over the wild mountains, a bull dragging thee; just as Dirce, the tyrannical wife of Lycus, was dragged. And, that which Philomela the unwilling supplanter of her sister suffered, may thy tongue, cut out, fall before thy feet. Like him that was named Astacus, having been slain in the Theban war, his head, when cut off, was mangled and gnawed by Tydeus, to the great disgust of Minerva.

Blæsus, the founder of Cyrrha, late in its erection, mayst thou be found in innumerable parts of the world. And may the industrious bee, as it did to the poet Achseus, fix its hurtful sting in thy eyes. Bound, too, on the hard rocks, mayst thou have thy entrails torn, like Prometheus, whose brother's daughter was Pyrrha. Like the son of Harpagus, mayst thou recall the example of Thyestes, and, slaughtered, mayst thou enter the bowels of thy parent. Mayst thou have thy members mutilated, thy parts being lopped off by the cruel sword, just as they say that the limbs of Mimnermus were. And as it was with the Syracusan poet, may the passage of thy breath be closed, thy throat being stopped up. May thy entrails, too, lie exposed, the skin being stripped off; like him whose name the Phrygian river bears. Mayst thou, to thy misery, look upon the face of Medusa, that changes into stone, she who, though but one, put to death many of the subjects of Cepheus. Mayst thou feel the bite of the mares of Potniæ like Glaucus, and mayst thou leap into the water of the sea, like another Glaucus. And as, with him who had the same names as the two just now mentioned, may Gnoasian honey stop up the passage of thy breath. Mayst thou too drink, with trembling lips, the same which Socrates, the most learned of men, accused by Anytus, once drank with serene countenance. May nothing, shouldst thou love anything, happen to thee more fortunately than it did to Hæmon; and mayst thou enjoy thy own sister, as Macareus did his. Or mayst thou behold what the son of Hector saw from his native towers, when now the flames prevailed on every side. Mayst thou expiate thy crimes with thy blood, like Adonis, who was begotten by his father, who was his grandfather, and whose own sister, by criminality, became his mother. May such a kind of weapon stick in thy bones as that with which Ulysses, the son-in-law of Icarius, is said to have been slain. And as the loquacious throat was stopped up in the horse that was made of maple wood, so may the passage of thy voice be closed by the thumb. Or, like Anaxarchus, mayst thou be brayed in a deep mortar, and may thy bones, when struck, rattle instead of the real corn. And may Phoebus enclose thee in the lowest depths of Tartarus, as he did Crotopus, the father of Psamathe; the same as he had done to his own daughter. May that plague, too, attack thy family which the right hand of Choræbus conquered, and so aided the wretched Argives. Like Hippolytus, the grandson of Æthra, doomed to perish through the wrath of Venus, mayst thou, in exile, be dragged by thy frightened horses. As the host, Polymnestor, slew his foster-child, on account of his great riches, may thy host slay thee, on account of thy want of riches. As they say, too, that his six brothers were slain, together with Damasicthon, son of Niobe, so may all thy race perish, together with thee. As the harper, Amplon, added his own death to that of his wretched children, so mayst thou have a deserved loathing of thy own life. Or, like Niobe, the sister of Pelops, mayst thou become hard with rock growing over thee, and, like Battus, who was ruined by his own tongue. If thou shalt cleave the vacant air with the hurled quoit, mayst thou fall, struck by the same circle as the boy, Hyacinthus, the son of (Ebalus. If any water shall be cleaved by thy alternating arms, may every stream prove more injurious to thee than that of Abydos, over which Leander swam. As the Comedian perished in the midst of the waves, while he was swimming, so may the Stygian water suffocate thee. Or else, when, shipwrecked, thou shalt have escaped the boisterous sea, mayst thou perish on touching the shore, as Palinurus did. And may the pack of watchful hounds, the care of Diana, tear thee too in pieces, like the Poet of Tragedy. Or like Empedocles, of Trinacria, mayst thou leap upon the face of the giant Enceladus, where the Sicilian Ætna vomits forth flames in abundance. May the Strymonian matrons tear asunder thy limbs with insane nails, thinking they are those of Orpheus. As Meleager, the son of Althæa, burned with distant flames, so may thy funereal pile be consumed by the flame of a branch. As the new-made bride, Creusa, was deceived by the Phasian chaplet, and as the father of the bride, and, with the father, the household. As the venom, diffused, pervaded the limbs of Hercules, so may the pestilential poison consume thy body. May those wounds, from a new-fashioned weapon, await thee too, by means of which his offspring avenged Lycurgus, the son of Pentheus. And, like Milo, mayst thou endeavour to cleave the fissile oak; and mayst thou be unable to remove thence thy hands caught there. Mayst thou perish, too, through thy own gifts, like Icarus; against whom the drunken crowd raised their hands in arms. And as Erigonc, his affectionate daughter, did, through grief for her father's death, do thou cause the noose of the rope to go round thy throat. Mayst thou too endure famine, the threshold of the house being blocked up, like him to whom his own mother herself gave sentence of punishment. Mayst thou outrage the statues of Diana, after the example of Agamemnon, who sped on his rapid path from the port of Aulis. After the example of Palamedes, the son of Nauplius, mayst thou be punished with death on a false accusation: and may it be of no advantage to thee that thou didst not deserve it. As the host, the priest of Isis, deprived Æthalius of his life, whom, lo remembering it even to this day, drives afar from her rites. And as the bereft mother, by the aid of her lamp, betrayed Melantlieus as he lurked in darkness after the murder; so may thy breast be pierced with the hurled darts; so, I pray, mayst thou be injured by thy own allies. May such a night be passed by thee, as was by Bolon, the Phrygian coward, who bargained for the horses which the brave Achilles used to drive. Mayst thou, too, enjoy no better sleep than Rhesus did, and those who were the companions of Rhesus, both in his death and before, in his journey; and, than they did, whom the active son of Hyrtacus, and his companion, put to death, together with the Rutulian Rhamnes. Surrounded, too, like the son of Clinias, with smoky flames, mayst thou carry thy half-burnt limbs to Stygian doom. May rustic arms also prove the destruction of thy life, as they were for Remus, who dared to pass over the new-built walls. Lastly, I pray, that amid Sarmatian and Getic arrows, thou mayst live and die in these regions. These things have been only sent thee in a hurried work, that thou mayst not complain that I am forgetful of thee. They are few indeed, I confess, but may the Gods grant more than is asked for, and, in their kindness, may they multiply my wishes.

Hereafter, thou shalt read still more, and that which shall contain thy true name, written in Iambics, the measure in which ruthless warfare ought to be waged.

END OF THE INVECTIVE AGAINST THE IBIS.

TRISTIA

Translated by Arthur Leslie Wheeler

Consisting five books of elegiac poetry, this is a collection of letters written during the poet's exile from Rome, bewailing his fate. The first book contains 11 poems, beginning with an address by Ovid to his book about how it should act when it arrives in Rome. The collection contains some of Ovid's most moving verses, with nostalgic and beautiful descriptions of Rome. The poems are heavily tinged with regret and sorrowful yearning. Sadly, the verses failed to move the Emperor and the poet was doomed never to return to his beloved city.

I. THE POET TO HIS BOOK

LITTLE book, you will go without me — and I grudge it not — to the city. Alas that your master is not allowed to go! Go, but go unadorned, as becomes the book of an exile; in your misfortune wear the garb that befits these days of mine. You shall have no cover dyed with the juice of purple berries — no fit colour is that for mourning; your title shall not be tinged with vermilion nor your paper with oil of cedar; and you shall wear no white bosses upon your dark edges. Books of good omen should be decked with such things as these; 'tis my fate that you should bear in mind. Let no brittle pumice polish your two edges; I would have you appear with locks all rough and disordered. Be not ashamed of blots; he who sees them will feel that they were caused by my tears.

15 Go, my book, and in my name greet the loved places: I will tread them at least with what foot I may. If, as is natural in so great a throng, there shall be any there who still remembers me, any who may perchance ask how I fare, you are to say that I live, yet not in health and happiness; that even the fact of life I hold to be the gift of a god. Except for this be silent — for he who asks more must read you — and take care that you chance not to say what you should not; forthwith, if but a reminder be given, the reader will recall my sins, and I shall still be convicted by the people's voice as a public criminal. Do you take care to make no defence though attacked with biting words; my case is not a good one, and will prove too difficult for advocacy. You are to find one who sighs over my exile, reading your lines with cheeks that are not dry, one who will utter a silent prayer unheard by any ill-wisher, that through the softening of Caesar's anger my punishment may be lightened. On my part I pray that whoever he may be, suffering may not come to him who wishes the gods to be kind to suffering. May his wish be fulfilled! May the removal of the Prince's wrath grant me the power to die at home in my country!

35 Though you should carry out my directions you will be criticized perchance, my book, and regarded as beneath the glory of my genius.'Tis a judge's duty to investigate both the circumstances and the time of an act. If they ask the time you will be secure. Poetry comes fine spun from a mind at peace; my days are clouded with unexpected woes. Poetry requires the writer to be in privacy and ease; I am harassed by the sea, by gales, by wintry storms. Poetry is injured by any fear; I in my ruin am ever and ever expecting a sword to pierce my throat. Even the making of such verse as this will surprise a fair-minded critic and he will read these verses with indulgence, however poor they are. Pray bring the Maeonian and cast just as many dangers about him; all his genius will fall away in the presence of such great ills.

49 Take heed, then, my book, to go untroubled about fame, and be not ashamed that your readers gain no pleasure. Fortune is not now so favourable to me that you should take account of your praise. In the time of my security I was touched by the love of renown, and I burned to win a name. Now let it be enough if I do not hate poetry and the pursuit which has injured me; through that my own wit has brought me exile. But do you go in my stead, do you, who are permitted to do so, gaze on Rome! Would that the gods might grant me now to be my book! — and think not, because you enter into the great city as one from foreign lands, that you can come as a stranger to the people. Though you should lack a title, your very style will bring recognition; though you should wish to play the deceiver, it is clear that you are mine. And yet enter secretly, that my verses may not harm you; they are not popular as once they were. If there shall be anybody who thinks you unworthy to be read for the reason that you are mine and repels you from his breast, say to him, "Examine the title. I am not the

69 Perchance you are waiting to see if I shall send you to the lofty Palatine and bid you mount to Caesar’s house. May those places of awe and the gods of those places grant me pardon! It was from that citadel that the bolt fell upon this head of mine. There are, I know, in those shrines deities of exceeding mercy, but I still fear the gods who have wrought me harm. The least rustle of a feather brings dread upon the dove that thy talons, O hawk, have wounded. Nor does any lamb, once wrested from the teeth of a ravenous wolf, venture to go far from the fold. Phaëthon would avoid the sky if he were alive; the steeds which in his folly he desired, he would refuse to touch.

I — too admit — for I have felt it — that I fear the weapon of Jupiter: I believe myself the target of a hostile bolt whenever the thunder roars. Every man of the Argive fleet who escaped the Capherean rocks always turned his sails away from the waters of Euboea; and even so my bark, once shattered by a mighty storm, dreads to approach that place where it was wrecked. Therefore be careful, my book, and look all around with timid heart, so as to find content in being read by ordinary folk. By seeking too lofty heights on weak wings Icarus gave a name to waters of the sea. Yet from this position of mine’tis hard to say whether you should use the oars or the breeze. You will be advised by the time and the place. If you can be handed to him when he is at leisure, if you see everything kindly disposed, if his anger has lost its keenness, if there is anybody, while you are hesitating in fear to approach, who will hand you to him, introducing you with but a few brief words — then approach him. On a lucky day and with better fortune than your master may you arrive there and lighten my misfortunes. For either nobody can remove them or, in the fashion of Achilles, that man only who wounded me. Only see that you do no harm in your wish to help — for my hope is smaller than my fear — and that slumbering wrath! — take care that it be not roused to renewed fierceness and that you be not to me a second cause of punishment.

105 But when you find refuge in my sanctuary, reaching your own home, the round book-cases, you will behold there brothers arranged in order — brothers whom the same craftsmanship produced with toil and waking. The rest of the band will display their titles openly, bearing their names on their exposed edges, but three at some distance will strive to hide themselves in a dark place, as you will notice — even so, as everybody knows, they teach how to love. These you should either avoid or, if you have the assurance, give them the names of Oedipus or of Telegonus. And I warn you, if you have any regard for your father, love not any one of the three, though he himself teach you. There are also thrice five rolls about changing forms, poems recently saved from the burial of my fortunes. To these I bid you say that the aspect of my own fate can now be reckoned among those metamorphosed figures. For that aspect has on a sudden become quite different from what it was before — a cause of tears now, though once of joy. More directions for you, if you ask me, I have been keeping, but I fear to be the cause of lingering delay; and if you were to carry with you, my book, all that occurs to me, 'tis likely you would be a heavy burden to him who shall bear you. The road is long. Make haste! I shall continue to dwell at the edge of the world, a land far removed from my own.

II. STORM AND PRAYER

O gods of sea and sky — for what but prayer is left? — break not the frame of our shattered bark and second not, I implore, the wrath of mighty Caesar! Oft when a god presses hard another god brings succour. Mulciber was opposed to Troy, but in Troy's defence stood Apollo; Venus favoured the Teucrians, Pallas favoured them not. There was hate for Aeneas on the part of Saturnia who stood closely by Turnus; yet that hero was safe through Venus' power. Ofttimes unruly Neptune assailed the wily Ulysses; ofttimes Minerva saved him from her own uncle. And different though I am from them, who forbids a divine power from being of some avail to me against the angry god?

13 But, wretch that I am, to no purpose am I wasting profitless words. My very lips as I speak are sprayed by the heavy waves, and dread Notus hurls away my words nor suffers my prayers to reach the gods to whom they are directed. So the same winds, that I be not punished in one way only, are driving — I know not whither — both my sails and my prayers. Wretched me! what vast mountains of water heave themselves aloft! Now, now, you think, they will touch the highest stars. What mighty abysses settle beneath us as the flood yawns apart! Now, now you think they will touch black Tartarus. Wherever I gaze there is naught but sea and air — sea swollen with billows, air athreat with clouds; and between are the hum and roar of the cruel winds. The waves of ocean know not what master to obey. For now Eurus storms mightily from the red east, now Zephyrus comes rushing from the realm of late evening, now Boreas raves from the dry pole-star, now Notus battles with opposing brow. The helmsman is confused nor can he find what to avoid or what to seek; his very skill is numbed by the baffling perils. We are surely lost, there is no hope of safety, and as I speak, the waters overwhelm my face. The billows will crush this life of mine, and with lips that pray in vain I shall drink in the destroying water.

37 But my loyal wife grieves for naught save my exile — that is the only ill of mine she knows and bemoans. She knows not that I am buffeted about on the vast sea, knows not that I am harried by the winds, knows not that death is near me. Ah, well it was that I suffered her not to board ship with me, else I, poor wretch, should now be forced to suffer a double death! But as it is, even though I perish, in her freedom from peril at least I shall half survive. Alas! what a swift glitter of flame from the clouds! What a mighty crash roars from the zenith! And no lighter blow falls upon her planks from the billows than the heavy pounding of the balista upon a wall. Here comes a wave that o’ertops them all — the wave after the ninth and before the eleventh. I fear not death; ’tis the form of death that I lament. Save me from shipwreck and death will be a boon. ’Tis something worth if falling by fate or by the steel one rests in death upon the solid ground, utters some parting words to friends, and looks forward to a tomb — not to be the food of fishes in the sea. Suppose me deserving of such a death, yet I am not here the only passenger. Why does my punishment involve the innocent? O ye gods above and ye of the green flood, who rule the waters, — stay ye now, both hosts of you, your threats. The life that Caesar’s merciful wrath has granted, let me carry, unhappy man that I am, to the appointed place. If ye wish to ruin me with a penalty great as I have deserved, my fault even in my judge’s eyes merits not death. If ere now Caesar had wished to send me to the waters of the Styx, he had not needed your aid in this. He has a power over my life which ye may not begrudge; and what he has granted he will take away when he shall wish. But ye, whom surely no crime of mine has wronged, be content by now with my woes. And yet, though ye be all willing to save a wretch, that life which is lost cannot now be safe. Even should the sea grow calm and favouring breezes bear me on — even should ye spare me — I shall be not less an exile. Not in greed of limitless wealth do I plough the sea to trade my wares nor am I on my way to Athens as once I was while a student, nor to the cities of Asia, nor the places I have seen before, nor am I sailing to Alexander's famous city to see thy pleasures, merry Nile. The reason of my prayers for favouring winds (who could believe it?) is the Sarmatian land, the object of my voyage. I am constrained to reach the wild shores of ill-omened Pontus, and I complain that my journey into exile from my native land is so slow! That I may see the Tomitans, situate in some corner of the world, I am trying to shorten the road by prayer!

87 If it be that you love me, restrain these mighty billows, and let your powers favour my bark; or if you detest me, turn me towards the ordained land; a part of my punishment consists in the place of it. Drive me on, ye swift winds! What have I to do here? Why do my sails crave the Ausonian land? This was not Caesar's will. Why do you detain one whom he drives forth? Let the land of Pontus behold my face. He commands it and I have deserved it; nor do I account it lawful and righteous to defend the sins that he has condemned. Yet if human acts never deceive the gods, ye know that no guilty deed is connected with my fault. Nay, if such your knowledge, if a mistake of mine has carried me away, if stupid was my mind, not criminal, if — as even the humblest may — I have supported that house with favour, if the public commands of Augustus were in my eyes sufficient; if under his lead I have sung of a happy age, and for Caesar and the loyal Caesars I have offered incense; — if such has been my spirit, then spare me, gods! If not, may a towering wave fall and whelm my head!

107 Am I wrong or do the heavy clouds begin to melt away and is the water of the changing sea being conquered and subdued? It is no chance, but ye, summoned to hear my pledge, ye whom we cannot deceive, are bringing me this succour!

III. THE NIGHT OF EXILE

When steals upon me the gloomy memory of that night which marked my latest hours in the city — when I recall that night on which I left so many things dear to me, even now from my eyes the teardrops fall.

5 Already the morning was close at hand on which Caesar had bidden me to depart from Ausonia's furthest bounds. No time had there been or spirit to get ready what might suit best; my heart had become numb with the long delay. I took no thought to select my slaves or my companions or the clothing and outfit suited to an exile. I was as dazed as one who, smitten by the fire of Jove, still lives and knows not that he lives. But when my very pain drove away the cloud upon my mind and at length my senses revived, I addressed for the last time as I was about to depart my sorrowing friends of whom, just now so many, but one or two remained. My loving wife was in my arms as I wept, herself weeping more bitterly, tears raining constantly over her innocent cheeks. My daughter was far separated from us on the shores of Libya, and we could not inform her of my fate. Wherever you had looked was the sound of mourning and lamentation, and within the house was the semblance of a funeral with its loud outcries. Men and women, children too, grieved at this funeral of mine; in my home every corner had its tears. If one may use in a lowly case a lofty example, such was the appearance of Troy in the hour of her capture.

27 Now the voices of men and dogs were hushed and the moon aloft was guiding her steeds through the night. Gazing up at her, and by her light at the Capitol, which, all in vain, adjoined my home, I prayed: "Ye deities that dwell near by and ye temples never henceforth to be seen by my eyes, ye gods of this lofty city of Quirinus, whom I must leave, receive from me this my salutation for all time! And although too late I take up the shield when wounded, yet disburden of hatreds this banishment of mine; tell to that man divine what error beguiled me, that he may not think a fault to be a crime and that what you know he too, the author of my punishment, may feel. If the god be appeased I cannot be wretched.”

41 With such prayer as this I appealed to the gods, my wife with many more, the sobs interrupting her cries half uttered. She even cast herself with flowing hair before the Lares, touching the cold hearth with quivering lips and pouring forth to the Penates before her many words not destined to avail the spouse she mourned.

47 Now night hurrying to her close refused me time for lingering, and the Parrhasian bear had wheeled about her axis. What was I to do? The enthralling love of country held me, yet that was the last night before the exile that had been decreed. Alas! how many times did I say, as somebody hastened by, “Why do you hurry me? Consider whither you are hastening or whence!” Alas! how many times did I falsely say that I had a definite hour suited to my intended journey. Thrice I touched the threshold, thrice did something call me back, and my very feet moved slowly to gratify my inclination. Oft when I had said farewell once again I uttered many words, and as if I were in the act of setting forth I gave the final kisses. Oft I gave the same parting directions, thus beguiling myself, with backward look at the objects of my love. At last I said, “Why hasten? Tis Scythia whither I am going, ’tis Rome that I must leave. Both are good reasons for delay. My wife lives and I live, but she is being denied me forever and my home and the sweet inmates of that faithful home, and the comrades I have loved with a brother’s love, O hearts knit to me with Theseus’ faith! Whilst I may I will embrace you. Never more perhaps shall I have the chance. The hour granted me is so much gain.”

69 No longer delaying I left my words unfinished and embraced each object dearest to my heart. During my talk and our weeping, bright in the lofty sky Lucifer had arisen, to me a baneful star. I was torn asunder as if I were leaving my limbs behind — a very half seemed broken from the body to which it belonged. Such was the anguish of Mettus when the steeds were driven apart, punishing his treachery. Then in truth arose the cries and laments of my people; sorrowing hands beat upon naked breasts. Then in truth my wife, as she hung upon my breast at parting, mingled these sad words with my tears, “I cannot suffer you to be torn away. Together, together we will go; I will follow you and be an exile’s exiled wife. For me too the journey has been commanded, for me too there is room in the faraway land. My entrance will add but a small freight to your exile ship. You are commanded to flee your country by Caesar’s wrath, I — by my loyal love. This love shall be for me a Caesar.”

87 Such was her attempt, as it had been before, and with difficulty did she surrender her resolve for my profit. I set forth — if it was not rather being carried forth to burial without a funeral — unkempt, my hair falling over my unshaven cheeks. She, frenzied by grief, was overcome, they say, by a cloud of darkness, and fell half dead in the midst of our home. And when she rose, her tresses fouled with unsightly dust, raising her body from the cold ground, she lamented now her deserted self, now the deserted Penates, and often called the name of her ravished husband, groaning as if she had seen the bodies of her daughter and myself resting on the high-built pyre; she wished to die, in death to lay aside all feeling, yet from regard for me she did not die. May she live! and when I am far away — since thus the fates have willed — so live as by her aid to bring constant relief.

IV. ON THE DEEP

The guardian of the Erymanthian bear dips in ocean and with his setting stars makes stormy the waters of the sea. Yet I am cleaving the Ionian waves not of my own will but forced to boldness through fear. Wretched me! what mighty winds swell the waters, casting up the seething sand from the lowest depths! Mountain-high upon prow and out-curving stern leaps the billow lashing the painted gods. The pine-wrought fabric resounds, and the ropes, whipped by the shrieking wind, and the very keel groans over my woes. The sailor confessing by his pale face a chilling fear now in defeat humours the craft, no longer skilfully guiding her. As a rider who is not strong enough lets the ineffective reins fall loose upon the stubborn neck of his horse, so not where he wishes but where the billow's power carries him our charioteer, I see, has given the ship her head. And unless Aeolus changes the winds he sends forth, I shall be driven to a region that I must not now approach, for Illyria's shores are far behind on the left and forbidden Italy is beginning to appear. I pray the wind may cease its striving towards a forbidden land and may unite with me in obedience to the mighty god. Whilst I speak, at once afraid and eager to be driven back, with what mighty power the waves have set her beam to creaking! Mercy, ye gods of the dark sea, mercy! Let it suffice that Jupiter is angered against me. Save ye my weary life from cruel death, if only'tis possible for one already dead not to die!

V. TO A FAITHFUL FRIEND

You who shall never be named after any of my comrades, you who above all made my lot your own, who were the first, dearest one, I remember, to dare to support me with words of comfort after the bolt had struck, who gave me the gentle counsel to live when my wretched breast was filled with the love of death, — you know well to whom I am speaking by means of these symbols substituted for your name, nor are you unaware, my friend, of your own service. These things shall ever remain fixed in my inmost heart and I will be an everlasting debtor for this life of mine, my spirit shall be dispersed in the empty air leaving my bones on the warm pyre ere forgetfulness of your deserving steals into my heart and that loyalty of yours falls away from it through length of time. May the gods be gracious to you; to you may the gods grant a lot that craves the aid of no one, — a lot unlike mine.

17 And yet if this bark of mine were being borne on by a friendly breeze, perchance that loyalty of yours would be unknown. Theseus' friendship would not have been so keenly felt by Pirithous if he had not gone while still alive to the waters below. That the Phocian was a model of sincere love was due to thy madness, gloomy Orestes. If Euryalus had not fallen in with the Rutulian foe, Hyrtacian Nisus would have had no renown.'Tis clear that as tawny gold is tested in the flames so loyalty must be proved in times of stress. While Fortune aids us and a smile is upon her calm face, all things follow our unimpaired resources. But at the first rumble of the thunder they flee, and nobody recognizes him who but now was encircled with troops of comrades. This, which once I inferred from the examples of former men, now I know to be true from my own woes. Scarce two or three of you, my friends, once so many, remain to me; the rest were Fortune's following, not mine. And so, few though ye are, run all the more to aid my injured state and provide a secure shore for my shipwreck. Tremble not over much with false fear lest this loyalty give offence to our god. Ofttimes faith even among his enemies in arms has been praised by Caesar; when it exists among his own, he loves it; in an enemy he approves it. My case is still more favourable since I did not nurse strife against him, but earned this exile by my simplicity. Do you, then, watch on behalf of my fortunes, I beg of you, if in any way the wrath of the deity can be lessened.

45 If anyone desires to know all my fortunes he seeks more than the circumstances permit. I have endured woes as many as the stars that shine in heaven, or the grains that the dry dust holds; many have I borne too great to be believed and not destined to find credence, although they have really befallen me. A part, too, might well perish with me, and I wish that, since I would veil them, they might be hidden. If I had a tireless voice, lungs stronger than brass, and many mouths with many tongues, not even so could I embrace them all in words, for the theme surpasses my strength. Ye learned poets, write of my evils instead of the Neritian hero's! for I have borne more than the Neritian. He wandered over but a narrow space in many years — between the homes of Dulichium and Ilium; I, after traversing seas whole constellations apart, have been carried by fate to the bays of the Getae and Sarmatians. He had a faithful band of true companions; I in my flight have been abandoned by my comrades. He was seeking his native land in joy and victory; I have fled mine, vanquished and an exile. My home is not Dulichium or Ithaca or Samos, places from which absence is no great punishment, but Rome, that gazes about from her seven hills upon the whole world, — Rome, the place of empire and the gods. He had a frame sturdy and enduring of toil; I have but the frail strength of one gently nurtured. He had been constantly engaged in fierce warfare; I have been used to softer pursuits. I was crushed by a god and nobody lightened my sorrows; to him the goddess of war brought aid. And though the king of the swelling waves is inferior to Jove, he was oppressed by Neptune's wrath, I by that of Jove. Moreover, the largest part of his labours is fiction; in my woes no myth resides. And finally — he reached the home of his quest, attaining the fields he long had sought. But I must be forever deprived of my native land, unless the wrath of the injured god be softened.

VI. TO HIS WIFE

Not so great was the love of the Clarian bard for Lyde or that of her own Coan for Bittis as the love that clings in my heart for thee, my wife, for thee who art worthy of a less wretched, not a better, husband. Upon thee as upon a supporting pillar my ruins rest; if even now anything of me exists, it is all thy gift. 'Tis thy doing that I am not plundered nor stripped bare by those who have attacked the timbers of my wreckage. As the wolf ravening under the goad of hunger and eager for blood strives to catch the sheepfold unguarded, or as the hungry vulture peers about for the possible sight of some unburied corpse, so there was one, treacherous in my bitter fortune, who, hadst thou suffered it, would have come into my wealth. Him thy courage has repelled with the aid of spirited friends whom I can never thank as they deserve. Thus thou art approved by a witness as sincere as he is wretched, — if only such a witness carries any weight. In uprightness neither Hector's wife excels thee, nor Laodamia, companion of her husband in death. If fate had allotted thee the Maeonian bard, Penelope's fame would be second to thine, whether thou owest this to thyself, schooled to loyalty by no teacher, and such character was given thee with life's earliest dawn, or whether that first of women, revered by thee through all the years, teaches thee to be the model of a good wife and by long training has made thee like herself — if 'tis lawful to liken great things to small. Alas that great power lies not in my song and my lips cannot match thy merits! — if ever in former times I had aught of quickening vigour, all has been extinguished by my long sorrows! — else thou wouldst hold first place amid the revered heroines, first wouldst thou be looked upon because of thy qualities of heart. Yet so far as my praise has power, thou shalt live for all time in my song.

VII. THE METAMORPHOSES

Whoever you may be who possess a portrait of my features, remove from my locks the ivy, the chaplet of Bacchus. Such fortunate symbols are suited to happy poets; a wreath becomes not my temples. Hide the fact — yet feel it, too, — that this is said to you, my best of friends, who carry me about on your finger, and, clasping my image on the tawny gold, see the dear face — all that you can see — of an exile. Whenever you gaze upon it, you may perchance feel prompted to say, “How far away is our comrade Naso!” There is comfort in your love. But my verses are a more striking portrait, and these I bid you read however poor they are — the verses that tell of the changed forms of men, the work broken off by the unfortunate exile of their master.

15 These verses upon my departure, like so much that was mine, in sorrow I placed with my own hand in the fire. Just as Thestius' daughter burned her own son, they say, in burning the branch, and proved a better sister than mother, so I placed the innocent books consigned with me to death, my very vitals, upon the devouring pyre, because I had come to hate the Muses as my accusers or because the poem itself was as yet half grown and rough. These verses were not utterly destroyed; they still exist — several copies were made, I think — and now I pray that they may live, that thus my industrious leisure may bring pleasure to the reader and remind him of me. And yet they cannot be read in patience by anybody who does not know that they lack the final hand. That work was taken from me while it was on the anvil and my writing lacked the last touch of the file. Indulgence, then, instead of praise I ask; I shall have abundance of praise if you do not disdain me, reader. Receive these six lines also, if you think them worthy to be placed at the very head of the book: —

35 “All you who touch these rolls bereft of their father, to them at least let a place be granted in your city! And your indulgence will be all the greater because these were not published by their master, but were rescued from what might be called his funeral. And so whatever defect this rough poem may have I would have corrected, had it been permitted me.”

VIII. TO A TRAITOROUS FRIEND

To their sources shall deep rivers flow, back from the sea, and the sun, wheeling his steeds, shall hurry backwards; the earth shall support stars and the sky shall be cloven by the plough, water shall produce flame and flame water; all things shall proceed reversing nature's laws and no part of the universe shall keep its path; everything that I once called impossible shall now take place, and there is nothing that one ought not to believe. All this I prophesy because I have been deceived by that man who I thought would bring aid to me in my wretchedness.

11 Treacherous one, did you forget me so utterly or were you so afraid to approach me in my misfortune that you did not regard or comfort me in my downfall, cruel man, or become one of my funeral escort? Does the sacred and revered name of friendship lie, a cheap thing, beneath your feet? What trouble was it to visit a comrade overwhelmed by a mighty disaster, to do your part in relieving him with words of comfort, and if not to let fall a tear at my misfortune, yet to suffer a few words of feigned sorrow to escape you and, as even strangers do, at least to say something, to copy the people's speech, the public phrases — in fine to look upon my sad features never to be seen again, on the last Lay, whilst you might, and to hear the "Farewell" never more to be uttered in all time and to return it; o me in a like tone? Others did this who were bound to me by no tie, and wept in token of their feeling. What if in our common life there were lot strong reasons for our union, and in our long continued love? What if you had not known so many of my gay and serious moments, and I so many of yours? What if you had known me merely at Rome — you who have so often been my comrade in all sorts of places?

Have all these things been in vain, vanishing into the winds that blow over the sea? Are they all carried away, drowned in Lethe's waters? You were not born, I think, in Quirinus' peaceful city, the city that my feet must enter nevermore, but of the crags which stand upon this coast of the ill-omened Pontus, or in the cruel mountains of Scythia and Sarmatia. Your heart also is girt with veins of flint, and seeds of iron are implanted in your unyielding breast. She who once nursed you, offering full udders to be drained by your tender throat, was a tigress; or else you would think my woes less foreign to you than you now do, nor would you stand accused by me of hardheartedness.

47 But since this also has been added to my fated ills, that those early years fall short of consummation, see to it that I forget this sin and praise your service with the same lips with which I now complain.

IX. TO A STEADFAST FRIEND

Be it your lot to reach life's goal without stumbling — you who read this work of mine in no unfriendly spirit. Would that in your behalf my prayers may prevail which in my own did not affect the cruel gods! So long as you are secure you will count many friends; if your life becomes clouded you will be alone. You see how the doves come to a white dwelling, how an unclean tower harbours no birds. Ants seek a granary, but an empty one never: no friend will approach when wealth is lost. As a shadow accompanies those who pass through the rays of the sun, but when the sun is hidden, hemmed in by clouds, the shadow vanishes, so the fickle crowd follows the light of good fortune, but, when once the veil of darkness covers it, the crowd is gone. I pray this may always seem untrue to you, yet from my fate its truth must be admitted. Whilst I stood upright, my house, well known indeed but courting no honours, found enough to throng it. Yet, as soon as the shock came all men feared its fall and discreetly turned their backs in common flight. I wonder not if they dread the fierce lightnings whose flames are wont to blast everything nearby; nevertheless a friend who is steadfast in times of stress is approved by Caesar in the case of an enemy, however he may hate him, and he is not wont to be angry — for no other shows greater restraint — when one continues in adversity to love whatever he has loved before. After hearing the tale of Argive Orestes' comrade, even Thoas, they say, approved of Pylades. The unwavering loyalty of Actor's grandson for mighty Achilles was wont to be praised by Hector's lips. When loyal Theseus accompanied his friend to the shades, they say the god of Tartarus was grieved. When they told you, Turnus, of the fidelity of Nisus and Euryalus, we may believe that your cheeks were moist with tears. There is loyalty even for the unfortunate and it finds approval even in an enemy. Ah me! how few do these words of mine affect! Such is my condition, such is now the state of my affairs that there should be no measure to my tears. Yet my heart, in the depths of grief from its own disaster, has been calmed by your advancement. This I saw approaching, dear one, as early as the time when the breeze was as yet bearing onward that bark of yours less swiftly. If there is a reward for character or for a life without blemish, nobody was more highly to be prized; or if anyone has by liberal arts achieved prominence, you have eloquence which renders every cause a good one. Moved by this I said at once to you, "A mighty stage awaits thy gifts." This was told me by no sheep's liver or thunder on my left or the note or wing of a bird I — had observed; it is an augury and inference of the future based on reason: by this I made my divination and gained my knowledge.

53 Since this proves true, with my whole heart I congratulate you and myself that your ability has not been obscured. But mine! would it had been obscured in the depths of darkness! It had been best that light had failed my pursuit. And just as you are aided, my eloquent friend, by serious arts, so arts unlike them have injured me. Yet my life is well known to you; you know that with those arts their author's character had no connexion; you know that this poem was written long ago, an amusement of my youth, and that those jests, though not deserving praise, were still mere jests. So then although my crimes can be defended by no plea however brilliant, yet an excuse can be made for them, I think. As far as you can, make that excuse; do not abandon the cause of a friend. On this condition may you ever travel happily along the road upon which you have happily set out.

X. THE EXILE'S JOURNEY

I have, and pray that I may always have, the protection of golden-haired Minerva, and my bark draws her name from an emblazoned helmet. If sails be needed, she runs well at the touch of the lightest breeze, or if oars, the rowers speed her on her way. She is not content to outstrip in winged course her companions: she overhauls the craft that set out no matter how long before; alike she bears the currents and the far-leaping billows; she is no leaky craft overwhelmed by the raging seas. Her I knew first at Corinthian Cenchreae and she remained the faithful guide and comrade of my anxious flight, safe through the power of Pallas amid so many fortunes, amid waves roused by the cruel gales. Now too I pray she may safely cut her path through the gates of the wide Pontus and reach the waters of her goal by the Getic shore.

16 As soon as she brought me to the sea of Aeolian Helle, cleaving her long journey with slender furrow, I turned my course to the left, away from Hector's city, and came to thy port, land of Imbros, whence reaching the Zerynthian shore with a light breeze my wearied keel touched the Thracian Samos. From here'tis but a short leap for one who seeks Tempyra on the opposite coast: thus far only did my bark attend her master. For it was my resolve to pick my way on foot through the Bistonian land; she coasted back through the waters of the Hellespont seeking Dardania, bearing the name of its founder, and thee, Lampsacus, secure through the protection of the country-loving god, and the strait of that maiden all too insecurely carried through the narrow waters — the strait that separates Sestos from Abydos' town — and Cyzicos clinging to the shores of Propontis, Cyzicos, the famed work of the Haemonian race, and Byzantium's shores, that hold the entrance to the Pontus, the huge doorway of twin seas. Through all these may she win her way, and driven by the sturdy breeze may she have power to pass the shifting Cyaneae, and the Thynian bay, and after may she hold her course past Apollo's city and close beneath the narrow walls of Anchialus. Thence may she pass the port of Mesembria and Odesos, and the citadel called after thy name, Bacchus, and those exiles from Alcahous' walls, who, so'tis said, placed on this site their home. From their land may she come in safety to the Milesian city whither the wrath of an angered god has dispatched me.

43 If this but happen, a lamb shall fall in sacrifice to deserving Minerva; a larger victim ill becomes my poor resources. Ye too, brother Tyndaridae, whom this isle worships, attend in propitious power our twofold way; for one craft makes ready to pass through the narrow Symplegadae, the other to plough Bistonias waters. Make ye the winds, though different the places we seek, favour the one and no less favour the other!

XI. EPILOGUE

Every letter that you have read in my whole book was formed by me during the troubled days of my journey. Either the Adriatic saw me writing these words in the midst of his waters, while I shivered in cold December, or when I had passed in my course the Isthmus with its two seas and had taken the second ship of my journey into exile, my writing of verses amid the wild roar of the sea brought wonder, I think, to the Aegean Cyclades. I myself now marvel that amid such turmoil of my soul and of the sea my powers did not fail. But whether "trance" or "madness" be the name for this pursuit, 'twas by such pains that all my pain was lightened. Often my perilous tossing was caused by the storm-bringing Kids, often the constellation of Sterope made the sea to threaten, or the day was darkened by the guardian of the Atlantian bear, or Auster had drawn from the Hyades an autumnal flood. Often part of the sea was within our ship; nevertheless, with shaking hand I — continued to spin my verses such as they were.

Now too the ropes drawn taut by Aquilo are shrieking, and like a hill swells the curving surge. The very helmsman lifts his hands to the stars imploring aid with prayer and forgetful of his skill. Wherever I gaze there is naught but the presentment of death that with wavering mind I fear and pray for in my fear. Should I reach the harbour, the very harbour will affright me: there is more to dread upon the land than on the hostile sea. For the snares of men and of the sea unite in causing my woe; the sword and the waves produce twin fears. The one may look for booty through my blood, I fear, whilst the other may wish to win renown from my death. Wild is the shore on my left, accustomed to the greed of robbers, ever filled with bloodshed and murder and war, and though the sea is shaken by stormy billows my breast is more turbulent than the sea.

36 And so, kindly reader, you should grant me the more indulgence if these verses are — as they are — poorer than your hopes. They were not written, as of old, in my garden or while you, my familiar couch, supported my frame. I am tossing of a winter's day on the stormy deep, and my paper is sprayed by the dark waters. The vicious storm battles, indignant that I dare to write whilst he is brandishing against me his stern threats. Let the storm vanquish the man; but at the same time that I end my verse, let him, I pray, reach his own end.

THE POET'S PLEA

What have I to do with you, ye books, ill-starred object of my toil, — I, ruined and wretched through my own talent? Why do I seek once again the Muses so recently condemned, the causes of my guilt? Or is one well-earned penalty not enough? Verse gave men and women a desire to know me, but'twas no good omen for me; verse caused Caesar to brand me and my ways by commanding that my "Art" be forthwith taken away. Take away from me my pursuit and you will take away from my life also the charges against it. I lay the charge of guilt against my verse. This is the reward I have received for my work and my wakeful toil: a penalty has been found for my talent. Were I wise I should justly hate the learned sisters, the deities fatal to their own votary. But as it is — such madness accompanies my disease — I am once more bending my unfortunate steps to those crags, just as the vanquished gladiator seeks again the arena or the battered ship returns to the surging sea.

19 Perchance, as once for him who ruled the Teuthrastian kingdom, the same object will both wound and cure me, and the Muse who aroused the wrath will also soften it; song often prevails on the mighty gods. Caesar himself bade the mothers and daughters of Ausonia chant a hymn to turret-bearing Ops. He commanded a hymn to Phoebus also when he celebrated those games which each age views but once. Such precedents now form the basis of my prayer, O merciful Caesar, that my poetic gift may assuage thy wrath. Just indeed it is — I will not deny that I have deserved it, for shame has not so utterly fled my lips. But had I not sinned, what leniency were it possible for thee to display? My fate has given thee the means of mercy. If at every human error Jupiter should hurl his thunderbolts, he would in a brief space be weaponless. But as it is, when the roll of his thunder has died away, affrighting the world with its roar, he scatters the rain-clouds and clears the air. Just it is, then, to call him the father and ruler of the gods, just it is that in the spacious universe there is naught mightier than Jove. Do thou also, seeing thou art called ruler and father of our native land, follow the way of the god who has the same title. And that thou dost; no one has ever been able to hold the reins of his power with more restraint. Thou hast often granted indulgence to a conquered foe which he would not have granted to thee had he been victor. Many even who had been enhanced in riches and in honours have I seen direct their arms against thee, and the day that ended the battle ended for thee also the wrath of battle; both sides together made their gifts to the temples; and as thy soldiery rejoice to have vanquished the enemy, so the enemy has reason to rejoice at his defeat. My cause is a better one, for none assert that I have followed arms opposed to thee, or hostile power. By sea, by earth, by the third power I swear, by thee, a present and manifest deity, that this soul of mine favoured thee, mightiest of men, and that, wherein alone I could, in heart I have been thine. I prayed that thou mightest make thy way late to the stars of heaven, and I was an humble member of the throng that uttered the same prayer; loyal incense I offered in thy behalf and with all the rest I too aided the prayers of the state with my own.

61 Why should I say that my books, even those which are my accusers, in a thousand passages hold thy name? Examine the greater work, which is still kept unfinished, the book of figures transformed in ways unbelievable; thou wilt find praises of thy name there, thou wilt find many pledges of my loyalty. Thy glory is not made mightier by song, nor has it room wherein to grow so as to be made mightier. Jupiter has more than enough of glory: yet is he pleased to have his deeds related and himself become the theme of song, and when the battles of his war with the Giants are told, we may believe that he finds pleasure in his praises. Thou art praised by others in a lofty style that befits thee; they sing thy praise with richer gifts than mine; but though a god be won by the outpoured blood of a hundred bulls, yet is he also won by the humblest offering of incense.

77 Alas! harsh was he and a more cruel enemy to me than all the rest, who read to thee my playful verse, preventing any verse that honours thee in my books from being read with a fairer judgment. But when thou wert angry, who could have been friendly to me? Scarce could I at that time refrain from being an enemy to myself. When once a battered house has begun to settle, the whole weight leans upon the yielding parts, — when fate causes the first rift, the whole gapes apart and crashes to destruction, dragged by its own weight. So my verse has won me men's dislike; the crowd, as was right, have only guided themselves by the expression of thy face.

89 And yet, I remember, thou wert wont to approve my life and my ways when I passed before thee with the steed thou hadst granted me. If that avails me not, if no renown for what is honourable is granted me, at least I had suffered no impeachment. Nor was fate of those on trial wrongfully entrusted to me, suits to be examined by the centumvirs. Private cases also I brought to settlement, acting without criticism as referee; and even the defeated side admitted my good faith. Wretched me! were it not for the injury caused me by recent events, I might be secure through more than one judgment of thine. These last events ruin me; one blast sends to the bottom of the sea the craft that has so many times been safe.'Tis no small part of the flood that has wrought me harm, but all the billows of ocean have fallen upon my head.

103 Why did I see anything? Why did I make my eyes guilty? Why was I so thoughtless as to harbour the knowledge of a fault? Unwitting was Actaeon when he beheld Diana unclothed; none the less he became the prey of his own hounds. Clearly, among the gods, even ill-fortune must be atoned for, nor is mischance an excuse when a deity is wronged. On that day when my ruinous mistake ravished me away, my house, humble but stainless, was destroyed — humble indeed, but in our ancestors' time'tis said to have been illustrious and inferior in fame to none, though noted neither for wealth nor poverty, so that from it spring knights conspicuous for neither. But even if our house be small in wealth and in origin, at least my genius does not suffer it to be obscure. This I may have employed in too youthful exuberance, yet my name is great throughout the world; a throng of the cultured are well acquainted with Naso and venture to count him with those whom they do not despise.

121 Fallen then is my house, though pleasing to the Muses, beneath one charge albeit no small one — yet so fallen that it can rise again, if only time shall mellow the wrath of injured Caesar whose leniency in the penalty that has befallen is such that the penalty is milder than I feared. Life was granted me; thy wrath halted ere it achieved my death:

O — sire, with what restraint hast thou used thy power! Then too there is added — for thou takest it not away — my inherited wealth, as if life were too small a gift. Thou didst not condemn my deeds through a decree of the senate nor was my exile ordered by a special court. With words of stern invective — worthy of a prince — thou didst thyself, as is fitting, avenge thine own injury. And thy command, though severe and threatening, was yet mild in naming my punishment, for it calls me relegatus, not exile, and thou dost use therein language especially adapted to my fate.

139 No punishment indeed is heavier to one in command of his senses than the displeasure of so mighty a man as thou; yet'tis common for a deity to be appeased at times;'tis common for clouds to scatter and the bright daylight to return. I have seen an elm laden with the tendrils of a vine even after it had been blasted by the thunderbolt of angry

Jove. Though thou dost thyself forbid me to hope, I shall hope constantly; this one thing can be done in spite of thy command. Strong hope comes upon me when I regard thee, most merciful of princes, but hope fails me when I regard my own deeds. As in the winds that buffet the air there is no steady, no constant madness, but now they decrease or are lulled to silence so that one would suppose they had laid aside their power, in this wise my fears depart, return, or change, giving me or denying me hope of appeasing thee.

155 Wherefore by the gods above, who give and will give thee long years, if only they love the Roman race, by our native land which is safe and secure under thy fatherly care, of which I as one among the people was but recently a part; so, I pray, may there be duly paid thee by a grateful city that debt of love which thy constant deeds and spirit deserve; so in union with thee may Livia fill out her years — she whom no husband but thou deserved, but for whose existence an unwedded life would befit thee and there were none other whom thou couldst espouse; so, together with thy safety may thy son too be safe, and one day rule this empire, an old man with one still older; and may thy grandsons, stars of the youth, still hold their course, as now they do, through thy deeds and those of their own sire; so may Victory, always at home in thy camp, now also present herself, seeking the standards so well known to her, hovering with familiar wings about the Ausonian leader and placing the laurel wreath upon the shining hair of him through whom thou dost wage wars, in whose person thou art now doing battle, to whom thou dost grant thy lofty auspices and thy gods and thus art half present, keeping watch o'er the city, and half far away conducting savage wars; so may he return to thee after conquering the foe, and be seen in radiance high on a garlanded car — oh spare me, I pray, and hide away thy thunderbolt, cruel weapon, alas! but too well known to wretched me! Spare me, father of our country! Do not forgetful of this name, take from me the hope that sometime I may appease thee! I pray not for return, even though we may believe that more than the prayer has oft been granted by the mighty gods. Grant me a milder and a nearer place of exile, and a large part of my punishment will be lightened.

187 I am now enduring the extreme, thrust forth into the midst of enemies; no exile is farther from his native land. I alone have been sent to the mouths of the seven-streamed Hister, I am crushed beneath the Parrhasian virgin's icy pole. The Ciziges, the Colchi, the hordes of Teretei, and the Getae are scarce fended off by the interposition of the Danube's waters. Though others have been exiled for weightier cause, a more remote land has been assigned to no one; nothing is farther away than this land except only the cold and the enemy and the sea whose waters congeal with the frost. Here is the end of Rome's domain on the ill-omened Euxine's shore; hard by the Basternae and Sauromatae hold sway. This land comes last of all beneath Ausonian law, clinging with difficulty to the very edge of thy empire.

201 And so I offer a suppliant's prayer that thou wilt banish me to a safe abode — that together with my fatherland peace also be not taken from me, that I may not fear the tribes which the Hister holds insecurely in check, that I, thy subject, be not within an enemy's power to capture. Right forbids that anyone of Latin blood should suffer barbarian bondage while Caesars live.

207 Though two crimes, a poem<sup>1</sup> and a blunder, have brought me ruin, of my fault in the one I must keep silent, for my worth is not such that I may reopen thy wounds, O Caesar; 'tis more than enough that thou shouldst have been pained once. The other remains: the charge that by an obscene poem I have taught foul adultery. 'Tis possible then, somehow, for divine minds to be deceived, for many things to be beneath thy notice. As Jove who watches at once o'er the gods and the lofty heaven has not leisure to give heed to small things, so whilst thou dost gaze about upon the world that depends upon thee, things of less moment escape thy care. Shouldst thou, forsooth, the prince of the world, abandon thy post and read songs of mine set to unequal measure? That weight of the Roman name does not lay so light a burden upon thy shoulders that thou canst direct thy divine attention to silly trifles, examining with thine own eye the product of my leisure hours. Now Pannonia, now the Illyrian shore must be subdued by thee, now the wars in Raetia or Thrace bring thee anxiety; now the Armenian seeks peace, now the Parthian horseman extends to thee with timorous hand his bow and the standards once he seized; now through thy son Germany feels thy youthful vigour, and a Caesar wars for a mighty Caesar. In fine, though the body of the empire is vaster than has ever existed, no part is weak. The city also wearies thee, and the guardianship of thy laws and of the morals which thou dost desire to be like thine own, nor to thy lot falls that repose thou bestowest upon the nations, for thou art waging many wars that allow thee no rest.

237 Can I wonder, then, that under this weight of great affairs thou hast never unrolled the volume of my jests? Yet if, as I could wish, thou hadst chanced to have the leisure, thou wouldst have read no crimes in my "Art." That poem, I admit, has no serious mien, it is not worthy to be read by so great a prince; but not for that reason is it opposed to the commandments of the law, nor does it offer teaching to the daughters of Rome. And that thou may'st not doubt for whom I write, one of the three books contains these four verses: "Far from me! ye narrow fillets, badge of modesty! and thou, long ruffle covering half the feet! I shall sing of naught but what is lawful, of loves which men allow. There shall be in my song no sin." Have I not strictly excluded from this "Art" all women whom the assumption of the robe and fillet of wedlock protect?

253 But, thou mayst say, the matron can use arts intended for others and draw therefrom instruction, though she be not herself the pupil. Let the matron read nothing then, for from every song she can gain wisdom for sin. From whatever she touches, be she inclined to wrongdoing, she will equip her character for vice. Let her take up the Annals — naught is ruder than they — she will surely read by whom Ilia became a mother. So soon as she takes up the “Aeneadum genetrix,” she will ask by whom fostering Venus became the mother of the Aeneadae. I will show later, if only I may present it in order, that it is possible for the soul to be injured by every kind of poem. Yet not on that account shall every book be guilty. Nothing is useful which cannot at the same time be injurious. What more useful than fire? Yet whoever is making ready to burn a house arms his criminal hands with fire. Medicine sometimes removes, sometimes bestows safety, showing what plant is healthful, what harmful. Both the brigand and the cautious wayfarer gird on a sword, but the one carries it for treacherous attack, the other for his own defence. Eloquence is learned for the conduct of just causes; yet it protects the guilty and crushes the innocent. So then with verse: if it be read with upright mind, it will be established that it can injure nobody — even though it be mine.

277 “But there are certain women whom I deprave.” Whoever believes this is mistaken and attributes too much to my works. Even should I admit this charge, the games also furnish the seeds of wrongdoing; order the abolition of all the theatres! A pretext for sin has oft been found by many at the time when the hard earth is covered with the sand of Mars ; abolish the Circus! The license of the Circus is not safe, for here a girl may sit close to a strange man. Since certain women stroll in them, intent on meeting a lover there, why does any portico stand open? What place more dignified than the temples? But these too should be avoided by any woman whose nature inclines to fault. When she stands in Jupiter’s temple, in Jupiter’s temple it will occur to her how many that god has caused to be mothers.

291 As she worships in the neighbouring temple of Juno, the thought will come upon her that many rivals have caused this goddess wrath. When she has looked on Pallas, she will ask why the virgin brought up Erichthonius, the child of sin. If she enters the temple of mighty Mars, thine own gift, Venus stands close to the Avenger, in the guise of a man before the door. If she sit in Isis' fane, she will ask why she was driven by Saturnia over the Ionian sea and the Bosphorus. Anchises will remind her of Venus, the Latmian hero of Luna, Iasion of Ceres. All things can corrupt perverted minds, yet all those things stand harmless in their proper places. Far from the "Art," written for courtesans alone, its first page warns the hands of upright women. Any woman who breaks away to a place forbidden by a priest, forthwith removes from him the sin and becomes herself guilty. Nevertheless it is no crime to read tender verse; the chaste may read much that they should not do. Often matrons of serious brow behold women nude, ready for every kind of lust. The eyes of Vestals behold the bodies of courtesans nor has that been the cause of punishment to their owner.

313 Yet why is my muse so wanton? Why does my book advise anybody to love? There is naught for me but confession of my error and my obvious fault: I repent of my talent and my tastes. Why rather did I not harass once again in my song Troy, which fell before the Argive arms? Why was I silent of Thebes and the mutual wounds of the brothers, and the seven gates each under command of its own leader? Warlike Rome did not refuse me a subject, and'tis a pious task to tell the story of one's native land. In fine, since thou hast filled the world with thy great deeds, Caesar, some one part of those many should have been the theme of my song, and as the glittering rays of the sun attract the eye, so thy exploits would have drawn forth my powers. Undeservedly am I blamed. Poor is the field I plough; that was a theme mighty and fruitful. A skiff ought not to trust itself to the sea just because it ventures to disport itself in a little pool. Perhaps (even this I may doubt) I am well enough suited to lighter verse, capable of humble measures; but if thou shouldst bid me sing of the Giants conquered by Jove's lightning, the burden will weaken me in the attempt. Only a rich mind can tell the tale of Caesar's mighty deeds if the theme is not to surpass the work. Even so I made the venture, but methought I impaired the theme and — an impious thing — wrought injury to thy might.

339 I returned once more to my light task, the songs of youth, stimulating my breast with fictitious love. Would that I had not! But my fate drew me on to be clever to my own hurt. Alas that I ever acquired learning! Why did my parents teach me? Why did any letter ever beguile my eyes?

This wantonness has caused thee to hate me on account of the arts which thou didst think disturbed unions that all were forbidden to attack. But no brides have learned deceptions through my teaching; nobody can teach that of which he knows too little. I have composed songs of pleasure and love but in such fashion that no scandal has ever touched my name. No husband exists even amid the common people who doubts his fatherhood through sin of mine. I assure you, my character differs from my verse (my life is moral, my muse is gay), and most of my work, unreal and fictitious, has allowed itself more licence than its author has had. A book is not an evidence of one's soul, but an honourable impulse that presents very many things suited to charm the ear. Else would Accius be cruel, Terence a reveller, or those would be quarrelsome who sing of fierce war.

361 Moreover, not I alone have written tales of tender love, but for writing of love I alone have been punished. What but the union of love and lavish wine was the teaching of the lyric muse of the aged Tean bard? What did Lesbian Sappho teach the girls if not love? Yet Sappho was secure, the Tean also was secure. It did not injure thee, scion of Battus, that thou didst often in verse confess to the reader thy wanton pleasures. No play of charming Menander is free from love, yet he is wont to be read by boys and girls. The very Iliad — what is it but an adulteress about whom her lover and her husband fought? What occurs in it before the flaming passion for Briseis and the feud between the chiefs due to the seizure of the girl? What is the Odyssey except the story of one woman wooed in her husband's absence for love's sake by many suitors? Who but the Maeonian tells of Venus and Mars caught in bonds of unseemly love? On whose evidence but that of great Homer should we know of two goddesses on fire with passion for a guest?

381 Every kind of writing is surpassed in seriousness by tragedy, but this also constantly deals with the theme of love. Is there aught in the Hippolytus except the blind passion of a stepmother? Canace's fame is due to her love for her brother. Again, did not the ivory scion of Tantalus, while Cupid drove the car, bear away the Pisan maiden with his Phrygian horses? The mother who stained her sword with the blood of her children was roused to the deed by the anger of slighted love. Love suddenly transformed into birds the king with his paramour, and that mother who still mourns her son Itys. If her accursed brother had not loved Aërope we should not read about the horses of the Sun turning aside. Wicked Scylla would never have touched the tragic buskin had not love caused her to sever her father's lock. You who read of Electra and crazed Orestes are reading of the guilt of Aegisthus and Tyndareus' daughter. Why should I tell of the dread conqueror of the Chimaera whom a deceitful hostess brought near to death? Why speak of Hermione, why of thee, maiden daughter of Schoeneus, and of thee, priestess of Phoebus, beloved by the Mycenaean leader? Why of Danaë and of Danaë's daughter-in-law, of the mother of Lyaeus, of Haemon, and of her for whom two nights combined? Why speak of Pelias' son-in-law of Theseus, and of him who first of the Pelasgians touched the soil of Ilium? To these add Iole, and the mother of Pyrrhus, the wife of Hercules, Hylas, and the Ilian boy. Time will fail if I tell all the loves of tragedy, and my book will scarce hold the bare names.

409 There is too a tragedy involved in coarse laughter, containing many terms of shamelessness; and the author 10 who depicted Achilles tender with love does not suffer for having weakened by his verses deeds of valour. Aristides connected the vices of Miletus with himself, yet Aristides was not driven from his own city. Neither Eubius, who described the destruction of the mother's seed, the composer of a foul tale, nor he who recently wrote the Sybaritica, were exiled, nor those who have not concealed their own erotic adventures. And those things exist among the memorials of learned men and through the gifts of our leaders have become public property open to all.

421 And I need not defend myself with foreign arms only, for Roman books also contain much that is frivolous. Though Ennius lent his lips to the serious strains of war — Ennius mighty in genius, rude in art — though Lucretius sets forth the causes of scorching flame and prophesies the destruction of three elements, yet wanton Catullus sang oft of her who was falsely called Lesbia, and not content with her he noised abroad many other loves in which he admitted his own intrigues. Equal in degree and of the same kind was the licence of diminutive Calvus, who revealed his own love adventures in various metres. Why allude to the verse of Tigidas or of Memmius, in whom things are named — with names devoid of shame? With them Cinna too belongs and Anser, more wanton than Cinna, and the light poems of Cornificius and of Cato, and those in whose books she who was but recently hidden beneath the name of Perilla is now found called after thy name, Metellus. He, too, who guided the Argo to the waters of Phasis, could not keep silent about his own adventures in love. Hortensius' verses and those of Servius are not less wanton. Who would hesitate to imitate these mighty names? Sisenna translated Aristides and was not harmed for weaving in the tale coarse jests. It was no reproach to Gallus that he gave fame to Lycoris, but that from too much wine he did not restrain his tongue. Tibullus thinks it hard to believe his lady under oath because she makes the same denials about himself to her lord. He admits, too, teaching her how to deceive her guard, saying that he is now in his wretchedness overcome by his own ruse. Often on the pretext of trying the gem and seal of his mistress he recalls that he touched her hand; he tells how oftentimes he spoke by means of his fingers or by nods and drew inarticulate marks upon the table's round; and he teaches what lotions cause to vanish from the body the bruises which are often caused by the mouth's imprint: at last he prays her all too careless partner to watch him also that so her sins may be less frequent. He knows who causes the barking, as a man strolls alone before the house, why there is so much coughing just before the closed door. He gives teachings of many sorts for such an intrigue, showing brides by what arts ladies can deceive their lords. This did not injure him, for Tibullus is still read with favour; he was famous when thou wert first called prince.

465 Thou wilt find the same teachings in alluring Propertius; yet not the least shame has touched him. I was their successor, for generosity bids me withhold the names of prominent living men. I feared not, I admit, that where so many barks plied, one only would be wrecked while all the rest were safe.

471 Others have written of the arts of playing at dice — this was no light sin in the eyes of our ancestors — what is the value of the tali, with what throw one can make the highest point, avoiding the ruinous dogs; how the tessera is counted, and when the opponent is challenged, how it is fitting to throw, how to move according to the throws; how the variegated soldier steals to the attack along the straight path when the piece between two enemies is lost, and how he understands warfare by pursuit and how to recall the man before him and to retreat in safety not without escort; how a small board is provided with three men on a side and victory lies in keeping one's men abreast; and the other games — I will not now describe them all — which are wont to waste that precious thing, our time.

485 See, another tells in verse of the various forms of balls and the way they are thrown; this one instructs in the art of swimming, that in the art of the hoop. Others have composed works on tinting the complexion, another has laid down rules for feasts and entertaining; still another describes the clay from which bowls are fashioned, teaching what jar is adapted to the clear wine. Such playful verses as these are written in smoky December, but nobody has been ruined for composing them. Beguiled by such as these I wrote verse lacking in seriousness, but a serious penalty has befallen my jests. In fine, though so many have written, I see not one who has been ruined by his own muse; I am the one who has been sought out.

497 What if I had written foul-jesting mimes which always contain the sin of forbidden love, in which constantly a well-dressed adulterer appears and the artful wife fools her stupid husband? These are viewed by the marriageable maiden, the wife, the husband, and the child; even the senate in large part is present. Nor is it enough that the ear is outraged with impure words; the eyes grow accustomed to many shameful sights, and when the lover has deceived the husband by some novel trick, there is applause and he is presented amid great favour with the palm. Because the stage is not moral, it is profitable to the poet, and these great immoralities are bought at no small price by the praetor. Run over the expenses of thine own games, Augustus, and thou wilt read of many things of this sort that cost thee dear. These thou hast thyself viewed and oft presented to the view of others — so benign is thy majesty everywhere — and with thine eyes, by which the whole world profits, thou hast gazed undisturbed at these adulteries of the stage. If tis right to compose mimes that copy vice, to my themes a smaller penalty is due.

517 Can it be that this type of writing is rendered safe by the stage to which it belongs — that the licence of the mimes has been granted by the theatre? My poems too have often been presented to the people with dancing, often they have even beguiled thine own eyes. Surely in our houses, even as figures of old heroes shine, painted by an artist's hand, so in some place a small tablet depicts the varying unions and forms of love; there sits not only the Telamonian with features confessing wrath and the barbarian mother with crime in her eyes, but Venus as well, wringing her damp hair with her hands and seeming barely covered by her maternal waves. Some sing of the roar of war and its bloody weapons, some of the deeds of thy race, and some of thine own. As for me — grudging nature has confined me within a narrow space, granting me but meagre powers. And yet the blessed author of thy Aeneid brought his “arms and the man” to a Tyrian couch, and no part of the whole work is more read than that union of illicit love. The same man had written as a youth playful verse of the passion of Phyllis and tender Amaryllis — all in pastoral strains. Long ago I too sinned in that style of composition — thus a fault not new is suffering a new penalty — and I had published verse when thou wert censuring our sins and I passed thee so many times, a knight uncriticized.

Thus the writings which in my youth all thoughtless I supposed would harm me not, have harmed me now that I am old. Late and overfull is the vengeance for that early book, distant is the penalty from the time of the sin.

647 Yet think not all my work trivial; oft have I set grand sails upon my bark. Six of the Fasti I have written in six books each ending with its own month. This work did I recently compose, Caesar, under thy name, dedicated to thee, but my fate has broken it off. And I wrote a poem of kings for the tragic buskin, having the style which the serious buskin demands. I sang also, though my attempt lacked the final touch, of bodies changed into new forms. Would that thou mightest recall thy temper awhile from wrath and bid a few lines of this be read to thee when thou art at leisure, the few lines in which after beginning with the earliest origin of the world I have brought the work to thy times, Caesar! Thou wilt see how much heart thou hast thyself given me, with what warmth I sing of thee and thine. I have never injured anybody with a mordant poem, my verse contains charges against nobody. Ingenuous I have shunned wit steeped in gall — not a letter of mine is dipped in poisoned jest. Amid all the myriads of our people, many as are my writings, I shall be the only one whom my own Calliope has injured. No citizen then, I feel sure, rejoices in my woes, but many grieve. Nor can I believe that anyone has mocked my fall, if any indulgence has been granted to my open heart.

May this, I pray, and other things have power to bend thy will, O father, O protector and salvation of thy native land: not that I may return to Ausonia, unless perchance some day thou shalt be overborne by the length of my punishment; I only beg a safer, a more peaceful place of exile, slight though the change be, that the punishment may match my wrongdoing.

I. PROEM

“Though sent to this city I come in fear, an exile’s book. Stretch forth a kindly hand to me in my weariness, friendly reader, and fear not that I may perchance bring shame upon you; not a line on this paper teaches love. Such is my master’s fate that the wretched man ought not to conceal it with any jests. Even that work which once was his ill-starred amusement in the green of youth, too late, alas! he condemns and hates. Examine what I bring: you will see nothing here except sadness, and the verse befits its own state. If the lame couplets halt in alternate verses, ’tis due to the metre’s nature or to the length of the journey; if I am not golden with oil of cedar nor smoothed with the pumice, ’tis because I blushed to be better dressed than my master; if the letters are spotted and blurred with erasures, ’tis because the poet with tears has injured his own work. If any expressions perchance shall seem not Latin, the land wherein he wrote was a barbarian land. Tell me, readers, if it is not a trouble, whither I ought to go, what abode I, a book from foreign lands, should seek in the city.”

21 When thus I had spoken timidly, with hesitant tongue, I found with difficulty just one to show me the way.

23 “May the gods grant you what they have not vouchsafed our poet, the power to live at ease in your native land — come, lead me; I will follow, though by land and sea I come in weariness from a distant world.”

27 He obeyed, and as he guided me, said, “This is Caesar’s forum; this is the street named from the sacred rites. This is the place of Vesta guarding Pallas and the fire, here was once the tiny palace of ancient Numa. Then turning to the right,” That,” he said, “is the gate of the Palatium. Here is Stator; on this spot first was Rome founded.” While I was marvelling at one thing after another, I beheld doorposts marked out from others by gleaming arms and a dwelling worthy of a god!

35 "Is this also Jove's abode," I said, and for such thought an oaken wreath gave to my mind the augury. And when I learned its master, I said, "No error is mine; it is true that this is the home of mighty Jove. But why is the door screened by the laurels before it, their dark foliage surrounding the august tresses? Can it be because that home has deserved unending triumph or because it has always been loved by the Leucadian god? Is it because the house itself is full of joy or because it fills all things with joy? Is it a mark of that peace which it has given to the world? And as the laurel is ever green with no withering leaves to be plucked away, so does that house possess an eternal glory?"

47 The reason for the crowning wreath is shown by an inscription: it declares that by his aid citizens have been saved. Add, O best of fathers, to those whom thou hast saved one citizen who far on the world's edge lies in forgotten exile, the cause of whose punishment, which he admits that he has deserved, is not a deed, but his own mistake. Wretched me! I fear the spot, I fear the man of power, my script wavers with shuddering dread. See you my paper pale with bloodless colour? See you each alternate foot tremble? Sometime, I pray, mayst thou, O palace, be reconciled with him who fathered me, and may it be his lot to behold thee under the same masters!"

59 Then with even pace up the lofty steps I was conducted to the shining temple of the unshorn god, where alternating with the columns of foreign marble stand the figures of the Belids, the barbarian father with a drawn sword, and all those things which the men of old or of modern times conceived in their learned souls are free for the inspection of those who would read. I was seeking my brothers, save those indeed whom their father would he had never begot, and as

I sought to no purpose, from that abode the guard who presides over the holy place commanded me to depart. A second temple I approached, one close to a theatre: this too might not be visited by my feet.

Nor did Liberty allow me to touch her halls, the first that were opened to learned books. The fate of our unfortunate sire overflows upon his offspring, and we suffer at our birth the exile which he has borne. Perhaps sometime both to us and to him Caesar conquered by long years will be less severe. O gods, or rather (for it is not meet that I should pray to a throng), Caesar, mightiest of gods, hearken to my prayer! In the meanwhile, since a public resting-place is closed to me, may it be granted me to be hidden in some private spot. You too, hands of the people, receive, if you may, our verses dismayed by the shame of their rejection.

II. BETTER DEATH THAN EXILE

So then'twas fated for me to visit even Scythia, the land that lies beneath the Lycaonian pole; neither you, ye learned throng of Pierians, nor you, O — son of Leto, have aided your own priest. It avails me not that without real guilt I wrote playful verse, that my Muse was merrier than my life, but many are the perils by land and sea that I have undergone, and now the Pontus shrivelled with constant frost possesses me. I, who once shunned affairs, who was born for a care-free life of ease, who was soft and incapable of toil, am now suffering extremes; no harbourless sea, no far journeys by land have been able to destroy me. And my spirit has proved equal to misfortune; for my body, borrowing strength from that spirit, has endured things scarce endurable.

16 Yet while I was being driven through the perils of land and wave, there was beguilement for my cares and my sick heart in the hardship; now that the way has ended, the toil of journeying is over, and I have reached the land of my punishment, I care for naught but weeping; from my eyes comes as generous a flood as that which pours from the snow in springtime. Rome steals into my thought, my home, and the places I long for, and all that part of me that is left in the city I have lost. Ah me! that I have knocked so often upon the door of my own tomb but it has never opened to me! Why have I escaped so many swords? Why has not one of those gales that threatened so often overwhelmed an ill-starred head? Ye gods, whom I have found too steadily cruel, sharers in a wrath that one god feels, goad on my laggard fate, I beseech ye; forbid the door of my destruction to be closed!

III. TO HIS WIFE

If haply you wonder why this letter of mine is written by another's fingers, I am ill — ill in the utmost part of an unknown world, almost in doubt of my recovery. What spirit can you think is now mine, lying sick in a hideous land among Sauromatae and Getae? The climate I cannot endure, and I have not become used to such water, and even the land, I know not why, pleases me not. There is no house here well suited to a sick man, no beneficial food for him, none to relieve, with Apollo's art, his pain, no friend to comfort, none to beguile with talk the slow-moving hours. Awearied I lie among these far-away peoples in this far-away place, and thoughts come to me in my weakness of everything that is not here. All things steal into my mind, yet above all, you, my wife, and you hold more than half my heart. You I address though you are absent, you alone my voice names; no night comes to me without you, no day. Nay more, they say that when I talked strange things, 'twas so that your name was on my delirious lips. If I were to fail now and my tongue cleaving to my palate were scarcely to be revived by drops of wine, let someone announce that my lady has come, I'll rise, and the hope of you will be the cause of my strength. Am I then uncertain of life, but are you perhaps passing happy hours yonder forgetful of me? You are not; I assert it. This is clear to me, dearest, that without me you pass no hour that is not sad.

29 Still if my lot has filled out its destined years and if the end of living is come so quickly upon me, how small a thing, ye mighty gods, to show mercy to one on the eve of death so that at least I might have been covered with my native soil! Would that the penalty had been postponed to the hour of my death or that quick death had anticipated my exile! In full possession of my rights, as I was but recently, I could have been content to give up this light of day; to die an exile — for that has life now been granted me. So far away, then, on a strange shore I shall die, and the very place shall render harsh my fate; neither shall my body grow weak upon the familiar couch, nor when I am at the point of death shall there be any to weep, nor shall my lady's tears fall upon my face adding brief moments to my life; nor shall I utter parting words, nor with a last lament shall a loved hand close my fluttering eyes, but without funeral rites, without the honour of a tomb, this head shall lie unmourned in a barbarian land!

47 Will not your whole heart be shaken, when you hear this? Will you not beat with trembling hand your loyal breast? Will you not stretch forth your arms all in vain towards this region and call upon the empty name of your wretched husband? Yet mar not your cheeks nor tear your hair: not now for the first time, light of mine, shall I have been torn from you. When I lost my native land, then must you think that I perished; that was my earlier and harder death. Now, if perchance you have the power (but you have it not, best of wives), rejoice that so many misfortunes are ended for me by death. For this you have power: lighten by bearing them with a brave soul woes in which for a long time now your heart is not untrained.

69 O that our souls might perish with the body and that so no part of me might escape the greedy pyre! For if the spirit flits aloft deathless in the empty air, and the words of the Samian sage are true, a Roman will wander among Sarmatian shades, a stranger forever among barbarians. But my bones — see that they are carried home in a little urn: so shall I not be an exile even in death. This nobody forbids: the Theban sister laid her slain brother beneath the tomb though the king forbade; and mingling with my bones the leaves and powder of the nard lay them to rest in soil close to the city, and on the marble carve lines for the wayfarer to read with hasty eye, lines in large characters:

I, WHO LIE HERE, WITH TENDER LOVES ONCE PLAYED, NASO, THE BARD, WHOSE LIFE HIS WIT BETRAYED. GRUDGE NOT, O LOVER, AS THOU PASSEST BY, A PRAYER! "SOFT MAY THE BONES OF NASO LIE!"

This for the inscription; my books are a greater and more enduring memorial. These I have sure trust, although they have injured him, will give a name and a long enduring life to their author. Yet do you ever give to the dead the funeral offerings and garlands moist with your own tears. Although the fire change my body to ashes, the sorrowing dust shall feel the pious care.

85 More would I write, but my voice worn out with speaking and my parched tongue deny the strength for dictation. Receive the last word perhaps my lips shall utter, a word which is not true of the sender: "Farewell!"

IV. (I) TO A FRIEND — IN WARNING

O — thou who wast ever dear to me, but whom I really came to know in the cruel hour when my fortunes fell in ruins, if thou dost in anything believe a friend who has been taught by experience, live for thyself, flee afar from great names! Live for thyself, and to thine utmost power shun glittering renown; cruel is the bolt that falls from the glittering citadel of renown. For though the powerful alone can help, they would rather not help if they can harm! The lowered yard-arm escapes the blast of the storm, broad sails bring more fear than small. Thou seest how the light cork floats atop the wave when the heavy burden sinks with itself the woven nets. If I who warn thee now had once myself been warned of this, perchance I should now be in that city in which I ought to be. Whilst I lived with thee, whilst the light breeze wafted me on, this bark of mine sped through calm waters. Who falls on level ground — though this scarce happens — so falls that he can rise from the ground he has touched, but poor Elpenor who fell from the high roof met his king a crippled shade. Why was it that Daedalus in safety plied his wings while Icarus marks with his name the limitless waves? Doubtless because Icarus flew high, the other flew lower; for both had wings not their own. Let me tell thee, he who hides well his life, lives well; each man ought to remain within his proper position. Eumedes would not have been childless, if in folly his son had not had a fancy for the horses of Achilles. Mcrops would not have seen his son in flames nor his daughters in the form of trees if he had been a father great enough for Phaëthon. Do thou also dread constantly that which is too lofty and furl the sails of thine intent. For thou dost deserve to finish life's race with unstumbling foot, enjoying a fairer lot than mine 35 These my prayers for thee are deserved by thy gentle affection and by that loyalty which will cling to me for all time. I saw thee lamenting my fate with such a look as I think my own face must have borne. I saw thy tears fall upon my face — tears which I drank in with thy words of loyalty. Even now thou dost defend with zeal thy banished friend, lightening woes that are scarce in any part to be lightened. Live unenvied, pass years of comfort apart from fame, unite to thee friends like thyself, and love thy Naso's name — the only part of him not as yet in exile: all else the Scythian Pontus possesses.

IV. (II) TO HEARTS THAT CANNOT VARY ABSENCE IS PRESENT.

47 A land next the stars of the Erymanthian bear holds me, a region shrivelled with stiffening cold. Beyond are the Bosphorus and the Tanais and the Scythian marshes and the scattered names of a region hardly known at all. Farther still is nothing but a cold that forbids habitation. Alas! how near to me is the margin of the world! But my fatherland is far away, far my dearest wife, and all that after these two was once sweet to me. Yet even so these things are present, though I cannot touch them; to my mind all are visible. Before my eyes flit my home, the city, the outline of places, the events too that happened in each place. Before my eyes is the image of my wife as though she were present. She makes my woes heavier, she makes them lighter — heavier by her absence, lighter by her gift of love and her steadfast bearing of the burden laid upon her.

63 You too are fast in my heart, my friends, whom I am eager to mention each by his own name, but cautious fear restrains the duty and you yourselves do not wish a place in my poetry, I think. Of old you wished it, for it was like a grateful honour to have your names read in my verse. Since now'tis dangerous, within my heart will I address each one and be cause of fear to none. My verse gives no hint that forces my friends from their concealment. In secret let whosoever loved me love me still. Yet know that though I am absent and far removed in space, you are ever present to my heart. Let each of you in what way he can — in some way — lighten my woes, nor refuse an outcast a trusty hand. So may good fortune abide for you nor ever may you, visited with a like fate, make the same request.

V. TO ONE WHO HAS BEEN FAITHFUL

Slight was my friendly intercourse with you so that you could without difficulty have denied it, and you would not have embraced me more closely perhaps, if my ship had been running before a favouring wind. At my fall, when all in fear fled my ruin, turning their backs upon friendship with me, you dared to touch the corpse Jove's fire had blasted and to approach the threshold of a house bemoaned. You, a recent friend, not one known through long intercourse, give me what scarcely two or three of my old friends gave in my wretchedness. I myself saw and marked your look of grief, your face wet with tears and paler than my own. And as I saw your tears falling with every word, drinking in with my lips the tears and with my ears the words, I — felt the clasp of your encircling arms about my neck and I was aware of your kisses mingled with the sound of your sobbing. I have had your strong defence also in my absence, dear one — you know that "dear one" stands for your real name — and many other clear marks of your affection I still retain that will not leave my heart. The gods grant you always the power to defend your own! May you aid them in more fortunate circumstances than mine!

23 Yet meanwhile, if you ask — and I believe that you do ask — how in my ruin I fare upon this shore, I — am led on by the slender hope — take it not from me — that the harsh will of the god can be softened. Whether my hope is groundless or whether it is vouchsafed me to attain it, do you prove to me, I pray, that my great desire is vouchsafed; whatever eloquence you have devote to this — to showing that my prayer can be accomplished. The greater a man is, the more can his wrath be appeased; a noble spirit is capable of kindly impulses. For the noble lion'tis enough to have overthrown his enemy; the fight is at an end when his foe is fallen. But the wolf, the ignoble bears hurray the dying — and so with every beast of less nobility. At Troy what have we mightier than brave Achilles? But the tears of the aged Dardanian he could not endure. The quality of the Emathian leader's mercy is proved by Porus and the funeral ceremony of Darius. And not to dwell upon instances of human wrath turned to milder ends — he is now Juno's son-in-law who was once her foe. In fine'tis possible for me to hope for some salvation since the cause of my punishment involves no stain of blood; I never sought to wreck everything by assailing the life of Caesar, which is the life of the world. I have said nothing, divulged nothing in speech, let slip no impious words by reason of too much wine: because my unwitting eyes beheld a crime, I am punished, and'tis my sin that I possessed eyes. I cannot indeed exculpate my fault entirely, but part of it consists in error. So have I still some hope that he may bring himself to lighten my punishment by changing its place. Would that such a dawn as this may be brought me by the harbinger of the gleaming sun, fair Lucifer, with his swift steed!

VI. TO AN OLD FRIEND

The bond of our friendship, dear one, you neither wish to hide nor, should you perchance so wish, have you the power, for while it was possible no other was dearer to me than you were, no one in the whole city closer to you than I; that love was so thoroughly attested by everybody that it was almost better known than you or I, and the frankness of your heart towards your dear friends — all this is known to that very man whom you love. You had no secret such that I was not aware of it, and many things you used to entrust to the guardianship of my heart. To you alone I used to tell all my secrets except that one which ruined me. If you had known that also, you would now be enjoying the safety of your comrade: through your advice I should be safe, my friend. But doubtless my fate was dragging me to punishment; it closes every road of advantage. Yet whether I could have avoided this evil by taking care or whether no planning can defeat fate, do you, close joined to me by long friendship, you almost the largest part of my longing, remember me; and if favour has given you any powers, I beg that you will test them in my behalf to soften the wrath of the injured deity and that my punishment may be lessened by changing its place — and this only on condition that no crime is in my heart but a mistake is responsible for the beginning of my sin. 'Tis not a brief tale or safe to say what chance made my eyes witness a baleful evil. My mind shrinks in dread from that time, as'twere from its own wounds, and the very thought of it renews my shame; whatever can bring such sense of shame should be covered and hidden in the darkness of night. Nothing then will I say except that I have sinned, but by that sin sought no reward; folly is the proper name for my crime, if you wish to give the true title to the deed. If this is untrue, then seek a still more distant place for my exile; this place is for me a land close to the city.

VII. TO PERILLA

Go, greet Perilla, quickly written letter, and be the trusty servant of my speech. You will find her sitting in the company of her sweet mother or amid books and the Pierian maidens she loves. Whatever she be doing she will leave it when she knows of your coming and ask at once why you come or how I fare. Say that I live, but in such wise that I would not live; that my misfortunes have not been lightened by the lapse of so long a time, that nevertheless I am returning to the Muses despite their injury, forcing words to fit alternating measures.

Say to her, "Art thou too still devoted to our common pursuit of singing learned verse, though not in thy father's fashion? For with thy life nature has bestowed upon thee modest ways and a rare dower of native wit. This I was the first to guide to the stream of Pegasus lest the rill of fertile water unhappily be lost. I was the first to discern this in the tender years of thy girlhood when, as a father to his daughter, I was thy guide and comrade. So if the same fire still abides in thy breast, only the Lesbian bard will surpass thy work. But I fear that my fate may now be trammelling thee, that since my disaster thy mind may have become inactive. Whilst I could, I used often to read thy verse to myself and mine to thee; often was I thy critic, often thy teacher, now lending my ear to the verses thou hadst recently composed, now causing thee to blush when thou wert idle. Perchance from the example of the injury that verse has done me thou too mayst have experienced in thought the fate of my punishment. Lay aside thy fear, Perilla; only let no woman or any man learn from thy writings how to love.

31 “So put aside the causes of sloth, accomplished girl, return to a noble art and thy sacred offerings. That fair face will be marred by the long years, the wrinkles of age will come in time upon thy brow. Ruinous age that comes with noiseless step will lay her hand upon thy beauty, and when someone shall say. ‘She once was fair,’ thou wilt grieve and complain that thy mirror lies. Thou hast a modest fortune, though full worthy of a great one; but imagine it the equal of boundless riches, still assuredly fortune gives and takes away whatever she pleases, and he becomes suddenly an Iruus who was but now a Croesus. In brief we possess nothing that is not mortal except the blessings of heart and mind. Behold me, deprived of native land, of you and my home, reft of all that could be taken from me; my mind is nevertheless my comrade and my joy; over this Caesar could have no right. Let any you will end this life with cruel sword, yet when I am dead my fame shall survive. As long as Martian Rome shall gaze forth victorious from her hills over the conquered world, I shall be read. Do thou too — and may a happier use of thine art await thee — ever shun what way thou canst the coming pyre!”

VIII. THE EXILE'S PRAYER

Now would I crave to stand in the car of Triptolemus, who flung the untried seed on ground that had known it not; now would I bridle the dragons that Medea had when she fled thy citadel, O Corinth; now would I pray for wings to ply — thine, Perseus, or thine, Daedalus — that the yielding air might give way before my rapid flight and I might on a sudden behold the sweet soil of my native land, the faces in my lonely home, my loyal friends, and — foremost of all — the dear features of my wife.

11 Fool! why pray in vain like a child for such things as these — things which no day brings you or will bring? If only you must pray, worship Augustus's divinity; petition in due form that god whose might you have felt. He has power to grant you feathers and winged cars: let him grant return and forthwith you will have wings. Were I to pray for this (and I can ask no greater things) I fear my prayer would lack restraint. For this perchance sometime, when his wrath is sated, I shall have to pray with a heart troubled even then. Meanwhile a smaller thing, but equal to a generous boon for me — let him bid me go anywhere from this place. Neither climate nor water suit me, nor land nor air — ah me! a constant weakness possesses my frame. Whether the contagion of a sick mind affects my limbs or the cause of my ills is this region, since I reached the Pontus, I am harassed by sleeplessness, scarce does the lean flesh cover my bones, food pleases not my lips; and such a hue as in autumn, when the first chill has smitten them, shows on the leaves that young winter has marred, overspreads my body; no strength brings relief, and I never lack cause for plaintive pain. I am no better in mind than in body; both alike are sick and I suffer double hurt. Clinging and standing like a visible body before my eyes is the figure of my fate that I must scan; and when I behold the country, the ways, the dress, the language of the people, when I remember what I am and what I was, I have so great a love of death that I complain of Caesar's wrath, because he avenges not his wrongs with the sword. But since he has once exercised his hatred mildly, let him lighten my exile still further by changing its place.

IX. THE ORIGIN OF TOMIS

Here too then there are Grecian cities (who would believe it?) among the names of the wild barbarian world; hither also came from Miletus colonists to found among the Getae Grecian homes. But the ancient name, more ancient than the founding of the city, was given to this place, 'tis certain, from the murder of Absyrtus. For in the ship which was built under the care of warlike Minerva — the first to speed through the untried seas — wicked Medea fleeing her forsaken sire brought to a haven her oars, they say, in these waters. Him in the distance the lookout on the lofty hill espied and said, "A stranger approaches from Colchis; I recognize the sails!"

13 While the Minyae are all excitement, while the cable is loosed from the shore, while the anchor is being raised following their nimble hands, the Colchian maid conscious of her guilt smote her breast with a hand that had dared and was to dare many things unspeakable, and though her heart still retained its great boldness, there was a pallor of dismay upon the girl's face.

19 And so at the sight of the approaching sails, she said, "We are caught! I must delay my father by some trick!" As she was seeking what to do, turning her countenance on all things, she chanced to bend her gaze upon her brother. When aware of his presence she exclaimed, "The victory is mine! His death shall save me!" Forthwith while he in his ignorance feared no such attack she pierced his innocent side with the hard sword. Then she tore him limb from limb, scattering the fragments of his body throughout the fields so that they must be sought in many places. And to apprise her father she placed upon a lofty rock the pale hands and gory head.

Thus was the sire delayed by his fresh grief, lingering, while he gathered those lifeless limbs, on a journey of sorrow.

33 So was this place called Tomis because here, they say, the sister cut to pieces her brother's body.

X. THE RIGOURS OF TOMIS

If there be still any there who remembers banished Naso, if my name without me still survives in the city, let him know that beneath the stars which never touch the sea I am living in the midst of the barbarian world. About me are the Sauromatae, a cruel race, the Bessi, and the Getae, names how unworthy of my talent! Yet while the warm breezes blow we are defended by the interposing Hister; with the flood of his waters he repels wars. But when grim winter has thrust forth his squalid face, and the earth is marble-white with frost, while Boreas and the snow prevent life under the Great Bear, then'tis clear that these tribes are hard pressed by the shivering pole. The snow lies continuously, and once fallen, neither sun nor rains may melt it, for Boreas hardens and renders it eternal. So when an earlier fall is not yet melted another has come, and in many places'tis wont to remain for two years. So mighty is the power of Aquilo, when once he is aroused, that he levels high towers to the ground and sweeps away buildings. With skins and stitched breeches they keep out the evils of the cold; of the whole body only the face is exposed. Often their hair tinkles with hanging ice and their beards glisten white with the mantle of frost. Exposed wine stands upright, retaining the shape of the jar, and they drink, not draughts of wine, but fragments served them!

25 Why tell of brooks frozen fast with the cold and how brittle water is dug out of the pool? The very Hister, not narrower than the papyrus-bearing river, mingling with the vast deep through many mouths, freezes as the winds stiffen his dark flood, and winds its way into the sea with covered waters. Where ships had gone before now men go on foot and the waters congealed with cold feel the hoof-beat of the horse. Across the new bridge, above the gliding current, are drawn by Sarmatian oxen the carts of the barbarians. I may scarce hope for credence, but since there is no reward for a falsehood, the witness ought to be believed — I have seen the vast sea stiff with ice, a slippery shell holding the water motionless. And seeing is not enough; I have trodden the frozen sea, and the surface lay beneath an unwetted foot. If thou, Leander, hadst once had such a sea, thy death would not have been a charge against the narrow waters. At such times the curving dolphins cannot launch themselves into the air; if they try, stern winter checks them; and though Boreas may roar and toss his wings, there will be no wave on the beleaguered flood. Shut in by the cold the ships will stand fast in the marble surface nor will any oar be able to cleave the stiffened waters. I have seen fish clinging fast bound in the ice, yet some even then still lived.

61 So whether the cruel violence of o'ermighty Boreas congeals the waters of the sea or the full waters of the river, forthwith when the Hister has been levelled by the freezing Aquilo the barbarian enemy with his swift horses rides to the attack — an enemy strong in steeds and in far flying arrows — and lays waste far and wide the neighbouring soil. Some flee, and with none to protect their lands their unguarded resources are plundered, the small resources of the country, flocks and creaking carts — all the wealth the poor peasant has. Some are driven, with arms bound behind them, into captivity, gazing back in vain upon their farms and their homes; some fall in agony pierced with barbed shafts, for there is a stain of poison upon the winged steel. What they cannot carry or lead away they destroy, and the hostile flame burns the innocent hovels. Even when peace prevails, there is timorous dread of war, nor does any man furrow the soil with down-pressed share. A foe this region either sees or fears when it does not see; idle lies the soil abandoned in stark neglect. Not here, the sweet grape lying hidden in the leafy shade nor the frothing must brimming the deep vats! Fruits are denied in this region nor here would Acontius have anything on which to write the words for his sweetheart to read. One may see naked fields, leafless, treeless — a place, alas! no fortunate man should visit. This then, though the great world is so broad, is the land discovered for my punishment!

XI. TO AN ENEMY

Whoever thou art that dost mock, wicked man, at my misfortunes, endlessly bringing an indictment against me, thirsting for my blood, born art thou of crags and fed on the milk of wild beasts, and I will assert that thy breast is made of flint. What farther point remains to which thy anger may extend? What dost thou see lacking to my woes? A barbarous land, the unfriendly shores of Pontus, and the Maenalian bear with her companion Boreas behold me. No interchange of speech have I with the wild people; all places are charged with anxiety and fear. As a timid stag caught by ravenous bears or a lamb surrounded by the mountain wolves is stricken with terror, so am I in dread, hedged about on all sides by warlike tribes, the enemy almost pressing against my side. Were it a slight punishment that I am deprived of my dear wife, my native land, and my loved ones; were I supporting no ills but the naked wrath of Caesar, is the naked wrath of Caesar too small an ill? Yet, despite this, someone there is to handle anew my raw wounds, to move eloquent lips against my character! In an easy cause anybody may be eloquent; the slightest strength is enough to break what is already shattered. To overthrow citadels and upstanding walls is valour; the worst of cowards press hard upon what is already fallen. I am not what I was. Why dost thou trample on an empty shadow? Why attack with stones my ashes and my tomb? Hector was alive whilst he fought in war, but once bound to the Haemonian steeds he was not Hector. I too, whom thou knewest in former times, no longer exist, remember; of that man there remains but this wraith. Why, cruel man, dost thou assail a wraith with bitter words? Cease, I beg, to harass my shade. Consider all my crimes real, let there be nothing in them that thou couldst think rather a mistake than a crime — lo! a fugitive I am paying (let this sate thy heart) a penalty heavy through exile and the place of that exile. To a hangman my fate might seem pitiful, yet there is one judge who thinks it sunk not deep enough!

39 Thou art more cruel than harsh Busiris, more cruel than he who heated the artificial bull over a slow fire and gave the bull, they say, to the Sicilian lord commending his work of art with the words: “In this gift, O King, there is profit, greater than appears, for not the appearance alone of my work is worthy of praise. Seest thou on the right that the bull’s flank may be opened? Through this thou must thrust whomsoever thou wouldst destroy. Forthwith shut him in and roast him over slow-burning coals: he will bellow, and that will be the voice of a true bull. For this invention pay gift with gift, and give me, I pray thee, a reward worthy of my genius.” Thus he spake. But Phalaris said, “Marvellous inventor of punishment, dedicate in person thine own work!” At once roasted by the fires to which he had himself cruelly pointed the way he uttered with groaning lips sounds twofold.

55 What have I, in Scythia among the Getae, to do with Sicilians? To thee, whoever thou art, my complaint returns. That thou mayst sate thy thirst in my blood and carry as much joy as thou wilt in thy greedy heart, I have endured so many woes by land in my flight, so many by sea, that I think even thou canst feel pain at the hearing of them. I assure thee, if Ulysses should be compared with me, Neptune’s wrath is less than Jove’s has been. So then, whoever thou art, do not open again the charges against me, remove thy hard hands from my dangerous wound, and that forgetfulness may lessen the ill repute of my fault, permit a scar to cover my deed; remember human fate, which lifts or lowers the same men, and fear for thyself uncertain change. And since — as I never thought possible — thou dost take the greatest interest in my affairs, there is naught for thee to fear: my fate is most wretched, Caesar's wrath draws with it every ill. That this may be clearer and I be not thought to feign it, I pray that in thine own person thou mayst try my punishment.

XII. SPRINGTIME IN TOMIS

The cold is now weakening beneath the zephyr's breath and at the year's close the Maeotic winter has seemed more endless than those of old, and he who bore Helle but ill upon his back now makes equal the time of night and day. Now merry boys and girls are plucking the violets that spring up unsown in the fields, the meadows are abloom with many-coloured flowers, the chatty birds from unschooled throats utter a song of spring, and the swallow, to put off the name of evil mother, builds beneath the rafters the tiny house that cradles her young. The grain that lay in hiding beneath the furrows comes forth, unfolding from the soil its tender tips. Wherever grows the vine, the bud is just pushing from the shoot (but the vine grows far from the Getic shore!), and wherever grows the tree, the branches are just budding (but the tree grows far from the Getic shore!). In yonder land there is now rest, and the noisy wars of the wordy forum are giving place to festivals one after another; now there is sport with horses, now there is play with light arms, with the ball or the swift circling hoop; now the young men, reeking of slippery oil, are bathing wearied limbs in Virgin water. The stage is full of life, and partizanship ablaze with warring passions, and three theatres roar in the place of three forums. Ah! four times happy — yes, countless times happy — is he who may enjoy the unforbidden city!

27 But mine it is to feel the snow melted by the spring sun and water which is not dug all hard from the pool. The sea, too, is no longer solid with ice, nor as before does the Sauromatian herdsman drive his creaking wagon across the Ister. Yet spite of all some ships will begin to voyage hither, and soon there will be a friendly bark on Pont us' shore. Eagerly I shall run to meet the mariner and when I've greeted him, shall ask why he comes, who and from what place he is. It will be strange, indeed, if he is not from a neighbouring land — one who has ploughed no seas but those near by. For rarely does a sailor cross the wide seas from Italy, rarely visit this harbourless shore. Yet if he knows how to speak with the voice of Greek or Roman (this last will surely be the sweeter, for'tis possible, too, that from the mouth of the strait and the waters of far Propontis someone has set sail hither with a steady south wind), whoever he is, he may be one to tell faithfully some rumour, one to share and pass on some report. May he, I pray, have power to tell of Caesar's triumphs and vows paid to Jupiter of the Latins; that thou, rebellious Germany, at length hast lowered thy sorrowing head beneath the foot of our leader. He who tells me such things as these — things it will grieve me that I have not seen — shall be forthwith a guest within my home. Ah me! is Naso's home now in the Scythian world, and does my punishment assign me its own land as an abode? Ye gods, give Caesar the will that not here may be my hearth and home but only the hostelry of my punishment!

XIII. A BIRTHDAY AT TOMIS

Lo! to no purpose — for what profit was there in my birth? — my birthday god attends his anniversary. Cruel one, why hast thou come to increase the wretched years of an exile? To them thou shouldst have put an end. Hadst thou any love for me or any sense of shame, thou wouldst not be following me beyond my native land, and where first I was known by thee as an ill-starred child, there shouldst thou have tried to be my last, and at the parting, like my friends, thou too in the city shouldst have said in sorrow “Farewell.”

11 What hast thou to do with Pontus? Is it that Caesar’s wrath sent thee too to the remotest land of the world of cold? Thou awaitest, I suppose, thine honour in its wonted guise: a white robe hanging from my shoulders, a smoking altar garlanded with chaplets, the grains of incense snapping in the holy fire, and myself offering the cakes that mark my birthday and framing kindly petitions with pious lips. Not such is my condition, nor such my hours, that I can rejoice at thy coming. An altar of death girdled with funereal cypress is suited to me and a flame made ready for the up-reared pyre. Nor is it a pleasure to offer incense that wins nothing from gods, nor in such misfortunes do words of good omen come to my lips. Yet if I must ask thee something on this day, return thou no more to such a land, I pray, so long as all but the remotest part of the world, the Pontus, falsely called Euxine, possesses me.

XIV. EPILOGUE — TO AN UNNAMED FRIEND

Cherisher and revered protector of learned men, what doest thou — thou that hast ever befriended my genius? As thou once wert wont to extol me when I was in safety, now too dost thou take heed that I seem not wholly absent? Dost thou harbour my verse except only that “Art” which ruined its artificer? Do so, I pray, thou patron of new bards; so far as may be, keep my body in the city. Exile was decreed to me, exile was not decreed to my books; they did not deserve their master’s punishment. Oft is a father exiled on a foreign shore, yet may the exile’s children live in the city. Pallas-fashion were my verses born from me without a mother; these are my offspring, my family. These I commend to thee; the more bereft they are, the greater burden will they be to thee their guardian.

Three of my children have caught pollution from me: make the rest of the flock openly thy care. There are also thrice five books on changing forms, verses snatched from the funeral of their master. That work, had I not perished beforehand, might have gained a more secure name from my finishing hand: but now unrevised it has come upon mens lips — if anything of mine is on their lips. Add to my books this humble bit also, which comes to you dispatched from a far-distant world. Whoever reads this (if anyone does) let him take account beforehand at what time, in what place it was composed. He will be fair-minded to writings which he knows were composed in time of exile, in the barbarian world; and amid so many adverse circumstances he will wonder that I had the heart to write with sorrowing hand any poem. Misfortunes have broken my talent whose source was even aforetime unproductive and whose stream was meagre.

But such as it was, with none to exercise it, it has shrunken and is lost, dried up by long neglect. Not here have I an abundance of books to stimulate and nourish me: in their stead is the rattle of bows and arms. There is nobody in this land, should I read my verse, of whose intelligent ear I might avail myself, there is no place to which I may withdraw. The guard on the wall and a closed gate keep back the hostile Getae. Often I am at a loss for a word, a name, a place, and there is none who can inform me. Oft when I attempt some utterance — shameful confession! — words fail me: I have unlearned my power of speech. Thracian and Scythian tongues chatter on almost every side, and I think I could write in Getic measure. O believe me, I fear that there may be mingled with the Latin in my writings the language of the Pontus. Such as my book is, then, deem it worthy of indulgence and pardon it because of the circumstances of my fate.

I. A PLEA FOR INDULGENCE

Whatever faults you may find — and you will find them — in my books, hold them absolved, reader, because of the time of their writing. I am an exile; solace, not fame, has been my object — that my mind dwell not constantly on its own woes. This is why even the ditcher, shackled though he be, resorts to song, lightening with untutored rhythm his heavy work. He also sings who bends forward over the slimy sand, towing against the stream the slow-moving barge, or he who pulls to his breast in unison the pliant oars, timing his arms with measured strokes upon the water. The weary shepherd leaning upon his staff or seated upon a rock soothes his sheep with the drone of his reeds. At once singing, at once spinning her allotted task, the slave girl beguiles and whiles away her toil. They say too that when the maid of Lyrnesus was taken from him, sad Achilles relieved his sorrow with the Haemonian lyre. While Orpheus was drawing to him the forests and the hard rocks by his singing, he was sorrowing for the wife twice lost to him.

He fears neither treachery, nor the brand of the Sintian soldier, nor sea nor winds nor the world of the barbarians. She knows also what mistake led me astray at the time of my ruin, — that there is fault in my deed, but no crime. Doubtless for this very reason is she fair to me now because she injured me before, when she was indicted with me for a joint crime. Well could I wish, since they were destined to work me harm, that I had ne'er set hand to the holy service of the Pierian ones. But now, what am I to do? The very power of that holy service grips me; madman that I am, though song has injured me, 'tis still song that I love. So the strange lotos tasted by Dulichian palates gave pleasure through the very savour which wrought harm. The lover is oft aware of his own ruin yet clings to it, pursuing that which sustains his own fault. I also find pleasure in my books though they have injured me, and I love the very weapon that made my wounds.

37 Perchance this passion may seem madness, but this madness has a certain profit: it forbids the mind to be ever gazing at its woes, rendering it forgetful of present mischance. As the stricken Bacchante feels not her wound while in ecstasy she shrieks to the accompaniment of Idaean measures, so when my heart feels the inspiring glow of the green thyrsus, that mood is too exalted for human woe; it realizes neither exile nor the shores of the Scythian sea nor the anger of the gods, and just as if I were drinking slumber-bringing Lethe's draughts, I lose the sense of evil days.

49 Tis right then for me to revere the goddesses who lighten my misfortunes, who came from Helicon to share my anxious flight, who now by sea, now by land, deigned to follow my route on ship or afoot. May they at least, I pray, be propitious to me! For the rest of the gods take sides with mighty Caesar, heaping upon me as many ills as the sands of the shore, the fishes of the sea, or the eggs of the fish. Sooner will you count the flowers of spring, the grain-ears of summer, the fruits of autumn, or the snowflakes in time of cold than the ills which I suffered driven all over the world seeking in wretchedness the shores to the left of the Euxine. Yet no lighter since my coming is the lot of my misfortunes; to this place also fate has followed my path. Here also I recognize the threads of my nativity, threads twisted for me from a black fleece. To say naught of ambushes or of dangers to my life — true they are, yet too heavy for belief in truth — how pitiable a thing is living among Bessi and Getae for him who was ever on the people's lips! How pitiable to guard life by gate and wall, and scarce to be safeguarded by the strength of one's own position! The rough contests of military service I shunned even as a youth and touched arms only with a hand intending to play; but now that I am growing old I fit a sword to my side, a shield to my left arm, and I place a helmet upon my gray head. For when the guard from the lookout has given the signal of a raid, forthwith I don my armour with shaking hands.

The foe with his bows and with arrows dipped in poison fiercely circles the walls upon his panting steed, and as the sheep which has not found shelter in the fold is carried and dragged through field, through forest by the ravening wolf, so'tis with him whom the barbarian finds not yet sheltered within the hedge of the gates, but in the fields: that man either follows into captivity and submits to the bonds cast about his throat or he dies by an envenomed missile. This is the place in which, a new colonist in an abode of anxiety, I lie secluded — alas! too long is the period of my fate!

87 Nevertheless my Muse has the heart to return to rhythm, to her old-time rites, a friendly guest amid these great misfortunes. But there is none to whom I — may read my verses, none whose ears can comprehend Latin words. I write for myself — what else can I do? — and I read to myself, and my writing is secure in its own criticism. Yet have I often said, “For whom this careful toil? Will the Sauromatae and the Getae read my writings?” Often too my tears have flowed as I wrote, my writing has been moistened by my weeping, my heart feels the old wounds as if they were fresh, and sorrow's rain glides down upon my breast.

99 Again when I bethink me what, through change of fortune, I am and what I was, when it comes over me whither fate has borne me and whence, often my mad hand, in anger with my efforts and with itself, has hurled my verses to blaze upon the hearth. And since of the many not many survive, see thou readest them with indulgence, whoever thou mayst be! Thou too take in good part verse that is not better than my lot, O Rome forbidden to me!

II. A TRIUMPH OVER GERMANY

Already wild Germany, like the whole world, may have yielded on bended knee to the Caesars; mayhap the lofty Palatium is decked with garlands and incense is crackling in the fire, colouring the light of day, while from the white victim's throat smitten by the axe's stroke the red blood is pattering upon the ground, the gifts promised to the temples of the friendly gods are being made ready for offering by both Caesars and by the youths who are growing up under Caesar's name to give that house eternal sway over the world; with her good daughters Livia for the safety of her son is perchance offering gifts, as she will often do, to the deserving gods, and in her company the matrons also and those who without stain in eternal virginity keep watch over the hearth of purity; the loyal plebs is rejoicing, and with the loyal plebs the senate and the knights among whom but recently I had a humble part: but I driven so far away miss the common rejoicing and nothing but a slight rumour penetrates so far.

19 So then all the people will be able to view the triumph, reading the names of captured towns and the titles of leaders, beholding the kings with chains upon their captive throats marching before the garlanded horses, seeing some countenances turned to earth as becomes captives, others grim and forgetful of their lot. Some of the people will inquire the causes, the objects, the names, and others will answer though they know all too little.

This one who gleams aloft in Sidonian purple, was the leader in, that other his next in command. This who now has fixed his sad gaze upon the ground. (30) had not such countenance when he bore arms. That fierce fellow with hostile eyes still ablaze was at once the instigator and planner of the fight. This traitor here trapped our men in a treacherous place — the one who now conceals his unkempt face with his long hair. That one following him they say was the priest who sacrificed captives to a god who often refused them. This lake, these mountains, these many forts, all the rivers were filled with wild slaughter, filled with gore. Drusus once earned in this land a surname — (40) Drusus who was a noble scion, worthy of his father. This thing with broken horns and sorry covering of green sedge was the Rhine himself, discoloured with his own blood. See! even Germany is borne along with streaming locks, seated in grief at the feet of the unconquered leader. Offering her proud neck to the Roman axe she wears chains on that hand in which she earned arms. High above them in the car of victory, thou wilt ride, O Caesar, clad in purple before the faces of they people as old rite bids. Throughout thy course thou wilt be applauded by the hands of thy subjects, (50) from all sides flowers will fall and cover thy path. With their temples all garlanded in the laurel of Phoebus the soldiers will shout “io, io triumphe” in loud voices. At the sound of their singing, the applause, the din, thou wilt thyself see the four steeds often rear. Then thou wilt seek the citadel and shrines that favour prayers and thou wilt give the votive laurel to deserving Jupiter.

67 All this I, an exile, shall see in my mind’s eye — my only way; for my mind at least has a right to that place which has been torn from me. It travels free through measureless lands, it reaches the heaven in its swift course, it leads my eyes to the city’s midst, not allowing them to be deprived of so great a blessing; and my mind will find a place to view the ivory car, — thus at least for a brief space I shall be in my native land. Yet the real sight will belong to the happy people, the throng will rejoice in the presence of their own leader.

67 But as for me — in imagination only and with ears far away I shall have perforce to realize the joy, and there will scarce be one sent far from Latium to the opposite side of the world to tell it all to eager me. Even he will tell the tale of that triumph late, when it is already of long standing; yet whenever I hear of it, I shall be glad. Then will come a day on which I may lay aside my gloom; greater than a private cause will be that of the state.

III. TO HIS WIFE

Ye two beasts,<sup>1</sup> great and small, one the guide of Grecian, the other of Sidonian ships, each unwetted by the waves, since from your places at the summit of the pole ye behold all things, never dipping beneath the westering waters, and since your orbit girdling heaven's heights in its embrace stands out above the earth it never touches, regard, I pray, those walls which once, they say, Remus, Ilia's son, leaped across to his undoing; turn your bright faces upon my lady and tell me whether she thinks of me or not. Ah me! Why should I fear? I am seeking that which is already clear. Why does my hope lie prostrate mingled with hesitating fear? Believe that which is even as you wish, and cease to fear for what is secure. When faith wavers not, have in it unwavering faith, and what the pole-flames cannot tell you, that tell yourself in a voice that will not lie: of you in very truth she thinks — she who is the object of your own great love; she keeps with her the only thing she can, your name. She bends over your face as if you were present, and though far away, if only she is alive, she loves you still.

<sup>21</sup> When thy sick heart broods upon thy just grief, can it be that soft slumber leaves thy mindful breast? Then does woe steal upon thee, while my couch and my place touch thee, not permitting thee to forget me? Does anguish come and the night seem endless, and do the weary bones of thy tossing body ache? I doubt not that these and other things occur, that thy love gives token of sorrow's pain, that thou art tortured not less than the Theban princess when she beheld blood-stained Hector dragged by the Thessalian chariot.

am the cause of thy grief. Thou art not sad? Yet, I would have thee worthy of a lost husband. Bewail in very truth thy loss, gentlest of wives, live through a time of sorrow for my misfortunes. Weep for my woe; in weeping there is a certain joy, for by tears grief is sated and relieved. And would that thou hadst to mourn not my life but my death, that by my death thou hadst been left alone! This spirit of mine through thy aid would have gone forth to its native air, loving tears would have wet my breast, my eyes upon the last day gazing at a familiar sky would have been closed by thy fingers, my ashes would have been laid to rest in the tomb of my fathers and the ground that I touched at birth would possess my body; as I lived, in fine, so should I have died, — without crime. Now my life must be shamed by its own punishment. Wretched am I if, when thou art called an exile's wife, thou dost avert thy gaze and a blush steals over thy face! Wretched am I if thou countest it disgrace to be thought my bride! Wretched am I if now thou art ashamed to be mine! Where is that time when thou wert wont to boast of thy husband and not conceal that husband's name? Where is that time when — unless thou wouldst not have such things recalled — thou wert glad (I remember) to be called and to be mine? As becomes a good woman thou wert pleased with every endowment I possessed and to those which were real thy partial love added many. There was no other man for thee to put before me — so important an object did I seem to thee — nor any whom thou didst prefer to be thy husband. Even now be not ashamed that thou art wedded to me; this should bring thee grief, but no shame. When fell rash Capaneus by a sudden stroke, dost thou read that Euadne blushed for her husband? Not because the king of the world quelled fire with fire was Phaëthon to be denied by his friends. Semele was not estranged from her father, Cadmus, because she perished through her ambitious prayers. Nor upon thy tender face, because I have been smitten by Jove's flame, let red shame be spread. But rather rise to the charge of my defence and be thou for me the model of a noble wife. Flood a sad theme with thy virtues: glory scales the heights by steepest paths. Who would know Hector, if Troy had been happy? By public ills was the way of virtue builded. Thy skill, Tiphys, lies inert if there be no wave upon the sea: if men be in health, thy skill, Phoebus, lies inert.

79 The virtue which lies hidden and hangs back unrecognized in times of prosperity, comes to the fore and asserts itself in adversity. My fate gives thee scope for fame and provides a chance for thy loyal love to raise a conspicuous head. Avail thyself of the crisis through whose gift a mighty field has been created, open for thy praise. —

IV. TO A NOBLE FRIEND

O — you who through ancestral names have noble birth yet surpass your birth in nobility of character, whose mind reflects your father's candour yet so that it lacks not powers all its own, in whose intellect resides the eloquence of your father's tongue which no other in the Latin forum has excelled — I have addressed you not at all as I wished, with symbols instead of a name; do you pardon these praises that are all your own. I have been to blame in naught, for your virtues are recognized and betray you. If you appear to be what you really are I am acquitted of fault.

<sup>11</sup> And yet the homage rendered to you by my verse cannot, I think, harm you with so just a prince; even the Father of his Country — for who is milder than he? — submits to frequent mention in my verse, nor can he prevent it, for Caesar is the state, and of the common good I too have a share. Jupiter offers his divinity to poets' art, permitting himself to be praised by every mouth. Your case is safeguarded by the example of two superhuman beings of whom one in men's sight, the other in their belief, is a god. Even though I have transgressed duty, yet I shall be the one accused, for my letter was not under your control. And'tis no new wrong that I commit in speaking with you, for in the time of my security I often spoke with you. You need not fear that my friendship will be laid as a charge against you; the odium, if there be any, can be assigned to him who was responsible. For from my earliest years I honoured your father — this at least desire not to conceal — and my talent, you may remember, was approved by him even more than in my own judgment I deserved; of my verse he used to speak with those lips in which lay part of his great renown. Not you then, if your house made me welcome, but your father before you was cheated Yet cheating there was none, believe me, but in all its acts, if you except the very latest, my life is worthy of protection. Even this fault which has ruined me you will say is no crime, if you should come to know the course of this great evil. Either timidity or a mistake — mistake first — has injured me. Ah, let me not remember my fate! Let me not handle and break open wounds that are not yet closed! Scarce will rest itself relieve them.

43 So then I am justly paying a penalty, but no act or design was connected with my sin. And this the God realizes, and so life was not taken from me nor my wealth stripped away to become the property of another. Perchance this very exile, if only I live, he will sometime bring to an end when time shall soften his wrath. Now I am begging him to order me to another place, if my prayer lacks not respect and modesty. A milder place of exile, a little nearer home, I pray — a place farther from the fierce enemy; and such is Augustus's mercy that if one should ask this of him in my behalf, it may be he would grant it.

66 The cold shores of the Pontus Euxinus keep me; by men of old it was called Axenus. For its waters are tossed by no moderate winds and there are no quiet harbours visited by foreign ships. Round about are tribes eager for plunder and bloodshed, and the land is not less to be feared than the treacherous sea. They whom you hear as rejoicing in men's gore dwell almost beneath the axis of the same constellation as myself, and not far away from me is the place where the Tauric altar of the quivered goddess is sprinkled with the blood of murder. This in former times, they say, was the realm of Thoas, not envied by the wicked nor desired by the good. Here the Pelopian maid, she for whom the doe was substituted, cared for the offerings (whatever their nature! ) to her goddess. Hither came Orestes, whether in loyalty or crime, I know not, driven by his own furies, and his Phocian comrade, the model of sincere love; these twain were a single heart in two bodies. Forthwith in bonds they were brought to the harsh altar that stood reeking with blood before the double doors. Yet neither the one nor the other feared his own death: each sorrowed for the other's fate. Already had the priestess taken her stand with drawn knife, her Grecian tresses bound with a barbarian fillet, when in their talk she recognized her brother and in the stead of death Iphigenia gave him her embrace. In joy she bore away the statue of the goddess, who detested cruel rites, from that place to a better.

83 Such then is the region, almost the farthest in the vast world, fled by men and gods, that is near me. Near to my land — if a barbarian land is Naso's own — are the rites of death. O may the winds which bore Orestes away, waft my sails also homeward, under the favour of a god appeased!

V. TO A LOYAL FRIEND

O thou who art foremost among my beloved comrades, who didst prove to be the sole altar for my fortunes, whose words of comfort revived this dying soul, as the flame is wont to wake at the touch of Pallas, thou who didst not fear to open a secure harbour of refuge for a bark smitten by the thunderbolt; through whose means I should not have felt myself in want had Caesar taken from me my inherited wealth — while my fervour hurries me on in forgetfulness of my present state, how nearly, ah me! have I let slip thy name? Yet dost thou recognize it, and touched by desire for praise thou wouldst wish thou couldst say openly, “I am the man.” Surely if thou wouldst permit, I would render honour to thee and unite rare fidelity to fame.

But I fear that my grateful verse may do thee hurt, that the unseasonable honour of renown may stand in thy light. This thou mayst do, and'tis safe: rejoice within thine own breast that I have remembered thee, and that thou hast been loyal, and as thou art doing, strain thine oars to bear me aid until the god is appeased and a gentler breeze shall come; save a life that none can save unless he who submerged it lifts it from the Stygian waters, and give thyself — a rare thing it is — to every service of unswerving friendship. So may thy fortune make constant progress, so mayst thou need no aid and mayst thou aid thine own! So may thy bride equal her husband in constant goodness and no complaint befall your union. Mayst thou have also the love of him who shares thy blood, such love as his loyal brother feels for Castor. So may thy youthful son be like thee and may his character cause all to know him as thine own. So may the marriage torch of thy daughter make thee a father-in-law and soon give thee, still in thy prime, the name of grandsire!

VI. TIME BRINGS NO ANODYNE

By time the peasant's bullock is made submissive to the plough, offering his neck to the pressure of the curving yoke; time renders the mettlesome horse obedient to the pliant bridle as he receives with gentle mouth the hard bit; time quiets the rage of Phoenician lions so that their former wildness abides not in their spirits; the Indian brute, obedient to the commands of her master, vanquished by time, submits to servitude. Time causes the grape to swell on the spreading clusters until the berries scarce hold the juice within; time develops the seed into white ears of grain and takes heed that fruits be not sour. Time thins the ploughshare as it renews the soil, it wears away hard flint and adamant; it gradually softens even fierce anger, it lessens grief and relieves sorrowing hearts. All things then can be weakened by the passing of silent-footed time save my woes. Since I have been bereft of my native land, twice has the threshing-floor been smoothed for the grain, twice has the grape burst apart beneath the pressure of naked feet. And yet the long time has not given me fortitude; my mind has the sense of a woe still fresh.

23 Assuredly even aged bullocks often shun the yoke, and the well-broken horse often fights the bit. My present woe is harsher even than of old, for though still like itself, it has grown and increased with time. Nor were my evils so well known to me as now they are; now that I know them better, they weigh the more heavily. It is something also to apply to them strength still fresh and not to have been worn out beforehand by the ills of time. Stronger is the fresh wrestler on the yellow sands than one whose arms are wearied by slow waiting. Unwounded in shining armour the gladiator is better than the one whose weapons are stained red with his own blood. The new-built ship bears well the headlong blast, even a little squall breaks up the old one. I too of old bore more submissively what I am now bearing. How have my woes been multiplied by the lapse of time!

I assure you I am failing, and so far as I can prophesy from my bodily strength, but little time remains for my sorrows. For I have neither the strength nor the colour I used to have; my thin skin scarce covers my bones. My body is sick but my mind is worse, engrossed in gazing endlessly upon its suffering. Far from me is the sight of the city, far from me my beloved friends, far from me she who is dearer than all, my wife. Before me is a crowd of Scythians, a trousered throng of Getae. Thus what I behold and what I do not behold affect me. Yet there is one hope that consoles me in all this: my death will prevent these ills from enduring long.

VII. A REPROACH

Twice has the sun drawn near me after the cold of icy winter, twice completed his journey by touching the Fish. In so long a time why has not thy hand done its duty and completed even a few lines? Why has thy loyalty failed while they are writing with whom I had but slight companionship? Why, whenever I have removed its bonds from some letter, have I hoped that it contained thy name? May the gods grant that thou hast often written a letter but that not one of the many has been delivered to me. My prayer is true, 'tis clear. I'll sooner believe that the gorgon Medusa's face was garlanded with snaky locks, that there is a maiden with dogs below her middle, that there is a Chimaera, formed of a lioness and a fierce serpent held apart by flame, that there are fourfooted creatures whose breasts are joined to those of a man, a triple man and a triple dog, a Sphinx and Harpies and snaky-footed giants, a hundred-handed Gyas and a man who is half a bull. All these things will I believe rather than that thou, dear one, hast changed and put aside thy love for me. Countless mountains lie between thee and me, and roads, and rivers, and plains, and not a few seas. A thousand reasons can exist why the letters often sent by thee rarely reach my hands. But overcome the thousand reasons by writing often, lest I be forever making my own excuses for thee, my friend.

VIII. AN EXILE'S DECLINING YEARS

Already my temples are like the plumage of a swan, for white old age is bleaching my dark hair. Already the years of frailty and life's inactive time are stealing upon me, and already'tis hard for me in my weakness to bear up. Now'twere time that I should of right cease my toils and live with no harassing fears, to enjoy the leisure that always pleased my taste, comfortably engaged in my pursuits, devoting myself to my humble house and its old Penates, the paternal fields that are now bereft of their master, peacefully growing old in my lady's embrace, among my dear comrades and in my native land. For such consummation as this did my youth once hope; thus to pass these years did I deserve.

15 Not so have the gods decreed; they have driven me over land and sea and cast me forth in the region of Sarmatia. Battered ships are drawn into the hollow docks lest to no purpose they go to pieces in the waters' midst. Lest the steed that has won many palms should fall, dishonouring his victories, lazily now he crops the meadow grass. When the soldier after years of service is no longer useful, he lays the arms he has borne before the good old Lares. In this way, since slow old age is lessening my strength,'twere time for me also to be presented with the wooden sword. Twere time for me to breathe no foreign air nor slake my parching thirst with Getic water, but now to withdraw into the retirement of the gardens I once had, now once again to enjoy the sight of men and of the city.

29 Thus with a mind unprophetic of the future did I once pray for power to live quietly when old. The Fates opposed, for they brought comfort to my early years, to the later ones distress. Now after I have lived ten lustra unblemished, at a harder time of life I am o'erwhelmed; not far from the goal, which I seemed almost to have within my reach, my car has suffered a heavy fall. Did I then in my madness force him into rage against me who is more gracious than anything the wide world possesses? Has his very mercy been overcome by my sins, and yet has my error not denied me life? This life I must pass far from my country, beneath the pole of Boreas in the land to the left of the Euxine sea. If this had been told me by Delphi or Dodona herself, both places would have seemed to me unworthy of belief.

45 Nothing is so strong, though it be bound with adamant, as to withstand by greater might the swift thunderbolt of Jupiter; nothing is so lofty or reaches so far above perils that it is not beneath a god and subject to him. For although by fault I drew upon me a part of my ills, yet more ruin has befallen me because of the wrath of a divine power. But be ye warned by my fate also that ye make yourselves worthy of the man who is like unto the gods!

IX. A THREAT

If I may and you allow it, I will keep silent your name and deed, consigning your acts to Lethe's waters, and my mercy shall be won by tears that are late in coming, if only you make it clear that you have repented, if only through self-condemnation you show yourself eager to erase from your life, if but you can, that period of Tisiphone. But if not, if your heart still burns with hate for me, unhappy rage shall don perforce its arms. Though I be banished, as I have been, to the edge of the world, from thence shall my wrath stretch forth its hands. All my rights, if you know it not, Caesar has left me, and my only punishment is to be parted from my country. Even my country, if only he lives on, I hope as a boon from him; often the oak scorched by the bolt of Jove becomes green once more. In fine if I should have no opportunity for vengeance, the daughters of Pieria will give me strength and their own weapons. What though I dwell so far removed on the Scythian shores with the constellations that are ever dry close to my eyes, my herald-call shall pass through limitless peoples, my complaint shall be known wherever the world extends. Whatever I say shall pass to the setting sun from its rising and the East shall bear witness to the voice of the West. Across the land, across deep waters I shall be heard, and mighty shall be the cry of my lament. Not alone your own age shall know you guilty; to everlasting posterity you shall be a criminal. Already I am rushing into battle though I have not yet taken up arms, and I would I had no cause to take them up. The arena is still quiet, but the grim bull is already tossing the sand, already pawing the ground with angry hoof. Even this is more than I wished: Muse, sound the retreat, while this man still has the power to conceal his name.

X. THE POET'S AUTOBIOGRAPHY

That thou mayst know who I was, I that playful poet of tender love whom thou readest, hear my words, thou of the after time. Sulmo is my native place, a land rich in ice-cold streams, thrice thirty miles from the city. There first I saw the light, and if thou wouldst know the date, 'twas when both consuls fell under stress of like fate. I was heir to rank (if rank is aught) that came from forefathers of olden time — no knight fresh made by fortune's gift. I was not the first born, for my birth befell after that of a brother, thrice four months my senior. The same day-star beheld the birth of us both: one birthday was celebrated by the offering of our two cakes — that day among the five sacred to armed Minerva which is wont to be the first stained by the blood of combat. While still of tender age we began our training, and through our father's care we came to attend upon men of the city distinguished in the liberal arts. My brother's bent even in the green of years was oratory: he was born for the stout weapons of the wordy forum. But to me even as a boy service of the divine gave delight and stealthily the Muse was ever drawing me aside to do her work. Often my father said, "Why do you try a profitless pursuit? Even the Maeonian left no wealth." I was influenced by what he said and wholly forsaking Helicon I tried to write words freed from rhythm, yet all unbidden song would come upon befitting numbers and whatever I tried to write was verse.

27 Meanwhile as the silent-pacing years slipped past we brothers assumed the toga of a freer life and our shoulders put on the broad stripe of purple while still our pursuits remained as before. And now my brother had seen but twice ten years of life when he passed away, and thenceforth I was bereft of half myself. I advanced so far as to receive the first office granted to tender youth, for in those days I was one third of the board of three. The senate house awaited me, but I narrowed my purple stripe : that was a burden too great for my powers. I had neither a body to endure the toil nor a mind suited to it; by nature I shunned the worries of an ambitious life and the Aonian sisters were ever urging me to seek the security of a retirement I had ever chosen and loved.

41 The poets of that time I fondly revered: all bards I thought so many present gods. Ofttimes Macer, already advanced in years, read to me of the birds he loved, of noxious snakes and healing plants. Ofttimes Propertius would declaim his flaming verse by right of the comradeship that joined him to me. Ponticus famed in epic, Bassus also, famed in iambics, were pleasant members of that friendly circle. And Horace of the many rhythms held in thrall our ears while he attuned his fine-wrought songs to the Ausonian lyre. Vergil I only saw, and to Tibullus greedy fate gave no time for friendship with me. Tibullus was thy successor, Gallus, and Propertius his; after them came I, fourth in order of time. And as I revered older poets so was I revered by the younger, for my Thalia was not slow to become renowned. When first I read my youthful songs in public, my beard had been cut but once or twice. My genius had been stirred by her who was sung throughout the city, whom I called, not by a real name, Corinna. Much did I write, but what I thought defective I gave in person to the flames for their revision. Even when I was setting forth into exile I burned certain verse that would have found favour, for I was angry with my calling and with my songs.

65 My heart was ever soft, no stronghold against Cupid's darts — a heart moved by the slightest impulse. And yet, though such my nature, though I was set aflame by the littlest spark, no scandal became affixed to my name. When I was scarce more than a boy a wife unworthy and unprofitable became mine — mine for but a short space. Into her place came one, blameless, but not destined to remain my bride. And last is she who remained with me till the twilight of my declining years, who has endured to be the mate of an exile husband. My daughter, twice fertile, but not of one husband, in her early youth made me grandsire. And already had my father completed his allotted span adding to nine lustra a second nine. For him I wept no otherwise than he would have wept for me had I been taken. Next for my mother I made the offerings to death. Happy both! and laid to rest in good season! since they passed away before the day of my punishment. Happy too am I that my misery falls not in their lifetime and that for me they felt no grief. Yet if for those whose light is quenched something besides a name abides, if a slender shade escapes the high-heaped pyre, if, O spirits of my parents, report of me has reached you and the charges against me live in the Stygian court, know, I beg you — and you 'tis impious for me to deceive — that the cause of the exile decreed me is an error, and no crime. Be these my words to the shades. To you, fond hearts, that would know the events of my life, once more I turn.

93 Already had white hairs come upon me driving away my better years and mottling my ageing locks; ten times since my birth had the victorious rider, garlanded with Pisan olive, borne away the prize, when the wrath of an injured prince ordered me to Tomis on the left of the Euxine sea. The cause of my ruin, but too well known to all, must not be revealed by evidence of mine. Why tell of the disloyalty of comrades, of the petted slaves who injured me? Much did I bear not lighter than exile itself. Yet my soul, disdaining to give way to misfortune, proved itself unconquerable, relying on its own powers. Forgetting myself and a life passed in ease I seized with unaccustomed hand the arms that the time supplied: on sea and land I bore misfortunes as many as are the stars that lie between the hidden and the visible pole. Driven through long wanderings at length I reached the shore that unites the Sarmatians with the quiver-bearing Getae. Here, though close around me I hear the din of arms, I lighten my sad fate with what song I may; though there be none to hear it, yet in this wise do I employ and beguile the day. So then this living of mine, this stand against the hardness of my sufferings, this bare will to view the daylight's woes, I owe, my Muse, to thee! For thou dost lend me comfort, thou dost come as rest, as balm, to my sorrow. Thou art both guide and comrade: thou leadest me far from Hister and grantest me a place in Helicon's midst; thou hast given me while yet alive (how rare the boon!) a lofty name — the name which renown is wont to give only after death. Nor has jealousy, that detractor of the present, attacked with malignant tooth any work of mine. For although this age of ours has brought forth mighty poets, fame has not been grudging to my genius, and though I place many before myself, report calls me not their inferior and throughout the world I am most read of all. If then there be truth in poets' prophecies, even though I die forthwith, I shall not, O earth, be thine. But whether through favour or by very poetry I have gained this fame, 'tis right, kind reader, that I render thanks to thee.

BOOK V

I. A PROEM AND AN APOLOGY

Add this book also to the four I have already sent, my devoted friend, from the Getic shore. This too will be like the poet's fortunes: in the whole course of the song you will find no gladness. Mournful is my state, mournful therefore is my song, for the work is suited to its theme. Unhurt and happy with themes of happiness and youth I played (yet now I regret that I composed that verse); since I have fallen I act as herald of my sudden fall, and I myself provide the theme of which I write. As the bird of Cayster is said to lie upon the bank and bemoan its own death with weakening note, so I, cast far away upon the Sarmatian shores, take heed that my funeral rites pass not off in silence.

15 If any seeks the amusement of wanton verse, I forewarn him, there is no warrant for reading such verse as this. Gallus will be better suited for such a one, or Propertius of the alluring lips, better that winning genius Tibullus. And would I were not counted among them! Alas! why did my Muse ever jest? But I have paid the penalty, for in the lands of the Scythian Hister he who played with quiver-bearing Love is an exile. And besides I have turned men's minds to public song and bidden them remember my name. Yet if someone of you asks why I sing so many grievous things — many grievous things have I borne. This verse I compose not by inspiration, not by art; the theme is filled with inspiration by its own evils. And how small a portion of my lot appears in my verse? Happy he who can count his sufferings! As many as the twigs of the forest, as many as the grains of Tiber's yellow sands, as many tender grass-blades as the field of Mars possesses, so many ills have I endured for which there is no cure, no relief save in whiling away my time in devotion to the Pierians.

35 “What limit, Naso, to your mournful song?” you say. The same that shall be the limit to this state of mine. For my complaining that state serves me from a full spring, nor are these words mine; they belong to my fate. But should you restore to me my country and my dear wife, my face would be gay, and I should be what I once was. Should unconquerable Caesar’s wrath be milder to me, forthwith will I offer you verse filled with joy. Yet no writings of mine shall again wanton as once they wantoned; let them have rioted with my jests but once — I will compose something which he will himself approve, if only a part of my punishment be removed and I escape the barbarian world and the stern Getae. Meanwhile what should be the theme of my verse except sorrow? Such is the pipe whose notes befit this funeral of mine.

49 “But,” you say, “you might better endure your sorrows by keeping silent, and in silence hide your misfortunes.” Do you demand that no groans should ensue upon torture, and when a deep wound has been received, do you forbid weeping? Even Phalaris allowed Perillus within the bronze to utter bellows of torture through the mouth of the bull. When Priam’s tears did not offend Achilles, do you, more cruel than an enemy, restrain me from weeping? Though Latona’s children made Niobe childless, yet they did not bid her cheeks be dry. ’Tis something to lighten with words a fated evil; to this are due the complaints of Procne and Halcyone. This was why the son of Poeas in his chill cave wearied with his outcries the Lemnian rocks. A suppressed sorrow chokes and seethes within, multiplying perforce its own strength.

65 Indulge me rather, or else away with all my books, if that, reader, which helps me harms you. Yet it cannot harm you, for none has suffered hurt from my writings save their own author. “But,” you say, “they are poor stuff.” I admit it. Who forces you to take up such poor stuff, or who forbids you, when you find yourself deceived, to lay it aside? Even I do not revise them, but as they have here been written, so let them be read; they are not more barbarous than the place of their origin. Rome ought not to compare me with her own poets; 'tis among the Sauromatae that I am a genius!

76 In fine I court no renown nor that fame which usually sets the spur to talent; I would not have my soul waste away with continual woes, which nevertheless break in upon me, entering where they are forbidden. Why I write I have told you. Why do I send my writings to you, you ask. I am eager to be with you all in some fashion — no matter how.

II. TO HIS WIFE

What? When a fresh letter has come from Pontus, do you grow pale, do you open it with anxious hand? Put aside your fear: I am well, and my frame, which before could endure no toils and had no strength, now bears up and under the very harassings of experience has become hardened — or is it rather that I have no leisure to be weak? But my mind lies ill, nor has time given it strength; my feelings remain the same as of old. The wounds that I thought would close with passing time pain me no otherwise than if they had been freshly made. Yes, little troubles are helped by the flight of years; with great ones time but increases the ruin they cause. For almost ten whole years the son of Poeas nursed the baneful wound given him by the venom-swollen snake. Telephus would have died, destroyed by his eternal disease, had not the hand that harmed him borne him aid. My wounds also, if I have committed no crime, may their maker, I pray, desire to heal, and now at length satisfied with a portion of my suffering, may he draw off a little of the water from a brimming sea. Though he draw much, much bitterness will remain, and a part of my penalty will be as good as the whole. As many as are the shells on the shore, the flowers in the lovely rose gardens, the seeds of the sleep-producing poppy? as many beasts as the forest supports, as many as the fishes that swim in the sea, or the feathers with which a bird beats the yielding air — by so many sorrows am I overwhelmed. Should I essay to include them all, as well essay to tell the tale of the Icarian waters. The dangers of the road, the bitter perils of the sea, the hands raised to slay me — to say naught of these, a barbarian land the most remote in the vast world, a place girt by cruel enemies, holds me. From here might I pass — for my fault has no taint of blood — if you had the love for me which is my due. That god, on whom the power of Rome hath found happy stay, to his own enemy hath often been a gentle victor. Why hesitate and fear what has no peril? Approach, entreat him! the vast world holds naught more lenient than Caesar. Wretched me! What am I to do if all that is nearest abandons me? Do you too break the yoke and withdraw your neck? Whither shall I rush? Whence seek comfort for my weary lot? No anchor now holds my bark. You shall see! Even I, hated though I am, will seek refuge at the holy altar; no hands does the altar repel.

The Suppliant's Prayer

Lo! I an absent suppliant address an absent deity, if'tis right for a human being to have power of converse with Jupiter.

47 Lord of the empire, whose safety assures the protection of all the gods for the Ausonian race, thou glory, thou image of a fatherland that hath success through thee, hero not less mighty than the very world thou rulest (so mayst thou dwell on earth and heaven long for thee, so mayst thou be late in passing to thy promised stars) spare me, I beseech thee, and take but the least part from thy lightning's stroke; sufficient will be the penalty that remains. Thine anger is indeed moderate, for thou hast granted me life, I lack neither the right nor the name of citizen, nor has my fortune been granted to others, and I am not called "exile" by the terms of thy decree. All these things I feared because I saw that I had deserved them, but thy wrath is lighter than my sin. "Relegated" didst thou bid me come to view the fields by the Pontus, cleaving the Scythian sea in a fleeing bark. By thy command I have come to the formless shores of the Euxine water — this land lies beneath the frigid pole — nor am I so much tortured by a climate never free from cold and a soil ever shrivelled by white frost, by the fact that the barbarian tongue knows not a Latin voice and Greek is mastered by the sound of Getic, as that I am surrounded and hard pressed on every side by war close at hand and that a low wall scarce gives me safety from the foe. Yet peace there is at times, confidence in peace never: so does this place now suffer, now fear attack. If I may but exchange this place for another, let even Zanclean Charybdis swallow me, sending me by her waters to the Styx, or let me be resigned to burn in the flames of scorching Aetna or hurled into the deep sea of the Leucadian god. What I seek is punishment, for I do not reject suffering, but I beg that I may suffer in greater safety!

III. AN APPEAL TO BACCHUS

This is the day, if only I do not mistake the time, on which poets are wont to praise thee, Bacchus, binding their brows with sweet-scented garlands, and singing thy praises over thine own wine. Among them, I remember, whilst my fate allowed, oft did I play a part not distasteful to thee, but now I lie beneath the stars of the Cynosurian Bear, in the grip of the Sarmatian shore, close to the uncivilized Getae. I who before led a life of ease, toil-free, amid studies in the band of the Pierians, now far from my country am surrounded by the clash of Getic arms, after many sufferings on the sea, many on land. Whether chance brought this upon me or the wrath of the gods, or whether a clouded Fate attended my birth, thou at least shouldst have supported by thy divine power one of the worshippers of thine ivy. Or is it true that whatever the sisters, mistresses of fate, have ordained, ceases wholly to be under a god's power? Thou thyself wast borne by thy merit to the citadel of heaven, and the path thither was made by no slight toil. Thou didst not dwell in thy native country, but all the way to snowy Strymon thou hast gone and the Mars-worshipping Getae, Persia, and the broad-flowing Ganges, and all the waters that the swarthy Indian drinks. Such doubtless was the law twice ordained for thee by the Parcae who spun the fated threads at thy double birth. I too (if'tis right to make comparison with the gods) am crushed by an iron and a difficult lot. I have fallen no more lightly than he whom Jupiter, for his overweening utterance, drove back from Thebes with his lightning. Yet when thou didst hear that a poet had been smitten by the bolt, remembering thy mother, thou mightest have felt sympathy and gazing upon the bards about thine altar thou mightest have said, "Some worshipper of mine is missing."

35 Bring aid to me, kind Liber! So may a second vine weigh down the elm and the grape-clusters be filled with prisoned wine, so may the Bacchae and the young vigour of the Satyrs attend thee and may their frenzied cries keep not silent thy name; so may the bones of axe-bearing Lycurgus be heavily weighed down, nor may the wicked shade of Pentheus ever be free of punishment, so may the crown of thy spouse bright in the sky glitter for ever, surpassing the stars close at hand — hither come and lighten my misfortunes, fairest of gods, remembering that I am one of thine own. Gods deal with gods; do thou, O — Bacchus, seek to sway Caesar's power divine by thine own. Do ye, too, O poets who share in my pursuit, loyal throng, take each of you unmixed wine and make this same petition. And let someone of you, uttering Naso's name, pledge him in a bowl mingled with his own tears, and in thought of me, when he has gazed around upon all, let him say, "Where is Naso, who was but now a part of our company?" — and this only if I have earned your approval by my sincerity, if no book was ever injured by verdict of mine, if in deserved reverence for the writings of men of old I yet consider not inferior those most recent. As then I pray ye may compose under Apollo's favour: keep — for this is lawful — my name among you.

IV. THE POET'S LETTER GREETS A TRUE FRIEND

From the Euxine shore have I come, a letter of Naso's, wearied by the sea, wearied by the road. Weeping he said to me, "Do thou, who art allowed, look on Rome. Alas! how much better is thy lot than mine!" Weeping too he wrote me, and the gem with which I was sealed, he lifted first, not to his lips, but to his tear-drenched cheeks.

Whoever seeks to learn the cause of his sorrow is asking that the sun be shown to him; he sees not the leaves in the wood, the soft grass in the open meadow, or the water in the full stream; he will wonder why Priam grieves at the ravishing of Hector, why Philoctetes groans after the snake has struck. Would that the gods might bring to pass such lot for him that he had no cause of sorrow to lament! Yet spite of all he bears, as he ought, with patience his bitter misfortunes, nor, like an unbroken horse, does he refuse the bit. He hopes that not forever will the god's wrath endure, aware that in his fault there is no crime. Often he recalls how great is the god's mercy, of which he is wont to count himself also as an example; for that he retains his father's wealth, the name of citizen — in fine his very life he holds as a gift of the god.

23 But thee — O, if thou believest me in anything, dearer than all to him — thee he holds constantly in his whole heart. Thee he calls his Menoetiades, thee his Orestes' comrade, thee his Aegides, or his Euryalus. He longs not more for his country and the many things with his country whose absence he feels, than for thy face and eyes, O thou who art sweeter than the honey stored in the wax by the Attic bee.

Often too in his grief he remembers that time, which to his sorrow was not anticipated by death, when others were fleeing the pollution of sudden disaster, unwilling to approach the threshold of the stricken house, thou with a few others didst remain faithful — if anybody terms three or two “a few.” Though sore smitten, yet he realized everything — that thou not less than himself didst grieve over his misfortunes. Thy words, thy face, thy laments he is wont to recall, and his own bosom wet with thy tears; how thou didst support him, with what resource thou didst comfort him, although thou wert thyself at the same time in need of comfort.

43 For this he assures thee that he will be mindful and loyal, whether he behold the light of day or be covered by earth, swearing it by his own life and by thine which I know he counts not cheaper than his own. Full recompense for these many great acts shall be rendered; he will not suffer thine oxen to plough the shore. Only see thou dost constantly protect the exile! What he, who knows thee well, asketh not, that I ask.

V. MY LADY'S BIRTHDAY

The year has flown and the birthday of my lady exacts its customary honour; go, hands of mine, perform affection's rites. Thus of old did the Laërtian hero pass, perhaps at the world's edge, his wife's gala day. Let me have a tongue of good omen forgetful of my misfortunes (my tongue has, I think, unlearned ere now its utterance of propitious words!) and the garb that I put on only once in the whole year let me now put on — the white garb that matches not my fate. Let there be made a green altar of grassy turf, the warm hearth veiled with a braided garland. Give me incense, boy, that produces rich flame, and wine that hisses when poured in the pious fire.

13 Best of birthdays! though am far away, I pray thou mayst come hither bright and unlike my own. If any wretched wound is threatening my lady may she have done with it forever by means of my misfortunes, and may the bark which but recently was more than shaken by a violent blast pass in future over an untroubled sea. May she continue to enjoy her home, her daughter, and her native land (let it suffice that these things have been taken from me alone), and in as much as she is not blessed in the person of her dear husband, may all the other part of her life be free from gloomy cloud. Long life to her! and may she in absence, since to this she is forced, love her husband, and pass — but late! — to the end of her years. I would add my own too, but I fear the pollution of my fate would infect those which she herself is living.

27 Naught is certain for man. Who would have thought it possible that I should be performing these rites amidst the Getae? Yet look how the breeze wafts the smoke that rises from the incense in the direction of Italy and places of good omen. Sentence, then, resides in the vapour thrown off by the fire; designedly it flees thy sky, O Pontus. Designedly, when the common offering is made on the altar to the brothers who died by each other's hands, the very ashes, in dissension as if at their command, separate blackly into two parts. This, I remember, I once said could not be, and in my opinion Battus' son was mistaken. Now I believe all, since thou, O vapour, hast in wisdom turned from Adrctos and seekest Ausonia.

41 This then is the dawn in defect of whose rising there would have been no gala day to be seen by wretched me. This brought forth a character equalling those famed heroines whose fathers were Eëtion and Icarus. Chastity was born on this day of thine, virtue and uprightness, and loyalty; but no joys — rather woe and cares and a fortune unfitted to thy character, and a plaint all but just about thy widowed couch. Assuredly uprightness schooled by adversity in time of sorrow affords a theme for praise. Had sturdy Ulysses seen no misfortune, Penelope would have been happy but unpraised. Had her husband pressed victoriously into the citadel of Echion, perchance Euadne would scarce have been known to her own land. Though Pelias had so many daughters, why is one only famed? Doubtless because she alone wedded an ill-starred husband. Let but another be first to touch the sands of Ilium and there will be no reason why Laodamia should be remembered. Thy loyalty, too, as thou wouldst prefer, would remain unknown, if favouring winds filled my sails. Yet, O gods and Caesar destined to be one of the gods — but at that time when thy life shall have equalled the days of the Pylian — spare, not me, who confess that I have deserved a punishment, but her who grieves albeit she deserves not grief.

VI. BE FAITHFUL

Do you too, once the stay of my fortunes, my refuge, my harbour — do you too dismiss your love for the friend you took unto yourself? Do you so speedily lay aside the loyal burden of duty? I am a burden, I confess, but one which you should not have taken up if you meant to put it off at a time unfavourable for me. In the midst of the waves, Palinurus, do you desert the ship? Flee not; let not your faith be inferior to your skill. Did Automedon waver in his faith and abandon in the fierceness of the fight the steeds of Achilles? When once he had accepted the charge never did Podalirius fail to bring to the sick man the promised aid of his healing art. 'Tis baser to thrust forth than not to receive a guest: let the altar, once open, be a steady support for my right hand.

15 Nothing but myself alone did you at first preserve; but now preserve alike me and your own judgment, if only I have not some new fault and my wrongdoings have not suddenly altered your loyalty. May this breath which I draw not easily in the Scythian air leave my body — this is my desire — before your heart is wounded by sin of mine and I seem deservedly cheaper in your sight.

23 Not so utterly overwhelmed am I by unjust fate that my mind also has been unbalanced by my long continued woes. Yet suppose it unbalanced — how many times, think you, Agamemnon's son uttered violent words against Pylades? Nor is it far from truth that he even struck his friend; yet that friend stood fast in his loyalty. This is the only thing in common between the wretched and the fortunate that regard is wont to be rendered to both. We make way both for the blind and for those whom the praetexta and the imperious rods with their cries make reverend. If you have no consideration for me, you ought to show consideration for my fate; in my case there is no room for anger. Choose the very least of my woes; it will be greater than what you imagine. As many as are the reeds which hide the wet ditches, as many as are the bees which flowery Hybla guards, as many as are the ants that are wont to carry by tiny paths to underground stores the grain they find, so crowded is the throng of woes about me; believe me, my complaint is short of the truth. Whoever is not content with these, let him pour sands upon the shore, grain ears into the field, or water into the sea. Wherefore restrain your unseasonable anger and abandon not my bark in the midst of the sea.

VII. "AMONG THE GOTHS"

The letter which you are reading has come to you from that land where the broad Hister adds his waters to the sea. If you are blessed with life and the sweetness of safety, bright is still one spot in my life. Doubtless you are asking, as ever, dearest one, how I fare, though this you can know even if I speak not. I am wretched — this is the brief sum of my woes — and so will all be who live subject to Caesar's wrath.

9 What the people of the land of Tomis are like, amid what customs I live, are you interested to know? Though upon this coast there is a mixture of Greeks and Getae, it derives more from the scarce pacified Getae. Greater hordes of Sarmatae and Getae go and come upon their horses along the roads. Among them there is not one who does not bear quiver and bow, and darts yellow with viper's gall. Harsh voices, grim countenances, veritable pictures of Mars, neither hair nor beard trimmed by any hand, right hands not slow to stab and wound with the knife which every barbarian wears fastened to his side. Among such men, alas! your bard is living, forgetful of the loves with which he played: such men he sees, such men he hears, my friend. Would he might not live, but die among them, and yet so that his shade might leave this hated place!

25 As for your news that my songs are being presented with dancing in a crowded theatre, my friend, and that my verses are applauded — I have indeed composed nothing (you yourself know this) for the theatre; my Muse is not ambitious for hand-clappings. Yet I am not ungrateful for anything which hinders oblivion of me, which brings back the exile's name to men's lips. Although at times I curse the poems whose injury to me I recall, and my Pierians, yet when I have cursed them well I cannot live without them; I still seek the weapons that are bloody from my wounds, and the Grecian bark that but now was shattered by the Euboean waves dares to skim the waters of Caphereus. And yet I do not work o' nights for praise, toiling for the future life of a name which had better have lain unnoticed. I busy my mind with studies beguiling my grief, trying to cheat my cares. What else am I to do, all alone on this forsaken shore, what other resources for my sorrows should I try to seek? If I look upon the country, tis devoid of charm, nothing in the whole world can be more cheerless; if I look upon the men, they are scarce men worthy the name; they have more of cruel savagery than wolves. They fear not laws; right gives way to force, and justice lies conquered beneath the aggressive sword. With skins and loose breeches they keep off the evils of the cold; their shaggy faces are protected with long locks. A few retain traces of the Greek tongue, but even this is rendered barbarous by a Getic twang. There is not a single man among these people who perchance might express in Latin any common words whatsoever. I, the Roman bard — pardon, ye Muses! — am forced to utter most things in Sarmatian fashion. Lo! I am ashamed to confess it; now from long disuse Latin words with difficulty occur even to me! And I doubt not there are even in this book not a few barbarisms, not the fault of the man but of the place. Yet for fear of losing the use of the Ausonian tongue and lest my own voice grow dumb in its native sound, I talk to myself, dealing again with disused words and seeking again the ill-omened currency of my art.

65 Thus do I drag out my life and my time, thus do I withdraw myself from the contemplation of my woes. Through song I seek oblivion from my wretchedness. If such be the rewards I win by my pursuit, 'tis enough.

VIII. TO A DETRACTOR

I have not fallen so low, low though I am, that I am beneath you too, for beneath you there can be nothing. What stirs your spirit up against me, shameless man? Why do you mock at misfortunes which you yourself may suffer? My woes do not soften you and placate you towards one who is prostrate — woes over which wild beasts might weep, nor do you fear the power of Fortune standing on her swaying wheel, or the haughty commands of the goddess who hates. Avenging Rhamnusia exacts a penalty from those who deserve it; why do you set your foot and trample upon my fate? I have seen one drowned in the waves who had laughed at shipwreck, and I said, "Never were the waters more just." The man who once denied cheap food to the wretched now eats the bread of beggary. Changeable Fortune wanders abroad with aimless steps, abiding firm and persistent in no place; now she comes in joy, now she takes on a harsh mien, steadfast only in her own fickleness. I too had my day, but that day was fleeting; my fire was but of straw and short-lived. Nevertheless that you may not fill all your soul with cruel joy, not wholly gone is my hope of appeasing the god, because my mistake fell short of crime, and though my fault is not free from shame, yet'tis free from odium, or because the wide world from the rising sun to its setting holds nothing more merciful than him whom it obeys. Indeed though no force can overcome him, yet he has a tender heart for the petitions of the timid, and after the example of the gods whom he himself is destined to join, with the remission of my penalty he will grant me further boons. If you count the suns and the clouds throughout a year you will find that the day has more often passed brightly.

33 So then that you rejoice not overmuch in my ruin, consider that even I may some day be restored; consider that, if the prince is appeased, it may come to pass that you may be dismayed to see my face in the midst of the city, and I may see you exiled for a weightier cause. This, after that first wish, is the second prayer that I put forth.

IX. IN GRATITUDE

O — hadst thou but allowed thy name to be set in my verse, how oft wouldst thou have been named! Of thee alone would I have sung in memory of thy service; in my books no page would have been completed without thee. My debt to thee would be known throughout the city — if I, an exile, am still read in the city I have lost. Thy kindness the present, thy kindness later time would know, if only my writings endure age, nor would the accomplished reader cease to bless thee; this honour would abide with thee for having preserved a poet. Caesar's gift — that I draw breath — comes first; after the mighty gods it is to thee that I must render thanks. He gave me life; thou dost preserve the life he gave, lending me power to enjoy the boon I have received. When most men shrank with dread at my fall — some even would have it believed that they had feared it — and gazed from a safe height upon my shipwreck, extending no hand to him who swam in the savage seas, thou alone didst recall me half lifeless from the Stygian waters. My very power to remember this is due to thee.

21 May the gods and Caesar ever grant thee their friendship! Prayer of mine could not be fuller than this. These things, if thou wouldst permit, my toil would place in eloquent books in a bright light to be seen of all: even now, though my Muse has been constrained to silence, she scarce refrains from naming thee against thy will. As a hound that has scented the trail of a timorous hind, baying all in vain, is held in check by the unyielding leash, as upon the door of the barrier as yet unlocked the eager steed frets now with his hoof, now with his very brow, so my Thalia, fettered and confined by the law thou hast imposed, longs to course o'er the glory of thy forbidden name. Yet that thou mayst not be injured by the homage of a grateful friend, I will obey thy commands, fear not. But I would not obey, if thou didst not think me grateful; this, which thy word does not forbid, I shall be — grateful; and so long as I behold the light of life — and may the time be short! — that life shall be a slave to thy service.

X. THE EVILS OF TOMIS

Since I have been by the Pontus' shore, thrice has Hister halted with the cold, thrice has the water of the Euxine sea grown hard. Yet already I seem to have been absent from my country as many years as Dardanian Troy was besieged by the Grecian foe. One would think that time stood still, so slowly does it move, and the year completes its journey with lagging pace. For me the solstice lessens not the nights, and winter shortens not the days. In my case surely nature has been made anew and she makes all things as tedious as my own sorrows. Or does time in general run its wonted course, and is it rather that the time of my own life is cruel? For I am held by the shore of the false-named Euxine and the land, in truth ill-omened, of the Scythian sea. Countless tribes round about threaten cruel war, thinking it base to live if not by plunder. Without, nothing is secure: the hill itself is defended by meagre walls and by its skilful site. When least expected, like birds, the foe swarms upon us and when scarce well seen is already driving off the booty. Often within the walls when the gates are closed, we gather deadly missiles in the midst of the streets. Rare then is he who ventures to till the fields, for the wretch must plough with one hand, and hold arms in the other. The shepherd wears a helmet while he plays upon his pitch-cemented reeds, and instead of a wolf the timorous ewes dread war. Scarce with the fortress's aid are we defended; and even within that the barbarous mob mingled with the Greeks inspires fear. For with us dwell without distinction the barbarians, occupying even more than half of the dwellings. Even should you not fear them, you may loathe the sight of their chests covered with hides and with their long hair. Even these who are believed to derive their descent from the Greek city wear

Persian trousers instead of the dress of their fathers. They hold intercourse in the tongue they share; I must make myself understood by gestures. Here it is I that am a barbarian, understood by nobody; the Getae laugh stupidly at Latin words, and in my presence they often talk maliciously about me in perfect security, perchance reproaching me with my exile. Quite naturally they think me somehow pretending whenever I have nodded no or yes to their speech. And besides unjustly the hard sword dispenses justice, for wounds are often given in the midst of the market-place.

45 Ah! cruel Lachesis, when my star is so ill-fated, not to have granted my life a shorter thread! That I am separated from the sight of my country and of you, my friends, that I must lament my abode among these Scythian tribes — each is a heavy penalty. Yet I deserved exile from the city; I did not perchance deserve to be in such a place. What am I saying? Madman that I am! Even my very life I deserved to lose by offending the divine will of Caesar.

XI. TO HIS WIFE

Someone by way of insult has said that thou art “an exile’s wife” — of this thy letter complains. I was hurt, not so much that my fate is spoken of with malice — for I am now used to bear my wretchedness with fortitude — as that I am the cause of shame to thee to whom I would wish it least of all, and to think that thou must have blushed for my misfortunes.

Endure, harden thy heart; much heavier things didst thou bear when the wrath of the prince tore me from thee. Yet is that judge mistaken who calls me “exile”: a milder penalty befell my fault. My greatest penalty consists in having offended Him: I would the hour of death had come upon me first! Yet my bark was but shattered, not submerged and overwhelmed, and though it is deprived of a harbour, yet even so it floats upon the waters. Neither life nor property nor civil rights did he take from me, although by my fault I deserved to lose all. But since no deed accompanied my sin, he ordained naught save that I should leave my native hearth. As to others, whose number may not be counted, so to me Caesar’s power was mild. He himself uses in my case the term “relegatus,” not exile. My cause is secure by reason of him who judged it.

23 Rightly then, Caesar, do my verses, however humble, sing to the best of their power thy praises: rightly do I pray the gods to keep their threshold still closed to thee, and to will that thou be a god apart from them. The people offer the same prayer; but as rivers run into the wide sea, so runs a brook with its meagre stream.

29 But thou, whose lips call me “exile,” cease to burden my fate with a lying name.

XII. ONCE A POET —

You write bidding me amuse my tearful hours with my pursuit, that my wits be not ruined through unseemly sloth. My friend, your advice is hard, for verse, being the work of joy, would have the mind at peace. My fate is driven on by hostile blasts; nothing could be more gloomy. You are requiring Priam to disport himself at the death of his sons, Niobe in her bereavement to lead a gay dance. Is it mourning or poetry, think you, that should occupy him who was bidden to go alone to the land of the distant Getae? You may give me a heart supported by the mighty power which they say he possessed who was accused by Anytus, but wisdom will fall with a crash under the mass of such a mighty ruin, for the wrath of a god overpowers human strength. That famous old man, called a sage by Apollo, would have had no power in this misfortune to write a single work. Though forgetfulness of country should come, though forgetfulness of you should come, though all realization of what I have lost could leave me, yet very fear forbids the peaceful performance of the task, for I dwell in a place girt about by countless foes. And besides my talent, injured by long neglect, is dull, much inferior to what it was before. A fertile field, if it be not renewed by constant ploughing, will produce nothing but grass and thorns. The horse which has stood for a long time will run but poorly and will be last among those released from the barrier. Any skiff falls into frail rottenness, yawning with cracks, if it has been long separated from its accustomed waters. For me also feel despair that, little as I was even before, I can become once more the man I was. My talent has been crushed by my long endurance of woes: no part of my former vigour remains. Yet if, as now, I have taken up some tablet and sought to force words into proper feet, no verses are written by me or only such as you see — worthy of their master's state, worthy of his place. In short desire for fame lends no small strength to the mind, love of praise makes the heart fertile. Once I was drawn on by the glamour of name and fame while the favouring breeze bore on my yards. 'Tis not so well with me now that I care for renown; if'twere possible I would have none know of me.

43 Or is it because at first my verse went well that you advise me to write — to follow up my success? By your leave, sisters nine, would I say it: you are the chief cause of my exile. As the maker of the bronze bull paid the just penalty, so I am paying the penalty for my art. I ought to have nothing more to do with verse, for once shipwrecked I rightly shun every sea. But, forsooth, if I should be mad enough to try once more the fatal pursuit, will this place afford me the equipment for song! There is not a book here, not a man to lend ear to me, to know what my words mean. All places are filled with barbarism and cries of wild animals, all are filled with the fear of a hostile sound. I myself, I think, have already unlearned my Latin, for I have learned how to speak Getic and Sarmatian.

69 And yet, to confess the truth to you, my Muse cannot be restrained from composing verses. I write poems which once written I consume in the fire; a few ashes are the result of my toil. I have not the power and yet I long to compose some verse; hence my labour is placed in the fire, and nothing but a bit of my effort, saved by chance or by craft, reaches you. In such wise I would that my "Art," which ruined a master who feared nothing of the kind, had been turned to ashes!

XIII. SICK AND REPROACHFUL

This "Health" thy Naso sends thee from the Getic land, if anyone can send what he himself has not. For being sick at heart I drew the contagion into my body — that no part of me may be free from torture! — and for many days I have been tortured by an aching side; thus has the excessive cold of the winter injured me. Yet if thou art well, I am well in some degree, for my ruin was supported by thy shoulders. Why, when thou hast given me mighty proofs of love, when thou dost in every fashion guard this life of mine, dost thou err in rarely comforting me with a letter, supplying me the fact of loyalty but denying me the words? Correct this, I beg of thee; if thou amend one thing, there will be no blemish on the perfect body.

16 I should bring more accusations against thee were it not possible that though no letter reaches me, yet that one has been sent. God grant that my complaint be groundless — that I am wrong in believing thou hast forgotten me. What I pray for is true, 'tis clear; for it is not right for me to believe the steadfast strength of thy heart can change. Sooner would the white wormwood fail the icy Pontus, sooner would Trinacrian Hybla lack its sweet thyme than anyone could convict thee of forgetting a friend. Not so black as that are the threads of my fate. But that thou mayst repel the charge (false though it is) of fault, beware of seeming what thou art not. As we were wont to pass long hours in converse, till daylight failed our talk, so now should our letters bring and return our voiceless words, and the paper and our hands should perform the office of our tongues. Lest I seem to distrust overmuch that this shall be so (and may a few lines suffice to have given this reminder), receive that word with which every letter is ended — that thy fate may differ from mine! — the word “farewell”!

XIV. TO HIS WIFE

What a memorial I have reared to thee in my books, O my wife, dearer to me than myself, thou seest. Though fate may take much from their author, thou at least shalt be made illustrious by my powers. As long as men read me thy fame shall be read along with me; nor canst thou utterly pass away into the sad pyre. Although thy husband's fate may cause thee to seem worthy of pity, thou wilt find some who wish to be what thou art, who in that thou dost share my woes, will call thee fortunate and envy thee. Not by giving thee riches could I have given thee more: nothing will the rich mans shade carry to its ghostly realm. I gave thee enjoyment of an immortal name, and thou hast a boon than which I could give none greater. And besides, as thou art the sole guardian of my fortunes, an honour of no small moment has come to thee, for my voice is never silent about thee and thou shouldst be proud of thy husband's testimony. That none may think it rashly given, stand thou firm; preserve me and thy loyal devotion alike. For thy goodness, whilst I stood secure, remained free from accusation's taint, at best uncriticized, but now by my fall a space has been cleared for thee; here let thy virtue build a structure clear to see.'Tis easy to be good when that which forbids it has been removed and a wife has nothing opposing her duty. When the god thunders, not to avoid the cloud — that is loyalty indeed, that is wedded love. Rare indeed is the virtue not piloted by Fortune, which remains on steady feet when Fortune flees. Yet whenever virtue is herself her own coveted reward and remains upright in adversity, though you count all time, she is passed over in silence by no age, she is given homage wherever the world's highway extends. Seest thou how Penelope's faith is praised in the long reaches of time and how her name never dies? How Admetus' wife and Hector's are sung, and the daughter of Iphis, who dared to mount the lighted pyre? How the wife of the hero of Phylacos lives, whose husband touched with his swift foot the soil of Ilium? I need not thy death, but thy love, thy faith; not by hard ways hast thou to seek for fame. Nor believe that I am reminding thee because thou art not acting: I am but giving sails to a bark that is already using the oars. He who reminds thee to do what thou art already doing, by so reminding praises thy acts and by his very exhortation approves them.

EPISTULAE EX PONTO

Translated by Arthur Leslie Wheeler

Epistulae ex Ponto is a collection of four books of exile poetry, written in the poet's last years at Tomis. The 'letters' are each addressed to a different friend, urging their help in securing Ovid's recall from exile. Written in a more desperate tone than the Tristia, the poems deal with requests for friends to speak to members of the imperial family, literary discussions and entertaining descriptions of life in exile.

I. TO BRUTUS

NASO, no recent dweller now in the land of Tomis, sends to you this work from the Getic shore. If you have leisure, entertain and harbour, Brutus, these poems from a foreign land; hide them away where you will, yet somewhere. They venture not to enter a public memorial for fear their master has closed for them this way. Ah, how often have I said, "Surely you give no base instruction! Go! Clean verse may freely enter that place!" Yet these verses go not thither, but as you see they deem it safer to lie in the seclusion of a private household. Do you ask where you can lay them without injuring anybody? Where once stood my "Art" there you have a vacant space.

<sup>13</sup> What they come for, perchance you may ask while their novelty is still fresh. Take them, whatever it is, so only it be not love. You will find, though the title implies no sorrow, that this work is not less sad than that which I sent before — in theme the same, in title different, and each epistle reveals the recipient without concealing his name. You are all averse to this but cannot prevent it; my Muse comes to you with homage even against your will. Whatever it be then, add it to my writings. Nothing hinders an exile's offspring, if they observe the law, from enjoying the city. There is naught for you to fear; Antony's writings are still read, and the accomplished Brutus finds book-cases in readiness for him. I am not so mad as to compare myself with such great names, yet I have borne no hostile arms against the gods. In fine Caesar, though he needs it not, lacks not homage in any book of mine. If about me you doubt, admit a eulogy of the gods: receive my song after removing the name. In war the peaceful olive branch is useful; shall it profit me nothing that my song contains the author of peace? When Aeneas bore a father upon his shoulders, the very flames, they say, made a path for the hero. If a book bears upon its pages the descendant of Aeneas, shall not every path be open to it? Yet the one is father of his country, the other only of his bearer!

37 Is there any so brazen as to force from his door one who shakes the ringing sistrum of Pharos in his hand? When before the mother of the gods the piper plays upon his curved horn, who denies him a few coppers? No such thing results, we know, by Diana's command, yet the prophet has the wherewithal to live. The very power of the celestials stirs our hearts and there is nothing disgraceful in yielding to such credulity. Lo, I, in place of sistrum or hollow shaft of Phrygian boxwood, come bearing the Isis which made a sharp metallic click. Pharos, an island near Alexandria, represents this Egyptian cult.

I am a prophet, a monitor! Give place to one who bears holy objects! Not by me, but by a mighty god that place is claimed. Because I have earned or felt the Prince's wrath, do not suppose that I would not worship the Prince himself. I have seen one who confessed to have outraged the deity of linen-wearing Isis sitting before Isis's shrine. Another bereft of sight for a like cause was crying out in the midst of the street that he had deserved it. The gods rejoice in such heraldings that witnesses may attest their power. Often do they mitigate penalties and restore the sight they have taken away when they behold sincere repentance for sin. I too repent! O, if any wretched man is believed in anything, I too repent! I feel the torture of my own deed! Though exile is anguish, greater anguish is my fault and it is a smaller thing to suffer the punishment than to have deserved it. What though the gods and he who is more conspicuous than the gods should favour me, my punishment can be removed, my fault will remain forever. Death at least by his coming will put an end to my exile, my sin even death will not remove.

67 'Tis then no marvel if my heart has softened and melts as water runs from snow. It is gnawed as a ship is injured by the hidden borer, as the briny sea water hollows out the crags, as stored iron is eaten by corroding rust, as the book when laid away is nibbled by the worm's teeth, so my heart feels the constant gnawing of sorrow which will finish its work — never! These stings will not leave my mind sooner than life; he who suffers will perish more quickly than the suffering itself. If the celestials, to whom in all things I belong, believe me in this, perchance I shall be deemed worthy of a little succour and they will change my abode to one free from the Scythian bow; should I pray for more than that, my lips will be bold indeed.

II. TO MAXIMUS

Maximus, you who fill out the measure of a mighty name doubling nobility of birth by that of soul, you for whose birth, though three hundred fell, one day did not destroy all the Fabii — perchance you may ask by whom this letter is sent and wish to be told who am I that talk with you. Ah me! what am I to do? I fear that when you read the name you will grow stern and read what remains with heart averse. Look you to that. I shall venture the confession that I have written to you.... I, who admitting that I have deserved a worse punishment, can scarce endure one worse. I live in the midst of enemies, in the midst of perils — as if, with my native land, peace had been taken from me — enemies who, to double with a cruel wound the causes of death, smear every dart with viper's gall. Equipped with these the horseman circles the frightened walls as a wolf runs about the fenced sheep. The light bow once bent with its horsehair string remains with its bonds ever unrelaxed. The roofs bristle with implanted arrows as if shrouded in a veil, and the gate scarce repels attack with sturdy bar.

23 Add to this the aspect of a land protected by neither leaf nor tree, and that lifeless winter without break runs into winter. Here am I fighting with cold, with arrows, with my own fate, in the weariness of the fourth winter. My tears are limitless save when a lethargy checks them, and a deathlike stupor possesses my breast. Happy Niobe, though she saw so many deaths, for she lost sensation when she was turned to stone by her misfortunes. Happy you also whose lips, in the act of calling upon your brother, the poplar clothed with new bark. I am one who am transformed into no wood, I am one who in vain wish to be a stone. Should Medusa herself come before my eyes, even Medusa will lose her power. My life is such that I never lose the bitterness of sensation and my punishment becomes worse through its long duration. So Tityus's liver unconsumed and ever growing anew perishes not, in order that it may have the power to be ever perishing.

41 "But," I suppose, "when rest and sleep, the common healer of cares, attend me, night comes free from the usual woes!" Dreams affright me that mimic real dangers, and my senses wake to my own hurt. Either I think myself avoiding Sarmatian arrows or offering a captive's hands to cruel bonds or, when I am beguiled by the semblance of a happier dream, I behold the buildings of the native city I have left, I hold long converse now with you, my friends, whom I once revered, now with my dear wife. Thus when I have had this short and unreal joy, the remembrance of happiness renders this state of mine all the worse.

53 So whether day beholds this wretched being or whether Night is driving her frosty steeds, my heart melts from unending sorrows as fresh wax is wont to do when fire is brought near. Often I pray for death, yet I even beg off from death for fear that the Sarmatian soil may cover my bones. When I remember Augustus's mercy, I believe it possible that a kindly shore may be offered for my shipwreck. When I see how persistent is my fate, I break down and my slight hope falls away vanquished by a mighty fear. Yet I neither hope nor pray for anything further than the power even by a wretched change to be rid of this place. 'Tis either this or nothing that your favour can attempt in moderation for me without impairing your self-respect. Maximus, eloquence of the Roman tongue, take upon yourself the merciful pleading of a difficult case. A bad case, I admit, but it will become a good one if you plead it; only utter some words of sympathy in behalf of wretched exile. For Caesar knows not, though a god knows all things, the nature of this remote place. Great undertakings engross his divine mind; this is a matter too small for his godlike heart. He has no leisure to inquire where the Tomitae are situated, a region hardly known to the neighbouring Getan; or what the Sauromatae are doing, or the fierce lazyges, and the Tauric land watched over by Orestes' goddess, or what other tribes, when cold halts the Hister's flow, wind along the icy back of the stream on swift horses. The most of these people neither care for thee, fair Rome, nor fear the arms of Ausonian soldiery. Bows and full quivers lend them courage, and horses capable of marches however lengthy and the knowledge how to endure for long both thirst and hunger, and that a pursuing enemy will have no water. The wrath of a merciful man would not have sent me to such a land if he had known it well. Nor is he pleased that I or any Roman be taken by an enemy — I least of all, to whom he himself granted life. He would not, as he could have done, destroy me with the slightest nod. There is no need of any Getae to bring about my death. But he found no act on my part worthy of death, and 'tis possible that he is less incensed against me than he was. Even then he did nothing save what I forced him to do; his wrath is almost more moderate than I deserve. May then the gods, of whom he is himself the most just, cause the nourishing earth to bring forth nothing greater than Caesar, and as it has been long under Caesar's sway, so may it continue, passing on through the hands of his family.

101 But do you open your lips in behalf of my tears at a time when the judge is as mild as I found him. Ask not that I may be happy, but that I may be safer in my unhappiness, that my place of exile may be distant from the cruel enemy; that the life granted me by a very present deity may not be taken from me by the drawn sword of some filthy Getan; in fine, if I should die, that I may be buried in a more peaceful land and my bones be not crushed down by Scythian soil, nor my ashes, meanly buried, as doubtless an exile deserves, be trampled by the hoof of a Bistonian horse; and if there be some feeling that survives after death, that no Sarmatian shade terrify even my spirit.

113 This tale, Maximus, might move the soul of Caesar, yet only if it had first moved yours. Let your voice, I pray, soften in my behalf the ears of Caesar, for it is wont to aid frightened defendants, and with the usual sweetness of your accomplished tongue influence the heart of a hero whom we must liken to the gods. You will have to appeal to no Theromedon, no cruel Atreus, or to him who made human beings fodder for his horses, but to a prince, slow to punish, quick to reward, who sorrows whenever he is forced to be severe, who has ever conquered that he might have power to spare the conquered, who has shut in civil war with an everlasting bar, who controls many things by the fear of punishment, few by punishment itself, hurling the thunderbolt rarely and with unwilling hand.

127 So then since you are sent to plead in such merciful ears ask that my place of exile may be nearer my native land. I am he who attended upon you, whom the festal board used to see among your guests, I am he who led Hymenaeus to your wedding torches and sang a lay worthy of your propitious union, whose books, I remember, you used to praise with the exception of those which harmed their master; who used to admire the writings that you sometimes read to him, to whom a bride was given from your household. She has the respect of Marcia, who has loved her from her early years and given her a place among her companions; earlier still Caesar's aunt so regarded her, and any woman approved in their judgment is indeed approved. Even she who was better than her own fame, even Claudia, had such women praised her, would have needed no divine aid.

143 I, too, lived the years that are past without a blemish; the most recent part of my life must be passed over in silence. But to say naught of myself, my wife is a charge upon you; you cannot deny her and maintain your loyalty. She flees to you for refuge, embracing your altar (rightly does each come to the gods whom he himself worships) and in tears she begs that you may soften Caesar by your prayers and bring the tomb of her husband nearer.

III. TO RUFINUS

This greeting, Rufinus, your friend Naso sends you — if a wretched man can be anyone's friend.

The consolation that but now you sent to my distressed heart brought aid and hope to my woes. As the Poentian hero through the art of Machaon felt in his soothed wound the healing aid, so I, prostrate in soul and wounded by a bitter blow, began to grow stronger through your admonition when I was just on the point of failing; I was as much restored by your words as the pulse is wont to revive when wine is administered. Yet your eloquence had not such power that my heart is whole through your words. You may take much from my flood of woe, but there will remain not less than you have drained away. Perhaps in long time a scar will form; a raw wound quivers at the touch of a hand. 'Tis not always in a physician's power to cure the sick; at times the disease is stronger than trained art. You see how the blood emitted from a tender lung leads by an unerring path to the waters of the Styx. Let the Epidaurian in person bring holy herbs, he will have no skill with which to heal wounds in the heart. The healing art knows not how to remove crippling gout, it helps not the fearful dropsy. Sorrow too can find at times no skill that will cure it or else to be cured it must be worn away by long time. When your admonitions have strengthened my prostrate soul and I have put on the armour of your heart, once again my love for the fatherland, stronger than any reasoning, undoes the work that your writings have wrought. Whether you call this loyal or womanish, I admit that in my wretchedness my heart is soft. None doubt the Ithacan's wisdom, but yet he prays that he may see the smoke from his native hearth. By what sweet charm I know not the native land draws all men nor allows them to forget her. What is better than Rome? What worse than the cold of Scythia? Yet hither the barbarian flees from that city. Though Pandion's daughter may be well off in her cage, she strives to return to her own forests. Bullocks seek their familiar pastures, lions in spite of their wild nature their familiar lairs. Nevertheless you hope that the gnawing pangs of exile can be made by your soothing to leave my breast. See to it that you and yours be not yourselves so dear to me; so will it be a slighter misfortune to be deprived of you. "But," I suppose, "though I am separated from the land of my birth, I have yet had the good fortune to be in a place where men dwell!" At the edge of the world I lie abandoned on the strand, where the buried earth supports constant snows. No fields here produce fruit, nor sweet grapes, no willows are green upon the bank, nor oaks upon the hill. Nor can you praise the sea more than the land, for the sunless waters ever heave beneath the madness of the winds. Wherever you gaze, lie plains with no tillers, vast steppes which no man claims. Close at hand on the right and left is a dreaded enemy terrifying us with imminent fear on both sides. One side is on the eve of feeling the Bistonian spears, the other the darts sped by the hand of the Sarmatian. Now then go and cite for me the example of men of old who bore danger with strong mind; admire the impressive strength of great-souled Rutilius who would not avail himself of the proffered offer of return home! Smyrna held him, not the Pontus or a hostile land — Smyrna, than which scarce any place is more to be desired. It grieved not the cynic of Sinope to be far from his native city, for he chose a home in the land of Attica. Neocles' son, who with arms beat down the arms of Persia, first experienced exile in the city of Argos. Aristides expelled from his native city found refuge in Sparta — and it was doubtful which of these two excelled. Young Patroclus, having slain a man, left Opus and became the guest of Achilles in Thessaly. From Haemonia to Pirene's spring fled the exile under whose guidance the sacred ship skimmed the waters of Colchis. Agenor's son Cadmus left the battlements of Sidon to establish walls in a better place. Tydeus came to Adrastus when exiled from Calydon, Teucer found refuge in the land that Venus loves. Why need I tell of the men of olden Roman race with whom the remotest land of exile was Tibur? Though I should enumerate every exile, none in any age has ever been assigned to a more forbidding place so far from his native land.

85 And so let your wisdom pardon one in grief; what he does that is in accord with your words is not much. Yet I do not deny that could my wounds heal, 'tis through your teaching they could heal. But I fear that it is in vain you strive to save me, and that I shall not be helped in my desperate sickness by the aid you bring. And this I say, not because I have the greater wisdom, but I know myself better than any doctor can. Yet in spite of this, your good will has come to me as a great boon and I take it in good part.

IV. TO HIS WIFE

Now is the worse period of life upon me with its sprinkling of white hairs, now the wrinkles of age are furrowing my face, now energy and strength are weakening in my shattered frame. On a sudden shouldst thou see me, thou couldst not recognize me; such havoc has been wrought with my life. I admit that this is the work of the years, but there is yet another cause — anguish and constant suffering. For should my misfortunes be distributed by anybody through a long series of years, I shall be older, I assure thee, than Pylia Nestor, — Thou seest how in the stubborn fields the sturdy bullocks — and what is stronger than a bullock? — are broken in body with toil. The land which has never been wont to rest as idle fallow, grows weary and old with constant production. That horse will fall which enters every contest of the Circus without omission. Strong though she be, the ship will break up in the sea which never is hauled from the clear waters to dry. I too am weakened by the measureless series of my woes and am perforce an old man before my time.

21 Leisure nourishes the body, the mind too feeds upon it, but excessive toil impairs both. Behold what praise the son of Aeson, because he came to this region, receives from late posterity. Yet his toil was lighter and smaller than mine, if only mighty names do not keep down the truth. He set forth to Pontus dispatched by Pelias who was scarce dreaded as far as the bounds of Thessaly. Caesar's anger wrought my ruin at whom the world of sunrise and of sunset alike tremble. Haemonia is closer to ill-omened Pontus than Rome, and he completed a shorter journey than I. He had as comrades the leaders of the Achaean land, but I was abandoned of all on my journey. In a frail bark I ploughed the vast sea; the one that carried Aeson's son was a staunch ship. I had no Tiphys for a pilot nor did Agenor's son teach me what ways to avoid and what to follow. He was safeguarded by Pallas and queenly Juno; no deities defended my life. He was aided by the wily arts of Cupid; would that Love had not learned them from me! He came back to his home; I shall die in this land, if the weighty wrath of the injured god persists. Harder then is my task, my faithful wife, than that which Aeson's son endured.

47 Thou too, whom I left in youth when I set out from the city, doubtless hast aged in consequence of my misfortunes. O, may the gods grant that I can see thee thus, lovingly kiss thy altered locks, and folding thy slender body in my arms say, "Love for me hath wasted thee so," and amid mutual tears tell thee of my sufferings, enjoying a talk I have never hoped for, and offering to the Caesars and the wife who is worthy of Caesar the incense due from my grateful hand. Would that Memnon's mother, when the Prince is softened, might with rosy lips call forth this day as soon as may be!

V. TO MAXIMUS

'Tis he who was once not last among your friends—'tis Naso, asks you, Maximus, to read his words. Seek not in them my native wit lest you seem unaware of my banishment. You see how inactivity spoils an idle body, how water acquires a taint unless it is in motion. For me, too, whatever skill I had in shaping song is failing, diminished by inactive sloth. Even this that you read, Maximus, if in anything you believe me, I write forcing it with difficulty from an unwilling hand. There is no pleasure in straining the mind to such a task, nor does the Muse come at one's call to the stern Getae. Yet, as you see, I am struggling to weave verses, but the fabric is not softer than my fate. When I read it over I am ashamed of my work because I note many a thing that even in my own, the maker's judgment, deserves to be erased. Yet I do not correct it. This is a greater labour than the writing, and my sick mind has not the power to endure anything hard. Am I forsooth to use the file more biting, subjecting single words to criticism? Does fortune indeed torture me too little without my making the Lixus flow into the Hebrus and Athos add leaves to the Alps? One must spare a soul that has a wretched wound; oxen withdraw their chafed necks from a burden. "But," I suppose, "a reward is at hand, the most justifiable reason for toil, and the field is returning the seed with much usury!" To the present no work of mine, though you enumerate them all, has brought me profit — would that none had harmed me!

29 Why then do I write, you wonder? I too wonder, and with you I often ask what I seek from it. Or do the people say true that poets are not sane and am I the strongest proof of this maxim — I who though so many times deceived by the barrenness of the soil, persist in sowing my seed in ground that ruins me? Clearly each man shows a passion for his own pursuits, taking pleasure in devoting time to his familiar art. The wounded gladiator forswears the fight, yet forgetting his former wound he dons his arms. The shipwrecked man declares that he will have nothing to do with the waves of the sea, yet plies the oar in the water in which but recently he swam. In the same way I continually hold to a profitless pursuit, returning to the goddesses whom I would I had not worshipped. What rather shall I do? I am not one to lead a life of idle leisure; I regard idleness as death. I take no pleasure in steeping myself in wine until daylight, and the alluring dice attract not my shaking hands. When I have devoted to sleep what hours my frame demands, how am I to spend the long period of wakefulness? Forgetting the ways of my native land shall I learn how to bend the Sarmatian bow, attracted by the accomplishment of the country? Even this pursuit my strength prevents me from adopting, for my mind is stronger than my slender body.

63 When you have pondered well what I am to do, nothing is more useful than this art which has no use. From it I win forgetfulness of my misfortune; this harvest is enough if my ground but yields it. As for you — your goad may be renown; to read your poems and win approval, devote your wakeful hours to the Pierian band. 'Tis enough for me to compose what comes easily; I lack a reason for too earnest toil. Why should I refine my verse with anxious labour? Should I fear that the Getan will not approve them? Perchance'tis bold of me, and yet I — boast that the Hister has no greater talent than mine. In this land where I must live'tis enough if I succeed in being a poet among the uncivilized Getae. Why should I attempt to reach with fame the opposite side of the world? Let that place be Rome which fortune has given me. With this theatre my unhappy Muse is content: so have I deserved, so have the great gods willed.

71 And I think that my books cannot journey from this place to your region whither Boreas comes on failing wing.

We are separated by the heavens' space, and the She Bear who is far from the city of Quirinus gazes close at hand upon the shaggy Getae. Over so vast a stretch of land, so many waters I can scarce believe it possible that a hint of my work has leaped. Suppose it is read, and — marvellous indeed — suppose it finds favour; that fact surely helps its author not at all. What profit to you if you should be praised in hot Syene, or where the Indian waves dye Tabropanes? Would you go further? If the far distant stars of the Pleiads should praise you, what would you gain? But I do not penetrate by virtue of my commonplace writings to that place of yours; the author's fame was banished with him from his own city. And you in whose eyes I died when my fame was buried, now also, I think, are silent about my death.

VI. TO GRAECINUS

Is it true that when you heard of my disaster, for you were then in a different land, your heart was sad? You may try to hide it and shrink from the admission, Graecinus, but if I know you well, 'tis certain it was sad. Revolting cruelty does not square with your character and is no less at variance with your pursuits. The liberal arts, for which you care above all things, soften the heart and expel harshness. Nobody embraces them with greater faith than you — so far as duty and the toil of a soldier's life permit. For my part as soon as I realized what I was — for long was I stunned and had no powers of thought — I felt in this also my fate that you, my friend, were absent, — you who were sure to be my great support. With you at that time were absent all that solaces a sick mind, and a great part of my courage and my counsel.

17 But as it is, for this alone remains, bring me one aid, I beseech you, from afar; help with your comforting words a heart which, if you believe at all a friend who does not lie, should be called foolish rather than wicked. It would be long and not safe to tell the story of my sin, and my wounds fear to be touched. However I came by those wounds, cease to ask about them: disturb them not, if you wish them to heal. Whatever that is, though it does not deserve the term "crime," yet it should be called a "fault." Or is every fault against the great gods a crime?

27 Hope therefore of lessening my punishment, Graecinus, has not altogether forsaken my soul. That goddess, when all other deities abandoned the wicked earth, remained alone on the god-detested place. She causes even the ditcher to live in spite of his shackles and to think that his limbs will be freed from the iron. She makes the shipwrecked man, seeing no land on any side, move his arms in the midst of the waves. Oft has a man been abandoned by the skill and care of physicians, but hope leaves him not though his pulses fail. Those who are shut in prison hope for release, they say, and many a one hanging on the cross still prays. How many this goddess has prevented in the act of fastening the noose about their throats from perishing by the death they had purposed! Me also as I was attempting to end my grief with the sword she rebuked, checking me with a touch of her hand and saying, "What are you about? There is need of tears, not blood; often by tears the wrath of a prince may be turned aside." And so although I do not deserve it, yet I have strong hope in the kindness of the god. Pray, Graecinus, that he be not hard for me to win; add too some words of your own to my supplication. May I lie entombed in the sands of Tomis if it is not clear that you are a suppliant in my behalf. For sooner will the pigeons avoid the towers, the wild beasts the forest glades, the cattle the grass, and the gull the waters than Graecinus will weakly support an old friend. Not so utterly have all things been changed by my fate.

VII. TO MESSALINUS

Letters, instead of spoken words, Messalinus, have brought you the greeting which you read all the way from the fierce Getae. Is the place a token of the author? Or unless you have read the name are you unaware that I who write these words am Naso? Does any one of your friends except myself — who pray that I am your friend — lie at the very edge of the world? May the gods will that all who show you respect and love may have no knowledge of this race! Enough that I should live midst ice and Scythian arrows — if a kind of death must be considered life. Let me be hard pressed by war on the earth or by the chill of heaven, the wild Getae fighting with arms and the winter with its hail; let me be held in a country that produces neither fruit nor grape, that has no side free from an enemy: but safe be all the other throng of your clients, among whom, as mid a host, I was but one of many. Alas for me if you take offence at such words as these and deny that I have been connected with you in any respect. For even though that were true, you ought to pardon my falsehood; your praise loses nothing through this boast of mine. What acquaintance of the Caesars does not imagine himself a friend! Pardon me the confession; you have ever been in my eyes a Caesar. And yet I do not force my way where I am not allowed to go, and'tis enough if you do not deny that your halls were open to me. Though you had nothing more to do with me, surely you are saluted by one voice less than of old. Your father did not deny my friendship, he who was at once the encourager, the cause, and the guiding light of my pursuit. For him I gave tears which are the final meed of death, and I wrote verses to be chanted in the midst of the forum. You have also a brother united to you with as great a love as that which joined the Atridae or the Tyndaridae: he has not disdained me as companion or as friend, yet only if you deem these words will not harm him. Else will I confess a falsehood in this particular also; rather let that whole house be closed to me. Yet it ought not to be closed to me, for no power has strength to guarantee that a friend will do no wrong. And yet even as I could crave the power to deny my fault, so everybody knows that mine is no crime. And unless a part of my sin were pardonable, exile would have been a small punishment. But he himself saw this, he who sees all things — Caesar — that my crimes might be termed folly. So far as I permitted, so far as circumstances allowed, he spared me, making but a mild use of his flaming thunderbolt. He took from me neither life nor property nor the possibility of return — if his wrath should be conquered by your prayers.

49 Yet heavy was my fall. What wonder if one smitten by Jupiter has no slight wound? Even should Achilles restrain his power, the Pelian spear he hurled dealt heavy strokes. Inasmuch then as I have the judgment of him who punishes me in my favour, there is no reason why your doorway should deny knowledge of me. I admit I paid less court to it than I ought, but that too was fated for me, I believe. Yet the other house did not experience my attentions thus: in that I was constantly beneath the protection of your common Lar, and such is your loyalty that though he court not you in person, your brother's friend has on you some claim. What too of this that as thanks should be rendered to those who have done service so it becomes your position to deserve them? And if you permit us to advise what you should desire, pray that you may give more than you repay. This you are doing and, as I remember, you used to be a source of attention because you gave more yourself. In whatever class you will, Messalinus, place me, if only I be no alien member of your household. As for Naso's misfortunes — since it seems that he has deserved them — if you are not grieved that he endures them, yet grieve that he has deserved them.

VIII. TO SEVERUS

Severus, my soul's larger part, receive the greeting sent by Naso whom you used to love, nor ask how I fare. Should I tell the whole tale, it will bring you tears; 'tis enough if you know the sum of my misfortune. I live deprived of peace amid constant strife while the quiver-bearing Getan rouses stern war. Of so many exiled I alone am both exile and soldier; the rest — nor do I grudge it them — are safe in their retirement. And that you may grant my work greater indulgence, you will read here verses composed on the field of battle. An old city lies hard by the bank of Hister of the double name, scarce accessible because of its walls and the site. Aegisos, the Caspian, if we may believe the native tale, founded it and gave it his own name. The wild Getae took it after they had destroyed the Odrysii in a warfare of surprise, and raised their arms against the king. He, mindful of the mighty race which his own valour enhances, at once approached with a following of countless warriors. Nor did he depart until with deserved slaughter of the guilty he beat down the presumptuous spirit of the people. May it be granted thee, bravest monarch of our time, ever to sway the sceptre with thy honoured hand. Mayst thou, even as she grants it now — for what fuller prayer could I make for thee — find approval with warlike Rome along with mighty Caesar.

25 But mindful of my beginning, my dear comrade, I complain of the addition of cruel warfare to my misfortunes. Since I have been separated from you, thrust down to the very shores of the Styx, the rising of the Pleiads is now bringing on the fourth autumn. Yet believe not thou that 'tis the joys of city life that Naso seeks — and yet even them he seeks — for at times I have memories of you, my pleasant friends, at times thoughts of my daughter and my dear wife steal over me, and from my own house I am once again visiting the localities of the beautiful town, my mind surveying everything with eyes of its own. Now the fora, now the temples, now the theatres sheathed in marble, now every portico with its levelled ground comes before me; now the greensward of the Campus that looks towards the lovely gardens, the pools, the canals, and the water of the Virgo.

39 But, I suppose, the delights of the city have been taken from me in my wretchedness in such fashion that I may have at least what country joys I will! It is not for the fields lost to me that my heart longs, the fair lands in the Paelignian country, nor for those gardens lying on the pine-clad hills which the Clodian and Flaminian roads survey — them I tilled for I know not whom, in them I used in person to guide (nor am I ashamed to say it) the spring water upon the plants; somewhere, if they still live, there are certain trees also planted by my hand, but never is my hand destined to gather their fruit. For all these losses would that it could be my lot even here to have in my exile a plot to till! I would in person, if only I might, pasture the goats as they hang upon the crags, I would pasture the sheep as I leaned upon my staff; that my breast might not dwell upon its usual cares I would myself lead the plough - oxen beneath the curving yoke, teaching myself the words which the Getic bullocks know, hurling at them the familiar threats. In person would I control the handle of the down-pressed plough and try to scatter seed in the furrowed earth. I would not shrink from clearing away the weeds with the long hoe and supplying the water for the thirsty garden to drink. But whence shall all this come to me between whom and the enemy there is only the breadth of a wall and a closed gate? For you at birth — my whole heart rejoices at this — the fateful goddesses spun strong threads. You may stroll now in the Campus, now in the dusky shade of some portico, now in the forum, though you spend but little time there; Umbria now calls you home, or as you seek your Albana, the Appian road takes you to the country on glowing wheels. There perchance you may wish that Caesar would abate his just wrath and that your villa may entertain me. Alas!'tis too much that you ask, my friend; utter a more modest wish, furl the sails of your prayer, I beg. My wish is for a land nearer home, one not exposed to war; then a large part of my woes will be removed.

IX. TO MAXIMUS

Your letter with its news of Celsus' death was forthwith wetted by my tears: and though'tis an impious thing to say and, as I thought, impossible, a letter of yours was read with unwilling eyes. Nothing more grievous has reached my ears since I have been in the Pontus, and I pray that nothing more bitter will come. His image lingers before my eyes as if he were present; he is gone, but love imagines him still alive. Often my heart recalls his gaiety freed from solemnity, often his serious tasks performed with transparent fidelity. But no hours come to my mind more frequently than those — would they had been the latest of my life — when my house on a sudden collapsed in utter ruin and fell upon its master's head. He stood by me when the greater part abandoned me, Maximus, and when he was not a partner in my fate. I saw him weeping my death as if perforce he had to lay his own brother in the flames. He clung to my embrace, he consoled me as I lay prostrate, he mingled his tears constantly with mine. How often did he, the then hated guardian of my bitter life, check the hands ready to bring about my death! How often did he say, "The wrath of the gods may be appeased. Live, and do not say that you cannot be pardoned"! But his most frequent words were, "Think how great a help Maximus ought to be to you. Maximus will make every effort and, such is his loyalty, will beg that Caesar's wrath persist not to the end. Together with his own power he will employ that of his brother; he will try every resource to lighten your pain."

<sup>31</sup> These words diminished the weariness I felt in my unfortunate life. Maximus, see to it that they were not empty. He was wont to swear that he would come to me even here and that no other but yourself would afford him the right to make the long journey. For he revered your house not otherwise than you worship the gods who are lords of the world. Believe me, although you possess deservedly many friends, he was in no degree inferior to any of them, if only'tis true that not property nor the illustrious names of ancestors, but uprightness and character render men great.

41 Rightly then do I grant the meed of tears to Celsus dead which he granted to me in life as I set forth to exile. Rightly do I bestow verses bearing witness to a rare character that those about to come may read of thy name, Celsus. This is all that I can send thee from the Getic land, this is the only thing there that I may have for mine own. I had not the power to follow thy funeral or anoint thy body: I am separated by the whole world from thy tomb. He who had the power, that Maximus whom thou didst in life regard as a god, bestowed upon thee every service. He conducted for thee a funeral with ceremonials of great honour, pouring the balsam upon thy cold breast. In grief he mingled with the unguents falling tears, laying thy bones to rest in the protection of neighbouring ground. He, since to dead friends he pays the debt he owes, may reckon me also with the dead.

X. TO FLACCUS

Exiled Naso sends you a "Health," Flaccus, if one can send a thing that he himself lacks. For long continued lassitude has impaired my frame with bitter cares and suffers it not to possess its proper strength. I have no pain, I do not burn and gasp with fever, my pulse continues its normal beat. But my mouth lacks taste, I feel aversion for the courses set before me, and complain whenever the hour for hateful eating comes. Serve me with any product of sea or land or air; nothing will excite my hunger. Let nectar and ambrosia, the food and drink of the gods, be offered me by the shapely hand of busy Juventas, yet that savour will not stimulate my sluggish palate and a weight will long remain in my inactive stomach.

15 All this I should not venture to write to everybody, despite its truth, lest he should term my woes mere daintiness. Such in sooth is my condition, such is the nature of my circumstances that there is even the possibility of being dainty! I pray such daintiness as this may be the lot of any who fears that Caesar's wrath may rest too lightly upon me!

21 Even that sleep which is food to a slender frame does not support as it should my impoverished body, but I am wakeful, my endless woes are wakeful too, for the place in which I am supplies them with material. Scarce could you recognize my features should you see them, and you would ask what has become of my former colour. But little vigour pervades my emaciated limbs; I am paler than fresh wax. These troubles I have not brought upon myself by immoderate drinking — you know that water is almost my only drink — nor do I overload myself with food; even if I had a passion for it, there is no opportunity in the Getic country.

My strength is not impaired by Venus' ruinous passion; she is not wont to approach the couch of sorrow. Tis the water and the country that injure me together with a cause still stronger — the mental worry which ever attends me.

37 Unless you and, like you, your brother were mitigating these woes, scarce would my mind have borne the burden of my sorrow. You are like a kindly land to a shattered boat; you bring me the aid which many deny. Give it me always, I beseech you, for I shall always need it as long as divine Caesar shall feel anger against me. That he may lessen, not end, his deserved wrath, let each of you as suppliants implore your gods.

BOOK II.

I. TO GERMANICUS CAESAR

Even to this place has the fame of Caesar's triumph penetrated, whither scarce comes the weak breath of weary Notus. No pleasant news have I ever looked for in the Scythian land, but now this place is less hateful than it was before. At last the clouds of care have burst asunder and I have glimpsed a bit of clear sky; I have cheated my fate. E'en though Caesar may be unwilling that any joys befall me, yet this one joy it may be he wishes to have granted to everybody. Even the gods, to secure joyous worship from all, command men to lay aside sorrow throughout their feast days. In fine, though 'tis outright madness to dare the confession, this is a joy that I would make my own were he in person to forbid it.

13 Whenever Jupiter floods the fields with helpful showers the tough burs are wont to grow mingled with the crops. I, too, useless weed though I am, feel the fructifying power, and am often benefited against his will. The joys of Caesar's heart are mine to the extent of my capacity; that house has nothing that is private. Thanks, Fame, to thee through whom I, prisoned among the Getae, have seen the splendour of the triumph. By thy evidence I learned that recently countless races assembled to see their leader's face; and Rome, that embraces the measureless world within her vast walls, scarce had room for her guests. Thou didst tell me how, though for many days before the cloudy Auster poured forth constant rain, the sun through heavenly power shone bright, the day matching the looks of the people; how the victor, honouring them with a loud voice, bestowed the warlike gifts upon the heroes he praised; how as he was about to don the embroidered vestments, the marks of glory, first he sprinkled incense on the sacred hearth, appeasing in purity

the justice of his father which ever has a shrine in that breast; how wherever he went, he received the happy omen of applause and the pavement blushed with dewy roses. Before him, silver counterparts of the conquered walls, barbarian towns were carried with pictured men upon them, rivers and mountains and battles in deep forests, shields and spears in a confused pile, and from the gold of the trophies kindled by the sun, the buildings of the Roman forum turned to gold. So many chieftains bore chains upon their vanquished necks that they could almost suffice to be the enemy. The greater part received life and pardon, among them even Bato, head and front of the war. Why should I deny that for me the wrath of the deity cannot diminish when I see the gods merciful to an enemy?

49 The same report told me, Germanicus, that towns moved on under the title of thy name; that against thee they had been secure neither by massive walls nor arms nor skilful site. Gods grant thee years! Thou thyself wilt supply all else, so but time enough be vouchsafed thy worth. My prayer shall be fulfilled; the prophecies of poets are of some worth, for the god has given favourable sign in answer to my prayer. Thou too shalt climb as victor the Tarpeian citadel, a joyful sight for Rome, with garlanded steeds. Thy father shall see the ripe honours of his son, himself feeling the joy that he has given to his own. Even now, greatest of our youth in war and peace, mark these words of prophecy from me. That triumph also perchance I shall relate in song if only my life proves equal to my misfortunes, if I do not first stain Scythian arrows with my blood, if a fierce Getan does not take life from me with the sword. In my lifetime should thy laurel be dedicated in the temple thou wilt say that my prophecies have twice come true.

II. TO MESSALINUS

He who revered your house from his earliest years, Naso, the exile on Euxine's left-hand shore, sends to you, Messalinus, from the land of the unconquered Getae this greeting which he used to offer face to face. Alas! if at the reading of his name you have not the countenance you had of old and hesitate to read what remains. Yet read to the end, nor banish my words along with myself; my verses are permitted to dwell in your city. I never imagined that should Ossa uphold Pelion, my hand could touch the bright stars; I have not joined the mad camp of Enceladus and aroused war against the gods who rule the world; I have not, like the rash hand of Tydeus' son, aimed my spear against the gods. My fault is heavy, but 'tis one which has dared to destroy me alone, attempting no greater crime. No term save "senseless" and "timid" can be applied to me; these are the two true words for my soul. It is indeed, I admit, after I deserved Caesar's anger, with justice that you are hard to my entreaties; such is your devotion to all of the Iulean name that you are injured too if you think any of them is injured. But though you take arms and threaten me with cruel wounds, yet will you not make me fear you. The ship of a Trojan succoured Achaemenides, Greek though he was; the Pelian spear helped the Mysian chieftain. Sometimes the violator of a temple takes refuge at the altar, not dreading to seek the aid of the angered god. Someone may say this is not safe. I admit it; but it is not through calm waters that my bark sails. Let safety be the quest of others; uttermost misery is safe, for it lacks fear of an outcome still worse. One who is being hurried along by the foaming sea stretches out his arms and grasps at thorns and hard rocks; in fear of the hawk a bird on trembling wings ventures in weariness to come to man's protection; the doe hesitates not to trust herself to a house hard by when she flees in terror from her enemies, the hounds.

29 Grant, I beseech you, gentle friend, comfort to my tears, shut not an unyielding door upon my timid plea, favour me and carry my words to the Roman gods whom you worship no less than the Tarpeian thunderer; be the envoy of my message and undertake my cause, though no cause in my name is good. Already nearly dead, at least a sick man who already feels death's chill, I shall be saved by you if only I am saved at all. Now in behalf of weakness let that influence struggle which the love of the eternal Prince bestows upon you. Now employ the brilliant eloquence of your house with which you have been able to bring aid to trembling accused. For in you both lives the eloquent tongue of your father, which has found in you its heir. To this I turn, not that it may try to defend me; one should not defend the cause of an accused who makes confession. Yet consider whether you may palliate my act through the source of my mistake or if it would be well to stir up no such matter. The wound is of such sort that, since it is past healing, I deem it safer that it be not touched. Silence, tongue! Nothing further can be told! Would I could bury my own ashes!

61 So then, as if I had been beguiled by no mistake, frame your plea that I may enjoy the life he granted me. When he is serene, when there is peace upon those lineaments whose motion stirs the empire and the world, beg him not to permit me to be a poor spoil for the Getae, to grant a peaceful land for my wretched exile. A fitting time is at hand for petitions: well is he and well, he sees, is it with the work of his hands — thy strength, O Rome. In safety his consort guards her divine couch; his son is pushing out the bounds of the Ausonian empire; the spirit of Germanicus outruns his years, and the energy of Drusus is not unequal to his noble birth. Add too that his daughters-in-law, his loyal granddaughters, the sons of his grandsons — all the members of the Augustan house — are well. Add the triumph over Paeonia, add the right arms of mountainous Dalmatia constrained to peace. Illyria has not disdained to throw aside her arms and submit her enslaved head to a Caesar's foot. He himself, conspicuous with calm aspect in his car, bore his temples garlanded by Phoebus' maid. His loyal sons in your company attended him as he advanced, worthy of their parent and of the names conferred upon them, like unto the brethren dwelling in the neighbouring temple whom the divine Julius beholds from his lofty shrine. To these to whom all things ought to yield Messalinus refuses not the foremost place in rejoicing: all that these do not claim is matter for affection's rivalry; therein to no man will he take second place. Before all else he will venerate this day on which the laurel decreed for merit has been worthily placed upon honoured locks.

91 Oh happy they to whom it has been vouchsafed to view the triumph, to enjoy the godlike countenance of the general! But I must gaze upon the Sauromatae in place of Caesar's face, upon a land devoid of peace, and waters in the bonds of frost. Yet if you hear my words, if my voice can reach so far, let your winning influence work to change my abode. This is the request of your famed father whom I worshipped from my earliest youth, if his shade, still eloquent, has aught of sentience. This is the request of your brother too, though perchance he may fear that care in saving me may bring you harm. All your house ask this, nor can you yourself say that I too was not once a member of your throng. At least my talent, which, as I have learned to feel, I have used but ill, was oft, except only my "Art," the subject of your praise. Nor can my life, so you but take away its latest sins, bring shame upon your house. So, therefore, may the home of your race thrive, so may those above, together with the Caesars, watch over you — on condition that you implore that deity, so merciful yet justly angry with me, to remove me from the wildness of the Scythian land.

'tis hard, I admit, yet virtue aims at what is hard, and gratitude for such a service will be all the greater. No Polyphemus in the lonely caverns of Aetna, no Anti-phates will receive your words, but a calm and lenient father ready to pardon, who often thunders without the aid of the fiery lightning, who after a harsh decision is himself saddened, who usually lays a penalty upon himself whenever he exacts one. Yet his mercy was defeated by my fault, his wrath by compulsion reached its full strength. But I am separated from my country by the whole world's span, cannot throw myself before the deity's feet. You worship him: be my priest and carry to him my message, but add your own prayers to my words. Yet try this only if you feel it will not injure me. Pardon! I am a shipwrecked man who fears every sea.

III. TO MAXIMUS

Maximus, you who match your name with illustrious virtues nor permit your nature to be eclipsed by your noble birth, I have revered you — for in what does my condition differ from death? — even unto my life's latest day. In not disowning an unfortunate friend you perform an act than which none is rarer in the age in which you live. Shameful it is to say, yet the common herd, if only we admit the truth, value friendships by their profit. They care more for advantage than for honour, and their loyalty stands or falls with fortune: nor can one easily find among many thousands a single man who considers virtue its own reward. The very glory of a good deed, if it lacks rewards, affects men not; unrewarded uprightness brings them regret. Nothing but profit is prized; only take from the greedy mind hope of gain and nobody will be the object of attentions. Nowadays everybody loves his own income and reckons on anxious fingers what is of service to himself. That once revered goddess of friendship is exposed for sale, awaiting gain like a courtesan.

21 So my admiration is the greater that you too are not carried away, as by a torrent, by the corruption of a common vice. There is love for none except him whom fortune favours; when once she thunders she puts all around to flight. Behold me! once supported by many friends — while a favouring breeze filled my sails — now that the wild seas have been swelled by the stormy wind, I am abandoned on a shattered bark in the midst of the waters. While others would not even seem to know me, there were but two or three of you who aided me when I was cast forth. And you were foremost; for you were suited not to be their comrade, but their leader, not to seek an example, but to offer one.

You who admit that I, the exiled one, did naught but “err,” take pleasure in uprightness and duty for their own sakes. In your judgment worth is dissevered from reward and is to be sought for herself, even unaccompanied by outward goods. You think it base to drive away a friend because he is to be pitied, to forbid him your friendship because he is ill-starred. ‘tis more merciful to support his weary chin even with a finger than to thrust the swimmer’s face beneath the clear waves.

41 See what the scion of Aeacus does for his friend after death, and remember that this life of mine also is like unto death! Pirithous had Theseus company to the waves of the Styx; how far is my death from the Stygian water? Crazed Orestes was helped by the Phocian youth; my fault too involves no little madness. Do you also accept the praise meet for mighty heroes, as you are doing, and bring what aid you can to one who is fallen. If I know you well, if even now you are what you used to be, and your courage has not failed you, the greater Fortune’s rage, the more do you resist her, taking care, as is fitting, that she does not conquer you; and your own fight is rendered strong by the strong battling of the foe. Thus the same thing both helps and injures me. Yea, ‘tis an unworthy thing in your sight, dear youth, to become a companion of the goddess who stands on the sphere. You are steadfast and since the sails of the battered ship are not what you would wish, you control them, such as they are. The craft is so shattered that men expect it to founder at once, but your shoulders still support the wreck. At first indeed your wrath was just nor milder than his who was rightly angered against me. The feeling which had touched the breast of lofty Caesar — that feeling you swore forthwith was yours. Yet when you heard the cause of my disaster, they say you groaned over my mistake. At that time your letter was the first to comfort me, bringing the hope that the injured god could be moved. Then you were stirred by the constancy of long friendship that began before your birth, because for others you had become, for me you had been born, a friend, because I gave you the first kisses in your cradle. This, since I have constantly revered your house from my earliest years, makes me perforce a burden of long standing upon you. That famed father of yours, the eloquence of the Latin tongue, not inferior to his noble birth, first urged me to venture upon the publication of my verse: he was the guide of my genius. Nor can your brother, I maintain, recall the time of my first honour to him. But to you above all I clung so close that you alone, whate'er befell, were my source of favour. Aethalian Ilva last saw us together and received the tears as they fell from our sorrowing cheeks. Then at your question whether the news was true which the ill repute of my sin had brought, I wavered between dubious confession and dubious denial, fear telling the tale of my timidity, and like the snow which rainy Auster melts tears of dismay welled up and coursed along my cheeks. And so as you recall this, seeing that 'tis possible for my sin, by condoning my original mistake, to lie unnoticed, you take thought of your old friend in his misfortunes, you soothe and help my wounds. For this, should full petition be granted me, I should invoke a thousand blessings upon you for your kindly service, but if I be allowed only your own vows, I will pray, after Caesar's weal, for that of your mother. This, when you enriched the altar with incense, you were wont to ask first of all, I remember, of the gods.

IV. TO ATTICUS

Let Naso converse with you from the freezing Hister, Atticus, friend whom my judgment should not doubt. Do you still remain at all mindful of your unhappy friend or has your regard grown weak and abandoned its role? The gods are not so harsh to me that I can believe and deem it just that you no longer think of me. Before my eyes your image ever stands; I seem in thought to see your features. I recall many serious talks that we have had and not a few hours given over to pleasant jest. Oft did the hours seem too swift for our long talks, oft the day was too short for my words. Oft came to your ears a poem I had just composed; a new effort was subjected to your criticism. What you had praised I considered had already pleased the public; this was the pleasant reward of my critic's care. To have my book touched by the file of a friend I have more than once made an erasure at your suggestion.

The fora saw us side by side, every portico, every street; the hollow theatre found us in adjoining seats. In short our affection, dear friend, was always as strong as that of the scions of Aeacus and Nestor. Not even were you drinking draughts of care-dispelling Lethe, could I believe that all this could fall from your heart. Sooner shall the long days come to pass in winter, sooner shall the nights of summer be longer than those of winter, Babylon have no heat, Pontus no cold, sooner shall the lily surpass the Paestan rose in perfume than you shall forget your relations with me. Not so black is any part of my fate. But beware lest this trust of mine be called fallacious or my belief foolish; with steadfast faith defend your old comrade in what way you can and in so far as I shall not be burdensome.

V. TO SALANUS

A poem framed in unequal numbers I, Naso, send to my Salanus, prefaced by a wish for his weal. May this be so, I earnestly desire, and I pray that you, my friend, to prove the omen in fact, may be able to read it safe and sound. Your noble nature, a thing almost at the point of death in this age, requires such prayer from me. For though I was joined to you by only moderate association, they say that you have grieved over my exile; when you read verses sent from the Euxine Pontus, your kindness helped them whatever their worth; you wished that Caesar's wrath might soon be relaxed in my favour — a wish that he himself would permit if he knew it. To your character was due so kind a wish, and it is none the less pleasing to me for that reason. You are all the more affected by my misfortunes, accomplished friend, because, I believe, of the character of my place of exile. You will scarce find in the whole world, I assure you, a land that enjoys so little the Augustan Peace.

19 Yet you are reading here verses composed amid fierce battles, and when you have read, your favouring lips approve them. My talent, trickling now in so impoverished a stream, wins your applause and from a rivulet you make a mighty river. Gratifying indeed to my soul is this suffrage of yours, even though one might think that the wretched can scarce be pleased with themselves. Still so long as I attempt verse on humble themes my talent is equal to the meagre subject. Recently when the report of a mighty triumph reached me, I ventured to undertake a work of great difficulty. My venture was overwhelmed by the grandeur and splendour of the theme; I was not able to bear up under the weight of my task. Therein you will find worthy of praise the will to do my duty; all else lies overpowered by the subject.

If perchance that composition has reached your ear, I direct that it may know your protection. To you, who would do this even if I did not ask it in person, let your favour to me contribute as a slight incentive. I do not deserve your praise, but your heart is whiter than milk, than untrodden snow; you feel admiration for others, though you are worthy of it yourself since your accomplishments and your eloquence are open to the view of all.

41 You are wont to share the studies of the leader of the youth, that Caesar on whom Germany bestows a name. You have been for long his companion, you have been in union with him from his earliest years, finding favour with him by virtue of a talent that equals your character. Under your guidance as a speaker he forthwith attains fiery eloquence, in you he has one to lure forth his words by your own. When you have finished and mortal lips have become quiet, closed in silence for a short space, then arises the youth worthy of the Iulean name, as rises Lucifer from the eastern waters, and as he stands in silence, his posture, his countenance are those of an orator, and his graceful robe gives hope of eloquent words. Then after a pause he opens his godlike lips and one might take oath that the gods above speak in this fashion. One might exclaim, "This is eloquence worthy of a prince," such nobility is in his utterance.

67 Though you find favour with this youth, touching the very stars with your head, yet you consider the writings of an exiled bard worthy of consideration. Surely there is some bond of harmony between kindred spirits, each keeping the compacts that belong to his pursuit. The peasant loves the farmer, the soldier him who wages war, the sailor the pilot of the swaying ship. You too are possessed with devotion to the Pierians, studious one; you, talented yourself, look with favour on my talent. Our work differs, but it derives from the same sources; we are both worshippers of liberal art. You have no thyrsus, I have tasted the laurel; but there should be fire in us both: as my numbers receive vigour from your eloquence, so I lend brilliance to your words.

By right then you think my poetry connected with your pursuit and you believe that the rites of our common warfare should be preserved. Therefore may the friend through whom you win esteem remain, I pray, yours unto the last moment of your life, and may he come to the control of the world with his own reins. This is at once my prayer and that of the people.

VI. TO GRAECINUS

In verse, Graecinus, that Naso who used to greet you face to face in spoken words, greets you sadly from the Euxine waters. An exile's voice is this; letters furnish me a tongue, and if I may not write, I shall be dumb.

You reprove as in duty bound the sins of your foolish friend, showing me that the evils that I suffer are less than my deserts. You are right, but too late is your reproof of my fault: relax the harshness of your words for an accused who has confessed. At the time when I could have passed Ceraunia with standing sails, so as to avoid the cruel reefs, then it was that I should have had your warning. Now after my shipwreck how does it profit me to learn what course my bark should have run? Rather extend an arm to the weary swimmer's grasp; repent not of supporting his chin with your hand. That you are doing and, I pray, will continue to do: so may your mother and wife, so may your brothers and all your house be free from harm, and — as you are wont to pray with heart, with voice — so for all your acts may you find the Caesars' approval. Base will it be if you have aided in his misery an old friend in no way; base to step back, not standing with steadfast foot; base to abandon a ship in distress; base to follow chance, to surrender a friend to fortune, and should he prosper not, to disclaim him as your own. Not such was the life of the sons of Strophius and Agamemnon; not such was the loyalty of Aegeus' son and Pirithous. Them past ages have admired, and ages to come will admire; to applaud them the whole theatre roars. You too who have held to your friend through times of stress deserve to have a name among such great men. You deserve it — yes, and since praise is the just reward of your loyalty, my gratitude for your service shall never be dumb. Trust me, if my song is not destined to die, you shall be often on the lips of posterity. Only see that you remain faithful to your weary friend, Graecinus, and let your impulse endure for long. Though you do me this service, yet I use the oar while I have the breeze, nor is it harmful to spur on the galloping steed.

VII. TO ATTICUS

My letter sent from the scarce pacified Getae wishes first to salute you, Atticus; close follows the wish to hear how you fare and whether, no matter what your occupation, you have any interest in me. I doubt not you have, yet the very dread of misfortunes often forces me to feel empty fears. Grant me indulgence, I pray, pardon my excessive dread: the shipwrecked man shrinks even from calm waters.

The fish once wounded by the treacherous hook fancies the barbed bronze concealed in every bit of food. Ofttimes the lamb flees the distant sight of a dog in the belief that it is a wolf, unwittingly avoiding its own protector. A wounded body shrinks from even a delicate touch; an empty shadow inspires the anxious with fear. So I, pierced by the unjust shafts of Fortune, fashion in my breast naught but gloomy thoughts. Already it is clear to me that fate, keeping to the course begun, will continue always to run in a familiar path; the gods are watching that no kind concession be made me and I think Fortune can scarcely be cheated. She is working to destroy me — she who used to be fickle, is now steadfastly and with determination injuring me. O believe, if I have been known to you as a speaker of truth, (and though my misfortunes are clear I may not be thought so,) you will more quickly count the ears of a crop by the Cinyphus, or the many blooms of thyme upon lofty Hybla, or count the number of birds floating in air on vibrant wings or the fishes swimming in the waters, than reckon the sum of woes I have borne on land, on sea.

31 No race in the wide world is grimmer than the Getae, yet they have lamented over my misfortunes. Should I attempt to a full record of them in verse, there will be a long liad of my fate. I fear, therefore, not that I think I need have fear of you of whose love I have received a thousand pledges, but because every unfortunate is a thing full of fear, because for a long time the door of joy has been closed for me.

My grief has already become a habit; as the falling drops by their constant force hollow the rock, so am I wounded by the steady blows of fate until now I have scarce space upon me for a new wound. The ploughshare is not more thinned by constant use, the Appia more worn by the curving wheels than my heart is worn by the hoof-beats of my continuous misfortunes; nothing have I found to bring me aid.

47 By liberal arts many have sought renown; I, unhappy that I am, have been ruined by my own dower. My earlier life was free from fault, was lived without blemish, but it has brought me no succour in my misfortune. Serious fault is often pardoned to the prayers of one's friends; on my behalf all favour has been mute. Some are helped in their difficulties by the fact that they are present; I was absent when this mighty tempest overwhelmed me. Who would not dread even the unspoken wrath of Caesar? My punishment was enhanced by harsh words. The season makes exile lighter; I, driven forth upon the sea, endured Arcturus and the Pleiads' threats. Ships are often wont to experience a mild winter; not the Ithacan ship had a fiercer sea. The upright loyalty of comrades could have alleviated my misfortunes, but a treacherous crowd grew rich on my spoils. Places render exile milder; a more dismal land than this lies not under either pole. 'tis something to be near the confines of one's native land; the remotest land, the remotest world possesses me. Thy laurel, Caesar, assures peace even to exiles; the Pontic land lies exposed to a neighbouring foe. 'tis pleasant to spend one's time in tilling the fields; the barbarian foe permits no sod to be turned. By a mild climate body and mind are helped; eternal cold freezes the Sarmatian coast. There is in sweet water a pleasure that stirs no envy; I drink marshy water mingled with the salt of the sea. I lack all things, but courage conquers all things; it even causes the body to have strength. To support the burden you must struggle with head held stiff or else, if you allow your sinews to yield, you will fall. Even the hope that 'tis possible time may soften the prince's wrath, prevents me from aversion to life and utter breakdown. And you give me no small comfort — the few whose fidelity has been tested by my misfortunes. Keep on as you have begun, I pray, do not abandon the ship upon the sea; preserve me and with me your own conviction.

VIII. TO COTTA MAXIMUS

I have recently received a Caesar in company of a Caesar — the gods whom you sent me, Cotta Maximus; and that your gift might be complete, Livia appeared there united with her Caesars. Happy silver! more blessed than any gold! For though but recently rough metal 'tis now divine! Not by the gift of riches could you have given me a greater present than the three deities whom you have sent to my shores.

So far as you could effect it, I have returned, I am no more in a remote land; as of old I am safe in the midst of the city. I see the faces of the Caesars as I used before to see them; of this prayer's fulfilment I have scarce had any hope. I salute the deity of heaven as I used to do: even should I return, no greater gift, I think, have you to bestow upon me. What do my eyes lack save only the Palatine? And that place, if Caesar is removed, will be worthless. As I gaze on him I seem to look on Rome, for he embodies the likeness of our fatherland. Am I wrong or do the features of his portrait show anger against me? Is his form somehow grim and threatening? Spare me, thou who art mightier in thy virtues than the measureless world, check the reins of thy just vengeance. Spare me, thou imperishable glory of our age, lord of the world because of thine own care. By the name of our country which is dearer to thee than thyself, by the gods who are never deaf to thy prayers, by thy consort who alone has been found equal to thee, who feels not thy majesty a burden, by thy son like thee a model of virtue whose character causes him to be recognized as thine, by thy grandsons worthy of their grand-sire or their sire, who advance with mighty stride along the path of thy command, lighten in but the least degree and restrict my punishment: grant me an abode far from the Scythian enemy.

37 And if 'tis right, O Caesar nearest to Caesar, — let not thy divinity be hostile to my prayers. So may wild Germany soon be borne with fear-stricken countenance a slave before thy triumphant steeds; so may thy father attain the years of the Pylian and thy mother those of the Cumaean and mayst thou be for long a son. Thou, too, spouse suited to a mighty husband, listen with no cruel ear to the prayers of a suppliant. So may thy husband be safe, so thy grandsons and their offspring, so thy good sons' wives and their children. So may that Drusus, whom cruel Germany tore away from thee, be the only one of thy descendants to fall. So in the near future may the avenger of his brother's death drive, in purple clad, the snow-white steeds. Assent to my timorous prayers, ye kind deities! Let it profit me somewhat to have gods present before me. At Caesar's coming the gladiator leaves the arena in safety, for his countenance brings no slight aid. I too am helped because, so far as I am allowed, I gaze upon the features of you all, because three of the celestials have entered one home. Happy they who see not likenesses, but the reality, the real persons of the gods face to face. This has been begrudged me by hostile fate, and so I cherish the countenances and figures which art has produced. Thus it is that men know the gods whom the lofty aether conceals; they worship in Jupiter's stead the likeness of Jupiter. In fine make it your care that these your likenesses, which are with me and shall ever be with me, be not in a hateful place. For my head shall sooner leave my neck, sooner will I gouge out my eyes from my cheeks, than be deprived, O deities of the state, of you. You shall be the harbour, the altar of my exile.

You will I embrace when I am circled about by Getic arms; you will I follow as my eagles, as my standards.

71 Either I am self-deceived or mocked by excessive longing, or else the hope of a more comfortable exile is at hand. For less and less stern are the features of the portrait — the lips seem to consent at my words.

I — pray that the premonitions of my fearful heart may become the truth, that although the god's wrath is just, it may grow less.

IX. TO KING COTYS

Cotys, scion of kings, whose noble line extends even to the name of Eumolpus, if talkative report has already come to your ears that I am lying in a neighbouring land, hear the voice of a suppliant, gentle youth, and bear what aid thou canst — and thou hast the power — to an exile. Fortune — of whom in this one thing I complain not — has given me over to thee; in this alone she is not hostile to me. Harbour my shipwreck on no cruel shore; let not the waters prove safer than thy land. 'tis a royal deed, I assure thee, to help the fallen, it befits a man as mighty as thou art. This becomes thy position which, great though it is, can scarce be equal to thy spirit. Power is never seen in a better cause than when it does not permit prayers to be vain. This that brilliant birth of thine desires, this is the task of a nobility sprung from those above. This Eumolpus, the illustrious founder of thy race, and before Eumolpus Erichthonius, enjoin. This thou hast in common with a god: that ye are both wont to aid your petitioners. Will there be any reason for us to grant their usual honour to the gods, if one robs them of their will to help? If Jupiter should turn deaf ears to prayer, why should a victim fall in sacrifice before Jupiter's temple? If the sea should offer no calm for my journey, why should I offer vain incense to Neptune? Should she cheat the ineffectual prayers of the toiling husbandman, why should Ceres receive the entrails of a gravid sow? The goat will not offer his throat in sacrifice to unshorn Bacchus, if no must flows from beneath the tread of feet. We pray that Caesar may guide the reins of the empire because he plans so wisely for his fatherland!

35 Utility, then, renders great both men and gods, if each bestows in favour his own peculiar aid. Do thou also avail him who lies within thy camp, Cotys, son worthy of thy father. 'Tis a fitting pleasure for man to save man; there is no better way of seeking favour. Who does not curse Antiphates the Lae-strygonian? Who disapproves the character of generous Alcinous? Thou hast for a father no Cas-sandrian or man of Pheraean race, or him who burned the inventor by his own craft, but one who though fierce in war and unacquainted with defeat in arms, was yet never fond of blood when peace was made. Note too that a faithful study of the liberal arts humanizes character and permits it not to be cruel. No king has been better trained by them or given more time to humane studies. Thy verse bears witness; shouldst thou remove thy name, I should deny that a Thracian youth was the composer; and that beneath this sky Orpheus might not be the only bard, by thy talent is the Bistonian land made proud. As thou hast the courage, when need arises, to take arms and stain thy hand with enemy's blood, and as thou hast been trained to hurl the javelin with a sweep of thine arm, or to guide the neck of the swift horse, so when just time has been given to thy sire's pursuits and the task testing thy might in all its parts has come to rest, that thy leisure may not waste away in idle sleep, thou dost press on the Pierian path towards the bright stars.

63 This also brings me a certain union with thee: each is a worshipper at the same shrine. As bard to bard I extend my arms in prayer that thy land may be loyal to me in exile. I was not guilty of murder when I came to Pontus' shores, no baneful poison was mixed by my hand; my seal was not convicted by a fraudulent tablet of having imprinted on the linen a lying mark. I have done naught that the law forbids. Yet must I confess a weightier sin. Ask not what it is. But I have composed a foolish "Art"; 'tis this prevents my hands from being clean. Have I sinned further? Do not inquire — that my wrongdoing may hide beneath my "Art" alone. Whatever it is, the avenger's wrath was moderate. He took from me nothing but my native land. Since I am deprived of that, let now thy nearness warrant that I can be secure in a place I hate.

X. TO MACER

Does any inkling come to you, Macer, from the figure pressed upon the wax that Naso writes these words to you? If the ring be not an informant of its master, do you recognize the letters formed by my hand? Or is recognition of these things stolen from you by length of time, and do your eyes not recall the symbols of long ago? You may forget alike seal and hand if only interest in me has not dropped from your mind. This you owe to the association of long years, to my wife's kinship with you, or to the poetic studies which you have employed more wisely than I; and (as 'tis fitting), no Art" has made you guilty. You sing whatever immortal Homer left unsung, that the wars of Troy may not lack the final hand. Naso thoughtlessly imparts the art of love and the teacher has the harsh reward of his teaching. There are, nevertheless, rites common to all poets — though we may each go our own separate way — which I believe in my heart that you remember, even though we are far apart, and wish to lighten my misfortunes. Under your guidance I beheld the splendid cities of Asia, under your guidance I saw the Trinacrian land: you and I saw the sky agleam with Aetna's flame vomited forth by the giant lying beneath the mountain, the lakes of Henna, the pools of sulphurous Palicus, and the spot where Anapus joins Cyane to his own waters. Hard by is the nymph who fleeing the Elean stream runs even now covered beneath the waters of the sea. Here it was that I passed the greater part of a quickly gliding year — alas! how unlike that land to this of the Getae! and how small a part are these of the things that we saw together while you made every road pleasant for me! Whether we furrowed the blue waves in a gaily painted boat or drove in a swift-wheeled carriage, often the way seemed short through our interchange of talk, and our words, could you count them, outnumbered our steps; often the day was not long enough for our talk — even the long hours of summer did not suffice. 'tis something to have feared together the perils of the sea, together to have paid our vows to the water gods, to have done deeds in common and again after those deeds to be free to utter jests which bring no shame. When these thoughts steal upon you, absent though I be, I shall be before your eyes as if you had just seen me. And as for me, though I dwell beneath the pivot of the heavens which is ever high above the clear waters yet I behold you in my heart — my only way — and often talk with you beneath the icy axle. You are here and know it not, you are full often by my side though far away, and you come at my bidding from the midst of the city to the land of the Getae. Make me recompense, and since yours is the happier land, there keep me ever in a remembering heart.

XI. TO RUFUS

This work, Rufus, hastily composed in a brief space, Naso sends to you — Naso, the author of the ill-starred “Art” — that despite our separation by the whole world’s width you may know that I remember you.

Sooner shall I forget my own name than allow your loyalty to be driven from my mind; sooner shall I give back this life to the empty air than gratitude for your service become as naught. A great service I call the tears which streamed over your face when my own was dry with chilling grief. A great service I call the consolation of my sorrow when you bestowed it at once upon me and upon yourself. By her own will and of herself my wife deserves all praise, yet she is the better because of your admonitions: for what Castor was to Hermione, Hector to Iulus, this you are, I rejoice to say, to my wife. She strives to be not unlike you in probity, she proves herself by her life to be of your blood, and so that which she would have done with no urging, she does more fully because you are her sponsor. The mettlesome steed who will of his own accord race for the honour of the palm will nevertheless, if you urge him, run with greater spirit. And besides you perform with faithful care the directions of one who is absent; there is no burden that you object to carrying. O may the gods recompense you, since I have not the power; and they will recompense if they but see deeds of loyalty. May you long have health to uphold your character, Rufus, chief glory of Fundi’s land!

I. TO HIS WIFE

O sea first lashed by Jason's oars, O land never free from cruel enemies and snows, will a time ever come when I, Naso, shall leave you, bidden to an exile in a place less hostile? Or must I ever live in such a barbaric land, am I destined to be laid in my grave in the soil of Tomis? With peace from thee — if any peace thou hast — O land of Pontus, ever trodden by the swift horses of a neighbouring foe, — with peace from thee would I say: thou art the worst element in my hard exile, thou dost increase the weight of my misfortunes. Thou neither feelest spring girt with wreaths of flowers nor beholdest the reaper's naked bodies; to thee autumn extends no clusters of grapes; but all seasons are in the grip of excessive cold. Thou holdest the flood ice-bound, and in the sea the fishes often swim in water enclosed beneath a roof. Thou hast no springs except those almost of sea water; quaff them, and doubt whether thirst is allayed or increased. Seldom is there a tree — and that unproductive — rising in the open fields, and the land is but the sea in another guise. No note is there of any bird save such as remote in the forests drink the brackish water with raucous throat. Bitter wormwood bristles throughout the empty plains, a crop suited in harshness to its site. Add fears too — the wall assailed by the enemy, the darts soaked in death-dealing corruption, the distance of this spot from all traffic, to which none can penetrate in safety either on foot or by boat.

29 No wonder then if I seek an end of this and beg constantly for another land. Tis a greater wonder that thou, my wife, dost not prevail in this, that thou canst restrain thy tears at my misfortunes. What art thou to do, thou askest?

Ask thyself this very question; thou wilt discover, if thou hast true will to find it out. To wish is not enough; thou shouldst have a passion to win thy end, and this care should make thy slumber brief. Many, I think, wish it; for who can be so hard upon me as to desire my place of exile to be severed from peace? With thy whole heart, with every sinew thou shouldst work and strive for me night and day. And to have others aid me thou shouldst win our friends, my wife, and come foremost thyself to support thy part. —

43 Great is the rôle imposed upon thee in my books: thou art called the model of a good wife. Beware thou fallest not from that: that I may have proclaimed the truth, look to the work that fame has wrought and guard it well. Though I myself make no complaint, whilst I am dumb fame will complain, as she ought, shouldst thou not have regard for me. Fortune has set me forth to be viewed of all the people, she has given me more celebrity than I had of yore.

Capaneus was made more famous by the lightning's shock; Amphiaraus achieved fame when his steeds were swallowed up in the earth. If Ulysses had wandered less, he would have been less famous; Philoctetes' great name is due to his wound. If there is some place among such mighty names for the humble, I too am become a man of mark by reason of my fall.

57 And thou art not permitted by my pages to be unknown; thou hast a name not inferior to that of Coan Bittis. Whatever therefore thou shalt do, thou shalt be viewed upon a mighty stage, thou shalt be to many witnesses a loyal wife. I assure thee, as often as thou art praised in my verse, he who reads the praise asks whether thou dost deserve it. And just as many, I think, approve such virtues, so women not a few will seek shortcomings in thy deeds. 'tis for thee to make sure their jealousy can never say, "This is she who is indifferent to her wretched husband's safety!"

67 Since I am failing, no longer able to draw the car, see that thou dost alone support the weakening yoke. I am a sick man, gazing with failing pulse upon the doctor; while the last of life remains to me, stand by to help; and what I would myself supply, were I stronger than thou, that grant to me since thou art thyself the stronger. This is demanded by our united love and marriage compact; this, my wife, thou dost demand by virtue of thine own character. This thou dost owe to the house by which thou hast thy esteem, that thou mayst cherish it not more in duty than in uprightness. Thou mayst do all things, but unless thou shalt be a praiseworthy wife, it will not be believed that thou hast honoured Marcia.

78 Nor am I unworthy, and if thou art willing to confess the truth, some return is owed to my services. That return thou dost indeed make to me with usury, nor could rumour, even if she should wish, injure thee. But none the less add this one thing to thy previous deeds: be the canvasser for my misfortunes. Toil that I may rest in a less hostile region and no part of thy duty will halt. Great is my request, yet not one that brings odium on the petitioner; shouldst thou not attain it, thy defeat involves no danger. And be not wroth with me if so many times in my song I ask thee to do what thou art already doing and to imitate thyself. The brave have often been helped by the trumpeter, and the general urges on with his own lips men who are fighting well. Thy probity is known and witnessed for all time; let thy courage too be not inferior to thy probity. Thou hast not to take up in my behalf the Amazon's battle-axe nor bear with thy frail hand the indented target. Thou has to implore a deity, not to become friendly to me, but less angry than heretofore. If grace thou findest not, tears shall win thee grace; by this or by no means canst thou move the gods. That they will not fail thee is well assured by my misfortunes; with me as husband of tears thou hast rich store; and as things are with me thou wilt weep, I think, at all times — these are the means that my fortune renders to thee. If thou hadst to redeem my death at the price of thine own — away with the thought! — Admetus' wife would be a model to follow. Thou wouldst become a rival of Penelope if by chaste deceit thou, a bride, shouldst wish to beguile insistent suitors. If thou shouldst follow thy dead husband to the shades Laodamia would guide thee in thy deed. Iphias would have to be kept before thine eyes, shouldst thou wish to hurl thyself bravely upon the kindled pyre. But thou hast no need of death, no need of the Icarian woman's web; thy lips must pray to Caesar's spouse, who by her virtue gives surety that the olden time conquers not our age in praise of chastity; who, with the beauty of Venus, the character of Juno, has been found alone worthy to share the divine couch. Why dost tremble and fear to approach her? No impious Procne nor daughter of Aeëtes must needs be touched by thy words, nor daughter-in-law of Aegyptus, nor cruel wife of Agamemnon, nor Scylla, terrifying with her loins the waters of Sicily, nor mother of Telegonus, born with the power to transform human shape, nor Medusa, with locks bound and snarled with serpents, but the foremost of women, who proves that Fortune has the power of sight and has falsely borne the charge of blindness; than whom the universe holds nothing more illustrious from the sun's rising to his setting, save only Caesar. Choose well the time, already oft essayed, to make thy petition, lest thy bark put forth into an adverse sea. Not always do oracles give forth their holy prophecies, not at all times are even the shrines open. When the condition of the city shall be such as I divine it now to be, and no sorrow brings a frown upon the people's brow, when Augustus's house, to be revered as it were the Capitol, shall be happy — as now, I pray, and ever — and filled with peace, then may the gods grant thee an opportunity to approach, then thou mayst believe that thy words will be of some avail. If she is busy with something of greater import, put off thy purpose and beware of ruining my hope through haste. Nor again do I bid thee seek a time when she is wholly idle — she scarce has leisure for the care

145 When it shall befall thee to approach the countenance of Juno, see that thou dost maintain the part thou hast to play. Defend not my deed: an ill cause admits no speech. Let thy words be naught but sorrowing petitions. Then must thou release the barrier of tears, sink to the earth, and stretch forth thy arms towards those immortal feet. Then ask nothing except that I may withdraw from the neighbourhood of a fierce enemy; let Fortune for me be enemy enough. More comes into my mind, but confused with fear even this thou wilt scarce be able to utter with stammering voice. This I think will not harm thee. She will perceive thy dread of her majesty and if thy words are broken by sobbing it will do no harm; for tears sometimes have the weight of spoken words.

169 See also that thou hast a lucky day for such an enterprise and a suitable hour and favouring omens. But first kindle a fire upon the holy altar, offer incense and pure wine to the great gods. Of them all and before all worship the deity of Augustus, his loyal offspring and his consort. May they be propitious to thee in their wonted fashion, and view thy tears with kindly countenances.

II. TO COTTA

The "Health," Cotta, of my sending which you read here, may it, I pray, be sent in truth and reach you. For your weal takes away much from my sufferings, causing a good part of me to be well. When many fall away and abandon the storm-blown sails, you remain the sole anchor of the shattered bark. Grateful, therefore, is your loyalty. I pardon those who along with Fortune have betaken themselves to flight. Though they smite but one, not one alone do the lightnings affright, and the throng around the stricken ever quakes with fear. When a wall has given warning of its coming fall, anxiety and fear empty the place. What timid man does not avoid contact with the sick, fearing lest he contract a disease so near? I too because of the excessive dread and alarm of my friends, not because of their hatred, was abandoned by some. They lacked not loyalty, nor the will to duty; they dreaded the hostile gods. They can be deemed too cautious and timid, yet they have not deserved to be called wicked. Or else my charity pardons friends who are dear to me and favours them so much that from me they bear no blame. Let them be content with this indulgence and they shall be free to boast that their act is justified even by my testimony.

25 But you few are a better group, who in my straits thought it base to offer me no aid. So then will my gratitude for your merit die when my body shall be consumed to ashes — I am wrong: it will outlive the span of my life, if after all posterity shall remember and read me. The bloodless body is destined for the mournful tomb; name and honour escape the high-built pyre. Death befell even Theseus and him who accompanied Orestes, but yet each still lives to his own renown. You too shall oft be praised by late-born descendants and bright shall be your fame by reason of my writings. Even here the Sauromatians and the Getae already know you; such a spirit as yours finds favour with the barbarian throng. And when of late I was telling of your uprightness (for I have learned how to speak Getic and Sarmatian), it chanced that an aged man, standing in the circle, made this reply upon hearing my words, "We too, good stranger, are acquainted with friendship's name — we whom the Pontus and the Hister separate from you and your people. There is a place in Scythia — men before us called it Tauri — not so far from the Getic soil. In that land was I born and I am not ashamed of my country. The people worship Phoebus's companion goddess. The temple exists to-day with its huge columns; by two score steps one enters. The story goes that there was once an image of the deity and, to remove your doubts, still stands the pedestal bereft of the goddess, and the altar, once white from the natural colour of the stone, is discolored and red with stains from outpoured blood. A woman who has not known the torch of marriage, offers the sacrifices — who surpasses in birth the daughters of Scythia. The nature of the sacrifice — so our forefathers ordained — is that strangers fall, slain by the maiden's sword. Thoans ruled the kingdom, illustrious in the Maeotian land; no other was better known to the Euxine's waters. Whilst he held the sceptre they say that a certain Iphigenia journeyed through the clear air. Her, carried by light breezes through the ether, beneath the shelter of a cloud, Phoebe established, so it is believed, in this region. Duly had she presided over the temple for many years, carrying out the gloomy rites with unwilling hand, when on a sail-bearing ship two youths arrived and set foot on our shores. Equal they were in youth and love, one Orestes, the other Pylades: fame holds fast their names. Forthwith were they led to Trivia's cruel altar, hands bound behind their backs. With lustral water the Grecian priestess sprinkled the captives that the long fillet might encircle their yellow locks. While she prepared the sacrifice, while she veiled their temples with the bands, while she found pretexts for lingering delay, 'It is not I,' she said, 'youths, who am cruel; grant me pardon. I perform sacrifices more barbarous than the land to which they belong. 'tis the rite of the people. Yet — from what city come ye? On what journey have ye come in your ill-starred ship?' Thus spake the pious girl, and when she heard the name of her native land, she discovered that they were dwellers in her own city. 'Let one of you,' she said, 'fall as a victim in these rites, let the other go a messenger to the home of his fathers.' Pylades, bent on death, bade his Orestes go. He refuses, and each in turn fights to die. On this alone they did not agree: on all else those twain were at one and free from dispute. Whilst the fair youths carry on their contest of love, to her brother she traces written letters. To her brother she was sending the missive and he to whom it was given — behold the fate of man! — was in fact her brother!

93 "With no delay they snatch from the temple the statue of Diana, and stealthily they are borne over the trackless waters in their ship. A marvel was the love of the youths: though so many years have passed, in Scythia even now they have a great name."

97 After the telling of this well-known tale, all praised acts of loyal devotion. 'Tis clear that even on this shore, than which none is wilder, the name of friendship affects barbarian hearts. What ought ye to do, born in the Ausonian city, when such deeds move the stern Getae? And besides you have ever a gentle soul and, a token of your lofty birth, a character which Volesus, the founder of your father's name, would recognize, which Numa on your mother's side would not refuse to own, and the Cottae, who have been added to your natal name — a line that but for your life would die out. O worthy of such a line, deem it in harmony with such character to succour a fallen friend!

III. TO MAXIMUS

If you have a little leisure to devote to an exiled friend, listen, Maximus, star of the Fabian race, while I relate what I have seen, whether it was the shadow of a body, the appearance of a reality, or merely a dream.

'Twas night. The moon was entering the doubleshuttered windows with all her accustomed midmonth brightness. Sleep, the common rest from cares, possessed me, my inert limbs stretched about the couch, when on a sudden the air was vibrant with the movement of wings and a slight creaking sound arose as the window was moved. Startled I raised myself upon my left elbow, and sleep was driven from my trembling breast. There stood Love, not with the face he used to have, sadly resting his left hand upon the maple post, no necklace on his throat, no ornament in his hair, his locks not carefully arranged as of old. Over his unkempt face the soft hair was drooping; his feathers seemed to my eyes all unkempt, like those on the back of soaring dove which many hands have touched and handled. As soon as I recognized him — and none other is better known to me — my tongue became free and addressed him in in these words. "Boy, cause of thy master's exile, whom it had been better for me not to teach, hast thou come even hither where peace exists at no time, where the waters of the wild Hister feel the bonds of frost? What reason hast thou for thy journey except to view my misfortunes? These, if thou knowest it not, bring reproach upon thee. Thou wert the first to dictate my youthful verse to me; it was under thy guidance that I set five feet after six. Thou didst not allow me to reach the height of Maeonian song or to sing the deeds of mighty chieftains. Slight perhaps, yet something, was the strength of my talent, but thy bow and thy fires brought weakness. For whilst I sang thy sway and that of thy mother, my mind had room for no great work. Nor was this all: by a foolish poem as well, by my "Art," I caused thee to lose thy inexperience. For this the reward of exile was meted out to wretched me, and that too in a land far away and never at peace. Not so did Chionian Eumolpus treat Orpheus, nor Olympus treat the Phrygian Satyr, nor did Chiron receive such a reward from Achilles, and they say that Numa did no harm to Pythagoras. Not to repeat the names amassed through the long ages — I am the only one who has been ruined by his own pupil. Whilst I give arms to thee, whilst I teach thee, wanton one, this is the reward, with thee as pupil, that thy master has. Yet thou knowest, and thou couldst swear it with a clear conscience, that I have not disturbed lawful wedlock. This I wrote for those who have no modest locks to be touched with the fillet nor a long stole descending to their feet. Speak, I beg thee — hast thou at any time learned to deceive brides, rendering descent uncertain by my precepts? Or has not every woman been strictly excluded from these books whom the law protects from stealthy paramours? Yet of what avail is this if men believe that I have composed directions for that adultery which is forbidden by stern laws? But do thou — so mayst thou possess arrows that smite all, so may thy torches never lose their swift flame, so may Caesar, who through thy brother Aeneas is thy kin, guide his realm and control all lands — cause his wrath to be not implacable against me, cause him to be willing that I be punished in a better place."

65 Thus methought I spoke to the winged boy, in these words methought he answered me, "By my weapons, the torch and arrows, by my mother I swear, and by Caesar's head, that I have learned naught but what is lawful from thy mastership, that there resides no crime in thine 'Art.' As I defend thee on this score, would I could on the rest! Thou knowest there is another thing that has injured thee more. Whatever this is (for neither should the painful tale itself be repeated nor canst thou say that thou art free from guilt), though thou dost veil thy crime under the guise of 'error' the wrath of the judge was not too severe. However, to look upon thee, to console thee downcast, my wings have glided over measureless ways. This region I first saw when at my mother's request I pierced the Phasian maiden with my darts. The reason for my second visit now, after long ages, is in thee, friendly soldier of my own camp. So put aside thy fears; Caesar's wrath will soften, a gentler hour will be vouchsafed to thy prayers. Fear not delay; the time we seek is close at hand; the triumph fills everything with joy. While the house and the children, while their mother Livia rejoices, while thou, great father of our land and of our leader, dost rejoice, while the people congratulate themselves, and throughout the city every altar burns with fragrant flames, while the holy temple affords an easy approach, we may hope that our prayers can have some effect."

93 He spoke and glided away into thin air or else my own senses began to awaken.

95 Were I to doubt your favour for these words, Maximus, I should believe that swans are the colour of Memnon. But milk is not changed to black pitch nor does shining ivory become terebinth.

Birth suited to your spirit is yours, for you have a noble breast, with the candour of Hercules. Envy, the vice of cowardice, enters not into lofty character, but creeps like a hidden snake along the ground. Your mind towers aloft above even your birth, for your name is not greater than your character. So let others injure the wretched and desire to be feared; let them carry missiles dipped in corroding poison; your house at least is used to assisting suppliants. In their number, I beseech you, count me also.

IV. TO RUFINUS

These words that bring no empty greeting your Naso sends from the town of Tomis, and he entrusts to you the fostering of his "Triumph," Rufinus, if after all it has reached your hands. 'Tis a humble work, not equal to your preparations, yet such as it is, he requests for it your guardianship. Strong things have powers of their own, and need no Machaon; the sick man in his danger has recourse to the art of healing. Great poets need no favouring reader: they hold even the unwilling or him who is hard to please. I, whose talent has been diminished by long sorrows — or perhaps even of old I had no talent — weakened now, am strong in your generosity; if you take that from me, I should deem all else torn away. And though all my work rests upon kindly favour, that poem has a special right to indulgence.

Other bards have seen the triumph they have described — 'tis something to note with faithful hand what one has seen — I have described what I have caught with difficulty in an eager ear from common hearsay; rumour has been for me my eyes. Forsooth the same passion, the same vigour comes from what has been heard and from what has been seen! Not the absence of the gleaming silver or gold that you have seen causes my complaint; but the places, the peoples in a thousand forms, the very battles would have fed my verse — the countenances of the kings, the surest indication of their souls, would have aided, somehow perchance, that work.

29 From the very applause and glad approval of the people any talent can catch the flame; I should have won vigour from such acclaim even as the raw recruit when he hears the trumpet call to arms. Though my breast be colder than snow or ice — colder even than this land which I endure — the aspect of that general standing in the ivory car would drive all cold from my senses.

37 Lacking all this and using vague sources, rightly do I resort to the aid of your favour. I know not the names of the chieftains, I know not the names of the places; there was no material for my hands. How small a part of such mighty events could rumour bring me or some friend write! The more then, my reader, ought you to grant me pardon if I have erred or omitted anything therein. Add too that my lyre for ever conning its master's plaints could scarcely turn to a song of rejoicing. Happy words after so long a time responded with difficulty to my quest; to rejoice at anything seemed to me a new thing, and as eyes shrink before the sun to which they have been unaccustomed, so towards joyousness my mind moved slowly. Timeliness also is the most precious of all things, and that homage which is delayed receives no favour. Others have vied in writing of the mighty triumph and for a long time now, I suppose, the people have been reading them. These things thirsty readers have drunk; to my bowls they come with thirst already slaked: that drink is fresh, mine will be stale.

57 I have not dallied, idleness has not made me slow; I am living on the most remote coast of the vast sea. While news is coming to me and hasty verse is being composed and when composed is travelling to you, a year may pass. It matters not a little whether one is first in the untouched rose-garden or with late hand plucks blooms which have been almost passed by. What wonder, when the flowers have been gathered until the garden is stripped, if a chaplet has been twined not worthy of your leader!

65 This I disavow: let no poet think these words uttered in derogation of his verse; my Muse has but spoken in her own behalf. I have rites in common with you, ye poets — if you allow the unfortunate a place in your guild. Your life with me was a great part of my soul, my friends; even now in absence I continue thus to cherish you. Do you then grant the favour of your commendation to verse for which I cannot plead myself. Writings oft find favour after death, since malice is wont to injure the living, gnawing with unjust tooth. If to live in wretchedness is a kind of death, then earth is a loiterer and my fate lacks only the tomb. In fine though the result of my toil be everywhere disapproved, none will there be to blame my loyalty. Even though I lack the strength, yet the will is praiseworthy; with this, I divine, the gods are content. This it is which makes even the poor man well received when he approaches the altar, and a lamb receives no less favour than a slaughtered ox.

83 The theme too was great enough to have formed a heavy burden even for the mighty bard of the Aeneadae. Moreover frail couplets could not support the weight of so vast a triumph upon their uneven wheels. What metre I am now to use I am in doubt: for a second triumph is close at hand over thee, O Rhine. The prophecies of inspired bards are not empty: a laurel wreath is destined to be given to Jupiter while that other is still green. 'Tis not my words you read — I am far away by the Hister whose waters the wild Getae drink—'tis the voice of a god: a god is in my breast; under a god's inspiration I make this prophecy. Why dost thou hesitate, Livia, to make ready a car and a procession for a triumph? Already the war grants thee no delay. Traitorous Germany is casting away the spears she has learned to hate. Soon thou wilt say that my prophecy has weight. O believe; soon shall the proof be at hand. Thy son shall double his honour and shall advance, as before, with yoked steeds. Bring forth the purple to throw upon the victor's shoulders; the chaplet of itself can recognize the familiar brow; but let shield and greaves glitter with jewels and gold, and trophies stand upreared above the enchained men. Let towns of ivory be girdled with turreted walls, and the pretence be so real as to seem true. Let squalid Rhenus with locks trailing beneath broken rushes display waters dyed with blood. Already captive kings are calling for barbarian adornment, for a garb too rich to become their fate, and all the other things which the unconquered valour of thy sons has caused thee often to prepare, and will cause thee often to prepare.

113 Ye gods, whose admonition inspires my prophecy of events to come, justify my words, I pray, with a speedy proof.

V. TO MAXIMUS COTTA

Whence comes the letter that you read, you ask? From this place where Hister unites with the blue waves. Soon as the place is named the writer too should come before you — he whose own talent injured him, Naso the poet. To you, Maximus Cotta, to whom he would rather offer it face to face, he sends a greeting from the land of the shaggy Getae.

I have read, O youth not untrue to your inherited oratory, the eloquent words you uttered in a crowded forum, and though my hurrying tongue has read them for many an hour, yet is it my complaint that they were few. But I have multiplied them by frequent reading, and ever have they been more pleasing to me than at first, and though they lose by so much reading nothing of their sweetness, 'tis by their force, not their novelty, that they please. Happy they who were vouchsafed to hear them at their delivery, and to enjoy utterance so eloquent! For albeit water that is brought to one tastes sweet, more grateful is that which is drunk from the spring itself.

To draw down the branch and pluck the fruit gives more pleasure than to take it from an engraved salver. If I had not erred, if my Muse had never exiled me, your own voice would have delivered to me the work that I have read; as I was wont, I should perchance have sat as one of those hundred judges intent upon your words, and a greater joy would have filled my breast when I was drawn on and with nods approved each phrase. But since Fate has wished rather that I, leaving my country and you, should dwell among the uncivilized Getae, that I may seem the more to be with you — send for my reading (this is possible) continual proofs, I beseech you, of your study; follow my example, unless you disdain it, an example which you yourself with greater right might give to me. For I, Maximus, who have long been dead, strive by my talent to prove myself not to be dead to you. Recompense me, and at no rare intervals let the monuments of your toil come into my hands to give me joy.

37 But tell me, my youthful friend, you who are inspired with my own studies, if these very studies bring you any remembrance of me. Whenever you read to your friends a poem newly composed or, as you are often wont to do, urge them to read, do you miss me so that at times your mind, though forgetful of what is lacking, yet feels at least some part of it is gone? As you used to talk often of me in my presence, is Naso's name now also on your lips? As for me, may I die outraged by a Getic bow — and you see how close my penalty if I prove false — if I do not see you at almost every moment, absent though I am. Grateful must we be that the heart may go whithersoever it will. When in this way I have entered the city though none can see me, I often converse with you, often enjoy your converse. Then 'tis hard to say how happy I am, how bright I think that hour. Then, if you can credit it, I conceive myself harboured in heaven's abode, dwelling with the blessed gods. Again when I have returned hither I leave behind heaven and the gods above; the land of the Pontus is hard by the Styx. If my struggle to return from it is against the behest of fate, then, Maximus, take from me a fruitless hope.

VI. TO A FRIEND

Naso sends to his friend — how nearly did he name him! — this bit of verse from the waters of the Euxine. But if with too little caution his hand had written who you were, perchance the tribute would have earned a complaint. Yet why, when others believe it safe, do you alone ask me not to address you in my verse? How great is Caesar's clemency even in the midst of wrath, if you know it not, you may learn from my case. From this punishment that I suffer I could myself take away naught, were I forced to be the judge of my own deserts. He does not forbid anybody to mention a friend nor does he prevent me from writing to you nor you to me. You would commit no crime should you comfort your friend, lightening with gentle words his harsh fate. Why, fearful where no fear is, do you by such homage bring discredit upon the Augustan gods? Men smitten by the lightning's bolt we have seen at times live and recover, nor did Jupiter prevent. Because Neptune had wrecked Ulysses' ship, Leucothea did not refuse to aid him as he swam. O believe me, the deities of heaven are merciful to the wretched; nor do they always and endlessly oppress the stricken. And no god is milder than our Prince, for Justice tempers his strength. Her Caesar but recently installed in a marble temple; long ago he enshrined her in his heart. Jupiter hurls at haphazard his bolts against many who have by no fault deserved to suffer a penalty. Albeit the god of the sea has o'erwhelmed so many in the cruel waves, how small the number deserving to be drowned! When the bravest die in battle, Mars' levy will be unjust even in his own judgment. But if perchance you wish to question each one of us, there is not one who would deny that he had deserved his suffering. And those who have died at sea, in war, by fire no day can restore. But Caesar has restored many or lightened a part of their punishment; may it be his will that I too be one of these many.

39 But you, when we, his people, live under such an emperor — do you believe that comforting an exile is dangerous? Perhaps under the dominion of Busiris you might rightly fear this or under him who was wont to burn men within the bronze. Cease to defame a tender heart with idle fear. Why fear cruel reefs in a calm sea? Even I, for having written at first to you without your name, think that I can scarcely be excused. But I was so stunned that fear had taken away the use of reason, and all power of thought had given way to the new misfortune; fearful of my own fate, not of the avenger's wrath, I was filled with dread by the superscription of my own name.

51 Now that I have admonished you thus far, permit the poet who remembers you to place in his pages names that are dear to him. It will shame us both if you, so close to me through long intimacy, are mentioned nowhere in my book. Yet I would not have your slumbers broken by that dread of yours; I will not display my devotion beyond your wishes, and I will conceal who you are save when you shall yourself grant leave; none shall be forced to receive my tribute. Only do you, though you might with safety have loved me openly, if that seems dangerous — love me in secret.

VII. TO FRIENDS

Words fail me to make the same request so many times; and at last it shames me that my idle prayers are endless. You are all weary of my monotonous verses, and my request you have learned by heart, I think. What message my letter bears you know already, although the wax has not been broken from its bonds. So let me change the purport of my writing that my course be not so often against the hurrying stream.

9 For my good hopes of you, pardon me, my friends: of such error now there shall be an end. Nor will I be called a trouble to my wife who in sooth is as true to me as she is timid and backward in her efforts. This also, Naso, thou shalt bear, and thou hast borne worse things; no burden can affect thee now. The bull when he is taken from the herd objects to the plough and wrenches his inexperienced neck from the hard yoke: I, beneath the practised cruelty of fate, have for long found no misfortune with which I am not familiar. I have come to the Getic shores; let me die there and let my Fate continue to the end the course she has begun. 'Tis good to embrace a hope — though it bring no good and be ever vain — and whatever you long for that you may deem will happen. The next stage is utterly to give up hope of salvation, to know once and for all with full assurance that one is lost. Some wounds are made worse by treatment, as we see: it had been better not to touch them. More merciful is his death who is suddenly overwhelmed by the waters than his who wearies his arms in the heaving seas. Why did I conceive it possible for me to leave the Scythian land and enjoy a happier one? Why did I ever hope any mercy for myself? Was it thus that I had come to know my fate? Lo! my torture is all the worse, and the repeated description of this place but renews and freshens the harshness of my exile. Yet 'tis better that the zeal of my friends should cease than that the petitions they have brought should have had no weight. Serious indeed, my friends, is the thing you dare not: but if anybody were to ask, there is one who would be willing to grant. If only Caesar's wrath does not deny me this, I shall bravely die on the shores of the Euxine sea.

VIII. TO MAXIMUS

I was pondering what gift to witness my unforgetting love of you the land of Tomis could send you

Worthy are you of silver, of tawny gold still more, but such things are wont to please you when you are the giver. Nor are these lands enriched by any mine: scarce does the enemy allow the farmer to dig there. Often has the gleam of purple bordered your robe, but there is no such dye as that by the Sarmatian sea. The flocks produce a coarse fleece and the daughters of Tomis have not learned the craft of Pallas. Instead of working the wool they grind Ceres' gifts or carry heavy burdens of water supported on their heads. Here no clustering vines cloak the elms, no fruits bend the branches with their weight. Harsh wormwood is the product of the unsightly plains, and by this fruit the land proclaims its own bitterness.

17 Nothing there was, then, in the whole region of ill-omened Pontus that all my pains could send. Yet I am sending some Scythian arrows enclosed in their quiver; may they be stained, I pray, in the blood of your enemies! Such are the pens on this shore, such the books! Such is the Muse who flourishes, Maximus, in this place of mine! I am ashamed to send them because they seem poor gifts; yet I pray you to take them in good part.

IX. TO BRUTUS

Because these compositions of mine contain the same thought, Brutus, you report that somebody is carping at my verse: nothing (he says) but petitioning that I may enjoy a land nearer home, and talk of the throng of enemies encircling me. Ah, how the critic seizes on but one of many shortcomings! If this is the only blemish of my Muse, 'tis well. I myself perceive the defects of my own books despite the fact that every man is all too fond of his own verse. A creator finds praise for his own work: so perchance of old Agrius may have called Thersites fair. Yet my judgment is not distorted by this failing: whatever I beget does not forthwith please me. Why then, you ask, if I perceive my mistakes, should I continue to err, permitting faults to remain in my writing? 'tis not the same story to feel and to cure a disease; all men can feel, skill must remove the trouble. Often when I am desirous of changing some word I leave it, and my strength forsakes my judgment. Often — why should I hesitate to confess to you the truth? — it irks me to emend and endure the burden of long toil. While writing the very toil gives pleasure and itself is lessened, and the growing work glows along with the writer's heart. But to emend — even as it is a thing as much harder as great Homer was greater than Aristarchus, so it wears down the mind with a slow chill of worry, curbing the steed all eager for the race. As truly as I hope that the merciful gods may lessen Caesar's wrath and allow my bones to rest in peaceful soil, when I attempt to work carefully, sometimes the bitter vision of my lot confronts me and I think myself hardly sane in composing verses or in troubling to emend them among the wild Getae.

33 And yet there is nothing more deserving of excuse in what I write than that in it all there is one single thought. Gay was oft my song when I was gay, sad it is now that I am sad: each period has a type of work that befits it. Of what am I to write save the evils of a bitter country and to pray that I may die in a pleasanter region? I write so often of the same things that scarce any listen, and my words, which they feign not to understand, are without result. And yet though the words are always the same, I have not written to the same persons: my cry, always the same, seeks aid through many. Should I — that some reader might not twice find the same sense — petition you alone, Brutus, among my friends? It was not worth the price; pardon the confession, ye men of taste! Cheaper in my eyes is the reputation of my work than my own weal. In fine the subject which anyone may have fashioned for himself, he varies in many ways to suit his own taste — if he be a poet. My Muse is but too true an index of my misfortunes; she has all the weight of an incorruptible witness. Not to produce a book, but to send a letter to each has been the object of my care. Later I collected them and put them together somehow, without order — not to have you think perchance that for this work I have made selections. Grant indulgence to my writings, for their purpose has been not my renown but my advantage, and to do homage to others.

I. TO SEXTUS POMPEY

Deign to receive a poem, Sextus Pompey, composed by him who is indebted to you for his life. If you do not prevent me from uttering your name this also will be added to the sum of your deserts: or if you frown, I shall indeed confess my mistake, but its cause must nevertheless win approval. My heart could not be restrained from gratitude; let not your anger be heavy, I beseech you, upon my loyal service. Ah, how often have I thought myself ungrateful in these books because nowhere was your name read! Ah, how often, when I wished to write to another, has my hand all unconsciously placed your name upon the wax! The very mistake I made in such slips gave me pleasure and my hand was scarce willing to make the erasure. "Let him see it!" I said, "though he may indeed complain! Ashamed am I not to have earned this blame earlier!" Give me, if such thing there be, the waters of Lethe that benumb the heart, yet I shall not be able to forget you. I beg you will permit this nor reject in contempt my words, nor think that in my tribute there is a sin. Let this slight gratitude be rendered to all your services; if you do not, I shall be grateful even against your will.

23 Never has your grace been slow to meet my need nor has your coffer ever denied me generous aid. Even now your clemency, not at all deterred by my sudden misfortune, offers and will continue to offer succour to my life. Whence, perchance you ask, have I so much confidence in the future? Every man watches over the work he has wrought. Just as Venus is at once the work and glory of the Coan artist, as she presses her locks damp with the spray of the sea; as the war goddess who guards the Actaeon citadel stands in ivory or bronze wrought by the hand of Phidias, as Calamis claims renown for the steeds he has made, as the lifelike cow is

Myron's work, so I am not the last of your possessions, Sextus; I am known as the gift, the work of your guardianship.

II. TO SEVERUS

That which you are reading, Severus, mightiest bard of mighty kings, comes all the way from the land of the unshorn Getae, and that as yet my books have made no mention of your name — if you will permit me to speak the truth — brings me shame. Yet letters not in metre have never ceased to go on their mission of friendship between us. Verse alone, bearing witness to your thoughtful care, I have not given you: why should I give what you yourself compose? Who would give honey to Aristaeus, Falernian wine to Bacchus, grain to Triptolemus, fruit to Alcinous? You have a productive heart; of those who cultivate Helicon, none displays a richer crop. To send verse to such a one were to add leaves to the forest: this has caused my delay, Severus. Yet my talent does not answer the call as of old, for I am furrowing a barren shore with an ineffective plough. Surely just as silt clogs the veins in springs and the outraged water halts in the choked fountain, so my mind has been injured by the silt of misfortune, and my verse flows with a scantier vein. If anyone had set in this land Homer himself, let me assure you, even he would have become a Getan. Pardon one who confesses, but in my pursuit I have relaxed the rein, my fingers rarely trace a letter. That inspired impulse, the nurse of poets' thoughts, which once was mine, is gone. My Muse scarce takes her part, and when I have taken up my tablets scarce does she lay upon them an inert hand, almost under coercion. I have little pleasure, or none at all, in writing, no zest in joining words to metre, whether it is that I have so reaped from it no profit that this very thing is the source of my misfortune, or that making rhythmic gestures in the dark and composing a poem which you may read to nobody are one and the same thing. A hearer rouses zeal, excellence increases with praise, and renown possesses a mighty spur. In this place who is there to whom I can read my compositions except the yellow-haired Coralli, or the other tribes of the wild Hister? But what shall I do in my loneliness, with what occupation shall I pass my ill-starred leisure and beguile the day? For since neither wine nor treacherous dice attract me, which oft cause time to steal quietly away, nor — although I should like it if fierce war permitted — can I take pleasure in renewing the earth by cultivation, what remains except the Pierians, a cold solace, — the goddesses who have not deserved well of me? But you, who quaff more happily the Aonian spring, continue your love for the pursuit which yields you profit; worship as is right the cult of the Muses and for my reading send hither some work over which you have recently toiled.

III. TO A FAITHLESS FRIEND

Complaint or silence? Shall I make a nameless charge, or should I wish all to know who you are? I will not employ your name lest my complaint bring you favour and through my verse you win renown.

5 As long as my bark rested firmly upon its keel among all who wished to sail with me you were first. Now that Fortune has frowned you withdraw upon discovering that your assistance is needed. You play the dissembler, too, and wish not to be thought to know me; when you hear the name you ask who Naso is! 'tis I, although you will not hear it, who have been united to you in friendship almost boy with boy; 'tis I who used first to hear your serious thoughts, first to listen to your pleasant jests; 'tis I — who lived in close union with you in the same household; 'tis I who in your judgment was the one and only Muse; 'tis I of whom you know not, traitor, whether I am now alive, about whom you have been at no pains to inquire. If I was never dear to you, you confess pretence; if you were not feigning, you will be proved faithless. Or else come now, tell me of some reason for anger that has altered you; for if your complaint is not just, then mine is just. What crime of mine prevents you from being what you once were? Or do you term it a crime that I have become unfortunate? If you brought me no aid in fact, in deeds, you might have sent me three words on a sheet of paper. I can scarce believe it — but rumour says that you are even insulting me in my fall, that you do not spare words. Ah, why do you do this, madman? Why, in case Fortune should leave you, do you thus rob your own shipwreck of tears? She is a goddess who admits by her unsteady wheel her own fickleness; she always has its crest beneath her swaying foot. She is less stable than any leaf, than any breeze; to match her fickleness, base man, there is only yours!

35 All human affairs hang by a slender thread; chance on a sudden brings to ruin what once was strong. Who has not heard of Croesus's wealth? Yet of a truth he was captured and received his life from an enemy. He who but now was dreaded in the city of Syracuse, scarce kept hunger at bay by a lowly calling. What was mightier than Magnus? Yet in his flight he asked with humble voice a client's aid. The man whom the whole world obeyed... he who was famed for his triumphs over Jugurtha and the Cimbri, under whom as consul Rome was so often victorious, lay, Marius though he was, in the slime and marsh grass, enduring many things shameful for so great a man.

49 Divine power plays with human affairs, and sure trust can scarce be placed in the present hour. If anybody had said to me, "You shall go to the Euxine shore and you shall fear wounds from a Getic bow, I would have said," Go, drink a potion that clears the brain — everything that Anticyra produces." Yet have I suffered this. Though I might have guarded against the weapons of mortals, yet I could not protect myself against those of a supreme god. See that you too feel afraid and remember that what seems happiness to you has power, while you speak, to change into sorrow.

IV. TO SEXTUS POMPEIUS

NO day is so drenching wet from the southern clouds that the rain pours in uninterrupted flood. No place is so barren that it has no useful plant, oft-times intermixed with the tough brambles. Heavy fortune has rendered nothing so wretched that no joys lessen in some part its sorrow. Behold how I, reft from home and country and the sight of my own, driven like a wreck to the waters of the Getic land, have yet found means to brighten my face and to forget my fate. For as I strolled alone upon the yellow sand, behind me, it seemed, wings rustled. I looked back; there was no form that I could see, but my ear caught these words, "Lo, I come to bear thee a message of gladness; I am Report, and I have flown through measureless distances of air. Through the consulship of Pompey, who is dearer to you than any other, the coming year will be bright and blessed."

She spoke, and having filled the Pontus with the glad tidings the goddess turned her course to other peoples. But for me care fell away amidst my new joys, the cruel harshness of this land vanished. And so, two-faced Janus, when thou hast unsealed the long year, when December is driven out by the holy month, Pompey will assume the purple of highest office — that to his titles of honour he may leave no debt undischarged. Already I seem to behold your halls almost bursting with the crowd, the people bruised for lack of space, the temples of Tarpeia's abode visited by you as your first act, the gods becoming propitious to your prayers, the snowy oxen which Falerii has nourished in her own meadows offering their throats to the unerring axe; and while from all the gods you will earnestly seek favour, those of your more eager desire shall be Jupiter and Caesar. The senate-house will receive you and the fathers summoned in the wonted fashion will lend attentive ear to your words. When they have been delighted by the words that will fall from your eloquent lips, when according to custom the day shall offer words of good omen, and you have rendered due thanks to the gods above and to Caesar, who will give you cause to repeat them often, you will return home escorted by the whole senate, the house scarce finding room for the people's homage. Wretched am I that I shall not be seen in that throng, that my eyes will not be able to enjoy that sight! But this I may do: in your absence I can see you in my mind; that will behold the features of its loved consul. May the gods grant that at some moment my name may come into your mind, that you may say, "Alas! what is that miserable man doing now?" If such words of yours be reported to me by any, I shall at once confess that my exile is easier to bear.

V. TO SEXTUS POMPEIUS

On! light couplets, to the consul's learned ears, and bear a message for the honoured man to read. Long is the way, nor do you advance with even steps, and a mantle of winter snow conceals the land. Crossing frozen Thrace with Haemus hidden in clouds and the waters of the Ionian sea, on the tenth day or before you will reach the imperial city though you make no hurried journey. Forthwith then seek the house of Pompeius; none is closer to the forum of Augustus. If any, as may happen in the crowd, asks who you are and whence you come, beguile his ear with any name you will. For even though it should be safe, as I think it is, to make confession, surely fictitious words involve less danger. Nor will you have the power unhindered to see the consul, even though you reach the threshold: either he will be ruling his citizens by the law's word while he sits high upon an ivory chair splendid with carving, or beside the implanted spear he will be ordering the people's revenues, not allowing the wealth of the mighty city to suffer loss; or when the fathers have been summoned to Julius's temple, he will be debating matters worthy of a great consul; or he will be bringing to Augustus and his son the accustomed greeting, seeking advice about an unfamiliar duty.

All the time left from these offices Germanicus Caesar will claim: him he reverences next after the great gods.

27 Yet when he finds rest from this crowd of affairs, he will extend to you his kindly hands, and he will ask perhaps how I, your parent, am faring. In such words as these I wish you to reply: "He still lives, confessing that he owes the life to you which first he holds as the gift of Caesar's mercy. He is wont to say with grateful lips that upon his journey to exile you made the ways of the barbarian world safe for him: that his blood stained no Bistonian sword was owing to your heartfelt care; that you gave him besides many gifts to preserve his life that his own resources might not be impaired. To thank you for these services he swears to be your slave for all time. For the mountains will sooner be stripped of their shady trees and the seas of their sailing ships, the rivers will turn and flow backward to their sources before he can cease to be grateful for your service.”

46 When you have spoken thus, ask him to preserve his own gift; so will the purpose of your journey be accomplished.

VI. TO BRUTUS

The letter that you are reading, Brutus, has come from that land in which you would not wish Naso to be. Yet what you would not wish, wretched fate has willed for me. Alas! fate is stronger than your prayers. In Scythia I have passed the five years of an Olympiad; the time is now passing to a second lustrum. For obstinate fortune persists and craftily opposes a malicious foot to my desires. Thou, Maximus, glory of the Fabian race, hadst resolved to appeal for me to the deity of Augustus with the voice of a suppliant. Thou didst die before the prayer was uttered, and I count myself, Maximus — though I am not worth so much — the cause of thy death. Now I fear to entrust my salvation to any; help itself has perished with thy death.

15 Augustus had begun to pardon the fault I committed in error; my hopes at once and the world he left desolate. Yet from my distant abode I sent for your reading a poem — such poem as I could, Brutus, about the new god. May this act of reverence aid me, let there now be an end to my sorrows, a gentler wrath on the part of the sacred household. I can swear with a clear conscience that you too utter the same prayer, Brutus — you whom I know from indubitable proof. For although you have ever granted me sincere love, yet this love has increased in my time of adversity. One who saw your tears that matched with mine would have believed that both were about to suffer punishment. Nature bore you kind to the wretched; to none, Brutus, has she given a kinder heart, so that he who knows not your power in the wars of the forum would scarce suppose that your lips can prosecute defendants. In truth the same man, although such qualities seem to battle with each other, is able to be gentle with suppliants, but harsh to the guilty. When you have taken it upon yourself to champion the strict law, every word is as though it were steeped in poison. May it befall enemies to feel how impetuous you are in arms, to suffer the missiles of your tongue! On these you use the file with such extreme care that none would recognize in them your real nature. But if you see any injured by unjust Fortune, no woman is more tender than your heart. This I felt above all when the most of my friends denied knowledge of me. I shall forget them, but you I shall never forget, who lighten the woes of my trouble. Sooner shall the Hister, all too near me, turn his march back from the Euxine sea towards its source and, as if the age of Thyestean banquets should return, the chariot of the sun shall sooner be driven towards the eastern waters than that any one of you who have mourned my exile shall call me a forgetful ingrate.

VII. TO VESTALIS

Seeing that you have been sent to the Euxine waters, Vestalis, to dispense justice to those lands which lie beneath the pole, you behold face to face in what manner of country I am cast and you will bear witness that I am not wont to utter false complaints. My words will receive through you, young scion of Alpine kings, no idle support. You yourself see the Pontus stiffen with ice, you yourself see the wine standing rigid with the frost; you yourself see how the fierce lazygian herdsman guides his loaded wagon over the middle of Hister's waters. You behold how poison is hurled on the barbed steel and the missile possesses two causes of death. And would that this region had merely met your sight, that you had not also experienced it, in a battle of your own!

Through crowding perils is a way won to the first rank, a deserved honour which has recently fallen to your lot. Even though this honour be filled with rewards for you, yet your great worth will be greater than your rank. This the Hister acknowledges, whose water your hand once empurpled with Getic blood. Aegisos acknowledges it, which retaken at your approach, came to know that the nature of its site availed nothing. For 'tis uncertain whether it was better defended by its situation or by force — the city that towered to the clouds upon a lofty ridge. A fierce foe had cut it off from the Sithonian king, and in victory held its captured treasure, until Vitellius, borne adown the stream, disembarked his soldiers and advanced his standards against the Getae. But you, bravest descendant of lofty Donnus, were impelled to rush upon the confronting foe. At once far seen in glittering arms, you take heed that brave acts may not be hidden; with mighty stride you charge the steel, the hill, and stones greater in number than winter's hail. Neither the crowding missiles hurled from above halt you nor those steeped in viper's blood. Arrows with painted feathers cling to your helmet, scarce any part of your shield lacks a wound. Your body has not the luck to escape every stroke, but your pain is less than your keen love of glory. Such at Troy was Danaan Ajax when, they say, in defence of the Grecian ships he bore the brunt of Hector's firebrands. When you came nearer, hand meeting hand, and the battle could be fought at close quarters with the fierce sword, 'tis hard to tell of your martial deeds there, how many you gave to death, who they were and how they fell. Upon heaps of dead, the work of your sword, you trod in victory; many a Getan lay beneath your planted foot. The soldiers of lesser rank fought after the model of their centurion, enduring many wounds, giving many. But your valour as far surpassed all others as Pegasus distances a swift steed. Aegisos is conquered, and for all time, Vestalis, my song bears witness to your deeds.

VIII. TO SUILLIUS

Your letter, accomplished Suillius, has been late in reaching me, yet has it brought me pleasure. Therein you say that so far as friendly loyalty can soften the gods by petition you will bring me aid. Though you should give me nothing more, your friendly purpose has placed me in your debt, for I term the will to aid a service. Let only that impulse of yours endure for long ages and let not your loyalty be worn out by my misfortunes. Some claim our bonds of kinship make and I pray that these may ever last unweakened. For she who is your wife is almost my daughter; she who calls you son-in-law, calls me husband. Woe is me if when you read these verses you frown and feel shame that you are my kinsman! Yet you will be able to discover in me nothing to shame you save only Fortune, who to me has proved blind. If you examine our lineage, we shall be found knights from our earliest origins all through a line of countless ancestors, or if you wish to ask what is my character, remove my blunder and my character is spotless.

21 Do you, if you hope that anything can be accomplished by petition, beseech with a suppliant's prayer the gods you worship. Your gods are — the young Caesar. Propitiate your divinity. No altar surely is more familiar to you than this. That altar never permits the supplications of its priest to be in vain: seek from it succour for my fate. No matter how slight the breeze with which it aids me, my bark now o'erwhelmed will rise once more from the midst of the waters. Then will I offer to the devouring flames holy incense bearing witness to the power of the divinity. I will rear no temple of Parian marble for thee, Germanicus; that disaster tore away my wealth; temples will be built for thee and thine by rick houses and cities; Naso will show gratitude with verse, his only wealth. Poor indeed, I confess, is the gift that is rendered for great service, if I give words in return for the grant of salvation. But he who gives his utmost, is lavishly grateful and that loyal service has reached its goal. The incense offered by the poor man from his humble censer has not less effect than that given from a huge platter. The nursling lamb as well as the victim fed on Faliscan grass dyes in sacrifice the Tarpeian altar. Yet than the proffered tribute of poets' verse naught else more befits the leaders of men. Verse heralds abroad your praises and sees to it that the glory of your deeds falls not to the ground. By verse virtue lives on and, avoiding the tomb, becomes known to late posterity. Wasting time consumes both steel and stone; no thing has a strength greater than that of time. But writing endures the years. Through writing you know Agamemnon and everyone who bore arms with him or against him. Who would know of Thebes and the seven leaders, were it not for verse, or of all that went before and after? Even the gods, if 'tis right to say this, are created by verse; their mighty majesty needs the bard's voice. By this it is that we know that Chaos became separated from that mass of earlier nature and took on his divisions; by this that the Giants aiming at the sovereignty of heaven were hurled to the Styx by the cloud-bearing thunderbolt of the avenger; by this that victorious Liber won renown from the conquering of the Indies, Alcides from the capture of Oechalia. And but now, O Caesar, thy grandsire, whom his virtue has sent to the starry heaven, owed in some measure his sanctity to verse. If there be still any life, Gernanicus, in my genius, it shall wholly serve thee. Thou canst not as a poet despise the tribute of a poet, for that has a value in thy judgment. Wherefore if a great name had not called thee to greater things, thou wert destined to be the supreme glory of the Pierians. But 'tis a greater thing to furnish themes for us than thyself to compose; yet verse thou canst not wholly leave neglected. Now thou art waging war, now to numbers thou art confining words; what is toil for others will for thee be play. Just as Apollo is no sluggard either with lyre or bow but either string is obedient to his sacred hands, so thou lackest the arts neither of the scholar nor the prince, but in thy mind the Muse and Jupiter are wedded. And since the Muse has not removed me from that spring which the hollow hoof of the Gorgonean steed created, may it profit me and aid me that I maintain the same rites as thyself, that I have set my hand to the same pursuit. This shore all too exposed to the skin-clad Coralli and the savage Getae — may I at last escape it; and if my country is closed against such a wretch, may I be set in any place less distant than this from the Ausonian city, whence I can celebrate thy fresh praises and relate thy mighty deeds with least delay.

89 That this petition, dear Suillius, may touch the heavenly powers, utter a prayer for him who is all but the father of thy wife.

IX. TO GRAECINUS

Whence he may, not whence he would, Graecinus, this greeting Naso sends you from the Euxine waters. 'tis sent, and the gods grant that it may come to you on that dawn which shall first bring to you the twice six fasces. For since without my presence you will reach the Capitol as consul, and I shall form no part of your retinue, let my missive take its master's place and bestow the homage of a friend on the appointed day. Had I been born with a better fate, did my wheels run on a true axle, that duty of greeting which my hand now performs in writing my tongue would have performed; and along with pleasant words of congratulation I should give you kisses, nor would that honour be less mine than yours. On that day, I confess, I should be so proud that scarce any house would contain my haughtiness. While the throng of holy senators surrounded you, I as a knight would be bidden to go before you, and though I should be very eager to be always near you, I should rejoice to have no place at your side. Nor should I complain, though I were bruised by the crowd; at such time'twere pleasant to feel the crush of the populace. I should behold with joy the long line of the procession and the dense throng on its long route. And that you may know how trivial things interest me — I should examine the texture of your mantling purple. I should inspect even the outline of the figures on your eurule chair — all the carved work of Numidian ivory. And after you had been escorted to the Tarpeian rock, while the consecrated victim was falling at your command, me also as I rendered him thanks in secret would the mighty god have heard who is enthroned in the middle of the temple. I would have offered incense with full heart rather than a full censer, thrice and four times rejoicing in your sovereign honour.

There should I be counted among your attending friends if only kindly fate granted me of right to be present in the city, and the pleasure which now only my mind can catch would then be wholly grasped by my eyes also.

30 Not so have the gods decided, and perhaps they are just. For how can the denial of the cause of my punishment aid me? Yet will I use my mind, which alone is not exiled, to behold your robe and fasces. This shall see you now dispensing justice to the people, and shall fancy itself present unseen at your actions; now it shall believe that you are bringing beneath the spear the revenues of the long lustrum and contracting for everything with minute good faith; now that you are uttering eloquent words before the senate, seeking what the interest of the state demands; now that you are proposing thanks on behalf of the godlike Caesars, or smiting for them the white throats of choice oxen. Would that, when you have finished your prayer for more important things, you might ask on my behalf the assuagement of an emperor's wrath! At your words may the holy fire spring up from the full altar and a bright tongue of flame offer a good omen for the prayer.

55 Meanwhile so far as I may — let me not complain of everything — even here I will have a festival for your consulship. There is a second cause for joy that yields not to the first; your brother will follow you in so great an honour. For the power which is ended for you with late December he assumes on Janus's day. Such is the affection of you twain that you will receive mutual joy, you in his office and he in yours. Thus you will be twice consul, he twice consul; a double honour will be seen in your household.

65 Though mighty the honour and Martian Rome sees no loftier power than that of the supreme consul, yet it is multiplied by the dignity of its sponsor and the gift possesses all the majesty of the giver. Therefore may it be your lot and that of Flaccus to enjoy for all time such verdicts of Augustus. But in his leisure from the more pressing cares of state add both your prayers, I beseech you, to mine, and if the breeze shall belly any sail, loosen the cables that my bark may set forth from the Stygian waters. The commander of this region, Graecinus, was till recently Flaccus, under whose charge the turbulent banks of the Hister were safe. He held the Mysian tribes to loyal peace, he cowed with his sword the Getae who trust in the bow. He recovered with swift valour captured Troesmis, dyeing the Danube with barbarian blood. Question him about the face of this land, the rigours of the Scythian climate; ask him about the terror that I suffer from the foe so close at hand — whether the slender arrows are dipped in serpent's gall, whether the human head becomes a hideous offering; whether I am a liar or the Pontus does indeed freeze with the cold and ice covers many acres of the sea. When he has told you these things, then ask in what repute I am, how I pass my hours of suffering. Here I am not hated, and indeed I do not deserve to be, and my mind has not changed along with my fate. That tranquillity which you were wont to praise, that wonted modesty still abides as of old upon my countenance. Such is my bearing in this far land, where the barbarian foe causes cruel arms to have more power than law, that 'tis impossible now these many years, Graecinus, for woman or man or child to make complaint of me. This it is which brings me the kindly attentions of the Tomitae in my wretchedness — since this land I must needs call as witness. Because they see that it is my wish they would like to have me depart; yet for their own sake are eager to have me remain. And trust not me for this: there are extant upon the wax decrees praising me and granting me immunity. And though 'tis not fitting for the unfortunate to boast, the neighbouring towns grant me the same favour. Nor is my piety unknown: a strange land sees a shrine to Caesar in my house. Beside him stand the pious son and priestess wife, deities not less important than himself now that he has become a god. To make the household group complete, both of the grandsons are there, one by the side of his grandmother, the other by that of his father. To these I offer incense and words of prayer as often as the day rises from the east. The whole land of Pontus — you are free to inquire — will say that I am not fabricating this and will bear witness to my devotion. The land of Pontus knows that on this altar I celebrate with what festivals I can the birthday of the god, nor is such service less known to whatsoever strangers the distant Propontis sends to these waters. Even your brother, who had charge of ill-omened Pontus, may perhaps have heard of it. My means are unequal to my wishes, but in such service gladly, though poor, do I expend my scant resources. Nor do I bring all these things before your eyes, far removed as I am from the city, but I am content with an unspoken loyalty, and nevertheless this shall sometime reach the ear of Caesar from whom nothing which occurs in the whole world is hidden. Thou at least knowest this, O Caesar, now one with the gods, and seest it, since now the world is placed beneath thine eyes. Thou hearest from thy place among the stars of heaven's vault the prayers of my anxious lips. Perchance even those poems may reach thee there which I have composed and sent about thee, a new divinity. And so I prophesy that thy holy will is yielding to these prayers, for not undeservedly hast thou the gracious name of "Father."

X. TO ALBINOVANUS

Now is the sixth summer wearing away which I must pass on the Cimmerian shore among the skin-clad Getae. Can you compare any flint, Albinovanus, any iron to my endurance? Drops of water hollow out a stone, a ring is worn thin by use, the hooked plough is rubbed away by the soil's pressure. So devouring time destroys all things but me: even death keeps aloof defeated by my endurance. The type of a heart suffering to excess is Ulysses, who was tossed for two lustra on the perilous sea. Yet not all his hours were hours of troubled fate, for oft came intervals of peace. Or was it a hardship to fondle for six years the fair Calypso and share the couch of a goddess of the sea? Hippotes' son harboured him and gave him the winds, that a favouring breeze might fill and drive his sails. And 'tis not a sorrow to hear maidens singing beautifully, nor was the lotos bitter to one who tasted it. Such juices, which cause forgetfulness of one's native land, I would purchase, if only they were offered, at the price of half my life. Nor could you compare the city of the Laestrygonian with the tribes which the Hister touches in its winding course. Cyclops will not surpass in cruelty Piaeches — and what mere fraction of my dread is he wont to be! Though Scylla's misshapen loins may send forth the barkings of cruel monsters, the Heniochian ships have done more harm to mariners. You cannot compare Charybdis, though she thrice drinks in, thrice spews forth the flood, with the hostile Aehaei who though they roam with larger licence in the eastern lands, yet allow not this shore to be safe. Here there are lands without a leaf, here are darts dyed in poison, here the winter makes even the sea a highway for one on foot, so that where the oar had but just now beaten a way through the waves, the traveller proceeds dryshod, despising boats.

35 Those who come from your land report that you scarce believe all this. How wretched is he who endures what is too harsh for credence! Yet believe you must, nor shall I permit you to remain in ignorance of the reason why dread winter freezes the Sarmatian sea. Very near us are the stars having the form of a wain, possessing extreme cold. Here is the source of Boreas; this coast is his home, and he takes on strength from a place nearer to him. On the other hand Notus, whose breath comes warm from the opposite pole, is far away; he comes but rarely and without energy. Moreover, here the rivers mingle in the landlocked Pontus, and the sea loses its own power because of many a stream. Here the Lycus, here the Sagaris, the Penius, the Hypanis, the Cales flow in and the Halys twisting in many an eddy, the destroying Parthenius, and the Cynapses glides along tumbling his boulders, and the Tyras inferior to no stream in swiftness, and thou, Thermodon, familiar to the bands of women, and thou, Phasis, sought by Grecian heroes, and with the Borysthenes the clear Dyrapses, and the Melanthus, quietly completing his gentle course, and the river which separates two lands, Asia and Cadmus's sister, making its way between them, and countless others of which mightiest of all the Danube refuses, O — Nile, to yield to thee. The wealth of so many waters corrupts the waves which it augments, not allowing the sea to keep its own strength. Nay, like to a still pool or a stagnant swamp its colour is scarce blue and is washed away. The fresh water floats upon the flood, being lighter than the sea-water which possesses weight of its own from the mixture of salt.

65 If somebody ask why I have told all this to Pedo, what profit there has been in speaking so precisely, I would say, "I have given pause to my cares and beguiled the time; this is the profit the present hour has brought me. I have gained release in writing this from my accustomed grief and have lost the feeling that I am among the Getae.”

71 But you, I doubt not, since you are singing in verse the praises of Theseus, are doing honour to the subject and imitating the hero whom you describe. Surely he forbids fidelity to be the companion only of happy moments. His deeds are great and he is described by you in a vein grand enough for a hero, yet there is one thing in him that we can imitate: in fidelity anybody can be a Theseus. You do not have to subdue with sword and club the foe who rendered the Isthmos scarce passable for anyone, but you must make good your love, a thing not hard for one who has the wish. What trouble is it to refrain from outraging unblemished fidelity? You, who stand unswervingly by your friend, must not think that these words have been uttered by a complaining tongue.

XI. TO GALLIO

Gallio, it will be a sin which I can scarce palliate if your name proves not to have found a place in my verse. For you too, I remember, when I was smitten by the divine spear, bathed my wounds with your tears.

And would that injured by the loss of your ravished friend you had felt no further blow to stir lament. Not so has it pleased the gods, for in their cruelty they have not thought it wrong to despoil you of your pure wife. I have but just received a letter which told me your sorrow, and I read of your loss with tears. But I should not venture in folly to console one who is wiser than I, to repeat to you the familiar words of the wise men; your grief has been for some time ended, I suppose, if not by reasoning, then by the lapse of time. While your letter has been on its way, while mine in answer is traversing so many lands and seas, a year has passed. The service of consolation belongs to a definite period while grief is still in progress and the stricken one is seeking aid. But after long time has quieted the soul's wounds, he who touches them out of season, only reopens them. Moreover — and may this omen be true when it reaches you! — you may already be happy through a new marriage.

XII. TO TUTICANUS

The bar, my friend, that prevents your finding a place in my verse, is set up by the nature of your name. For my part I should deem no other more worthy of the honour — if only my verse involves any honour. 'tis my metre's law and your unfortunate name that oppose the compliment, and there is no method by which you can enter my rhythm. For I should be ashamed to separate your name between two lines, ending the first with a part and beginning the second with another part, and I should be equally ashamed if, where a syllable is long, I should shorten it and address you as Tuticanus. Nor can you enter onto the verse as Tuticanus, so that the first long syllable is shortened; or so that the second syllable, which is now short, should be long by extending its time, If by such faults as these I should venture, to distort your name, I should be laughed at and they would say rightly that I had no taste.

17 This was my reason for putting off this service, but my love shall render it with added interest, and I will sing of you under some symbol or other; I will send you verses — you whom I knew when we were almost boys, whom through the succession of all the years of our lives I have loved no less dearly than a brother. You gave me kindly encouragement, you were my guide and comrade, whilst with youthful hand I was guiding the novel reins. Often I revised my work in deference to your criticism, often on your advice I made erasures, while you the Pierian goddesses taught to compose a Phaeacis worthy of the Maeonian pages. This constancy, this harmony of tastes begun in the green of youth, has continued unweakened to the time when our hair is white. If this should not affect you, I should believe that you had a heart encased in iron or unconquerable adamant.

But sooner would this land lack war and cold — the two things which hated Pontus holds for me — sooner would Boreas become warm and Auster chilly, and my fate less harsh, than would your heart be hard to your weary friend
Let this final blow be absent — and it is absent — from my woes.

89 Only do you — by the gods of whom He is most trustworthy under whose lead your honour has steadily increased — see to it by watching over an exile with steadfast devotion that the breeze of hope does not forsake my bark. What are my directions, you ask? May I die if it is not hard to say — if only he who is already dead can die. I find nothing to do or to wish or not wish, nor do I quite know what is to my advantage. Believe me, foresight is the first thing to abandon the wretched, and along with fortune sense and reason flee. Seek in person, I beg you, how you ought to aid me, and over what shallows you may construct a way to accomplish my wishes.

XIII. TO CARUS

To you who must be counted among my undoubted friends — to you who are in very truth what you are called, Carus,<sup>1</sup> — greetings! Whence comes this salutation, the tone of this letter and the structure of the verse can tell you, not that it is excellent, but 'tis at least not commonplace; for whatever be its merit, 'tis clear to see that it is mine. I, too, though you should tear the title from the head of your pages, could tell, I think, what work is yours. No matter how many the books among which you may be placed you will be recognized, discovered by signs I have observed. The author will be betrayed by the vigour which we know to be worthy of Hercules and suited to him of whom you yourself sing. My Muse too, detected by her own complexion, can perhaps be distinguished by her very blemishes. Ugliness prevented Thersites from escaping notice as much as beauty made Nireus conspicuous.

<sup>17</sup> Nor should you wonder if my verse prove faulty, for I am almost a Getic poet. Ah! it brings me shame! I have even written a poem in the Getic tongue, setting barbarian words to our measures: I even found favour — congratulate me! — and began to achieve among the uncivilized Getae the name of poet. You ask my theme? you would praise it: I sang of Caesar. My novel attempt was aided by the god's will. For I told how the body of father Augustus was mortal, but his spirit had passed to the abodes of heaven; that equal in virtue to his father was he who, when importuned, accepted the guidance of the empire which he had often refused; that thou, Livia, wert the Vesta of pure matrons, it is uncertain whether more worthy of thy son or thy husband; that there were two sons, strong supports of their father, who have given sure proofs of their spirit.

33 When I read all this, written not in the language of my native Muse, and the last page felt the touch of my fingers, all moved their heads and their full quivers, and there was a long murmur on the lips of the Getae. And one of them said, "Since you write this about Caesar, it were fitting that you be restored by Caesar's command." He said this, yes, but, Carus, already the sixth winter sees me banished beneath the icy pole. My verse avails me naught; my verse once wrought me harm and was the first cause of this wretched exile. But do you, by the common pledges of our sacred calling, by the name of friendship which is not cheap in your eyes — so may Germanicus lead the enemy captive in Latin chains and provide a subject for your abilities; so may the youths be well, the source of universal prayers to the gods, whose training to your great praise has been made your trust — do you to your utmost power advance that weal of mine which I shall never have, unless the place be changed.

XIV. TO TUTICANUS

These words are sent to you whose name but recently I complained in verse was not suited to my metre: here — except that I am still in some sort well — you will find nothing else that brings me pleasure. My very health is hateful to me, and 'tis my final prayer to go anywhere, be it only from this place. I care not whither I am sent from such a land, because any land will please me better than this upon which I look. Cause me to sail to the midst of the Syrtes, or Charybdis, provided I escape this present soil. Even the Styx, if such thing there be, will be well exchanged for the Hister, or what-ever the world has that is lower than the Styx. The tilled field feels less hate for the grass, the swallow for the cold, than Naso hates the region near the war-loving Getae.

15 For such words the anger of the Tomitae rises against me, the wrath of the town is stirred by my verse. Shall I then never cease to be injured by verse, shall I always suffer from my indiscreet talent? Do I then hesitate to cut my fingers that I may not write, do I still in madness trail after the weapons which have harmed me? Am I being driven once more upon the old reef and into those waters in which my bark was wrecked? But I have committed no crime, I — am not at fault, Tomitae, for you I esteem, though. I detest your land. Let anyone you will examine the memorials of my toil, my letters have uttered no complaints about you. Of the cold, of the raids to be feared from every side, of the assaults by the enemy upon the wall I complain. Against the land, not the people, I have uttered true charges; even you often criticize your own soil. How his own Ascra was constantly to be avoided the old farmer poet dared to sing, and he who wrote had been born in that land, yet Ascra grew not angry with her bard. Who loved his native land more than the wily Ulysses? Yet its roughness has been learned through his own evidence. Not the land, but the ways of Ausonia were attacked in bitter writing by the Scepsian, and Rome was indicted, yet she bore the false abuse calmly, and the author's wild tongue did him no harm. But against me a perverse interpreter rouses the popular wrath, bringing a new charge against my verse. Would I were as happy as my heart is clean! Nobody to this day lives whom my lips have wounded. And besides if I were now blacker than Illyrian tar, a loyal people would not be attacked by me. Your gentle harbouring of my fate, Tomitae, shows how kindly are men of Grecian stock. My own people, the Paeligni, my home country of Sulmo could not have been gentler to my woes. An honour which you would scarcely grant to one who was without blemish and secure, that you have recently granted to me: I am as yet the only one immune upon your shores, those only excepted who have the boon by law. My brow has been veiled with a sacred chaplet which the popular favour placed there all against my will. Wherefore dear as is to Latona the land of Delos, which alone offered her a safe place in her wandering, so dear is Tomis to me; to me exiled from my native abode it remains hospitable and loyal to the present time. Would that the gods had only made it possible for it to have the hope of calm peace and to be farther away from the icy pole!

XV. TO SEXTUS POMPEIUS

If there be still anywhere one who has not forgotten me or who asks how exiled Naso fares, let him know that I owe my life to the Caesars, my wellbeing to Sextus. After those above he in my eyes shall stand first. For though I should include all the hours of my wretched life, none is lacking in services from him. These are as many as in the orchard of a fertile farm are the seeds of the pomegranate, red beneath their slow-growing husk, as the grain of Africa, as the grape clusters of the Tmolian land, as the olives of Sicyon, or the honey-cells of Hybla. This is my confession; you may witness it; put your seal upon it, Quirites. It needs not the force of the law; I myself declare it. Set me too, an humble chattel, amongst your inherited wealth; I am a part, no matter how small, of your estate. As Trinacrian lands are yours or those once ruled over by Philip, as the home next the forum of Augustus, as your Campanian lands, an estate dear to your eyes, or whatever you hold by inheritance, Sextus, or by purchase, so am I yours, and by reason of this sad gift you cannot say that you own naught in the Pontus. Would that you could and that a more pleasant estate might be given you, that you might establish your property in a better place! Since this rests with the gods, try to soften by prayer those deities whom you worship with constant devotion. For 'tis hard to distinguish whether you are more the proof of my mistake or the relief.

27 Nor do I plead because I doubt; but oft adown the stream the oars hasten the voyage over the flowing waters. I feel shame and apprehension always to be making the same request, lest your heart grow justly weary. But what am I to do? My desire is measureless. Pardon my fault, gentle friend. Though I often wish to write in a different vein, I pass imperceptibly to the same theme; my very letters of their own accord seek the opportunity. Yet whether your influence shall win its end or whether a cruel fate bids me die beneath the freezing pole, I shall always recall your services with unforgetting heart and my land shall hear that I belong to you. It shall be heard by every land under any sky — if only my Muse passes the confines of the wild Getae — that you are the cause and saviour of my weal; that I am yours almost as if the scales and bronze had bought me.

XVI. TO AN ENEMY

Jealous man, why do you wound the verse of ravished Naso? The final day is not wont to injure genius, and fame is greater after one is ashes. I too had a name even at the time when I was counted with the living, when Marsus lived and Rabirius of the mighty voice, the Ilian Macer, and Pedo towering to the stars, and Carus, who in his Hercules had angered Juno if that hero were not already Juno's son-in-law; and he who gave to Latium a regal poem, Severus, and both Prisci together with tasteful Numa; and thou, Montanus, master of metres whether even or uneven, whose fame rests upon two kinds of verse, and he who bade Ulysses write home to Penelope as he wandered for two lustra over the savage sea, Sabinus, who in untimely death abandoned his Troesmis, the uncompleted work of many days; Largus, called by the surname of his own genius, who guided the aged Phrygian to the fields of Gaul; and Camerinus who sings of Troy after the vanquishing of Hector; and Tuscus, renowned for his Phyllis; the bard of the sail-covered sea, whose verse one might believe composed by the sea-coloured gods; and he who sang of the armies of Libya and Rome's battles; and Marius, skilled in every style of composition, and Trinacrius who wrote of the Perseid he knew so well, and Lupus, author of the homecoming of Tyndarus's daughter with the scion of Tantalus; and he who translated the Maeonian Phaeacis, and thou too, Rufus, unique player on Pindar's lyre; and Turranius's Muse wearing the tragic buskin, and thine, Melissus, with her light slippers. While Varius and Graccus furnished cruel words to tyrants, Proculus followed the tender path of Callimachus, Passer returned to Tityrus and the familiar meadows, and Grattius supplied weapons suited to the hunter; while Fontanus sang of Naiads beloved by Satyrs, while Capella prisoned words in unequal measures; and while there were others all of whose names it were long for me to mention, whose songs the people possess; while there were youths also whose work unpublished gives me no right to name them — yet amid the throng, of thee, Cotta Maximus, I should not venture to be silent, light of the Pierians and guardian of the forum, to whom a twofold noble lineage has given on thy mother's side the Cottas, on the father's the Messallas — my Muse was famed, if 'tis right to speak thus, and she was one who was read among so many of the great.

47 So, Malice, cease to tear one banished from his country; scatter not my ashes, cruel one! I have lost all; life alone remains, to give me the consciousness and the substance of sorrow. What pleasure to thee to drive the steel into limbs already dead? There is no space in me now for a new wound.

I. Penelope Vlixī

Haec tua Penelope lento tibi mittit, Ulixē nil mihi rescribas attinet: ipse veni!
Troia iacet certe, Danais invisa puellis;
vix Priamus tanti totaque Troia fuit.
o utinam tum, cum Lacedaemona classe petebat, 5 obrutus insanis esset adulter aquis!
non ego deserto iacuissem frigida lecto, nec quererer tardos ire relictā dies;
nec mihi quaerenti spatiosam fallere noctem lassaret viduas pendula tela manus. 10 Quando ego non timui graviora pericula veris?
res est solliciti plena timoris amor.
in te fingebam violentos Troas ituros;
nomine in Hectoreo pallida semper eram.
sive quis Antilochum narrabat ab hoste revictum, 15 Antilochus nostri causa timoris erat;
sive Menoetiaden falsis cecidisse sub armis, flebam successu posse carere dolos.
sanguine Tlepolemus Lyciam tepefecerat hastam; Tlepolemi leto cura novata mea est. 20
denique, quisquis erat castris iugulatus Achivis, frigidius glacie pectus amantis erat.
Sed bene consuluit casto deus aequus amori.
versa est in cineres sospite Troia viro.
Argolici rediere duces, altaria fumant; 25
ponitur ad patrios barbara praeda deos.
grata ferunt nymphae pro salvis dona maritis;
illi victa suis Troica fata canunt.
mirantur iustique senes trepidaeque puellae;
narrantis coniunx pendet ab ore viri. 30 atque aliquis posita monstrat fera proelia mensa, pingit et exiguo Pergama tota mero:

'hac ibat Simois; haec est Sigeia tellus;
hic steterat Priami regia celsa senis.
illic Aeacides, illic tendebat Ulixes; 35
hic lacer admissos terruit Hector equos.' Omnia namque tuo senior te quaerere misso rettulerat nato Nestor, at ille mihi.
rettulit et ferro Rhesumque Dolonaque caesos, utque sit hic somno proditus, ille dolo. 40 ausus es — o nimium nimiumque oblite tuorum! — Thracia nocturno tangere castra dolo totque simul mactare viros, adiutus ab uno!
at bene cautus eras et memor ante mei!
usque metu micuere sinus, dum victor amicum 45 dictus es Ismariis isse per agmen equis.
Sed mihi quid prodest vestris disiecta lacertis Ilios et, murus quod fuit, esse solum, si maneo, qualis Troia durante manebam, virque mihi dempto fine carendus abest? 50
diruta sunt aliis, uni mihi Pergama restant, incola captivo quae bove victor arat.
iam seges est, ubi Troia fuit, resecandaque falce luxuriat Phrygio sanguine pinguis humus; semisepulta virum curvis feriuntur aratris 55
ossa, ruinosas occulit herba domos.
victor abes, nec scire mihi, quae causa morandi, aut in quo lateas ferreus orbe, licet!
Quisquis ad haec vertit peregrinam litora puppim, ille mihi de te multa rogatus abit, 60 quamque tibi reddat, si te modo viderit usquam, traditur huic digitis charta notata meis.
nos Pylon, antiqui Neleia Nestoris arva, misimus; incerta est fama remissa Pylo.
misimus et Sparten; Sparte quoque nescia veri. 65
quas habitas terras, aut ubi lentus abes?
utilius starent etiamnunc moenia Phoebi — irascor votis, heu, levis ipsa meis!

scirem ubi pugnares, et tantum bella timerem, et mea cum multis iuncta querela foret. 70
quid timeam, ignoro — timeo tamen omnia demens, et patet in curas area lata meas.
quaecumque aequor habet, quaecumque pericula tellus, tam longae causas suspicor esse morae.
haec ego dum stulte metuo, quae vestra libido est, 75 esse peregrino captus amore potes.
forsitan et narres, quam sit tibi rustica coniunx, quae tantum lanas non sinat esse rudes.
fallar, et hoc crimen tenues vanescat in auras, neve, revertendi liber, abesse velis! 80 Me pater Icarius viduo discedere lecto cogit et immensas increpat usque moras.
increpet usque licet — tua sum, tua dicar oportet; Penelope coniunx semper Ulixis ero.
ille tamen pietate mea precibusque pudicis 85 frangitur et vires temperat ipse suas.
Dulichii Samiique et quos tulit alta Zacynthos, turba ruunt in me luxuriosa proci, inque tua regnant nullis prohibentibus aula;
viscera nostra, tuae dilacerantur opes. 90 quid tibi Pisandrum Polybumque Medontaque dirum Eurymachique avidas Antinoique manus atque alios referam, quos omnis turpiter absens ipse tuo partis sanguine rebus alis?
Irus egens pecorisque Melanthius actor edendi 95
ultimus accedunt in tua damna pudor.
Tres sumus inbelles numero, sine viribus uxor Laertesque senex Telemachusque puer.
ille per insidias paene est mihi nuper ademptus, dum parat invitis omnibus ire Pylon. 100 di, precor, hoc iubeant, ut euntibus ordine fati ille meos oculos conprimat, ille tuos!
hac faciunt custosque boum longaevaeque nutrix,

Tertius inmundae cura fidelis harae;
sed neque Laertes, ut qui sit inutilis armis, 105 hostibus in mediis regna tenere potest — Telemacho veniet, vivat modo, fortior aetas; nunc erat auxiliis illa tuenda patris — nec mihi sunt vires inimicos pellere tectis.
tu citius venias, portus et ara tuis! 110 est tibi sitque, precor, natus, qui mollibus annis in patrias artes erudiendus erat.
respice Laerten; ut tu sua lumina condas, extremum fati sustinet ille diem.
Certe ego, quae fueram te discedente puella, 115
protinus ut venias, facta videbor anus.

II. Phyllis Demophoonti

Hospita, Demophoon, tua te Rhodopeia Phyllis ultra promissum tempus abesse queror.
cornua cum lunae pleno semel orbe coissent, litoribus nostris ancora pacta tua est — luna quater latuit, toto quater orbe recrevit; 5 nec vehit Actaeas Sithonis unda rates.
tempora si numeres — bene quae numeramus amantes — non venit ante suam nostra querela diem.
Spes quoque lenta fuit; tarde, quae credita laedunt, credimus. invita nunc es amante nocens. 10
saepe fui mendax pro te mihi, saepe putavi alba procellosos vela referre Notos.
Thesea devovi, quia te dimittere nollet;
nec tenuit cursus forsitan ille tuos.
interdum timui, ne, dum vada tendis ad Hebri, 15
mersa foret cana naufraga puppis aqua.
saepe deos supplex, ut tu, scelerate, valeres, cum prece turicremis sum venerata sacris;
saepe, videns ventos caelo pelagoque faventes, ipsa mihi dixi: 'si valet ille, venit.' 20
denique fidus amor, quidquid properantibus obstat, finxit, et ad causas ingeniosa fui.
at tu lentus abes; nec te iurata reducunt numina, nec nostro motus amore redis.
Demophoon, ventis et verba et vela dedisti; 25 vela queror reditu, verba carere fide.
Dic mihi, quid feci, nisi non sapienter amavi?
crimine te potui demeruisse meo.
unum in me scelus est, quod te, scelerate, recepi;
sed scelus hoc meriti pondus et instar habet. 30
iura fidesque ubi nunc, commissaque dextera dextrae, quique erat in falso plurimus ore deus?

promissus socios ubi nunc Hymenaeus in annos, qui mihi coniugii sponsor et obses erat?
per mare, quod totum ventis agitur et undis, 35 per quod nempe ieras, per quod iturus eras, perque tuum mihi iurasti — nisi fictus et ille est — concita qui ventis aequora mulcet, avum, per Venerem nimiumque mihi facientia tela — altera tela arcus, altera tela faces — 40 lunonemque, toris quae praesidet alma maritis, et per taediferae mystica sacra deae.
si de tot laesis sua numina quisque deorum vindictet, in poenas non satis unus eris.
Ah, laceras etiam puppes furiosa refeci — 45 ut, qua desererer, firma carina foret! — remigiumque dedi, quod me fugiturus haberes.
heu! patior telis vulnera facta meis!
credidimus blandis, quorum tibi copia, verbis;
credidimus generi nominibusque tuis; 50 credidimus lacrimis — an et hae simulare docentur?
hae quoque habent artes, quaque iubentur, eunt?
dis quoque credidimus. quo iam tot pignora nobis?
parte satis potui qualibet inde capi.
Nec moveor, quod te iuvi portuque locoque — 55 debit haec meriti summa fuisse mei!
turpiter hospitium lecto cumulasse iugali paenitet, et lateri conseruisse latus.
quae fuit ante illam, mallem suprema fuisset nox mihi, dum potui Phyllis honesta mori. 60 speravi melius, quia me meruisse putavi;
quaecumque ex merito spes venit, aequa venit.
Fallere credentem non est operosa puellam gloria. simplicitas digna favore fuit.
sum decepta tuis et amans et femina verbis. 65 di faciant, laudis summa sit ista tuae!
inter et Aegidas, media statuaris in urbe, magnificus titulis stet pater ante suis.

cum fuerit Sciron lectus torvusque Procrustes et Sinis et tauri mixtaque forma viri 70 et domitae bello Thebae fusique bimembres et pulsata nigri regia caeca dei — hoc tua post illos titulo signetur imago:
hic est, cuius amans hospita capta dolo est.
de tanta rerum turba factisque parentis 75
sedit in ingenio Cressa relicta tuo.
quod solum excusat, solum miraris in illo;
heredem patriae, perfide, fraudis agis.
illa — nec invideo — fruitur meliore marito inque capistratis tigribus alta sedet; 80
at mea despecti fugiunt conubia Thraces, quod ferar externum praeposuisse meis.
atque aliquis 'iam nunc doctas eat,' inquit, 'Athenas;
armiferam Thracen qui regat, alter erit.
exitus acta probat.' careat successibus, opto, 85
quisquis ab eventu facta notanda putat!
at si nostra tuo spumescant aequora remo, iam mihi, iam dicar consuluisse meis — sed neque consului, nec te mea regia tanget fessaque Bistonia membra lavabis aqua! 90 Illa meis oculis species abeuntis inhaeret, cum premeret portus classis itura meos.
ausus es amplecti colloque infusus amantis oscula per longas iungere pressa moras cumque tuis lacrimis lacrimas confundere nostras, 95 quodque foret velis aura secunda, queri et mihi discedens suprema dicere voce:
'Phylli, fac expectes Demophoonta tuum!' Expectem, qui me numquam visurus abisti?
expectem pelago vela negata meo? 100 et tamen expecto — redeas modo serus amanti, ut tua sit solo tempore lapsa fides!
Quid precor infelix? te iam tenet altera coniunx forsitan et, nobis qui male favit, amor; iamque tibi excidimus, nullam, puto, Phyllida nosti. 105 ei mihi! si, quae sim Phyllis et unde, rogas — quae tibi, Demophoon, longis erroribus acto Threicios portus hospitiumque dedi, cuius opes auxere meae, cui dives egenti munera multa dedi, multa datura fui; 110 quae tibi subieci latissima regna Lycurgi, nomine femineo vix satis apta regi,

qua patet umbrosum Rhodope glacialis ad Haemum, et sacer admissas exigit Hebrus aquas, cui mea virginitas avibus libata sinistris 115 castaque fallaci zona recincta manu!
pronuba Tisiphone thalamis ululavit in illis, et cecinit maestum devia carmen avis;
adfuit Allecto brevibus torquata colubris, suntque sepulcrali lumina mota face! 120 Maesta tamen scopulos fruticosaque litora calco quaeque patent oculis litora lata meis.
sive die laxatur humus, seu frigida lucent sidera, prospicio, quis freta ventus agat; et quaecumque procul venientia lintea vidi, 125
protinus illa meos auguror esse deos.
in freta procurro, vix me retinentibus undis, mobile qua primas porrigit aequor aquas.
quo magis accedunt, minus et minus utilis adsto;
linquor et ancillis excipienda cado. 130 Est sinus, adductos modice falcatus in arcus; ultima praerupta cornua mole rigent.
hinc mihi suppositas inmittere corpus in undas mens fuit; et, quoniam fallere pergis, erit.
ad tua me fluctus proiectam litora portent, 135 occurramque oculis intumulata tuis!
duritia ferrum ut superes adamantaque teque,
'non tibi sic,' dices, 'Phylli, sequendus eram!'
saepe venenorum sitis est mihi; saepe cruenta traiectam gladio morte perire iuvat. 140 colla quoque, infidis quia se nectenda lacertis praebuerunt, laqueis implicuisse iuvat.

stat nece matura tenerum pensare pudorem.
in necis electu parva futura mora est.
Inscribere meo causa invidiosa sepulcro. 145 aut hoc aut simili carmine notus eris:
phyllida demophon leto dedit hospes amantem;
ille necis causam praebuit, ipsa manum.

III. Briseis Achilli

Quam legis, a rapta Briseide littera venit, vix bene barbarica Graeca notata manu.
quascumque adspicies, lacrimae fecere lituras;
sed tamen et lacrimae pondera vocis habent.
Si mihi pauca queri de te dominoque viroque 5 fas est, de domino pauca viroque querar.
non, ego poscenti quod sum cito tradita regi, culpa tua est — quamvis haec quoque culpa tua est;
nam simul Eurybates me Talhybiusque vocarunt, Eurybati data sum Talhybioque comes. 10 alter in alterius iactantes lumina vultum quaerebant taciti, noster ubi esset amor.
differri potui; poenae mora grata fuisset.
ei mihi! discedens oscula nulla dedi;
at lacrimas sine fine dedi rupique capillos — 15
infelix iterum sum mihi visa capi!
Saepe ego decepto volui custode reverti, sed, me qui timidam prenderet, hostis erat.
si progressa forem, caperer ne, nocte, timebam, quamlibet ad Priami munus itura nurum. 20 Sed data sim, quia danda fui — tot noctibus absum nec repetor; cessas, iraque lenta tua est.
ipse Menoetiades tum, cum tradebar, in aurem
'quid fles? hic parvo tempore,' dixit, 'eris.'
Nec repetisse parum; pugnas ne reddar, Achille! 25
i nunc et cupidi nomen amantis habe!
venerunt ad te Telamone et Amyntore nati — ille gradu propior sanguinis, ille comes — Laertaque satus, per quos comitata redirem (auxerunt blandas grandia dona preces) 30 viginti fulvos operoso ex aere lebetas, et tripodas septem pondere et arte pares;

addita sunt illis auri bis quinque talenta, bis sex adsueti vincere semper equi, quodque supervacuum est, forma praestante puellae 35 Lesbides, eversa corpora capta domo, cumque tot his — sed non opus est tibi coniuge — coniunx ex Agamemnoniis una puella tribus.
si tibi ab Atride pretio redimenda fuissem, quae dare debueras, accipere illa negas! 40
qua merui culpa fieri tibi vilis, Achille?
quo levis a nobis tam cito fugit amor?
An miseros tristis fortuna tenaciter urget, nec venit inceptis mollior hora malis?
diruta Marte tuo Lyrnesia moenia vidi — 45 et fueram patriae pars ego magna meae;
vidi consortes pariter generisque necisque tres cecidisse, quibus, quae mihi, mater erat;
vidi, quantus erat, fusum tellure cruenta pectora iactantem sanguinolenta virum. 50 tot tamen amissis te compensavimus unum;
tu dominus, tu vir, tu mihi frater eras.
tu mihi, iuratus per numina matris aquosae, utile dicebas ipse fuisse capi — scilicet ut, quamvis veniam dotata, repellas 55 et mecum fugias quae tibi dantur opes!
quin etiam fama est, cum crastina fulserit Eos, te dare nubiferis linthea velle Notis.
Quod scelus ut pavidas miserae mihi contigit aures, sanguinis atque animi pectus inane fuit. 60
ibis et — o miseram! — cui me, violente, relinquis?
quis mihi desertae mite levamen erit?
devorer ante, precor, subito telluris hiatu aut rutilo missi fulminis igne cremer, quam sine me Pthiis canescant aequora remis, 65 et videam puppes ire relictas tuas!
si tibi iam reditusque placent patrique Penates,

non ego sum classi sarcina magna tuae.
victorem captiva sequar, non nupta maritum;
est mihi, quae lanas molliat, apta manus. 70 inter Achaeiadas longe pulcherrima matres in thalamos coniunx ibit eatque tuos, digna nurus socero, Iovis Aeginaeque nepote, cuique senex Nereus prosocer esse velit.
nos humiles famulaeque tuae data pensa trahemus, 75 et minuent plenas stamina nostra colos.
exagitet ne me tantum tua, deprecor, uxor —
quae mihi nescio quo non erit aequa modo — neve meos coram scindi patiare capillos et leviter dicas: 'haec quoque nostra fuit.' 80 vel patiare licet, dum ne contempta relinquitur — hic mihi vae! miserae concutit ossa metus.
Quid tamen expectas? Agamemnona paenitet irae, et iacet ante tuos Graecia maesta pedes.
vince animos iramque tuam, qui cetera vincis! 85
quid lacerat Danaas impiger Hector opes? arma cape, Aeacide, sed me tamen ante recepta, et preme turbatos Marte favente viros!
propter me mota est, propter me desinat ira, simque ego tristitiae causa modusque tuae. 90 nec tibi turpe puta precibus succumbere nostris;
coniugis Oenides versus in arma prece est.
res audita mihi, nota est tibi. fratribus orba devovit nati spemque caputque parens.
bellum erat; ille ferox positus secessit ab armis 95 et patriae rigida mente negavit opem.
sola virum coniunx flexit. felicior illa!
at mea pro nullo pondere verba cadunt.
nec tamen indignor nec me pro coniuge gessi saepius in domini serva vocata torum. 100 me quaedam, memini, dominam captiva vocabat.
'servitio,' dixi, 'nominis addis onus.'
Per tamen ossa viri subito male tecta sepulcro, semper iudiciis ossa verenda meis;

perque trium fortes animas, mea numina, fratrum, 105 qui bene pro patria cum patriaque iacent; perque tuum nostrumque caput, quae iunximus una, perque tuos enses, cognita tela meis — nulla Mycenaeum sociasse cubilia mecum iuro; fallentem deseruisse velis! 110 si tibi nunc dicam, fortissime: 'tu quoque iura nulla tibi sine me gaudia capta!' neges.
at Danaei maerere putant — tibi plectra moventur, te tenet in tepido mollis amica sinu!
et quisquam quaerit, quare pugnare recuses? 115
pugna nocet, citharae voxque Venusque iuvant.
tutius est iacuisse toro, tenuisse puellam, Threiciam digitis increpuisse lyram, quam manibus clipeos et acutae cuspidis hastam, et galeam pressa sustinuisse coma. 120 Sed tibi pro tutis insignia facta placebant, partaque bellando gloria dulcis erat.
an tantum dum me caperes, fera bella probabas,
cumque mea patria laus tua victa iacet?
di melius! validoque, precor, vibrata lacerto 125
transeat Hectoreum Pelias hasta latus!
mittite me, Danaei! dominum legata rogabo multaque mandatis oscula mixta feram.
plus ego quam Phoenix, plus quam facundus Ulixes, plus ego quam Teucris, credite, frater agam. 130 est aliquid collum solitis tetigisse lacertis, praesentisque oculos admonuisse sui.
sis licet inmitis matrisque ferocior undis, ut taceam, lacrimis conminuere meis.
Nunc quoque — sic omnes Peleus pater inpleat annos, 135 sic eat auspiciis Pyrrhus ad arma tuis! — respice sollicitam Briseida, fortis Achille, nec miseram lenta ferreus ure mora!
aut, si versus amor tuus est in taedia nostri, quam sine te cogis vivere, coge mori! 140

utque facis, coges. abiit corpusque colorque;
sustinet hoc animae spes tamen una tui.
qua si destituor, repetam fratresque virumque — nec tibi magnificum femina iussa mori.
cur autem iubeas? stricto pete corpora ferro; 145
est mihi qui fosso pectore sanguis eat.
me petat ille tuus, qui, si dea passa fuisset,
ensis in Atridae pectus iturus erat!
A, potius serves nostram, tua munera, vitam!
quod dederas hosti victor, amica rogo. 150 perdere quos melius possis, Neptunia praebent Pergama; materiam caedis ab hoste pete.
me modo, sive paras inpellere remige classem,
sive manes, domini iure venire iube!

IV. Phaedra Hippolyto

Quam nisi tu dederis, caritura est ipsa, salutem mittit Amazonio Cressa puella viro.
perlege, quodcumque est — quid epistula lecta nocebit?
te quoque in hac aliquid quod iuuet esse potest;
his arcana notis terra pelagoque feruntur. 5 inspicit acceptas hostis ab hoste notas.
Ter tecum conata loqui ter inutilis haesit lingua, ter in primo restitit ore sonus.
qua licet et sequitur, pudor est miscendus amanti;
dicere quae puduit, scribere iussit amor. 10
quidquid Amor iussit, non est contemnere tutum;
regnat et in dominos ius habet ille deos.
ille mihi primo dubitanti scribere dixit:
'scribe! dabit victas ferreus ille manus.'
adsit et, ut nostras avido fovet igne medullas, 15 figat sic animos in mea vota tuos!
Non ego nequitia socialia foedera rumpam;
fama — velim quaeras — crimine nostra vacat.
venit amor gravior, quo serius — urimur intus;
urimur, et caecum pectora vulnus habent. 20
scilicet ut teneros laedunt iuga prima iuencos, frenaque vix patitur de grege captus equus, sic male vixque subit primos rude pectus amores, sarcinaque haec animo non sedet apta meo.
ars fit, ubi a teneris crimen condiscitur annis; 25
cui venit exacto tempore, peius amat.
tu nova servatae capies libamina famae, et pariter nostrum fiet uterque nocens.
est aliquid, plenis pomaria carpere ramis, et tenui primam delegere ungue rosam. 30
si tamen ille prior, quo me sine crimine gessi, candor ab insolita labe notandus erat,

at bene successit, digno quod adurimur igni;
peius adulterio turpis adulter obest.
si mihi concedat Iuno fratremque virumque, 35 Hippolytum videor praepositura Iovi!
Iam quoque — vix credes — ignotas mittor in artes;
est mihi per saevas impetus ire feras.
iam mihi prima dea est arcu praesignis adunco Delia; iudicium subsequor ipsa tuum. 40 in nemus ire libet pressisque in retia cervis hortari celeris per iuga summa canes, aut tremulum excusso iaculum vibrare lacerto, aut in graminea ponere corpus humo.
saepe iuvat versare leves in pulvere currus 45 torquentem frenis ora fugacis equi;
nunc feror, ut Bacchi furiis Eleleides actae, quaeque sub Idaeo tympana colle movent, aut quas semideae Dryades Faunisque bicornes numine contactas attonuere suo. 50 namque mihi referunt, cum se furor ille remisit, omnia; me tacitam conscius urit amor.
Forsitan hunc generis fato reddamus amorem, et Venus ex tota gente tributa petat.
Iuppiter Europen — prima est ea gentis origo — 55 dilexit, tauro dissimulante deum.
Pasiphae mater, decepto subdita tauro,
enixa est utero crimen onusque suo.
perfidus Aegides, ducentia fila secutus, curva meae fugit tecta sororis ope. 60
en, ego nunc, ne forte parum Minoia credar, in socias leges ultima gentis eo!
hoc quoque fatale est: placuit domus una duabus;
me tua forma capit, capta parente soror.
Thesides Theseusque duas rapuere sorores — 65
ponite de nostra bina tropaea domo!
Tempore quo nobis inita est Cerealis Eleusin,

Gnosia me vellem detinuisset humus!
tunc mihi praecipue (nec non tamen ante placebas) acer in extremis ossibus haesit amor. 70 candida vestis erat, praecincti flore capilli, flava verecundus tinxerat ora rubor, quemque vocant aliae vultum rigidumque trucemque, pro rigido Phaedra iudice fortis erat.
sint procul a nobis iuvenes ut femina compti! — 75 fine coli modico forma virilis amat.
te tuus iste rigor positique sine arte capilli et levis egregio pulvis in ore decet.
sive ferocis equi luctantia colla recurvas, exiguo flexos miror in orbe pedes; 80 seu lentum valido torques hastile lacerto, ora ferox in se versa lacertus habet, sive tenes lato venabula cornea ferro.
denique nostra iuvat lumina, quidquid agis.
Tu modo duritiam silvis depone iugosis; 85
non sum militia digna perire tua.
quid iuvat incinctae studia exercere Dianae, et Veneri numeros eripuisse suos?
quod caret alterna requie, durable non est;
haec reparat vires fessaque membra novat. 90 arcus — et arma tuae tibi sunt imitanda Dianae — si numquam cesses tendere, mollis erit.
clarus erat silvis Cephalus, multaeque per herbas concliderant illo percutiente ferae; nec tamen Aurorae male se praebebat amandum. 95
ibat ad hunc sapiens a sene diva viro.
saepe sub ilicibus Venerem Cinyraque creatum sustinuit positos quaelibet herba duos.
arsit et Oenides in Maenalia Atalanta; illa ferae spoliū pignus amoris habet. 100 nos quoque quam primum turba numeremur in ista!
si Venerem tollas, rustica silva tua est.
ipsa comes veniam, nec me latebrosa movebunt saxa neque obliquo dente timendus aper.

Aequora bina suis obpugnant fluctibus isthmon, 105 et tenuis tellus audit utrumque mare.
hic tecum Troezena colam, Pittheia regna;
iam nunc est patria carior illa mea.
tempore abest aberitque diu Neptunius heros;
illum Pirithoi detinet ora sui. 110
praeosuit Theseus — nisi si manifesta negamus — Pirithoum Phaedrae Pirithoumque tibi.
sola nec haec ad nos iniuria venit ab illo;
in magnis laesi rebus uterque sumus.
ossa mei fratris clava perfracta trinodi 115
sparsit humi; soror est praeda relicta feris.
prima securigeras inter virtute puellas te peperit, nati digna vigore parens;
si quaeras, ubi sit — Theseus latus ense peregit, nec tanto mater pignore tuta fuit. 120 at ne nupta quidem taedaque accepta iugali — cur, nisi ne caperes regna paterna nothus?
addidit et fratres ex me tibi, quos tamen omnis non ego tollendi causa, sed ille fuit.
o utinam nocitura tibi, pulcherrime rerum, 125
in medio nisu viscera rupta forent!
i nunc, sic meriti lectum reverere parentis — quem fugit et factis abdicat ipse suis!
Nec, quia privigno videar coitura noverca, terruerint animos nomina vana tuos. 130 ista vetus pietas, aevo moritura futuro, rustica Saturno regna tenente fuit.
Iuppiter esse pium statuit, quodcumque iuvaret, et fas omne facit fratre marita soror.
illa coit firma generis iunctura catena, 135
inposuit nodos cui Venus ipsa suos.
nec labor est celare, licet peccemus, amorem.
cognato poterit nomine culpa tegi.
viderit amplexos aliquis, laudabimur ambo;

dicar privigno fida noverca meo. 140 non tibi per tenebras duri reseranda mariti ianua, non custos decipiendus erit;
ut tenuit domus una duos, domus una tenebit;
oscula aperta dabas, oscula aperta dabis;
tutus eris mecum laudemque merebere culpa, 145 tu licet in lecto conspiciare meo.
tolle moras tantum properataque foedera iunge — qui mihi nunc saevit, sic tibi parcat Amor!
non ego dedignor supplex humilisque precari.
heu! ubi nunc fastus altaque verba iacent? 150 et pugnare diu nec me submittere culpae certa fui — certi siquid haberet amor; victa precor genibusque tuis regalia tendo bracchia! quid deceat, non videt ullus amans.
depudui, profugusque pudor sua signa reliquit. 155
Da veniam fassae duraque corda doma!
quod mihi sit genitor, qui possidet aequora, Minos, quod veniant proavi fulmina torta manu, quod sit avus radiis frontem vallatus acutis, purpureo tepidum qui movet axe diem — 160 nobilitas sub amore iacet! miserere priorum et, mihi si non vis parcere, parce meis!
est mihi dotalis tellus Iovis insula, Crete — serviat Hippolyto regia tota meo!
Flecte, ferox, animos! potuit corrumpere taurum 165 mater; eris tauro saevior ipse truci?
per Venerem, parcas, oro, quae plurima mecum est!
sic numquam, quae te spernere possit, ames;
sic tibi secretis agilis dea saltibus adsit, silvaeque perdendas praebeat alta feras; 170 sic faveant Satyri montanaque numina Panes, et cadat adversa cuspide fossus aper;
sic tibi dent Nymphae, quamvis odisse puellas diceris, arentem quae levet unda sitim!

Addimus his precibus lacrimas quoque; verba precantis 175
qui legis, et lacrimas finge videre meas!

V. Oenone Paridi

Nympha suo Paridi, quamvis suus esse recuset, mittit ab Idaeis verba legenda iugis.

Perlegis? an coniunx prohibet nova? perlege! non est ista Mycenaea littera facta manu.

Pedasis Oenone, Phrygiis celeberrima silvis, laesa queror de te, si sinis, ipse meo.

Quis deus opposuit nostris sua numina votis?
ne tua permaneam, quod mihi crimen obest?
leniter, e merito quicquid patiare, ferendum est;
quae venit indignae poena dolenda venit.

Nondum tantus eras, cum te contenta marito edita de magno flumine nympha fui.

qui nunc Priamides (absit reverentia vero) servus eras; servo nubere nympha tuli!

saepe greges inter requievimus arbore tecti mixtaque cum foliis praebuit herba torum.

saepe super stramen fenoque iacentibus alto defensa est humili cana pruina casa.

quis tibi monstrabat saltus venatibus aptos et tegetet catulos qua fera rupe suos?

retia saepe comes maculis distincta tetendi, saepe citos egi per iuga longa canes.

incisae servant a te mea nomina fagi et legor Oenone falce notata tua;

et quantum trunci, tantum mea nomina crescunt;
crescite et in titulos surgite recta meos!

[Populus est, memini, fluviali consita rivo, est in qua nostri littera scripta memor.]
popule, vive, precor, quae consita margine ripae hoc in rugoso cortice carmen habes: “cum Paris Oenone poterit spirare relictam, ad fontem Xanthi versa recurret aqua.”
Xanthe, retro propera versaeque recurrere lymphae!
sustinet Oenonen deseruisse Paris.
Illa dies fatum miserae mihi dixit, ab illa pessima mutati coepit amoris hiems, qua Venus et Iuno sumptisque decentior armis venit in arbitrium nuda Minerva tuum.
attoniti micuere sinus gelidusque cucurrit, ut mihi narrasti, dura per ossa tremor.
consului (neque enim modice terrebar) anusque longaevosque senes: constitit esse nefas.
Caesa abies sectaeque trabes et classe parata caerula ceratas accipit unda rates.
flesti discedens. hoc saltim parce negare;
praeterito magis est iste pudendus amor.
et flesti et nostros vidisti flentis ocellos;
miscuimus lacrimas maestus uterque suas.
non sic appositis vincitur vitibus ulmus, ut tua sunt collo bracchia nexa meo.
ah quotiens, cum te vento quererere teneri, riserunt comites — ille secundus erat.
oscula dimissae quotiens repetita dedisti!
quam vix sustinuit dicere lingua “vale!”
Aura levis rigido pendentia lintea malo suscitat et remis eruta canet aqua.
prosequor infelix oculis abeuntia vela, qua licet, et lacrimis umet arena meis, utque celer venias, virides Nereidas oro — scilicet ut venias in mea damna celer.
votis ergo meis, alii rediture, redisti?
ei mihi, pro dira paelice blanda fui!

Adspicit immensum moles nativa profundum (mons fuit), aequoreis illa resistit aquis;
hinc ego vela tuae cognovi prima carinae et mihi per fluctus impetus ire fuit.
dum moror, in summa fulsit mihi purpura prora.
    pertimui: cultus non erat ille tuus.
fit propior terrasque cita ratis attigit aura:
    femineas vidi corde tremente genas.
non satis id fuerat — quid enim furiosa morabar? — haerebat gremio turpis amica tuo!
tunc vero rupique sinus et pectora planxi et secui madidas ungue rigente genas implevique sacram querulis ululatibus Iden illuc has lacrimas in mea saxa tuli.
sic Helene doleat defectaque coniuge ploret, quaeque prior nobis intulit, ipsa ferat!
Nunc tibi conveniunt, quae te per aperta sequantur aequora legitimos destituantque viros.
at cum pauper eras armentaque pastor agebas, nulla nisi Oenone pauperis uxor erat.
non ego miror opes, nec me tua regia tangit nec de tot Priami dicar ut una nurus, non tamen ut Priamus nymphae socer esse recuset aut Hecubae fuerim dissimulanda nurus.
dignaque sum et cupio fieri matrona potentis;
    sunt mihi quas possint sceptrum decere manus.
nec me, faginea quod tecum fronde iacebam, despice; purpureo sum magis apta toro.
Denique tutus amor meus est; ibi nulla parantur bella nec ultrices advehit unda rates.
Tyndaris infestis fugitiva reposcitur armis;
    hac venit in thalamos dote superba tuos.
quae si sit Danais reddenda, vel Hectora fratrem, vel cum Deiphobo Polydamanta roga;
quid gravis Antenor, Priamus quid suadeat ipse, consule, quis aetas longa magistra fuit.

turpe rudimentum, patriae praeponere raptam.
causa pudenda tua est; iusta vir arma movet.
Nec tibi, si sapias, fidam promitte Lacaenam, quae sit in amplexus tam cito versa tuos.
ut minor Atrides temerati foedera lecti clamat et externo laesus amore dolet, tu quoque clamabis. nulla reparabilis arte laesa pudicitia est; deperit illa semel.
ardet amore tui; sic et Menelaon amavit;
nunc iacet in viduo credulus ille toro.
felix Andromache certo bene nupta marito;
uxor ad exemplum fratris habenda fui.
tu levior foliis, tum cum sine pondere suci mobilibus ventis arida facta volant.
et minus est in te quam summa pondus arista,
quae levis adsiduis solibus usta riget.
Hoc tua (nam recolo) quondam germana canebat sic mihi diffusis vaticinata comis: “quid facis, Oenone? quid arenae semina mandas?
non profecturis litora bubus aras!
Graia iuvenca venit, quae te patriamque domumque perdat! io prohibe! Graia iuvenca venit!
dum licet, obscenam ponto demergite puppim!
heu! quantum Phrygii sanguinis illa vehit!”
dixerat; in cursu famulae rapuere furentem, at mihi flavescentes diriguere comae.
ah, nimium miserae vates mihi vera fuisti;
possidet en saltus Graia iuvenca meos!
sit facie quamvis insignis, adultera certe est;
deseruit socios hospite capta deos.
illam de patria Theseus, nisi nomine fallor, nescioquis Theseus abstulit ante sua.
a iuvene, et cupido, credatur reddita virgo?
unde hoc compererim tam bene quaeris? amo!
vim licet appelles et culpam nomine veles;
quae totiens rapta est, praebuit ipsa rapi.

at manet Oenone fallenti casta marito — et poteris falli legibus ipse tuis:
Me Satyri celeres (silvis ego tecta latebam) quaesierunt rapido, turba proterva, pede cornigerumque caput pinu praecinctus acuta Faunus, in immensis qua tumet Ida iugis.
me fide conspicuus Troiae munitor amavit;
ille meae spoliū virginitatis habet.
id quoque luctando; rupi tamen ungue capillos oraque sunt digitis aspera facta meis.
nec pretium stupri gemmas aurumque poposci;
turpiter ingenuum munera corpus emunt.
Ipse ratus dignam medicas mihi tradidit artes admisitque meas ad sua dona manus.
quaecumque herba potens ad opem radixque medendi utilis in toto nascitur orbe, mea est.
me miseram, quod amor non est medicabilis herbis!
deficior prudens artis ab arte mea.
ipse repertor opis vaccas pavisse Pheraeas fertur et e nostro saucius igne fuit.
Quod nec graminibus tellus fecunda creandis nec deus, auxilium tu mihi ferre potes.
et potes et merui. dignae miserere puellae!
non ego cum Danais arma cruenta fero.
sed tua sum tecumque fui puerilibus annis et tua, quod superest temporis, esse precor.

VI. Hypsipyle Iasoni

Lemnias Hypsipyle Bacchi genus Aesone nato dicit: et in verbis pars quota mentis erat?

Litora Thessaliae reduci tetigisse carina diceris auratae vellere dives ovis.
gratulor incolumi quantum sinis; hoc tamen ipso debueram scripto certior esse tuo.
nam ne pacta tibi praeter mea regna redires, cum cuperes, ventos non habuisse potes:
quamlibet adverso signatur epistula vento, Hypsipyle missa digna salute fui!
Cur mihi fama prior quam littera nuntia venit:
isse sacros Martis sub iuga panda boves, seminibus iactis segetes adolesse virorum inque necem dextra non eguisse tua, pervigilem spoliū pecudis servasse draconem, rapta tamen forti vellera fulva manu?
hoc ego si possem timide credentibus “ista ipse mihi scripsit” dicere, quanta forem!
Quid queror officium lenti cessasse mariti?
obsequium, maneo si tua, grande tuli.
barbara narratur venisse venefica tecum in mihi promissi parte recepta tori.
credula res amor est. utinam temeraria dicar criminibus falsis insimulasse virum!
nuper ab Haemoniis hospes mihi Thessalus oris venerat et tactum vix bene limen erat, “Aesonides,” dixi, “quid agit meus?” ille pudore haesit in opposita lumina fixus humo.
protinus exilui tunicisque a pectore ruptis

“vivit? an,” exclamo, “me quoque fata vocant?”
“vivit,” ait timidus; timidum iurare coegi.
vix mihi teste deo credita vita tua est.
Utque animus rediit, tua facta requirere coepi:
narrat aeripedes Martis arasse boves, vipereos dentes in humum pro semine iactos et subito natos arma tulisse viros, terrigenas populos civili Marte peremptos inplesse aetatis fata diurna suae.
devictus serpens. iterum, si vivat Iason, quaerimus; alternant spesque timorque fidem.
Singula dum narrat, studio cursuque loquendi detegit ingenio vulnera nostra suo.
heus, ubi pacta fides? ubi conubialia iura faxque sub arsuos dignior ire rogos?
non ego sum furto tibi cognita. pronuba Iuno affuit et sertis tempora vinctus Hymen.
at mihi nec Iuno nec Hymen, sed tristis Erinyes praetulit infaustas sanguinolenta faces.
Quid mihi cum Minyis? quid cum Tritonide pinu?
quid tibi cum patria, navita Tiphys, mea?
non erat hic aries villo spectabilis aureo, nec senis Aetiae regia Lemnos erat.
certa fui primo — sed me mala fata trahebant — hospita feminea pellere castra manu Lemniadesque viros — nimium quoque! — vincere norunt:
milite tam forti vita tuenda fuit!
Urbe virum vidi tectoque animoque recepi.
hic tibi bisque aestas bisque cucurrit hiems.
tertia messis erat, cum tu dare vela coactus inplesti lacrimis talia verba tuis: “abstrahor, Hypsipyle. sed dent modo fata recursus;
vir tuus hinc abeo, vir tibi semper ero.
quod tamen e nobis gravida celatur in alvo, vivat et eiusdem simus uterque parens!” Hactenus. et lacrimis in falsa cadentibus ora cetera te memini non potuisse loqui.

Ultimus e sociis sacram conscendis in Argon;
illa volat, ventus concava vela tenet.
caerulea propulsae subducitur unda carinae:
terra tibi, nobis adspiciuntur aquae.
in latus omne patens turris circumspicit undas;
huc feror et lacrimis osque sinusque madent.
per lacrimas specto cupidaeque faventia menti longius adsueto lumina nostra vident.
adde preces castas inmixtaque vota timori nunc quoque te salvo persolvenda mihi!
Vota ego persolvam? votis Medea fruatur!
cor dolet atque ira mixtus abundat amor.
dona feram templis, vivum quod Iasona perdo?
hostia pro damnis concidat icta meis?
Non equidem securus fui semperque verebar, ne pater Argolica sumeret urbe nurrum.
Argolidas timui — nocuit mihi barbara paellex!
non expectato vulnus ab hoste tuli.
nec facie meritisque placet, sed carmina novit diraque cantata pabula falce metit.
illa reluctantem cursu deducere Lunam nititur et tenebris abdere Solis equos;
illa refrenat aquas obliquaque flumina sistit, illa loco silvas vivaque saxa movet.
per tumulos errat passis discincta capillis certaque de tepidis colligit ossa rogis.
devovet absentis simulacraque cerea figit et miserum tenues in iecur urget acus.
et quae nescierim melius: male quaeritur herbis moribus et forma conciliandus amor.
Hanc potes amplecti thalamoque relictus in uno inpavidus somno nocte silente frui?
scilicet ut tauros, ita te iuga ferre coegit:
quaque feros angues, te quoque mulcet ope.
adde quod adscribi factis procerumque tuisque se favet et titulo coniugis uxor obest.

atque aliquis Peliae de partibus acta venenis inputat et populum qui sibi credat habet:
non haec Aesonides, sed Phasias Aetine aurea Phrixiae terga revellit ovis.
non probat Alcimedea mater tua — consule matrem! — non pater, a gelido cui venit axe nurus.
illa sibi a Tanai Scythiaeque paludibus udae quaerat et a patria Phasidis usque virum.
Mobilis Aesonide vernaque incertior aura, cur tua polliciti pondere verba carent?
vir meus hinc ieras, vir non meus inde redisti — sim reducis coniunx, sicut euntis eram.
si te nobilitas generosaque nomina tangunt:
en ego Minoo nata Thoante feror.
Bacchus avus: Bacchi coniunx redimita corona praeradiat stellis signa minora suis.
dos tibi Lemnos erit, terra ingeniosa colenti;
me quoque dotalis inter habere potes.
Nunc etiam peperit. gratare ambobus, Iason — dulce mihi gravidae fecerat auctor onus.
felix in numero quoque sum prolemque gemellam pignora Lucina bina favente dedi.
si quaeris, cui sint similes, cognosceris illis:
fallere non norunt, cetera patris habent;
legatos quos paene dedi pro matre ferendos;
sed tenuit coeptas saeva noverca vias.
Medeam timui — plus est Medea noverca — Medeae faciunt ad scelus omne manus.
Spargere quae fratris potuit lacerata per agros corpora, pignoribus parceret illa meis?
hanc, tamen o demens Colchisque ablate venenis, diceris Hypsipyles praeposuisse toro?
turpiter illa virum cognovit adultera virgo,
me tibi teque mihi taeda pudica dedit.
prodidit illa patrem — rapui de caede Thoanta.

deseruit Colchos — me mea Lemnos habet.
Quid refert, scelerata piam si vincit? et ipso crimine dotata est emeruitque virum.
Lemniadum facinus culpo, non miror, Iason!
    quamlibet ignavis ipse dat arma dolor.
dic age, si ventis ut oportuit actus iniquis intrasses portus tuque comesque meos obviaque exissem fetu comitante gemello — hiscere nempe tibi terra roganda fuit! — quo vultu natos, quo me scelerate videres?
    perfidiae pretio qua nece dignus eras?
ipse quidem per me tutus sospesque fuisses,
    non quia tu dignus, sed quia mitis ego.
paelicis ipsa meos implessem sanguine vultus, quosque veneficiis abstulit illa suis.
Medeae Medea forem. quod si quid ab alto iustus adest votis Iuppiter ipse meis, quod gemit Hypsipyle, lecti quoque subnuba nostri maereat et leges sentiat ipsa suas utque ego destituor coniunx materque duorum, a totidem natis orba sit aque viro!
nec male parta diu teneat peiusque relinquat:
    exulet et toto quaerat in orbe fugam.
quam fratri germana fuit miseroque parenti filia tam natis, tam sit acerba viro!
cum mare, cum terras consumpserit, aera temptet;
    erret inops, exspes, caede cruenta sua.
haec ego, coniugio fraudata Thoantias, oro.
    vivite devoto nuptaque virque toro!

VII. Dido Aeneae

Accipe, Dardanide, moriturae carmen Elissae;
quae legis a nobis ultima verba legi.

Sic ubi fata vocant, udis abiectus in herbis ad vada Maeandri concinit albus olor.
Nec quia te nostra sperem prece posse moveri, alloquor: adverso movimus ista deo!
sed meriti famam corpusque animumque pudicum cum male perdidderim, perdere verba leve est.

Certus es ire tamen miseramque relinquere Didon atque idem venti vela fidemque ferent.
certus es, Aenea, cum foedere solvere naves quaeque ubi sint nescis, Itala regna sequi.
nec nova Karthago, nec te crescentia tangunt moenia nec sceptro tradita summa tuo.
facta fugis, facienda petis; quaerenda per orbem altera, quaesita est altera terra tibi.
ut terram invenias, quis eam tibi tradet habendam?
quis sua non notis arva tenenda dabit?
alter habendus amor tibi restat et altera Dido quamque iterum fallas, altera danda fides.
quando erit, ut condas instar Karthaginis urbem et videas populos altus ab arce tuos?
omnia ut eveniant, nec di tua vota morentur,
unde tibi, quae te sic amet, uxor erit?
Uror ut inducto ceratae sulphure taedae, ut pia fumosis addita tura rogis.
Aeneas oculis vigilantis semper inhaeret;

Aenean animo noxque diesque refert.
ille quidem male gratus et ad mea munera surdus et quo, si non sim stulta, carere velim.
non tamen Aenean, quamvis male cogitat, odi, sed queror infidum quastaque peius amo.
parce, Venus, nurui, durumque amplectere fratrem, frater Amor; castris militet ille tuis.
aut ego quem coepi — neque enim dedignor — amare, materiam curae praebeat ille meae.
Fallor et ista mihi falso iactatur imago:
matris ab ingenio dissidet ille suae.
te lapis et montes innataque rupibus altis robora, te saevae progenuere ferae aut mare, quale vides agitari nunc quoque ventis:
qua tamen adversis fluctibus ire paras?
quo fugis? obstat hiems. hiemis mihi gratia prosit!
adspice ut eversas concitet Eurus aquas.
quod tibi malueram, sine me debere procellis;
iustior est animo ventus et unda tuo.
Non ego sum tanti, quod non cessaris, inique, ut pereas, dum me per freta longa fugis.
exerces pretiosa odia et constantia magno, si, dum me careas, est tibi vile mori.
iam venti ponent, strataque aequaliter unda caeruleis Triton per mare curret equis.
tu quoque cum ventis utinam mutabilis esses et, nisi duritia robora vincis, eris.
quid, si nescires, insana quid aequora possunt, expertae totiens tam male credis aquae?
ut, pelago suadente etiam, retinacula solvas, multa tamen latus tristia pontus habet.
nec violasse fidem temptantibus aequora prodest;
perfidiae poenas exigit ille locus, praecipue cum laesus amor, quia mater Amorum nuda Cytheriacis edita fertur aquis.
Perdita ne perdam, timeo, noceamve nocenti

neu bibat aequoreas naufragus hostis aquas.
vive, precor! sic te melius quam funere perdam, tu potius leti causa ferere mei.
finge, age, te rapido — nullum sit in omine pondus! — turbine deprendi; quid tibi mentis erit?
protinus occurrent falsae periuria linguae
et Phrygia Dido fraude coacta mori; coniugis ante oculos deceptae stabit imago tristis et effusis sanguinolenta comis.
quidquid id est “tantum merui! concedite!” dicas, quaeque cadent in te fulmina missa putes!
Da breve saevitiae spatium pelagique tuaeque;
grande morae pretium tuta futura via est.
nec mihi tu curae; puero parcatur lulo!
te satis est titulum mortis habere meae.
quid puer Ascanius, quid di meruere Penates?
ignibus ereptos obruet unda deos?
sed neque fers tecum, nec, quae mihi, perfide, iactas, presserunt umeros sacra paterque tuos.
omnia mentiris; neque enim tua fallere lingua incipit a nobis, primaque plector ego:
si quaeras ubi sit formosi mater Iuli — occidit a duro sola relicta viro!
haec mihi narraras, at me movere merentem.
inde minor culpa poena futura mea est.
Nec mihi mens dubia est, quin te tua numina damnent:
per mare, per terras septima iactat hiems.
fluctibus eiectum tuta statione recepi vixque bene audito nomine regna dedi.
his tamen officiis utinam contenta fuissem nec mea concubitu fama sepulta foret!
illa dies nocuit, qua nos declive sub antrum caeruleus subitis compulit imber aquis.
audieram vocem; nymphas ululasse putavi:
Eumenides fatis signa dedere meis.
Exige, laese pudor, poenas, violataque lecti iura neque ad cineres fama retenta meos!

vosque mei manes animaeque cinisque Sychaei, ad quas, me miseram, plena pudoris eo.
est mihi marmorea sacratus in aede Sychaeus;
oppositae frondes velleraque alba tegunt.
hinc ego me sensi noto quater ore citari;
ipse sono tenui dixit "Elissa, veni!"
Nulla mora est: venio, venio tibi debita coniunx, — sum tamen admissio tarda pudore meo!
da veniam culpae; deceptus idoneus auctor;
invidiam noxae detrahit ille meae.
diva parens seniorque pater, pia sarcina nati, spem mihi mansuri rite dedere viri.
si fuit errandum, causas habet error honestas:
adde fidem, nulla parte pigendus erit.
Durat in extremum vitaeque novissima nostrae prosequitur fati, qui fuit ante, tenor:
occidit internas coniunx mactatus ad aras et sceleris tanti praemia frater habet, exul agor cineresque viri patriamque relinquo et feror in dubias hoste sequente vias;
adplicor ignotis fratrique elapsa fretoque;
quod tibi donavi, perfide, litus emo.
urbem constitui lateque patentia fixi moenia finitimis invidiosa locis.
bella tument. bellis peregrina et femina temptor vixque rudis portas urbis et arma paro.
mille procis placui, qui me coiere querentes nescio quem thalamis praeposuisse suis.
quid dubitas vinctam Gaetulo tradere Iarbae?
praebuerim sceleri brachia nostra tuo.
est etiam frater, cuius manus impia poscit respergi nostro sparsa cruore viri.
pone deos et quae tangendo sacra profanas!
non bene caelestis impia dextra colit.
si tu cultor eras elapsis igne futurus, paenitet elapsos ignibus esse deos.

Forsitan et gravidam Didon, scelerate, relinquo parsque tui lateat corpore clausa meo.
accedet fati matris miserabilis infans et nondum nato funeris auctor eris.
cumque parente sua frater morietur Iuli, poenaeque conexos auferet una duos.
“Sed iubet ire deus.” vellem, vetuisset adire Punica nec Teucris pressa fuisset humus.
hoc duce nempe deo ventis agitaris iniquis et teris in rapido tempora longa freto?
Pergama vix tanto tibi erant repetenda labore, Hectore si vivo quanta fuere forent.
non patrium Simoenta petis, sed Thybridis undas, nempe ut pervenias quo cupis hospes eris.
utque latet vitatque tuis obtrusa carinis,
vix tibi continget terra petita seni.
Hos potius populos in dotem ambage remissa accipe et advectas Pygmalionis opes.
Ilion in Tyriam transfer felicius urbem resque loco regis sceptraque sacra tene!
si tibi mens avida est belli, si quaerit Iulus, unde suo partus Marte triumphus eat, quem superet, nequid desit praebemus hostem;
hic pacis leges, hic locus arma capit.
tu modo — per matrem fraternaque tela, sagittas, perque fugae comites, Dardana sacra, deos! — sic superent, quoscumque tua de gente reportas Mars ferox et damni sit modus ille tui Ascaniusque suos feliciter inpleat annos et senis Anchisae molliter ossa cubent! — parce, precor, domui, quae se tibi tradit habendam!
quod crimen dicis praeter amasse meum?
non ego sum Pthias magnisque oriunda Mycenis, nec steterunt in te virque paterque meus.
si pudet uxoris, non nupta, sed hospita dicar;

dum tua sit Dido, quidlibet esse feret.
Nota mihi freta sunt Afrum plangentia litus; temporibus certis dantque negantque viam:
cum dabit aura viam, praebebis carbasa ventis;
nunc levis eiectam continet alga ratem.
tempus ut observem, manda mihi: certius ibis, nec te, si cupies, ipsa manere sinam.
et socii requiem poscunt, laniataque classis postulat exiguas semirefecta moras.
pro meritis et si qua tibi debebimus ultra,
pro spe coniugii tempora parva peto:
dum freta mitescunt et amor, dum temperat usum, fortiter edisco tristia posse pati.
Si minus, est animus nobis effundere vitam;
in me crudelis non potes esse diu.
adspicias utinam, quae sit scribentis imago;
scribimus, et gremio Troicus ensis adest;
perque genas lacrimae strictum labuntur in ensem,
qui iam pro lacrimis sanguine tinctus erit.
quam bene conveniunt fato tua munera nostro!
instruis impensa nostra sepulcra brevi.
nec mea nunc primum feriuntur pectora telo:
ille locus saevi vulnus amoris habet.
Anna soror, soror Anna, meae male conscia culpae, iam dabis in cineres ultima dona meos.
nec consumpta rogis inscribar Elissa Sychaei, hoc tantum in tumuli marmore carmen erit:
praebuit aeneas et causam mortis et ensem.
ipsa sua Dido concidit usa manu.

VIII. Hermione Oresti

Alloquor Hermione nuper fratremque virumque nunc fratrem. nomen coniugis alter habet.

Pyrrhus Achillides, animosus imagine patris, inclusam contra iusque piumque tenet.
quod potui renui, ne non invita tenerer, cetera femineae non valuere manus.
“quid facis, Aeacidae? non sum sine vindice!” dixi “haec tibi sub domino est, Pyrrhe, puella suo!”
surdior ille freto clamantem nomen Orestis traxit inornatis in sua tecta comis.
quid gravius capta Lacedaemone serva tulissem, si raperet Graias barbara turba nurus?
parcius Andromachen vexavit Achaia victrix, cum Danaus Phrygias ureret ignis opes.
At tu, cura mei si te pia tangit, Oreste, inice non timidas in tua iura manus!
an si quis rapiat stabulis armenta reclusis, arma feras, rapta coniuge lentus eris?
sit socer exemplo nuptae repetitor ademptae, cui pia militiae causa puella fuit;
si pater ignavus vidua plorasset in aula,
nupta foret Paridi mater, ut ante fuit.
Nec tu mille rates sinuosaque vela pararis nec numeros Danai militis: ipse veni!
sic quoque eram repetenda tamen, nec turpe marito aspera pro caro bella tulisse toro.
quid, quod avus nobis idem Pelopeius Atreus, et si non esses vir mihi, frater eras.
vir, precor, uxori, frater succurre sorori;

instant officio nomina bina tuo.
Me tibi Tyndareus, vita gravis auctor et annis tradidit; arbitrium neptis habebat avus.

at pater Aeacidae promiserat inscius acti;
plus patre, quo prior est ordine, posset avus.
cum tibi nubebam, nulli mea taeda nocebat;
si iungar Pyrrho, tu mihi laesus eris.
et pater ignoscet nostro Menelaus amori;
succubuit telis praepetis ipse dei.
quem sibi permisit, genero concedet amorem.
proderit exemplo mater amata suo.
tu mihi, quod matri pater est. quas egerat olim Dardanius partes advena, Pyrrhus agit.
ille licet patriis sine fine superbiat actis;
et tu quae referas facta parentis habes.
Tantalides omnes ipsumque regebat Achillem;
hic pars militiae, dux erat ille ducum.
tu quoque habes proavum Pelopem Pelopisque parentem;
si melius numeres, a love quintus eris.
Nec virtute cares. arma invidiosa tulisti;
sed tu quid faceres? induit illa pater.
materia vellem fortis meliore fuisses;
non lecta est operi, sed data causa tuo.
hanc tamen implesti; iuguloque Aegisthus aperto tectis cruentavit, quae pater ante tuus.
increpat Aeacides laudemque in crimina vertit;
et tamen aspectus sustinet ille meos.
rumpor et ora mihi pariter cum mente tumescunt pectoraque inclusis ignibus usta dolent.
Hermione coram quisquamne obiecit Oresti, nec mihi sunt vires, nec ferox ensis adest!
flere licet certe; flendo diffundimus iram, perque sinum lacrimae fluminis instar eunt.
has semper solas habeo semperque profundo;

ument incultae fonte perenne genae.
Num generis fato, quod nostros errat in annos, Tantalides matres apta rapina sumus?
non ego fluminei referam mendacia cygni nec querar in plumis delituisse lovem.
qua duo porrectus longe freta distinet Isthmos,
vecta peregrinis Hippodamia rotis.
Castori Amyclaeo et Amyclaeo Polluci reddita Moposia Taenaris urbe soror; Taenaris Idaeus trans aequor ab hospite rapta Argolicas pro se vertit in arma manus.
vix equidem memini. memini tamen: omnia luctus, omnia solliciti plena timoris erant.
flebat avus Phoebeque soror fratresque gemelli, orabat superos Leda suumque lovem.
ipsa ego non longos etiam tunc scissa capillos clamabam "sine me, me sine, mater abis?"
nam coniunx aberat. ne non Pelopeia credar, ecce Neoptolemo praeda parata fui.
Pelides utinam vitasset Apollinis arcus!
damnaret nati facta proterva pater.
nec quondam placuit nec nunc placuisset Achilli abducta viduum coniuge flere virum.
quae mea caelestes iniuria fecit iniquos?
quodve mihi miserae sidus obesse querar?
parva mea sine matre fui; pater arma ferebat;
et duo cum vivant, orba duobus eram.
non tibi blanditias primis, mea mater, in annis incerto dictas ore puella tuli.
non ego captavi brevibus tua colla lacertis, nec gremio sedi sarcina grata tuo.
non cultus tibi cura mei, nec pacta marito intravi thalamos matre parante novos.
obvia prodieram reduci tibi — vera fatebor — nec facies nobis nota parentis erat!
te tamen esse Helenen, quod eras pulcherrima, sensi;

ipsa requirebas quae tua nata foret.
Pars haec una mihi, coniunx bene cessit Orestes;
is quoque, ni pro se pugnet, ademptus erit.
Pyrrhus habet captam reduce et victore parente;
munus et hoc nobis diruta Troia dedit!
cum tamen altus equis Titan radiantibus instant, perfruor infelix liberiore malo;
nox ubi me thalamis ululantem et acerba gementem condidit in maesto procubuique toro, pro somno lacrimis oculi funguntur obortis quaque licet fugio sicut ab hoste viro.
saepe malis stupeo rerumque oblita locique ignara tetigi Scyria membra manu; utque nefas sensi, male corpora tacta relinquo et mihi pollutas credor habere manus.
saepe Neoptolemi pro nomine nomen Orestis exit, et errorem vocis ut omen amo.
Per genus infelix iuro generisque parentem, qui freta, qui terras et sua regna quatit;
per patris ossa tui, patru mihi, quae tibi debent, quod se sub tumulo fortiter ulta iacent:
aut ego praemoriar primoque exstinguar in aevo, aut ego Tantalidae Tantalus uxor ero!

IX. Deianira Herculi

Mittor ad Alciden a coniuge conscia mentis littera si coniunx Deianira tua est.

Gratulor Oechaliam titulis accedere nostris, victorem victae succubuisse queror.
fama Pelasgiadas subito pervenit in urbes decolor et factis infitianda tuis, quem numquam Iuno seriesque inmensa laborum fregerit, huic Iolen inposuisse iugum.
hoc velit Eurystheus, velit hoc germana Tonantis, laetaque sit vitae labe noverca tuae.
at non ille velit, cui nox (si creditur) una non tanti, ut tantus conciperere, fuit.
Plus tibi quam Iuno nocuit Venus: illa premendo sustulit, haec humili sub pede colla tenet.
respice vindicibus pacatum viribus orbem, qua latam Nereus caeruleus ambit humum.
se tibi pax terrae, tibi se tuta aequora debent;
implesti meritis Solis utramque domum.
quod te laturum est, caelum prius ipse tulisti: Hercule supposito sidera fulsit Atlans.
quid nisi notitia est misero quaesita pudori, si cumulas sturpi facta priora nota?
tene ferunt geminos pressisse tenaciter angues, cum tener in cunis iam Iove dignus eras?
coepisti melius quam desinis; ultima primis cedunt: dissimiles hic vir et ille puer.
quem non mille ferae, quem non Stheneleius hostis, non potuit Iuno vincere, vincit Amor.
At bene nupta feror, quia nominer Herculis uxor,

sitque socer, rapidis qui tonat altus equis.
quam male inaequales veniunt ad aratra iuveni, tam premitur magno coniuge nupta minor.
non honor est sed onus species laesura ferentes:
siqua voles apte nubere, nube pari.
vir mihi semper abest, et coniuge notior hospes monstraque terribiles persequiturque feras.
ipsa domo vidua votis operata pudicis torqueor, infesto ne vir ab hoste cadat;
inter serpentes aprosque avidosque leones iactor et haesuros terna per ora canes.
me pecudum fibrae simulacraque inania somni ominaque arcana nocte petita movent.

aucupor infelix incertae murmura famae speque timor dubia spesque timore cadit.
mater abest queriturque deo placuisse potenti, nec pater Amphitryon nec puer Hyllus adest.
arbiter Eurystheus astu lunonis iniquae sentitur nobis iraque longa deae.
Haec mihi ferre parum; peregrinos addis amores, et mater de te quaelibet esse potest.
non ego Partheniis temeratam vallibus Augem nec referam partus, Ormeni nympha, tuos;
non tibi crimen erunt, Teuthrantia turba, sorores, quarum de populo nulla relictas tibi est.
una, recens crimen, referetur adultera nobis, unde ego sum Lydo facta noverca Lamo.
Maeandros, totiens qui terris errat in isdem, qui lassas in se saepe retorquet aquas, vidit in Herculeo suspensa monilia collo, illo, cui caelum sarcina parva fuit.
non puduit fortes auro cohibere lacertos et solidis gemmas opposuisse toris?
nempe sub his animam pestis Nemeaea lacertis edidit, unde umerus tegmina laevus habet.

ausus es hirsutos mitra redimire capillos!
aptior Herculeae populus alba comae.
nec te Maeonia lascivae more puellae incingi zona dedecuisse pudet?
non tibi succurrit crudi Diomedis imago, efferus humana qui dape pavit equas?
si te vidisset cultu Busiris in isto, huic victor victo nempe pudendus eras!
detrahat Antaeus duro redimicula collo, ne pigeat molli succubuisse viro!
Inter Ioniacas calathum tenuisse puellas diceris et dominae pertimuisse minas.
non fugis, Alcide, victricem mille laborum rasilibus calathis inposuisse manum crassaque robusto deducis pollice fila aequaque formosae pensa rependis erae?
a! quotiens, digitis dum torques stamina duris, praevalidae fusos conminuere manus!
[Crederis infelix scuticae tremefactis habenis ante pedes dominae pertimuisse minas ... eximiis pompis, immania semina laudim] factaque narrabas dissimulanda tibi:
scilicet: immanes elisis faucibus hydros infantem caudis involuisse manum;
ut Tegeaeus aper cupressifero Erymantho incubet et vasto pondere laedat humum;
non tibi Threiciis adfixa penatibus ora,
non hominum pingues caede tacentur equae, prodigiumque triplex, armenti dives Hiberi Geryones, quamvis in tribus unus erat;
inque canes totidem trunco digestus ab uno Cerberos implicitis angue minante comis; quaeque redundabat fecundo vulnere serpens fertilis et damnis dives ab ipsa suis, quique inter laevumque latus laevumque lacertum praegrave conpressa fauce pependit onus, et male confisum pedibus formaque bimembri pulum Thessalicis agmen equestre iugis.

Haec tu Sidonio potes insignitus amictu dicere? non cultu lingua retenta silet?
se quoque nympa tuis ornavit Dardanis armis et tulit a capto nota tropaea viro.
i nunc, tolle animos et fortia gesta recense:
quo tu non esses, iure vir illa fuit.
qua tanto minor es, quanto te, maxime rerum, quam quos vicisti, vincere maius erat.
illi procedit rerum mensura tuarum, cede bonis: heres laudis amica tuae.
o pudor! hirsuti costis exuta leonis aspera texerunt vellera molle latus!
falleris et nescis: non sunt spolia illa leonis, sed tua, tuque feri victor es, illa tui.
femina tela tulit Lernaëis atra venenis, ferre gravem lana vix satis apta colum, instruxitque manum clava domitrice ferarum vidit et in speculo coniugis arma sui.
Haec tamen audieram; licuit non credere famae, et venit ad sensus mollis ab aure dolor.
ante meos oculos adducitur advena paelex, nec mihi, quae patior, dissimulare licet!
non sinis averti: mediam captiva per urbem invitis oculis adspicienda venit.
nec venit incultis captarum more capillis:
fortunam vultu fassa decente suam ingreditur late lato spectabilis auro, qualiter in Phrygia tu quoque cultus eras;
dat vultum populo sublimis ut Hercule victo: Oechaliam vivo stare parente putes;
forsitan et pulsa Aetolide Deianira
nomine deposito paelicis uxor erit, Eurytidosque Ioles Atque Aonii Alcidae

turpia famosus corpora iunget Hymen.
mens fugit admonitu, frigusque perambulat artus, et iacet in gremio languida facta manus.
Me quoque cum multis, sed me sine crimine amasti;
ne pigeat, pugnae bis tibi causa fui.
cornua flens legit ripis Achelous in udis truncaque limosa tempora mersit aqua;
semivir occubuit in letifero Eueno Nessus et infecit sanguis equinus aquas.
sed quid ego haec refero? scribenti nuntia venit fama virum tunicae tabe perire meae.
ei mihi! quid feci? quo me furor egit amantem?
impia quid dubitas Deianira mori?
An tuus in media coniunx lacerabitur Oeta, tu sceleris tanti causa superstes eris?
siquid adhuc habeo facti, cur Herculis uxor credar, coniugii mors mea pignus erit.
tu quoque cognosces in me, Meleagre, sororem!
impia quid dubitas Deianira mori?
Heu devota domus! solio sedet Agrios alto;
Oenea desertum nuda senecta premit;
exulat ignotis Tydeus germanus in oris;
alter fatali vivus in igne fuit;
exegit ferrum sua per praecordia mater.
impia quid dubitas Deianira mori?
Deprecor hoc unum per iura sacerrima lecti, ne videar fati insidiata tuis.
Nessus, ut est avidum percussus harundine pectus, “hic,” dixit, “vires sanguis amoris habet.”
illita Nesseo misi tibi texta veneno.
impia quid dubitas Deianira mori?
Iamque vale, seniorque pater germanaque Gorge et patria et patriae frater adempte tuae et tu lux oculis hodierna novissima nostris virque — sed o possis! — et puer Hylle, vale!

X. Ariadne Theseo

Illa relicta feris etiam nunc, improbe Theseu vivit. Et haec aequa mente tulisse velis?

Mitius inveni quam te genus omne ferarum;
credita non ulli quam tibi peius eram.

quae legis, ex illo, Theseu, tibi litore mitto unde tuam sine me vela tulere ratem, in quo me somnusque meus male prodidit et tu,
per facinus somnis insidiate meis.

Tempus erat, vitrea quo primum terra pruina spargitur et tectae fronde queruntur aves;
incertum vigilans ac somno languida movi Thesea prensuras semisupina manus:
nullus erat. referoque manus iterumque retempto perque torum moveo bracchia: nullus erat.
excussere metus somnum; conterrita surgo membraque sunt viduo praecipitata toro.
protinus adductis sonuerunt pectora palmis utque erat e somno turbida, rupta coma est.
Luna fuit; specto siquid nisi litora cernam;
quod videant oculi, nil nisi litus habent.
nunc huc, nunc illuc et utroque sine ordine, curro, alta puellares tardat harena pedes.
interea toto clamanti litore "Theseu!"
reddebant nomen concava saxa tuum et quotiens ego te, totiens locus ipse vocabat;
ipse locus miserae ferre volebat opem.
Mons fuit; apparent frutices in vertice rari;

hinc scopulus raucis pendet adesus aquis.
adscendo; vires animus dabat; atque ita late aequora prospectu metior alta meo.
inde ego — nam ventis quoque sum crudelibus usa — vidi praecipiti carbasa tenta Noto.
aut vidi aut fuerant quae me vidisse putarem;
frigidior glacie semianimisque fui.
nec languere diu patitur dolor. excitor illo, excitor et summa Thesea voce voco.
“quo fugis?” exclamo “scelerate revertere Theseu!
flecte ratem! numerum non habet illa suum!”
Haec ego. quod voci deerat, plangore replebam;
verbera cum verbis mixta fuere meis.
si non audires, ut saltem cernere posses:
iactatae late signa dedere manus.
candidaque imposui longae velamina virgae scilicet oblitos admonitura mei.
iamque oculis ereptus eras. tum denique flevi;
torpuerant molles ante dolore genae.
quid potius facerent, quam me mea lumina flerent, postquam desieram vela videre tua?
aut ego diffusis erravi sola capillis, qualis ab Ogygio concita Baccha deo;
aut mare prospiciens in saxo frigida sedi, quamque lapis sedes, tam lapis ipsa fui.
saepe torum repeto qui nos acceperat ambos, sed non acceptos exhibiturus erat et tua quae possum pro te vestigia tango strataque quae membris intepuere tuis.
incumbo lacrimisque toro manante profusis “pressimus” exclamo “te duo, redde duos!
venimus huc ambo; cur non discedimus ambo?
perfide, pars nostri, lectule, maior ubi est?”
Quid faciam? quo sola ferar? vacat insula cultu;
non hominum video, non ego facta boum.
omne latus terrae cingit mare; navita nusquam.

nulla per ambiguas puppis itura vias.
finge dari comitesque mihi ventosque ratemque, quid sequar? accessus terra paterna negat.
ut rate felici pacata per aequora labar, temperet ut ventos Aeolus; exul ero.
non ego te, Crete, centum digesta per urbes, adspiciam, puero cognita terra Iovi.
at pater et tellus iusto regnata parenti prodita sunt facto, nomina cara, meo, cum tibi, ne victor tecto morerere recurvo,
quae regerent passus, pro duce fila dedi.
tum mihi dicebas: "per ego ipsa pericula iuro te fore, dum nostrum vivet uterque, meam." Vivimus, et non sum, Theseu, tua, si modo vivis, femina periuri fraude sepulta viri.
me quoque, qua fratrem mactasses, improbe, clava!
esset, quam dederas, morte soluta fides.
nunc ego non tantum, quae sum passura, recordor, sed quaecumque potest ulla relictā pati.
occurrunt animo pereundi mille figurae, morsque minus poenae quam mora mortis habet.
iam iam venturos aut hac aut suspicor illac, qui lanient avido viscera dente lupos.
forsitan et fulvos tellus alat ista leones?
quis scit an et saevas tigridas insula habet.
et freta dicuntur magnas expellere phocas;
quis vetat et gladios per latus ire meum?
Tantum ne religer dura captiva catena, neve traham serva grandia pensa manu, cui pater est Minos, cui mater filia Phoebi, quodque magis memini, quae tibi pacta fui!
si mare, si terras porrectaque litora vidi, multa mihi terrae, multa minantur aquae.
caelum restabat; timeo simulacra deorum;
destituor rapidis praeda cibusque feris.
sive colunt habitantque viri, diffidimus illis;

externos didici laesa timere viros.
Viveret Androgeos utinam, nec facta luisses impia funeribus, Cecropi terra, tuis;
nec tua mactasset nodoso stipite, Theseu, ardua parte virum dextera, parte bovem;
nec tibi, quae reditus monstrarent, fila dedissem, fila per adductas saepe recepta manus.
non equidem miror, si stat victoria tecum strataque Cretaeam belua planxit humum.
non poterant figi praecordia ferrea cornu;
ut te non tegeres, pectore tutus eras.
illic tu silices, illic adamanta tulisti, illic, qui silices, Thesea, vincat, habes.
Crudeles somni, quid me tenuistis inertem?
aut semel aeterna nocte premenda fui.
vos quoque crudeles venti, nimiumque parati flaminaque in lacrimas officiosa meas;
dextera crudelis, quae me fratremque necavit, et data poscenti, nomen inane, fides:
in me iurarunt somnus ventusque fidesque:
prodita sum causis una puella tribus.
Ergo ego nec lacrimas matris moritura videbo nec mea qui digitis lumina condat, erit.
spiritus infelix peregrinas ibit in auras nec positos artus unguet amica manus.
ossa superstabant volucres inhumata marinae;
haec sunt officiis digna sepulcra meis.
ibis Cecropios portus patriaque receptus,
cum steteris urbis celsus in arce tuae et bene narraris letum taurique virique sectaque per dubias saxea tecta vias;
me quoque narrato sola tellure relictam;
non ego sum titulis subripienda tuis!
nec pater est Aegeus, nec tu Pittheidos Aethrae filius; auctores saxa fretumque tui.
Di facerent ut me summa de puppe videres, movisset vultus maesta figura tuos.

nunc quoque non oculis, sed qua potes, adspice mente haerentem scopulo quem vaga pulsat aqua; adspice demissos lugentis more capillos et tunicas lacrimis sicut ab imbre graves!
corpus ut impulsae segetes aquilonibus horret litteraque articulo pressa tremente labat.
non te per meritum, quoniam male cessit, adoro;
    debita sit facto gratia nulla meo.
sed ne poena quidem. si non ego causa salutis,
    non tamen est cur sis tu mihi causa necis.
Has tibi plangendo lugubria pectora lassas infelix tendo trans freta lata manus;
hos tibi qui superant ostendo maesta capillos;
    per lacrimas oro, quas tua facta movent:
flecte ratem, Theseu, versoque relabere vento;
    si prius occidero, tu tamen ossa feres.

XI. Canace Macareo

Aeolis Aeolidae quam non habet ipsa salutem mittit et armata verba notata manu.

Siqua tamen caecis errabunt scripta lituris, oblitus a dominae caede libellus erit.
dextra tenet calamum, strictum tenet altera ferrum et iacet in gremio charta soluta meo.
haec est Aeolidos fratri scribentis imago;
sic videor duro posse placere patri.
Ipse necis cuperem nostrae spectator adesset auctorisque oculis exigeretur opus ut ferox est multoque suis truculentior euris, spectasset siccis vulnera nostra genis.
scilicet est aliquid cum saevis vivere ventis;
ingenio populi convenit ille sui.
ille Noto Zephyroque et Sithonio Aquiloni imperat et pinnis, Eure proterve, tuis.
imperat heu! ventis; tumidae non imperat irae possidet et vitiis regna minora suis.
quid iuvat admotam per avorum nomina caelo inter cognatos posse referre lovem?
num minus infestum, funebria munera, ferrum feminea teneo, non mea tela, manu?
O utinam, Macareu, quae nos commisit in unum, venisset leto serior hora meo!
cur umquam plus me, frater, quam frater amasti et tibi, non debet quod soror esse, fui?
ipsa quoque incalui, qualemque audire solebam, nescio quem sensi corde tepente deum.

fugerat ore color, macies adduxerat artus, sumebant minimos ora coacta cibos;

nec somni faciles et nox erat annua nobis et gemitum nullo laesa dolore dabam.
nec cur haec facerem, poteram mihi reddere causam nec noram quid amans esset; at illud eram.
Prima malum nutrix animo praesensit anili;
prima mihi nutrix "Aeoli," dixit, "amas!"
erubui gremioque pudor deiecit ocellos;
haec satis in tacita signa fatentis erant.
iamque tumescebant vitiati pondera ventris aegraque furtivum membra gravabat onus.
quas mihi non herbas, quae non medicamina nutrix attulit audaci supposuitque manu, ut penitus nostris — hoc te celavimus unum — visceribus crescens excuteretur onus!
a! nimium vivax admotis restitit infans artibus et tecto tutus ab hoste fuit.
iam noviens erat orta soror pulcherrima Phoebi et nova luciferos Luna movebat equos; nescia, quae faceret subitos mihi causa dolores,
et rudis ad partus et nova miles eram.
nec tenui vocem. "quid" ait "tua crimina prodis?"
oraque clamantis conscia pressit anus.
quid faciam infelix? gemitus dolor edere cogit, sed timor et nutrix et pudor ipse vetant.
contineo gemitus elapsaque verba reprendo et cogor lacrimas combibere ipsa meas.
mors erat ante oculos et opem Lucina negabat et grave si morerer mors quoque crimen erat; cum super incumbens scissa tunicaque comaque pressa refovisti pectora nostra tuis, et mihi "vive, soror, soror o carissima," aisti
"vive nec unius corpore perde duos.

spes bona det vires; fratri nam nupta futura es.
illius de quo mater et uxor eris.” Mortua, crede mihi, tamen ad tua verba revixi et positum est uteri crimen onusque mei.
quid tibi grataris? media sedet Aeolus aula;
crimina sunt oculis subripienda patris.
frugibus infantem ramisque albentis olivae et levibus vittis sedula celat anus fictaque sacra facit dicitque precantia verba;
dat populus sacris, dat pater ipse viam.
iam prope limen erat. patrias vagitus ad aures venit et indicio proditur ille suo.
eripit infantem mentitaque sacra revelat Aeolus. insana regia voce sonat.
ut mare fit tremulum, tenui cum stringitur aura, ut quatitur tepido fraxina virga Noto, sic mea vibrari pallentia membra videres;
quassus ab imposito corpore lectus erat.
inruit et nostrum vulgat clamore pudorem et vix a misero continet ore manus.
ipsa nihil praeter lacrimas pudibunda profudi.
torpuerat gelido lingua retenta metu.
Iamque dari parvum canibusque avibusque nepotem iusserat in solis destituique locis.
vagitum dedit ille miser — sensisse putares — quaque suum poterat voce rogabat avum.
quid mihi tunc animi credis, germane, fuisse (nam potes ex animo colligere ipse tuo) cum mea me coram silvas inimicus in altas viscera montanis ferret edenda lupis?
exierat thalamo. tunc demum pectora plangi contigit inque meas unguibus ire comas.
Interea patrius vultu maerente satellites
venit et indignos edidit ore sonos:
‘Aeolus hunc ensem mittit tibi’ — tradidit ensem —
‘et iubet ex merito scire, quid iste velit.’

scimus et utemur violento fortiter ense;
    pectoribus condam dona paterna meis.
his mea muneribus, genitor, conubia donas?
    hac tua dote, pater, filia dives erit?
tolle procul, decepte, faces, Hymenaeae, maritas et fuge turbato tecta nefanda pede!
ferte faces in me quas fertis, Erinyes atrae, et meus ex isto luceat igne rogas!
nubite felices Parca meliore sorores;
    amissae memores sed tamen este mei!
Quid puer admisit tam paucis editus horis?
    quo laesit facto vix bene natus avum?
si potuit meruisse necem, meruisse putetur;
    a! miser admissio plectitur ille meo!
nate, dolor matris, rapidarum praeda ferarum, ei mihi! natali dilacerate tuo, nate, parum fausti miserabile pignus amoris,
    haec tibi prima dies, haec tibi summa fuit.
non mihi te licuit lacrimis perfundere iustis,
    in tua non tonsas ferre sepulcra comas;
non super incubui, non oscula frigida carpsi;
    diripiunt avidae viscera nostra ferae.
Ipsa quoque infantis cum vulnere prosequar umbras;
    nec mater fuero dicta nec orba diu.
tu tamen, o frustra miserae sperate sorori,
    sparsa, precor, nati collige membra tui et refer ad matrem socioque impone sepulcro urnaue nos habeat quamlibet arta duos!
vive memor nostri lacrimasque in vulnera funde, neve reformida corpus amantis amans.
tu, rogo, dilectae nimium mandata sororis perfer! mandatum persequar ipsa patris.

XII. Medea Iasoni

Exul inops comtempta novo Medea marito dicit, an a regnis tempora nulla vacant?

At tibi Colchorum, memini, regina vacavi, ars mea cum peteres ut tibi ferret opem!
tunc quae dispensant mortalia fila sorores, debuerant fusos evoluisse meos;
tum potui Medea mori bene! quidquid ab illo produxi vitae tempore, poena fuit.
Ei mihi! cur umquam iuvenalibus acta lacertis Phrixeam petiit Pelias arbor ovem?
cur umquam Colchi Magnetida vidimus Argon turbaque Phasiacam Graia bibistis aquam?
cur mihi plus aequo flavi placuere capilli et decor et linguae gratia ficta tuae?
aut, semel in nostras quoniam nova puppis harenas venerat audacis attuleratque viros, isset anhelatos non praemedicatus in ignes inmemor Aesonides oraque adusta boum! semina iecisset totidem sevisset et hostes, ut caderet cultu cultor ab ipse suo!
quantum perfidiae tecum, scelerate, perisset!
dempta forent capiti quam mala multa meo!
Est aliqua ingrato meritum exprobrare voluptas;
hac fruar, haec de te gaudia sola feram.
iussus inexpertam Colchos advertere puppim intrasti patriae regna beata meae.
hoc illic Medea fui, nova nupta quod hic est;
quam pater est illi, tam mihi dives erat.
hic Ephyren bimarem, Scythia tenus ille nivosa omne tenet, Ponti qua plaga laeva iacet.

Accipit hospitio iuvenes Aeeta Pelasgos, et premitis pictos corpora Graia toros.

tunc ego te vidi, tunc coepi scire, quid esses;
illa fuit mentis prima ruina meae.
et vidi et perii! nec notis ignibus arsi, ardet ut ad magnos pinea taeda deos.
et formosus eras et me mea fata trahebant:
abstulerant oculi lumina nostra tui.
perfide, sensisti! quis enim bene celat amorem?
eminet indicio prodita flamma suo.
Dicitur interea tibi lex, ut dura ferorum insolito premeres vomere colla boum.
Martis erant tauri plus quam per cornua saevi, quorum terribilis spiritus ignis erat, aere pedes solidi praetentaque naribus aera,
nigra per adflatus haec quoque facta suos.
semina praeterea populos genitura iuberis spargere devota lata per arva manu, qui peterent natis secum tua corpora telis:
illa est agricolae messis iniqua suo.
lumina custodis succumbere nescia somno ultimus est aliqua decipere arte labor.
Dixerat Aeetes: maestis consurgitis omnes, mensaque purpureos deserit alta toros.
quam tibi tunc longe regnum dotale Creusae et socer et magni nata Creontis erat?
tristis abis. oculis abeuntem prosequor udis et dixit tenui murmure lingua: "vale!"
ut positum tetigi thalamo male saucia lectum, acta est per lacrimas nox mihi quanta fuit.
ante oculos taurique meos segetesque nefandae, ante meos oculos pervigil anguis erat.
hinc amor, hinc timor est — ipsum timor auget amorem.

mane erat et thalamo cara recepta soror disiectamque comas aversaque in ora iacentem invenit et lacrimis omnia plena meis.
orat opem Minyis, alter petit, impetrat alter, Aesonio iuveni quod rogat illa, damus.
Est nemus et piceis et frondibus ilicis atrum, vix illuc radiis solis adire licet;
sunt in eo — fuerant certe — delubra Dianae:
aurea barbarica stat dea facta manu.
noscis an exciderunt mecum loca? venimus illuc;
orsus es infido sic prior ore loqui: “ius tibi et arbitrium nostrae fortuna salutis tradidit inque tua est vitaeque morsque manu.
perdere posse sat est, siquem iuuet ipsa potestas;
sed tibi servatus gloria maior ero.
per mala nostra precor, quorum potes esse levamen, per genus et numen cuncta videntis avi, per triplices vultus arcanaque sacra Dianae et si forte aliquos gens habet ista deos:
o virgo, miserere mei, miserere meorum, effice me meritis tempus in omne tuum!
quodsi forte virum non dedignare Pelasgum — sed mihi tam faciles unde meosque deos? — spiritus ante meus tenues vanescet in auras, quam thalamo, nisi tu, nupta sit ulla meo.
conscia sit luno sacris praefecta maritis et dea marmorea cuius in aede sumus!”
Haec animum — et quota pars haec sunt? — movere puellae simplicis et dextrae dextera iuncta meae.
vidi etiam lacrimas — an pars est fraudis in illis?
sic cito sum verbis capta puella tuis.
iungis et aeripedes inadusto corpore tauros et solidam iusso vomere findis humum.
arva venenatis pro semine dentibus imples, nascitur et gladios scutaque miles habet.
ipsa ego, quae dederam medicamina, pallida sedi,

cum vidi subitos arma tenere viros, donec terrigenae — facinus mirabile! — fratres inter se strictas conseruere manus.
Insopor ecce vigil squamis crepitantibus horrens sibilat et torto pectore verrit humum.
dotis opes ubi erant? ubi erat tibi regia coniunx quique maris gemini distinet Isthmos aquas?
illa ego, quae tibi sum nunc denique barbara facta, nunc tibi sum pauper, nunc tibi visa nocens, flammea subduxi medicato lumina somno et tibi quae raperes vellera tuta dedi.
proditus est genitor, regnum patriamque reliqui, munus in exilio quod licet esse tuli, virginitas facta est peregrini praeda latronis, optima cum cara matre relicta soror.
At non te fugiens sine me, germane, reliqui.
deficit hoc uno littera nostra loco:
quod facere ausa mea est, non audet scribere dextra.
sic ego, sed tecum, dilaceranda fui!
nec tamen extimui — quid enim post illa timerem? — credere me pelago femina iamque nocens.
numen ubi est? ubi di? meritas subeamus in alto,
tu fraudis poenas, credulitatis ego.
Compressos utinam Symplegades elisissent nostraque adhaererent ossibus ossa tuis!
aut nos Scylla rapax canibus misset edendos!
debut ingratis Scylla nocere viris.
quaeque vomit totidem fluctus totidemque resorbet, nos quoque Trinacriae subposuisset aquae!
sospes ad Haemonias victorque reverteris urbes;
ponitur ad patrios aurea lana deos.
Quid referam Peliae natas pietate nocentes caesaque virginea membra paterna manu?
ut culpent alii, tibi me laudare necesse est,
pro quo sum totiens esse coacta nocens.
ausus es — o iusto desunt sua verba dolori! — ausus es "Aesoniam" dicere "cede domo!"

iussa domo cessi natis comitata duobus et, qui me sequitur semper, amore tui.
ut subito nostras Hymen cantatus ad aures venit et accenso lampades igne micant tibiaeque effundit socialia carmina vobis,
at mihi funerea flebiliora tuba, pertimui, nec adhuc tantum scelus esse putabam, sed tamen in toto pectore frigus erat.
turba ruunt et "Hymen" clamant "Hymenaeae!" frequenter;
quo propior vox haec, hoc mihi peius erat.
diversi flebant servi lacrimasque tegebant — quis vellet tanti nuntius esse mali?
me quoque quidquid erat potius nescire iuvabat,
sed tamquam scirem, mens mea tristis erat, cum minor e pueris iussus studione videndi constitit ad geminae limina prima foris:
"hinc" mihi "mater adi! pompam pater" inquit "Iason ducit et adiunctos aureus urget equos!" protinus abscissa planxi mea pectora veste tuta nec a digitis ora fuere meis.
ire animus mediae suadebat in agmina turbae sertaque conpositis demere rapta comis.
vix me continui, quin sic laniata capillos clamarem "meus est!" iniceremque manus.
Laese pater, gaude! Colchi gaudete relictis!
inferias umbrae fratris habete mei!
deseror amissis regno patriaque domoque coniuge, qui nobis omnia solus erat.
serpentes igitur potui taurosque furentes, unum non potui perdomuisse virum.
quaeque feros pepuli doctis medicatibus ignes,
non valeo flammam effugere ipsa meas.
ipsi me cantus herbaeque artesque relinquunt nil dea, nil Hecates sacra potentis agunt.
non mihi grata dies, noctes vigilantur amarae et tener a misero pectore somnus abit.

quae me non possum, potui sopire draconem.
utilior cuivis quam mihi cura mea est.
quos ego servavi, paelex amplectitur artus et nostri fructus illa laboris habet.
Forsitan et, stultae dum te iactare maritae quaeris et iniustis auribus apta loqui, in faciem moresque meos nova crimina fingas.
rideat et vitiis laeta sit illa meis.
rideat et Tyrio iaceat sublimis in ostro — flebit et ardores vincet adusta meos.
dum ferrum flammaeque aderunt sucusque veneni, hostis Medae nullus inultus erit.
Quod si forte preces praecordia ferrea tangunt, nunc animis audi verba minora meis.
tam tibi sum supplex, quam tu mihi saepe fuisti, nec moror ante tuos procubuisse pedes.
si tibi sum vilis, communis respice natos:
saeviet in partus dira noverca meos.
et nimium similes tibi sunt, et imagine tangor et quotiens video, lumina nostra madent.
per superos oro, per avitae lumina flammae, per meritum et natos, pignora nostra, duos, redde torum, pro quo tot res insana reliqui!
adde fidem dictis auxiliumque refer!
non ego te imploro contra taurosque virosque, utque tua serpens victa quiescat ope;
te peto, quem merui, quem nobis ipse dedisti, cum quo sum pariter facta parente parens.
Dos ubi sit, quaeris? campo numeravimus illo, qui tibi laturo vellus arandus erat.
aureus ille aries villo spectabilis alto, dos mea: “quam” dicam si tibi “redde,” neges.
dos mea tu sospes, dos est mea Graia iuventus.
i nunc, Sisyphias, inprobe, confer opes.
quod vivis, quod habes nuptam socerumque potentes, hoc ipsum, ingratus quod potes esse, meum est.

quos equidem actutum — sed quid praedicere poenam attinet? ingentis parturit ira minas.
quo feret ira sequar. facti fortasse pigebit;
et piget infido consuluisse viro.
viderit ista deus, qui nunc mea pectora versat.
nescio quid certe mens mea maius agit.

XIII. Laodamia Protesilao

Mittit et optat amans, quo mittitur, ire salutem Haemonis Haemonio Laodamia viro.
Aulide te fama est vento retinente morari:
a! me cum fugeres, hic ubi ventus erat?
tum freta debuerant vestris obsistere remis;
illud erat saevis utile tempus aquis.
oscula plura viro mandataque plura dedissem et sunt quae volui dicere multa tibi.
raptus es hinc praeceps et qui tua vela vocaret, quem cuperent nautae, non ego, ventus erat.
ventus erat nautis aptus, non aptus amanti;
solvor ab amplexu, Protesilae, tuo linguaque mandantis verba imperfecta reliquit;
vix illud potui dicere triste "vale."
Incubuit Boreas abreptaque vela tetendit, iamque meus longe Protesilaus erat.
dum potui spectare virum, spectare iuvabat sumque tuos oculos usque secuta meis;
ut te non poteram, poteram tua vela videre, vela diu vultus detinuere meos.
at postquam nec te nec vela fugacia vidi, et quod spectarem, nil nisi pontus erat, lux quoque tecum abiit, tenebrisque exanguis obortis succiduo dicor procubuisse genu.
vix socer Iphiclus, vix me grandaevus Acastus, vix mater gelida maesta refecit aqua.
officium fecere pium, sed inutile nobis:
indignor miserae non licuisse mori.
Ut rediit animus, pariter rediere dolores;
pectora legitimus casta momordit amor.
nec mihi pectendos cura est praebere capillos nec libet aurata corpora veste tegi.

ut quas pampinea tetigisse Bicorniger hasta creditur, huc illuc, qua furor egit, eo.
conveniunt matres Phylleides et mihi clamant: “Indue regales, Laodamia, sinus!”
scilicet ipsa geram saturatas murice lanas, bella sub Iliacis moenibus ille gerat?
ipsa comas pectar? galea caput ille premetur?
ipsa novas vestes, dura vir arma ferat?
qua possum, squalore tuos imitata labores dicar et haec belli tempora tristis agam.
Dyspari Priamide, damno formose tuorum, tam sis hostis iners quam malus hospes eras!
aut te Taenariae faciem culpasse maritae aut illi vellem displicuisse tuam.
tu, qui pro rapta nimium, Menelae, laboras, ei mihi! quam multis flebilis ultor eris.
di, precor, a nobis omen removete sinistrum et sua det reduci vir meus arma Iovi!
sed timeo, quotiens subiit miserabile bellum;
more nivis lacrimae sole madentis eunt.
Ilion et Tenedos Simoisque et Xanthus et Ide nomina sunt ipso paene timenda sono.
nec rapere ausurus, nisi se defendere posset, hospes erat: vires noverat ille suas.
venerat, ut fama est, multo spectabilis auro quique suo Phrygias corpore ferret opes, classe virisque potens, per quae fera bella geruntur — et sequitur regni pars quota quemque sui?
his ego te victam, consors Ledaea gemellis, suspikor, haec Danais posse nocere puto.
Hectora nescio quem timeo; Paris Hectora dixit ferrea sanguinea bella movere manu; Hectora, quisquis is est, si sum tibi cara, caveto:
signatum memori pectore nomen habe!
hunc ubi vitaris, alios vitare memento et multos illic Hectoras esse puta et facito ut dicas, quotiens pugnare parabis: “parcere me iussit Laodamia sibi.

si cadere Argolico fas est sub milite Troiam, te quoque non ullum vulnus habente cadat.
pugnet et adversos tendat Menelaus in hostes, hostibus e mediis nupta petenda viro est.
causa tua est dispar: tu tantum vivere pugna, inque pios dominae posse redire sinus!
Parcite, Dardanidae, de tot, precor, hostibus uni, ne meus ex illo corpore sanguis eat!
non est quem deceat nudo concurrere ferro saevaue in oppositos pectora ferre viros.
fortius ille potest multo, quam pugnat, amare.
    bella gerant alii; Protesilaus amet!
Nunc fateor: volui revocare, animusque ferebat;
    substitit auspicii lingua timore mali.
cum foribus velles ad Troiam exire paternis, pes tuus offenso limine signa dedit.
ut vidi, ingemui, tacitoque in pectore dixi: “signa reversuri sint, precor, ista viri!”
haec tibi nunc refero, ne sis animosus in armis.
    fac, meus in ventos hic timor omnis eat!
Sors quoque nescio quem fato designat iniquo, qui primus Danaum Troada tangat humum:
infelix, quae prima virum lugebit ademptum!
    di faciant, ne tu strenuus esse velis!
inter mille rates tua sit millensima puppis iamque fatigatas ultima verset aquas!
hoc quoque praemoneo: de nave novissimus exi!
    non est, quo properas, terra paterna tibi.
cum venies, remoque move veloque carinam inque tuo celerem litore siste gradum!
Sive latet Phoebus seu terris altior exstat, tu mihi luce celer, tu mihi nocte venis:
nocte tamen quam luce magis. nox grata puellis, quarum suppositus colla lacertus habet.

aucupor in lecto mendaces caelibe somnos;
dum careo veris gaudia falsa iuvant.
Sed tua cur nobis pallens occurrit imago?
cur venit a labris multa querela tuis?
excucior somno simulacraque noctis adoro;
nulla caret fumo Thessalis ara meo:
tura damus lacrimamque super, qua sparsa relucet, ut solet adfuso surgere flamma mero.
quando ego te reducem cupidis amplexa lacertis languida laetitia solvar ab ipsa mea?
quando erit, ut lecto mecum bene iunctus in uno militiae referas splendida facta tuae?
quae mihi dum referes, quamvis audire iuvabit, multa tamen capies oscula, multa dabis.
semper in his apte narrantia verba resistunt;
promptior est dulci lingua refecta mora.
Sed cum Troia subit, subeunt ventique fretumque;
spes bona sollicito victa timore cadit.
hoc quoque, quod venti prohibent exire carinas, me movet: invitis ire paratis aquis.
quis velit in patriam vento prohibente reverti?
a patria pelago vela vetante datis!
ipse suam non praebet iter Neptunus ad urbem.
quo ruitis? vestras quisque redite domos!
quo ruitis, Danaï? ventos audite vetantes!
non subiti casus — numinis ista mora est.
quid petitur tanto nisi turpis adultera bello?
dum licet, Inachiae vertite vela rates!
sed quid ago? revoco? revocaminis omen abesto blandaque compositas aura secundet aquas!
Troasin invideo, quae si lacrimosa suorum funera conspicient, nec procul hostis erit; ipsa suis manibus forti nova nupta marito imponet galeam Dardanaque arma dabit; arma dabit, dumque arma dabit, simul oscula sumet — hoc genus officii dulce duobus erit — producetque virum dabit et mandata reverti et dicet: “referas ista fac arma Iovi!”

ille ferens dominae mandata recentia secum pugnabit caute respicietque domum.
exuet haec reduci clipeum galeamque resolvet excipietque suo corpora lassa sinu.
Nos sumus incertae, nos anxius omnia cogit, quae possunt fieri, facta putare timor.
dum tamen arma gerens diverso miles in orbe, quae referat vultus est mihi cera tuos:
illi blanditias, illi tibi debita verba dicimus, amplexus accipit illa meos.
crede mihi, plus est, quam quod videatur, imago;
adde sonum cerae, Protesilaus erit.
hanc specto teneoque sinu pro coniuge vero et tamquam possit verba referre, queror.
Per reditus corpusque tuum, mea numina, iuro perque pares animi coniugiique faces perque quod ut videam canis albere capillis, quod tecum possis ipse referre, caput,
me tibi venturam comitem, quocumque vocaris,
sive — quod heu! timeo — sive superstes eris.
ultima mandato claudetur epistula parvo:
si tibi cura mei, sit tibi cura tui!

XIV. Hypermestra Lynceo

Mittit Hypermestra de tot modo fratribus uni;
cetera nuptarum crimine turba iacet.
clausa domo teneor gravibusque coercita vinclis;
est mihi supplicii causa fuisse piam.
quod manus extimuit iugulo demittere ferrum, sum rea; laudarer, si scelus ausa forem.
esse ream praestat, quam sic placuisse parenti;
non piget immunes caedis habere manus.
me pater igne licet, quem non violavimus, urat, quaeque aderant sacris, tendat in ora faces aut illo iugulet, quem non bene tradidit ensem, ut qua non cecidit vir nece, nupta cadam, — non tamen ut dicant morientia “paenitet!” ora, efficiet. non est, quam piget esse piam!
paeniteat sceleris Danaum saevasque sorores;
hic solet eventus facta nefanda sequi.
Cor pavet admonitu temeratae sanguine noctis et subitus dextrae praepedit ossa tremor.
quam tu caede putes fungi potuisse mariti, scribere de facta non sibi caede timet!
Sed tamen experiar. modo facta crepuscula terris, ultima pars lucis primaque noctis erat.
ducimur Inachides magni sub tecta Pelasgi et socer armatas accipit ipse nurus.
undique conlucent praecinctae lampades auro;
dantur in invitos impia tura focos.
vulgus “Hymen, Hymenae!” vocant. fugit ille vocantes;
ipsa Iovis coniunx cessit ab urbe sua.
ecce mero dubii comitum clamore frequentes flore novo madidas impediante comas, in thalamos laeti — thalamos sua busta — feruntur strataque corporibus funere digna premunt.

lamque cibo vinoque graves somnoque iacebant securumque quies alta per Argos erat.
circum me gemitus morientum audire videbar et tamen audibam quodque verebar, erat.
sanguis abit, mentemque calor corpusque relinquit inque novo iacui frigida facta toro.
ut leni Zephyro graciles vibrantur aristae, frigida populeas ut quatit aura comas, aut sic, aut etiam tremui magis. ipse iacebas quaeque tibi dederant vina, soporis eras.
Excussere metum violenti iussa parentis;
erigor et capio tela tremente manu.
non ego falsa loquar. ter acutum sustulit ensem,
ter male sublato reccidit ense manus.
admovi iugulo sine me tibi vera fateri; [tandem victa mei saeva formidine patris] admovi iugulo tela paterna tuo;
sed timor et pietas crudelibus obstitit ausis castaque mandatum dextra refugit opus.
purpureos laniata sinus, laniata capillos exiguo dixi talia verba sono: “saevus, Hypermestra, pater est tibi; iussa parentis effice; germanis sit comes iste suis!
femina sum et virgo, natura mitis et annis;
non faciunt molles ad fera tela manus.
quin age dumque iacet, fortis imitare sorores;
credibile est caesos omnibus esse viros.

si manus haec aliquam posset committere caedem, morte foret dominae sanguinolenta suae.
at meruere necem patruelia regna tenendo;
quae tamen externis danda forent generis finge viros meruisse mori: quid fecimus ipsae?
quo mihi commisso non licet esse piae?

quid mihi cum ferro? quo bellica tela puellae?
aptior est digitis lana colusque meis.”
Haec ego. dumque queror, lacrimae sua verba sequuntur deque meis oculis in tua membra cadunt.
dum petis amplexus sopitaque bracchia iactas, paene manus telo saucia facta tua est.
iamque patrem famulosque patris lucemque timebam.
expulerunt somnos haec mea dicta tuos: “surge age, Belide, de tot modo fratribus unus!
nox tibi, ni properas, ista perennis erit!”
territus exurgis, fugit omnis inertia somni, adspicis in timida fortia tela manu.
quaerenti causam “dum nox sinit, effuge!” dixi, dum nox atra sinit, tu fugis, ipsa moror.
Mane erat et Danaus generos ex caede iacentes dinumerat. summae criminis unus abes.
fert male cognatae iacturam mortis in uno et queritur facti sanguinis esse parum.
abstrahor a patriis pedibus raptamque capillis
— haec meruit pietas praemia? — carcer habet.
Scilicet ex illo lunonia permanet ira, cum bos ex homine est, ex bove facta dea —
at satis est poenae teneram mugisse puellam nec modo formosam posse placere Iovi.
adstitit in ripa liquidi nova vacca parentis cornuaque in patriis non sua vidit aquis conatoque queri mugitus edidit ore territaque est forma, territa voce sua.
quid furis, infelix? quid te miraris in unda?
quid numeras factos ad nova membra pedes?
illa Iovis magni paelex metuenda sorori fronde levas nimiam caespitibusque famem; fonte bibis spectasque tuam stupefacta figuram et, te ne feriant quae geris arma, times.
quaeque modo, ut posses etiam Iove digna videri, dives eras, nuda nuda recumbis humo.

per mare, per terras cognataque flumina curris;
dat mare, dant amnes, dat tibi terra viam.
quae tibi causa fugae? quid, io! freta longa pererras?
non poteris vultus effugere ipsa tuos.
Inachi, quo properas? eadem sequerisque fugisque; tu tibi dux comiti, tu comes ipsa duci.
Per septem Nilus portus emissus in aequor exiit insana paelicis ora bove.
ultima quid referam, quorum mihi cana senectus auctor? dant anni quod querar, ecce, mei.
bella pater patruusque gerunt; regnoque domoque pellimur; eiectos ultimus orbis habet.
Ille ferox solus solio sceptroque potitur;
cum sene nos inopi turba vagamur inops.
de fratrum populo pars exiguissima restat;
quique dati leto, quaeque dedere, fleo.
nam mihi quot fratres, totidem periire sorores;
accipiat lacrimas utraque turba meas.
en ego, quod vivis, poenae crucianda reservor:
quid fiet sonti, cum rea laudis agar?
et consanguineae quondam centesima turbae infelix uno fratre manente cadam.
At tu, siqua pia, Lynceu, tibi cura sororis quaeque tibi tribui munera, dignus habes, vel fer opem vel dede neci; defunctaque vita corpora furtivis insuper adde rogis et sepeli lacrimis perfusa fidelibus ossa sculptaque sint titulo nostra sepulcra brevi: “exul Hypermestra, pretium pietatis iniquum, quam mortem fratri depulit, ipsa tulit.” Scribere plura libet, sed pondere lapsa catenae est manus et vires subtrahit ipse timor.

XV. Sappho Phaoni

Ecquid, ut adspecta est studiosae littera dextrae, Protinus est oculis cognita nostra tuis?
an, nisi legisses auctoris nomina Sapphus, hoc breve nescires unde veniret opus?
Forsitan et quare mea sint alterna requiras carmina, cum lyricis sim magis apta modis:
flendus amor meus est; elegiae flebile carmen;
non facit ad lacrimas barbitos ulla meas.
Uror ut indomitis ignem exercentibus Euris fertilis accensis messibus ardet ager.
arva Phaon celebrat diversa Typhoidos Aetnae;
me calor Aetnaeo non minor igne tenet.
nec mihi, dispositis quae iungam carmina nervis, proveniunt; vacuae carmina mentis opus.
nec me Pyrrhides Methymniadesve puellae, nec me Lesbiadum cetera turba iuvant.
vilis Anactorie, vilis mihi candida Cydro, non oculis grata est Atthis ut ante meis atque aliae centum, quas non sine crimine amavi.
improbe, multarum quod fuit, unus habes!
Est in te facies, sunt apti lusibus anni,
o facies oculis insidiosa meis!
sume fidem et pharetram — fies manifestus Apollo;
accedant capiti cornua — Bacchus eris.
et Phoebus Daphnen, et Cnosida Bacchus amavit nec norat lyricos illa vel illa modos.
at mihi Pegasides blandissima carmina dictant;
iam canitur toto nomen in orbe meum;
nec plus Alcaeus, consors patriaeque lyraeque laudis habet, quamvis grandius ille sonet.
si mihi difficilis formam natura negavit,

ingenio formae damna repende meae.
sum brevis. at nomen, quod terras impleat omnes, est mihi: mensuram nominis ipsa fero.
candida si non sum, placuit Cepheia Perseo Andromede patriae fusca colore suae.
et variis albae iunguntur saepe columbae et niger a viridi turtur amatur ave.
si nisi quae facie poterit te digna videri, nulla futura tua est, nulla futura tua est!
At mea cum legerem, sat iam formosa videbar:
unam iurabas usque decere loqui.
cantabam, memini (meminerunt omnia amantes) oscula cantanti tu mihi rapta dabas.
hoc quoque laudabas, omni tibi parte placebam sed tunc praecipue, cum fit Amoris opus.
tunc te plus solito lascivia nostra iuvabat crebraque mobilitas aptaque verba ioco et quod, ubi amborum fuerat confusa voluptas, plurimus in lasso corpore languor erat.
Nunc tibi Sicelides veniunt nova praeda puellae.
quid mihi cum Lesbo? Sicelis esse volo.
o vos erronem tellure remittite vestra, Nisiades matres Nisiadesque nurus!
nec vos decipiant blandae mendacia linguae: quod vobis dicit, dixerat ante mihi.
tu quoque quae montes celebras, Erycina, Sicanos (nam tua sum) vati consule, diva, tuae!
an gravis inceptum peragit fortuna tenorem et manet in cursu semper acerba suo?
sex mihi natales ierant, cum lecta parentis ante diem lacrimas ossa bibere meas.
arsit inops frater meretricis captus amore mixtaque cum turpi damna pudore tulit.
factus inops agili peragit freta caerula remo, quasque male amisit, nunc male quaerit opes.
me quoque, quod monui bene multa fideliter, odit;

hoc mihi libertas, hoc pia lingua dedit.
et tamquam desit, quae me sine fine fatiget, accumulat curas filia parva meas.
Ultima tu nostris accedis causa querelis;
    non agitur vento nostra carina suo.
ecce iacent collo sparsi sine lege capilli nec premit articulos lucida gemma meos.
veste tegor vili, nullum est in crinibus aurum, non Arabum noster dona capillus habet.
cui colar infelix aut cui placuisse laborem?
    ille mei cultus unicus auctor abes.
molle meum levibusque cor est violabile telis et semper causa est, cur ego semper amem, sive ita nascenti legem dixere Sorores nec data sunt vitae fila severa meae, sive abeunt studia in mores artisque magistra ingenium nobis molle Thalia facit.
quid mirum, si me primae lanuginis aetas abstulit atque anni quos vir amare potest?
hunc ne pro Cephalo raperes, Aurora, timebam!
    (et faceres sed te prima rapina tenet!)
hunc si conspiciat, quae conspicit omnia, Phoebe, iussus erit somnos continuare Phaon.
hunc Venus in caelum curru vexisset eburneo, sed videt et Marti posse placere suo.
o nec adhuc iuvenis, nec iam puer, utilis aetas,
    o decus atque aevi gloria magna tui, huc ades inque sinus, formose, relabere nostros:
    non ut ames oro, me sed amare sinas!
Scribimus et lacrimis oculi rorantur obortis;
    adspice quam sit in hoc multa litura loco.
si tam certus eras hinc ire, modestius isses, et modo dixisses "Lesbi puella, vale!"
non tecum lacrimas, non oscula nostra tulisti;
    denique non timui, quod dolitura fui.
nil de te mecum est, nisi tantum iniuria. nec tu,

admoneat quod te, pignus amantis habes.
non mandata dedi. neque enim mandata dedissem ulla, nisi ut nolles immemor esse mei.
per tibi qui numquam longe discedit Amorem perque novem iuro, numina nostra, deas, cum mihi nescio quis “fugiunt tua gaudia” dixit nec me flere diu, nec potuisse loqui;
et lacrimae deerant oculis et verba palato, adstrictum gelido frigore pectus erat.
postquam se dolor invenit nec pectora plangi nec puduit scissis exululare comis, non aliter quam si nati pia mater adempti portet ad exstructos corpus inane rogos.
gaudet et e nostro crescit maerore Charaxus frater et ante oculos itque reditque meos.
utque pudenda mei videatur causa doloris, “quid dolet haec? certe filia vivit!” ait.
non veniunt in idem pudor atque amor; omne videbat vulgus; eram lacero pectus aperta sinu.
Tu mihi cura, Phaon; te somnia nostra reducunt — somnia formoso candidiora die.
illic te invenio, quamvis regionibus absis;
sed non longa satis gaudia somnus habet.
saepe tuos nostra cervice onerare lacertos, saepe tuae videor supposuisse meos.
oscula cognosco, quae tu committere lingua aptaque consuevas accipere, apta dare.
blandior interdum verisque simillima verba eloquor et vigilant sensibus ora meis; — ulteriora pudet narrare, sed omnia fiunt — et iuvat — et siccae non licet esse mihi.
At cum se Titan ostendit et omnia secum, tam cito me somnos destituisse queror;
antra nemusque peto, tamquam nemus antraque prosint:
conscia deliciis illa fuere meis.
illuc mentis inops, ut quam furialis Enyo attigit, in collo crine iacente feror.

antra vident oculi scabro pendentia tofo, quae mihi Mygdonii marmoris instar erant:
invenio silvam, quae saepe cubilia nobis praebuit et multa texit opaca coma.
at non invenio dominum silvaeque meumque.
    vile solum locus est — dos erat ille loci.
cognovi pressas noti mihi caespitis herbas;
    de nostro curvum pondere gramen erat.
incubui tetigique locum qua parte fuisti;
    grata prius lacrimas combibit herba meas.
quin etiam rami positis lugere videntur frondibus et nullae dulce queruntur aves.
sola virum non ulta pie maestissima mater concinit Ismarium Daulias ales Ityn.
ales Ityn, Sappho desertos cantat amores;
    hactenus, ut media cetera nocte, silent.
Est nitidus vitroque magis perlucidus omni fons sacer; hunc multi numen habere putant.
quem supra ramos expandit aquatica lotos,
    una nemus, tenero caespite terra viret.
hic ego cum lassos posuissem flebilis artus, constitit ante oculos Naias una meos;
constitit et dixit: “quoniam non ignibus aequis ureris, Ambracia est terra petenda tibi.
Phoebus ab excelso, quantum patet, adspicit aequor:
    Actiacum populi Leucadiumque vocant.
hinc se Deucalion Pyrrhae succensus amore misit, et illaeso corpore pressit aquas.
nec mora, versus amor fugit lentissima mersi pectora; Deucalion igne levatus erat.
hanc legem locus ille tenet. pete protinus altam Leucada nec saxo desiluisse time!”
Ut monuit, cum voce abiit. ego frigida surgo nec lacrimas oculi continuere mei.
ibimus, o nymphe, monstrataque saxa petemus;

sit procul insano victus amore timor.
quidquid erit, melius quam nunc erit. aura, subito —
et mea non magnum corpora pondus habent.
tu quoque, mollis Amor, pinnas suppone cadenti, ne sim Leucadiae mortua crimen aquae.
inde chelyn Phoebos, communia munera, ponam, et sub ea versus unus et alter erunt: “grata lyram posui tibi, Phoebe, poetria Sappho:
convenit illa mihi, convenit illa tibi.”
Cur tamen Actiacas miseram me mittis ad oras, cum profugum possis ipse referre pedem?
tu mihi Leucadia potes esse salubrior unda;
et forma et meritis tu mihi Phoebus eris.
an potes, o scopulis undaque ferocior omni, si moriar, titulum mortis habere meae?
a quanto melius tecum mea pectora iungi, quam saxis poterant praecipitanda dari!
haec sunt illa, Phaon, quae tu laudare solebas visaue sunt totiens ingeniosa tibi.
nunc vellem facunda forem! dolor artibus obstat ingeniumque meis substitit omne malis.
non mihi respondent veteres in carmina vires;
plectra dolore tacent muta, dolore lyra est.
Lesbides aequoreae, nupturaque nuptaque proles, Lesbides, Aeolia nomina dicta lyra, Lesbides, infamem quae me fecistis amatae, desinite ad citharas turba venire meas!
abstulit omne Phaon, quod vobis ante placebat, me miseram! dixi quam modo paene: “meus.”
efficite ut redeat. vates quoque vestra redibit.
ingenio vires ille dat, ille rapit.
Ecquid ago precibus pectusve agreste movetur, an riget et Zephyri verba caduca ferunt?
qui mea verba ferunt, vellem tua vela referrent;
hoc te, si saperes, lente, decebat opus.
sive redis, puppique tuae votiva parantur munera, quid laceras pectora nostra mora?

solve ratem! Venus orta mari mare praestat amanti.
aura dabit cursum — tu modo solve ratem!
ipse gubernator residens in puppe Cupido;
ipse dabit tenera vela legetque manu.
sive iuvat longe fugisse Pelasgida Sappho (nec tamen invenies, cur ego digna fugi) hoc saltem miserae crudelis epistula dicat, ut mihi Leucadiae fata petantur aquae.

XVI. Paris Helenae

Hanc tibi Priamides mitto, Ledaea, salutem, quae tribui sola te mihi dante potest.
eloquar, an flammae non est opus indice notae, et plus quam vellem, iam meus extat amor?
ille quidem lateat malim, dum tempora dentur laetitiae mixtos non habitura metus.
sed male dissimulo; quis enim celaverit ignem, lumine qui semper proditur ipse suo?
si tamen expectas, vocem quoque rebus ut addam:
    uror — habes animi nuntia verba mei.
parce, precor, fasso, nec vultu cetera duro perlege, sed formae conveniente tuae.
iamdudum gratum est, quod epistula nostra recepta spem facit, hoc recipi me quoque posse modo.
quae rata sit; nec te frustra promiserit, opto, hoc mihi quae suasit, mater Amoris, iter.
namque ego divino monitu — ne nescia pecces — advehor et coepto non leve numen adest.
praemia magna quidem, sed non indebita posco:
    pollicita est thalamo te Cytherea meo.
hac duce Sigeo dubias a litore feci longa Phereclea per freta puppe vias.
illa dedit faciles auras ventosque secundos — in mare nimirum ius habet orta mari.
perstet et ut pelagi, sic pectoris adiuvet aestum, deferat in portus et mea vota suos.
attulimus flammam, non hic invenimus, illas.
    hae mihi tam longae causa fuere viae.
nam neque tristis hiems neque nos huc appulit error;
    Taenaris est classi terra petita meae.
nec me crede fretum merces portante carina findere — quas habeo, di tueantur opes.

nec venio Graias veluti spectator ad urbes;
oppida sunt regni divitiora mei.
te peto, quam pepigit lecto Venus aurea nostro;
te prius optavi quam mihi nota fores.
ante tuos animo vidi quam lumine vultus;
prima tulit vulnus nuntia fama tui.
nec tamen est mirum, si sicut oportuit arcu, missilibus telis eminus ictus amo.
sic placuit fati; quae ne convellere temptes, accipe cum vera dicta relata fide.
matris adhuc utero partu remorante tenebar;
iam gravidus iusto pondere venter erat.
illa sibi ingentem visa est sub imagine somni flammiferam pleno reddere ventre facem.
terrata consurgit metuendaque noctis opacae visa seni Priamo, vatibus ille refert.
arsurum Paridis vates canit Ilion igni — pectoris, ut nunc est, fax fuit illa mei.
forma vigorque animi, quamvis de plebe videbar, indicium tectae nobilitatis erat.
est locus in mediis nemorosae vallibus Idae devius et piceis ilicibusque frequens, qui nec ovis placidae nec amantis saxa capellae nec patulo tardae carpitur ore bovis; hinc ego Dardaniae muros excelsaque tecta et freta prospiciens arbore nixus eram — ecce, pedum pulsu visa est mihi terra moveri — vera loquar veri vix habitura fidem — constitit ante oculos actus velocibus alis Atlantis magni Pleionesque nepos — fas vidisse fuit, fas sit mihi visa referre — inque dei digitis aurea virga fuit.
tresque simul divae, Venus et cum Pallade Iuno, graminibus teneros inposuere pedes.
obstupui, gelidusque comas erexerat horror,

cum mihi 'pone metum!' nuntius ales ait:
'arbiter es formae; certamina siste dearum, vincere quae forma digna sit una duas.'
neve recusarem, verbis Iovis imperat et se protinus aethera tollit in astra via.
mens mea convaluit, subitoque audacia venit nec timui vultu quamque notare meo.
vincere erant omnes dignae iudexque querebar non omnes causam vincere posse suam.
sed tamen ex illis iam tunc magis una placebat, hanc esse ut scires, unde movetur amor.
tantaque vincendi cura est; ingentibus ardent iudicium donis sollicitare meum.
regna Iovis coniunx, virtutem filia iactat;
ipse potens dubito fortis an esse velim.
dulce Venus risit; 'nec te, Pari, munera tangant utraque suspensi plena timoris,' ait;
'nos dabimus, quod ames, et pulchrae filia Ladae ibit in amplexus pulchrior illa tuos.'
dixit, et ex aequo donis formaque probata victorem caelo rettulit illa pedem.
interea, credo, versis ad prospera fatis regius agnoscor per rata signa puer.
laeta domus nato per tempora longa recepto, addit et ad festos hunc quoque Troia diem.
utque ego te cupio, sic me cupiere puellae;
multarum votum sola tenere potes.
nec tantum regum natae petiere ducumque, sed nymphis etiam curaque amorque fui.
quas super Oenonen facies mutarer in orbem nec Priamo est a te dignior ulla nurus.
sed mihi cunctarum subeunt fastidia, postquam coniugii spes est, Tyndari, facta tui.
te vigilans oculis, animo te nocte videbam, lumina cum placido victa sopore iacent.
quid facies praesens, quae nondum visa placebas?

ardebam, quamvis hic procul ignis erat.
nec potui debere mihi spem longius istam, caerulea peterem quin mea vota via.
Troia caeduntur Phrygia pineta securi quaeque erat aequoreis utilis arbor aquis;
ardua proceris spoliantur Gargara silvis, innumerasque mihi longa dat Ida trabes.
fundatura citas flectuntur robora naves textitur et costis panda carina suis.
addimus antennas et vela sequentia malo accipit et pictos puppis adunca deos; qua tamen ipse vehor, comitata Cupidine parvo sponsor coniugii stat dea picta sui.
imposita est factae postquam manus ultima classi, protinus Aegaeis ire lubebat aquis.
at pater et genetrix inhibent mea vota rogando propositumque pia voce morantur iter;
et soror effusis ut erat Cassandra capillis, cum vellent nostrae iam dare vela rates,
'quo ruis?' exclamat, 'referes incendia tecum!
quanta per has nescis flamma petatur aquas!'
vera fuit vates; dictos invenimus ignes et ferus in molli pectore flagrat amor.
portubus egredior ventisque ferentibus usus applicor in terras, Oebali nympha, tuas.
excipit hospitio vir me tuus: hoc quoque factum non sine consilio numinibusque deum.
ille quidem ostendit, quidquid Lacedaemone tota ostendi dignum conspicuumque fuit;
sed mihi laudatam cupienti cernere formam lumina nil aliud quo caperentur erat.
ut vidi, obstipui praecordiaque intima sensi attonitus curis intumuisse novis.
his similes vultus, quantum reminiscor, habebat, venit in arbitrium cum Cytherea meum.
si tu venisses pariter certamen in illud,

in dubium Veneris palma futura fuit.
magna quidem de te rumor praeconia fecit, nullaque de facie nescia terra tua est;
nec tibi par usquam Phrygia nec solis ab ortu inter formosas altera nomen habet!
credis et hoc nobis? — minor est tua gloria vero famaque de forma paene maligna tua est.
plus hic invenio, quam quod promiserat illa, et tua materia gloria victa sua est.
ergo arsit merito, qui noverat omnia, Theseus, et visa es tanto digna rapina viro, more tuae gentis nitida dum nuda palaestra ludis et es nudis femina mixta viris.
quod rapuit, laudo; miror quod reddidit umquam.
tam bona constanter praeda tenenda fuit.
ante recessisset caput hoc cervice cruenta, quam tu de thalamis abstraherere meis.
tene manus umquam nostrae dimittere vellent?
tene meo paterer vivus abire sinu?
si reddenda fores, aliquid tamen ante tulissem nec Venus ex toto nostra fuisset iners.
vel mihi virginitas esset libata vel illud quod poterat salva virginitate rapi.
da modo te, quae sit Paridis constantia nosces:
flamma rogi flammis finiet una meas.
praeposui regnis ego te, quae maxima quondam pollicita est nobis nupta sororque Iovis, dumque tuo possem circumdare brachia collo, contempta est virtus Pallade dante mihi.
nec piget aut umquam stulte legisse videbor;
permanet in voto mens mea firma suo.
spem modo ne nostram fieri patiare caducam, deprecor, o tanto digna labore peti!
non ego coniugium generosae degener opto, nec mea, crede mihi, turpiter uxor eris.
Pliada, si quaeres, in nostra gente Iovemque invenies, medios ut taceamus avos.

sceptra parens Asiae, qua nulla beatior ora est, finibus inmensis vix obeunda, tenet.
innumeras urbes atque aurea tecta videbis quaeque suos dicas templa decere deos.
Ilion adspicies firmataque turribus altis moenia, Phoebeae structa canore lyrae.
quid tibi de turba narrem numeroque virorum?
vix populum tellus sustinet illa suum.
occurrent denso tibi Troades agmine matres nec capient Phrygias atria nostra nurus.
o quotiens dices: 'quam pauper Achaia nostra est!'
una domus quaevis urbis habebit opes.
nec mihi fas fuerit Sparten contemnere vestram:
in qua tu nata es, terra beata mihi est.
parca sed est Sparte, tu cultu divite digna;
ad talem formam non facit iste locus.
hanc faciem largis sine fine paratibus uti deliciisque decet luxuriare novis.
cum videas cultus nostra de gente virorum, qualem Dardanias credis habere nurus?
da modo te facilem nec dedignare maritum, rure Therapnaeo nata puella, Phrygem.
Phryx erat et nostro genitus de sanguine, qui nunc cum dis potando nectare miscet aquas.
Phryx erat Aurorae coniunx, tamen abstulit illum extremum noctis quae dea finit iter.
Phryx etiam Anchises, volucrum cui mater Amorum gaudet in Idaeis concubuisse iugis.
nec, puto, conlatis forma Menelaus et annis iudice te nobis anteferendus erit.
non dabimus certe socerum tibi clara fugantem lumina, qui trepidos a dape vertat equos; nec Priamo pater est soceri de caede cruentus et qui Myrtoas crimine signat aquas; nec proavo Stygia nostro captantur in unda

poma, nec in mediis quaeritur umor aquis.
quid tamen hoc refert, si te tenet ortus ab illis?
cogitur huic domui Iuppiter esse socer.
heu facinus! totis indignus noctibus ille te tenet amplexu perfruiturque tuo;
at mihi conspiceris posita vix denique mensa multaque quae laedant hoc quoque tempus habet.
hostibus eveniant convivia talia nostris, experior posito qualia saepe mero.
paenitet hospitii, cum me spectante lacertos imponit collo rusticus iste tuo.
rumpor et invideo — quid ni tamen omnia narrem? — membra superiecta cum tua veste fovet.
oscula cum vero coram non dura daretis, ante oculos posui pocula sumpta meos; lumina demitto cum te tenet artius ille, crescit et invito lentus in ore cibus.
saepe dedi gemitus; et te, lasciva, notavi in gemitu risum non tenuisse meo.
saepe mero volui flammam compescere, at illa crevit, et ebrietas ignis in igne fuit.
multaque ne videam, versa cervice recumbo;
sed revocas oculos protinus ipsa meos.
quid faciam, dubito; dolor est meus illa videre, sed dolor a facie maior abesse tua.
qua licet et possum, luctor celare furorem, sed tamen apparet dissimulatus amor.
nec tibi verba damus; sentis mea vulnera, sentis;
atque utinam soli sint ea nota tibi.
a, quotiens lacrimis venientibus ora reflexi, ne causam fletus quaereret ille mei.
a, quotiens aliquem narraui potus amorem, ad vulnus referens singula verba tuos, indiciumque mei ficto sub nomine feci;
ille ego, si nescis, verus amator eram.
quin etiam ut possem verbis petulantius uti,

non semel ebrietas est simulata mihi.
Proditum sunt, meministi, tunica tua pectora laxa atque oculis aditum nuda dedere meis pectora vel puris nivibus vel lacte tuamve complexo matrem candidiora love.
dum stupeo visis — nam pocula forte tenebam — tortilis a digitis excidit ansa meis.
oscula si natae dederas, ego protinus illa Hermiones tenero laetus ab ore tuli.
et modo cantabam veteres resupinus amores et modo per nutum signa tegenda dabam.
et comitum primas Clymenen Aethramque, tuarum ausus sum blandis nuper adire sonis;
quae mihi non aliud, quam formidare locutae orantis medias deseruere preces.
di facerent, pretium magni certaminis esses, teque suo posset victor habere toro, ut tulit Hippomenes Schoeneida praemia cursus, venit ut in Phrygios Hippodamia sinus, ut ferus Alcides Acheloia cornua fregit, dum petit amplexus, Deianira, tuos.
nostra per has leges audacia fortiter isset teque mei scires esse laboris opus.
nunc mihi nil superest nisi te, formosa, precari amplectique tuos, si patiare, pedes.
o decus, o praesens geminorum gloria fratrum,
o love digna viro, ni love nata fores, aut ego Sigeos repetam te coniuge portus aut hic Taenaria contegar exul humo!
non mea sunt summa leviter destricta sagitta pectora; descendit vulnus ad ossa meum!
hoc mihi, nam repeto, fore ut a caeleste sagitta figar, erat verax vaticinata soror.
parce datum fatis, Helene, contemnere amorem — sic habeas faciles in tua vota deos.
multa quidem subeunt; sed coram ut plura loquamur, excipe me lecto nocte silente tuo.

an pudet et metuis Venerem temerare maritam castaque legitimi fallere iura tori?
a, nimium simplex Helene, ne rustica dicam, hanc faciem culpa posse carere putas?
aut faciem mutes aut sis non dura, necesse est;
lis est cum forma magna pudicitiae.
Iuppiter his gaudet, gaudet Venus aurea furtis;
haec tibi nempe patrem furta dedere Iovem.
vix fieri, si sunt vires in semine amorum, et Iovis et Ladae filia casta potes.
casta tamen tum sis, cum te mea Troia tenebit, et tua sim quaeso crimina solus ego.
nunc ea peccemus quae corriget hora iugalis, si modo promisit non mihi vana Venus.
sed tibi et hoc suadet rebus, non voce, maritus, neve sui furtis hospitis obstet, abest.
non habuit tempus, quo Cresia regna videret aptius — o mira calliditate virum!
'res, et ut Idaeae mando tibi,' dixit iturus,
'curam pro nobis hospitis, uxor, agas.'
neglegis absentis, testor, mandata mariti;
cura tibi non est hospitis ulla tui.
huncine tu speras hominem sine pectore dotes posse satis formae, Tyndari, nosse tuae?
falleris: ignorat, nec, si bona magna putaret, quae tenet, externo crederet illa viro.
ut te nec mea vox nec te meus incitet ardor, cogimur ipsius commoditate frui:
aut erimus stulti, sic ut superemus et ipsum, si tam securum tempus abibit iners.
paene suis ad te manibus deducit amantem;
utere mandantis simplicitate viri!
sola iaces viduo tam longa nocte cubili;
in viduo iaceo solus et ipse toro.
te mihi meque tibi communia gaudia iungant;

candidior medio nox erit illa die.
tunc ego iurabo quaevis tibi numina meque adstringam verbis in sacra vestra meis;
tunc ego, si non est fallax fiducia nostri, efficiam praesens, ut mea regna petas.
si pudet et metuis ne me videare secuta, ipse reus sine te criminis huius ero.
nam sequar Aegidae factum fratrumque tuorum;
exemplo tangi non propiore potes.
te rapuit Theseus, geminas Leucippidas illi;
quartus in exemplis adnumerabor ego.
Troia classis adest armis instructa virisque;
iam facient celeres remus et aura vias.
ibis Dardanias ingens regina per urbes, teque novam credet vulgus adesse deam, quaque feres gressus, adolebunt cinnama flammae, caesaque sanguineam victima planget humum.
dona pater fratresque et cum genetrice sorores Iliadesque omnes totaque Troia dabit.
ei mihi! pars a me vix dicitur ulla futuri.
plura feres quam quae littera nostra refert.
nec tu rapta time, ne nos fera bella sequantur, concitet et vires Graecia magna suas.
tot prius abductis ecqua est repetita per arma?
crede mihi, vanos res habet ista metus.
nomine ceperunt Aquilonis Erechthida Thraces et tuta a bello Bistonis ora fuit.
Phasida puppe nova vexit Pagasaeus Iason, laesa neque est Colcha Thessala terra manu.
te quoque qui rapuit, rapuit Minoida Theseus;
nulla tamen Minos Cretas ad arma vocat.
terror in his ipso maior solet esse periculo;
quaeque timere libet, pertimuisse pudet.
finge tamen, si vis, ingens consurgere bellum:
et mihi sunt vires, et mea tela nocent.
nec minor est Asiae quam vestrae copia terrae:

illa viris dives, dives abundat equis.
nec plus Atrides animi Menelaus habebit quam Paris aut armis antefendus erit.
paene puer caesis abducta armenta recepi hostibus et causam nominis inde tuli.
paene puer iuvenes vario certamine vici,
in quibus Ilioneus Deiphobusque fuit.
neve putes, non me nisi cominus esse timendum, figitur in iusso nostra sagitta loco.
num potes haec illi primae dare facta iuventae, instruere Atriden num potes arte mea?
omnia si dederis, numquid dabis Hectora fratrem?
unus is innumeri militis instar erit.
quid valeam nescis et te mea robora fallunt;
ignoras cui sis nupta futura viro.
aut igitur nullo belli repetere tumultu, aut cedent Marti Dorica castra meo.
nec tamen indignus pro tanta sumere ferrum coniuge; certamen praemia magna movent.
tu quoque, si de te totus contenderit orbis, nomen ab aeterna posteritate feres spe modo non timida dis hinc egressa secundis exige cum plena munera pacta fide.

XVII. Helene Paridi

Si mihi quae legi, Pari, non legisse liceret, servarem numeros sicut et ante probae.
Nunc oculos tua cum violarit epistula nostros, non rescribendi gloria visa levis.
ausus es hospitii temeratis advena sacris legitimam nuptae sollicitare fidem!
scilicet idcirco ventosa per aequora vectum exceptit portu Taenaris ora suo nec tibi, diversa quamvis e gente venires, oppositas habuit regia nostra fores, esset ut officii merces iniuria tanti?
qui sic intrabas, hospes an hostis eras?
nec dubito quin haec, cum sit tam iusta, vocetur rustica iudicio nostra querela tuo.
rustica sim sane, dum non oblita pudoris dumque tenor vitae sit sine labe meae.
si non est ficto tristis mihi vultus in ore nec sedeo duris torva superciliis, fama tamen clara est, et adhuc sine crimine lusi et laudem de me nullus adulter habet.
quo magis admiror, quae sit fiducia coepti spemque tori dederit quae tibi causa mei.
an quia vim nobis Neptunius attulit heros, rapta semel videor bis quoque digna rapi?
crimen erat nostrum, si delenita fuisset;
cum sim rapta, meum quid nisi nolle fuit?
non tamen e facto fructum tulit ille petitum;
excepto redii passa timore nihil.
oscula luctanti tantummodo pauca protervus abstulit: ulterius nil habet ille mei.
quae tua nequitia est, non his contenta fuisset.

di melius! similis non fuit ille tui.
reddidit intactam minuitque modestia crimen et iuvenem facti paenituisse patet.
Thesea paenituit, Paris ut succederet illi, ne quando nomen non sit in ore meum?
nec tamen irascor — quis enim succenset amanti? — si modo, quem praefers, non simulatur amor.
hoc quoque enim dubito, non quod fiducia desit, aut mea sit facies non bene nota mihi, sed quia credulitas damno solet esse puellis verbaque dicuntur vestra carere fide.
at peccant aliae, matronaque rara pudica est.
quis prohibet raris nomen inesse meum?
nam mea quod visa est tibi mater idonea, cuius exemplo flecti me quoque posse putes, matris in admissio falsa sub imagine Iusae error inest; pluma tectus adulter erat.
nil ego, si peccem, possum nescisse; nec ullus error qui facti crimen obumbret erit.
illa bene erravit vitiumque auctore redemit.
felix in culpa quo Iove dicar ego?
et genus et proavos et regia nomina iactas;
clara satis domus haec nobilitate sua est.
Iuppiter ut soceri proavus taceatur et omne Tantalidae Pelopis Tyndareique decus; dat mihi Leda Iovem cygno decepta parentem, quae falsam gremio credula fovit avem.
i nunc et Phrygiae late primordia gentis cumque suo Priamum Laomedonte refer!
quos ego suspicio; sed qui tibi gloria magna est quintus, is a nostro nomine primus erit.
sceptra tuae quamvis rear esse potentia terrae,
non tamen haec illis esse minora puto.
si iam divitiis locus hic numeroque virorum vincitur, at certe barbara terra tua est.
munera tanta quidem promittit epistula dives ut possint ipsas illa movere deas.

sed si iam vellem fines transire pudoris, tu melior culpa causa futurus eras.
aut ego perpetuo famam sine labe tenebo aut ego te potius quam tua dona sequar.
utque ea non sperno, sic acceptissima semper munera sunt, auctor quae pretiosa facit.
plus multo est, quod amas, quod sum tibi causa laboris, quod per tam longas spes tua venit aquas.
illa quoque, adposita quae nunc facis, improbe, mensa, quamvis experiar dissimulare, noto — cum modo me spectas oculis, lascive, protervis, quos vix instantes lumina nostra ferunt, et modo suspiras, modo pocula proxima nobis sumis, quaque bibi, tu quoque parte bibis.
a, quotiens digitis, quotiens ego tecta notavi signa supercilio paene loquente dari!
et saepe extimui ne vir meus illa videret,
non satis occultis erubique notis.
saepe vel exiguo vel nullo murmure dixi:
'nil pudet hunc!' nec vox haec mea falsa fuit.
orbe quoque in mensae legi sub nomine nostro, quod deducta mero littera fecit, 'amo.'
credere me tamen hoc oculo renuente negavi.
ei mihi, iam didici sic ego posse loqui!
his ego blanditiis, si peccatura fuisset, flecterer; his poterant pectora nostra capi.
est quoque, confiteor, facies tibi rara potestque velle sub amplexus ire puella tuos.
altera sed potius felix sine crimine fiat, quam cadat externo noster amore pudor.
disce modo exemplo formosis posse carere;
est virtus placitis abstinuisse bonis.
quam multos credis iuvenes optare, quod optas?
qui sapiant, oculos an Paris unus habes?
non tu plus cernis, sed plus temerarius audes;

nec tibi plus cordis sed minus oris, adest.
tunc ego te vellem celeri venisse carina, cum mea virginitas mille petita procis.
si te vidissem, primus de mille fuisses;
iudicio veniam vir dabit ipse meo.
ad possessa venis praeceptaque gaudia serus;
spes tua lenta fuit; quod petis, alter habet.
ut tamen optarim fieri tua Troica coniunx, invitam sic me nec Menelaus habet.
desine molle, precor, verbis convellere pectus neve mihi, quam te dicis amare, noce; sed sine quam tribuit sortem fortuna tueri nec spolium nostri turpe pudoris habe.
at Venus hoc pacta est, et in altae vallibus Idae tres tibi se nudas exhibuere deae; unaque cum regnum, belli daret altera laudem
'Tyndaridis coniunx,' tertia dixit, 'eris!' credere vix equidem caelestia corpora possum arbitrio formam supposuisse tuo;
utque sit hoc verum, certe pars altera ficta est, iudicii pretium qua data dicor ego.
non est tanta mihi fiducia corporis, ut me maxima teste dea dona fuisse putem.
contenta est oculis hominum mea forma probari;
laudatrix Venus est invidiosa mihi.
sed nihil infirmo; faveo quoque laudibus istis;
nam, mens, vox quare, quod cupit esse, neget?
nec tu succense nimium mihi creditus aegre;
tarda solet magnis rebus inesse fides.
prima mea est igitur Veneri placuisse voluptas;
proxima, me visam praemia summa tibi, nec te Palladios nec te Iunonis honores auditis Helenae praeposuisse bonis.
ergo ego sum virtus, ego sum tibi nobile regnum?
ferrea sim, si non hoc ego pectus amem.
ferrea, crede mihi, non sum; sed amare repugno illum, quem fieri vix puto posse meum.

quid bibulum curvo proscindere litus aratro spemque sequi coner quam locus ipse negat?
sum rudis ad Veneris furtum nullaque fidelem — di mihi sunt testes! — lusimus arte virum!
nunc quoque, quod tacito mando mea verba libello, fungitur officio littera nostra novo.
felices, quibus usus adest! ego nescia rerum difficilem culpae suspicor esse viam.
ipse malo metus est; iam nunc confundor et omnes in nostris oculos vultibus esse reor.
nec reor hoc falso; sensi mala murmura vulgi et quasdam voces rettulit Aethra mihi.
at tu dissimula, nisi si desistere mavis.
sed cur desistas? dissimulare potes.
lude, sed occulte! maior, non maxima, nobis est data libertas, quod Menelaus abest.
ille quidem procul est, ita re cogente, profectus;
magna fuit subitae iustaque causa viae;
aut mihi sic visum est. ego, cum dubitaret an iret,
'quam primum,' dixi, 'fac rediturus eas!'
omine laetatus dedit oscula, 'resque domusque et tibi sit curae Troicus hospes,' ait.
vix tenui risum, quem dum conpescere luctor, nil illi potui dicere praeter 'erit.'
uela quidem Creten ventis dedit ille secundis;
sed tu non ideo cuncta licere puta!
sic meus hinc vir abest ut me custodiat absens.
an nescis longas regibus esse manus?
forma quoque est oneri; nam quo constantius ore laudamur vestro, iustius ille timet.
quae iuvat, ut nunc est, eadem mihi gloria damno est, et melius famae verba dedisse fuit.
nec quod abest hic me tecum mirare relictam;
moribus et vitae credidit ille meae.
de facie metuit, vitae confidit, et illum securum probitas, forma timere facit.

tempora ne pereant ultro data praecipis, utque simplicis utamur commoditate viri.
et libet et timeo, nec adhuc exacta voluntas est satis; in dubio pectora nostra labant.
et vir abest nobis et tu sine coniuge dormis, inque vicem tua me, te mea forma capit;
et longae noctes et iam sermone coimus et tu, me miseram! blandus, et una domus.
et peream, si non invitant omnia culpam;
nescio quo tardor sed tamen ipsa metu.
quod male persuades, utinam bene cogere posses!
vi mea rusticitas excutienda fuit.
utilis interdum est ipsis iniuria passis.
sic certe felix esse coacta forem.
dum novus est, potius coepto pugnemus amori!
flamma recens parva sparsa resedit aqua.
certus in hospitibus non est amor; errat, ut ipsi, cumque nihil speres firmitus esse, fugit.
Hypsipyle testis, testis Minoia virgo est;
in non exhibitis utraque lusa toris.
tu quoque dilectam multos, infide, per annos diceris Oenonen destituisse tuam.
nec tamen ipse negas; et nobis omnia de te quaerere, si nescis, maxima cura fuit.
adde quod, ut cupias constans in amore manere,
non potes. expediunt iam tua vela Phryges;
dum loqueris mecum, dum nox sperata paratur, qui ferat in patriam, iam tibi ventus erit.
cursibus in mediis novitatis plena relinques gaudia; cum ventis noster abibit amor.
an sequar, ut suades, laudataque Pergama visam pronurus et magni Laumedontis ero?
non ita contemno volucris praeconia famae, ut probris terras impleat illa meis.
quid de me poterit Sparte, quid Achaia tota, quid gentes Asiae, quid tua Troia loqui?

quid Priamus de me, Priami quid sentiet uxor totque tui fratres Dardanidesque nurus?
tu quoque qui poteris fore me sperare fidelem et non exemplis anxius esse tuis?
quicumque Iliacos intraverit advena portus, is tibi solliciti causa timoris erit.
ipse mihi quotiens iratus 'adultera!' dices, oblitus nostro crimen inesse tuum!
delicti fies idem reprehensor et auctor.
terra, precor, vultus obruat ante meos!
at fruar Iliacis opibus cultuque beato donaque promissis uberiora feram:
purpura nempe mihi pretiosaque texta dabuntur, congestoque auri pondere dives ero!
da veniam fassae! non sunt tua munera tanti;
nescio quo tellus me tenet ista modo.
quis mihi, si laedar, Phrygiis succurret in oris?
unde petam fratres, unde parentis opem?
omnia Medae fallax promisit Iason:
pulsa est Aesonia num minus illa domo?
non erat Aeetes, ad quem despecta rediret, non Idyia parens Chalciopëve soror.
tale nihil timeo, sed nec Medea timebat;
fallitur augurio spes bona saepe suo.
omnibus invenies, quae nunc iactantur in alto, navibus a portu Iene fuisse fretum.
fax quoque me terret, quam se peperisse cruentam ante diem partus est tua visa parens;
et vatum timeo monitus, quos igne Pelasgo Ilion arsurum praemonuisse ferunt.
utque favet Cytherea tibi, quia vicit habetque parta per arbitrium bina tropaea tuum, sic illas vereor, quae, si tua gloria vera est, iudice te causam non tenuere duae;
nec dubito, quin te si prosequar arma parentur.

ibit per gladios, ei mihi! noster amor.
an fera Centauris indicere bella coegit Atracis Haemonios Hippodamia viros:
tu fore tam iusta lentum Menelaon in ira et geminos fratres Tyndareumque putas?
quod bene te iactes et fortia facta loquaris,
a verbis facies dissidet ista suis.
apta magis Veneri quam sunt tua corpora Marti.
bella gerant fortes, tu, Pari, semper ama!
Hectora, quem laudas, pro te pugnare iubeto;
militia est operis altera digna tuis.
his ego, si saperem pauloque audacior essem, uterer; utetur, siqua puella sapit.
aut ego deposito sapiam fortasse pudore et dabo cunctatas tempore victa manus.
quod petis, ut furtim praesentes ista loquamur, scimus, quid captes conloquiumque voces;
sed nimium properas, et adhuc tua messis in herba est.
haec mora sit voto forsitan amica tuo.
hactenus; arcanum furtivae conscia mentis littera iam lasso pollice sistat opus.
cetera per socias Clymenen Aethramque loquamur, quae mihi sunt comites consiliumque duae.

XVIII. Leander Heroni

Quam cuperem solitas, Hero, tibi ferre per undas accipe Leandri, dum venit ipse, manum.
Mittit Abydenus, quam mallet ferre, salutem, si cadat unda maris, Sesti puella, tibi. si mihi di faciles si sunt in amore secundi, invitis oculis haec mea verba leges.
sed non sunt faciles; nam cur mea vota morantur currere me nota nec patiuntur aqua?
ipsa vides caelum pice nigrius et freta ventis turbida perque cavas vix adeunda rates.
unus, et hic audax, a quo tibi littera nostra redditur, e portu navita movit iter; adscensurus eram, nisi quod cum vincula prorae solveret, in speculis omnis Abydos erat.
non poteram celare meos, velut ante, parentes, quemque tegi volumus, non latuisset amor.
protinus haec scribens, 'felix, i, littera!' dixi,
'iam tibi formosam porriget illa manum.
forsitan admotis etiam tangere labellis, rumpere dum niveo vincula dente volet.'
talibus exiguo dictis mihi murmure verbis, cetera cum charta dextra locuta mea est.
at quanto mallet, quam scriberet, illa nataret, meque per adsuetas sedula ferret aquas!
aptior illa quidem placido dare verbera ponto;
est tamen et sensus apta ministra mei.
septima nox agitur, spatium mihi longius anno, sollicitum raucis ut mare fervet aquis.
his ego si vidi mulcentem pectora somnum noctibus, insani sit mora longa freti.
rupe sedens aliqua specto tua litora tristis et, quo non possum corpore, mente feror.

lumina quin etiam summa vigilantia turre aut videt aut acies nostra videre putat.
ter mihi deposita est in sicca vestis harena;
ter grave temptavi carpere nudus iter:
obstitit inceptis tumidum iuvenalibus aequor mersit et adversis ora natantis aquis.
at tu, de rapidis inmansuetissime ventis, quid mecum certa proelia mente geris?
in me, si nescis, Borea, non aequora, saevis.
quid faceres, esset ni tibi notus amor?
tam gelidus quod sis, num te tamen, improbe, quondam ignibus Actaeis incaluisse negas?
gaudia rapturo siquis tibi claudere vellet aerios aditus, quo paterere modo?
parce, precor, facilemque move moderatius auram!
imperet Hippotades sic tibi triste nihil!
vana peto; precibusque meis obmurmurat ipse quasque quatit, nulla parte coercet aquas.
nunc daret audaces utinam mihi Daedalus alas!
Icarium quamvis hinc prope litus abest.
quidquid erit, patiar, liceat modo corpus in auras tollere, quod dubia saepe pependit aqua.
interea, dum cuncta negant ventique fretumque, mente agito furti tempora prima mei.
nox erat incipiens — namque est meminisse voluptas — cum foribus patriis egrediebar amans.
nec mora, deposito pariter cum veste timore iactabam liquido bracchia lenta mari.
luna fere tremulum praebebat lumen eunti ut comes in nostras officiosa vias.
hanc ego suspiciens, 'faveas, dea candida,' dixi,
'et subeant animo Latmia saxa tuo.
non sinit Endymion te pectoris esse severi;
flecte, precor, vultus ad mea furta tuos!
tu dea mortalem caelo delapsa petebas;

vera loqui liceat! — quam sequor ipsa dea est.
neu referam mores caelesti pectore dignos, forma nisi in veras non cadit illa deas.
a Veneris facie non est prior ulla tuaque;
neve meis credas vocibus, ipsa vide!
quantum, cum fulges radiis argentea puris, concedunt flammis sidera cuncta tuis, tanto formosis formosior omnibus illa est;
si dubitas, caecum, Cynthia, lumen habes.’
haec ego vel certe non his diversa locutus per mihi cedentes sponte ferebar aquas.
unda repercussae radiabat imagine lunae et nitor in tacita nocte diurnus erat.
nullaque vox usquam, nullum veniebat ad aures praeter dimotae corpore murmur aquae.
Alcyones solae memores Ceycis amati nescio quid visae sunt mihi dulce queri.
iamque fatigatis umero sub utroque lacertis fortiter in summas erigor altus aquas.
ut procul adspexi lumen, ‘meus ignis in illo est:
illa meum,’ dixi, ‘litora lumen habent.’
et subito lassis vires rediere lacertis, visaque quam fuerat mollior unda mihi.
frigora ne possim gelidi sentire profundi, qui calet in cupido pectore, praestat amor.
quo magis accedo propioraque litora fiunt, quoque minus restat, plus libet ire mihi.
cum vero possum cerni quoque, protinus addis spectatrix animos, ut valeamque facis.
nunc etiam nando dominae placuisse laboro, atque oculis iacto bracchia nostra tuis.
te tua vix prohibet nutrix descendere in altum;
hoc quoque enim vidi, nec mihi verba dabas.
nec tamen effecit, quamvis retinebat euntem, ne fieret prima pes tuus udus aqua.
excipis amplexu feliciaque oscula iungis — oscula, di magni, trans mare digna peti!

eque tuis demptos umeris mihi tradis amictus et madidam siccas aequoris imbre comam.
cetera nox et nos et turris conscia novit quodque mihi lumen per vada monstrat iter.
non magis illius numerari gaudia noctis Hellespontiacy quam maris alga potest;
quo brevius spatium nobis ad furta dabatur, hoc magis est cautum, ne foret illud iners.
iamque fugatura Tithoni coniuge noctem praevis Aurora Lucifer ortus erat; oscula congerimus properata sine ordine raptim et querimur parvas noctibus esse moras.
atque ita cunctatus monitu nutricis amaro frigida deserta litora turre peto.
digredimur flentes repetoque ego virginis aequor respiciens dominam, dum licet, usque meam.
siqua fides vero est, veniens hinc esse natator, cum redeo, videor naufragus esse mihi.
hoc quoque, si credes: ad te via prona videtur;
a te cum redeo, clivus inertis aquae.
invitus repeto patriam; quis credere possit?
invitus certe nunc moror urbe mea.
ei mihi! cur animis iuncti discernimur undis unaque mens, tellus non habet una duos?
vel tua me Sestus, vel te mea sumat Abydos;
tam tua terra mihi, quam tibi nostra placet.
cur ego confundor, quotiens confunditur aequor?
cur mihi causa levis, ventus, obesse potest?
iam nostros curvi norunt delphines amores ignotum nec me piscibus esse reor.
iam patet attritus solitarum limes aquarum,
non aliter multa quam via pressa rota.
quod mihi non esset nisi sic iter, ante querebar;
at nunc per ventos hoc quoque deesse queror.
fluctibus immodicis Athamantidos aequora canent vixque manet portu tuta carina suo; hoc mare, cum primum de virgine nomina mersa, quae tenet, est nanctum, tale fuisse puto.

est satis amissa locus hic infamis ab Helle est, utque mihi parcat, nomine crimen habet.
invideo Phrixo, quem per freta tristia tutum aurea lanigero vellere vexit ovis;
nec tamen officium pecoris navisve requiro, dummodo, quas findam corpore, dentur aquae.
arte egeo nulla; fiat modo copia nandi, idem navigium, navita, vector ero nec sequor aut Helicen aut qua Tyros utitur Arcton; publica non curat sidera noster amor.
Andromedan alius spectet claramque Coronam quaeque micat gelido Parrhasis Ursa polo;
at mihi quod Perseus et cum Iove Liber amarunt, indicium dubiae non placet esse viae.
est aliud lumen, multo mihi certius istis,
    non errat tenebris quo duce noster amor;
hoc ego dum spectem, Colchos et in ultima Ponti quaque viam fecit Thessala pinus eam et iuvenem possim superare Palaemona nando morsaque quem subito reddidit herba deum.
saepe per adsiduos languent mea bracchia motus, vixque per immensas fessa trahuntur aquas.
his ego cum dixi: 'pretium non vile laboris, iam dominae vobis colla tenenda dabo,' protinus illa valent, atque ad sua praemia tendunt, ut celer Eleo carcere missus equus.
ipse meos igitur servo, quibus uror, amores teque, magis caelo digna puella, sequor.
digna quidem caelo, sed adhuc tellure morare, aut dic, ad superos et mihi qua sit iter!
hic es et exigue misero contingis amanti,
    cumque mea fiunt turbida mente freta.
quid mihi, quod lato non separor aequore, prodest?

num minus haec nobis tam brevis obstat aqua?
an malim, dubito, toto procul orbe remotus cum domina longe spem quoque habere meam.
quo propius nunc es, flamma propiore calesco et res non semper, spes mihi semper adest.
paene manu quod amo, tanta est vicinia, tango;
saepe sed, heu, lacrimas hoc mihi 'paene' movet!
velle quid est aliud fugientia prendere poma spemque suo refugi fluminis ore sequi?
ergo ego te numquam, nisi cum volet unda, tenebo et me felicem nulla videbit hiems, cumque minus firmum nil sit quam ventus et unda,
in ventis et aqua spes mea semper erit?
aestus adhuc tamen est. quid, cum mihi laeserit aequor Plias et Arctophylax Oleniumque pecus?
aut ego non novi, quam sim temerarius, aut me in freta non cautus tum quoque mittet Amor;
neve putes id me, quod abest, promittere, tempus, pignora polliciti non tibi tarda dabo.
sit tumidum paucis etiam nunc noctibus aequor;
ire per invitas experiemur aquas.
aut mihi continget felix audacia salvo aut mors solliciti finis amoris erit.
optabo tamen ut partis expellar in illas et teneant portus naufraga membra tuos.
flebis enim tactuque meum dignabere corpus et 'mortis,' dices, 'huic ego causa fui!'
scilicet interitus offenderis omine nostri, litteraque invisita est hac mea parte tibi.
desino; parce queri. sed ut et mare finiat iram, accedant, quaeso, fac tua vota meis.
pace brevi nobis opus est, dum transferor isto;
cum tua contigero litora, perstet hiems!
istic est aptum nostrae navale carinae et melius nulla stat mea puppis aqua.
illic me claudat Boreas, ubi dulce morari est;

tunc piger ad nandum, tunc ego cautus ero nec faciam surdis convicia fluctibus ulla triste nataturo nec querar esse fretum.
me pariter venti teneant tenerique lacerti, per causas istic impediaturque duas cum patietur hiems, remis ego corporis utar;
lumen in adspectu tu modo semper habe.
interea pro me pernoctet epistula tecum, quam precor ut minima prosequar ipse mora.

XIX. Hero Leandro

Quam mihi misisti verbis, Leandre, salutem ut possim missam rebus habere, veni!
longa mora est nobis omnis, quae gaudia differt.
da veniam fassae; non patienter amo.
urimur igne pari, sed sum tibi viribus impar:
fortius ingenium suspicor esse viris.
ut corpus, teneris ita mens infirma puellis;
deficiam, parvi temporis adde moram.
vos modo venando, modo rus geniale colendo ponitis in varia tempora longa mora.
aut fora vos retinent aut unctae dona palaestrae flectitis aut freno colla sequacis equi;
nunc volucrem laqueo, nunc piscem ducitis hamo, diluitur posito serior hora mero.
his mihi summotae, vel si minus acriter urar, quod faciam, superest praeter amare nihil.
quod superest facio, teque, o mea sola voluptas, plus quoque, quam reddi quod mihi possit, amo.
aut ego cum cana de te nutrice susurro, quaeque tuum, miror, causa moretur iter;
aut mare prospiciens odioso concita vento corripio verbis aequora paene tuis;
aut ubi saevitiae paulum gravis unda remisit, posse quidem, sed te nolle venire, queror;
dumque queror lacrimae per amantia lumina manant, pollice quas tremulo conscia siccant anus.
saepe tui specto si sint in litore passus, impositas tamquam servet harena notas;
utque rogem de te et scribam tibi, siquis Abydo venerit aut, quaero, siquis Abydon eat.
quid referam, quotiens dem vestibus oscula, quas tu

Hellespontiaca ponis iturus aqua?
sic ubi lux acta est et noctis amicier hora exhibuit pulso sidera clara die, protinus in summa vigilantia lumina turre ponimus, adsuetae signa notamque viae, tortaque versato ducentes stamina fuso feminea tardas fallimus arte moras.
quid loquar interea tam longo tempore, quaeris:
nil nisi Leandri nomen in ore meo est.
'iamne putas exisse domo mea gaudia, nutrix,
an vigilant omnes, et timet ille suos?
iamne suas umeris illum deponere vestes, pallade iam pingui tinguere membra putas?'
adnuit illa fere; non nostra quod oscula curet, sed movet obrepens somnus anile caput.
postque morae minimum 'iam certe navigat,' inquam,
'lentaque dimotis bracchia iactat aquis.'
paucaque cum tacta perfeci stamina terra an medio possis, quaerimus, esse freto.
et modo prospicimus, timida modo voce precamur, ut tibi det faciles utilis aura vias;
auribus incertas voces captamus et omnem adventus strepitum credimus esse tui.
sic ubi deceptae pars est mihi maxima noctis acta, subit furtim lumina fessa sopor.
forsitan invitus mecum tamen, improbe, dormis et, quamquam non vis ipse venire, venis.
nam modo te videor prope iam spectare natantem, bracchia nunc umeris umida ferre meis, nunc dare quae soleo, madidis velamina membris, pectora nunc nostro iuncta fovere sinu multaque praeterea linguae reticenda modestae quae fecisse iuvat, facta referre pudet.
me miseram! brevis est haec et non vera voluptas;
nam tu cum somno semper abire soles.
firmius, o, cupidi tandem coeamus amantes, nec careant vera gaudia nostra fide.

cur ego tot viduas exegi frigida noctes?
cur totiens a me, lente morator, abes?
est mare, confiteor, non nunc tractabile nanti;
nocte sed hesternae lenior aura fuit.
cur ea praeterita est? cur non ventura timebas?
tam bona cur periit, nec tibi rapta via est?
protinus ut similis detur tibi copia cursus, hoc melior certe, quo prior, illa fuit.
at cito mutata est pacati forma profundi.
tempore, cum properas, saepe minore venis.
hic, puto, depensus nil quod querereris haberes meque tibi amplexo nulla noceret hiems.
certe ego tum ventos audirem laeta sonantes et numquam placidas esse precarer aquas.
quid tamen evenit, cur sis metuentior undae contemptumque prius nunc vereare fretum?
nam meministi, cum te saevum veniente minaxque non minus, aut multo non minus, aequor erat;
cum tibi clamabam: 'sic tu temerarius esto, ne miserae virtus sit tua flenda mihi.'
unde novus timor hic quoque illa audacia fugit?
magnus ubi est spretis ille natator aquis?
sis tamen hoc potius, quam quod prius esse solebas, et facias placidum per mare tutus iter — dummodo sis idem; dum sic, ut scribis, amemur flammaque non fiat frigidus illa cinis.
non ego tam ventos timeo mea vota morantes, quam similis vento ne tuus erret amor, ne non sim tanti, superentque pericula causam et videar merces esse labore minor.
interdum metuo, patria ne laedar et impar dicar Abydeno Thressa puella toro.
ferre tamen possum patientius omnia, quam si otia nescio qua paelice captus agis, in tua si veniunt alieni colla lacerti fitque novus nostri finis amoris amor.

a, potius peream, quam crimine vulnerer isto, fataque sint culpa nostra priora tua!
nec quia venturi dederis mihi signa doloris, haec loquor aut fama sollicitata nova.
omnia sed vereor! quis enim securus amavit?
cogit et absentes plura timere locus.
felices illas, sua quas praesentia nosse crimina vera iubet, falsa timere vetat.
nos tam vana movet, quam facta iniuria fallit, incitat et morsus error uterque pares.
o utinam venias! aut ut ventusve paterve causaque sit certe femina nulla morae!
quodsi quam sciero, moriar, mihi crede, dolendo;
iamdudum pecca, si mea fata petis.
sed neque peccabis, frustra que ego terreor istis, quoque minus venias, invida pugnat hiems.
me miseram! quanto planguntur litora fluctu,
et latet obscura condita nube dies!
forsitan ad pontum mater pia venerit Helles mersaque roratis nata fleatur aquis;
an mare ab invisio privignae nomine dictum vexat in aequoream versa noverca deam?
non favet, ut nunc est, teneris locus iste puellis;
hac Helle periit, hac ego laedor aqua.
at tibi flammaram memori, Neptune, tuarum nullus erat ventis impediendus amor:
si neque Amymone nec, laudatissima forma, criminis est Tyro fabula vana tui, lucidaque Alcyone Calyceque Hecataeone nata, et nondum nexis angue Medusa comis flavaque Laudice caeloque recepta Celaeno et quarum memini nomina lecta mihi.
has certe pluresque canunt, Neptune, poetae molle latus lateri conposuisse tuo.
cur igitur, totiens vires expertus amoris,

adsuetum nobis turbine claudis iter?
parce, ferox, latoque mari tua proelia misce;
seducit terras haec brevis unda duas.
te decet aut magnas magnum iactare carinas aut etiam totis classibus esse trucem;
turpe deo pelagi iuvenem terrere natantem gloriaque est stagno quolibet ista minor.
nobilis ille quidem est et clarus origine, sed non
a tibi suspecto ducit Ulixé genus.
da veniam servaque duos. natat ille; sed isdem corpus Leandri, spes mea pendet aquis. sternuit etn lumen — posito nam scribimus illo — sternuit et nobis prospera signa dedit.
ecce, merum nutrix faustos instillat in ignes ‘cras’ que ‘erimus plures’ inquit et ipsa bibit.
effice nos plures evicta per aequora lapsus,
o penitus toto corde recepte mihi!
in tua castra redi, socii desertor amoris;
ponuntur medio cur mea membra toro?
quod timeas, non est! auso Venus ipsa favebit sternet et aequoreas aequore nata vias.
ire libet medias ipsi mihi saepe per undas, sed solet hoc maribus tutius esse fretum.
nam cur hac vectis Phrixo Phrixique sorore sola dedit vastis femina nomen aquis?
forsitan ad reditum metuas ne tempora desint, aut gemini nequeas ferre laboris onus.
at nos diversi medium coeamus in aequor obviaque in summis oscula demus aquis atque ita quisque suas iterum redeamus ad urbes;
exiguum sed plus quam nihil illud erit.
vel pudor hic utinam, qui nos clam cogit amare, vel timidus famae cedere vellet amor!
nunc male res iunctae, calor et reverentia pugnant.
quid sequar, in dubio est; haec decet, ille iuvat.
ut semel intravit Colchos Pagasaeus Iason, impositam celeri Phasida puppe tulit;

ut semel Idaeus Lacedaemona venit adulter, cum praeda rediit protinus ille sua.
tu quam saepe petis quod amas, tam saepe relinquis, et quotiens grave sit puppibus ire, natas.
sic tamen, o iuvenis, tumidarum victor aquarum, sic facito spernas, ut vereare, fretum.
arte laboratae merguntur ab aequore naves;
tu tua plus remis bracchia posse putas?
quod cupis, hoc nautae metuunt, Leandre, natare;
exitus hic fractis puppibus esse solet.
me miseram! cupio non persuadere quod hortor sisque, precor, monitis fortior ipse meis; dummodo pervenias excussa saepe per undas inicias umeris bracchia lassa meis.
sed mihi, caeruleas quotiens obvertor ad undas, nescio quid pavidum frigore pectus habet.
nec minus hesternae confundor imagine noctis, quamvis est sacris illa piata meis.
namque sub aurora iam dormitante lucerna somnia quo cerni tempore vera solent, stamina de digitis cecidere sopore remissis collaque pulvino nostra ferenda dedi.
hic ego ventosas nantem delphina per undas cernere non dubia sum mihi visa fide:
quem postquam bibulis illisit fluctus harenis,
unda simul miserum vitaque deseruit.
quidquid id est, timeo; nec tu mea somnia ride nec nisi tranquillo bracchia crede mari.
si tibi non parcis, dilectae parce puellae, quae numquam nisi te sospite sospes ero.
spes tamen est fractis vicinae pacis in undis;
tu placidas toto pectore finde vias.
interea, quoniam nanti freta pervia non sunt, leniat invisas littera missa moras.

XX. Acontius Cydippae

Accipe, Cydippe, despecti namen Aconti — illius in pomo qui tibi verba dedit.
Pone metum! nihil hic iterum iurabis amanti;
promissam satis est te semel esse mihi.
perlege! discedat sic corpore languor ab isto, quod meus est ulla parte dolere dolor!

quid pudor ante subit? nam, sicut in aede Dianae suspikor ingenuas erubuisse genas.
coniugium pactamque fidem, non crimina posco; debitus ut coniunx, non ut adulter amo.
verba licet repetas, quae demptus ab arbore fetus pertulit ad castas me iacente manus; invenies illic id te spondere, quod opto te potius, virgo, quam meminisse deam.
nunc quoque idem (timeo), sed idem tamen acrius illud;
adsumpsit vires auctaque flamma mora est, quique fuit numquam parvus, nunc tempore longo et spe, quam dederas tu mihi, crevit amor.
spem mihi tu dederas; meus hic tibi credidit ardor.
non potes hoc factum teste negare dea.
adfuit et praesens, ut erat, tua verba notavit et visa est mota dicta tulisse coma.
deceptam dicas nostra te fraude licebit, dum fraudis nostrae causa feratur amor.
fraus mea quid petiit, nisi uti tibi iungerer uni?
id me, quod quereris, conciliare potest.
non ego natura nec sum tam callidus usu;
sollertem tu me, crede, puella, facis.
te mihi compositis, siquid tamen egimus, a me adstrinxit verbis ingeniosus Amor.

dictatis ab eo feci sponsalia verbis consultoque fui iuris Amore vafer.
sit fraus huic facto nomen, dicarque dolosus, si tamen est, quod ames, velle tenere dolus.
en, iterum scribo mittoque rogantia verba!
altera fraus haec est, quodque queraris habes.
si noceo, quod amo, fateor, sine fine nocebo, teque, peti caveas tu licet, usque petam.
per gladios alii placitas rapuere puellas;
scripta mihi caute littera crimen erit?
di faciant, possim plures imponere nodos, ut tua sit nulla libera parte fides.
mille doli restant, clivo sudamus in imo;
ardor inexpertum nil sinet esse meus.
sit dubium, possisne capi; captabere certe.
exitus in dis est, sed capiere tamen.
ut partem effugias, non omnia retia falles, quae tibi, quam credis, plura tetendit Amor.
si non proficient artes, veniemus ad arma, inque tui cupido rapta ferere sinu.
non sum qui soleam Paridis reprehendere factum nec quemquam, qui vir, posset ut esse, fuit.
nos quoque — sed taceo. mors huius poena rapinae ut sit, erit quam te non habuisse minor.
aut esses formosa minus, peterere modeste;
audaces facie cogimur esse tua.
tu facis hoc oculique tui, quibus ignea cedunt sidera, qui flammae causa fuere meae; hoc faciunt flavi crines et eburnea cervix quaeque, precor, veniant in mea colla manus et decor et vultus sine rusticitate pudentes et, Thetidis qualis vix rear esse, pedes.
cetera si possem laudare, beatior essem, nec dubito, totum quin sibi par sit opus.
hac ego compulsus, non est mirabile, forma,

si pignus volui vocis habere tuae.
denique, dum captam tu te cogare fateri, insidiis esto capta puella meis.
invidiam patiar; passo sua praemia dentur.
cur suus a tanto crimine fructus abest?
Hesionen Telamon, Briseida cepit Achilles; utraque victorem nempe secuta virum.
quamlibet accuses et sis irata licebit, irata liceat dum mihi posse frui.
idem qui facimus, factam tenuabimus iram, copia placandi sit modo parva tui.
ante tuos liceat flentem consistere vultus et liceat lacrimis addere verba suis utque solent famuli, cum verbera saeva verentur, tendere submissas ad tua crura manus!
ignoras tua iura; voca! cur arguor absens?
iamdudum dominae more venire iube.
ipsa meos scindas licet imperiosa capillos oraque sint digitis livida nostra tuis.
omnia perpetiar; tantum fortasse timebo, corpore laedatur ne manus ista meo.
sed neque conpedibus nec me conpesce catenis;
servabor firmo vinctus amore tui.
cum bene se quantumque volet satiaverit ira, ipsa tibi dices: 'quam patienter amat!'
ipsa tibi dices, ubi videris omnia ferre:
'tam bene qui servit, serviat iste mihi!' nunc reus infelix absens agor, et mea, cum sit optima, non ullo causa tuente perit.
hoc quoque quod tum vis, sit scriptum iniuria nostrum, quod de me solo nempe queraris, habes.
non meruit falli mecum quoque Delia; si non vis mihi promissum reddere, redde deae.
adfuit et vidit, cum tu decepta rubebas, et vocem memori condidit aure tuam.
omina re careant! nihil est violentius illa,

cum sua, quod nolim, numina laesa videt.
testis erit Calydonis aper sic saevus, ut illo sit magis in natum saeva reperta parens.
testis et Actaeon, quondam fera creditus illis, ipse dedit leto cum quibus ante feras;
quaeque superba parens saxo per corpus oborto nunc quoque Mygdonia flebilis adstat humo.
ei mihi! Cydippe, timeo tibi dicere verum, ne videar causa falsa monere mea;
dicendum tamen est. hoc est, mihi crede, quod aegra ipso nubendi tempore saepe iaces.
consulit ipsa tibi, neu sis periura, laborat, et salvam salva te cupit esse fide.
inde fit, ut, quotiens existere perfida temptas, peccatum totiens corrigat illa tuum.
parce movere feros animosae virginis arcus;
mitis adhuc fieri, si patiare, potest.
parce, precor, teneros corrumpere febribus artus;
servetur facies ista fruenda mihi.
serventur vultus ad nostra incendia nati, quique subest niveo lenis in ore rubor.
hostibus et si quis, ne fias nostra, repugnat, sic sit ut invalida te solet esse mihi.
torqueor ex aequo vel te nubente vel aegra dicere nec possum, quid minus ipse velim; maceror interdum, quod sim tibi causa dolendi teque mea laedi calliditate puto.
in caput ut nostrum dominae periuria, quaeso, eveniant; poena tuta sit illa mea!
ne tamen ignorem, quid agas, ad limina crebro anxius huc illuc dissimulanter eo;
subsequor ancillam furtim famulumque requirens, profuerint somni quid tibi quidve cibi.
me miserum, quod non medicorum iussa ministro effingoque manus insideoque toro!
et rursus miserum, quod me procul inde remoto,

quem minime vellem, forsitan alter adest.
ille manus istas effingit et adsidet aegrae invisus superis cum superisque mihi, dumque suo temptat salientem pollice venam, candida per causam bracchia saepe tenet contrectatque sinus et forsitan oscula iungit;
officio merces plenior ista suo est.
quis tibi permisit nostras praecerpere messes?
ad saepem alterius quis tibi fecit iter?
iste sinus meus est! mea turpiter oscula sumis!
a mihi promisso corpore tolle manus!
improbe, tolle manus! quam tangis, nostra futura est;
postmodo si facies istud, adulter eris.
elige de vacuis quam non sibi vindicet alter; si nescis: dominum res habet ista suum.
nec mihi credideris: recitetur formula pacti;
neu falsam dicas esse, fac ipsa legat.
alterius thalamo tibi nos, tibi dicimus exi!
quid facis hic? exi! non vacat iste torus.
nam quod habes et tu gemini verba altera pacti,
non erit idcirco par tua causa meae.
haec mihi se pepigit, pater hanc tibi, primus ab illa;
sed propior certe quam pater ipsa sibi est.
promisit pater hanc, haec se iuravit amanti;
ille homines, haec est testificata deam.
hic metuit mendax, haec et periura vocari;
an dubitas, hic sit maior an ille metus?
denique ut amborum conferre pericula possis, respice ad eventus: haec cubat, ille valet.
nos quoque dissimili certamina mente subimus;
nec spes par nobis nec timor aequus adest.
tu petis ex tuto; gravior mihi morte repulsa est,
idque ego iam, quod tu forsitan amabis, amo.
si tibi iustitiae, si recti cura fuisset, cedere debueras ignibus ipse meis.
nunc, quoniam ferus hic pro causa pugnat iniqua, ad quid, Cydippe, littera nostra redit.

hic facit ut iaceas et sis suspecta Dianae;
hunc tu, si sapias, limen adire vetes.
hoc faciente subis tam saeva pericula vitae, atque utinam pro te, qui movet illa, cadat!
quem si reppuleris nec, quem dea damnat, amaris, tu tunc continuo, certe ego salvus ero.
siste metum, virgo! stabili potiere salute, fac modo polliciti conscia templa colas;
non bove mactato caelestia numina gaudent, sed, quae praestanda est et sine teste, fide.
ut valeant aliae, ferrum patiuntur et ignes, fert aliis tristem sucus amarus opem.
nil opus est istis; tantum periuria vita teque simul serva meque datamque fidem!
praeteritae veniam dabit ignorantia culpae:
exciderant animo foedera lecta tuo.
admonita es modo voce mea, modo casibus istis, quos, quotiens temptas fallere, ferre soles.
his quoque vitatis in partu nempe rogabis, ut tibi luciferas adferat illa manus?
audiet et repetens quae sunt audita requiret, iste tibi de quo coniuge partus eat.
promittes votum; scit te promittere falso.
iurabis; scit te fallere posse deos.
non agitur de me; cura maiore laboro.
anxia sunt causa pectora nostra tua.
cur modo te dubiam pavidum flevere parentes, ignaros culpae quos facis esse tuae?
et cur ignorent? matri licet omnia narres.
nil tua, Cydippe, facta ruboris habent.
ordine fac referas ut sis mihi cognita primum sacra pharetratae dum facit ipsa deae;
ut te conspecta subito, si forte notasti, restiterim fixis in tua membra genis;
et te dum nimium miror, nota certa furoris, deciderint umero pallia lapsa meo;

postmodo nescio qua venisse volubile malum verba ferens doctis insidiosa notis; quod quia sit lectum sancta praesente Diana esse tuam vinctam numine teste fidem.
ne tamen ignoret, scripti sententia quae sit,
lecta tibi quondam nunc quoque verba refer.
'nube, precor' dicet 'cui te bona numina iungunt;
quem fore iurasti, sit gener ille mihi.
quisquis is est, placeat, quoniam placet ante Dianae.'
talis erit mater, si modo mater erit.
sed tamen ut quaerat quis sim qualisque; videto:
inveniet vobis consuluisse deam.
insula Coryciis quondam celeberrima nymphis cingitur Aegaeo, nomine Cea, mari.
illa mihi patria est; nec, si generosa probatis nomina, despectis arguor ortus avis.
sunt et opes nobis, sunt et sine crimine mores;
amplius utque nihil, me tibi iungit Amor.
appeteres talem vel non iurata maritum;
iuratae vel non talis habendus erat.
haec tibi me in somnis iaculatrix scribere Phoebe;
haec tibi me vigilem scribere iussit Amor;
e quibus alterius mihi iam nocuere sagittae, alterius noceant ne tibi tela, cave!
iuncta salus nostra est — miserere meique tuique:
quid dubitas unam ferre duobus opem?
quod si contigerit, cum iam data signa sonabunt, tinctaque votivo sanguine Delos erit, aurea ponetur mali felicis imago, causaque versiculis scripta duobus erit:
"effigie pomi testatur acontius huius quae fuerint in eo scripta fuisse rata." longior infirmum ne lasset epistula corpus clausaque consueto sit sibi fine: vale!

XXI. Cydippe Acontio

Littera pervenit tua quo consuevit, Aconti et paene est oculis insidiata meis.
Pertimui scriptumque tuum sine murmure legi, iuraret ne quos inscia lingua deos.
et, puto, captasses iterum, nisi ut ipse fateris, promissam scires me satis esse semel.
nec lectura fui, sed si tibi dura fuisset, aucta foret saevae forsitan ira deae.
omnia cum faciam, cum dem pia tura Dianae, illa tamen iusta plus tibi parte favet utque cupis credi, memori te vindicat ira:
talis in Hippolyto vix fuit illa suo.
at melius virgo favisset virginis annis, quos vereor paucos ne velit esse mihi.
languor enim causis non apparentibus haeret, adiuvor et nulla fessa medentis ope.
quam tibi nunc gracilem vix haec rescribere quamque pallida vix cubito membra levare putas?
nunc timor accedit, ne quis nisi conscia nutrix colloquii nobis sentiat esse vices.
ante fores sedet haec quid agamque rogantibus intus, ut possim tuto scribere, 'dormit' ait.
mox, ubi, secreti longi causa optima, somnus credibilis tarda desinit esse mora, iamque venire videt quos non admittere durum est, excreat et dicta dat mihi signa nota.
sicut erant, properans verba imperfecta relinquo, et tegitur trepido littera coepta sinu.
inde meos digitos iterum repetita fatigat;
quantus sit nobis adspicis ipse labor.

quo peream si dignus eras, ut vera loquamur;
sed melior iusto quamque mereris ego.

ergo te propter totiens incerta salutis commentis poenas doque dedique tuis?
haec nobis formae te laudatore superbae contingit merces et placuisse nocet?
si tibi deformis, quod mallem, visa fuisset, culpatum nulla corpus egeret ope;
nunc laudata gemo, nunc me certamine vestro perditis et proprio vulneror ipsa bono.
dum neque tu cedis, nec se putat ille secundum, tu votis obstas illius, ille tuis, ipsa velut navis iactor, quam certus in altum propellit Boreas, aestus et unda refert.
cumque dies caris optata parentibus instat,
immodicus pariter corporis ardor inest.
nunc mihi coniugii tempus crudelis ad ipsum Persephone nostras pulsat acerba fores.
iam pudet et timeo, quamvis mihi conscia non sim, offensos videar ne meruisse deos.
accidere haec aliquis casu contendit, et alter acceptum superis hunc negat esse virum;
neve nihil credas in te quoque dicere famam, facta veneficiis pars putat ista tuis.
causa latet, mala nostra patent; vos pace movetis aspera submota proelia, plector ego.
dic mihi nunc, solitoque tibi ne decipe more;
quid facies odio, sic ubi amore noces?
si laedis quod amas, hostem sapienter amabis;
me, precor, ut serves, perdere velle velis!
aut tibi iam nulla est speratae cura puellae, quam ferox indigna tabe perire sinis, aut dea si frustra pro me tibi saeva rogatur, quid mihi te iactas? gratia nulla tua est.

elige, quid fingas: non vis placare Dianam.
immemor es nostri; non potes — illa tui est.
vel numquam mallem vel non mihi tempore in illo esset in Aegaeis cognita Delos aquis.
tunc mea difficili deducta est aequore navis et fuit ad coeptas hora sinistra vias.
quo pede processisti? quo me pede limine movi?
picta citae tetigi quo pede texta ratis?
bis tamen adverso redierunt carbasa vento:
mentior, a demens! ille secundus erat.
ille secundus erat qui me referebat euntem quique parum felix impediabat iter.
atque utinam constans contra mea vela fuisset!
sed stultum est venti de levitate queri.
mota loci fama properabam visere Delon et facere ignava puppe videbar iter.
quam saepe ut tardis feci convicia remis questaque sum vento lintea parca dari.
et iam transieram Myconon, iam Tenon et Andron, inque meis oculis candida Delos erat;
quam procul ut vidi, 'quid me fugis, insula' dixi
'laberis in magno numquid ut ante mari?'
institeram terrae, cum iam prope luce peracta demere purpureis sol iuga vellet equis.
quos idem solitos postquam revocavit ad ortus, comuntur nostrae matre iubente comae.
ipsa dedit gemmas digitis et crinibus aurum et vestes umeris induit ipsa meis.
protinus egressae superis, quibus insula sacra est, flava salutatis tura merumque damus;
dumque parens aras votivo sanguine tingit sectaque fumosis ingerit exta focis, sedula me nutrix altas quoque ducit in aedes erramusque vago per loca sacra pede; et modo porticibus spatior modo munera regum miror et in cunctis stantia signa locis.

miror et innumeris structam de cornibus aram et de qua pariens arbore nixa dea est et quae praeterea — neque enim meminive libetve quidquid ibi vidi dicere — Delos habet.
forsitan haec spectans a te spectabar, Aconti, visaque simplicitas est mea posse capi.
in templum redeo gradibus sublime Dianae — tutior hoc ecquis debuit esse locus?
mittitur ante pedes malum cum carmine tali — ei mihi! iuravi nunc quoque paene tibi!
sustulit hoc nutrix mirataque 'perlege' dixit.
insidias legi, magne poeta, tuas.
nomine coniugii dicto confusa pudore, sensi me totis erubuisse genis, luminaque in gremio veluti defixa tenebam, lumina propositi facta ministra tui.
improbe, quid gaudes aut quae tibi gloria parta est?
quidve vir elusa virgine laudis habes?
non ego constiteram sumpta peltata securi, qualis in Iliaco Penthesilea solo;
nullus Amazonio caelatus balteus auro, sicut ab Hippolyta, praeda relata tibi est.
verba quid exultas tua si mihi verba dederunt sumque parum prudens capta puella dolis?
Cydippen pomum, pomum Schoeneida cepit;
tu nunc Hippomenes scilicet alter eris?
at fuerat melius, si te puer iste tenebat, quem tu nescio quas dicis habere faces,
more bonis solito spem non corrumpere fraude;
exoranda tibi, non capienda fui.
cur, me cum peteres, ea non profitenda putabas, propter quae nobis ipse petendus eras?
cogere cur potius quam persuadere volebas, si poteram audita condicione capi?
quid tibi nunc prodest iurandi formula iuris linguaque praesentem testificata deam?

quae iurat mens est. nil coniuravimus illa;
illa fidem dictis addere sola potest.
consilium prudensque animi sententia iurat et nisi iudicii vincula nulla valent.
si tibi coniugium volui promittere nostrum, exige polliciti debita iura tori.
sed si nil dedimus praeter sine pectore vocem, verba suis frustra viribus orba tenes.
non ego iuravi, legi iurantia verba;
vir mihi non isto more legendus eras.
decipe sic alias, succedat epistula pomo;
si valet hoc magnas ditibus aufer opes;
fac iurent reges sua se tibi regna daturus sitque tuum toto quidquid in orbe placet!
maior es hoc ipsa multo, mihi crede, Diana,
si tua tam praesens littera numen habet.
cum tamen haec dixi, cum me tibi firma negavi, cum bene promissi causa peracta mei est, confiteor, timeo saevae Latoidos iram et corpus laedi suspicor inde meum.
nam quare, quotiens socialia sacra parantur, nupturae totiens languida membra cadunt?
ter mihi iam veniens positas Hymenaeus ad aras fugit, et a thalami limine terga dedit vixque manu pigra totiens infusa resurgunt lumina, vix moto corripit igne faces.
saepe coronatis stillant unguenta capillis et trahitur multo splendida palla croco.
cum tetigit limen, lacrimas mortisque timorem cernit et a cultu multa remota suo, proicit ipse sua deductas fronte coronas spissaque de nitidis tergit amoma comis;
et pudet in tristi laetum consurgere turba, quique erat in palla, transit in ora rubor.
at mihi, vae miserae! torrentur febribus artus et gravius iusto pallia pondus habent.

nostraque plorantes video super ora parentes et face pro thalami fax mihi mortis adest.
parce laboranti, picta dea laeta pharetra, daque salutiferam iam mihi fratris opem.
turpe tibi est, illum causas depellere leti, te contra titulum mortis habere meae.
numquid, in umbroso cum velles fonte lavari, imprudens vultus ad tua labra tuli?
praeteriive tuas de tot caelestibus aras, ave mea sprete est vestra parente parens?
nil ego peccavi, nisi quod periuria legi inque parum fausto carmine docta fui.
tu quoque pro nobis, si non mentiris amorem, tura feras; prosint quae nocuere manus!
cur, qui succenses quod adhuc tibi pacta puella non tua sit, fieri ne tua possit, agis?
omnia de viva tibi sunt speranda; quid aufert saeva mihi vitam, spem tibi diva mei?
nec tu credideris illum, cui destinor uxor,
aegra superposita membra fovere manu.
adsidet ille quidem, quantum permittitur ipsi;
sed meminit nostrum virginis esse torum.
iam quoque nescio quid de se sensisse videtur;
nam lacrimae causa saepe latente cadunt, et minus audacter blanditur et oscula rara applicat et timido me vocat ore suam.
nec miror sensisse, notis cum prodar apertis;
in dextrum vertor, cum venit ille, latus nec loquor, et tecto simulatur lumine somnus captantem tactus reicioque manum.
ingemit et tacito suspirat pectore, me quod offensam, quamvis non mereatur, habet.
ei mihi, quod gaudes et te iuvat ista voluntas!
ei mihi, quod sensus sum tibi fassa meos!
tu mihi siqua foret, tu nostra iustius ira,
qui mihi tendebas retia, dignus eras.

scribis, ut invalidum liceat tibi visere corpus:
es procul a nobis, et tamen inde nocēs.
mirabar quare tibi nomen Acontius esset;
quod faciat longe vulnus, acumen habes.
certe ego convalui nondum de vulnere tali, ut iaculo scriptis eminus icta tuis.
quid tamen huc venias? sane miserabile corpus,
ingenii videas magna tropaea tui!
concidimus macie; color est sine sanguine, qualem in pomo refero mente fuisse tuo.
candida nec mixto sublucent ora rubore.
forma novi talis marmoris esse solet;
argenti color est inter convivia talis, quod tactum gelidae frigore pallet aquae.
si me nunc videas, visam prius esse negabis;
'arte nec est' dices 'ista petita mea.'
promissique fidem, ne sim tibi iuncta, remittes et cupies illud non meminisse deam.
forsitan et facies iurem ut contraria rursus, quaeque legam mittes altera verba mihi.
sed tamen adspiceres vellem prout ipse rogabas, et discas sponsae languida membra tuae!
durius ut ferro iam sit tibi pectus, Aconti, tu veniam nostris vocibus ipse petas.
ne tamen ignores: ope qua revalescere possim, quaeritur a Delphis fata canente deo.
is quoque nescio quam, nunc ut vaga fama susurrat, neglectam queritur testis habere fidem.
hoc deus, hoc vates, hoc edita carmina dicunt:
a, desunt voto numina nulla tuo!
unde tibi favor hic? nisi si nova forte reperta est,
quae capiat magnos littera lecta deos.
teque tenente deos numen sequor ipsa deorum doque libens victas in tua vota manus; fassaque sum matri deceptae foedera linguae
lumina fixa tenens plena pudoris humo.

cetera cura tua est plus hoc quoque virgine factum;
non timuit tecum quod mea charta loqui.
iam satis invalidos calamo lassavimus artus;
et manus officium longius aegra negat.
quid nisi, si cupio mihi iam contingere tecum, restat, ut adscribat littera nostra "Vale!"

Epigramma Ipsius

Qui modo Nasonis fueramus quinque libelli, tres sumus; hoc illi praetulit auctor opus.
ut iam nulla tibi nos sit legisse voluptas,
at levior demptis poena duobus erit.

I

Arma gravi numero violentaque bella parabam edere, materia conveniente modis.
par erat inferior versus — risisse Cupido dicitur atque unum surripuisse pedem.
'Quis tibi, saeve puer, dedit hoc in carmina iuris? 5 Pieridum vates, non tua turba sumus.
quid, si praeripiat flavae Venus arma Minervae, ventilet accensas flava Minerva faces?
quis probet in silvis Cererem regnare iugosis, lege pharetratae Virginis arva coli? 10 crinibus insignem quis acuta cuspide Phoebum instruat, Aoniam Marte movente lyram?
sunt tibi magna, puer, nimiumque potentia regna;
cur opus adfectas, ambitiose, novum?
an, quod ubique, tuum est? tua sunt Heliconia tempe? 15
vix etiam Phoebo iam lyra tuta sua est?
cum bene surrexit versu nova pagina primo, attenuat nervos proximus ille meos;
nec mihi materia est numeris levioribus apta, aut puer aut longas compta puella comas.' 20 Questus eram, pharetra cum protinus ille soluta legit in exitium spicula facta meum, lunavitque genu sinuosum fortiter arcum,
'quod' que 'canas, vates, accipe' dixit 'opus!'
Me miserum! certas habuit puer ille sagittas. 25
uror, et in vacuo pectore regnat Amor.
Sex mihi surgat opus numeris, in quinque residat:
ferrea cum vestris bella valete modis!
cingere litorea flaventia tempora myrto, Musa, per undenos emodulanda pedes! 30

Esse quid hoc dicam, quod tam mihi dura videntur strata, neque in lecto pallia nostra sedent, et vacuus somno noctem, quam longa, peregi, lassaque versati corporis ossa dolent?
nam, puto, sentirem, siquo temptarer amore. 5
an subit et tecta callidus arte nocet?
sic erit; haeserunt tenues in corde sagittae, et possessa ferus pectora versat Amor.
Cedimus, an subitum luctando accendimus ignem?
cedamus! leve fit, quod bene fertur, onus. 10 vidi ego iactatas mota face crescere flammam et rursus nullo concutiente mori.
verbera plura ferunt, quam quos iuvat usus aratri, detractant prensi dum iuga prima boves.
asper equus duris contunditur ora lupatis, 15
frena minus sentit, quisquis ad arma facit.
acrius invitos multoque ferocius urget quam qui servitium ferre fatentur Amor.
En ego confiteor! tua sum nova praeda, Cupido;
porrigimus victas ad tua iura manus. 20
nil opus est bello — veniam pacemque rogamus;
nec tibi laus armis victus inermis ero.
necte comam myrto, maternas iunge columbas;
qui deceat, currum vitricus ipse dabit, inque dato curru, populo clamante triumphum, 25
stabis et adiunctas arte movebis aves.
ducentur capti iuvenes captaeque puellae;
haec tibi magnificus pompa triumphus erit.
ipse ego, praeda recens, factum modo vulnus habebō et nova captiva vincula mente feram. 30 Mens Bona ducetur manibus post terga retortis, et Pudor, et castris quidquid Amoris obest.

omnia te metuent; ad te sua bracchia tendens vulgus 'io' magna voce 'trumphe!' canet.
blanditiae comites tibi erunt Errorque Furorque, 35 adsidue partes turba secuta tuas.
his tu militibus superas hominesque deosque;
haec tibi si demas commoda, nudus eris.
Laeta triumphanti de summo mater Olympo plaudet et adpositas sparget in ora rosas. 40 tu pinnas gemma, gemma variante capillos ibis in auratis aureus ipse rotis.
tunc quoque non paucos, si te bene novimus, ures;
tunc quoque praeteriens vulnera multa dabis.
non possunt, licet ipse velis, cessare sagittae; 45
fervida vicino flamma vapore nocet.
talis erat domita Bacchus Gangetide terra;
tu gravis alitibus, tigribus ille fuit.
Ergo cum possim sacri pars esse triumphii, parce tuas in me perdere, victor, opes! 50 adspice cognati felicia Caesaris arma — qua vicit, victos protegit ille manu.

III

lusta precor: quae me nuper praedata puella est, aut amet aut faciat, cur ego semper amem!
a, nimium volui — tantum patiatum amari;
audierit nostras tot Cytherea preces!
Accipe, per longos tibi qui deserviat annos; 5 accipe, qui pura norit amare fide!
si me non veterum commendant magna parentum nomina, si nostri sanguinis auctor eques, nec meus innumeris renovatur campus aratris, temperat et sumptus parcus uterque parens — 10 at Phoebus comitesque novem vitisque repertor hac faciunt, et me qui tibi donat, Amor, et nulli cessura fides, sine crimine mores nudaque simplicitas purpureusque pudor.
non mihi mille placent, non sum desultor amoris: 15 tu mihi, siqua fides, cura perennis eris.
tecum, quos dederint annos mihi fila sororum, vivere contingat teque dolente mori!
te mihi materiem felicem in carmina praebe — provenient causa carmina digna sua. 20 carmine nomen habent exterrita cornibus Iō et quam fluminea lusit adulter ave, quaeque super pontum simulato vecta iuvenco virginea tenuit cornua vara manu. nos quoque per totum pariter cantabimur orbem, 25 iunctaque semper erunt nomina nostra tuis.

IV

Vir tuus est epulas nobis aditurus easdem — ultima coena tuo sit, precor, illa viro!
ergo ego dilectam tantum conviva puellam adspiciam? tangi quem iuuet, alter erit, alteriusque sinus apte subiecta fovebis? 5 iniciet collo, cum volet, ille manum?
desino mirari, posito quod candida vino Atracis ambiguos traxit in arma viros.
nec mihi silva domus, nec equo mea membra cohaerent — vix a te videor posse tenere manus! 10 Quae tibi sint facienda tamen cognosce, nec Euris da mea nec tepidis verba ferenda Notis!
ante veni, quam vir — nec quid, si veneris ante, possit agi video; sed tamen ante veni.
cum premet ille torum, vultu comes ipsa modesto 15
ibis, ut accumbas — clam mihi tange pedem!
me specta nutusque meos vultumque loquacem;
excipe furtivas et refer ipsa notas.
verba superciliis sine voce loquentia dicam;
verba leges digitis, verba notata mero. 20 cum tibi succurret Veneris lascivia nostrae, purpureas tenero pollice tange genas.
siquid erit, de me tacita quod mente queraris, pendeat extrema mollis ab aure manus.
cum tibi, quae faciam, mea lux, dicamve, placebunt, 25
versetur digitis anulus usque tuis.
tange manu mensam, tangunt quo more precantes, optabis merito cum mala multa viro.
Quod tibi miscuerit, sapias, bibat ipse, iubeto;
tu puerum leviter posce, quod ipsa voles. 30
quae tu reddideris ego primus pocula sumam, et, qua tu biberis, hac ego parte bibam.

si tibi forte dabit, quod praegustaverit ipse, reice libatos illius ore cibos.
nec premat inpositis sinito tua colla lacertis, 35 mite nec in rigido pectore pone caput;
nec sinus admittat digitos habilesve papillae;
oscula praecipue nulla dedisse velis!
oscula si dederis, fiam manifestus amator et dicam 'mea sunt!' iniciamque manum. 40 Haec tamen adspiciam, sed quae bene pallia celant, illa mihi caeci causa timoris erunt.
nec femori committe femur nec crure cohaere nec tenerum duro cum pede iunge pedem.
multa miser timeo, quia feci multa proterve, 45 exemplique metu torqueor, ecce, mei.
saepe mihi dominaeque meae properata voluptas veste sub iniecta dulce peregit opus.
hoc tu non facies; sed, ne fecisse puteris, conscia de tergo pallia deme tuo. 50 vir bibat usque roga — precibus tamen oscula desint! — dumque bibit, furtim si potes, adde merum.
si bene conpositus somno vinoque iacebit, consilium nobis resque locusque dabunt.
cum surges abitura domum, surgemus et omnes, 55
in medium turbae fac memor agmen eas.
agmine me invenies aut invenieris in illo:
quidquid ibi poteris tangere, tange, mei.
Me miserum! monui, paucas quod prosit in horas;
separor a domina nocte iubente mea. 60 nocte vir includet, lacrimis ego maestus obortis, qua licet, ad saevas prosequar usque fores.
oscula iam sumet, iam non tantum oscula sumet:
quod mihi das furtim, iure coacta dabis.
verum invita dato — potes hoc — similisque coactae; 65 blanditiae taceant, sitque maligna Venus.
si mea vota valent, illum quoque ne iuвет, opto;

si minus, at certe te iuuet inde nihil.
sed quaecumque tamen noctem fortuna sequetur, cras mihi constanti voce dedisse nega! 70

V

Aestus erat, mediamque dies exegerat horam;
adposui medio membra levanda toro.
pars ad aperta fuit, pars altera clausa fenestrae;
quale fere silvae lumen habere solent, qualia sublucent fugiente crepuscula Phoebos, 5 aut ubi nox abiit, nec tamen orta dies.
illa verecundis lux est praebenda puellis, qua timidus latebras speret habere pudor.
ecce, Corinna venit, tunica velata recincta, candida dividua colla tegente coma — 10 qualiter in thalamos famosa Semiramis isse dicitur, et multis Lais amata viris.
Deripui tunicam — nec multum rara nocebat;
pugnabat tunica sed tamen illa tegi.
quae cum ita pugnaret, tamquam quae vincere nollet, 15
victa est non aegre proditione sua.
ut stetit ante oculos posito velamine nostros,
in toto nusquam corpore menda fuit.
quos umeros, quales vidi tetigique lacertos!
forma papillarum quam fuit apta premi! 20
quam castigato planus sub pectore venter!
quantum et quale latus! quam iuvenale femur!
Singula quid referam? nil non laudabile vidi et nudam pressi corpus ad usque meum.
Cetera quis nescit? lassique requievimus ambo. 25 provenient medii sic mihi saepe dies!

VI

ianitor — indignum! — dura religate catena, difficilem moto cardine pande forem!
quod precor, exiguum est — aditu fac ianua parvo obliquum capiat semiadaperta latus.
longus amor tales corpus tenuavit in usus 5 aptaque subducto pondere membra dedit.
ille per excubias custodum leniter ire monstrat: inoffensos derigit ille pedes.
At quondam noctem simulacraque vana timebam;
mirabar, tenebris quisquis iturus erat. 10
risit, ut audirem, tenera cum matre Cupido et leviter 'fies tu quoque fortis' ait.
nec mora, venit amor — non umbras nocte volantis, non timeo strictas in mea fata manus.
te nimium lentum timeo, tibi blandior uni; 15
tu, me quo possis perdere, fulmen habes.
Adspice — uti videas, inmitia claustra relaxa — uda sit ut lacrimis ianua facta meis!
certe ego, cum posita stares ad verbera veste, ad dominam pro te verba tremente tuli. 20 ergo quae valuit pro te quoque gratia quondam — heu facinus! — pro me nunc valet illa parum?
redde vicem meritis! grato licet esse quod optas.
tempora noctis eunt; excute poste seram!
Excute! sic, inquam, longa relevere catena, 25 nec tibi perpetuo serva bibatur aqua!
ferreus orantem nequiquam, ianitor, audis, roboribus duris ianua fulta riget.
urbibus obsessis clausae munimina portae prosunt; in media pace quid arma times? 30 quid facies hosti, qui sic excludis amantem?

tempora noctis eunt; excute poste seram!
Non ego militibus venio comitatus et armis;
solus eram, si non saevus adesset Amor.
hunc ego, si cupiam, nusquam dimittere possum; 35 ante vel a membris divider ipse meis.
ergo Amor et modicum circa mea tempora vinum mecum est et madidis lapsa corona comis.
arma quis haec timeat? quis non eat obvius illis?
tempora noctis eunt; excute poste seram! 40
Lentus es: an somnus, qui te male perdat, amantis verba dat in ventos aure repulsa tua?
at, memini, primo, cum te celare volebam, pervigil in mediae sidera noctis eras.
forsitan et tecum tua nunc requiescit amica — 45 heu, melior quanto sors tua sorte mea!
dummodo sic, in me durae transite catenae!
tempora noctis eunt; excute poste seram!
Fallimur, an verso sonuerunt cardine postes, raucaque concussae signa dedere fores? 50
fallimur — impulsam est animosa ianua vento.
ei mihi, quam longe spem tulit aura meam!
si satis es raptae, Borea, memor Orithyiae, huc ades et surdas flamine tunde foris!
urbe silent tota, vitreoque madentia rore 55
tempora noctis eunt; excute poste seram!
Aut ego iam ferroque ignique paratior ipse, quem face sustineo, tecta superba petam.
nox et Amor vinumque nihil moderabile suadent;
illa pudore vacat, Liber Amorque metu. 60 omnia consumpsi, nec te precibusque minisque movimus, o foribus durior ipse tuis.
non te formosae decuit servare puellae limina, sollicito carcere dignus eras.
Iamque pruinosis molitur Lucifer axes, 65
inque suum miseris excitat ales opus.
at tu, non laetis detracta corona capillis,

dura super tota limina nocte iace!
tu dominae, cum te proiectam mane videbit, temporis absumpti tam male testis eris. 70 Qualiscumque vale sentique abeuntis honorem;
lente nec admissio turpis amante, vale!
vos quoque, crudeles rigido cum limine postes duraque conservae ligna, valete, fores!

VII

Adde manus in vincla meas — meruere catenas — dum furor omnis abit, siquis amicus ades!
nam furor in dominam temeraria bracchia movit;
flet mea vaesana laesa puella manu.
tunc ego vel caros potui violare parentes 5
saeva vel in sanctos verbera ferre deos!
Quid? non et clipei dominus septemplicis Ajax stravit deprensos lata per arva greges, et, vindex in matre patris, malus ultor, Orestes ausus in arcanas poscere tela deas? 10 ergo ego digestos potui laniare capillos?
nec dominam motae dedecuerere comae.
sic formosa fuit. talem Schoeneida dicam Maenalias arcu sollicitasse feras; talis periuri promissaque velaque Thesei 15
flevit praecipites Cressa tulisse Notos; sic, nisi vittatis quod erat Cassandra capillis, procubuit templo, casta Minerva, tuo.
Quis mihi non 'demens!' quis non mihi 'barbare!' dixit?
ipsa nihil; pavidus est lingua retenta metu. 20
sed taciti fecere tamen convicia vultus;
egit me lacrimis ore silente reum.
ante meos umeris vellem cecidisse lacertos;
utiliter potui parte carere mei.
in mea vaesanas habui dispendia vires 25 et valui poenam fortis in ipse meam.
quid mihi vobiscum, caedis scelerumque ministrae?
debita sacrilegae vincla subite manus!
an, si pulsassem minimum de plebe Quiritem, plecterer — in dominam ius mihi maius erit? 30
pessima Tydides scelerum monimenta reliquit.

ille deam primus perculit — alter ego!
et minus ille nocens. mihi, quam profitebar amare laesa est; Tydides saevus in hoste fuit.
I nunc, magnificos victor molire triumphos, 35
cinge comam lauro votaue redde Iovi, quaeque tuos currus comitantum turba sequetur, clamet 'io! forti victa puella viro est!'
ante eat effuso tristis captiva capillo, si sinerent laesae, candida tota, genae. 40 aptius impressis fuerat livere labellis et collum blandi dentis habere notam.
denique, si tumidi ritu torrentis agebar, caecaue me praedam fecerat ira suam, nonne satis fuerat timidae inclamasse puellae, 45 nec nimium rigidas intonuisse minas, aut tunicam a summa diducere turpiter ora ad mediam? — mediae zona tulisset opem.
At nunc sustinui raptis a fronte capillis ferreus ingenuas ungue notare genas. 50 adstitit illa amens albo et sine sanguine vultu, caeduntur Pariis qualia saxa iugis.
exanimis artus et membra trementia vidi — ut cum populeas ventilat aura comas, ut leni Zephyro gracilis vibratur harundo, 55 summave cum tepido stringitur unda Noto;
suspendaeque diu lacrimae fluxere per ora, qualiter abiecta de nive manat aqua.
tunc ego me primum coepi sentire nocentem — sanguis erant lacrimae, quas dabat illa, meus. 60 ter tamen ante pedes volui procumbere supplex;
ter formidatas reppulit illa manus.
At tu ne dubita — minuet vindicta dolorem — protinus in vultus unguibus ire meos.
nec nostris oculis nec nostris parce capillis: 65 quamlibet infirmas adiuvat ira manus;

neve mei sceleris tam tristia signa supersint, pone recompositas in statione comas!

VIII

Est quaedam — quicumque volet cognoscere lenam, audiat! — est quaedam nomine Dipsas anus.
ex re nomen habet — nigri non illa parentem Memnonis in roseis sobria vidit equis.
illa magas artes Aeaeaque carmina novit 5 inque caput liquidas arte recurvat aquas;
scit bene, quid gramen, quid torto concita rhombo licia, quid valeat virus amantis equae.
cum voluit, toto glomerantur nubila caelo;
    cum voluit, puro fulget in orbe dies. 10 sanguine, siqua fides, stillantia sidera vidi; purpureus Lunae sanguine vultus erat.
hanc ego nocturnas versam volitare per umbras suspisor et pluma corpus anile tegi.
suspisor, et fama est. oculis quoque pupula duplex 15
    fulminat, et gemino lumen ab orbe venit.
evocat antiquis proavos atavosque sepulcris et solidam longo carmine findit humum.
Haec sibi proposuit thalamos temerare pudicos;
    nec tamen eloquio lingua nocente caret. 20 fors me sermoni testem dedit; illa monebat taliam — me duplices occuluere fores:
'scis here te, mea lux, iuveni placuisse beato?
    haesit et in vultu constitit usque tuo.
et cur non placeas? nulli tua forma secunda est; 25 me miseram, dignus corpore cultus abest!
tam felix esses quam formosissima, vellem — non ego, te facta divite, pauper ero. stella tibi oppositi nocuit contraria Martis.
    Mars abiit; signo nunc Venus apta suo. 30 prosit ut adveniens, en adspice! dives amator

te cupiit; curae, quid tibi desit, habet.
est etiam facies, qua se tibi conparet, illi;
si te non emptam vellet, emendus erat.’
Erubuit. ‘deceat alba quidem pudor ora, sed iste, 35 si simules, prodest; verus obesse solet.
cum bene deiectis gremium spectabis ocellis, quantum quisque ferat, respiciendus erit.
forsitan inmundae Tatio regnante Sabinae noluerint habiles pluribus esse viris; 40 nunc Mars externis animos exercet in armis, at Venus Aeneae regnat in urbe sui.
Iudunt formosae; casta est, quam nemo rogavit — aut, si rusticitas non vetat, ipsa rogat.
has quoque, quae frontis rugas in vertice portant, 45
excute; de rugis crimina multa cadent.
Penelope iuvenum vires temptabat in arcu;
qui latus argueret, corneus arcus erat.
labitur occulte fallitque volubilis aetas, ut celer admissis labitur amnis aquis. 50 aera nitent usu, vestis bona quaerit haberi, canescunt turpi tecta relicta situ — forma, nisi admittas, nullo exercente senescit.
nec satis effectus unus et alter habent;
certior e multis nec tam invidiosa rapina est. 55
plena venit canis de grege praeda lupis.
Ecce, quid iste tuus praeter nova carmina vates donat? amatoris milia multa leges.
ipse deus vatium palla spectabilis aurea tractat inauratae consona fila lyrae. 60 qui dabit, ille tibi magno sit maior Homero;
crede mihi, res est ingeniosa dare.
nec tu, si quis erit capitis mercede redemptus, despice; gypsati crimen inane pedis.
nec te decipiant veteres circum atria cerae. 65
tolle tuos tecum, pauper amator, avos!
qui, quia pulcher erit, poscet sine munere noctem, quod det, amatorem flagitet ante suum!

Parcius exigito pretium, dum retia tendis, ne fugiant; captos legibus ure tuis! 70 nec nocuit simulatus amor; sine, credat amari, et cave ne gratis hic tibi constet amor!
saepe nega noctes. capitis modo finge dolorem, et modo, quae causas praebeat, Isis erit.
mox recipe, ut nullum patiendi colligat usum, 75
neve relentescat saepe repulsus amor.
surda sit oranti tua ianua, laxa ferenti;
audiat exclusi verba receptus amans;
et, quasi laesa prior, nonnumquam irascere laeso — vanescit culpa culpa repensa tua. 80 sed numquam dederis spatiosum tempus in iram:
saepe simultates ira morata facit.
quin etiam discant oculi lacrimare coacti, et faciant udas illa vel ille genas;
nec, siquem falles, tu periurare timeto — 85
commodat in lusus numina surda Venus.
servus et ad partes sollers ancilla parentur, qui doceant, apte quid tibi possit emi;
et sibi pauca rogent — multos si pauca rogabunt, postmodo de stipula grandis acervus erit. 90 et soror et mater, nutrix quoque carpat amantem;
fit cito per multas praeda petita manus.
cum te deficient poscendi munera causae, natalem libo testificare tuum!
Ne securus amet nullo rivale, caveto; 95
non bene, si tollas proelia, durat amor.
ille viri videat toto vestigia lecto factaque lascivis livida colla notis.
munera praecipue videat, quae miserit alter. si dederit nemo, Sacra roganda Via est. 100 cum multa abstuleris, ut non tamen omnia donet, quod numquam reddas, commodet, ipsa roga!
lingua iuвет mentemque tegat — blandire noceque;

in pia sub dulci melle venena latent.
Haec si praestiteris usu mihi cognita longo, 105 nec tulerint voces ventus et aura meas, saepe mihi dices vivae bene, saepe rogabis, ut mea defunctae molliter ossa cubent.'
Vox erat in cursu, cum me mea prodidit umbra, at nostrae vix se continuere manus, 110
quin albam raramque comam lacrimosaque vino lumina rugosas distraherentque genas.
di tibi dent nullosque Lares inopemque senectam, et longas hiemes perpetuamque sitim!

IX

Militat omnis amans, et habet sua castra Cupido; Attice, crede mihi, militat omnis amans.
quae bello est habilis, Veneri quoque convenit aetas.
turpe senex miles, turpe senilis amor.
quos petiere duces animos in milite forti, 5 hos petit in socio bella puella viro.
pervigilant ambo; terra requiescit uterque — ille fores dominae servat, at ille ducis.
militis officium longa est via; mitte puellam, strenuus exempto fine sequetur amans. 10 ibit in adversos montes duplicataque nimbo flumina, congestas exeret ille nives, nec freta pressurus tumidos causabitur Euros aptaque verrendis sidera quaeret aquis.
quis nisi vel miles vel amans et frigora noctis 15 et denso mixtas perferet imbre nives?
mittitur infestos alter speculator in hostes;
in rivale oculos alter, ut hoste, tenet. ille graves urbes, hic durae limen amicae obsidet; hic portas frangit, at ille fores. 20 Saepe soporatos invadere profuit hostes caedere et armata vulgus inerme manu.
sic fera Threicii ceciderunt agmina Rhesi, et dominum capti deseruistis equi.
nempe maritorum somnis utuntur amantes, 25 et sua sopitis hostibus arma movent.
custodum transire manus vigilumque catervas militis et miseri semper amantis opus.
Mars dubius nec certa Venus; victique resurgunt, quosque neges umquam posse iacere, cadunt. 30 Ergo desidiam quicumque vocabat amorem, desinat. ingenii est experientis amor.

ardet in abducta Briseide magnus Achilles — dum licet, Argeas frangite, Troes, opes!
Hector ab Andromaches complexibus ibat ad arma, 35 et, galeam capiti quae daret, uxor erat.
summa ducum, Atrides, visa Priameide fertur Maenadis effusis obstipuisse comis.
Mars quoque deprensus fabrilia vincula sensit; notior in caelo fabula nulla fuit. 40
ipse ego segnis eram discinctaque in otia natus;
mollierant animos lectus et umbra meos.
inpulit ignavum formosae cura puellae iussit et in castris aera merere suis.
inde vides agilem nocturnaque bella gerentem. 45
qui nolet fieri desidiosus, amet!

Qualis ab Eurota Phrygiis avecta carinis coniugibus belli causa duobus erat, qualis erat Lede, quam plumis abditus albis callidus in falsa lusit adulter ave, qualis Amymone siccis erravit in agris, 5 cum premeret summi verticis urna comas — talis eras; aquilamque in te taurumque timebam, et quidquid magno de love fecit amor.
Nunc timor omnis abest, animique resanuit error, nec facies oculos iam capit ista meos. 10 cur sim mutatus, quaeris? quia munera poscis.
haec te non patitur causa placere mihi.
donec eras simplex, animum cum corpore amavi;
nunc mentis vitio laesa figura tua est.
et puer est et nudus Amor; sine sordibus annos 15 et nullas vestes, ut sit apertus, habet.
quid puerum Veneris pretio prostare iubetis?
quo pretium condat, non habet ille sinum!
nec Venus apta feris Veneris nec filius armis — non decet inbelles aera merere deos. 20 Stat meretrix certo cuivis mercabilis aere, et miseras iusso corpore quaerit opes;
devovet imperium tamen haec lenonis avari et, quod vos facitis sponte, coacta facit.
Sumite in exemplum pecudes ratione carentes; 25
turpe erit, ingenium mitius esse feris.
non equa munus equum, non taurum vacca poposcit;
non aries placitam munere captat ovem.
sola viro mulier spoliis exultat ademptis, sola locat noctes, sola licenda venit, 30 et vendit quod utrumque iuvat quod uterque petebat, et pretium, quanti gaudeat ipsa, facit.

quae Venus ex aequo ventura est grata duobus, altera cur illam vendit et alter emit?
cur mihi sit damno, tibi sit lucrosa voluptas, 35
quam socio motu femina virque ferunt?
Non bene conducti vendunt periuria testes, non bene selecti iudicis arca patet.
turpe reos empta miseros defendere lingua;
quod faciat magni, turpe tribunal, opes; 40
turpe tori reditu census augere paternos, et faciem lucro prostituisse suam.
gratia pro rebus merito debetur inemptis;
pro male conducto gratia nulla toro.
omnia conductor solvit; mercede soluta 45 non manet officio debitor ille tuo.
parcite, formosae, pretium pro nocte pacisci;
non habet eventus sordida praeda bonos.
non fuit armillas tanti pepigisse Sabinas, ut premerent sacrae virginis arma caput; 50
e quibus exierat, traiecit viscera ferro filius, et poenae causa monile fuit.
Nec tamen indignum est a divite praemia posci;
munera poscenti quod dare possit, habet.
carpente de plenis pendentes vitibus uvas; 55
praebeat Alcinoi poma benignus ager!
officium pauper numeret studiumque fidemque;
quod quis habet, dominae conferat omne suae.
est quoque carminibus meritas celebrare puellas dos mea; quam volui, nota fit arte mea. 60 scindentur vestes, gemmae frangentur et aurum;
carmina quam tribuent, fama perennis erit.
nec dare, sed pretium posci dedignor et odi;
quod nego poscenti, desine velle, dabo!

XI

Colligere incertos et in ordine ponere crines docta neque ancillas inter habenda Nape, inque ministeriis furtivae cognita noctis utilis et dandis ingeniosa notis saepe venire ad me dubitantem hortata Corinnam, 5 saepe laboranti fida reperta mihi — accipe et ad dominam peraratas mane tabellas perfer et obstantes sedula pelle moras!
nec silicum venae nec durum in pectore ferrum, nec tibi simplicitas ordine maior adest. 10 credibile est et te sensisse Cupidinis arcus — in me militiae signa tuere tuae!
si quaeret quid agam, spe noctis vivere dices;
cetera fert blanda cera notata manu.
Dum loquor, hora fugit. vacuae bene redde tabellas, 15
verum continuo fac tamen illa legat.
adspicias oculos mando frontemque legentis;
et tacito vultu scire futura licet.
nec mora, perlectis rescribat multa, iubeto;
odi, cum late splendida cera vacat. 20 conprimat ordinibus versus, oculosque moretur margine in extremo littera rasa meos.
Quid digitos opus est graphio lassare tenendo?
hoc habeat scriptum tota tabella 'veni!'
non ego victrices lauro redimire tabellas 25 nec Veneris media ponere in aede morer.
subscribam: 'VENERI FIDAS SIBI NASO MINISTRAS DEDICAT, AT NUPER VILE FUISTIS ACER.'

XII

Flete meos casus — tristes rediere tabellae infelix hodie littera posse negat.
omina sunt aliquid; modo cum discedere vellet, ad limen digitos restitit icta Nape.
missa foras iterum limen transire memento 5 cautius atque alte sobria ferre pedem!
Ite hinc, difficiles, funebria ligna, tabellae, tuque, negaturis cera referta notis! — quam, puto, de longae collectam flore cicutae melle sub infami Corsica misit apis. 10 at tamquam minio penitus medicata rubebas — ille color vere sanguinolentus erat.
proiectae triviis iaceatis, inutile lignum, vosque rotae frangat praetereuntis onus!
illum etiam, qui vos ex arbore vertit in usum, 15 convincam puras non habuisse manus.
praebuit illa arbor misero suspendia collo, carnifici diras praebuit illa cruces;
illa dedit turpes raucis bubonibus umbras, vulturis in ramis et strigis ova tulit. 20 his ego commisi nostros insanus amores molliaque ad dominam verba ferenda dedi?
aptius hae capiant vadimonia garrula cerae, quas aliquis duro cognitor ore legat;
inter ephemeridas melius tabulasque iacerent, 25
in quibus absumptas fleret avarus opes.
Ergo ego vos rebus duplices pro nomine sensi.
auspicii numerus non erat ipse boni.
quid precer iratus, nisi vos cariota senectus rodat, et inmundo cera sit alba situ? 30

XIII

Iam super oceanum venit a seniore marito flava pruinoso quae vehit axe diem.
'Quo properas, Aurora? mane! — sic Memnonis umbris annua sollemni caede parentet avis!
nunc iuvat in teneris dominae iacuisse lacertis; 5 si quando, lateri nunc bene iuncta meo est.
nunc etiam somni pingues et frigidus aer, et liquidum tenui gutture cantat avis.
quo properas, ingrata viris, ingrata puellis?
roscida purpurea supprime lora manu! 10 Ante tuos ortus melius sua sidera servat navita nec media nescius errat aqua;
te surgit quamvis lassus veniente viator, et miles saevas aptat ad arma manus.
prima bidente vides oneratos arva colentes; 15 prima vocas tardos sub iuga panda boves.
tu pueros somno fraudas tradisque magistris, ut subeant tenerae verbera saeva manus;
atque eadem sponsum incautos ante atria mittis, unius ut verbi grandia damna ferant. 20 nec tu consulto, nec tu iucunda diserto;
cogitur ad lites surgere uterque novas.
tu, cum feminei possint cessare labores, lanificam revocas ad sua pensa manum.
Omnia perpeterer — sed surgere mane puellas, 25 quis nisi cui non est ulla puella ferat?
optavi quotiens, ne nox tibi cedere vellet, ne fugerent vultus sidera mota tuos!
optavi quotiens, aut ventus frangeret axem, aut caderet spissa nube retentus equus! 30 [quid, si Cephalio numquam flagraret amore?

an putat ignotam nequitiam esse suam?
invida, quo properas? quod erat tibi filius ater, materni fuerat pectoris ille color.
Tithono vellem de te narrare liceret; 35 fabula non caelo turpior ulla foret.
illum dum refugis, longo quia grandior aevo, surgis ad invisas a sene mane rotas.
at si, quem mavis, Cephalum complexa teneres, clamares: "lente currite, noctis equi!" 40
Cur ego plectar amans, si vir tibi marcet ab annis?
num me nupsisti conciliante seni?
adspice, quot somnos iuveni donarit amato Luna! — neque illius forma secunda tuae.
ipse deum genitor, ne te tam saepe videret, 45 commisit noctes in sua vota duas.' Iurgia finieram. scires audisse: rubebat — nec tamen adsueto tardius orta dies!

XIV

Dicebam 'medicare tuos desiste capillos!'
tingere quam possis, iam tibi nulla coma est.
at si passa fores, quid erat spatiosius illis?
contigerant imum, qua patet usque, latus.
quid, quod erant tenues, et quos ornare timeres? 5 vela colorati qualia Seres habent, vel pede quod gracili deducit aranea filum, cum leve deserta sub trabe nectit opus.
nec tamen ater erat nec erat tamen aureus ille, sed, quamvis neuter, mixtus uterque color — 10 qualem clivosae madidis in vallibus Idae ardua derepto cortice cedrus habet.
Adde, quod et dociles et centum flexibus apti et tibi nullius causa doloris erant.
non acus abruptit, non vallum pectinis illos. 15 ornatrix tuto corpore semper erat;
ante meos saepe est oculos ornata nec umquam bracchia derepta saucia fecit acu.
saepe etiam nondum digestis mane capillis purpureo iacuit semisupina toro. 20 tum quoque erat neglecta decens, ut Threcia Bacche, cum temere in viridi gramine lassa iacet.
Cum graciles essent tamen et lanuginis instar, heu, male vexatae quanta tulere comae!
quam se praebuerunt ferro patienter et igni, 25
ut fieret torto nexilis orbe sinus!
clamabam: 'scelus est istos, scelus urere crines!
sponte decent; capiti, ferrea, parce tuo! vim procul hinc remove! non est, qui debeat uri;
erudit admotas ipse capillus acus.' 30 Formosae periere comae — quas vellet Apollo, quas vellet capiti Bacchus inesse suo!

illis contulerim, quas quondam nuda Dione pingitur umentis sustinuisse manu.
quid male dispositos quereris periisse capillos? 35 quid speculum maesta ponis, inepta, manu?
non bene consuetis a te spectaris ocellis;
ut placeas, debes inmemor esse tui.
non te cantatae laeserunt paelicis herbae, non anus Haemonia perfida lavit aqua; 40 nec tibi vis morbi nocuit — procul omen abesto! — nec minuit densas invida lingua comas.
facta manu culpaque tua dispendia sentis;
ipsa dabas capiti mixta venena tuo.
Nunc tibi captivos mittet Germania crines; 45 tuta triumphatae munere gentis eris.
o quam saepe comas aliquo mirante rubebis, et dices: 'empta nunc ego merce probor, nescio quam pro me laudat nunc iste Sygambram.
fama tamen memini cum fuit ista mea.' 50
Me miserum! lacrimas male continet oraque dextra protegit ingenuas picta rubore genas.
sustinet antiquos gremio spectatque capillos,
ei mihi, non illo munera digna loco!
Collige cum vultu mentem! reparabile damnum est. 55
postmodo nativa conspiciere coma.

XV

Quid mihi Livor edax, ignavos obicis annos, ingeniique vocas carmen inertis opus;
non me more patrum, dum strenua sustinet aetas, praemia militiae pulverulenta sequi, nec me verbosas leges ediscere nec me 5 ingrato vocem prostituisse foro?
Mortale est, quod quaeris, opus. mihi fama perennis quaeritur, in toto semper ut orbe canar.
vivet Maeonides, Tenedos dum stabit et Ide, dum rapidas Simois in mare volvet aquas; 10
vivet et Ascraeus, dum mustis uva tumebit, dum cadet incurva falce resecta Ceres.
Battiades semper toto cantabitur orbe;
quamvis ingenio non valet, arte valet.
nulla Sophocleo veniet iactura cothurno; 15 cum sole et luna semper Aratus erit; dum fallax servus, durus pater, inproba lena vivent et meretrix blanda, Menandros erit; Ennius arte carens animosique Accius oris casurum nullo tempore nomen habent. 20 Varronem primamque ratem quae nesciet aetas, aureaque Aesonio terga petita duci?
carmina sublimis tunc sunt peritura Lucreti, exitio terras cum dabit una dies;
Tityrus et segetes Aeneiaque arma legentur, 25
Roma triumphati dum caput orbis erit;
donec erunt ignes arcusque Cupidinis arma, discentur numeri, culte Tibulle, tui; Gallus et Hesperii et Gallus notus Eois, et sua cum Gallo nota Lycoris erit. 30 Ergo, cum silices, cum dens patientis aratri depereant aevo, carmina morte carent.

cedant carminibus reges regumque triumpho, cedat et auriferi ripa benigna Tagi!
vilia miretur vulgus; mihi flavus Apollo 35
pocula Castalia plena ministret aqua, sustineamque coma metuentem frigora myrtum, atque a sollicito multus amante legar!
pascitur in vivis Livor; post fata quiescit, cum suus ex merito quemque tuetur honos. 40
ergo etiam cum me supremus adederit ignis, vivam, parsque mei multa superstes erit.

LIBER SECVNDVS AMORES

I

Hoc quoque composui Paelignis natus aquosis, ille ego nequitiae Naso poeta meae.
hoc quoque iussit Amor — procul hinc, procul este, severae!
    non estis teneris apta theatra modis.
me legat in sponsi facie non frigida virgo,
    et rudis ignoto tactus amore puer;
atque aliquis iuvenum quo nunc ego saucius arcu agnoscat flammae conscia signa suae, miratusque diu 'quo' dicat 'ab indice doctus composuit casus iste poeta meos?'

Ausus eram, memini, caelestia dicere bella centimanumque Gyen — et satis oris erat — cum male se Tellus ulta est, ingestaque Olympo ardua devexum Pelion Ossa tulit.
in manibus nimbos et cum love fulmen habebam, quod bene pro caelo mitteret ille suo — Clausit amica fores! ego cum love fulmen omisi;
    excidit ingenio Iuppiter ipse meo.
Iuppiter, ignoscas! nil me tua tela iuvabant;
    clausa tuo maius ianua fulmen habet.
blanditias elegosque levis, mea tela, resumpsi;
    mollierunt duras lenia verba fores.
carmina sanguineae deducunt cornua lunae, et revocant niveos solis euntis equos;
carmine dissiliunt abruptis faucibus angues, inque suos fontes versa recurrit aqua.
carminibus cessere fores, insertaque posti, quamvis robur erat, carmine victa sera est.
Quid mihi profuerit velox cantatus Achilles?
    quid pro me Atrides alter et alter agent, quique tot errando, quot bello, perdidit annos, raptus et Haemoniis flebilis Hector equis?

at facie tenerae laudata saepe puellae, ad vatem, pretium carminis, ipsa venit.
magna datur merces! heroum clara valet nomina; non apta est gratia vestra mihi!
ad mea formosos vultus adhibete, puellae, carmina, purpureus quae mihi dictat Amor!

II

Quem penes est dominam servandi cura, Bagoa, dum perago tecum pauca, sed apta, vaca.
hesterna vidi spatiantem luce puellam illa, quae Danaï porticus agmen habet.
protinus, ut placuit, misi scriptoque rogavi.
rescripsit trepida 'non licet!' illa manu;
et, cur non liceat, quaerenti reddita causa est,
quod nimium dominae cura molesta tua est.
Si sapis, o custos, odium, mihi crede, mereri desine; quem metuit quisque, perisse cupit.
vir quoque non sapiens; quid enim servare laboret, unde nihil, quamvis non tueare, perit?
sed gerat ille suo morem furiosus amori et castum, multis quod placet, esse putet;
huic furtiva tuo libertas munere detur,
quam dederis illi, reddat ut illa tibi.
consciis esse velis — domina est obnoxia servo;
consciis esse times — dissimulare licet.
scripta leget secum — matrem misisse putato!
venerit ignotus — postmodo notus erit.
ibit ad adfectam, quae non languebit, amicam:
visat! iudiciis aegra sit illa tuis.
si faciet tarde, ne te mora longa fatiget, inposita gremio stertere fronte potes.
nec tu, linigeram fieri quid possit ad Isim, quaesieris nec tu curva theatra time!
consciis adsiduos commissi tollet honores — quis minor est autem quam tacuisse labor?
ille placet versatque domum neque verbera sentit;
ille potens — alii, sordida turba, iacent.
huic, verae ut lateant causae, finguntur inanes;

atque ambo domini, quod probat una, probant.
cum bene vir traxit vultum rugasque coegit, quod voluit fieri blanda puella, facit.
Sed tamen interdum tecum quoque iurgia nectat, et simulet lacrimas carnificemque vocet.
tu contra obiciens, quae tuto diluat illa, et veris falso crimine deme fidem.
sic tibi semper honos, sic alta peculia crescent.
haec fac, in exiguo tempore liber eris.
Adspicis indicibus nexas per colla catenas?
squalidus orba fide pectora carcer habet.
quaerit aquas in aquis et poma fugacia captat Tantalus — hoc illi garrula lingua dedit.
dum nimium servat custos lunonius Io, ante suos annos occidit; illa dea est!
vidi ego conpedibus liventia crura gerentem, unde vir incestum scire coactus erat.
poena minor merito. nocuit mala lingua duobus;
vir doluit, famae damna puella tulit.
crede mihi, nulli sunt crimina grata marito, nec quemquam, quamvis audiat, illa iuvant.
seu tepet, indicium securas prodis ad aures;
sive amat, officio fit miser ille tuo.
Culpa nec ex facili quamvis manifesta probatur;
iudicis illa sui tuta favore venit.
viderit ipse licet, credet tamen ille neganti damnabitque oculos et sibi verba dabit.
adspiciat dominae lacrimas, plorabit et ipse, et dicet: 'poenas garrulus iste dabit!'
quid dispar certamen inis? tibi verbera victo adsunt, in gremio iudicis illa sedet.
Non scelus adgredimur, non ad miscenda coimus toxica, non stricto fulminat ense manus.
quaerimus, ut tuto per te possimus amare.
quid precibus nostris mollius esse potest?

III

Ei mihi, quod dominam nec vir nec femina servas mutua nec Veneris gaudia nosse potes!
qui primus pueris genitalia membra recidit, vulnera quae fecit, debuit ipse pati.
mollis in obsequium facilisque rogantibus esses, si tuus in quavis praetepuisset amor.
non tu natus equo, non fortibus utilis armis;
bellica non dextrae convenit hasta tuae.
ista mares tractent; tu spes depone viriles.
sunt tibi cum domina signa ferenda tua.
hanc inple meritis, huius tibi gratia prosit;
si careas illa, quis tuus usus erit?
Est etiam facies, sunt apti lusibus anni;
indigna est pigro forma perire situ.
fallere te potuit, quamvis habere molestus;
non caret effectu, quod voluere duo.
aptius ut fuerit precibus temptasse, rogamus, dum bene ponendi munera tempus habes.

IV

Non ego mendosos ausim defendere mores falsaque pro vitiis arma movere meis.
confiteor — siquid prodest delicta fateri;
in mea nunc demens crimina fassus eo.
odi, nec possum, cupiens, non esse quod odi;
heu, quam quae studeas ponere ferre grave est!
Nam desunt vires ad me mihi iusque regendum;
auferor ut rapida concita puppis aqua.
non est certa meos quae forma invitet amores — centum sunt causae, cur ego semper amem.
sive aliqua est oculos in humum deiecta modestos, uror, et insidiae sunt pudor ille meae;
sive procax aliqua est, capior, quia rustica non est, spemque dat in molli mobilis esse toro.
aspera si visa est rigidasque imitata Sabinas, velle, sed ex alto dissimulare puto.
sive es docta, places raras dotata per artes;
sive rudis, placita es simplicitate tua.
est, quae Callimachi prae nostris rustica dicat carmina — cui placeo, protinus ipsa placet.
est etiam, quae me vatem et mea carmina culpet — culpantis cupiam sustinuisse femur.
molliter incedit — motu capit; altera dura est —
at poterit tacto mollior esse viro.
haec quia dulce canit flectitque facillima vocem, oscula cantanti rapta dedisse velim;
haec querulas habili percurrit pollice chordas — tam doctas quis non possit amare manus?
illa placet gestu numerosaque bracchia ducit et tenerum molli torquet ab arte latus — ut taceam de me, qui causa tangor ab omni, illic Hippolytum pone, Priapus erit!

tu, quia tam longa es, veteres heroidas aequas et potes in toto multa iacere toro.
haec habilis brevitatem suam est. corrumpor utraque;
conveniunt voto longa brevisque meo.
non est culta — subit, quid cultae accedere possit;
ornata est — dotes exhibet ipsa suas.
candida me capiet, capiet me flava puella, est etiam in fusco grata colore Venus.
seu pendent nivea pulli cervice capilli, Leda fuit nigra conspicienda coma;
seu flavent, placuit croceis Aurora capillis.
omnibus historiis se meus aptat amor.
me nova sollicitat, me tangit serior aetas;
haec melior, specie corporis illa placet.
Denique quas tota quisquam probet urbe puellas, noster in has omnis ambitiosus amor.

V

Nullus amor tanti est — abeas, pharetrate Cupido! — ut mihi sint totiens maxima vota mori.
vota mori mea sunt, cum te peccasse recordor,
o mihi perpetuum nata puella malum!
Non male deletae nudant tua facta tabellae, nec data furtive munera crimen habent.
o utinam arguerem sic, ut non vincere possem!
me miserum! quare tam bona causa mea est?
felix, qui quod amat defendere fortiter audet, cui sua 'non feci!' dicere amica potest.
ferreus est nimiumque suo favet ille dolori, cui petitur victa palma cruenta rea.
Ipse miser vidi, cum me dormire putares, sobrius adposito crimina vestra mero.
multa supercilio vidi vibrante loquentes;
nutibus in vestris pars bona vocis erat.
non oculi tacuere tui, conscriptaque vino mensa, nec in digitis littera nulla fuit.
sermonem agnovi, quod non videatur, agentem verbaque pro certis iussa valere notis.
iamque frequens ierat mensa conviva relictas;
conpositi iuvenes unus et alter erant.
inproba tum vero iungentes oscula vidi — illa mihi lingua nexa fuisse liquet — qualia non fratri tulerit germana severo, sed tulerit cupido mollis amica viro;
qualia credibile est non Phoebos ferre Dianam, sed Venerem Marti saepe tulisse suo.
'Quid facis?' exclamo, 'quo nunc mea gaudia differs?
iniciam dominas in mea iura manus!
haec tibi sunt mecum, mihi sunt communia tecum —

in bona cur quisquam tertius ista venit?
Haec ego, quaeque dolor linguae dictavit; at illi conscia purpureus venit in ora pudor, quale coloratum Tithoni coniuge caelum subrubet, aut sponso visa puella novo;
quale rosae fulgent inter sua lilia mixtae, aut ubi cantatis Luna laborat equis, aut quod, ne longis flavescere possit ab annis, Maeonis Assyrium femina tinxit ebur.
hic erat aut alicui color ille simillimus horum, et numquam visu pulchrior illa fuit.
spectabat terram — terram spectare decebat;
    maesta erat in vultu — maesta decenter erat.
sicut erant, et erant culti, laniare capillos et fuit in teneras impetus ire genas — Ut faciem vidi, fortes cecidere lacerti; defensa est armis nostra puella suis.
qui modo saevus eram, supplex ultroque rogavi, oscula ne nobis deteriora daret.
risit et ex animo dedit optima — qualia possent excutere irato tela trisulca Iovi; torqueor infelix, ne tam bona senserit alter, et volo non ex hac illa fuisse nota.
haec quoque, quam docui, multo meliora fuerunt, et quiddam visa est addidicisse novi.
quod nimium placuere, malum est, quod tota labellis lingua tua est nostris, nostra recepta tuis.
nec tamen hoc unum doleo — non oscula tantum iuncta queror, quamvis haec quoque iuncta queror;
illa nisi in lecto nusquam potuere doceri.
    nescio quis pretium grande magister habet.

VI

Psittacus, Eois imitatrix ales ab Indis, occidit — exequias ite frequenter, aves!
ite, piae volucres, et plangite pectora pinnis et rigido teneras ungue notate genas; horrida pro maestis lanietur pluma capillis,
pro longa resonent carmina vestra tuba!
quod scelus Ismarii quereris, Philomela, tyranni, expleta est annis ista querela suis;
alitis in rarae miserum devertere funus — magna, sed antiqua est causa doloris Itys.
Omnes, quae liquido libratis in aere cursus, tu tamen ante alios, turtur amice, dole!
plena fuit vobis omni concordia vita,
et stetit ad finem longa tenaxque fides.
quod fuit Argolico iuvenis Phoceus Orestae, hoc tibi, dum licuit, psittace, turtur erat.
Quid tamen ista fides, quid rari forma coloris, quid vox mutandis ingeniosa sonis, quid iuvat, ut datus es, nostrae placuisse puellae? — infelix, avium gloria, nempe iaces!
tu poteras fragiles pinnis hebetare zmaragdos tinctorum gerens rubro Punica rostra croco.
non fuit in terris vocum simulantior ales — reddebas blaeso tam bene verba sono!
Raptus es invidia — non tu fera bella movebas;
garrulus et placidae pacis amator eras.
ecce, coturnices inter sua proelia vivunt;
forsitan et fiunt inde frequenter anus.
plenus eras minimo, nec prae sermonis amore in multos poteras ora vacare cibos.
nux erat esca tibi, causaeque papavera somni, pellebatque sitim simplicis umor aquae.

vivit edax vultur ducensque per aera gyros miluus et pluviae graculus auctor aquae; vivit et armiferae cornix invisae Minervae — illa quidem saeculis vix moritura novem;
occidit illa loquax humanae vocis imago, psittacus, extremo munus ab orbe datum!
optima prima fere manibus rapiuntur avaris;
implentur numeris deteriora suis.
tristia Phylacidae Thersites funera vidit, iamque cinis vivis fratribus Hector erat.
Quid referam timidae pro te pia vota puellae — vota procelloso per mare rapta Noto?
septima lux venit non exhibitura sequentem, et stabat vacuo iam tibi Parca colo.
nec tamen ignavo stupuerunt verba palato;
clamavit moriens lingua: 'Corinna, vale!'
Colle sub Elysio nigra nemus ilice frondet, udaque perpetuo gramine terra viret.
siqua fides dubiis, volucrum locus ille piarum dicitur, obscenae quo prohibentur aves.
illic innocui late pascuntur olores et vivax phoenix, unica semper avis;
explicat ipsa suas ales lunonia pinnae, oscula dat cupido blanda columba mari.
psittacus has inter nemorali sede receptus convertit volucres in sua verba pias.
Ossa tegit tumulus — tumulus pro corpore magnus — quo lapis exiguus par sibi carmen habet:
"colligor ex ipso dominae placuisse sepulcro;
ora fuere mihi plus ave docta loqui".

VII

Ergo sufficiam reus in nova crimina semper?
ut vincam, totiens dimicuisse piget.
sive ego marmorei respexi summa theatri, eligis e multis, unde dolere velis;
candida seu tacito vidit me femina vultu,
in vultu tacitas arguis esse notas.
siquam laudavi, misero petis ungue capillos;
si culpo, crimen dissimulare putas.
sive bonus color est, in te quoque frigidus esse, seu malus, alterius dicor amore mori.
Atque ego peccati vellem mihi conscius essem!
aequo animo poenam, qui meruere, ferunt;
nunc temere insimulas credendoque omnia frustra ipsa vetas iram pondus habere tuam.
adspice, ut auritus miserandae sortis asellus adsiduo domitus verbere lentus eat!
Ecce novum crimen! sollers ornare Cypassis obicitur dominae contemerasse torum.
di melius, quam me, si sit peccasse libido, sordida contemptae sortis amica iuвет!
quis Veneris famulae conubia liber inire tergaque complecti verbere secta velit?
adde, quod ornandis illa est operata capillis et tibi perdocta est grata ministra manu — scilicet ancillam, quae tam tibi fida, rogarem!
quid, nisi ut indicio iuncta repulsa foret?
per Venerem iuro puerique volatilis arcus, me non admissi criminis esse reum!

VIII

Ponendis in mille modos perfecta capillis, comere sed solas digna, Cypassi, deas, et mihi iucundo non rustica cognita furto, apta quidem dominae, sed magis apta mihi — quis fuit inter nos sociati corporis index?
sensit concubitus unde Corinna tuos?
num tamen erubui? num, verbo lapsus in ullo, furtivae Veneris conscia signa dedi?
Quid, quod in ancilla siquis delinquere possit, illum ego contendi mente carere bona?
Thessalus ancillae facie Briseidos arsit;
serva Mycenaeo Phoebas amata duci.
nec sum ego Tantalide maior, nec maior Achille;
quod decuit reges, cur mihi turpe putem?
Ut tamen iratos in te defixit ocellos, vidi te totis erubuisse genis;
at quanto, si forte refers, praesentior ipse per Veneris feci numina magna fidem!
tu, dea, tu iubeas animi periuria puri Carpathium tepidos per mare ferre Notos!
Pro quibus officiis pretium mihi dulce repende concubitus hodie, fusca Cypassi, tuos!
quid renuis fingisque novos, ingrata, timores?
unum est e dominis emeruisse satis.
quod si stulta negas, index anteacta fatebor, et veniam culpa proditor ipse meae, quoque loco tecum fuerim, quotiensque, Cypassi, narrabo dominae, quotque quibusque modis!

IXa

O numquam pro re satis indignande Cupido, o in corde meo desidiose puer — quid me, qui miles numquam tua signa reliqui, laedis, et in castris vulneror ipse meis?
cur tua fax urit, figit tuus arcus amicos?
gloria pugnantes vincere maior erat.
Quid? non Haemonius, quem cuspide perculit, heros confossum medica postmodo iuvit ope?
venator sequitur fugientia; capta relinquit semper et inventis ulteriora petit.
nos tua sentimus, populus tibi deditus, arma;
pigra reluctanti cessat in hoste manus.
quid iuvat in nudis hamata retundere tela ossibus? ossa mihi nuda relinquit amor.
tot sine amore viri, tot sunt sine amore puellae! — hinc tibi cum magna laude triumphus eat.
Roma, nisi inmensum vires promosset in orbem, stramineis esset nunc quoque tecta casis.
Fessus in acceptos miles deducitur agros;
mittitur in saltus carcere liber equus;
longaque subductam celant navalia pinum, tutaque deposito poscitur ense rudis.
me quoque, qui totiens merui sub amore puellae,
defunctum placide vivere tempus erat.

IXb

'Vive' deus 'posito' siquis mihi dicat 'amore!'
deprecer — usque adeo dulce puella malum est.
cum bene pertaesum est, animoque relanguit ardor, nescio quo miserae turbine mentis agor.
ut rapit in praeceps dominum spumantia frustra frena retentantem durior oris equus;
ut subitus, prope iam prensa tellure, carinam tangente portus ventus in alta rapit — sic me saepe refert incerta Cupidinis aura, notaque purpureus tela resumit Amor.
Fige, puer! positus nudus tibi praebeor armis;
hic tibi sunt vires, hac tua dextra facit;
huc tamquam iussae veniunt iam sponte sagittae — vix illis prae me nota pharetra sua est!
infelix, tota quicumque quiescere nocte sustinet et somnos praemia magna vocat!
stulte, quid est somnus, gelidae nisi mortis imago!
longa quiescendi tempora fata dabunt.
me modo decipiant voces fallacis amicae;
sperando certe gaudia magna feram.
et modo blanditias dicat, modo iurgia nectat;
saepe fruar domina, saepe repulsus eam.
Quod dubius Mars est, per te, privigne Cupido, est;
et movet exemplo vitricus arma tuo.
tu levis es multoque tuis ventosior alis, gaudiaque ambigua dasque negasque fide.
si tamen exaudis, pulchra cum matre, Cupido, indeserta meo pectore regna gere!
accedant regno, nimium vaga turba, puellae!
ambobus populis sic venerandus eris.

X

Tu mihi, tu certe, memini, Graecine, negabas uno posse aliquem tempore amare duas.
per te ego decipior, per te deprensus inermis — ecce, duas uno tempore turpis amo!
utraque formosa est, operosae cultibus ambae;
artibus in dubio est haec sit an illa prior.
pulchrior hac illa est, haec est quoque pulchrior illa;
et magis haec nobis, et magis illa placet!
erro, velut ventis discordibus acta phaselos, dividuumque tenent alter et alter amor.
quid geminas, Erycina, meos sine fine dolores?
non erat in curas una puella satis?
quid folia arboribus, quid pleno sidera caelo,
in freta collectas alta quid addis aquas?
Sed tamen hoc melius, quam si sine amore iacerem — hostibus eveniat vita severa meis!
hostibus eveniat viduo dormire cubili et medio laxe ponere membra toro!
at mihi saevus amor somnos abrumpat inertes, simque mei lecti non ego solus onus!
me mea disperdat nullo prohibente puella —
si satis una potest, si minus una, duae!
sufficiam — graciles, non sunt sine viribus artus;
pondere, non nervis corpora nostra carent;
et lateri dabit in vires alimenta voluptas.
decepta est opera nulla puella mea;
saepe ego lascive consumpsi tempora noctis, utilis et forti corpore mane fui.
felix, quem Veneris certamina mutua perdunt!
di faciant, leti causa sit ista mei!
Induat adversis contraria pectora telis miles et aeternum sanguine nomen emat.

quaerat avarus opes et, quae lassarit arando, aequora periuro naufragus ore bibat.
at mihi contingat Veneris languescere motu, cum moriar, medium solvar et inter opus;
atque aliquis nostro lacrimans in funere dicat:
'conveniens vitae mors fuit ista tuae!'

XI

Prima malas docuit mirantibus aequoris undis Peliaco pinus vertice caesa vias, quae concurrentis inter temeraria cautes conspicuum fulvo vellere vexit ovem.
o utinam, nequis remo freta longa moveret, Argo funestas pressa bibisset aquas!
Ecce, fugit notumque torum sociosque Penates fallacisque vias ire Corinna parat.
quam tibi, me miserum, Zephyros Eurosque timebo et gelidum Borean egelidumque Notum!
non illic urbes, non tu mirabere silvas;
una est iniusti caerulea forma maris.
nec medius tenuis conchas pictosque lapillos pontus habet; bibuli litoris illa mora est.
litora marmoreis pedibus signate, puellae;
hactenus est tutum — cetera caeca via est.
et vobis alii ventorum proelia narrent;
quas Scylla infestet, quasve Charybdis aquas;
et quibus emineant violenta Ceraunia saxis;
quo lateant Syrtes magna minorque sinu.
haec alii referant ad vos; quod quisque loquetur, credite! credenti nulla procella nocet.
Sero respicitur tellus, ubi fune soluto currit in inmensum panda carina salum; navita sollicitus cum ventos horret iniquos et prope tam letum, quam prope cernit aquam.
quod si concussas Triton exasperet undas, quam tibi sit toto nullus in ore color!
tum generosa voces fecundae sidera Ladae et 'felix,' dicas 'quem sua terra tenet!'
Tutius est fovisse torum, legisse libellos,

Threiciam digitis increpuisse Iyram.
at, si vana ferunt volucres mea dicta procellae, aequa tamen puppi sit Galatea tuae!
vestrum crimen erit talis iactura puellae, Nereidesque deae Nereidumque pater.
vade memor nostri vento reditura secundo;
    inpleat illa tuos fortior aura sinus!
tum mare in haec magnus proclinet litora Nereus;
    huc venti spirent, huc agat aestus aquas!
ipsa roges, Zephyri veniant in lintea pleni, ipsa tua moveas turgida vela manu!
primus ego adspiciam notam de litore puppim, et dicam: 'nostros advehit illa deos!'
excipiamque umeris et multa sine ordine carpam oscula. pro reditu victima vota cadet;
inque tori formam molles sternentur harenae,
    et cumulus mensae quilibet esse potest.
Illic adposito narrabis multa Lyaeo — paene sit ut mediis obruta navis aquis; dumque ad me properas, neque iniquae tempora noctis nec te praecipites extimuisse Notos.
omnia pro veris credam, sint ficta licebit — cur ego non votis blandiar ipse meis?
haec mihi quamprimum caelo nitidissimus alto Lucifer admisso tempora portet equo!

XII

Ite triumphales circum mea tempora laurus!
vicimus: in nostro est, ecce, Corinna sinu, quam vir, quam custos, quam ianua firma, tot hostes, servabant, nequa posset ab arte capi!
haec est praecipuo victoria digna triumpho,
in qua, quaecumque est, sanguine praeda caret.
non humiles muri, non parvis oppida fossis cincta, sed est ductu capta puella meo!
Pergama cum caderent bello superata bilustri, ex tot in Atridis pars quota laudis erat?
at mea seposita est et ab omni milite dissors gloria, nec titulum muneris alter habet.
me duce ad hanc voti finem, me milite veni;
ipse eques, ipse pedes, signifer ipse fui.
nec casum fortuna meis inmiscuit actis — huc ades, o cura parte Triumphe mea!
Nec belli est nova causa mei. nisi rapta fuisset Tyndaris, Europae pax Asiaeque foret.
femina silvestris Lapithas populumque biformem turpiter adposito vertit in arma mero; femina Troianos iterum nova bella movere inpulit in regno, iuste Latine, tuo;
femina Romanis etiamnunc urbe recenti inmisit soceros armaque saeva dedit.
Vidi ego pro nivea pugnantes coniuge tauros;
spectatrix animos ipsa iuvenca dabat.
me quoque, qui multos, sed me sine caede, Cupido
iussit militiae signa movere suae.

XIII

Dum labefactat onus gravidi temeraria ventris, in dubio vitae lassa Corinna iacet.
illa quidem clam me tantum molita pericli ira digna mea; sed cadit ira metu.
sed tamen aut ex me conceperat — aut ego credo;
est mihi pro facto saepe, quod esse potest.
Isi, Paraetonium genialiaque arva Canopi quae colis et Memphin palmiferamque Pharon, quaque celer Nilus lato delapsus in alveo per septem portus in maris exit aquas, per tua sinistra precor, per Anubidis ora verendi — sic tua sacra pius semper Osiris amet, pigraque labatur circa donaria serpens,
et comes in pompa corniger Apis eat!
huc adhibe vultus, et in una parce duobus!
nam vitam dominae tu dabis, illa mihi.
saepe tibi sedit certis operata diebus, qua cingit laurus Gallica turma tuas.
Tuque laborantes utero miserata puellas, quarum tarda latens corpora tendit onus, lenis ades precibusque meis fave, Ilithyia!
digna est, quam iubeas muneris esse tui.
ipse ego tura dabo fumosis candidus aris, ipse feram ante tuos munera vota pedes.
adiciam titulum: 'servata Naso Corinna!'
tu modo fac titulo muneribusque locum.
Si tamen in tanto fas est monuisse timore, hac tibi sit pugna dimicuisse satis!

XIV

Quid iuvat inmunes belli cessare puellas, nec fera peltatas agmina velle sequi, si sine Marte suis patiuntur vulnera telis, et caecas armant in sua fata manus?
Quae prima instituit teneros convellere fetus, militia fuerat digna perire sua.
scilicet, ut careat rugarum crimine venter, sternetur pugnae tristis harena tuae?
si mos antiquis placuisset matribus idem, gens hominum vitio deperitura fuit, quique iterum iaceret generis primordia nostri in vacuo lapides orbe, parandus erat.
quis Priami fregisset opes, si numen aquarum iusta recusasset pondera ferre Thetis?
Ilia si tumido geminos in ventre necasset, casurus dominae conditor Urbis erat;
si Venus Aenean gravida temerasset in alvo, Caesaribus tellus orba futura fuit.
tu quoque, cum posses nasci formosa, perisses, temptasset, quod tu, si tua mater opus;
ipse ego, cum fuerim melius periturus amando, vidissem nullos matre negante dies.
Quid plenam fraudas vitem crescentibus uvis, pomaque crudeli vellis acerba manu?
sponte fluant matura sua — sine crescere nata;
est pretium parvae non leve vita morae.
vestra quid effoditis subiectis viscera telis, et nondum natis dira venena datis?
Colchida respersam puerorum sanguine culpant aque sua caesum matre queruntur Ityn; utraque saeva parens, sed tristibus utraque causis iactura socii sanguinis ulta virum.

dicite, quis Tereus, quis vos inritet Iason figere sollicita corpora vestra manu?
hoc neque in Armeniis tigres fecere latebris, perdere nec fetus ausa leaena suos.
at tenerae faciunt, sed non inpune, puellae;
saepe, suos utero quae necat, ipsa perit.
ipsa perit, ferturque rogo resoluta capillos, et clamant 'merito!' qui modo cumque vident.
Ista sed aetherias vanescant dicta per auras, et sint ominibus pondera nulla meis!
di faciles, peccasse semel concedite tuto, et satis est; poenam culpa secunda ferat!

XV

Anule, formosae digitum vincture puellae, in quo censendum nil nisi dantis amor, munus eas gratum! te laeta mente receptum protinus articulis induat illa suis;
tam bene convenias, quam mecum convenit illi, et digitum iusto commodus orbe teras!
Felix, a domina tractaberis, anule, nostra;
invideo donis iam miser ipse meis.
o utinam fieri subito mea munera possem artibus Aeaëae Carpathiive senis!
tunc ego, cum cupiam dominae tetigisse papillas et laevam tunicis inseruisse manum, elabar digito quamvis angustus et haerens, inque sinum mira laxus ab arte cadam.
idem ego, ut arcanas possim signare tabellas, neve tenax ceram siccaque gemma trahat, umida formosae tangam prius ora puellae — tantum ne signem scripta dolenda mihi.
si dabor ut condar loculis, exire negabo, adstringens digitos orbe minore tuos.
non ego dedecori tibi sum, mea vita, futurus, quodve tener digitus ferre recuset, onus.
me gere, cum calidis perfundes imbribus artus, damnaque sub gemmam fer pereuntis aquae — sed, puto, te nuda mea membra libidine surgent, et peragam partes anulus ille viri.
Inrita quid voveo? parvum proficiscere munus;
illa datam tecum sentiat esse fidem!

XVI

Pars me Sulmo tenet Paeligni tertia ruris — parva, sed inriguis ora salubris aquis.
sol licet admoto tellurem sidere findat, et micet Icarii stella proterva canis, arva pererrantur Paeligna liquentibus undis, et viret in tenero fertilis herba solo.
terra ferax Cereris multoque feracior uvis;
dat quoque baciferam Pallada rarus ager;
perque resurgentes rivis labentibus herbas gramineus madidam caespes obumbrat humum.
At meus ignis abest. verbo peccavimus uno! — quae movet ardores est procul; ardor adest.
non ego, si medius Polluce et Castore ponar,
in caeli sine te parte fuisse velim.
solliciti iaceant terraque premantur iniqua, in longas orbem qui secuere vias! — aut iuvenum comites iussissent ire puellas, si fuit in longas terra secanda vias!
tum mihi, si premerem ventosas horridus Alpes, dummodo cum domina, molle fuisset iter.
cum domina Libycas ausim perrumpere Syrtes et dare non aequis vela ferenda Notis.
non quae virgineo portenta sub inguine latrant, nec timeam vestros, curva Malea, sinus;
non quae submersis ratibus saturata Charybdis fundit et effusas ore receptat aquas.
Quod si Neptuni ventosa potentia vincat, et subventuros auferat unda deos, tu nostris niveos umeris inpone lacertos;
corpore nos facili dulce feremus onus.
saepe petens Hero iuvenis transnaverat undas;

tum quoque transnasset, sed via caeca fuit.
At sine te, quamvis operosi vitibus agri me teneant, quamvis amnibus arva natent, et vocet in rivos currentem rusticus undam, frigidaque arboreas mulceat aura comas,
non ego Paelignos videor celebrare salubres, non ego natalem, rura paterna, locum — sed Scythiam Cilicasque feros viridesque Britannos, quaeque Prometheo saxa cruore rubent.
Ulmus amat vitem, vitis non deserit ulmum;
    separor a domina cur ego saepe mea?
at mihi te comitem iuraras usque futuram — per me perque oculos, sidera nostra, tuos!
verba puellarum, foliis leviora caducis, inrita, qua visum est, ventus et unda ferunt.
Siqua mei tamen est in te pia cura relictis, incipere pollicitis addere facta tuis, parvaeque quamprimum rapiantibus esseda mannis ipsa per admissas concute lora iubas!
at vos, qua veniet, tumidi, subsidite, montes, et faciles curvis vallibus este, viae!

XVII

Siquis erit, qui turpe putet servire puellae, illo convincar iudice turpis ego!
sim licet infamis, dum me moderatius urat, quae Paphon et fluctu pulsa Cythera tenet.
atque utinam dominae miti quoque praeda fuissem formosae quoniam praeda futurus eram!
dat facies animos. facie violenta Corinna est — me miserum! cur est tam bene nota sibi?
scilicet a speculi sumuntur imagine fastus, nec nisi conpositam se prius illa videt!
Non, tibi si facies animum dat et omina regni —
o facies oculos nata tenere meos! — collatum idcirco tibi me contemnere debes;
aptari magnis inferiora licet.
traditur et nymphe mortalis amore Calypso capta recusantem detinuisse virum.
creditur aequoream Pthio Nereida regi, Egeriam iusto concubuisse Numae, Vulcano Venerem, quamvis incude relicta turpiter obliquo claudicet ille pede.
carminis hoc ipsum genus inpar; sed tamen apte iungitur herous cum brevior modo.
tu quoque me, mea lux, in quaslibet accipe leges;
te deceat medio iura dedisse foro.
Non tibi crimen ero, nec quo laetere remoto;
non erit hic nobis infitiandus amor.
sunt mihi pro magno felicia carmina censu, et multae per me nomen habere volunt;
novi aliquam, quae se circumferat esse Corinnam.
ut fiat, quid non illa dedisse velit?
sed neque diversi ripa labuntur eadem frigidus Eurotas populiferque Padus, nec nisi tu nostris cantabitur ulla libellis;

ingenio causas tu dabis una meo.

XVIII

Carmen ad iratum dum tu perducis Achillen primaque iuratis induis arma viris, nos, Macer, ignava Veneris cessamus in umbra, et tener ausuros grandia frangit Amor.
saepe meae 'tandem' dixi 'discede' puellae — in gremio sedit protinus illa meo.
saepe 'pudet!' dixi — lacrimis vix illa retentis
'me miseram! iam te' dixit 'amare pudet?'
implicuitque suos circum mea colla lacertos et, quae me perdunt, oscula mille dedit.
vincor, et ingenium sumptis revocatur ab armis, resque domi gestas et mea bella cano.
Sceptra tamen sumpsi, curaque tragoedia nostra crevit, et huic operi quamlibet aptus eram.
risit Amor pallamque meam pictosque cothurnos sceptraque privata tam cito sumpta manu.
hinc quoque me dominae numen deduxit iniquae, deque cothurnato vate triumphat Amor.
Quod licet, aut artes teneri profitemur Amoris — ei mihi, praeceptis urgeor ipse meis! — aut, quod Penelopes verbis reddatur Ulixi, scribimus et lacrimas, Phylli relictas, tuas, quod Paris et Macareus et quod male gratus Iason Hippolytique parens Hippolytusque legant, quodque tenens strictum Dido miserabilis ensem
dicat et Aoniae Lesbis amata lyrae.
Quam cito de toto rediit meus orbe Sabinus scriptaque diversis rettulit ille locis!
candida Penelope signum cognovit Ulixis;
legit ab Hippolyto scripta noverca suo.
iam pius Aeneas miserae rescripsit Elissae, quodque legat Phyllis, si modo vivit, adest.

tristis ad Hypsipylen ab Iasone littera venit;
det votam Phoebus Lesbis amata lyram.
Nec tibi, qua tutum vati, Macer, arma canenti aureus in medio Marte tacetur Amor.
et Paris est illic et adultera, nobile crimen, et comes extincto Laodamia viro.
si bene te novi, non bella libentius istis dicis, et a vestris in mea castra venis.

XIX

Si tibi non opus est servata, stulte, puella, at mihi fac serves, quo magis ipse velim!
quod licet, ingratum est; quod non licet acrius urit.
ferreus est, siquis, quod sinit alter, amat speremus pariter, pariter metuamus amantes, et faciat voto rara repulsa locum.
quo mihi fortunam, quae numquam fallere curet?
nil ego, quod nullo tempore laedat, amo!
Viderat hoc in me vitium versuta Corinna, quaque capi possem, callida norat opem.
a, quotiens sani capitis mentita dolores cunctantem tardo iussit abire pede!
a, quotiens finxit culpam, quantumque licebat insonti, speciem praebuit esse nocens!
sic ubi vexarat tepidosque refoverat ignis, rursus erat votis comis et apta meis.
quas mihi blanditias, quam dulcia verba parabat oscula, di magni, qualia quotque dabat!
Tu quoque, quae nostros rapuisti nuper ocellos, saepe time simulans, saepe rogata nega;
et sine me ante tuos proiectum in limine postis longa pruinosa frigora nocte pati.
sic mihi durat amor longosque adolescit in annos;
hoc iuvat; haec animi sunt alimenta mei.
pinguis amor nimiumque patens in taedia nobis vertitur et, stomacho dulcis ut esca, nocet.
si numquam Danaen habuisset aenea turris, non esset Danae de Iove facta parens;
dum servat Iuno mutatam cornibus Iovis, facta est, quam fuerat, gratior illa Iovi.
quod licet et facile est quisquis cupit, arbore frondis carpat et e magno flumine potet aquam.

siqua volet regnare diu, deludat amantem.
ei mihi, ne monitis torquear ipse meis!
quidlibet eveniat, nocet indulgentia nobis — quod sequitur, fugio; quod fugit, ipse sequor.
At tu, formosae nimium secure puellae, incipi iam prima claudere nocte forem.
incipi, quis totiens furtim tua limina pulset, quaerere, quid latent nocte silente canes, quas ferat et referat sollers ancilla tabellas, cur totiens vacuo secubet ipsa toro.
mordeat ista tuas aliquando cura medullas, daque locum nostris materiamque dolis.
ille potest vacuo furari litore harenas, uxorem stulti siquis amare potest.
iamque ego praemoneo: nisi tu servare puellam incipis, incipiet desinere esse mea!
multa diuque tuli; speravi saepe futurum, cum bene servasses, ut bene verba darem.
lentus es et pateris nulli patienda marito;
at mihi concessi finis amoris erit!
Scilicet infelix numquam prohibebor adire?
nox mihi sub nullo vindice semper erit?
nil metuam? per nulla traham suspiria somnos?
nil facies, cur te iure perisse velim?
quid mihi cum facili, quid cum lenone marito?
corrumpit vitio gaudia nostra suo.
quin alium, quem tanta iuvat patientia, quaeris?
me tibi rivalem si iuvat esse, veta!

LIBER TERTIVS AMORES

I

Stat vetus et multos incaedua silva per annos;
credibile est illi numen inesse loco.
fons sacer in medio speluncaque pumice pendens, et latere ex omni dulce queruntur aves.
Hic ego dum spatior tectus nemoralibus umbris — quod mea, quaerebam, Musa moveret opus — venit odoratos Elegia nexa capillos, et, puto, pes illi longior alter erat.
forma decens, vestis tenuissima, vultus amantis, et pedibus vitium causa decoris erat.
venit et ingenti violenta Tragoedia passu:
fronte comae torva, palla iacebat humi;
laeva manus sceptrum late regale movebat, Lydius alta pedum vincla cothurnus erat.
Et prior 'ecquis erit,' dixit, 'tibi finis amandi,
O argumenti lente poeta tui?
nequitiam vinosa tuam convivia narrant, narrant in multas conpita secta vias.
saepe aliquis digito vatem designat euntem, atque ait "hic, hic est, quem ferus urit Amor!"
fabula, nec sentis, tota iactaris in urbe, dum tua praeterito facta pudore refers.
tempus erat, thyrso pulsum graviore moveri;
cessatum satis est — incipe maius opus!
materia premis ingenium. cane facta virorum.
"haec animo," dices, "area facta meo est!"
quod tenerae cantent, lusit tua Musa, puellae, primaque per numeros acta iuventa suos.
nunc habeam per te Romana Tragoedia nomen!
inplebit leges spiritus iste meas.'
Hactenus, et movit pictis innixa cothurnis densum caesarie terque quaterque caput.

altera, si memini, limis subrisit ocellis — fallor, an in dextra myrtea virga fuit?
'Quid gravibus verbis, animosa Tragoedia,' dixit,
'me premis? an numquam non gravis esse potes?
inparibus tamen es numeris dignata moveri;
in me pugnasti versibus usa meis.
non ego contulerim sublimia carmina nostris;
obruit exiguas regia vestra fores.
sum levis, et mecum levis est, mea cura, Cupido;
non sum materia fortior ipsa mea.
rustica sit sine me lascivi mater Amoris;
huic ego proveni lena comesque deae.
quam tu non poteris duro reserare cothurno,
haec est blanditiis ianua laxa meis;
et tamen emerui plus quam tu posse, ferendo multa supercilio non patienda tuo.
per me decepto didicit custode Corinna liminis adstricti sollicitare fidem, delabique toro tunica velata soluta atque inpercussos nocte movere pedes.
a quotiens foribus duris infixam pependi,
non verita a populo praetereunte legi!
quin ego me memini, dum custos saevus abiret, ancillae miseram delituisse sinu.
quid, cum me munus natali mittis, at illa rumpit et adposita barbara mersat aqua?
prima tuae movi felicia semina mentis;
munus habes, quod te iam petit ista, meum.'
Desierat. coepi: 'per vos utramque rogamus, in vacuas aures verba timentis eant.
altera me sceptro decoras altoque cothurno;
iam nunc contacto magnus in ore sonus.
altera das nostro victurum nomen amori — ergo ades et longis versibus adde brevis!
exiguam vati concede, Tragoedia, tempus!

tu labor aeternus; quod petit illa, breve est.’
Mota dedit veniam — teneri properentur Amores, dum vacat; a tergo grandius urguet opus!

II

'Non ego nobilium sedeo studiosus equorum;
cui tamen ipsa faves, vincat ut ille, precor.
ut loquerer tecum veni, tecumque sederem, ne tibi non notus, quem facis, esset amor.
tu cursus spectas, ego te; spectemus uterque quod iuvat, atque oculos pascat uterque suos.
O, cuicumque faves, felix agitator equorum!
ergo illi curae contigit esse tuae?
hoc mihi contingat, sacro de carcere missis insistam forti mente vehendus equis, et modo lora dabo, modo verbere terga notabo, nunc stringam metas interiore rota.
si mihi currenti fueris conspecta, morabor, deque meis manibus lora remissa fluent.
at quam paene Pelops Pisaea concidit hasta, dum spectat vultus, Hippodamia, tuos!
nempe favore suae vicit tamen ille puellae.
vincamus dominae quisque favore suae!
Quid frustra refugis? cogit nos linea iungi.
haec in lege loci commoda circus habet — tu tamen a dextra, quicumque es, parce puellae;
contactu lateris laeditur ista tui.
tu quoque, qui spectas post nos, tua contrahe crura, si pudor est, rigido nec preme terga genu!
Sed nimium demissa iacent tibi pallia terra.
collige — vel digitis en ego tollo meis!
invida vestis eras, quae tam bona crura tegebas;
quoque magis spectes — invida vestis eras!
taliam Milonem Atalantes crura fugacis optavit manibus sustinuisse suis.
taliam pinguntur succinctae crura Dianae cum sequitur fortes, fortior ipsa, feras.

his ego non visis arsi; quid fiet ab ipsis?
in flammam flammam, in mare fundis aquas.
suspisor ex istis et cetera posse placere, quae bene sub tenui condita veste latent.
Vis tamen interea faciles arcessere ventos?
quos faciet nostra mota tabella manu.
an magis hic meus est animi, non aeris aestus, captaque femineus pectora torret amor?
dum loquor, alba levi sparsa est tibi pulvere vestis.
sordide de niveo corpore pulvis abi!
Sed iam pompa venit — linguis animisque favete!
tempus adest plausus — aurea pompa venit.
prima loco fertur passis Victoria pinnis — huc ades et meus hic fac, dea, vincat amor!
plaudite Neptuno, nimium qui creditis undis!
nil mihi cum pelago; me mea terra capit.
plaude tuo Marti, miles! nos odimus arma;
pax iuvat et media pace repertus amor.
auguribus Phoebus, Phoebe venantibus adsit!
artifices in te verte, Minerva, manus!
ruricolae, Cereri teneroque adsurgite Baccho!
Pollucem pugiles, Castora placet eques!
nos tibi, blanda Venus, puerisque potentibus arcu plaudimus; inceptis adnue, diva, meis daque novae mentem dominae! patiatur amari!
adnuit et motu signa secunda dedit.
quod dea promisit, promittas ipsa, rogamus;
pace loquar Veneris, tu dea maior eris.
per tibi tot iuro testes pompamque deorum, te dominam nobis tempus in omne peti!
Sed pendent tibi crura. potes, si forte iuvabit, cancellis primos inseruisse pedes.
maxima iam vacuo praetor spectacula circo quadriugos aequo carcere misit equos.
cui studeas, video. vincet, cuicumque favebis.

quid cupias, ipsi scire videntur equi.
me miserum, metam spatioso circuit orbe!
quid facis? admoto proximus axe subit.
quid facis, infelix? perdis bona vota puellae.
tende, precor, valida lora sinistra manu!
favimus ignavo — sed enim revocate, Quirites, et date iactatis undique signa togis!
en, revocant! — ac ne turbet toga mota capillos,
in nostros abdas te licet usque sinus.
Iamque patent iterum reserato carcere postes;
evolat admissis discolor agmen equis.
nunc saltem supera spatioque insurge patenti!
sint mea, sint dominae fac rata vota meae!
Sunt dominae rata vota meae, mea vota supersunt.
ille tenet palmam; palma petenda mea est.'
Risit, et argutis quiddam promisit ocellis.
'Hoc satis est, alio cetera redde loco!'

III

Esse deos, i, crede — fidem iurata fefellit, et facies illi, quae fuit ante, manet!
quam longos habuit nondum periura capillos, tam longos, postquam numina laesit, habet.
candida candorem roseo suffusa rubore ante fuit — niveo lucet in ore rubor.
pes erat exiguus — pedis est artissima forma.
longa decensque fuit — longa decensque manet.
argutos habuit — radiant ut sidus ocelli, per quos mentita est perfida saepe mihi.
scilicet aeterni falsum iurare puellis di quoque concedunt, formaque numen habet.
perque suos illam nuper iurasse recordor perque meos oculos: en doluere mei!
Dicite, di, si vos inpune fefellerat illa, alterius meriti cur ego damna tuli?
an non invidiae vobis Cepheia virgo est, pro male formosa iussa parente mori?
non satis est, quod vos habui sine pondere testis, et mecum lusos ridet inulta deos?
ut sua per nostram redimat periuria poenam, victima deceptus decipientis ero?
aut sine re nomen deus est frustra que timetur et stulta populos credulitate movet; aut, si quis deus est, teneras amat ille puellas et nimium solas omnia posse iubet.
nobis fatifero Mavors accingitur ense;
nos petit invicta Palladis hasta manu.
nobis flexibiles curvantur Apollinis arcus;
in nos alta Iovis dextera fulmen habet.
formosas superi metuunt offendere laesi atque ultro, quae se non timuere, timent.

et quisquam pia tura focus inponere curat?
certe plus animi debet inesse viris!
Iuppiter igne suo lucos iaculatur et arces missaque periuras tela ferire vetat.
tot meruere peti — Semele miserabilis arsit!
officio est illi poena reperta suo;
at si venturo se subduxisset amanti,
non pater in Baccho matris haberet opus.
Quid queror et toto facio convicia caelo?
di quoque habent oculos, di quoque pectus habent!
si deus ipse forem, numen sine fraude liceret femina mendaci falleret ore meum;
ipse ego iurarem verum iurare puellas et non de tetricis dicerer esse deus.
tu tamen illorum moderatius utere dono —
aut oculis certe parce, puella, meis!

IV

Dure vir, inposito tenerae custode puellae nil agis; ingenio est quaeque tuenda suo.
siqua metu dempto casta est, ea denique casta est;
quae, quia non liceat, non facit, illa facit!
ut iam servaris bene corpus, adultera mens est;
nec custodiri, ne velit, ulla potest.
nec corpus servare potes, licet omnia claudas;
omnibus exclusis intus adulter erit.
cui peccare licet, peccat minus; ipsa potestas semina nequitiae languidiora facit.
desine, crede mihi, vitia inritare vetando;
obsequio vinces aptius illa tuo.
Vidi ego nuper equum contra sua vincla tenacem ore reluctanti fulminis ire modo; constitit ut primum concessas sensit habenas frenaque in effusa laxa iacere iuba!
nitimur in vetitum semper cupimusque negata;
sic interdictis imminet aeger aquis.
centum fronte oculos, centum cervice gerebat Argus — et hos unus saepe fefellit Amor;
in thalamum Danae ferro saxoque perennem quae fuerat virgo tradita, mater erat; Penelope mansit, quamvis custode carebat, inter tot iuvenes intemerata procos.
Quidquid servatur cupimus magis, ipsaque furem cura vocat; pauci, quod sinit alter, amant.
nec facie placet illa sua, sed amore mariti;
nescio quid, quod te ceperit, esse putant.
non proba fit, quam vir servat, sed adultera cara;
ipse timor pretium corpore maius habet.
indignere licet, iuvat inconcessa voluptas;

sola placet, 'timeo!' dicere siqua potest.
nec tamen ingenuam ius est servare puellam — hic metus externae corpora gentis agat!
scilicet ut possit custos 'ego' dicere 'feci,' in laudem servi casta sit illa tui?
Rusticus est nimium, quem laedit adultera coniunx, et notos mores non satis urbis habet in qua Martigenae non sunt sine crimine nati Romulus Iliades Iliadesque Remus.
quo tibi formosam, si non nisi casta placebat?
non possunt ullis ista coire modis.
Si sapis, indulge dominae vultusque severos exue, nec rigidi iura tuere viri, et cole quos dederit — multos dabit — uxor amicos.
gratia sic minimo magna labore venit;
sic poteris iuvenum convivia semper inire et, quae non dederis, multa videre domi.

V

'Nox erat, et somnus lassos submisit ocellos;
terrueunt animum talia visa meum: Colle sub aprico creberrimus ilice lucus stabat, et in ramis multa latebat avis.
area gramineo suberat viridissima prato, umida de guttis lene sonantis aquae.
ipse sub arboreis vitabam frondibus aestum — fronde sub arborea sed tamen aestus erat — ecce! petens variis inmixtas floribus herbas constitit ante oculos candida vacca meos, candidior nivibus, tunc cum cecidere recentes,
in liquidas nondum quas mora vertit aquas;
candidior, quod adhuc spumis stridentibus albet et modo siccata, lacte, reliquit ovem.
taurus erat comes huic, feliciter ille maritus,
cumque sua teneram coniuge pressit humum.
Dum iacet et lente revocatas ruminat herbas atque iterum pasto pascitur ante cibo, visus erat, somno vires adimente ferendi, cornigerum terra deposuisse caput.
huc levibus cornix pinnis delapsa per auras venit et in viridi garrula sedit humo, terque bovis niveae petulanti pectora rostro fodit et albentis abstulit ore iugas.
illa locum taurumque diu cunctata relinquit — sed niger in vaccae pectore livor erat; utque procul vidit carpentes pabula tauros — carpebant tauri pabula laeta procul — illuc se rapuit gregibusque inmiscuit illis et petiit herbae fertilioris humum.
Dic age, nocturnae, quicumque es, imaginis augur, siquid habent veri, visa quid ista ferant.’

Sic ego; nocturnae sic dixit imaginis augur, expendens animo singula dicta suo: ‘Quem tu mobilibus foliis vitare volebas, sed male vitabas, aestus amoris erat.
vacca puella tua est — aptus color ille puellae;
tu vir et in vacca conpare taurus eras.
pectora quod rostro cornix fodiebat acuto, ingenium dominae lena movebat anus.
quod cunctata diu taurum sua vacca reliquit, frigidus in viduo destituere toro.
livor et adverso maculae sub pectore nigrae pectus adulterii labe carere negant.’ Dixerat interpres. gelido mihi sanguis ab ore fugit, et ante oculos nox stetit alta meos.

VI

Amnis harundinibus limosas obsite ripas, ad dominam propero — siste parumper aquas!
nec tibi sunt pontes nec quae sine remigis ictu concava traiecto cumba rudente vehat.
parvus eras, memini, nec te transire refugi, summaque vix talos contigit unda meos.
nunc ruis adposito nivibus de monte solutis et turpi crassas gurgite volvis aquas.
quid properasse iuvat, quid parca dedisse quieti tempora, quid nocti conseruisse diem, si tamen hic standum est, si non datur artibus ullis ulterior nostro ripa premenda pedi?
nunc ego, quas habuit pinnas Danaeius heros, terribili densum cum tulit angue caput, nunc opto currum, de quo Cerealia primum semina venerunt in rude missa solum.
prodigiosa loquor veterum mendacia vatum;
nec tulit haec umquam nec feret ulla dies.
Tu potius, ripis effuse capacibus amnis — sic aeternus eas — labere fine tuo!
non eris invidiae, torrens, mihi crede, ferendae, si dicar per te forte retentus amans.
flumina deberent iuvenes in amore iuvare;
flumina senserunt ipsa, quid esset amor.
Inachus in Melie Bithynide pallidus isse dicitur et gelidis incaluisse vadis.
nondum Troia fuit lustris obsessa duobus, cum rapuit vultus, Xanthe, Neaera tuos.
quid? non Alpheon diversis currere terris virginis Arcadiae certus adegit amor?
te quoque promissam Xutho, Penee, Creusam

Pthiotum terris occuluisse ferunt.
quid referam Asopon, quem cepit Martia Thebe, natarum Thebe quinque futura parens?
cornua si tua nunc ubi sint, Acheloe, requiram, Herculis irata fracta querere manu;
nec tanti Calydon nec tota Aetolia tanti,
una tamen tanti Deianira fuit.
ille fluens dives septena per ostia Nilus, qui patriam tantae tam bene celat aquae, fertur in Euanthe collectam Asopide flammam vincere gurgitibus non potuisse suis.
siccus ut amplecti Salmonida posset Enipeus, cedere iussit aquam; iussa recessit aqua.
Nec te praetereo, qui per cava saxa volutans Tiburis Argei pomifera arva rigas, Ilia cui placuit, quamvis erat horrida cultu, ungue notata comas, ungue notata genas.
illa gemens patruique nefas delictaque Martis errabat nudo per loca sola pede.
hanc Anien rapidis animosus vidit ab undis raucaque de mediis sustulit ora vadis atque ita 'quid nostras' dixit 'teris anxia ripas, Ilia, ab Idaeo Laumedonte genus?
quo cultus abiire tui? quid sola vagaris, vitta nec evinctas inpedit alba comas?
quid fles et madidos lacrimis corrumpis ocellos pectoraque insana plangis aperta manu?
ille habet et silices et vivum in pectore ferrum, qui tenero lacrimas lentus in ore videt.
Ilia, pone metus! tibi regia nostra patebit, teque colent amnes. Ilia, pone metus!
tu centum aut plures inter dominabere nymphas;
nam centum aut plures flumina nostra tenent.
ne me sperne, precor, tantum, Troiana propago;
munera promissis uberiora feres.' Dixerat. illa oculos in humum deiecta modestos spargebat teneros flebilis imbre sinus.

ter molita fugam ter ad altas restitit undas, currendi vires eripiente metu.
sera tamen scindens inimico pollice crinem edidit indignos ore tremente sonos:
'o utinam mea lecta forent patrioque sepulcro condita, cum poterant virginis ossa legi!
cur, modo Vestalis, taedas invitor ad ullas turpis et Iliacis infitianda focis?
quid moror et digitis designor adultera vulgi?
    desint famosus quae notet ora pudor!'
Hactenus, et vestem tumidis praetendit ocellis atque ita se in rapidas perdita misit aquas.
supposuisse manus ad pectora lubricus amnis dicitur et socii iura dedisse tori.
Te quoque credibile est aliqua caluisse puella;
    sed nemora et silvae crimina vestra tegunt.
dum loquor, increvit latis spatiosior undis, nec capit admissas alveus altus aquas.
quid mecum, furiose, tibi? quid mutua differs gaudia? quid coeptum, rustice, rumpis iter?
quid? si legitimum flueres, si nobile flumen, si tibi per terras maxima fama foret — nomen habes nullum, rivis collecte caducis, nec tibi sunt fontes nec tibi certa domus!
fontis habes instar pluviamque nivesque solutas, quas tibi divitias pigra ministrat hiemps;
aut lutulentus agis brumali tempore cursus, aut premis arentem pulverulentus humum.
quis te tum potuit sitiens haurire viator?
    quis dixit grata voce 'perennis eas'?
damnosus pecori curris, damnosior agris.
    forsitan haec alios; me mea damna movent.
Huic ego, vae! demens narrabam fluminum amores!
    iactasse indigne nomina tanta pudet.
nescio quem hunc spectans Acheloon et Inachon amnem

et potui nomen, Nile, referre tuum!
at tibi pro meritis, opto, non candide torrens, sint rapidi soles siccaque semper hiemps!

VII

At non formosa est, at non bene culta puella, at, puto, non votis saepe petita meis!
hanc tamen in nullos tenui male languidus usus, sed iacui pigro crimen onusque toro;
nec potui cupiens, pariter cupiente puella, inguinis effeti parte iuvante frui.
illa quidem nostro subiecit eburnea collo bracchia Sithonia candidiora nive, osculaque inseruit cupida luctantia lingua lascivum femori supposuitque femur, et mihi blanditias dixit dominumque vocavit, et quae praeterea publica verba iuvant.
tacta tamen veluti gelida mea membra cicuta segnia propositum destituere meum;
truncus iners iacui, species et inutile pondus, et non exactum, corpus an umbra forem.
Quae mihi ventura est, siquidem ventura, senectus, cum desit numeris ipsa iuventa suis?
a, pudet annorum: quo me iuvenemque virumque?
nec iuvenem nec me sensit amica virum!
sic flammam aditura piis aeterna sacerdos surgit et a caro fratre verenda soror.
at nuper bis flava Chlide, ter candida Pitho, ter Libas officio continuata meo est;
exigere a nobis angusta nocte Corinnam me meminisse numeros sustinuisse novem.
Num mea Thessalico languent devota veneno corpora? num misero carmen et herba nocent, sagave poenicea defixit nomina cera et medium tenuis in iecur egit acus?
carmine laesa Ceres sterilem vanescit in herbam, deficiunt laesi carmine fontis aquae, ilicibus glandes cantataque vitibus uva decidit, et nullo poma movente fluunt.

quid vetat et nervos magicas torpere per artes?
forsitan inpatiens fit latus inde meum.
huc pudor accessit: facti pudor ipse nocebat;
ille fuit vitii causa secunda mei.
At qualem vidi tantum tetigique puellam!
sic etiam tunica tangitur illa sua.
illius ad tactum Pylius iuvenescere possit Tithonosque annis fortior esse suis.
haec mihi contigerat; sed vir non contigit illi.
quas nunc concipiam per nova vota preces?
credo etiam magnos, quo sum tam turpiter usus, muneris oblatis paenituisse deos.
optabam certe recipi — sum nempe receptus;
oscula ferre — tuli; proximus esse — fui.
quo mihi fortunae tantum? quo regna sine usu?
quid, nisi possedi dives avarus opes?
sic aret mediis taciti vulgator in undis pomaque, quae nullo tempore tangat, habet.
a tenera quisquam sic surgit mane puella, protinus ut sanctos possit adire deos?
Sed, puto, non blanda: non optima perdidit in me oscula; non omni sollicitavit ope!
illa graves potuit quercus adamantaque durum surdaque blanditiis saxa movere suis.
digna movere fuit certe vivosque virosque;
sed neque tum vixi nec vir, ut ante, fui.
quid iuuet, ad surdas si cantet Phemius aures?
quid miserum Thamyran picta tabella iuvat?
At quae non tacita formavi gaudia mente!
quos ego non finxi disposuique modos!
nostra tamen iacere velut praemortua membra turpiter hesterna languidiora rosa — quae nunc, ecce, vigent intempestiva valentque, nunc opus exposcunt militiamque suam.

quin istic pudibunda iaces, pars pessima nostri?
sic sum pollicitis captus et ante tuis.
tu dominum fallis; per te deprensus inermis tristia cum magno damna pudore tuli.
Hanc etiam non est mea dedignata puella molliter admota sollicitare manu;
sed postquam nullas consurgere posse per artes inmemoremque sui procubuisse videt,
'quid me ludis?' ait, 'quis te, male sane, iubebat invitum nostro ponere membra toro?
aut te traiectis Aeaëa venefica lanis devovet, aut alio lassus amore venis.'
nec mora, desiluit tunica velata soluta — et decuit nudos proripuisse pedes! — neve suae possent intactam scire ministrae, dedecus hoc sumpta dissimulavit aqua.

VIII

Et quisquam ingenuas etiam nunc suspicit artes, aut tenerum dotes carmen habere putat?
ingenium quondam fuerat pretiosius auro;
at nunc barbaria est grandis, habere nihil.
cum pulchrae dominae nostri placuere libelli, quo licuit libris, non licet ire mihi;
cum bene laudavit, laudato ianua clausa est.
turpiter huc illuc ingeniosus eo.

Ecce, recens dives parto per vulnera censu praefertur nobis sanguine pastus eques!
hunc potes amplecti formosis, vita, lacertis?
huius in amplexu, vita, iacere potes?
si nescis, caput hoc galeam portare solebat;
ense latus cinctum, quod tibi servit, erat;
laeva manus, cui nunc serum male convenit aurum, scuta tulit; dextram tange — cruenta fuit!
qua periit aliquis, potes hanc contingere dextram?
heu, ubi mollities pectoris illa tui?

cerne cicatrices, veteris vestigia pugnae — quaesitum est illi corpore, quidquid habet.
forsitan et, quotiens hominem iugulaverit, ille indicet! hoc fassas tangis, avara, manus?
ille ego Musarum purus Phoebique sacerdos ad rigidas canto carmen inane fores?

discite, qui sapitis, non quae nos scimus inertes, sed trepidas acies et fera castra sequi proque bono versu primum deducite pilum!
nox tibi, si belles, possit, Homere, dari.

Iuppiter, admonitus nihil esse potentius auro, corruptae pretium virginis ipse fuit.
dum merces aberat, durus pater, ipsa severa, aerati postes, ferrea turris erat;

sed postquam sapiens in munere venit adulter, praebuit ipsa sinus et dare iussa dedit.
at cum regna senex caeli Saturnus haberet, omne lucrum tenebris alta premebat humus.
aeraque et argentum cumque auro pondera ferri manibus admorat, nullaque massa fuit.
at meliora dabat — curvo sine vomere fruges pomaque et in quercu mella reperta cava.
nec valido quisquam terram scindebat aratro, signabat nullo limite mensor humum,
non freta demisso verrebant eruta remo;
ultima mortali tum via litus erat.
Contra te sollers, hominum natura, fuisti et nimium damnis ingeniosa tuis.
quo tibi, turritis incingere moenibus urbes?
quo tibi, discordes addere in arma manus?
quid tibi cum pelago — terra contenta fuisses!
cur non et caelum, tertia regna, petis?
qua licet, adfectas caelum quoque — templa Quirinus, Liber et Alcides et modo Caesar habent.
eruumus terra solidum pro frugibus aurum.
possidet inventas sanguine miles opes.
curia pauperibus clausa est — dat census honores;
inde gravis iudex, inde severus eques!
Omnia possideant; illis Campusque forumque serviat, hi pacem crudaque bella gerant — tantum ne nostros avidi liceantur amores, et — satis est — aliquid pauperis esse sinant!
at nunc, exaequet tetricas licet illa Sabinas, imperat ut captae qui dare multa potest;
me prohibet custos, in me timet illa maritum.
si dederim, tota cedit uterque domo!
o si neglecti quisquam deus ultor amantis tam male quaesitas pulvere mutet opes!

IX

Memnona si mater, mater ploravit Achillem, et tangunt magnas tristia fata deas, flebilis indignos, Elegia, solve capillos!
a, nimis ex vero nunc tibi nomen erit! — ille tui vates operis, tua fama, Tibullus ardet in extracto, corpus inane, rogo.
ecce, puer Veneris fert eversamque pharetram et fractos arcus et sine luce facem; adspice, demissis ut eat miserabilis alis pectoraque infesta tundat aperta manu!
excipiunt lacrimas sparsi per colla capilli, oraque singultu concutiente sonant.
fratris in Aeneae sic illum funere dicunt egressum tectis, pulcher lule, tuis;
nec minus est confusa Venus moriente Tibullo, quam iuveni rupit cum ferus inguen aper.
at sacri vates et divum cura vocamur;
sunt etiam qui nos numen habere putent.
Scilicet omne sacrum mors inportuna profanat, omnibus obscuras inicit illa manus!
quid pater Ismario, quid mater profuit Orptheo?
carmine quid victas obstipuisse feras?
et Linon in silvis idem pater 'aelinon!' altis dicitur invita concinuisse lyra.
adice Maeoniden, a quo ceu fonte perenni vatum Pieriis ora rigantur aquis — hunc quoque summa dies nigro submersit Averno.
defugiunt avidos carmina sola rogos;
durant, vatis opus, Troiani fama laboris tardaue nocturno tela retexta dolo.
sic Nemesis longum, sic Delia nomen habebunt, altera cura recens, altera primus amor.

Quid vos sacra iuvant? quid nunc Aegyptia prosunt sistra? quid in vacuo secubuisse toro?
cum rapiunt mala fata bonos — ignoscite fasso! — sollicitor nullos esse putare deos.
vive pius — moriere; pius cole sacra — colentem mors gravis a templis in cava busta trahet; carminibus confide bonis — iacet, ecce, Tibullus:
vix manet e toto, parva quod urna capit!
tene, sacer vates, flammae rapuere rogales pectoribus pasci nec timuere tuis?
aurea sanctorum potuissent templa deorum urere, quae tantum sustinere nefas!
avertit vultus, Erycis quae possidet arces;
sunt quoque, qui lacrimas continuisse negant.
Sed tamen hoc melius, quam si Phaeacia tellus ignotum vili supposuisset humo.
hinc certe madidos fugientis pressit ocellos mater et in cineres ultima dona tulit; hinc soror in partem misera cum matre doloris venit inornatas dilaniata comas, cumque tuis sua iunxerunt Nemesisque priorque oscula nec solos destituere rogos.
Delia discedens 'felicius' inquit 'amata sum tibi; vixisti, dum tuus ignis eram.'
cui Nemesis 'quid' ait 'tibi sunt mea damna dolori?
me tenuit moriens deficiente manu.'
Si tamen e nobis aliquid nisi nomen et umbra restat, in Elysia valle Tibullus erit.
obvius huic venias hedera iuvenalia cinctus tempora cum Calvo, docte Catulle, tuo;
tu quoque, si falsum est temerati crimen amici, sanguinis atque animae prodige Galle tuae.
his comes umbra tua est; siqua est modo corporis umbra, auxisti numeros, culte Tibulle, pios.

ossa quieta, precor, tuta requiescite in urna, et sit humus cineri non onerosa tuo!

X

Annua venerunt Cerealis tempora sacri; secubat in vacuo sola puella toro.
flava Ceres, tenues spicis redimita capillos, cur inhibes sacris commoda nostra tuis?
Te, dea, munificam gentes, ubi quaeque, loquuntur, nec minus humanis invidet ulla bonis.
ante nec hirsuti torrebant farra coloni, nec notum terris area nomen erat, sed glandem quercus, oracula prima, ferebant;
haec erat et teneri caespitis herba cibus.
prima Ceres docuit turgescere semen in agris falce coloratas subsecuitque comas;
prima iugis tauros supponere colla coegit, et veterem curvo dente revellit humum.
Hanc quisquam lacrimis laetari credit amantum et bene tormentis secubituque coli?
nec tamen est, quamvis agros amet illa feraces, rustica nec viduum pectus amoris habet.
Cretes erunt testes — nec fingunt omnia Cretes.
Crete nutrito terra superba love.
illic, sideream mundi qui temperat arcem, exiguus tenero lac bibit ore puer.
Magna fides testi: testis laudatur alumno.
fassuram Cererem crimina nostra puto.
viderat lasium Cretaea diva sub Ida figentem certa terga ferina manu.
vidit, et ut tenerae flammam rapuere medullae, hinc pudor, ex illa parte trahebat amor.
victus amore pudor; sulcos arere videres et sata cum minima parte redire sui.
cum bene iactati pulsarant arva ligones, ruperat et duram vomer aduncus humum, seminaque in latos ierant aequaliter agros, inrita decepti vota colentis erant.

diva potens frugum silvis cessabat in altis;
deciderant longae spiceaserta comae.
sola fuit Crete fecundo fertilis anno;
omnia, qua tulerat se dea, messis erat;
ipsa, locus nemorum, canebat frugibus Ide, et ferus in silva farra metebat aper.
optavit Minos similes sibi legifer annos;
optasset, Cereris longus ut esset amor.
Quod tibi secubitus tristes, dea flava, fuissent, hoc cogor sacris nunc ego ferre tuis?
cur ego sim tristis, cum sit tibi nata reperta regnaque quam Iuno sorte minore regat?
festa dies Veneremque vocat cantusque merumque;
haec decet ad dominos munera ferre deos.

XIa

Multa diuque tuli; vitiis patientia victa est;
cede fatigato pectore, turpis amor!
scilicet adserui iam me fugique catenas, et quae non puduit ferre, tulisse pudet.
vicimus et domitum pedibus calcamus amorem;
venerunt capiti cornua sera meo.
perfer et obdura! dolor hic tibi proderit olim;
saepe tulit lassus sucus amarus opem.
Ergo ego sustinui, foribus tam saepe repulsus, ingenuum dura ponere corpus humo?
ergo ego nescio cui, quem tu complexa tenebas, excubui clausam servus ut ante domum?
vidi, cum foribus lassus prodiret amator, invalidum referens emeritumque latus; hoc tamen est levius, quam quod sum visus ab illo — eveniat nostris hostibus ille pudor!
Quando ego non fixus lateri patienter adhaesi, ipse tuus custos, ipse vir, ipse comes?
scilicet et populo per me comitata placebas;
causa fuit multis noster amoris amor.
turpia quid referam vanae mendacia linguae et periuratos in mea damna deos?
quid iuvenum tacitos inter convivia nutus verbaque conpositis dissimulata notis?
dicta erat aegra mihi — praeceps amensque cucurri;
veni, et rivali non erat aegra meo!
His et quae taceo duravi saepe ferendis;
quaere alium pro me, qui queat ista pati.
iam mea votiva puppis redimita corona lenta tumescentes aequoris audit aquas.

desine blanditias et verba, potentia quondam, perdere — non ego nunc stultus, ut ante fui!

XIb

Luctantur pectusque leve in contraria tendunt hac amor hac odium, sed, puto, vincit amor.
odero, si potero; si non, invitus amabo.
nec iuga taurus amat; quae tamen odit, habet.
nequitiam fugio — fugientem forma reducit;
aversor morum crimina — corpus amo.
sic ego nec sine te nec tecum vivere possum, et videor voti nescius esse mei.
aut formosa fores minus, aut minus inproba, vellem;
non facit ad mores tam bona forma malos.
facta merent odium, facies exorat amorem — me miserum, vitiis plus valet illa suis!
Parce, per o lecti socialia iura, per omnis qui dant fallendos se tibi saepe deos, perque tuam faciem, magni mihi numinis instar, perque tuos oculos, qui rapuere meos!
quidquid eris, mea semper eris; tu selige tantum, me quoque velle velis, anne coactus amem!
lintea dem potius ventisque ferentibus utar, ut, quam, si nolim, cogar amare, velim.

XII

Quis fuit ille dies, quo tristia semper amanti omina non albae concinuistis aves?
quodve putem sidus nostris occurrere fati, quosve deos in me bella movere querar?
quae modo dicta mea est, quam coepi solus amare, cum multis vereor ne sit habenda mihi.
Fallimur, an nostris innotuit illa libellis?
sic erit — ingenio prostitit illa meo.
et merito! quid enim formae praeconia feci?
vendibilis culpa facta puella mea est.
me lenone placet, duce me perductus amator,
ianua per nostras est adaperta manus.
An prosint, dubium, nocuerunt carmina semper;
invidiae nostris illa fuere bonis.
cum Thebae, cum Troia foret, cum Caesaris acta, ingenium movit sola Corinna meum.
aversis utinam tetigissem carmina Musis, Phoebus et inceptum destituisset opus!
Nec tamen ut testes mos est audire poetas;
malueram verbis pondus abesse meis.
per nos Scylla patri caros furata capillos
pube premit rabidos inguinibusque canes;
nos pedibus pinnas dedimus, nos crinibus angues;
victor Abantiades alite fertur equo.
idem per spatium Tityon porreximus ingens, et tria vipereo fecimus ora cani;
fecimus Enceladon iaculantem mille lacertis, ambiguae captos virginis ore viros.
Aeolios Ithacis inclusimus utribus Euros;
proditor in medio Tantalus amne sitit.
de Niobe silicem, de virgine fecimus ursam.

concinat Odrysium Cecropis ales Ityn; Iuppiter aut in aves aut se transformat in aurum aut secat inposita virgine taurus aquas.
Protea quid referam Thebanaeque semina, dentes;
qui vomerent flammam ore, fuisse boves;
flere genis Electra tuas, Auriga, sorores;
quaeque rates fuerint, nunc maris esse deas;
aversumque diem mensis furialibus Atrii, duraque percussam saxa secuta Iyram?
Exit in immensum fecunda licentia vatum, obligat historica nec sua verba fide.
et mea debuerat falso laudata videri femina; credulitas nunc mihi vestra nocet.

XIII

Cum mihi pomiferis coniunx foret orta Faliscis, moenia contigimus victa, Camille, tibi.
casta sacerdotes Iunoni festa parabant et celebres ludos indigenamque bovem; grande morae pretium ritus cognoscere, quamvis difficilis clivis huc via praebet iter.
Stat vetus et densa praenubilus arbore lucus;
    adspice — concedas numen inesse loco.
accipit ara preces votivaeque tura piorum — ara per antiquas facta sine arte manus.
hinc, ubi praesonuit sollemni tibia cantu,
    it per velatas annua pompa vias;
ducuntur niveae populo plaudente iuvencae, quas aluit campis herba Falisca suis, et vituli nondum metuenda fronte minaces, et minor ex humili victima porcus hara, duxque gregis cornu per tempora dura recurvo.
    invisa est dominae sola capella deae;
illius indicio silvis inventa sub altis dicitur inceptam destituisse fugam.
nunc quoque per pueros iaculis incessitur index et pretium auctori vulneris ipsa datur.
Qua ventura dea est, iuvenes timidaeque puellae praevertunt latas veste iacente vias.
virginei crines auro gemmaque premuntur, et tegit auratos palla superba pedes;
more patrum Graio velatae vestibus albis tradita supposito vertice sacra ferunt.
ora favent populi tum cum venit aurea pompa, ipsa sacerdotes subsequiturque suas.
Argiva est pompae facies; Agamemnone caeso et scelus et patrias fugit Halaesus opes iamque pererratis profugus terraque fretoque moenia felici condidit alta manu.

ille suos docuit Iunonia sacra Faliscos.
sint mihi, sint populo semper amica suo!

XIV

Non ego, ne pecces, cum sis formosa, recuso, sed ne sit misero scire necesse mihi;
nec te nostra iubet fieri censura pudicam, sed tamen, ut temptes dissimulare, rogat.
non peccat, quaecumque potest peccasse negare, solaque famosam culpa professa facit.
quis furor est, quae nocte latent, in luce fateri, et quae clam facias facta referre palam?
ignoto meretrix corpus iunctura Quiriti opposita populum summovet ante sera; tu tua prostitues famae peccata sinistrae commissi perages indiciumque tui?
sit tibi mens melior, saltemve imitare pudicas, teque probam, quamvis non eris, esse putem.
quae facis, haec facito; tantum fecisse negato, nec pudeat coram verba modesta loqui!
Est qui nequitiam locus exigat; omnibus illum deliciis inple, stet procul inde pudor!
hinc simul exieris, lascivia protinus omnis absit, et in lecto crimina pone tuo.
illic nec tunicam tibi sit posuisse pudori nec femori inpositum sustinuisse femur;
illic purpureis condatur lingua labellis, inque modos Venerem mille figuret amor;
illic nec voces nec verba iuventia cessent, spondaque lasciva mobilitate tremat!
indue cum tunicis metuentem crimina vultum, et pudor obscenum diffiteatur opus;
da populo, da verba mihi; sine nescius errem, et liceat stulta credulitate frui!
Cur totiens video mitti recipique tabellas?

cur pressus prior est interiorque torus?
cur plus quam somno turbatos esse capillos collaque conspicio dentis habere notam?
tantum non oculos crimen deducis ad ipsos;
si dubitas famae parcere, parce mihi!
mens abit et morior quotiens peccasse fateris, perque meos artus frigida gutta fluit.
tunc amo, tunc odi frustra quod amare necesse est;
tunc ego, sed tecum, mortuus esse velim!
Nil equidem inquiram, nec quae celare parabis insequar, et falli muneris instar erit.
si tamen in media deprensa tenebere culpa, et fuerint oculis probra videnda meis, quae bene visa mihi fuerint, bene visa negato — concedent verbis lumina nostra tuis.
prona tibi vinci cupientem vincere palma est, sit modo 'non feci!' dicere lingua memor.
cum tibi contingat verbis superare duobus, etsi non causa, iudice vince tuo!

XV

Quaere novum vatem, tenerorum mater Amorum!
    raditur hic elegis ultima meta meis;
quos ego conposui, Paeligni ruris alumnus — nec me deliciae dedecuerunt meae — siquid id est, usque a proavis vetus ordinis heres,
    non modo militiae turbine factus eques.
Mantua Vergilio, gaudet Verona Catullo; Paelignae dicar gloria gentis ego, quam sua libertas ad honesta coegerat arma, cum timuit socias anxia Roma manus.
atque aliquis spectans hospes Sulmonis aquosi moenia, quae campi iugera pauca tenent,
'Quae tantum' dicat 'potuistis ferre poetam, quantulacumque estis, vos ego magna voco.'
Culte puer puerique parens Amathusia culti.
    aurea de campo vellite signa meo!
corniger increpuit thyrso graviore Lyaeus:
    pulsanda est magnis area maior equis.
inbelles elegi, genialis Musa, valete,
    post mea mansurum fata superstes opus.

MEDICAMINA FACIEI FEMINEAE

Discite, quae faciem commendet cura, puellae, Et quo sit vobis causa tuenda modo!
Cultus humum sterilem Cerealia pendere iussit Munera: mordaces interiere rubi; 5
Cultus et in pomis sucos emendat acerbos, Fissaque adoptivas accipit arbor opes.
Culta placent: auro sublimia tecta linuntur;
Nigra sub inposito marmore terra latet;
Vellera saepe eadem Tyrio medicantur aeno; 10
Sectile deliciis India praebet ebur.
Forsitan antiquae Tatio sub rege Sabinae Maluerint quam se rura paterna coli, Cum matrona, premens altum rubicunda sedile,
Assiduo durum pollice nebat opus, 15
Ipsaque claudebat, quos filia paverat, agnos, Ipsa dabat virgas caesaque ligna foco;
At vestrae matres teneras peperere puellas:
Vultis inaurata corpora veste tegi,
Vultis odoratos positu variare capillos, 20
Conspicuum gemmis vultis habere manum;
Induitis collo lapides Oriente petitos,
Et quantos onus est aure tulisse duos.
Nec tamen indignum: sit vobis cura placendi,
Cum comptos habeant saecula nostra viros; 25
Feminea vestri potiuntur lege mariti,
Et vix ad cultus nupta, quod addat, habet.....
Quo se cuique parent et quo et venentur amores,
Refert: munditia crimina nulla merent.
Rure latent finguntque comas: licet arduus illas 30
Celet Athos, cultas altus habebit Athos!
Est etiam placuisse sibi quaecumque voluptas:

Virginibus cordi grataque forma suast;
Laudatas homini volucris lunonia pennas
Explicat, et forma muta superbit avis. 35
Sic potius vos urget amor quam fortibus herbis, Quas maga terribili subsecat arte manus;
Nec vos graminibus nec mixto credite suco
Nec temptate nocens virus amantis equae:
Nec mediae Marsis finduntur cantibus angues, 40
Nec redit in fontes unda supina suos, Et, quamvis aliquis Temesaea removerit aera, Numquam Luna suis excutietur equis.
Prima sit in vobis morum tutela, puellae!
Ingenio facies conciliante placet. 45
Certus amor morumst: formam populabitur aetas, Et placitus rugis vultus aratus erit;
Tempus erit, quo vos speculum vidisse pigebit,
Et veniet rugis altera causa dolor;
Sufficit et longum probitas perdurat in aevum, 50
Perque suos annos hinc bene pendet amor.....
Dic age, cum teneros somnus dimiserit artus,
Candida quo possint ora nitere modo.
Hordea, quae Libyci ratibus misere coloni, Exue de palea tegminibusque suis; 55
Par ervi mensura decem madefiat ab ovis, Sed cumulent libras hordea nuda duas.
Haec ubi ventosas fuerint siccata per auras,
Lenta iube scabra frangat asella mola;
Et quae prima cadent vivaci cornua cervo, 60
Contere in haec (solidi sexta fac assis eat), Iamque ubi pulvereae fuerint confusa farinae,
Protinus innumeris omnia cerne cavis;
Adice narcissi bis sex sine cortice bulbos,
Strenua quos puro marmore dextra terat, 65
Sextantemque trahat gummi cum semine Tusco; Huc novies tanto plus tibi mellis eat:
Quaecumque afficiet tali medicamine vultum,

Fulgebit speculo levior illa suo.
Nec tu pallentes dubita torrere lupinos, 70
Et simul infantis corpora frige fabae:
Utraque sex habeant aequo discrimine libras,
Utraque da nigris comminuenda molis;
Nec cerussa tibi nec nitri spuma rubentis Desit et Illyrica quae venit iris humo; 75
Da validis iuvenum pariter subigenda lacertis;
Sed iustum tritis uncia pondus erit;
Addita de querulo volucrum medicamina nido
Ore fugant maculas (alcyonea vocant);
Pondere, si quaeris, quo sim contentus in illis: 80
Quod trahit in partes uncia secta duas;
Ut coeant apteque lini per corpore possint,
Adice de flavis Attica mella favis.
Quamvis tura deos irataque numina placent,
Non tamen accensis omnia danda focis: 85
Tus ubi miscueris radenti corpora nitro, Ponderibus iustis fac sit utrumque triens;
Parte minus quarta direptum cortice gummi
Et modicum e murris pinguibus adde cubum;
Haec ubi contrieris, per densa foramina cerne; 90
Pulvis ab infuso melle premendus erit.
Profuit et marathros bene olentibus addere murris, (Quinque parent marathri scripula, murra novem)
Arentisque rosae quantum manus unaprehendat,
Cumque Ammoniaco mascula tura sale; 95
Hordea quem faciunt, illis affunde cremorem;
Aequent expensas cum sale tura rosas:
Tempore sis parvo mollis licet inlita vultus,
Haerebit toto nullus in ore color.
Vidi, quae gelida madefacta papavera lympha 100
Contereret teneris inlineretque genis.....

LIBER PRIMVS ARTIS AMATORIAE

Siquis in hoc artem populo non novit amandi,
Hoc legat et lecto carmine doctus amet.
Arte citae veloque rates remoque moventur,
Arte leves currus: arte regendus amor.
Curribus Automedon lentisque erat aptus habenis, 5
Tiphys in Haemonia puppe magister erat:
Me Venus artificem tenero praefecit Amori;
Tiphys et Automedon dicar Amoris ego.
Ille quidem ferus est et qui mihi saepe repugnet:
Sed puer est, aetas mollis et apta regi. 10
Phillyrides puerum cithara perfecit Achillem, Atque animos placida contudit arte feros.
Qui totiens socios, totiens exterruit hostes, Creditur annosum pertimuisse senem.
Quas Hector sensurus erat, poscente magistro 15
Verberibus iussas praebuit ille manus.
Aeacidae Chiron, ego sum praeceptor Amoris:
Saevus uterque puer, natus uterque dea.
Sed tamen et tauri cervix oneratur aratro, Frenaque magnanimi dente teruntur equi; 20
Et mihi cedet Amor, quamvis mea vulneret arcu Pectora, iactatas excutiatque faces.
Quo me fixit Amor, quo me violentius ussit,
Hoc melior facti vulneris ultor ero:
Non ego, Phoebe, datas a te mihi mentiar artes, 25
Nec nos aerae voce monemur avis,
Nec mihi sunt visae Clio Cliusque sorores Servanti pecudes vallibus, Ascra, tuis:
Usus opus movet hoc: vati parete perito;
Vera canam: coeptis, mater Amoris, ades! 30
Este procul, vittae tenues, insigne pudoris,

Quaeque tegis medios, instita longa, pedes.
Nos venerem tutam concessaque furta canemus,
Inque meo nullum carmine crimen erit.
Principio, quod amare velis, reperire labora, 35
Qui nova nunc primum miles in arma venis.
Proximus huic labor est placitam exorare puellam:
Tertius, ut longo tempore duret amor.
Hic modus, haec nostro signabitur area curru:
Haec erit admissa meta terenda rota. 40
Dum licet, et loris passim potes ire solutis, Elige cui dicas 'tu mihi sola places.'
Haec tibi non tenues veniet delapsa per auras:
Quaerenda est oculis apta puella tuis.
Scit bene venator, cervis ubi retia tendat, 45
Scit bene, qua frendens valle moretur aper;
Aucupibus noti frutices; qui sustinet hamos,
Novit quae multo pisce natentur aquae:
Tu quoque, materiam longo qui quaeris amori,
Ante frequens quo sit disce puella loco. 50
Non ego quaerentem vento dare vela iubebo, Nec tibi, ut invenias, longa terenda via est.
Andromedan Perseus nigris portarit ab Indis,
Raptaque sit Phrygio Graia puella viro,
Tot tibi tamque dabit formosas Roma puellas, 55
'Haec habet' ut dicas 'quicquid in orbe fuit.'
Gargara quot segetes, quot habet Methymna racemos, Aequore quot pisces, fronde teguntur aves,
Quot caelum stellas, tot habet tua Roma puellas:
Mater in Aeneae constitit urbe sui. 60
Seu caperis primis et adhuc crescentibus annis, Ante oculos veniet vera puella tuos:
Sive cupis iuvenem, iuvenes tibi mille placebunt.
Cogeris voti nescius esse tui:
Seu te forte iuvat sera et sapientior aetas, 65
Hoc quoque, crede mihi, plenius agmen erit.
Tu modo Pompeia lentus spatiare sub umbra,

Cum sol Herculei terga leonis adit:
Aut ubi muneribus nati sua munera mater
Addidit, externo marmore dives opus. 70
Nec tibi vitetur quae, priscis sparsa tabellis, Porticus auctoris Livia nomen habet:
Quaque parare necem miseris patruelibus ausae
Belides et stricto stat ferus ense pater.
Nec te praetereat Veneri ploratus Adonis, 75
Cultaque Iudaeo septima sacra Syro.
Nec fuge linigerae Memphitica templa iuvencae:
Multas illa facit, quod fuit ipsa Iovi.
Et fora conveniunt (quis credere possit?) amori:
Flammaque in arguto saepe reperta foro: 80
Subdita qua Veneris facto de marmore templo Appias expressis aera pulsat aquis, Illo saepe loco capitur consultus Amori, Quique aliis cavit, non cavet ipse sibi:
Illo saepe loco desunt sua verba diserto, 85
Resque novae veniunt, causaque agenda sua est.
Hunc Venus e templis, quae sunt confinia, ridet:
Qui modo patronus, nunc cupit esse cliens.
Sed tu praecipue curvis venare theatri:
Haec loca sunt voto fertiliora tuo. 90
Illic invenies quod ames, quod ludere possis, Quodque semel tangas, quodque tenere velis.
Ut redit itque frequens longum formica per agmen, Granifero solitum cum vehit ore cibum,
Aut ut apes saltusque suos et olentia nactae 95
Pascua per flores et thyma summa volant,
Sic ruit ad celebres cultissima femina ludos:
Copia iudicium saepe morata meum est.
Spectatum veniunt, veniunt spectentur ut ipsae:
Ille locus casti damna pudoris habet. 100
Primus sollicitos fecisti, Romule, ludos, Cum iuvit viduos rapta Sabina viros.
Tunc neque marmoreo pendebant vela theatro,

Nec fuerant liquido pulpita rubra croco;
Illic quas tulerant nemorosa Palatia, frondes 105
Simpliciter positae, scena sine arte fuit;
In gradibus sedit populus de caespite factis,
Qualibet hirsutas fronde tegente comas.
Respiciunt, oculisque notant sibi quisque puellam Quam velit, et tacito pectore multa movent. 110
Dumque, rudem praebente modum tibicine Tusco, Ludius aequatam ter pede pulsat humum,
In medio plausu (plausus tunc arte carebant)
Rex populo praedae signa petita dedit.
Protinus exiliunt, animum clamore fatentes, 115
Virginibus cupidas iniciuntque manus.
Ut fugiunt aquilas, timidissima turba, columbae,
Ut fugit invisos agna novella lupos:
Sic illae timuere viros sine more ruentes;
Constitit in nulla qui fuit ante color. 120
Nam timor unus erat, facies non una timoris:
Pars laniat crines, pars sine mente sedet;
Altera maesta silet, frustra vocat altera matrem:
Haec queritur, stupet haec; haec manet, illa fugit;
Ducuntur raptae, genialis praeda, puellae, 125
Et potuit multas ipse decere timor.
Siqua repugnarat nimium comitemque negabat,
Sublatam cupido vir tulit ipse sinu,
Atque ita 'quid teneros lacrimis corrumpis ocellos?
Quod matri pater est, hoc tibi' dixit 'ero.' 130
Romule, militibus scisti dare commoda solus:
Haec mihi si dederis commoda, miles ero.
Scilicet ex illo sollemnia more theatra
Nunc quoque formosis insidiosa manent.
Nec te nobilium fugiat certamen equorum; 135
Multa capax populi commoda Circus habet.
Nil opus est digitis, per quos arcana loquaris,
Nec tibi per nutus accipienda nota est:
Proximus a domina, nullo prohibente, sedeto,

lunge tuum lateri qua potes usque latus; 140
Et bene, quod cogit, si nolis, linea iungi, Quod tibi tangenda est lege puella loci.
Hic tibi quaeratur socii sermonis origo,
    Et moveant primos publica verba sonos.
Cuius equi veniant, facito, studiose, requiras: 145
    Nec mora, quisquis erit, cui favet illa, fave.
At cum pompa frequens caelestibus ibit eburnis,
    Tu Veneri dominae plaude favente manu;
Utque fit, in gremium pulvis si forte puellae
    Deciderit, digitis excutiendus erit: 150
Etsi nullus erit pulvis, tamen excute nullum:
    Quaelibet officio causa sit apta tuo.
Pallia si terra nimium demissa iacebunt,
    Collige, et immunda sedulus effer humo;
Protinus, officii pretium, patiente puella 155
    Contingent oculis crura videnda tuis.
Respice praeterea, post vos quicumque sedebit,
    Ne premat opposito mollia terga genu.
Parva leves capiunt animos: fuit utile multis Pulvinum facili composuisse manu. 160
Profuit et tenui ventos movisse tabella, Et cava sub tenerum scamna dedisse pedem.
Hos aditus Circusque novo praebebit amori, Sparsaque sollicito tristis harena foro.
Illa saepe puer Veneris pugnavit harena, 165
    Et qui spectavit vulnera, vulnus habet.
Dum loquitur tangitque manum poscitque libellum
    Et quaerit posito pignore, vincat uter, Saucius ingemuit telumque volatile sensit,
    Et pars spectati muneris ipse fuit. 170
Quid, modo cum belli navalis imagine Caesar Persidas induxit Cecropiasque rates?
Nempe ab utroque mari iuvenes, ab utroque puellae Venere, atque ingens orbis in Urbe fuit.
Quis non invenit turba, quod amaret, in illa? 175

Eheu, quam multos advena torsit amor!
Ecce, parat Caesar domito quod defuit orbi Addere: nunc, oriens ultime, noster eris.
Parthe, dabis poenas: Crassi gaudete sepulti, Signaque barbaricas non bene passa manus. 180
Ultor adest, primisque ducem profitetur in annis, Bellaque non puero tractat agenda puer.
Parcite natales timidi numerare deorum:
Caesaribus virtus contigit ante diem.
Ingenium caeleste suis velocius annis 185
Surgit, et ignavae fert male damna morae.
Parvus erat, manibusque duos Tiryntius angues Pressit, et in cunis iam love dignus erat.
Nunc quoque qui puer es, quantus tum, Bacche, fuisti, Cum timuit thyrsos India victa tuos? 190
Auspiciis annisque patris, puer, arma movebis, Et vinces annis auspiciisque patris:
Tale rudimentum tanto sub nomine debes,
Nunc iuvenum princeps, deinde future senum;
Cum tibi sint fratres, fratres ulciscere laesos: 195
Cumque pater tibi sit, iura tuere patris.
Induit arma tibi genitor patriaeque tuusque:
Hostis ab invito regna parente rapit;
Tu pia tela feres, sceleratas ille sagittas:
Stabit pro signis iusque piumque tuis. 200
Vincuntur causa Parthi: vincantur et armis; Eoas Latio dux meus addat opes.
Marsque pater Caesarque pater, date numen eunti:
Nam deus e vobis alter es, alter eris.
Auguror, en, vinces; votivaque carmina reddam, 205
Et magno nobis ore sonandus eris.
Consistes, aciemque meis hortabere verbis;
O desint animis ne mea verba tuis!
Tergaque Parthorum Romanaque pectora dicam, Telaque, ab averso quae iacit hostis equo. 210
Qui fugis ut vincas, quid victo, Parthe, relinquis?

Parthe, malum iam nunc Mars tuus omen habet.
Ergo erit illa dies, qua tu, pulcherrime rerum,
    Quattuor in niveis aureus ibis equis.
Ibunt ante duces onerati colla catenis, 215
    Ne possint tuti, qua prius, esse fuga.
Spectabunt laeti iuvenes mixtaeque puellae, Diffundetque animos omnibus ista dies.
Atque aliqua ex illis cum regum nomina quaeret, Quae loca, qui montes, quaeve ferantur aquae, 220
Omnia responde, nec tantum siqua rogabit;
    Et quae nescieris, ut bene nota refer.
Hic est Euphrates, praecinctus harundine frontem:
    Cui coma dependet caerulea, Tigris erit.
Hos facito Armenios; haec est Danaeica Persis: 225
    Urbs in Achaemeniis vallibus ista fuit.
Ille vel ille, duces; et erunt quae nomina dicas,
    Si poteris, vere, si minus, apta tamen.
Dant etiam positis aditum convivia mensis:
    Est aliquid praeter vina, quod inde petas. 230
Saepe illic positi teneris adducta lacertis Purpureus Bacchi cornua pressit Amor:
Vinaque cum bibulas sparsere Cupidinis alas,
    Permanet et capto stat gravis ille loco.
Ille quidem pennas velociter excutit udas: 235
    Sed tamen et spargi pectus amore nocet.
Vina parant animos faciuntque caloribus aptos:
    Cura fugit multo diluiturque mero.
Tunc veniunt risus, tum pauper cornua sumit,
    Tum dolor et curae rugaque frontis abit. 240
Tunc aperit mentes aevo rarissima nostro Simplicitas, artes excutiente deo.
Illic saepe animos iuvenum rapuere puellae,
    Et Venus in vinis ignis in igne fuit.
Hic tu fallaci nimium ne crede lucernae: 245
    Iudicio formae noxque merumque nocent.
Luce deas caeloque Paris spectavit aperto,

Cum dixit Veneri 'vincis utramque, Venus.'
Nocte latent mendae, vitioque ignoscitur omni, Horaque formosam quamlibet illa facit. 250
Consule de gemmis, de tinctorum lana, Consule de facie corporibusque diem.
Quid tibi femineos coetus venatibus aptos Enumerem? numero cedit arena meo.
Quid referam Baiae, praetextaque litora velis, 255
Et quae de calido sulphure fumat aqua?
Hinc aliquis vulnus referens in pectore dixit
'Non haec, ut fama est, unda salubris erat.'
Ecce suburbanae templum nemorale Dianae Partaque per gladios regna nocente manu: 260
Illa, quod est virgo, quod tela Cupidinis odit, Multa dedit populo vulnera, multa dabit.
Hactenus, unde legas quod ames, ubi retia ponas, Praecipit imparibus vecta Thalea rotis.
Nunc tibi, quae placuit, quas sit capienda per artes, 265
Dicere praecipuae molior artis opus.
Quisquis ubique, viri, dociles advertite mentes, Pollicitisque favens, vulgus, adeste meis.
Prima tuae menti veniat fiducia, cunctas
Posse capi; capies, tu modo tende plagas. 270
Vere prius volucres taceant, aestate cicadae, Maenalius lepori det sua terga canis,
Femina quam iuveni blande temptata repugnet:
Haec quoque, quam poteris credere nolle, volet.
Utque viro furtiva venus, sic grata puellae: 275
Vir male dissimulat: tectius illa cupit.
Conveniat maribus, nequam nos ante rogemus,
Femina iam partes victa rogantis agat.
Mollibus in pratis admugit femina tauro:
Femina cornipedi semper adhinnit equo. 280
Parcior in nobis nec tam furiosa libido:
Legitimum finem flamma virilis habet.
Byblida quid referam, vetito quae fratris amore

Arsit et est laqueo fortiter ulta nefas?
Myrrha patrem, sed non qua filia debet, amavit, 285
Et nunc obducto cortice pressa latet:
Illius lacrimis, quas arbore fundit odora,
Unguimur, et dominae nomina gutta tenet.
Forte sub umbrosis nemorosae vallibus Idae Candidus, armenti gloria, taurus erat, 290
Signatus tenui media inter cornua nigro:
Una fuit labes, cetera lactis erant.
Illum Cnosiadesque Cydoneaeque iuvencae
Optarunt tergo sustinuisse suo.
Pasiphae fieri gaudebat adultera tauri; 295
Invida formosas oderat illa boves.
Nota cano: non hoc, centum quae sustinet urbes, Quamvis sit mendax, Creta negare potest.
Ipsa novas frondes et prata tenerrima tauro
Fertur inadsueta subsecuisse manu. 300
It comes armentis, nec ituram cura moratur Coniugis, et Minos a bove victus erat.
Quo tibi, Pasiphae, pretiosas sumere vestes?
Ille tuus nullas sentit adulter opes.
Quid tibi cum speculo, montana armenta petenti? 305
Quid totiens positas fingis, inepta, comas?
Crede tamen speculo, quod te negat esse iuencam.
Quam cuperes fronti cornua nata tuae!
Sive placet Minos, nullus quaeratur adulter:
Sive virum mavis fallere, falle viro! 310
In nemus et saltus thalamo regina relicto Fertur, ut Aonio concita Baccha deo.
A, quotiens vaccam vultu spectavit iniquo,
Et dixit 'domino cur placet ista meo?
Aspice, ut ante ipsum teneris exultet in herbis: 315
Nec dubito, quin se stulta decere putet.'
Dixit, et ingenti iamdudum de grege duci Iussit et inmeritam sub iuga curva trahi, Aut cadere ante aras commentaque sacra coegit,

Et tenuit laeta paelicis exta manu. 320
Paelicibus quotiens placavit numina caesis, Atque ait, exta tenens 'ite, placete meo!'
Et modo se Europen fieri, modo postulat Io, Altera quod bos est, altera vecta bove.
Hanc tamen implevit, vacca deceptus acerna, 325
Dux gregis, et partu proditus auctor erat.
Cressa Thyesteo si se abstinuisset amore (Et quantum est uno posse carere viro?),
Non medium rupisset iter, curruque retorto Auroram versis Phoebus adisset equis. 330
Filia purpureos Niso furata capillos
Pube premit rabidos inguinibusque canes.
Qui Martem terra, Neptunum effugit in undis, Coniugis Atrides victima dira fuit.
Cui non defleta est Ephyraeae flamma Creusae, 335
Et nece natorum sanguinolenta parens?
Flevit Amyntorides per inania lumina Phoenix:
Hippolytum pavidi diripuistis equi.
Quid fodis inmeritis, Phineu, sua lumina natis?
Poena reversura est in caput ista tuum. 340
Omnia feminea sunt ista libidine mota;
Acrior est nostra, plusque furoris habet.
Ergo age, ne dubita cunctas sperare puellas;
Vix erit e multis, quae neget, una, tibi.
Quae dant quaeque negant, gaudent tamen esse rogatae:
345
Ut iam fallaris, tuta repulsa tua est.
Sed cur fallaris, cum sit nova grata voluptas
Et capiant animos plus aliena suis?
Fertilior seges est alienis semper in agris,
Vicinumque pecus grandius uber habet. 350
Sed prius ancillam captandae nosse puellae Cura sit: accessus molliet illa tuos.
Proxima consiliis dominae sit ut illa, videto,
Neve parum tacitis conscia fida iocis.

Hanc tu pollicitis, hanc tu corrumpe rogando: 355
Quod petis, ex facili, si volet illa, feres.
Illa leget tempus (medici quoque tempora servant)
Quo facilis dominae mens sit et apta capi.
Mens erit apta capi tum, cum laetissima rerum
Ut seges in pingui luxuriabit humo. 360
Pectora dum gaudent nec sunt adstricta dolore, Ipsa patent, blanda tum subit arte Venus.
Tum, cum tristis erat, defensa est Ilios armis:
Militibus gravidum laeta recepit equum.
Tum quoque temptanda est, cum paelice laesa dolebit: 365
Tum facies opera, ne sit inulta, tua.
Hanc matutinos pectens ancilla capillos Incitet, et velo remigis addat opem, Et secum tenui suspirans murmure dicat
'At, puto, non poteris ipsa referre vicem.' 370
Tum de te narret, tum persuadentia verba Addat, et insano iuret amore mori.
Sed propera, ne vela cadant auraeque residant:
Ut fragilis glacies, interit ira mora.
Quaeris, an hanc ipsam prosit violare ministram? 375
Talibus admissis alea grandis inest.
Haec a concubitu fit sedula, tardior illa,
Haec dominae munus te parat, illa sibi.
Causa in eventu est: licet hic indulgeat ausis, Consilium tamen est abstinuisse meum. 380
Non ego per praecepta et acuta cacumina vadam, Nec iuvenum quisquam me duce captus erit.
Si tamen illa tibi, dum dat recipitque tabellas, Corpore, non tantum sedulitate placet,
Fac domina potiari prius, comes illa sequatur: 385
Non tibi ab ancilla est incipienda Venus.
Hoc unum moneo, siquid modo creditur arti,
Nec mea dicta rapax per mare ventus agit:
Aut non rem temptes aut perfice; tollitur index,
Cum semel in partem criminis ipsa venit. 390

Non avis utiliter viscatis effugit alis;
Non bene de laxis cassibus exit aper.
Saucius arrepto piscis teneatur ab hamo:
Perprime temptatam, nec nisi victor abi.
Tunc neque te prodet communi noxia culpa, 395
Factaque erunt dominae dictaque nota tibi.
Sed bene celetur: bene si celabitur index,
Notitiae suberit semper amica tuae.
Tempora qui solis operosa colentibus arva, Fallitur, et nautis aspicienda putat; 400
Nec semper credenda ceres fallacibus arvis, Nec semper viridi concava puppis aquae,
Nec teneras semper tutum captare puellas:
Saepe dato melius tempore fiet idem.
Sive dies suberit natalis, sive Kalendae, 405
Quas Venerem Marti continuasse iuvat,
Sive erit ornatus non ut fuit ante sigillis,
Sed regum positas Circus habebit opes, Differ opus: tunc tristis hiems, tunc Pliades instant,
Tunc tener aequorea mergitur Haedus aqua; 410
Tunc bene desinitur: tunc siquis creditur alto, Vix tenuit lacerae naufraga membra ratis.
Tu licet incipias qua flebilis Allia luce Vulneribus Latiis sanguinolenta fluit, Quaque die redeunt, rebus minus apta gerendis, 415
Culta Palaestino septima festa Syro.
Magna superstitio tibi sit natalis amicae:
Quaque aliquid dandum est, illa sit atra dies.
Cum bene vitaris, tamen auferet; invenit artem
Femina, qua cupidi carpat amantis opes. 420
Institor ad dominam veniet discinctus emacem, Expediet merces teque sedente suas:
Quas illa, inspicias, sapere ut videare, rogabit:
Oscula deinde dabit; deinde rogabit, emas.
Hoc fore contentam multos iurabit in annos, 425
Nunc opus esse sibi, nunc bene dicet emi.

Si non esse domi, quos des, causabere nummos,
Littera poscetur++ne didicisse iuuet.
Quid, quasi natali cum poscit munera libo,
Et, quotiens opus est, nascitur illa, sibi? 430
Quid, cum mendaci damno maestissima plorat, Elapsusque cava fingitur aure lapis?
Multa rogant utenda dari, data reddere nolunt:
Perdis, et in damno gratia nulla tuo.
Non mihi, sacrilegas meretricum ut persequar artes, 435
Cum totidem linguis sint satis ora decem.
Cera vadum temptet, rasis infusa tabellis:
Cera tuae primum conscia mentis eat.
Blanditias ferat illa tuas imitataque amantem Verba; nec exiguas, quisquis es, adde preces. 440
Hectora donavit Priamo prece motus Achilles; Flectitur iratus voce rogante deus.
Promittas facito: quid enim promittere laedit?
Pollicitis dives quilibet esse potest.
Spes tenet in tempus, semel est si credita, longum: 445
Illa quidem fallax, sed tamen apta dea est.
Si dederis aliquid, poteris ratione relinqui:
Praeteritum tulerit, perdideritque nihil.
At quod non dederis, semper videare daturus:
Sic dominum sterilis saepe fefellit ager: 450
Sic, ne perdiderit, non cessat perdere lusor, Et revocat cupidus alea saepe manus.
Hoc opus, hic labor est, primo sine munere iungi;
Ne dederit gratis quae dedit, usque dabit.
Ergo eat et blandis peraretur littera verbis, 455
Exploretque animos, primaque temptet iter.
Littera Cydippen pomo perlata fefellit, Insciaque est verbis capta puella suis.
Disce bonas artes, moneo, Romana iuventus,
Non tantum trepidos ut tueare reos; 460
Quam populus iudexque gravis lectusque senatus, Tam dabit eloquio victa puella manus.

Sed lateant vires, nec sis in fronte disertus;
Effugiant voces verba molesta tuae.
Quis, nisi mentis inops, tenerae declamat amicae? 465
Saepe valens odii littera causa fuit.
Sit tibi credibilis sermo consuetaque verba,
Blanda tamen, praesens ut videare loqui.
Si non accipiet scriptum, inlectumque remittet, Lecturam spera, propositumque tene. 470
Tempore difficiles veniunt ad aratra iuveni, Tempore lenta pati frena docentur equi:
Ferreus adsiduo consumitur anulus usu,
Interit adsidua vomer aduncus humo.
Quid magis est saxo durum, quid mollius unda? 475
Dura tamen molli saxa cavantur aqua.
Penelopen ipsam, persta modo, tempore vinctes:
Capta vides sero Pergama, capta tamen.
Legerit, et nolit rescribere? cogere noli:
Tu modo blanditias fac legat usque tuas. 480
Quae voluit legisse, volet rescribere lectis:
Per numeros venient ista gradusque suos.
Forsitan et primo veniet tibi littera tristis,
Quaeque roget, ne se sollicitare velis.
Quod rogat illa, timet; quod non rogat, optat, ut instes; 485
Insequere, et voti postmodo compos eris.
Interea, sive illa toro resupina feretur,
Lecticam dominae dissimulanter adi,
Neve aliquis verbis odiosas offerat auris,
Qua potes ambiguus callidus abde notis. 490
Seu pedibus vacuis illi spatiosa teretur
Porticus, hic socias tu quoque iunge moras:
Et modo praecedas facito, modo terga sequaris,
Et modo festines, et modo lentus eas:
Nec tibi de mediis aliquot transire columnas 495
Sit pudor, aut lateri continuasse latus;
Nec sine te curvo sedeat speciosa theatro:
Quod spectes, umeris adferet illa suis.

Illam respicias, illam mirere licebit:
    Multa supercilio, multa loquare notis. 500
Et plaudas, aliquam mimo saltante puellam:
    Et faveas illi, quisquis agatur amans.
Cum surgit, surges; donec sedet illa, sedebis;
    Arbitrio dominae tempora perde tuae.
Sed tibi nec ferro placeat torquere capillos, 505
    Nec tua mordaci pumice crura teras.
Ista iube faciant, quorum Cybeleia mater Concinitur Phrygiis exululata modis.
Forma viros neglecta decet; Minoida Theseus Abstulit, a nulla tempora comptus acu. 510
Hippolytum Phaedra, nec erat bene cultus, amavit; Cura deae silvis aptus Adonis erat.
Munditie placeant, fuscentur corpora Campo:
    Sit bene conveniens et sine labe toga:
Lingula ne rigeat, careant rubigine dentes, 515
    Nec vagus in laxa pes tibi pelle natet:
Nec male deformet rigidos tonsura capillos:
    Sit coma, sit trita barba resecta manu.
Et nihil emineant, et sint sine sordibus ungues:
    Inque cava nullus stet tibi nare pilus. 520
Nec male odorati sit tristis anhelitus oris:
    Nec laedat naris virque paterque gregis.
Cetera lascivae faciant, concede, puellae,
    Et si quis male vir quaerit habere virum.
Ecce, suum vatem Liber vocat; hic quoque amantes 525
    Adiuvat, et flammae, qua calet ipse, favet.
Cnosis in ignotis amens errabat harenis,
    Qua brevis aequoreis Dia feritur aquis.
Utque erat e somno tunica velata recincta,
    Nuda pedem, croceas inreligata comas, 530
Thesea crudelem surdas clamabat ad undas, Indigno teneras imbre rigante genas.
Clamabat, flebatque simul, sed utrumque decebat;
    Non facta est lacrimis turpior illa suis.

lamque iterum tundens mollissima pectora palmis 535
    'Perfidus ille abiit; quid mihi fiet?' ait.
'Quid mihi fiet?' ait: sonuerunt cymbala toto Litore, et adtonita tympana pulsa manu.
Excidit illa metu, rupitque novissima verba;
    Nullus in exanimi corpore sanguis erat. 540
Ecce Mimallonides sparsis in terga capillis:
    Ecce leues satyri, praevia turba dei:
Ebrius, ecce, senex pando Silenus asello Vix sedet, et pressas continet ante iugas.
Dum sequitur Bacchas, Bacchae fugiuntque petuntque 545
    Quadrupedem ferula dum malus urget eques,
In caput aurito cecidit delapsus asello:
    Clamarunt satyri 'surge age, surge, pater.'
Iam deus in curru, quem summum texerat uvis, Tigribus adiunctis aurea lora dabat: 550
Et color et Theseus et vox abiit puellae:
    Terque fugam petiit, terque retenta metu est.
Horruit, ut graciles, agitat quas ventus, aristae,
    Ut levis in madida canna palude tremit.
Cui deus 'en, adsum tibi cura fidelior' inquit: 555
    'Pone metum: Bacchi, Cnosias, uxor eris.
Munus habe caelum; caelo spectabere sidus;
    Saepe reges dubiam Cressa Corona ratem.'
Dixit, et e curru, ne tigres illa timeret, Desilit; inposito cessit harena pede: 560
Implicitamque sinu (neque enim pugnare valebat) Abstulit; in facili est omnia posse deo.
Pars 'Hymenaeae' canunt, pars clamant 'Euhion, euhoe!'
    Sic coeunt sacro nupta deusque toro.
Ergo ubi contigerint positi tibi munera Bacchi, 565
    Atque erit in socii femina parte tori, Nycteliumque patrem nocturnaue sacra precare,
    Ne iubeant capiti vina nocere tuo.
Hic tibi multa licet sermone latentia tecto
    Dicere, quae dici sentiat illa sibi: 570

Blanditiasque leves tenui perscribere vino,
    Ut dominam in mensa se legat illa tuam:
Atque oculos oculis spectare fatentibus ignem:
    Saepe tacens vocem verbaque vultus habet.
Fac primus rapias illius tacta labellis 575
    Pocula, quaque bibit parte puella, bibas:
Et quemcumque cibum digitis libaverit illa,
    Tu pete, dumque petis, sit tibi tacta manus.
Sint etiam tua vota, viro placuisse puellae:
    Utilior vobis factus amicus erit. 580
Huic, si sorte bibes, sortem concede priorem:
    Huic detur capiti missa corona tuo.
Sive erit inferior, seu par, prior omnia sumat:
    Nec dubites illi verba secunda loqui.
Tuta frequensque via est, per amici fallere nomen: 585
    Tuta frequensque licet sit via, crimen habet.
Inde procurator nimium quoque multa procurat,
    Et sibi mandatis plura videnda putat.
Certa tibi a nobis dabitur mensura bibendi:
    Officium praestent mensque pedesque suum. 590
Iurgia praecipue vino stimulata caveto, Et nimium faciles ad fera bella manus.
Occidit Eurytion stulte data vina bibendo;
    Aptior est dulci mensa merumque ioco.
Si vox est, canta: si mollia brachia, salta: 595
    Et quacumque potes dote placere, place.
Ebrietas ut vera nocet, sic ficta iuvabit:
    Fac titubet blaeso subdola lingua sono,
Ut, quicquid facias dicasve protervius aequo, Credatur nimium causa fuisse merum. 600
Et bene dic dominae, bene, cum quo dormiat illa;
    Sed, male sit, tacita mente precare, viro.
At cum discedet mensa conviva remota,
    Ipsa tibi accessus turba locumque dabit.
Insere te turbae, leviterque admotus eunti 605
    Velle latus digitis, et pede tange pedem.

Conloquii iam tempus adest; fuge rustice longe Hinc pudor; audentem Forsque Venusque iuvat.
Non tua sub nostras veniat facundia leges:
Fac tantum cupias, sponte disertus eris. 610
Est tibi agendus amans, imitandaque vulnera verbis;
Haec tibi quaeratur qualibet arte fides.
Nec credi labor est: sibi quaeque videtur amanda;
Pessima sit, nulli non sua forma placet.
Saepe tamen vere coepit simulator amare, 615
Saepe, quod incipiens finxerat esse, fuit.
Quo magis, o, faciles imitantibus este, puellae:
Fiet amor verus, qui modo falsus erat.
Blanditiis animum furtim deprendere nunc sit,
Ut pendens liquida ripa subestur aqua. 620
Nec faciem, nec te pigeat laudare capillos Et teretes digitos exiguumque pedem:
Delectant etiam castas praeconia formae;
Virginibus curae grataque forma sua est.
Nam cur in Phrygiis lunonem et Pallada silvis 625
Nunc quoque iudicium non tenuisse pudet?
Laudatas ostendit avis lunonia pinnas:
Si tacitus spectes, illa recondit opes.
Quadrupedes inter rapidi certamina cursus Depexaeque iubae plausaque colla iuvant. 630
Nec timide promitte: trahunt promissa puellas;
Pollicito testes quoslibet adde deos.
Iuppiter ex alto periuria ridet amantum,
Et iubet Aeolios inrita ferre notos.
Per Styga lunoni falsum iurare solebat 635
Iuppiter; exemplo nunc favet ipse suo.
Expedit esse deos, et, ut expedit, esse putemus;
Dentur in antiquos tura merumque focos;
Nec segura quies illos similisque sopori
Detinet; innocue vivite: numen adest; 640
Reddite depositum; pietas sua foedera servet:
Fraus absit; vacuas caedis habete manus.

Ludite, si sapitis, solas impune puellas:
Hac minus est una fraude tuenda fides.
Fallite fallentes: ex magna parte profanum 645
Sunt genus: in laqueos quos posuere, cadant.
Dicitur Aegyptos caruisse iuvantibus arva Imbribus, atque annos sicca fuisse novem, Cum Thrasius Busirin adit, monstratque piari Hospitis adfuso sanguine posse lovem. 650
Illi Busiris 'fies Iovis hostia primus,' Inquit 'et Aegypto tu dabis hospes aquam.'
Et Phalaris tauro violenti membra Perilli Torruit: infelix inbuit auctor opus.
Iustus uterque fuit: neque enim lex aequior ulla est, 655
Quam necis artifices arte perire sua.
Ergo ut periuras merito periuria fallant,
Exemplo doleat femina laesa suo.
Et lacrimae prosunt: lacrimis adamantina movebis:
Fac madidas videat, si potes, illa genas. 660
Si lacrimae (neque enim veniunt in tempore semper)
Deficient, uda lumina tange manu.
Quis sapiens blandis non misceat oscula verbis?
Illa licet non det, non data sume tamen.
Pugnabit primo fortassis, et 'improbe' dicet: 665
Pugnando vinci se tamen illa volet.
Tantum ne noceant teneris male rapta labellis,
Neve queri possit dura fuisse, cave.
Oscula qui sumpsit, si non et cetera sumet,
Haec quoque, quae data sunt, perdere dignus erit. 670
Quantum defuerat pleno post oscula voto?
Ei mihi, rusticitas, non pudor ille fuit.
Vim licet appelles: grata est vis ista puellis:
Quod iuvat, invitae saepe dedisse volunt.
Quaecumque est veneris subita violata rapina, 675
Gaudet, et improbitas muneris instar habet.
At quae cum posset cogi, non tacta recessit,
Ut simulet vultu gaudia, tristis erit.

Vim passa est Phoebe: vis est allata sorori;
Et gratus raptae raptor uterque fuit. 680
Fabula nota quidem, sed non indigna referri, Scyrias Haemonio iuncta puella viro.
Iam dea laudatae dederat mala praemia formae
Colle sub Idaeo vincere digna duas:
Iam nurus ad Priamum diverso venerat orbe, 685
Graiaque in Iliacis moenibus uxor erat:
Iurabant omnes in laesi verba mariti:
Nam dolor unius publica causa fuit.
Turpe, nisi hoc matris precibus tribuisset, Achilles
Veste virum longa dissimulatus erat. 690
Quid facis, Aeacide? non sunt tua munera lanae;
Tu titulos alia Palladis arte petas.
Quid tibi cum calathis? clipeo manus apta ferendo est:
Pensa quid in dextra, qua cadet Hector, habes?
Reice succinctos operoso stamine fusos! 695
Quassanda est ista Pelias hasta manu.
Forte erat in thalamo virgo regalis eodem;
Haec illum stupro comperit esse virum.
Viribus illa quidem victa est, ita credere oportet:
Sed voluit vinci viribus illa tamen. 700
Saepe 'mane!' dixit, cum iam properaret Achilles; Fortia nam posita sumpserat arma colo.
Vis ubi nunc illa est? Quid blanda voce moraris Auctorem stupri, Deidamia, tui?
Scilicet ut pudor est quaedam coepisse priorem, 705
Sic alio gratum est incipiente pati.
A! nimia est iuveni propriae fiducia formae, Expectat siquis, dum prior illa roget.
Vir prior accedat, vir verba precantia dicat:
Excipiet blandas comiter illa preces. 710
Ut potiare, roga: tantum cupit illa rogari;
Da causam voti principiumque tui.
Iuppiter ad veteres supplex heroidas ibat:
Corrupt magnum nulla puella lovem.

Si tamen a precibus tumidos accedere fastus 715
    Senseris, incepto parce referque pedem.
Quod refugit, multae cupiunt: odere quod instat;
    Lenius instando taedia tolle tui.
Nec semper veneris spes est profitenda roganti:
    Intret amicitiae nomine tectus amor. 720
Hoc aditu vidi tetricae data verba puellae:
    Qui fuerat cultor, factus amator erat.
Candidus in nauta turpis color, aequoris unda
    Debet et a radiis sideris esse niger:
Turpis et agricolae, qui vomere semper adunco 725
    Et gravibus rastris sub love versat humum.
Et tibi, Palladiae petitur cui fama coronae, Candida si fuerint corpora, turpis eris.
Palleat omnis amans: hic est color aptus amanti;
    Hoc decet, hoc stulti non valuisse putant. 730
Pallidus in Side silvis errabat Orion, Pallidus in lenta naide Daphnis erat.
Arguat et macies animum: nec turpe putaris Palliolum nitidis inposuisse comis.
Attenuant iuvenum vigilatae corpora noctes 735
    Curaque et in magno qui fit amore dolor.
Ut voto potiare tuo, miserabilis esto,
    Ut qui te videat, dicere possit 'amas.'
Conquerar, an moneam mixtum fas omne nefasque?
    Nomen amicitia est, nomen inane fides. 740
Ei mihi, non tutum est, quod ames, laudare sodali;
    Cum tibi laudanti credidit, ipse subit.
At non Actorides lectum temeravit Achillis:
    Quantum ad Pirithoum, Phaedra pudica fuit.
Hermionam Pylades quo Pallada Phoebus, amabat, 745 Quodque tibi geminus, Tyndari, Castor, erat.
Siquis idem sperat, laturas poma myricas
    Speret, et e medio flumine mella petat.
Nil nisi turpe iuvat: curae sua cuique voluptas:
    Haec quoque ab alterius grata dolore venit. 750

Heu facinus! non est hostis metuendus amanti;
Quos credis fidos, effuge, tutus eris.
Cognatum fratremque cave carumque sodalem:
Praebeat veros haec tibi turba metus.
Finiturus eram, sed sunt diversa puellis 755
Pectora: mille animos excipe mille modis.
Nec tellus eadem parit omnia; vitibus illa Convenit, haec oleis; hac bene farra virent.
Pectoribus mores tot sunt, quot in ore figurae;
Qui sapit, innumeris moribus aptus erit, 760
Utque leves Proteus modo se tenuabit in undas, Nunc leo, nunc arbor, nunc erit hirtus aper.
Hi iaculo pisces, illi capiuntur ab hamis:
Hos cava contento retia fune trahunt.
Nec tibi conveniet cunctos modus unus ad annos: 765
Longius insidias cerva videbit anus.
Si doctus videare rudi, petulansve pudenti,
Diffidet miserae protinus illa sibi.
Inde fit, ut quae se timuit committere honesto, Vilis ad amplexus inferioris eat. 770
Pars superat coepti, pars est exhausta laboris.
Hic teneat nostras ancora iacta rates.

LIBER SECVNDVS ARTIS AMATORIAE

Dicite 'io Paean!' et 'io' bis dicite 'Paean!'
Decidit in casses praeda petita meos;
Laetus amans donat viridi mea carmina palma, Praelata Ascraeo Maeonioque seni.
Talis ab armiferis Priameius hospes Amyclis 5
Candida cum rapta coniuge vela dedit;
Talis erat qui te curru victore ferebat,
Vecta peregrinis Hippodamia rotis.
Quid properas, iuvenis? mediis tua pinus in undis Navigat, et longe quem peto portus abest. 10
Non satis est venisse tibi me vate puellam:
Arte mea capta est, arte tenenda mea est.
Nec minor est virtus, quam quaerere, parta tueri:
Causa inest illic; hoc erit artis opus.
Nunc mihi, siquando, puer et Cytherea, favete, 15
Nunc Erato, nam tu nomen amoris habes.
Magna paro, quas possit Amor remanere per artes, Dicere, tam vasto pervagus orbe puer.
Et levis est, et habet geminas, quibus avolet, alas:
Difficile est illis inposuisse modum. 20
Hospitis effugio praestruxerat omnia Minos:
Audacem pinnis repperit ille viam.
Daedalus ut clausit conceptum crimine matris Semibovemque virum semivirumque bovem,
'Sit modus exilio,' dixit 'iustissime Minos: 25
Accipiat cineres terra paterna meos.
Et quoniam in patria, fatis agitatus iniquis,
Vivere non potui, da mihi posse mori.
Da reditum puero, senis est si gratia vilis:
Si non vis puero parcere, parce seni.' 30
Dixerat haec; sed et haec et multo plura licebat

Dicere: regressus non dabat ille viro.
Quod simul ut sensit, 'nunc, nunc, o Daedale,' dixit:
    'Materiam, qua sis ingeniosus, habes.
Possidet et terras et possidet aequora Minos: 35
    Nec tellus nostrae nec patet unda fugae.
Restat iter caeli: caelo temptabimus ire.
    Da veniam coepto, Iupiter alte, meo:
Non ego sidereas adfecto tangere sedes:
    Qua fugiam dominum, nulla, nisi ista, via est. 40 Per Stygia detur iter, Stygias transnabimus undas;
    Sunt mihi naturae iura novanda meae.'
Ingenium mala saepe movent: quis crederet umquam Aerias hominem carpere posse vias?
Remigium volucrum disponit in ordine pinnas, 45
    Et leve per lini vincula nectit opus, Imaque pars ceris adstringitur igne solutis,
    Finitusque novae iam labor artis erat.
Tractabat ceramque puer pinnasque renidens, Nescius haec umeris arma parata suis. 50
Cui pater 'his' inquit 'patria est adeunda carinis, Hac nobis Minos effugiendus ope.
Aera non potuit Minos, alia omnia clausit;
    Quem licet, inventis aera rumpe meis.
Sed tibi non virgo Tegeaea comesque Bootae 55
    Ensiger Orion aspiciendus erit:
Me pinnis sectare datis; ego praevious ibo:
    Sit tua cura sequi; me duce tutus eris.
Nam sive aetherias vicino sole per auras
    Ibimus, impatiens cera calor erit: 60
Sive humiles propiore freto iactabimus alas, Mobilis aequoreis pinna madescet aquis.
Inter utrumque vola; ventos quoque, nate, timeto, Quaque ferent aerae, vela secunda dato.'
Dum monet, aptat opus puero, monstratque moveri, 65
    Erudit infirmas ut sua mater aves.
Inde sibi factas umeris accommodat alas,

Perque novum timide corpora librat iter.
Iamque volaturus parvo dedit oscula nato,
Nec patriae lacrimas continuere genae. 70
Monte minor collis, campis erat altior aequis:
Hinc data sunt miserae corpora bina fugae.
Et movet ipse suas, et nati respicit alas
Daedalus, et cursus sustinet usque suos.
Iamque novum delectat iter, positoque timore 75
Icarus audaci fortius arte volat.
Hos aliquis, tremula dum captat arundine pisces, Vidit, et inceptum dextra reliquit opus.
Iam Samos a laeva (fuerant Naxosque relictæ Et Paros et Clario Delos amata deo) 80
Dextra Lebinthos erat silvisque umbrosa Calymne Cinctaque piscosis Astypalæa vadis,
Cum puer, incautis nimium temerarius annis, Altius egit iter, deseruitque patrem.
Vincla labant, et cera deo propiore liquescit, 85
Nec tenues ventos brachia mota tenent.
Territus a summo despexit in aequora caelo:
Nox oculis pavido venit oborta metu.
Tabuerant cerae: nudos quatit ille lacertos,
Et trepidat nec, quo sustineatur, habet. 90
Decidit, atque cadens 'pater, o pater, auferor!' inquit, Clauserunt virides ora loquentis aquae.
At pater infelix, nec iam pater, 'Icare!' clamat,
'Icare,' clamat 'ubi es, quoque sub axe volas?'
'Icare' clamabat, pinnas aspexit in undis. 95
Ossa tegit tellus: aequora nomen habent.
Non potuit Minos hominis conpescere pinnas;
Ipse deum volucrem detinuisse paro.
Fallitur, Haemonias siquis decurrit ad artes, Datque quod a teneri fronte revellit equi. 100
Non facient, ut vivat amor, Medeides herbae Mixtaque cum magicis nenia Marsa sonis.
Phasias Aesoniden, Circe tenuisset Ulixem,

Si modo servari carmine posset amor.
Nec data profuerint pallentia philtra puellis: 105
    Philtrā nocent animis, vimque furoris habent.
Sit procul omne nefas; ut ameris, amabilis esto:
    Quod tibi non facies solave forma dabit:
Sis licet antiquo Nireus adamatus Homero, Naiadumque tener crimine raptus Hylas, 110
Ut dominam teneas, nec te mirere relictum, Ingenii dotes corporis adde bonis.
Forma bonum fragile est, quantumque accedit ad annos Fit minor, et spatio carpitur ipsa suo.
Nec violae semper nec hiantia lilia florent, 115
    Et riget amissa spina relictā rosa.
Et tibi iam venient canī, formosae, capilli,
    Iam venient rugae, quae tibi corpus avertent.
Iam molire animum, qui duret, et adstrue formae:
    Solutus ad extremos permanet ille rogos. 120
Nec levis ingenuas pectus coluisse per artes Cura sit et linguas edidicisse duas.
Non formosus erat, sed erat facundus Ulixes,
    Et tamen aequoreas torsit amore deas.
A quotiens illum doluit properare Calypso, 125
    Remigioque aptas esse negavit aquas!
Haec Troiae casus iterumque iterumque rogabat:
    Ille referre aliter saepe solebat idem.
Litore constiterant: illic quoque pulchra Calypso Exigit Odrysii fata cruenta ducis. 130
Ille levi virga (virgam nam forte tenebat) Quod rogat, in spisso litore pingit opus.
'Haec' inquit 'Troia est' (muros in litore fecit):
    'Hic tibi sit Simois; haec mea castra puta.
Campus erat' (campumque facit), 'quem caede Dolonis 135 Sparsimus, Haemonios dum vigil optat equos.
Illic Sithonii fuerant tentoria Rhesi:
    Hac ego sum captis nocte revector equis.'
Pluraque pingebat, subitus cum Pergama fluctus

Abstulit et Rhesi cum duce castra suo. 140
Tum dea 'quas' inquit 'fidas tibi credis ituro, Perdiderint undae nomina quanta, vides?'
Ergo age, fallaci timide confide figurae, Quisquis es, aut aliquid corpore pluris habe.
Dextera praecipue capit indulgentia mentes; 145
Asperitas odium saevaque bella movet.
Odimus accipitrem, quia vivit semper in armis,
Et pavidum solitos in pecus ire lupos.
At caret insidiis hominum, quia mitis, hirundo, Quasque colat turre, Chaonis ales habet. 150
Este procul, lites et amarae proelia linguae:
Dulcibus est verbis mollis alendus amor.
Lite fugent nuptaeque viros nuptasque mariti,
Inque vicem credant res sibi semper agi;
Hoc decet uxores; dos est uxoria lites: 155
Audiat optatos semper amica sonos.
Non legis iussu lectum venistis in unum:
Fungitur in vobis munere legis amor.
Blanditias molles auremque iuventia verba
Adfer, ut adventu laeta sit illa tuo. 160
Non ego divitibus venio praeceptor amandi:
Nil opus est illi, qui dabit, arte mea;
Secum habet ingenium, qui, cum libet, 'accipe' dicit;
Cedimus: inventis plus placet ille meis.
Pauperibus vates ego sum, quia pauper amavi; 165
Cum dare non possem munera, verba dabam.
Pauper amet caute: timeat maledicere pauper,
Multaque divitibus non patienda ferat.
Me memini iratum dominae turbasse capillos:
Haec mihi quam multos abstulit ira dies! 170
Nec puto, nec sensi tunicam laniasse; sed ipsa Dixerat, et pretio est illa redempta meo.
At vos, si sapitis, vestri peccata magistri
Effugite, et culpae damna timete meae.
Proelia cum Parthis, cum culta pax sit amica, 175

Et iocus, et causas quicquid amoris habet.
Si nec blanda satis, nec erit tibi comis amanti,
Perfer et obdura: postmodo mitis erit.
Flectitur obsequio curvatus ab arbore ramus:
Frangis, si vires experiere tuas. 180
Obsequio tranantur aquae: nec vincere possis Flumina, si contra, quam rapit unda, nates.
Obsequium tigresque domat Numidasque leones;
Rustica paulatim taurus aratra subit.
Quid fuit asperius Nonacrina Atalanta? 185
Succubuit meritis trux tamen illa viri.
Saepe suos casus nec mitia facta puellae Flesse sub arboribus Milaniona ferunt;
Saepe tulit iusso fallacia retia collo,
Saepe fera torvos cuspide fixit apros: 190
Sensit et Hylaei contentum saucius arcum:
Sed tamen hoc arcu notior alter erat.
Non te Maenalias armatum scandere silvas,
Nec iubeo collo retia ferre tuo:
Pectora nec missis iubeo praebere sagittis; 195
Artis erunt cauto mollia iussa meae.
Cede repugnantis: cedendo victor abibis:
Fac modo, quas partes illa iubebit, agas.
Arguet, arguito; quicquid probat illa, probato;
Quod dicet, dicas; quod negat illa, neges. 200
Riserit, adride; si flebit, flere memento;
Imponat leges vultibus illa tuis.
Seu ludet, numerosque manu iactabit eburnos,
Tu male iactato, tu male iacta dato:
Seu iacies talos, victam ne poena sequatur, 205
Damnosi facito stent tibi saepe canes:
Sive latrocinii sub imagine calculus ibit,
Fac pereat vitreo miles ab hoste tuus.
Ipse tene distenta suis umbracula virgis,
Ipse fac in turba, qua venit illa, locum. 210
Nec dubita tereti scamnum producere lecto,

Et tenero soleam deme vel adde pedi.
Saepe etiam dominae, quamvis horrebis et ipse,
    Argenti manus est calfacienda sinu.
Nec tibi turpe puta (quamvis sit turpe, placebit), 215
    Ingenua speculum sustinuisse manu.
Ille, fatigata praebendo monstra noverca
    Qui meruit caelum, quod prior ipse tulit,
Inter Ioniacas calathum tenuisse puellas
    Creditur, et lanas excoluisse rudes. 220
Paruit imperio dominae Tirynthius heros:
    I nunc et dubita ferre, quod ille tulit.
Iussus adesse foro, iussa maturius hora
    Fac semper venias, nec nisi serus abi.
Occurras aliquo, tibi dixerit: omnia differ, 225 Curre, nec inceptum turba moretur iter.
Nocte domum repetens epulis perfuncta redibit:
    Tum quoque pro servo, si vocat illa, veni.
Rure erit, et dicet 'venias': Amor odit inertes:
    Si rota defuerit, tu pede carpe viam. 230
Nec grave te tempus sitiensque Canicula tardet, Nec via per iactas candida facta nives.
Militiae species amor est; discedite, segnes:
    Non sunt haec timidis signa tuenda viris.
Nox et hiems longaeque viae saevique dolores 235
    Mollibus his castris et labor omnis inest.
Saepe feres imbrem caelesti nube solutum,
    Frigidus et nuda saepe iacebis humo.
Cynthius Admeti vaccas pavisse Pheraei
    Fertur, et in parva delituisse casa. 240
Quod Phoebum decuit, quem non decet? exue fastus, Curam mansuri quisquis amoris habes.
Si tibi per tutum planumque negabitur ire,
    Atque erit opposita ianua fulta sera,
At tu per praeceps tecto delabere aperto: 245
    Det quoque furtivas alta fenestra vias.
Laeta erit, et causam tibi se sciet esse pericli;

Hoc dominae certi pignus amoris erit.
Saepe tua poteris, Leandre, carere puella:
    Transnabas, animum nosset ut illa tuum. 250
Nec pudor ancillas, ut quaeque erit ordine prima, Nec tibi sit servos demeruisse pudor.
Nomine quemque suo (nulla est iactura) saluta, lunge tuis humiles, ambitiose, manus.
Sed tamen et servo (levis est inpensa) roganti 255
    Porrige Fortunae munera parva die:
Porrige et ancillae, qua poenas luce pependit Lusa maritali Gallica veste manus.
Fac plebem, mihi crede, tuam; sit semper in illa lanitor et thalami qui iacet ante fores. 260
Nec dominam iubeo pretioso munere dones:
    Parva, sed e parvis callidus apta dato.
Dum bene dives ager, cum rami pondere nutant,
    Adferat in calatho rustica dona puer.
Rure suburbano poteris tibi dicere missa, 265 Illa vel in Sacra sint licet empta via.
Adferat aut uvas, aut quas Amaryllis amabat++
    At nunc castaneas non amat illa nuces.
Quin etiam turdoque licet missaque columba
    Te memorem dominae testificare tuae. 270
Turpiter his emitur spes mortis et orba senectus.
    A, pereant, per quos munera crimen habent!
Quid tibi praecipiam teneros quoque mittere versus?
    Ei mihi, non multum carmen honoris habet.
Carmina laudantur, sed munera magna petuntur: 275
    Dummodo sit dives, barbarus ipse placet.
Aurea sunt vere nunc saecula: plurimus auro Venit honos: auro conciliatur amor.
Ipse licet venias Musis comitatus, Homere,
    Si nihil attuleris, ibis, Homere, foras. 280
Sunt tamen et doctae, rarissima turba, puellae;
    Altera non doctae turba, sed esse volunt.
Utraque laudetur per carmina: carmina lector

Commendet dulci qualiacumque sono;
His ergo aut illis vigilatum carmen in ipsas 285
Forsitan exigui muneris instar erit.
At quod eris per te facturus, et utile credis,
Id tua te facito semper amica roget.
Libertas alicui fuerit promissa tuorum:
Hanc tamen a domina fac petat ille tua: 290
Si poenam servo, si vincula saeva remittis, Quod facturus eras, debeat illa tibi:
Utilitas tua sit, titulus donetur amicae:
Perde nihil, partes illa potentis agat.
Sed te, cuicumque est retinendae cura puellae, 295
Attonitum forma fac putet esse sua.
Sive erit in Tyriis, Tyrios laudabis amictus:
Sive erit in Cois, Coa decere puta.
Aurata est? ipso tibi sit pretiosior auro;
Gausapa si sumpsit, gausapa sumpta proba. 300
Astiterit tunicata, 'moves incendia' clama, Sed timida, caveat frigora, voce roga.
Conpositum discrimen erit, discrimina lauda:
Torsert igne comam, torte capille, place.
Brachia saltantis, vocem mirare canentis, 305
Et, quod desierit, verba querentis habe.
Ipsos concubitus, ipsum venerere licebit
Quod iuvat, et quae dat gaudia voce notes.
Ut fuerit torva violentior illa Medusa,
Fiet amatori lenis et aequa suo. 310
Tantum, ne pateas verbis simulator in illis, Effice, nec vultu destrue dicta tuo.
Si latet, ars prodest: adfert deprensa pudorem,
Atque adimit merito tempus in omne fidem.
Saepe sub autumnum, cum formosissimus annus, 315
Plenaque purpureo subrubet uva mero,
Cum modo frigoribus premimur, modo solvimur aestu, Aere non certo, corpora languor habet.
Illa quidem valeat; sed si male firma cubarit,

Et vitium caeli senserit aegra sui, 320
Tunc amor et pietas tua sit manifesta puellae, Tum sere, quod plena postmodo falce metas.
Nec tibi morosi veniant fastidia morbi,
Perque tuas fiant, quae sinet ipsa, manus.
Et videat flentem, nec taedeat oscula ferre, 325
Et sicco lacrimas conbibat ore tuas.
Multa vove, sed cuncta palam; quotiesque libebit, Quae referas illi, somnia laeta vide.
Et veniat, quae lustret anus lectumque locumque, Praeferat et tremula sulphur et ova manu. 330
Omnibus his inerunt gratae vestigia curae:
In tabulas multis haec via fecit iter.
Nec tamen officiis odium quaeratur ab aegra:
Sit suus in blanda sedulitate modus:
Neve cibo prohibe, nec amari pocula suci 335
Porrige: rivalis misceat illa tuus.
Sed non cui dederas a litore carbasa vento, Utendum, medio cum potiere freto.
Dum novus errat amor, vires sibi colligat usu:
Si bene nutrieris, tempore firmus erit. 340
Quem taurum metuis, vitulum mulcere solebas:
Sub qua nunc recubas arbore, virga fuit:
Nascitur exiguus, sed opes adquiret eundo,
Quaque venit, multas accipit amnis aquas.
Fac tibi consuescat: nil adsuetudine maius: 345
Quam tu dum capias, taedia nulla fuge.
Te semper videat, tibi semper praebeat aures;
Exhibeat vultus noxque diesque tuos.
Cum tibi maior erit fiducia, posse requiri,
Cum procul absenti cura futurus eris, 350
Da requiem: requietus ager bene credita reddit, Terraque caelestes arida sorbet aquas.
Phyllida Demophoon praesens moderatius ussit:
Exarsit velis acrius illa datis.
Penelopen absens sollers torquebat Ulixes; 355

Phylacides aberat, Laodamia, tuus.
Sed mora tuta brevis: lentescunt tempore curae, Vanescitque absens et novus intrat amor.
Dum Menelaus abest, Helene, ne sola iaceret, Hospitis est tepido nocte recepta sinu. 360
Quis stupor hic, Menelae, fuit? tu solus abibas, Isdem sub tectis hospes et uxor erant.
Accipitri timidus credis, furiose, columbas?
Plenum montano credis ovile lupo?
Nil Helene peccat, nihil hic committit adulter: 365
Quod tu, quod faceret quilibet, ille facit.
Cogis adulterium dando tempusque locumque;
Quid nisi consilio est usa puella tuo?
Quid faciat? vir abest, et adest non rusticus hospes,
Et timet in vacuo sola cubare toro. 370
Viderit Atrides: Helenen ego crimine solvo:
Usa est humani commoditate viri.
Sed neque fulvus aper media tam saevus in ira est,
Fulmineo rabidos cum rotat ore canes,
Nec lea, cum catulis lactentibus ubera praebet, 375
Nec brevis ignaro vipera laesa pede, Femina quam socii deprensa paelice lecti:
Ardet et in vultu pignora mentis habet.
In ferrum flammasque ruit, positoque decore Fertur, ut Aonii cornibus icta dei. 380
Coniugis admissum violataque iura marita est
Barbara per natos Phasias ulta suos.
Altera dira parens haec est, quam cernis, hirundo:
Aspice, signatum sanguine pectus habet.
Hoc bene compositos, hoc firmos solvit amores; 385
Crimina sunt cautis ista timenda viris.
Nec mea vos uni damnat censura puellae:
Di melius! vix hoc nupta tenere potest.
Ludite, sed furto celetur culpa modesto:
Gloria peccati nulla petenda sui est. 390
Nec dederis munus, cognosse quod altera possit,

Nec sint nequitiae tempora certa tuae.
Et, ne te capiat latebris sibi femina notis,
Non uno est omnis convenienda loco;
Et quotiens scribes, totas prius ipse tabellas 395
Inspice: plus multae, quam sibi missa, legunt.
Laesa Venus iusta arma movet, telumque remittit,
Et, modo quod questa est, ipse querare, facit.
Dum fuit Atrides una contentus, et illa
Casta fuit: vitio est improba facta viri. 400
Audierat laurumque manu vittasque ferentem
Pro nata Chrysen non valuisse sua:
Audierat, Lyrnesi, tuos, abducta, dolores, Bellaque per turpis longius isse moras.
Haec tamen audierat: Priameida viderat ipsa: 405
Victor erat praedae praeda pudenda suae.
Inde Thyestiaden animo thalamoque recepit, Et male peccantem Tyndaris ulta virum.
Quae bene celaris, siqua tamen acta patebunt,
Illa, licet pateant, tu tamen usque nega. 410
Tum neque subiectus, solito nec blandior esto:
Haec animi multum signa nocentis habent:
Sed lateri ne parce tuo: pax omnis in uno est;
Concubitu prior est infitianda venus.
Sunt, qui praecipiant herbas, satureia, nocentes 415
Sumere; iudiciis ista venena meis;
Aut piper urticae mordacis semine miscent,
Tritaque in annoso flava pyrethra mero;
Sed dea non patitur sic ad sua gaudia cogi,
Colle sub umbroso quam tenet altus Eryx. 420
Candidus, Alcathoi qui mittitur urbe Pelasga, Bulbus et, ex horto quae venit, herba salax Ovaeque sumantur, sumantur Hymettia mella, Quasque tulit folio pinus acuta nuces.
Docta, quid ad magicas, Erato, deverteris artes? 425
Interior curru meta terenda meo est.
Qui modo celabas monitu tua crimina nostro,

Flecte iter, et monitu detege furta meo.
Nec levitas culpanda mea est: non semper eodem Impositos vento panda carina vehit. 430
Nam modo Threicio Borea, modo currimus Euro, Saepe tument Zephyro lintea, saepe Noto.
Aspice, ut in curru modo det fluitantia rector
Lora, modo admissos arte retentet equos.
Sunt quibus ingrata timida indulgentia servit, 435
Et, si nulla subest aemula, languet amor.
Luxuriant animi rebus plerumque secundis,
Nec facile est aequa commoda mente pati.
Ut levis absumptis paulatim viribus ignis
Ipse latet, summo canet in igne cinis, 440
Sed tamen extinctas admoto sulphure flammam Invenit, et lumen, quod fuit ante, redit:
Sic, ubi pigra situ securaque pectora torpent,
Acribus est stimulis eliciendus amor.
Fac timeat de te, tepidamque recalface mentem: 445
Palleat indicio criminis illa tui;
O quater et quotiens numero comprehendere non est
Felicem, de quo laesa puella dolet:
Quae, simul invitas crimen pervenit ad aures, Excidit, et miserae voxque colorque fugit. 450
Ille ego sim, cuius laniet furiosa capillos:
Ille ego sim, teneras cui petat ungue genas,
Quem videat lacrimans, quem torvis spectet ocellis,
Quo sine non possit vivere, posse velit.
Si spatium quaeras, breve sit, quo laesa queratur, 455
Ne lenta vires colligat ira mora;
Candida iam dudum cingantur colla lacertis,
Inque tuos flens est accipienda sinus.
Oscula da flenti, Veneris da gaudia flenti,
Pax erit: hoc uno solvitur ira modo. 460
Cum bene saevierit, cum certa videbitur hostis, Tum pete concubitus foedera, mitis erit.
Illic depositis habitat Concordia telis:

Illo, crede mihi, Gratia nata loco est.
Quae modo pugnarunt, iungunt sua rostra columbae, 465
Quarum blanditias verbaque murmur habet.
Prima fuit rerum confusa sine ordine moles,
Unaque erat facies sidera, terra, fretum;
Mox caelum impositum terris, humus aequore cincta est
Inque suas partes cessit inane chaos; 470 Silva feras, volucres aer accepit habendas,
In liquida, pisces, delituistis aqua.
Tum genus humanum solis errabat in agris,
Idque merae vires et rude corpus erat;
Silva domus fuerat, cibus herba, cubilia frondes: 475
Iamque diu nulli cognitus alter erat.
Blanda truces animos fertur mollisse voluptas:
Constiterant uno femina virque loco;
Quid facerent, ipsi nullo didicere magistro:
Arte Venus nulla dulce peregit opus. 480
Ales habet, quod amet; cum quo sua gaudia iungat, Invenit in media femina piscis aqua;
Cerva parem sequitur, serpens serpente tenetur, Haeret adulterio cum cane nexa canis;
Laeta salitur ovis: tauro quoque laeta iuvenca est: 485
Sustinet inmundum sima capella marem;
In furias agitantur equae, spatioque remota Per loca dividuos amne sequuntur equos.
Ergo age et iratae medicamina fortia praebe:
Illa feri requiem sola doloris habent: 490
Illa Machaonios superant medicamina sucos:
His, ubi peccaris, restituendus eris.
Haec ego cum canerem, subito manifestus Apollo Movit inauratae pollice fila lyrae.
In manibus laurus, sacris inducta capillis 495
Laurus erat; vates ille videndus adit.
Is mihi 'Lascivi' dixit 'praeceptor Amoris,
Duc, age, discipulos ad mea templa tuos,
Est ubi diversum fama celebrata per orbem

Littera, cognosci quae sibi quemque iubet. 500
Qui sibi notus erit, solus sapienter amabit, Atque opus ad vires exiget omne suas.
Cui faciem natura dedit, spectetur ab illa:
Cui color est, umero saepe patente cubet:
Qui sermone placet, taciturna silentia vitet: 505
Qui canit arte, canat; qui bibit arte, bibat.
Sed neque declament medio sermone disertum,
Nec sua non sanus scripta poeta legat!’
Sic monuit Phoebus: Phoebos parete monenti;
Certa dei sacro est huius in ore fides. 510
Ad propiora vocor. Quisquis sapienter amabit Vincet, et e nostra, quod petet, arte feret.
Credita non semper sulci cum faenore reddunt,
Nec semper dubias adiuvat aura rates;
Quod iuvat, exiguum, plus est, quod laedat amantes; 515
Proponant animo multa ferenda suo.
Quot lepores in Atho, quot apes pascuntur in Hybla, Caerula quot bacas Palladis arbor habet, Litore quot conchae, tot sunt in amore dolores;
Quae patimur, multo spicula felle madent. 520
Dicta erit isse foras: intus fortasse videre est:
Isse foras, et te falsa videre puta.
Clausa tibi fuerit promissa ianua nocte:
Perfer et inmunda ponere corpus humo.
Forsitan et vultu mendax ancilla superbo 525
Dicet ‘quid nostras obsidet iste fores?’
Postibus et durae supplex blandire puellae, Et capiti demptas in fore pone rosas.
Cum volet, accedes: cum te vitabit, abibis;
Dedecet ingenuos taedia ferre sui. 530
‘Effugere hunc non est’ quare tibi possit amica Dicere? non omni tempore sensus obest.
Nec maledicta puta, nec verbera ferre puellae
Turpe, nec ad teneros oscula ferre pedes.
Quid moror in parvis? Animus maioribus instat; 535

Magna canam: toto pectore, vulgus, ades.
Ardua molimur, sed nulla, nisi ardua, virtus:
Difficilis nostra poscitur arte labor.
Rivalem patienter habe, victoria tecum
Stabit: eris magni victor in arce Iovis. 540
Haec tibi non hominem, sed quercus crede Pelasgas Dicere: nil istis ars mea maius habet.
Innuet illa, feras; scribet, ne tange tabellas:
Unde volet, veniat; quoque libebit, eat.
Hoc in legitima praestant uxore mariti, 545
Cum, tener, ad partes tu quoque, somne, venis.
Hac ego, confiteor, non sum perfectus in arte;
Quid faciam? monitis sum minor ipse meis.
Mene palam nostrae det quisquam signa puellae,
Et patiar, nec me quo libet ira ferat? 550
Oscula vir dederat, meministi, suus: oscula questus Sum data; barbaria noster abundat amor.
Non semel hoc vitium nocuit mihi: doctior ille, Quo veniunt alii conciliante viri.
Sed melius nescisse fuit: sine furta tegantur, 555
Ne fugiat ficto fassus ab ore pudor.
Quo magis, o iuvenes, deprendere parcite vestras:
Peccent, peccantes verba dedisse putent.
Crescit amor prensis; ubi par fortuna duorum est,
In causa damni perstat uterque sui. 560
Fabula narratur toto notissima caelo, Mulciberis capti Marsque Venusque dolis.
Mars pater, insano Veneris turbatus amore,
De duce terribili factus amator erat.
Nec Venus oranti (neque enim dea mollior ulla est) 565 Rustica Gradivo difficilisque fuit.
A, quotiens lasciva pedes risisse mariti Dicitur, et duras igne vel arte manus.
Marte palam simul est Vulcanum imitata, decebat, Multaque cum forma gratia mixta fuit. 570
Sed bene concubitus primos celare solebant.

Plena verecundi culpa pudoris erat.
Indicio Solis (quis Solem fallere possit?)
Cognita Vulcano coniugis acta suae.
Quam mala, Sol, exempla moves! Pete munus ab ipsa 575
Et tibi, si taceas, quod dare possit, habet.
Mulciber obscuros lectum circaque superque Disponit laqueos: lumina fallit opus.
Fingit iter Lemnon; veniunt ad foedus amantes:
Impliciti laqueis nudus uterque iacent. 580
Convocat ille deos; praebent spectacula capti:
Vix lacrimas Venerem continuisse putant.
Non vultus texisse suos, non denique possunt Partibus obscenis opposuisse manus.
Hic aliquis ridens 'in me, fortissime Mavors, 585
Si tibi sunt oneri, vincula transfer!' ait.
Vix precibus, Neptune, tuis captiva resolvit Corpora: Mars Thracen occupat, illa Paphon.
Hoc tibi pro facto, Vulcane: quod ante tegebant, Liberius faciunt, ut pudor omnis abest: 590
Saepe tamen demens stulte fecisse fateris, Teque ferunt artis paenituisse tuae.
Hoc vetiti vos este; vetat deprensa Dione Insidias illas, quas tulit ipsa, dare.
Nec vos rivali laqueos disponite, nec vos 595
Excipite arcana verba notata manu.
Ista viri captent, si iam captanda putabunt,
Quos faciet iustos ignis et unda viros.
En, iterum testor: nihil hic, nisi lege remissum Luditur: in nostris instita nulla iocis. 600
Quis Cereris ritus ausit vulgare profanis, Magnaque Threicia sacra reperta Samo?
Exigua est virtus praestare silentia rebus:
At contra gravis est culpa tacenda loqui.
O bene, quod frustra captatis arbore pomis 605
Garrulus in media Tantalus aret aqua!
Praecipue Cytherea iubet sua sacra taceri:

Admoneo, veniat nequis ad illa loquax.
Condita si non sunt Veneris mysteria cistis,
Nec cava vesanis ictibus aera sonant, 610
At sic inter nos medio versantur in usu,
Se tamen inter nos ut latuisse velint.
Ipsa Venus pubem, quotiens velamina ponit, Protegitur laeva semireducta manu.
In medio passimque coit pecus: hoc quoque viso 615
Avertit vultus nempe puella suos.
Conveniunt thalami furtis et ianua nostris,
Parsque sub iniecta veste pudenda latet:
Et si non tenebras, ad quiddam nubis opacae Quaerimus, atque aliquid luce patente minus. 620
Tum quoque, cum solem nondum prohibebat et imbrem Tegula, sed quercus tecta cibumque dabat,
In nemore atque antris, non sub love, iuncta voluptas;
Tanta rudi populo cura pudoris erat.
At nunc nocturnis titulos inponimus actis, 625
Atque emitur magno nil, nisi posse loqui!
Scilicet excuties omnes, ubi quaeque, puellas,
Cuilibet ut dicas 'haec quoque nostra fuit,' Nec desint, quas tu digitis ostendere possis?
Ut quamque adtigeris, fabula turpis erit? 630
Parva queror: fingunt quidam, quae vera negarent, Et nulli non se concubuisse ferunt.
Corpora si nequeunt, quae possunt, nomina tangunt, Famaque non tacto corpore crimen habet.
I nunc, claude fores, custos odiose puellae, 635
Et centum duris postibus obde seras!
Quid tuti superest, cum nominis extat adulter,
Et credi quod non contigit esse, cupit?
Nos etiam veros parce profitemur amores,
Tectaque sunt solida mystica furta fide. 640
Parcite praecipue vitia exprobrare puellis, Utile quae multis dissimulasse fuit.
Nec suus Andromedae color est obiectus ab illo,

Mobilis in gemino cui pede pinna fuit.
Omnibus Andromache visa est spatiosior aequo: 645
Unus, qui modicam diceret, Hector erat.
Quod male fers, adsuesce, feres bene; multa vetustus Leniet, incipiens omnia sentit amor.
Dum novus in viridi coalescit cortice ramus, Concutiat tenerum quaelibet aura, cadet: 650
Mox eadem ventis, spatio durata, resistet, Firmaque adoptivas arbor habebit opes.
Eximit ipsa dies omnes e corpore mendas,
Quodque fuit vitium, desinit esse mora.
Ferre novae nares taurorum terga recusant: 655
Adsiduo domitas tempore fallit odor.
Nominibus mollire licet mala: fusca vocetur, Nigrior Illyrica cui pice sanguis erit:
Si straba, sit Veneri similis: si rava, Minervae:
Sit gracilis, macie quae male viva sua est; 660
Dic habilem, quaecumque brevis, quae turgida, plenam, Et lateat vitium proximitate boni.
Nec quotus annus eat, nec quo sit nata, require,
Consule, quae rigidus munera Censor habet:
Praecipue si flore caret, meliusque peractum 665
Tempus, et albentes iam legit illa comas.
Utilis, o iuvenes, aut haec, aut serior aetas:
Iste feret segetes, iste serendus ager.
Dum vires annique sinunt, tolerate labores:
Iam veniet tacito curva senecta pede. 670
Aut mare remigiis, aut vomere findite terras, Aut fera belligeras addite in arma manus,
Aut latus et vires operamque adferte puellis:
Hoc quoque militia est, hoc quoque quaerit opes.
Adde, quod est illis operum prudentia maior, 675
Solutus et artifices qui facit, usus adest:
Illae munditiis annorum damna rependunt,
Et faciunt cura, ne videantur anus.
Utque velis, venerem iungunt per mille figuras:

Invenit plures nulla tabella modos. 680
Illis sentitur non inritata voluptas:
Quod iuвет, ex aequo femina virque ferant.
Odi concubitus, qui non utrumque resolvunt;
Hoc est, cur pueri tangar amore minus.
Odi quae praebet, quia sit praebere necesse, 685
Siccaque de lana cogitat ipsa sua.
Quae datur officio, non est mihi grata voluptas:
Officium faciat nulla puella mihi.
Me voces audire iuvat sua gaudia fassas,
Quaeque morer meme sustineamque rogent. 690
Aspiciam dominae victos amentis ocellos:
Langueat, et tangi se vetet illa diu.
Haec bona non primae tribuit natura iuventae,
Quae cito post septem lustra venire solent.
Qui properant, nova musta bibant: mihi fundat avitum 695
Consulibus priscis condita testa merum.
Nec platanus, nisi sera, potest obsistere Phoebos, Et laedunt nudos prata novella pedes.
Scilicet Hermionen Helenae praeponere posses, Et melior Gorge, quam sua mater, erat? 700
At venerem quicumque voles adtingere seram, Si modo duraris, praemia digna feres.
Consciis, ecce, duos accepit lectus amantes:
Ad thalami clausas, Musa, resiste fores.
Sponte sua sine te celeberrima verba loquentur, 705
Nec manus in lecto laeva iacebit iners.
Invenient digiti, quod agant in partibus illis,
In quibus occulte spicula tingit Amor.
Fecit in Andromache prius hoc fortissimus Hector, Nec solum bellis utilis ille fuit. 710
Fecit et in capta Lyrneside magnus Achilles, Cum premeret mollem lassus ab hoste torum.
Illis te manibus tangi, Brisei, sinebas, Imbutae Phrygia quae nece semper erant.
An fuit hoc ipsum, quod te, lasciva, iuaret, 715

Ad tua victrices membra venire manus?
Crede mihi, non est veneris properanda voluptas,
Sed sensim tarda prolicienda mora.
Cum loca reppereris, quae tangi femina gaudet,
Non obstat, tangas quo minus illa, pudor. 720
Aspicias oculos tremulo fulgore micantes, Ut sol a liquida saepe refulget aqua.
Accedent questus, accedet amabile murmur,
Et dulces gemitus aptaque verba ioco.
Sed neque tu dominam velis maioribus usus 725
Desere, nec cursus anteat illa tuos;
Ad metam properate simul: tum plena voluptas,
Cum pariter victi femina virque iacent.
Hic tibi versandus tenor est, cum libera dantur
Otia, furtivum nec timor urget opus. 730
Cum mora non tuta est, totis incumbere remis Utile, et admissio subdere calcar equo.
Finis adest operi: palmam date, grata iuventus,
Sertaque odoratae myrtea ferte comae.
Quantus apud Danaos Podalirius arte medendi, 735 Aeacides dextra, pectore Nestor erat, Quantus erat Calchas extis, Telamonius armis, Automedon curru, tantus amator ego.
Me vatem celebrate, viri, mihi dicite laudes, Cantetur toto nomen in orbe meum. 740
Arma dedi vobis: dederat Vulcanus Achilli; Vincite muneribus, vicit ut ille, datis.
Sed quicumque meo superarit Amazona ferro, Inscribat spoliis 'Naso magister erat.'
Ecce, rogant tenerae, sibi dem praecepta, puellae: 745
Vos eritis chartae proxima cura meae!

LIBER TERTIVS ARTIS AMATORIAE

Arma dedi Danais in Amazonas; arma supersunt, Quae tibi dem et turmae, Penthesilea, tuae.
Ite in bella pares; vincant, quibus alma Dione Faverit et toto qui volat orbe puer.
Non erat armatis aequum concurrere nudas; 5
Sic etiam vobis vincere turpe, viri.
Dixerit e multis aliquis 'quid virus in angues Adicis, et rabidae tradis ovile lupae?'
Parcite paucarum diffundere crimen in omnes;
Spectetur meritis quaeque puella suis. 10
Si minor Atrides Helenen, Helenesque sororem Quo premat Atrides crimine maior habet, Si scelere Oeclides Talaioniae Eriphylae
Vivus et in vivis ad Styga venit equis,
Est pia Penelope lustris errante duobus 15
Et totidem lustris bella gerente viro.
Respice Phylaciden et quae comes isse marito Fertur et ante annos occubuisse suos.
Fata Pheretiadae coniunx Pagasaea redemit:
Proque viro est uxor funere lata viri. 20
'Accipe me, Capaneu! cineres miscebimus' inquit Iphias, in medios desiluitque rogos.
Ipsa quoque et cultu est et nomine femina Virtus:
Non mirum, populo si placet illa suo.
Nec tamen hae mentes nostra poscuntur ab arte: 25
Conveniunt cumbae vela minora meae.
Nil nisi lascivi per me discuntur amores;
Femina praecipiam quo sit amanda modo.
Femina nec flammis nec saevos excutit arcus;
Parcius haec video tela nocere viris. 30
Saepe viri fallunt: tenerae non saepe puellae,

Paucaque, si quaeras, crimina fraudis habent.
Phasida iam matrem fallax dimisit Iason:
Venit in Aesonios altera nupta sinus.
Quantum in te, Theseu, volucres Ariadna marinas 35
Pavit, in ignoto sola relicta loco!
Quaere, novem cur una viae dicantur, et audi
Depositis silvas Phyllida flesse comis.
Et famam pietatis habet, tamen hospes et ensem
Praebuit et causam mortis, Elissa, tuae. 40
Quid vos perdiderit, dicam? nescistis amare:
Defuit ars vobis; arte perennat amor.
Nunc quoque nescirent: sed me Cytherea docere Iussit, et ante oculos constitit ipsa meos.
Tum mihi 'Quid miserae' dixit 'meruere puellae? 45
Traditur armatis vulgus inerme viris.
Illos artifices gemini fecere libelli:
Haec quoque pars monitis erudienda tuis.
Probra Therapnaeae qui dixerat ante maritae,
Mox cecinit laudes prosperiore lyra. 50
Si bene te novi (cultas ne laede puellas!)
Gratia, dum vives, ista petenda tibi est.'
Dixit, et e myrto (myrto nam vincta capillos Constiterat) folium granaque pauca dedit;
Sensimus acceptis numen quoque: purior aether 55
Fulsit, et e toto pectore cessit onus.
Dum facit ingenium, petite hinc praecepta, puellae,
Quas pudor et leges et sua iura sinunt.
Venturae memores iam nunc estote senectae:
Sic nullum vobis tempus abibit iners. 60
Dum licet, et vernos etiamnum educitis annos, Ludite: eunt anni more fluentis aquae;
Nec quae praeteriit, iterum revocabitur unda,
Nec quae praeteriit, hora redire potest.
Utendum est aetate: cito pede labitur aetas, 65
Nec bona tam sequitur, quam bona prima fuit.
Hos ego, qui canent, frutices violaria vidi:

Hac mihi de spina grata corona data est.
Tempus erit, quo tu, quae nunc excludis amantes, Frigida deserta nocte iacebis anus, 70
Nec tua frangetur nocturna ianua rixa, Sparsa nec invenies limina mane rosa.
Quam cito (me miserum!) laxantur corpora rugis,
    Et perit in nitido qui fuit ore color.
Quasque fuisse tibi canas a virgine iuras, 75
    Spargentur subito per caput omne comae.
Anguibus exuitur tenui cum pelle vetustas,
    Nec faciunt cervos cornua iacta senes:
Nostra sine auxilio fugiunt bona; carpite florem,
    Qui, nisi carptus erit, turpiter ipse cadet. 80
Adde, quod et partus faciunt breviora iuventae Tempora: continua messe senescit ager.
Latmius Endymion non est tibi, Luna, rubori,
    Nec Cephalus roseae praeda pudenda deae.
Ut Veneri, quem luget adhuc, donetur Adonis: 85
    Unde habet Aenean Harmoniamque suos?
Ite per exemplum, genus o mortale, dearum,
    Gaudia nec cupidis vestra negate viris.
Ut iam decipiant, quid perditis? omnia constant;
    Mille licet sumant, deperit inde nihil. 90
Conteritur ferrum, silices tenuantur ab usu:
    Sufficit et damni pars caret illa metu.
Quis vetet adposito lumen de lumine sumi?
    Quisve cavo vastas in mare servet aquas?
Et tamen ulla viro mulier 'non expedit' inquit? 95
    Quid, nisi quam sumes, dic mihi, perdis aquam?
Nec vos prostituit mea vox, sed vana timere
    Damna vetat: damnis munera vestra carent.
Sed me flaminibus venti maioris iturum,
    Dum sumus in portu, provehat aura levis. 100
Ordior a cultu; cultis bene Liber ab uvis Provenit, et culto stat seges alta solo.
Forma dei munus: forma quota quaeque superbit?

Pars vestrum tali munere magna caret.
Cura dabit faciem; facies neglecta peribit, 105
Idaliae similis sit licet illa deae.
Corpora si veteres non sic coluere puellae,
Nec veteres cultos sic habuere viros;
Si fuit Andromache tunicas induta valentes,
Quid mirum? duri militis uxor erat. 110
Scilicet Aiaci coniunx ornata venires, Cui tegumen septem terga fuere boum?
Simplicitas rudis ante fuit: nunc aurea Roma est,
Et domiti magnas possidet orbis opes.
Aspice quae nunc sunt Capitolia, quaeque fuerunt: 115
Alterius dices illa fuisse Iovis.
Curia, concilio quae nunc dignissima tanto,
De stipula Tatio regna tenente fuit.
Quae nunc sub Phoebos ducibusque Palatia fulgent, Quid nisi araturis pascua bubus erant? 120
Prisca iuvent alios: ego me nunc denique natum Gratulator: haec aetas moribus apta meis.
Non quia nunc terrae lentum subducitur aurum,
Lectaque diverso litore concha venit:
Nec quia decrescunt effosso marmore montes, 125
Nec quia caeruleae mole fugantur aquae:
Sed quia cultus adest, nec nostros mansit in annos Rusticitas, priscis illa superstes avis.
Vos quoque nec caris aures onerate lapillis, Quos legit in viridi decolor Indus aqua, 130
Nec prodite graves insuto vestibus auro,
Per quas nos petitis, saepe fugatis, opes.
Munditiis capimur: non sint sine lege capilli:
Admotae formam dantque negantque manus.
Nec genus ornatus unum est: quod quamque decebit 135
Eligat, et speculum consulat ante suum.
Longa probat facies capitis discrimina puri:
Sic erat ornatis Laodamia comis.
Exiguum summa nodum sibi fronte relinqui,

Ut pateant aures, ora rotunda volunt. 140
Alterius crines umero iactentur utroque:
Talis es adsumpta, Phoebe canore, lyra.
Altera succinctae religetur more Dianae,
Ut solet, attonitas cum petit illa feras.
Huic decet inflatos laxe iacuisse capillos: 145
Illa sit adstrictis impedienda comis;
Hanc placet ornari testudine Cyllenea:
Sustineat similes fluctibus illa sinus.
Sed neque ramosa numerabis in ilice glandes,
Nec quot apes Hyblae, nec quot in Alpe ferae, 150
Nec mihi tot positus numero comprehendere fas est:
Adicit ornatus proxima quaeque dies.
Et neglecta decet multas coma; saepe iacere Hesternam credas; illa repexa modo est.
Ars casum simulat; sic capta vidit ut urbe 155
Alcides Iolen, 'hanc ego' dixit 'amo.'
Talem te Bacchus Satyris clamantibus euhoe Sustulit in currus, Cnosi relictas, suos.
O quantum indulget vestro natura decori,
Quarum sunt multis damna pianda modis! 160
Nos male detegimur, raptique aetate capilli, Ut Borea frondes excutiente, cadunt.
Femina canitiem Germanis inficit herbis,
Et melior vero quaeritur arte color:
Femina procedit densissima crinibus emptis, 165
Proque suis alios efficit aere suos.
Nec rubor est emisse; palam venire videmus Herculis ante oculos virgineumque chorum.
Quid de veste loquar? Nec vos, segmenta, requiro Nec te, quae Tyrio murice, lana, rubes. 170
Cum tot prodierint pretio leviores colores,
Quis furor est census corpore ferre suos!
Aeris, ecce, color, tum cum sine nubibus aer,
Nec tepidus pluvias concitat auster aquas:
Ecce, tibi similis, quae quondam Phrixon et Hellen 175

Diceris Inois eripuisse dolis;
Hic undas imitatur, habet quoque nomen ab undis:
Crediderim nymphas hac ego veste tegi.
Ille crocum simulat: croceo velatur amictu, Roscida luciferos cum dea iungit equos: 180
Hic Paphias myrtos, hic purpureas amethystos, Albentesve rosas, Threiciamve gruem;
Nec glandes, Amarylli, tuae, nec amygdala desunt;
Et sua velleribus nomina cera dedit.
Quot nova terra parit flores, cum vere tepenti 185
Vitis agit gemmas pigraque fugit hiemps,
Lana tot aut plures sucos bibit; elige certos:
Nam non conveniens omnibus omnis erit.
Pulla decent niveas: Briseida pulla decebant:
Cum rapta est, pulla tum quoque veste fuit. 190
Alba decent fuscas: albis, Cephei, placebas:
Sic tibi vestitae pressa Seriphos erat.
Quam paene admonui, ne trux caper iret in alas,
Neve forent duris aspera crura pilis!
Sed non Caucasea doceo de rupe puellas, 195
Quaeque bibant undas, Myse Caice, tuas.
Quid si praecipiam ne fuscet inertia dentes, Oraque suscepta mane laventur aqua?
Scitis et inducta candorem quaerere creta:
Sanguine quae vero non rubet, arte rubet. 200
Arte supercilii confinia nuda repletis, Parvaeque sinceras velat aluta genas.
Nec pudor est oculos tenui signare favilla,
Vel prope te nato, lucide Cydne, croco.
Est mihi, quo dixi vestrae medicamina formae, 205
Parvus, sed cura grande, libellus, opus;
Hinc quoque praesidium laesae petitote figurae;
Non est pro vestris ars mea rebus iners.
Non tamen expositas mensa deprendat amator Pyxidas: ars faciem dissimulata iuvat. 210
Quem non offendat toto faex inlita vultu,

Cum fluit in tepidos pondere lapsa sinus?
Oesyra quid redolent? quamvis mittatur Athenis Demptus ab inmundo vellere sucus ovis.
Nec coram mixtas cervae sumpsisse medullas, 215
Nec coram dentes defricuisse probem;
Ista dabunt formam, sed erunt deformia visu:
Multaque, dum fiunt, turpia, facta placent;
Quae nunc nomen habent operosi signa Myronis Pondus iners quondam duraque massa fuit; 220
Anulus ut fiat, primo conliduntur aurum;
Quas geritis vestis, sordida lana fuit;
Cum fieret, lapis asper erat: nunc, nobile signum,
Nuda Venus madidas exprimit imbre comas.
Tu quoque dum coleris, nos te dormire putemus; 225
Aptius a summa conspiciere manu.
Cur mihi nota tuo causa est candoris in ore?
Claude forem thalami! quid rude prodis opus?
Multa viros nescire decet; pars maxima rerum Offendat, si non interiora tegas. 230
Aurea quae splendent ornato signa theatro, Inspice, contemnes: brattea ligna tegit;
Sed neque ad illa licet populo, nisi facta, venire,
Nec nisi summotis forma paranda viris.
At non pectendos coram praebere capillos, 235
Ut iaceant fusi per tua terga, veto.
Illo praecipue ne sis morosa caveto Tempore, nec lapsas saepe resolve comas.
Tuta sit ornatrix; odi, quae sauciat ora
Unguibus et rapta brachia figit acu. 240
Devovet, ut tangit, dominae caput illa, simulque Plorat in invisas sanguinolenta comas.
Quae male crinita est, custodem in limine ponat, Orneturve Bonae semper in aede deae.
Dictus eram subito cuidam venisse puellae: 245
Turbida perversas induit illa comas.
Hostibus eveniat tam foedi causa pudoris,

Inque nurus Parthas dedecus illud eat.
Turpe pecus mutilum, turpis sine gramine campus,
Et sine fronde frutex, et sine crine caput. 250
Non mihi venistis, Semele Ledeve, docendae, Perque fretum falso, Sidoni, vecta bove,
Aut Helene, quam non stulte, Menelae, repositis,
Tu quoque non stulte, Troice raptor, habes.
Turba docenda venit, pulchrae turpesque puellae: 255
Pluraque sunt semper deteriora bonis.
Formosae non artis opem praeceptaque quaerunt:
Est illis sua dos, forma sine arte potens;
Cum mare compositum est, securus navita cessat:
Cum tumet, auxiliis adsidet ille suis. 260
Rara tamen mendo facies caret: occule mendas, Quaque potes vitium corporis abde tui.
Si brevis es, sedeas, ne stans videare sedere:
Inque tuo iaceas quantulacumque toro;
Hic quoque, ne possit fieri mensura cubantis, 265
Iniecta lateant fac tibi veste pedes.
Quae nimium gracilis, pleno velamina filo Sumat, et ex umeris laxus amictus eat.
Pallida purpureis spargat sua corpora virgis,
Nigrior ad Pharii confuge piscis opem. 270
Pes malus in nivea semper celetur aluta:
Arida nec vinclis crura resolve suis.
Conveniunt tenues scapulis analemptrides altis:
Angustum circa fascia pectus eat.
Exiguo signet gestu, quodcumque loquetur, 275
Cui digiti pingues et scaber unguis erit.
Cui gravis oris odor numquam ieiuna loquatur,
Et semper spatio distet ab ore viri.
Si niger aut ingens aut non erit ordine natus
Dens tibi, ridendo maxima damna feres. 280
Quis credat? discunt etiam ridere puellae, Quaeritur aequae illis hac quoque parte decor.
Sint modici rictus, parvaeque utrimque lacunae,

Et summos dentes ima labella tegant.
Nec sua perpetuo contendant ilia risu, 285
Sed leve nescio quid femineumque sonent.
Est, quae perverso distorqueat ora cachinno:
Risu concussa est altera, flere putes.
Illa sonat raucum quiddam atque inamabile ridet,
Ut rudit a scabra turpis asella mola. 290
Quo non ars penetrat? discunt lacrimare decenter, Quoque volunt plorant tempore, quoque modo.
Quid, cum legitima fraudatur littera voce,
Blaesaque fit iusso lingua coacta sono?
In vitio decor est: quaerunt male reddere verba; 295
Discunt posse minus, quam potuere, loqui.
Omnibus his, quoniam prosunt, inpendite curam:
Discite femineo corpora ferre gradu.
Est et in incessu pars non temnenda decoris:
Allicit ignotos ille fugatque viros. 300
Haec movet arte latus, tunicisque fluentibus auras Accipit, expensos fertque superba pedes:
Illa velut coniunx Umbri rubicunda mariti Ambulat, ingentes varica fertque gradus.
Sed sit, ut in multis, modus hic quoque: rusticus alter 305
Motus, concessio mollior alter erit.
Pars umeri tamen ima tui, pars summa lacerti
Nuda sit, a laeva conspicienda manu.
Hoc vos praecipue, niveae, decet: hoc ubi vidi, Oscula ferre umero, qua patet usque, libet. 310
Monstra maris Sirenes erant, quae voce canora Quamlibet admissas detinuere rates.
His sua Sisyphides auditis paene resolvit Corpora, nam sociis inlita cera fuit.
Res est blanda canor: discant cantare puellae: 315
Pro facie multis vox sua lena fuit.
Et modo marmoreis referant audita theatri,
Et modo Niliacis carmina lusa modis.
Nec plectrum dextra, citharam tenuisse sinistra

Nesciat arbitrio femina docta meo. 320
Saxa ferasque lyra movit Rhodopeius Orpheus, Tartareosque lacus tergeminumque canem.
Saxa tuo cantu, vindex iustissime matris, Fecerunt muros officiosa novos.
Quamvis mutus erat, voci favisse putatur 325
Piscis, Arioniae fabula nota lyrae.
Disce etiam duplici genialia nablia palma Verrere: conveniunt dulcibus illa iocis.
Sit tibi Callimachi, sit Coi nota poetae, Sit quoque vinosi Teia Musa senis; 330
Nota sit et Sappho (quid enim lascivius illa?), Cuive pater vafri luditur arte Getae.
Et teneri possis carmen legisse Properti, Sive aliquid Galli, sive, Tibulle, tuum:
Dictaque Varroni fulvis insignia villis 335
Vellera, germanae, Phrixae, querenda tuae:
Et profugum Aenean, altae primordia Romae,
Quo nullum Latio clarius extat opus.
Forsitan et nostrum nomen miscebitur istis,
Nec mea Lethaeis scripta dabuntur aquis: 340
Atque aliquis dicet 'nostri lege culta magistri Carmina, quis partes instruit ille duas:
Deve tribus libris, titulus quos signat Amorum, Elige, quod docili molliter ore legas:
Vel tibi composita cantetur Epistola voce: 345
Ignotum hoc aliis ille novavit opus.'
O ita, Phoebe, velis! ita vos, pia numina vatum, Insignis cornu Bacche, novemque deae!
Quis dubitet, quin scire velim saltare puellam, Ut moveat posito brachia iussa mero? 350
Artifices lateris, scenae spectacula, amantur:
Tantum mobilitas illa decoris habet.
Parva monere pudet, talorum dicere iactus
Ut sciat, et vires, tessera missa, tuas:
Et modo tres iactet numeros, modo cogitet, apte 355

Quam subeat partem callida, quamque vocet.
Cautaque non stulte latronum proelia ludat,
Unus cum gemino calculus hoste perit,
Bellatorque sua pressus sine compare bellat,
Aemulus et coeptum saepe recurrit iter. 360
Reticuloque pilae leves fundantur aperto, Nec, nisi quam tolles, ulla movenda pila est.
Est genus, in totidem tenui ratione redactum Scriptula, quot menses lubricus annus habet:
Parva tabella capit ternos utrimque lapillos, 365
In qua vicisse est continuasse suos.
Mille facesse iocos; turpe est nescire puellam Ludere: ludendo saepe paratur amor.
Sed minimus labor est sapienter iactibus uti:
Maius opus mores composuisse suos. 370
Tum sumus incauti, studioque aperimur in ipso, Nudaque per lusus pectora nostra patent;
Ira subit, deforme malum, lucrique cupido,
Iurgiaque et rixae sollicitusque dolor:
Crimina dicuntur, resonat clamoribus aether, 375
Invocat iratos et sibi quisque deos:
Nulla fides, tabulaeque novae per vota petuntur;
Et lacrimis vidi saepe madere genas.
Iuppiter a vobis tam turpia crimina pellat,
In quibus est ulli cura placere viro. 380
Hos ignava iocos tribuit natura puellis;
Materia ludunt uberiore viri.
Sunt illis celeresque pilae iaculumque trochique Armaque et in gyros ire coactus equus.
Nec vos Campus habet, nec vos gelidissima Virgo, 385
Nec Tuscus placida devehit amnis aqua.
At licet et prodest Pompeias ire per umbras, Virginis aetheriis cum caput ardet equis;
Visite laurigero sacrata Palatia Phoebos:
Ille Paraetonicas mersit in alta rates; 390
Quaeque soror coniunxque ducis monimenta pararunt,

Navalique gener cinctus honore caput;
Visite turicremas vaccae Memphitidos aras,
    Visite conspicuis terna theatra locis;
Spectentur tepido maculosae sanguine harenae, 395
    Metaque ferventi circueunda rota.
Quod latet, ignotum est: ignoti nulla cupido:
    Fructus abest, facies cum bona teste caret.
Tu licet et Thamyram superes et Amoebea cantu,
    Non erit ignotae gratia magna lyrae. 400
Si Venerem Cous nusquam posuisset Apelles, Mersa sub aequoreis illa lateret aquis.
Quid petitur sacris, nisi tantum fama, poetis?
    Hoc votum nostri summa laboris habet.
Cura deum fuerant olim regumque poetae: 405
    Praemiaque antiqui magna tulere chori.
Sanctaque maiestas et erat venerabile nomen Vatibus, et largae saepe dabantur opes.
Ennius emeruit, Calabris in montibus ortus, Contiguus poni, Scipio magne, tibi. 410
Nunc ederae sine honore iacent, operataque doctis Cura vigil Musis nomen inertis habet.
Sed famae vigilare iuvat: quis nosset Homerum, Ilias aeternum si latuisset opus?
Quis Danaen nosset, si semper clusa fuisset, 415
    Inque sua turri perlatuisset anus?
Utilis est vobis, formosae, turba, puellae.
    Saepe vagos ultra limina ferte pedes.
Ad multas lupa tendit oves, praedetur ut unam,
    Et lovis in multas devolat ales aves. 420
Se quoque det populo mulier speciosa videndam:
    Quem trahat, e multis forsitan unus erit.
Omnibus illa locis maneat studiosa placendi,
    Et curam tota mente decoris agat.
Causa ubique valet; semper tibi pendeat hamus: 425
    Quo minime credas gurgite, piscis erit.
Saepe canes frustra nemorosis montibus errant,

Inque plagam nullo cervus agente venit.
Quid minus Andromedae fuerat sperare revinctae, Quam lacrimas ulli posse placere suas? 430
Funere saepe viri vir quaeritur; ire solutis Crinibus et fletus non tenuisse decet.
Sed vitate viros cultum formamque professos,
    Quique suas ponunt in statione comas.
Quae vobis dicunt, dixerunt mille puellis: 435
    Errat et in nulla sede moratur amor.
Femina quid faciat, cum sit vir levior ipsa,
    Forsitan et plures possit habere viros?
Vix mihi credetis, sed credite: Troia maneret, Praeceptis Priamo si foret usa satae. 440
Sunt qui mendaci specie grassentur amoris, Perque aditus talis lucra pudenda petant.
Nec coma vos fallat liquido nitidissima nardo,
    Nec brevis in rugas lingula pressa suas:
Nec toga decipiat filo tenuissima, nec si 445
    Anulus in digitis alter et alter erit.
Forsitan ex horum numero cultissimus ille Fur sit, et uratur vestis amore tuae.
'Redde meum!' clamant spoliatae saepe puellae,
    'Redde meum!' toto voce boante foro. 450
Has, Venus, e templis multo radiantibus auro Lenta vides lites Appiadesque tuae.
Sunt quoque non dubia quaedam mala nomina fama:
    Deceptae multi crimen amantis habent.
Discite ab alterius vestras timuisse querellis; 455
    Ianua fallaci ne sit aperta viro.
Parcite, Cecropides, iuranti credere Theseo:
    Quos faciet testes, fecit et ante, deos.
Et tibi, Demophoon, Thesei criminis heres, Phyllide decepta nulla relictas fides. 460
Si bene promittent, totidem promittite verbis:
    Si dederint, et vos gaudia pacta date.
Illa potest vigiles flammam extinguere Vestae,

Et rapere e templis, Inachi, sacra tuis,
Et dare mixta viro tritis aconita cicutis, 465
    Accepto venerem munere siqua negat.
Fert animus propius consistere: supprime habenas,
    Musa, nec admissis excutiare rotis.
Verba vadum temptent abiegnis scripta tabellis:
    Accipiat missas apta ministra notas. 470
Inspice: quodque leges, ex ipsis collige verbis, Fingat, an ex animo sollicitusque roget.
Postque brevem rescribe moram: mora semper amantes Incitat, exiguum si modo tempus habet.
Sed neque te facilem iuveni promitte roganti, 475
    Nec tamen e duro quod petit ille nega.
Fac timeat speretque simul, quotiensque remittes,
    Spesque magis veniat certa minorque metus.
Munda, sed e medio consuetaque verba, puellae, Scribite: sermonis publica forma placet; 480
A! quotiens dubius scriptis exarsit amator, Et nocuit formae barbara lingua bonae!
Sed quoniam, quamvis vittae careatis honore,
    Est vobis vestros fallere cura viros,
Ancillae puerique manu perarate tabellas, 485
    Pignora nec iuveni credite vestra novo.
Perfidus ille quidem, qui talia pignora servat, 489
    Sed tamen Aetnaei fulminis instar habent.
Vidi ego pallentes isto terrore puellas 487
    Servitium miseras tempus in omne pati.
Iudice me fraus est concessa repellere fraudem, 491
    Armaque in armatos sumere iura sinunt.
Ducere consuescat multas manus una figuras,
    (A! pereant, per quos ista monenda mihi)
Nec nisi deletis tutum rescribere ceris, 495
    Ne teneat geminas una tabella manus.
Femina dicatur scribenti semper amator:
    Illa sit in vestris, qui fuit ille, notis.
Si licet a parvis animum ad maiora referre,

Plenaque curvato pandere vela sinu, 500
Pertinet ad faciem rabidos compescere mores:
Candida pax homines, trux decet ira feras.
Ora tument ira: nigrescunt sanguine venae:
Lumina Gorgoneo saevius igne micant.
'I procul hinc,' dixit 'non es mihi, tibia, tanti,' 505
Ut vidit vultus Pallas in amne suos.
Vos quoque si media speculum spectetis in ira,
Cognoscat faciem vix satis ulla suam.
Nec minus in vultu damnosa superbia vestro:
Comibus est oculis alliciendus amor. 510
Odimus inmodicos (experto credite) fastus:
Saepe tacens odii semina vultus habet.
Spectantem specta, ridenti mollia ride:
Innuet, acceptas tu quoque redde notas.
Sic ubi prolusit, rudibus puer ille relictis 515
Spicula de pharetra promit acuta sua.
Odimus et maestas: Tecmessam diligat Ajax;
Nos hilarem populum femina laeta capit.
Numquam ego te, Andromache, nec te, Tecmessa, rogarem, Ut mea de vobis altera amica foret. 520
Credere vix videor, cum cogar credere partu, Vos ego cum vestris concubuisse viris.
Scilicet Aiaci mulier maestissima dixit
'Lux mea' quaeque solent verba iuvare viros?
Quis vetat a magnis ad res exempla minores 525
Sumere, nec nomen pertimuisse ducis?
Dux bonus huic centum commisit vite regendos,
Huic equites, illi signa tuenda dedit:
Vos quoque, de nobis quem quisque erit aptus ad usum, Inspicite, et certo ponite quemque loco. 530
Munera det dives: ius qui profitebitur, adsit:
Facundus causam saepe clientis agat:
Carmina qui facimus, mittamus carmina tantum:
Hic chorus ante alios aptus amare sumus.
Nos facimus placitae late praeconia formae: 535

Nomen habet Nemesis, Cynthia nomen habet:
Vesper et Eoae novere Lycorida terrae:
Et multi, quae sit nostra Corinna, rogant.
Adde, quod insidiae sacris a vatibus absunt,
Et facit ad mores ars quoque nostra suos. 540
Nec nos ambitio, nec amor nos tangit habendi:
Contempto colitur lectus et umbra foro.
Sed facile haeremus, validoque perurimur aestu,
Et nimium certa scimus amare fide.
Scilicet ingenium placida mollitur ab arte, 545
Et studio mores convenienter eunt.
Vatibus Aoniis faciles estote, puellae:
Numen inest illis, Pieridesque favent.
Est deus in nobis, et sunt commercia caeli:
Sedibus aetheriis spiritus ille venit. 550
A doctis pretium scelus est sperare poetis;
Me miserum! scelus hoc nulla puella timet.
Dissimulate tamen, nec prima fronte rapaces
Este: novus viso casse resistet amans.
Sed neque vector equum, qui nuper sensit habenas, 555
Comparibus frenis artificemque reget,
Nec stabiles animos annis viridemque iuventam
Ut capias, idem limes agendus erit.
Hic rudis et castris nunc primum notus Amoris,
Qui tetigit thalamos praeda novella tuos, 560
Te solam norit, tibi semper inhaereat uni:
Cingenda est altis saepibus ista seges.
Effuge rivalem: vinces, dum sola tenebis;
Non bene cum sociis regna Venusque manent.
Ille vetus miles sensim et sapienter amabit, 565
Multaque tironi non patienda feret:
Nec franget postes, nec saevis ignibus uret,
Nec dominae teneras adpetet ungue genas,
Nec scindet tunicasve suas tunicasve puellae,
Nec raptus flendi causa capillus erit. 570
Ista decent pueros aetate et amore calentes;

Hic fera composita vulnera mente feret.
Ignibus heu lentis uretur, ut umida faena,
Ut modo montanis silva recisa iugis.
Certior hic amor est: brevis et fecundior ille; 575
Quae fugiunt, celeri carpite poma manu.
Omnia tradantur: portas reseravimus hosti;
Et sit in infida proditione fides.
Quod datur ex facili, longum male nutrit amorem:
Miscenda est laetis rara repulsa iocis. 580
Ante fores iaceat, 'crudelis ianua!' dicat, Multaque summissae, multa minanter agat.
Dulcia non ferimus: suco renovemur amaro;
Saepe perit ventis obruta cumba suis;
Hoc est, uxores quod non patiatur amari: 585
Conveniunt illas, cum voluere, viri;
Adde forem, et duro dicat tibi ianitor ore
'Non potes,' exclusum te quoque tanget amor.
Ponite iam gladios hebetes: pugnetur acutis;
Nec dubito, telis quin petar ipse meis. 590
Dum cadit in laqueos captus quoque nuper amator, Solum se thalamos speret habere tuos.
Postmodo rivalem partitaeque foedera lecti Sentiat: has artes tolle, senescet amor.
Tum bene fortis equus reserato carcere currit, 595
Cum quos praetereat quosque sequatur habet.
Quamlibet extinctos iniuria suscitatur ignes:
En, ego (confiteor!) non nisi laesus amo.
Causa tamen nimium non sit manifesta doloris,
Pluraque sollicitus, quam sciet, esse putet. 600
Incitat et ficti tristis custodia servi,
Et nimium duri cura molesta viri.
Quae venit ex tuto, minus est accepta voluptas:
Ut sis liberior Thaide, finge metus.
Cum melius foribus possis, admitte fenestra, 605
Inque tuo vultu signa timentis habe.
Callida prosiliat dicatque ancilla 'perimus!'

Tu iuvenem trepidum quolibet abde loco.
Admiscenda tamen venus est secura timori,
Ne tanti noctes non putet esse tuas. 610
Qua vafer eludi possit ratione maritus, Quaque vigil custos, praeteriturus eram.
Nupta virum timeat: rata sit custodia nuptae;
Hoc decet, hoc leges iusque pudorque iubent.
Te quoque servari, modo quam vindicta redemit, 615
Quis ferat? Ut fallas, ad mea sacra veni!
Tot licet observent (adsit modo certa voluntas),
Quot fuerant Argo lumina, verba dabis.
Scilicet obstabit custos, ne scribere possis, Sumendae detur cum tibi tempus aquae? 620
Conscia cum possit scriptas portare tabellas, Quas tegat in tepido fascia lata sinu?
Cum possit sura chartas celare ligatas,
Et vincto blandas sub pede ferre notas?
Caverit haec custos, pro charta conscia tergum 625
Praebeat, inque suo corpore verba ferat.
Tuta quoque est fallitque oculos e lacte recenti Littera: carbonis pulvere tange, leges.
Fallet et umiduli quae fiet acumine lini,
Ut ferat occultas pura tabella notas. 630
Adfuit Acrisio servandae cura puellae:
Hunc tamen illa suo crimine fecit avum.
Quid faciat custos, cum sint tot in urbe theatra,
Cum spectet iunctos illa libenter equos,
Cum sedeat Phariae sistris operata iuvencae, 635
Quoque sui comites ire vetantur, eat,
Cum fuget a templis oculos Bona Diva virorum, Praeterquam siquos illa venire iubet?
Cum, custode foris tunicas servante puellae,
Celent furtivos balnea multa iocos, 640
Cum, quotiens opus est, fallax aegrotet amica, Et cedat lecto quamlibet aegra suo,
Nomine cum doceat, quid agamus, adultera clavis,

Quasque petas non det ianua sola vias?
Fallitur et multo custodis cura Lyaeo, 645
Illa vel Hispano lecta sit uva iugo;
Sunt quoque, quae faciant altos medicamina somnos, Victaque Lethaea lumina nocte premant;
Nec male deliciis odiosum conscia tardis
Detinet, et longa iungitur ipsa mora. 650
Quid iuvat ambages praeceptaque parva movere, Cum minimo custos munere possit emi?
Munera, crede mihi, capiunt hominesque deosque:
Placatur donis Iuppiter ipse datis.
Quid sapiens faciet, stultus cum munere gaudet? 655
Ipse quoque accepto munere mutus erit.
Sed semel est custos longum redimendus in aevum:
Saepe dabit, dederit quas semel ille manus.
Questus eram, memini, metuendos esse sodales:
Non tangit solos ista querella viros. 660 Credula si fueris, aliae tua gaudia carpent, Et lepus hic aliis exagitatus erit.
Haec quoque, quae praebet lectum studiosa locumque Crede mihi, mecum non semel illa fuit.
Nec nimium vobis formosa ancilla ministret: 665
Saepe vicem dominae praebuit illa mihi.
Quo feror insanus? quid aperto pectore in hostem Mittor, et indicio prodor ab ipse meo?
Non avis aucupibus monstrat, qua parte petatur:
Non docet infestos currere cerva canes. 670
Viderit utilitas: ego coepta fideliter edam:
Lemniasin gladios in mea fata dabo.
Efficite (et facile est), ut nos credamus amari:
Prona venit cupidis in sua vota fides.
Spectet amabilius iuvenem, suspiret ab imo 675
Femina, tam sero cur veniatque roget:
Accedant lacrimae, dolor et de paelice fictus,
Et laniet digitis illius ora suis:
Iam dudum persuasus erit; miserebitur ultro,

Et dicet 'cura carpitur ista mei.' 680
Praecipue si cultus erit speculoque placebit, Posse suo tangi credet amore deas.
Sed te, quaecumque est, moderate iniuria turbet,
    Nec sis audita paelice mentis inops.
Nec cito credideris: quantum cito credere laedat, 685
    Exemplum vobis non leve Procris erit.
Est prope purpureos colles florentis Hymetti Fons sacer et viridi caespite mollis humus:
Silva nemus non alta facit; tegit arbutus herbam,
    Ros maris et lauri nigraque myrtus olent: 690
Nec densum foliis buxum fragilesque myricae, Nec tenues cytisi cultaque pinus abest.
Lenibus impulsae zephyris auraque salubri
    Tot generum frondes herbaque summa tremunt.
Grata quies Cephalo: famulis canibusque relictis 695 Lassus in hac iuvenis saepe resedit humo,
'Quae' que 'meos relevas aestus,' cantare solebat
    'Accipienda sinu, mobilis aura, veni.'
Coniugis ad timidas aliquis male sedulus aures Auditos memori detulit ore sonos; 700
Procris ut accepit nomen, quasi paelicis, Aurae, Excidit, et subito muta dolore fuit;
Palluit, ut serae lectis de vite racemis
    Pallescent frondes, quas nova laesit hiemps, Quaeque suos curvant matura cydonia ramos, 705
    Cornaque adhuc nostris non satis apta cibis.
Ut rediit animus, tenues a pectore vestes Rumpit, et indignas sauciat ungue genas;
Nec mora, per medias passis furibunda capillis
    Evolat, ut thyrsos concita Baccha, vias. 710
Ut prope perventum, comites in valle relinquit, Ipsa nemus tacito clam pede fortis init.
Quid tibi mentis erat, cum sic male sana lateres, Procri? quis adtoniti pectoris ardor erat?
Iam iam venturam, quaecumque erat Aura, putabas 715

Scilicet, atque oculis probra videnda tuis.
Nunc venisse piget (neque enim deprendere velles),
Nunc iuvat: incertus pectora versat amor.
Credere quae iubeant, locus est et nomen et index,
Et quia mens semper quod timet, esse putat. 720
Vidit ut oppressa vestigia corporis herba, Pulsantur trepidi corde micante sinus.
Iamque dies medius tenues contraxerat umbras,
Inque pari spatio vesper et ortus erant:
Ecce, redit Cephalus silvis, Cyllenia proles, 725
Oraque fontana fervida pulsat aqua.
Anxia, Procri, lates: solitas iacet ille per herbas, Et 'zephyri molles auraque' dixit 'ades!'
Ut patuit miserae iucundus nominis error,
Et mens et rediit verus in ora color. 730
Surgit, et oppositas agitato corpore frondes Movit, in amplexus uxor itura viri:
Ille feram movisse ratus, iuvenaliter artus Corripit, in dextra tela fuere manu.
Quid facis, infelix? non est fera, supprime tela! 735 Me miserum! iaculo fixa puella tuo est.
'Ei mihi!' conclamat 'fixisti pectus amicum.
Hic locus a Cephalo vulnera semper habet.
Ante diem morior, sed nulla paelice laesa:
Hoc faciet positae te mihi, terra, levem. 740
Nomine suspectas iam spiritus exit in auras:
Labor, eo, cara lumina conde manu!'
Ille sinu dominae morientia corpora maesto Sustinet, et lacrimis vulnera saeva lavat:
Exit, et incauto paulatim pectore lapsus 745
Excipitur miseri spiritus ore viri.
Sed repetamus opus: mihi nudis rebus eundum est,
Ut tangat portus fessa carina suos.
Sollicite expectas, dum te in convivia ducam,
Et quaeris monitus hac quoque parte meos. 750
Sera veni, positaque decens incede lucerna:

Grata mora venies; maxima lena mora est.
Etsi turpis eris, formosa videbere potis,
Et latebras vitiis nox dabit ipsa tuis.
Carpe cibos digitis: est quiddam gestus edendi: 755
Ora nec immunda tota perungue manu.
Neve domi praesume dapes, sed desine citra Quam capis; es paulo quam potes esse minus;
Priamides Helenen avide si spectet edentem,
Oderit, et dicat 'stulta rapina mea est.' 760
Aptius est, deceatque magis potare puellas:
Cum Veneris puero non male, Bacche, facis.
Hoc quoque, qua patiens caput est, animusque pedesque Constant: nec, quae sunt singula, bina vide.
Turpe iacens mulier multo madefacta Lyaeo: 765
Digna est concubitus quoslibet illa pati.
Nec somnis posita tutum succumbere mensa:
Per somnos fieri multa pudenda solent.
Ulteriora pudet docuisse: sed alma Dione
'Praecipue nostrum est, quod pudet' inquit 'opus.' 770
Nota sibi sit quaeque: modos a corpore certos Sumite: non omnes una figura decet.
Quae facie praesignis erit, resupina iaceto:
Spectentur tergo, quis sua terga placent.
Milanion umeris Atalantes crura ferebat: 775
Si bona sunt, hoc sunt accipienda modo.
Parva vehatur equo: quod erat longissima, numquam
Thebais Hectoreo nupta resedit equo.
Strata premat genibus, paulum cervice reflexa,
Femina per longum conspicienda latus. 780
Cui femur est iuvenale, carent quoque pectora menda, Stet vir, in obliquo fusa sit ipsa toro.
Nec tibi turpe puta crinem, ut Phylleia mater,
Solvere, et effusis colla reflecte comis.
Tu quoque, cui rugis uterum Lucina notavit, 785
Ut celer aversis utere Parthus equis.
Mille modi veneris; simplex minimique laboris,

Cum iacet in dextrum semisupina latus.
Sed neque Phoebai tripodes nec corniger Ammon
Vera magis vobis, quam mea Musa, canet: 790 Siqua fides arti, quam longo fecimus usu, Credite: praestabunt carmina nostra fidem.
Sentiat ex imis venerem resoluta medullis
Femina, et ex aequo res iuuet illa duos.
Nec blandae voces iucundaque murmura cessent, 795
Nec taceant mediis improba verba iocis.
Tu quoque, cui veneris sensum natura negavit,
Dulcia mendaci gaudia finge sono.
Infelix, cui torpet hebes locus ille, puella,
Quo pariter debent femina virque frui. 800
Tantum, cum finges, ne sis manifesta, caveto:
Effice per motum luminaque ipsa fidem.
Quam iuuet, et voces et anhelitus arguat oris;
A! pudet, arcanas pars habet ista notas.
Gaudia post Veneris quae poscet munus amantem, 805
Illa suas nolet pondus habere preces.
Nec lucem in thalamos totis admitte fenestris;
Aptius in vestro corpore multa latent.
Lusus habet finem: cygnis descendere tempus,
Duxerunt collo qui iuga nostra suo. 810
Ut quondam iuvenes, ita nunc, mea turba, puellae Inscribant spoliis 'Naso magister erat.'

REMEDIA AMORIS

Legerat huius Amor titulum nomenque libelli:
    'Bella mihi, video, bella parantur' ait.
'Parce tuum vatem sceleris damnare, Cupido, Tradita qui toties te duce signa tuli.
Non ego Tydides, a quo tua saucia mater 5
    In liquidum rediit aethera Martis equis.
Saepe tepent alii iuvenes: ego semper amavi,
    Et si, quid faciam, nunc quoque, quaeris, amo.
Quin etiam docui, qua posses arte parari,
    Et quod nunc ratio est, impetus ante fuit. 10
Nec te, blande puer, nec nostras prodimus artes, Nec nova praeteritum Musa retexit opus.
Siquis amat quod amare iuvat, feliciter ardens Gaudeat, et vento naviget ille suo.
At siquis male fert indignae regna puellae, 15
    Ne pereat, nostrae sentiat artis opem.
Cur aliquis laqueo collum nodatus amator
    A trabe sublimi triste pependit onus?
Cur aliquis rigido fodit sua pectora ferro?
    Invidiam caedis, pacis amator, habes. 20
Qui, nisi desierit, misero periturus amore est, Desinat; et nulli funeris auctor eris.
Et puer es, nec te quicquam nisi ludere oportet:
    Lude; decent annos mollia regna tuos.
[Nam poteris uti nudis ad bella sagittis: 25
    Sed tua mortifero sanguine tela carent.]
Vitricus et gladiis et acuta dimicet hasta, Et victor multa caede cruentus eat:
Tu cole maternas, tuto quibus utimur, artes,
    Et quarum vitio nulla fit orba parens. 30
Effice nocturna frangatur ianua rixa,

Et tegat ornatas multa corona fores:
Fac coeant furtim iuvenes timidaeque puellae,
Verbaque dent cauto qualibet arte viro:
Et modo blanditias rigido, modo iurgia posti 35
Dicat et exclusus flebile cantet amans.
His lacrimis contentus eris sine crimine mortis;
Non tua fax avidos digna subire rogos.'
Haec ego: movit Amor gemmatas aureus alas, Et mihi 'propositum perface' dixit 'opus.' 40
Ad mea, decepti iuvenes, praecepta venite, Quos suus ex omni parte fefellit amor.
Discite sanari, per quem didicistis amare:
Una manus vobis vulnus opemque feret.
Terra salutare herbas, eademque nocentes 45
Nutrit, et urticae proxima saepe rosa est;
Vulnus in Herculeo quae quondam fecerat hoste, Vulneris auxilium Pelias hasta tulit.
Sed quaecumque viris, vobis quoque dicta, puellae, Credite: diversis partibus arma damus, 50
E quibus ad vestros siquid non pertinet usus, Attamen exemplo multa docere potest.
Utile propositum est saevas extinguere flammam,
Nec servum vitii pectus habere sui.
Vixisset Phyllis, si me foret usa magistro, 55
Et per quod novies, saepius isset iter;
Nec moriens Dido summa vidisset ab arce Dardanias vento vela dedisse rates;
Nec dolor armasset contra sua viscera matrem,
Quae socii damno sanguinis ulta virum est. 60
Arte mea Tereus, quamvis Philomela placeret, Per facinus fieri non meruisset avis.
Da mihi Pasiphaen, iam tauri ponet amorem:
Da Phaeram, Phaerae turpis abibit amor.
Crede Parim nobis, Helenen Menelaus habebit, 65
Nec manibus Danae Pergama victa cadent.
Impia si nostros legisset Scylla libellos,

Haesisset capiti purpura, Nise, tuo.
Me duce damnosas, homines, conpescite curas,
    Rectaque cum sociis me duce navis eat. 70
Naso legendus erat tum, cum didicistis amare:
    Idem nunc vobis Naso legendus erit.
Publicus assertor dominis suppressa levabo Pectora: vindictae quisque favete suae.
Te precor incipiens, adsit tua laurea nobis, 75
    Carminis et medicae, Phoebe, repertor opis.
Tu pariter vati, pariter succurre medenti:
    Utraque tutelae subdita cura tua est.
Dum licet, et modici tangunt praecordia motus,
    Si piget, in primo limine siste pedem. 80
Opprime, dum nova sunt, subiti mala semina morbi, Et tuus incipiens ire resistat equus.
Nam mora dat vires, teneras mora percoquit uvas,
    Et validas segetes quae fuit herba, facit.
Quae praebet latas arbor spatiantibus umbras, 85
    Quo posita est primum tempore virga fuit;
Tum poterat manibus summa tellure revelli:
    Nunc stat in inensum viribus aucta suis.
Quale sit id, quod amas, celeri circumspice mente,
    Et tua laesuro subtrahe colla iugo. 90
Principiis obsta; sero medicina paratur, Cum mala per longas convaluere moras.
Sed propera, nec te venturas differ in horas;
    Qui non est hodie, cras minus aptus erit:
Verba dat omnis amor, reperitque alimenta morando; 95
    Optima vindictae proxima quaeque dies.
Flumina pauca vides de magnis fontibus orta:
    Plurima collectis multiplicantur aquis.
Si cito sensisses, quantum peccare parares,
    Non tegeres vultus cortice, Myrrha, tuos. 100
Vidi ego, quod fuerat primo sanabile, vulnus Dilatatum longae damna tulisse morae.
Sed quia delectat Veneris decerpere fructum,

Dicimus adsidue 'cras quoque fiet idem.'
Interea tacitae serpunt in viscera flammae, 105
Et mala radices altius arbor agit.
Si tamen auxilii perierunt tempora primi,
Et vetus in capto pectore sedit amor,
Maius opus superest: sed non, quia serior aegro Advocor, ille mihi destituendus erit. 110
Quam laesus fuerat, partem Poeantius heros Certa debuerat praesecuisse manu;
Post tamen hic multos sanatus creditur annos Supremam bellis imposuisse manum.
Qui modo nascentes properabam pellere morbos, 115
Admoveo tardam nunc tibi lentus opem.
Aut nova, si possis, sedare incendia temptes,
Aut ubi per vires procubuere suas:
Dum furor in cursu est, currenti cede furori;
Difficiles aditus impetus omnis habet. 120
Stultus, ab obliquo qui cum descendere possit, Pugnat in adversas ire natator aquas.
Impatiens animus nec adhuc tractabilis artem Respuit, atque odio verba monentis habet.
Adgrediar melius tum, cum sua vulnera tangi 125
Iam sinet, et veris vocibus aptus erit.
Quis matrem, nisi mentis inops, in funere nati Flere vetet? non hoc illa monenda loco est.
Cum dederit lacrimas animumque impleverit aegrum, Ille dolor verbis emoderandus erit. 130
Temporis ars medicina fere est: data tempore prosunt, Et data non apto tempore vina nocent.
Quin etiam accendas vitia inritesque vetando, Temporibus si non adgrediare suis.
Ergo ubi visus eris nostra medicabilis arte, 135
Fac monitis fugias otia prima meis.
Haec, ut ames, faciunt; haec, quod fecere, tuentur;
Haec sunt iucundi causa cibusque mali.
Otia si tollas, periire Cupidinis arcus,

Contemptaeque iacent et sine luce faces. 140
Quam platanus vino gaudet, quam populus unda, Et quam limosa canna palustris humo,
Tam Venus otia amat; qui finem quaeris amoris, Cedit amor rebus: res age, tutus eris.
Languor, et inmodici sub nullo vindice somni, 145
Aleaque, et multo tempora quassa mero Eripiunt omnes animo sine vulnere nervos:
Adfluit incautis insidiosus Amor.
Desidiam puer ille sequi solet, odit agentes:
Da vacuae menti, quo teneatur, opus. 150
Sunt fora, sunt leges, sunt, quos tuearis, amici:
Vade per urbanae splendida castra togae.
Vel tu sanguinei iuvenalia munera Martis Suspice: deliciae iam tibi terga dabunt.
Ecce, fugax Parthus, magni nova causa triumphi, 155
Iam videt in campis Caesaris arma suis:
Vince Cupidineas pariter Parthasque sagittas,
Et refer ad patrios bina tropaea deos.
Ut semel Aetola Venus est a cuspide laesa, Mandat amatori bella gerenda suo. 160
Quaeritur, Aegisthus quare sit factus adulter?
In promptu causa est: desidiosus erat.
Pugnabant alii tardis apud Ilion armis:
Transtulerat vires Graecia tota suas.
Sive operam bellis vellet dare, nulla gerebat: 165
Sive foro, vacuum litibus Argos erat.
Quod potuit, ne nil illic ageretur, amavit.
Sic venit ille puer, sic puer ille manet.
Rura quoque oblectant animos studiumque colendi:
Quaelibet huic curae cedere cura potest. 170
Colla iube domitos oneri supponere tauros, Sauciet ut duram vomer aduncus humum:
Obrue versata Cerialia semina terra, Quae tibi cum multo faenore reddat ager.
Aspice curvatos pomorum pondere ramos, 175

Ut sua, quod peperit, vix ferat arbor onus;
Aspice labentes iucundo murmure rivos;
Aspice tondentes fertile gramen oves.
Ecce, petunt rupes praeruptaque saxa capellae:
Iam referent haedis ubera plena suis; 180
Pastor inaequali modulatur harundine carmen, Nec desunt comites, sedula turba, canes;
Parte sonant alia silvae mugitibus altae,
Et queritur vitulum mater abesse suum.
Quid, cum suppositos fugiunt examina fumos, 185
Ut relevent dempti vimina curva favi?
Poma dat autumnus: formosa est messibus aestas:
Ver praebet flores: igne levatur hiems.
Temporibus certis maturam rusticus uvam
Deligit, et nudo sub pede musta fluunt; 190
Temporibus certis desectas alligat herbas, Et tonsam raro pectine verrit humum.
Ipse potes riguis plantam deponere in hortis,
Ipse potes rivos ducere lenis aquae.
Venerit insitio; fac ramum ramus adoptet, 195
Stetque peregrinis arbor operta comis.
Cum semel haec animum coepit mulcere voluptas,
Debilibus pinnis inritus exit Amor.
Vel tu venandi studium cole: saepe recessit Turpiter a Phoebi victa sorore Venus. 200
Nunc leporem pronum catulo sectare sagaci, Nunc tua frondosis retia tende iugis,
Aut pavidos terre varia formidine cervos,
Aut cadat adversa cuspide fossus aper.
Nocte fatigatum somnus, non cura puellae, 205
Excipit et pingui membra quiete levat.
Lenius est studium, studium tamen, alite capta
Aut lino aut calamis praemia parva sequi, Vel, quae piscis edax avido male devoret ore,
Abdere sub parvis aera recurva cibis. 210
Aut his aut aliis, donec dediscis amare,

Ipse tibi furtim decipiendus eris.
Tu tantum quamvis firmis retinebere vinclis,
I procul, et longas carpere perge vias;
Flebis, et occurret desertae nomen amicae, 215 Stabit et in media pes tibi saepe via:
Sed quanto minus ire voles, magis ire memento;
Perfer, et invitos currere coge pedes.
Nec pluvias opta, nec te peregrina morentur Sabbata, nec damnis Allia nota suis. 220
Nec quot transieris et quot tibi, quaere, supersint Milia; nec, maneat ut prope, finge moras:
Tempora nec numera, nec crebro respice Romam, Sed fuge: tutus adhuc Parthus ab hoste fuga est.
Dura aliquis praecepta vocet mea; dura fatemur 225
Esse; sed ut valeas, multa dolenda feres.
Saepe bibi sucos, quamvis invitus, amaros
Aeger, et oranti mensa negata mihi.
Ut corpus redimas, ferrum patieris et ignes, Arida nec sitiens ora levabis aqua: 230
Ut valeas animo, quicquam tolerare negabis?
At pretium pars haec corpore maius habet.
Sed tamen est artis tristissima ianua nostrae,
Et labor est unus tempora prima pati.
Aspicias, ut prensos urant iuga prima iuencos, 235
Et nova velocem cingula laedat equum?
Forsitan a laribus patriis exire pigebit:
Sed tamen exhibis: deinde redire voles;
Nec te Lar patrius, sed amor revocabit amicae, Praetendens culpae splendida verba tuae. 240
Cum semel exieris, centum solatia curae Et rus et comites et via longa dabit.
Nec satis esse putes discedere; lentus abesto,
Dum perdat vires sitque sine igne cinis.
Quod nisi firmata properaris mente reverti, 245
Inferet arma tibi saeva rebellis Amor.
Quidquid et afueris, avidus sitiensque redibis,

Et spatium damno cesserit omne tuo.
Viderit, Haemoniae si quis mala pabula terrae
Et magicas artes posse iuvare putat. 250
Ista veneficii vetus est via; noster Apollo Innocuam sacro carmine monstrat opem.
Me duce non tumulo prodire iubebitur umbra,
Non anus infami carmine rumpet humum;
Non seges ex aliis alios transibit in agros, 255
Nec subito Phoebi pallidus orbis erit.
Ut solet, aequoreas ibit Tiberinus in undas:
Ut solet, in niveis Luna vehetur equis.
Nulla recantatas deponent pectora curas,
Nec fugiet vivo sulphure victus amor. 260
Quid te Phasiacae iuverunt gramina terrae, Cum cuperes patria, Colchi, manere domo?
Quid tibi profuerunt, Circe, Perseides herbae, Cum sua Neritias abstulit aura rates?
Omnia fecisti, ne callidus hospes abiret: 265
Ille dedit certae lintea plena fugae.
Omnia fecisti, ne te ferus ureret ignis:
Longus in invito pectore sedit amor.
Vertere tu poteras homines in mille figuras,
Non poteras animi vertere iura tui. 270
Diceris his etiam, cum iam discedere vellet, Dulichium verbis detinuisse ducem:
'Non ego, quod primo, memini, sperare solebam,
Iam precor, ut coniunx tu meus esse velis;
Et tamen, ut coniunx essem tua, digna videbar, 275
Quod dea, quod magni filia Solis eram.
Ne properes, oro; spatium pro munere posco:
Quid minus optari per mea vota potest?
Et freta mota vides, et debes illa timere:
Utilior velis postmodo ventus erit. 280
Quae tibi causa fugae? non hic nova Troia resurgit, Non aliquis socios rursus ad arma vocat.
Hic amor et pax est, in qua male vulneror una,

Tutaque sub regno terra futura tuo est.’
Illa loquebatur, navem solvebat Ulixes: 285
Inrita cum velis verba tulere noti.
Ardet et adsuetas Circe decurrit ad artes,
Nec tamen est illis adtenuatus amor.
Ergo quisquis opem nostra tibi poscis ab arte,
Deme veneficiis carminibusque fidem. 290
Si te causa potens domina retinebit in Urbe, Accipe, consilium quod sit in Urbe meum.
Optimus ille sui vindex, laedentia pectus Vincula qui rupit, dedoluitque semel.
Sed cui tantum animi est, illum mirabor et ipse, 295
Et dicam ‘monitis non eget iste meis.’
Tu mihi, qui, quod amas, aegre dediscis amare,
Nec potes, et velles posse, docendus eris.
Saepe refer tecum sceleratae facta puellae,
Et pone ante oculos omnia damna tuos. 300 ‘Illud et illud habet, nec ea contenta rapina est:
Sub titulum nostros misit avara lares.
Sic mihi iuravit, sic me iurata fefellit,
Ante suas quotiens passa iacere fores!
Diligit ipsa alios, a me fastidit amari; 305
Institor, heu, noctes, quas mihi non dat, habet!’
Haec tibi per totos inacescant omnia sensus:
Haec refer, hinc odii semina quaere tui.
Atque utinam possis etiam facundus in illis
Esse! dole tantum, sponte disertus eris. 310
Haeserat in quadam nuper mea cura puella:
Conveniens animo non erat illa meo:
Curabar propriis aeger Podalirius herbis,
Et, fateor, medicus turpiter aeger eram.
Profuit adsidue vitiis insistere amicae, 315
Idque mihi factum saepe salubre fuit.
‘Quam mala’ dicebam ‘nostrae sunt crura puellae!’
Nec tamen, ut vere confiteamur, erant.
‘Brachia quam non sunt nostrae formosa puellae!’

Et tamen, ut vere confiteamur, erant. 320
'Quam brevis est!' nec erat; 'quam multum poscit amantem!'

Haec odio venit maxima causa meo.
Et mala sunt vicina bonis; errore sub illo
Pro vitio virtus crimina saepe tulit.
Qua potes, in peius dotes deflecte puellae, 325
Iudiciumque brevi limite falle tuum.
Turgida, si plena est, si fusca est, nigra vocetur:
In gracili macies crimen habere potest.
Et poterit dici petulans, quae rustica non est:
Et poterit dici rustica, si qua proba est. 330
Quin etiam, quacumque caret tua femina dote, Hanc moveat, blandis usque precare sonis.
Exige uti cantet, si qua est sine voce puella:
Fac saltet, nescit si qua movere manum.
Barbara sermone est? fac tecum multa loquatur; 335
Non didicit chordas tangere? posce lyram.
Durius incedit? fac inambulet; omne papillae Pectus habent? vitium fascia nulla tegat.
Si male dentata est, narra, quod rideat, illi;
Mollibus est oculis? quod fleat illa, refer. 340
Proderit et subito, cum se non finxerit ulli, Ad dominam celeres mane tulisse gradus.
Auferimur cultu; gemmis auroque teguntur
Omnia; pars minima est ipsa puella sui.
Saepe ubi sit, quod ames, inter tam multa requiras; 345
Decipit hac oculos aegide dives Amor.
Improvisus ades, deprendes tutus inermem:
Infelix vitiis excidet illa suis.
Non tamen huic nimium praecepto credere tutum est:
Fallit enim multos forma sine arte decens. 350
Tum quoque, compositis cum collinet ora venenis, Ad dominae vultus (nec pudor obstet) eas.
Pyxidas invenies et rerum mille colores,
Et fluere in tepidos oesyra lapsa sinus.

Illa tuas redolent, Phineu, medicamina mensas: 355
Non semel hinc stomacho nausea facta meo est.
Nunc tibi, quae medio veneris praestemus in usu,
Eloquar: ex omni est parte fugandus amor.
Multa quidem ex illis pudor est mihi dicere; sed tu
Ingenio verbis concipe plura meis. 360
Nuper enim nostros quidam carpsere libellos, Quorum censura Musa proterva mea est.
Dummodo sic placeam, dum toto canter in orbe, Quamlibet impugnent unus et alter opus.
Ingenium magni livor detractat Homeri: 365
Quisquis es, ex illo, Zoile, nomen habes.
Et tua sacrilegae laniantur carmina linguae,
Pertulit huc victos quo duce Troia deos.
Summa petit livor; perflant altissima venti:
Summa petunt dextra fulmina missa Iovis. 370
At tu, quicumque es, quem nostra licentia laedit, Si sapis, ad numeros exige quidque suos.
Fortia Maeonio gaudent pede bella referri;
Deliciis illic quis locus esse potest?
Grande sonant tragici; tragicos decet ira cothurnos: 375
Usibus e mediis soccus habendus erit.
Liber in adversos hostes stringatur iambus,
Seu celer, extremum seu trahat ille pedem.
Blanda pharetratos Elegia cantet Amores,
Et levis arbitrio ludat amica suo. 380
Callimachi numeris non est dicendus Achilles, Cydippe non est oris, Homere, tui.
Quis feret Andromaches peragentem Thaida partes?
Peccet, in Andromache Thaida quisquis agat.
Thais in arte mea est; lascivia libera nostra est; 385
Nil mihi cum vitta; Thais in arte mea est.
Si mea materiae respondet Musa iocosae, Vicimus, et falsi criminis acta rea est.
Rumpere, Livor edax: magnum iam nomen habemus;
Maius erit, tantum quo pede coepit eat. 390

Sed nimium properas: vivam modo, plura dolebis;
Et capiunt animi carmina multa mei.
Nam iuvat et studium famae mihi crevit honore;
Principio clivi noster anhelat equus.
Tantum se nobis elegi debere fatentur, 395
Quantum Vergilio nobile debet epos.
Hactenus invidiae respondimus: attrahe lora Fortius, et gyro curre, poeta, tuo.
Ergo ubi concubitus et opus iuvenale petetur,
Et prope promissae tempora noctis erunt, 400
Gaudia ne dominae, pleno si corpore sumes,
Te capiant, in eas quamlibet ante velim;
Quamlibet invenias, in qua tua prima voluptas
Desinat: a prima proxima segnis erit.
Sustentata venus gratissima; frigore soles, 405
Sole iuvant umbrae, grata fit unda siti.
Et pudet, et dicam: venerem quoque iunge figura,
Qua minime iungi quamque decere putas.
Nec labor efficere est: rarae sibi vera fatentur,
Et nihil est, quod se dedecuisse putent. 410
Tunc etiam iubeo totas aperire fenestras, Turpiaque admissis membra notare die.
At simul ad metas venit finita voluptas,
Lassaque cum tota corpora mente iacent,
Dum piget, et malis nullam tetigisse puellam, 415
Tactusque tibi non videare diu, Tunc animo signa, quaecumque in corpore menda est,
Luminaque in vitiis illius usque tene.
Forsitan haec aliquis (nam sunt quoque) parva vocabit,
Sed, quae non prosunt singula, multa iuvant. 420
Parva necat morsu spatiosum vipera taurum:
A cane non magno saepe tenetur aper.
Tu tantum numero pugna, praeceptaque in unum
Contrahe: de multis grandis acervus erit.
Sed quoniam totidem mores totidemque figurae, 425
Non sunt iudicii omnia danda meis.

Quo tua non possunt offendi pectora facto, Forsitan hoc alio iudice crimen erit.
Ille quod obscenas in aperto corpore partes Viderat, in cursu qui fuit, haesit amor: 430
Ille quod a Veneris rebus surgente puella Vidit in inmundo signa pudenda toro.
Luditis, o siquos potuerunt ista movere:
Adflarant tepidae pectora vestra faces.
Adtrahat ille puer contentos fortius arcus: 435
Saucia maiorem turba petetis opem.
Quid, qui clam latuit reddente obscena puella,
Et vidit, quae mos ipse videre vetat?
Di melius, quam nos moneamus talia quemquam!
Ut prosint, non sunt expedienda tamen. 440
Hortor et, ut pariter binas habeatis amicas (Fortior est, plures siquis habere potest):
Secta bipertito cum mens discurrit utroque,
Alterius vires subtrahit alter amor.
Grandia per multos tenuantur flumina rivos, 445
Saevaque diducto stipite flamma perit.
Non satis una tenet ceratas ancora puppes,
Nec satis est liquidis unicus hamus aquis:
Qui sibi iam pridem solacia bina paravit,
Iam pridem summa victor in arce fuit. 450
At tibi, qui fueris dominae male creditus uni, Nunc saltem novus est inveniendus amor.
Pasiphaes Minos in Procride perdidit ignes: Cessit ab Idaea coniuge victa prior.
Amphilochi frater ne Phegida semper amaret, 455
Calliroe fecit parte recepta tori.
Et Parin Oenone summos tenuisset ad annos, Si non Oebalia paelice laesa foret.
Coniugis Odrysio placuisset forma tyranno:
Sed melior clausae forma sororis erat. 460
Quid moror exemplis, quorum me turba fatigat?
Successore novo vincitur omnis amor.

Fortius e multis mater desiderat unum,
Quam quem flens clamat 'tu mihi solus eras.'
Ac ne forte putes nova me tibi condere iura 465 (Atque utinam inventi gloria nostra foret!), Vidit ut Atrides (quid enim non ille videret, Cuius in arbitrio Graecia tota fuit?)
Marte suo captam Chryseida, victor amabat:
At senior stulte flebat ubique pater. 470
Quid lacrimas, odiose senex? bene convenit illis:
Officio natam laedis, inepte, tuo.
Quam postquam reddi Calchas, ope tutus Achillis, Iusserat, et patria est illa recepta domo,
'Est' ait Atrides 'illius proxima forma, 475 Et, si prima sinat syllaba, nomen idem:
Hanc mihi, si sapiat, per se concedat Achilles:
Si minus, imperium sentiat ille meum.
Quod siquis vestrum factum hoc incusat, Achivi, Est aliquid valida scepra tenere manu. 480
Nam si rex ego sum, nec mecum dormiat ulla,
In mea Thersites regna, licebit, eat.'
Dixit, et hanc habuit solacia magna prioris, Et posita est cura cura repulsa nova.
Ergo adsume novas auctore Agamemnone flammam, 485
Ut tuus in bivio distineatur amor.
Quaeris, ubi invenias? artes tu perlege nostras:
Plena puellarum iam tibi navis erit.
Quod siquid praecepta valent mea, siquid Apollo Utile mortales perdocet ore meo, 490
Quamvis infelix media torreberis Aetna, Frigidior glacie fac videare tuae:
Et sanum simula, ne, siquid forte dolebis,
Sentiat; et ride, cum tibi flendus eris.
Non ego te iubeo medias abrumpere curas: 495
Non sunt imperii tam fera iussa mei.
Quod non es, simula, positosque imitare furores:
Sic facies vere, quod meditatus eris.

Saepe ego, ne biberem, volui dormire videri:
Dum videor, somno lumina victa dedi: 500
Deceptum risi, qui se simularat amare,
In laqueos auceps decideratque suos.
Intrat amor mentes usu, dediscitur usu:
Qui poterit sanum fingere, sanus erit.
Dixerit, ut venias: pacta tibi nocte venito; 505
Veneris, et fuerit ianua clausa: feres.
Nec dic blanditias, nec fac convicia posti,
Nec latus in duro limine pone tuum.
Postera lux aderit: careant tua verba querellis,
Et nulla in vultu signa dolentis habe. 510
Iam ponet fastus, cum te languere videbit:
Hoc etiam nostra munus ab arte feres.
Te quoque falle tamen, nec sit tibi finis amandi Propositus: frenis saepe repugnat equus.
Utilitas lateat; quod non profitebere, fiet: 515
Quae nimis apparent retia, vitat avis.
Nec sibi tam placeat, nec te contemnere possit;
Sume animos, animis cedat ut illa tuis.
Ianua forte patet? quamvis revocabere, transi.
Est data nox? dubita nocte venire data. 520
Posse pati facile est, ubi, si patientia desit, Protinus ex facili gaudia ferre licet.
Et quisquam praecepta potest mea dura vocare?
En, etiam partes conciliantis ago.
Nam quoniam variant animi, variabimus artes; 525
Mille mali species, mille salutis erunt.
Corpora vix ferro quaedam sanantur acuto:
Auxilium multis sucus et herba fuit.
Mollior es, neque abire potes, vinctusque teneris,
Et tua saevus Amor sub pede colla premit? 530
Desine luctari: referant tua carbasa venti, Quaque vocant fluctus, hac tibi remus eat.
Explenda est sitis ista tibi, quo perditus ardes;
Cedimus; e medio iam licet amne bibas:

Sed bibe plus etiam, quam quod praecordia poscunt, 535
Guttare fac pleno sumpta redundet aqua.
I, fruere usque tua, nullo prohibente, puella:
Illa tibi noctes auferat, illa dies.
Taedia quaere mali: faciunt et taedia finem.
Iam quoque, cum credes posse carere, mane, 540
Dum bene te cumules et copia tollat amorem, Et fastidita non iuuet esse domo.
Fit quoque longus amor, quem diffidentia nutrit:
Hunc tu si quaeres ponere, pone metum.
Qui timet, ut sua sit, ne quis sibi detrahat illam, 545
Ille Machaonia vix ope sanus erit.
Plus amat e natis mater plerumque duobus,
Pro cuius reditu, quod gerit arma, timet.
Est prope Collinam templum venerabile portam;
Inposuit templo nomina celsus Eryx: 550
Est illic Lethaeus Amor, qui pectora sanat, Inque suas gelidam lampadas addit aquam.
Illic et iuvenes votis obliviam poscunt,
Et si qua est duro capta puella viro.
Is mihi sic dixit (dubito, verusne Cupido, 555 An somnus fuerit: sed puto, somnus erat)
'O qui sollicitos modo das, modo demis amores, Adice praeceptis hoc quoque, Naso, tuis.
Ad mala quisque animum referat sua, ponet amorem;
Omnibus illa deus plusve minusve dedit. 560
Qui Puteal Ianumque timet celeresque Kalendas, Torqueat hunc aeris mutua summa sui;
Cui durus pater est, ut voto cetera cedant,
Huic pater ante oculos durus habendus erit;
Hic male dotata pauper cum coniuge vivit, 565
Uxorem fato credat obesse suo.
Est tibi rure bono generosae fertilis uvae
Vinea? ne nascens usta sit uva, time.
Ille habet in reditu navim: mare semper iniquum
Cogitet et damno litora foeda suo. 570

Filius hunc miles, te filia nubilus angat;
Et quis non causas mille doloris habet?
Ut posses odisse tuam, Pari, funera fratrum Debueras oculis substituere tuis.’
Plura loquebatur: placidum puerilis imago 575
Destituit somnum, si modo somnus erat.
Quid faciam? media navem Palinurus in unda Deserit; ignotas cogor inire vias.
Quisquis amas, loca sola nocent, loca sola caveto!
Quo fugis? in populo tutior esse potes. 580
Non tibi secretis (augent secreta furores) Est opus: auxilio turba futura tibi est.
Tristis eris, si solus eris, dominaeque relictæ
Ante oculos facies stabit, ut ipsa, tuos.
Tristior idcirco nox est quam tempora Phoebi; 585
Quae relevet luctus, turba sodalis abest.
Nec fuge conloquium, nec sit tibi ianua clausa,
Nec tenebris vultus flebilis abde tuos.
Semper habe Pyladen aliquem, qui curet Oresten:
Hic quoque amicitiae non levis usus erit. 590
Quid, nisi secretae laeserunt Phyllida silvae?
Certa necis causa est: incommitata fuit.
Ibat, ut Edono referens trieterica Baccho
Ire solet fisis barbara turba comis,
Et modo, qua poterat, longum spectabat in aequor, 595
Nunc in harenosa lassa iacebat humo.
‘Perfide Demophoon!’ surdas clamabat ad undas, Ruptaque singultu verba loquentis erant.
Limes erat tenuis longa subnubilus umbra,
Quo tulit illa suos ad mare saepe pedes. 600
Nona terebatur miserae via: ‘viderit!’ inquit, Et spectat zonam pallida facta suam,
Aspicit et ramos; dubitat, refugitque quod audet
Et timet, et digitos ad sua colla refert.
Sithoni, tum certe vellem non sola fuisses: 605
Non flesset positus Phyllida silva comis.

Phyllidis exemplo nimium secreta timete,
Laese vir a domina, laesa puella viro.
Praestiterat iuvenis quidquid mea Musa iubebat, Inque suae portu paene salutis erat: 610
Reccidit, ut cupidos inter devenit amantes, Et, quae condiderat, tela resumpsit Amor.
Siquis amas, nec vis, facito contagia vites;
Haec etiam pecori saepe nocere solent.
Dum spectant laesos oculi, laeduntur et ipsi, 615
Multaque corporibus transitione nocent.
In loca nonnumquam siccis arentia glebis
De prope currenti flumine manat aqua:
Manat amor tectus, si non ab amante recedas;
Turbaque in hoc omnes ingeniosa sumus. 620
Alter item iam sanus erat; vicinia laesit:
Occursum dominae non tulit ille suae.
Vulnus in antiquum rediit male firma cicatrix, Successumque artes non habuere meae.
Proximus a tectis ignis defenditur aegre; 625
Utile finitimis abstinuisse locis.
Nec quae ferre solet spatiantem porticus illam,
Te ferat, officium neve colatur idem.
Quid iuvat admonitu tepidam recalescere mentem?
Alter, si possis, orbis habendus erit. 630
Non facile esuriens posita retinebere mensa, Et multam saliens incitat unda sitim.
Non facile est taurum visa retinere iuvenca,
Fortis equus visae semper adhinnit equae.
Haec ubi praestiteris, ut tandem litora tangas, 635
Non ipsam satis est deseruisse tibi.
Et soror et mater valeant et conscia nutrix,
Et quisquis dominae pars erit ulla tuae.
Nec veniat servus, nec flens ancillula fictum Suppliciter dominae nomine dicat 'ave!' 640
Nec si scire voles, quid agat, tamen, illa, rogabis;
Perfer! erit lucro lingua retenta tuo.

Tu quoque, qui causam finiti reddis amoris, Deque tua domina multa querenda refers,
Parce queri; melius sic ulciscere tacendo, 645
Ut desiderii effluat illa tuis.
Et malim taceas quam te desisse loquaris:
Qui nimium multis 'non amo' dicit, amat.
Sed meliore fide paulatim extinguitur ignis
Quam subito; lente desine, tutus eris. 650
Flumine perpetuo torrens solet altior ire:
Sed tamen haec brevis est, illa perennis aqua.
Fallat, et in tenues evanidus exeat auras,
Perque gradus molles emoriatur amor.
Sed modo dilectam scelus est odisse puellam: 655
Exitus ingeniis convenit iste feris.
Non curare sat est: odio qui finit amorem,
Aut amat, aut aegre desinet esse miser.
Turpe vir et mulier, iuncti modo, protinus hostes;
Non illas lites Appias ipsa probat. 660
Saepe reas faciunt, et amant; ubi nulla similtas Incidit, admonitu liber aberrat amor.
Forte aderam iuveni; dominam lectica tenebat:
Horrebant saevis omnia verba minis.
Iamque vadaturus 'lectica prodeat' inquit; 665
Prodierat: visa coniuge mutus erat.
Et manus et manibus duplices cecidere tabellae,
Venit in amplexus, atque 'ita vincis' ait.
Tutius est aptumque magis discedere pace,
Nec petere a thalamis litigiosa fora. 670
Munera quae dederas, habeat sine lite, iubeto:
Esse solent magno damna minora bono.
Quod si vos aliquis casus conducet in unum,
Mente memor tota quae damus arma, tene.
Nunc opus est armis; hic, o fortissime, pugna: 675
Vincenda est telo Penthesilea tuo.
Nunc tibi rivalis, nunc durum limen amanti,
Nunc subeant mediis inrita verba deis.

Nec compone comas, quia sis venturus ad illam,
Nec toga sit laxo conspicienda sinu. 680
Nulla sit, ut placeas alienae cura puellae;
Iam facito e multis una sit illa tibi.
Sed quid praecipue nostris conatibus obstet Eloquar, exemplo quemque docente suo.
Desinimus tarde, quia nos speramus amari: 685
Dum sibi quisque placet, credula turba sumus.
At tu nec voces (quid enim fallacius illis?)
Crede, nec aeternos pondus habere deos.
Neve puellarum lacrimis moveare, caveto:
Ut flerent, oculos erudiere suos. 690
Artibus innumeris mens oppugnatur amantum, Ut lapis aequoreis undique pulsus aquis.
Nec causas aperi, quare divortia malis:
Nec dic, quid doleas: clam tamen usque dole.
Nec peccata refer, ne diluat: ipse favebis, 695
Ut melior causa causa sit illa tua.
Qui silet, est firmus; qui dicit multa puellae Probra, satisfieri postulat ille sibi.
Non ego Dulichio furari more sagittas,
Nec raptas ausim tinguere in amne faces: 700
Nec nos purpureas pueri resecabimus alas, Nec sacer arte mea laxior arcus erit.
Consilium est, quodcumque cano: parete canenti, Tuque, favens coeptis, Phoebe saluber, ades.
Phoebus adest: sonuere lyrae, sonuere pharetrae; 705
Signa deum nosco per sua: Phoebus adest.
Confer Amyclaeis medicatum vellus aenis
Murice cum Tyrio; turpius illud erit:
Vos quoque formosis vestras conferte puellas;
Incipiet dominae quemque pudere suae: 710
Utraque formosae Paridi potuere videri, Sed sibi conlatam vicit utramque Venus.
Nec solam faciem, mores quoque confer et artes:
Tantum iudicio ne tuus obsit amor.

Exiguum est, quod deinde canam; sed profuit illud 715
Exiguum multis: in quibus ipse fui.
Scripta cave relegas blandae servata puellae:
Constantes animos scripta relecta movent.
Omnia pone feros (pones invitus) in ignes,
Et dic 'ardoris sit rogos iste mei.' 720
Thestias absentem succendit stipite natum:
Tu timide flammae perfida verba dabis?
Si potes, et ceras remove: quid imagine muta Carperis? hoc periit Laodamia modo.
Et loca saepe nocent; fugito loca conscia vestri 725
Concubitus; causas illa doloris habent.
'Hic fuit, hic cubuit; thalamo dormivimus illo:
Hic mihi lasciva gaudia nocte dedit.'
Admonitu refricatur amor, vulnusque novatum Scinditur: infirmis culpa pusilla nocet. 730
Ut, paene extinctum cinerem si sulphure tangas, Vivet et e minimo maximus ignis erit,
Sic, nisi vitaris quidquid renovabit amorem,
Flamma redardescet, quae modo nulla fuit.
Argolides cuperent fugisse Capherea puppes, 735
Teque, senex, luctus ignibus ulte tuos.
Praeterita cautus Niseide navita gaudet:
Tu loca, quae nimium grata fuere, cave.
Haec tibi sint Syrtes: haec Acroceraunia vita:
Hic vomit epotas dira Charybdis aquas. 740
Sunt quae non possunt aliquo cogente iuberi, Saepe tamen casu facta iuvare solent.
Perdat opes Phaedra, parces, Neptune, nepoti,
Nec faciet pavidos taurus avitus equos.
Cnosida fecisses inopem, sapienter amasset: 745
Divitiis alitur luxuriosus amor.
Cur nemo est, Hecalen, nulla est, quae ceperit Iron?
Nempe quod alter egens, altera pauper erat.
Non habet, unde suum paupertas pascat amorem:
Non tamen hoc tanti est, pauper ut esse velis. 750

At tanti tibi sit non indulgere theatris, Dum bene de vacuo pectore cedat amor.
Enervant animos citharae lotosque lyraeque
Et vox et numeris brachia mota suis.
Illic adsidue ficti saltantur amantes: 755
Quod caveas, actor, quam iuвет, arte docet.
Eloquar invitus: teneros ne tange poetas!
Summoveo dotes impius ipse meas.
Callimachum fugito: non est inimicus Amori:
Et cum Callimacho tu quoque, Coe, noces. 760
Me certe Sappho meliorem fecit amicae, Nec rigidos mores Teia Musa dedit.
Carmina quis potuit tuto legisse Tibulli, Vel tua, cuius opus Cynthia sola fuit?
Quis poterit lecto durus discedere Gallo? 765 Et mea nescio quid carmina tale sonant.
Quod nisi dux operis vatem frustratur Apollo, Aemulus est nostri maxima causa mali:
At tu rivalem noli tibi fingere quemquam,
Inque suo solam crede iacere toro. 770
Acrius Hermionen ideo dilexit Orestes, Esse quod alterius coeperat illa viri.
Quid, Menelae, doles? ibas sine coniuge Creten, Et poteris nupta lentus abesse tua.
Ut Paris hanc rapuit, nunc demum uxore carere 775
Non potes: alterius crevit amore tuus.
Hoc et in abducta Briseide flebat Achilles, Illam Plisthenio gaudia ferre viro;
Nec frustra flebat, mihi credite: fecit Atrides,
Quod si non faceret, turpiter esset iners. 780
Certe ego fecissem, nec sum sapientior illo:
Invidiae fructus maximus ille fuit.
Nam sibi quod numquam tactam Briseida iurat
Per sceptrum, sceptrum non putat esse deos.
Di faciant, possis dominae transire relictae 785
Limina, proposito sufficientque pedes.

Et poteris; modo velle tene: nunc fortiter ire,
Nunc opus est celeri subdere calcar equo.
Illo Lotophagos, illo Sirenas in antro
Esse puta; remis adice vela tuis. 790
Hunc quoque, quo quondam nimium rivale dolebas, Vellem desineres hostis habere loco.
At certe, quamvis odio remanente, saluta;
Oscula cum poteris iam dare, sanus eris.
Ecce, cibos etiam, medicinae fungar ut omni 795
Munere, quos fugias quosque sequare, dabo.
Daunius, an Libycis bulbus tibi missus ab oris,
An veniat Megaris, noxius omnis erit.
Nec minus erucas aptum vitare salaces,
Et quicquid Veneri corpora nostra parat. 800
Utilius sumas acuentes lumina rutas, Et quidquid Veneri corpora nostra negat.
Quid tibi praecipiam de Bacchi munere, quaeris?
Spe brevius monitis expediere meis.
Vina parant animum Veneri, nisi plurima sumas 805 Et stupeant multo corda sepulta mero.
Nutritur vento, vento restinguitur ignis:
Lenis alit flammam, grandior aura necat.
Aut nulla ebrietas, aut tanta sit, ut tibi curas Eripiat; siqua est inter utrumque, nocet. 810
Hoc opus exegi: fessae date sarta carinae;
Contigimus portus, quo mihi cursus erat.
Postmodo reddetis sacro pia vota poetae,
Carmine sanati femina virque meo.

LIBER PRIMVS

In nova fert animus mutatas dicere formas corpora; di, coeptis (nam vos mutastis et illas) adspirate meis primaque ab origine mundi ad mea perpetuum deducite tempora carmen!

Ante mare et terras et quod tegit omnia caelum 5 unus erat toto naturae vultus in orbe, quem dixere chaos: rudis indigestaque moles nec quicquam nisi pondus iners congestaque eodem non bene iunctarum discordia semina rerum.
nullus adhuc mundo praebebat lumina Titan, 10 nec nova crescendo reparabat cornua Phoebæ, nec circumfuso pendebat in aere tellus ponderibus librata suis, nec bracchia longo margine terrarum porrexerat Amphitrite; utque erat et tellus illic et pontus et aer, 15
sic erat instabilis tellus, innabilis unda, lucis egens aer; nulli sua forma manebat, obstabatque aliis aliud, quia corpore in uno frigida pugnabant calidis, umentia siccis, mollia cum duris, sine pondere, habentia pondus. 20

Hanc deus et melior litem natura diremit.
nam caelo terras et terris abscidit undas et liquidum spisso secrevit ab aere caelum.
quae postquam evolvit caecoque exemit acervo, dissociata locis concordia pace ligavit: 25 igneae convexi vis et sine pondere caeli emicuit summaque locum sibi fecit in arce;
proximus est aer illi levitate locoque;
densior his tellus elementaque grandia traxit et pressa est gravitate sua; circumfluit umor 30 ultima possedit solidumque coercuit orbem.

Sic ubi dispositam quisquis fuit ille deorum congeriem secuit sectamque in membra coegit, principio terram, ne non aequalis ab omni parte foret, magni speciem glomeravit in orbis. 35 tum freta diffundi rapidisque tumescere ventis iussit et ambitae circumdare litora terrae; addidit et fontes et stagna inmensa lacusque fluminaque obliquis cinxit declivia ripis, quae, diversa locis, partim sorbentur ab ipsa, 40 in mare perveniunt partim campoque recepta liberioris aquae pro ripis litora pulsant.
iussit et extendi campos, subsidere valles, fronde tegi silvas, lapidosos surgere montes, utque duae dextra caelum totidemque sinistra 45 parte secant zonae, quinta est ardentior illis, sic onus inclusum numero distinxit eodem cura dei, totidemque plagae tellure premuntur.
quarum quae media est, non est habitabilis aestu;
nix tegit alta duas; totidem inter utramque locavit 50 temperiemque dedit mixta cum frigore flamma.

Inminet his aer, qui, quanto est pondere terrae pondus aquae levius, tanto est onerosior igni.
illic et nebulas, illic consistere nubes iussit et humanas motura tonitrua mentes 55 et cum fulminibus facientes fulgura ventos.

His quoque non passim mundi fabricator habendum aera permisit; vix nunc obsistitur illis, cum sua quisque regat diverso flamina tractu, quin lanient mundum; tanta est discordia fratrum. 60 Eurus ad Auroram Nabataeaeque regna recessit Persidaeque et radiis iuga subdita matutinis; vesper et occiduo quae litora sole tepescunt, proxima sunt Zephyro; Scythiam septemque triones horrifer invasit Boreas; contraria tellus 65 nubibus adsiduis pluviaque madescit ab Austro.
haec super inposuit liquidum et gravitate carentem aethera nec quicquam terrenae faecis habentem.

Vix ita limitibus dissaepserat omnia certis, cum, quae pressa diu fuerant caligine caeca, 70
sidera coeperunt toto effervescente caelo;
neu regio foret ulla suis animalibus orba, astra tenent caeleste solum formaeque deorum, cesserunt nitidis habitandae piscibus undae, terra feras cepit, volucres agitabilis aer. 75

Sanctius his animal mentisque capacius altae deerat adhuc et quod dominari in cetera posset:
natus homo est, sive hunc divino semine fecit ille opifex rerum, mundi melioris origo, sive recens tellus seductaque nuper ab alto 80
aethere cognati retinebat semina caeli.
quam satus lapeto, mixtam pluvialibus undis, finxit in effigiem moderantum cuncta deorum, pronaque cum spectent animalia cetera terram, os homini sublime dedit caelumque videre 85
iussit et erectos ad sidera tollere vultus:
sic, modo quae fuerat rudis et sine imagine, tellus induit ignotas hominum conversa figuras.

Aurea prima sata est aetas, quae vindice nullo, sponte sua, sine lege fidem rectumque colebat. 90 poena metusque aberant, nec verba minantia fixo aere legebantur, nec supplex turba timebat iudicis ora sui, sed erant sine vindice tuti.
nondum caesa suis, peregrinum ut viseret orbem, montibus in liquidas pinus descenderat undas, 95 nullaque mortales praeter sua litora norant;
nondum praecipites cingebant oppida fossae;
non tuba directi, non aeris cornua flexi, non galeae, non ensis erat: sine militis usu mollia securae peragebant otia gentes. 100 ipsa quoque inmundis rastisque intacta nec ullis saucia vomeribus per se dabat omnia tellus, contentique cibus nullo cogente creatis arbuteos fetus montanaque fraga legebant cornaque et in duris haerentia mora rubetis 105 et quae deciderant patula Iovis arbore glandes.

ver erat aeternum, placidique tepentibus auris mulcebant zephyri natos sine semine flores;
mox etiam fruges tellus inarata ferebat, nec renovatus ager gravidis canebat aristis; 110 flumina iam lactis, iam flumina nectaris ibant, flavaque de viridi stillabant ilice mella.

Postquam Saturno tenebrosa in Tartara misso sub Iove mundus erat, subiit argentea proles, auro deterior, fulvo pretiosior aere. 115 Iuppiter antiqui contraxit tempora veris perque hiemes aestusque et inaequalis autumnos et breve ver spatium exegit quattuor annum.
tum primum siccis aer fervoribus ustus canduit, et ventis glacies adstricta pependit; 120 tum primum subiere domos; domus antra fuerunt et densi frutices et vinctae cortice virgae.
semina tum primum longis Cerealia sulcis obruta sunt, pressique iugo gemuere iuveni.

Tertia post illam successit aenea proles, 125 saevior ingenio et ad horrida promptior arma, non scelerata tamen; de duro est ultima ferro.
protinus inrupit venae peioris in aevum omne nefas: fugere pudor verumque fidesque;
in quorum subiere locum fraudesque dolusque 130 insidiaeque et vis et amor sceleratus habendi.
vela dabant ventis nec adhuc bene noverat illos navita, quaeque prius steterant in montibus altis, fluctibus ignotis insultavere carinae, communemque prius ceu lumina solis et auras 135 cautus humum longo signavit limite mensor.
nec tantum segetes alimenta que debita dives poscebatur humus, sed itum est in viscera terrae, quasque recondiderat Stygiisque admoverat umbris, effodiuntur opes, inritamenta malorum. 140 iamque nocens ferrum ferroque nocentius aurum prodierat, prodit bellum, quod pugnat utroque, sanguineaque manu crepitantia concutit arma.

vivitur ex rapto: non hospes ab hospite tutus, non socer a genero, fratrum quoque gratia rara est; 145 inminet exitio vir coniugis, illa mariti, lurida terribiles miscent aconita novercae, filius ante diem patrios inquirit in annos:
victa iacet pietas, et virgo caede madentis ultima caelestum terras Astraera reliquit. 150

Neve foret terris securior arduus aether, adfectasse ferunt regnum caeleste gigantas altaque congestos struxisse ad sidera montis.
tum pater omnipotens misso perfregit Olympum fulmine et excussit subiecto Pelion Ossae. 155 obruta mole sua cum corpora dira iacerent, perfusam multo natorum sanguine Terram immaduisse ferunt calidumque animasse cruorem et, ne nulla suae stirpis monumenta manerent, in faciem vertisse hominum; sed et illa propago 160 contemptrix superum saevaeque avidissima caedis et violenta fuit: scires e sanguine natos.

Quae pater ut summa vidit Saturnius arce, ingemit et facto nondum vulgata recenti foeda Lycaoniae referens convivia mensae 165 ingentes animo et dignas Iove concipit iras conciliumque vocat: tenuit mora nulla vocatos.

Est via sublimis, caelo manifesta sereno; lactea nomen habet, candore notabilis ipso.
hac iter est superis ad magni tecta Tonantis 170 regalemque domum: dextra laevaue deorum atria nobilium valvis celebrantur apertis.
plebs habitat diversa locis: hac parte potentes caelicolae clarique suos posuere penates; hic locus est, quem, si verbis audacia detur, 175

haud timeam magni dixisse Palatia caeli.

Ergo ubi marmoreo superi sedere recessu, celsior ipse loco sceptroque innixus eburno terrificam capitis concussit terque quaterque caesariem, cum qua terram, mare, sidera movit. 180 talibus inde modis ora indignantia solvit:
'non ego pro mundi regno magis anxius illa tempestate fui, qua centum quisque parabat inicere anguipedum captivo bracchia caelo.
nam quamquam ferus hostis erat, tamen illud ab uno 185 corpore et ex una pendeat origine bellum;
nunc mihi qua totum Nereus circumsonat orbem, perdendum est mortale genus: per flumina iuro infera sub terras Stygio labentia luco!
cuncta prius temptanda, sed inmedicabile curae 190 ense recidendum, ne pars sincera trahatur.
sunt mihi semidei, sunt, rustica numina, nymphae faunisque satyrique et monticolae silvani;
quos quoniam caeli nondum dignamur honore, quas dedimus, certe terras habitare sinamus. 195
an satis, o superi, tutos fore creditis illos, cum mihi, qui fulmen, qui vos habeoque regoque, struxerit insidias notus feritate Lycaon?'

Confremuere omnes studiisque ardentibus ausum taliam deprecant: sic, cum manus impia saevit 200 sanguine Caesareo Romanum extinguere nomen, attonitum tantae subito terrore ruinae humanum genus est totusque perhorruit orbis;
nec tibi grata minus pietas, Auguste, tuorum quam fuit illa Iovi. qui postquam voce manumque 205 murmura compressit, tenuere silentia cuncti.
substitit ut clamor pressus gravitate regentis, Iuppiter hoc iterum sermone silentia rupit:
'ille quidem poenas (curam hanc dimittite!) solvit;
quod tamen admissum, quae sit vindicta, docebo. 210 contigerat nostras infamia temporis aures;

quam cupiens falsam summo delabor Olympo et deus humana lustris sub imagine terras.
longa mora est, quantum noxae sit ubique repertum, enumerare: minor fuit ipsa infamia vero. 215 Maenala transieram latebris horrenda ferarum et cum Cyllene gelidi pineta Lycaeii: Arcadis hinc sedes et inhospita tecta tyranni ingredior, traherent cum sera crepuscula noctem.
signa dedi venisse deum, vulgusque precari 220 coeperat: inridet primo pia vota Lycaon, mox ait "experiar deus hic discrimine aperto an sit mortalis: nec erit dubitabile verum." nocte gravem somno necopinata perdere morte comparat: haec illi placet experientia veri; 225 nec contentus eo, missi de gente Molossa obsidis unius iugulum mucrone resolvit atque ita semineces partim ferventibus artus mollit aquis, partim subiecto torruit igni.
quod simul inposuit mensis, ego vindice flamma 230
in domino dignos everti tecta penates; territus ipse fugit nactusque silentia ruris exululat frustra loqui conatur: ab ipso colligit os rabiem solitaeque cupidine caedis vertitur in pecudes et nunc quoque sanguine gaudet. 235 in villos abeunt vestes, in crura lacerti:
fit lupus et veteris servat vestigia formae; canities eadem est, eadem violentia vultus,
idem oculi lucent, eadem feritatis imago est.
occidit una domus, sed non domus una perire 240
digna fuit: qua terra patet, fera regnat Erinys.
in facinus iurasse putes! dent ocios omnes, quas meruere pati, (sic stat sententia) poenas.'
Dicta lovis pars voce probant stimulosque frementi adiciunt, alii partes adsensibus implent. 245 est tamen humani generis iactura dolori omnibus, et quae sit terrae mortalibus orbae forma futura rogant, quis sit laturus in aras tura, ferisne paret populandas tradere terras.

taliam quaerentes (sibi enim fore cetera curae) 250 rex superum trepidare vetat subolemque priori dissimilem populo promittit origine mira.

Iamque erat in totas sparsurus fulmina terras;
sed timuit, ne forte sacer tot ab ignibus aether conciperet flammam longusque ardesceret axis: 255 esse quoque in fati reminiscitur, adfore tempus, quo mare, quo tellus correptaque regia caeli ardeat et mundi moles obsessa laboret.

tela reponuntur manibus fabricata cycloporum;
poena placet diversa, genus mortale sub undis 260 perdere et ex omni nimbos demittere caelo.

Protinus Aeoliis Aquilonem claudit in antris et quaecumque fugant inductas flamina nubes emittitque Notum. madidis Notus evolat alis, terribilem picea tectus caligine vultum; 265 barba gravis nimbis, canis fluit unda capillis;
fronte sedent nebulae, rorant pennaeque sinusque.
utque manu lata pendentia nubila pressit, fit fragor: hinc densi funduntur ab aethere nimbi;
nuntia lunonis varios induta colores 270
concipit Iris aquas alimenta que nubibus adfert.
sternuntur segetes et deplorata coloni vota iacent, longique perit labor inritus anni.

Nec caelo contenta suo est Iovis ira, sed illum caeruleus frater iuvat auxiliaribus undis. 275 convocat hic amnes: qui postquam tecta tyranni intravere sui, 'non est hortamine longo nunc' ait 'utendum; vires effundite vestras:
sic opus est! aperite domos ac mole remota fluminibus vestris totas inmittite habenas!' 280 iusserat; hi redeunt ac fontibus ora relaxant et defrenato volvuntur in aequora cursu.

Ipsa tridente suo terram percussit, at illa intremuit motuque vias patefecit aquarum.

exspatiata ruunt per apertos flumina campos 285
cumque satis arbusta simul pecudesque virosque tectaque cumque suis rapiunt penetralia sacris.
si qua domus mansit potuitque resistere tanto indeiecta malo, culmen tamen altior huius unda tegit, pressaeque latent sub gurgite turre. 290 iamque mare et tellus nullum discrimen habebant:
omnia pontus erant, derant quoque litora ponto.

Occupat hic collem, cumba sedet alter adunca et ducit remos illic, ubi nuper arabat:
ille supra segetes aut mersae culmina villae 295 navigat, hic summa piscem deprendit in ulmo.
figitur in viridi, si fors tulit, ancora prato, aut subiecta terunt curvae vineta carinae;
et, modo qua graciles gramen carpsere capellae, nunc ibi deformes ponunt sua corpora phocae. 300 mirantur sub aqua lucos urbesque domosque Nereides, silvasque tenent delphines et altis incursant ramis agitataque robora pulsan.
nat lupus inter oves, fulvos vehit unda leones, unda vehit tigres; nec vires fulminis apro, 305
crura nec ablato prosunt velocia cervo, quaesitisque diu terris, ubi sistere possit,
in mare lassatis volucris vaga decidit alis.
obruerat tumulos inmensa licentia ponti, pulsabantque novi montana cacumina fluctus. 310 maxima pars unda rapitur; quibus unda pepercit, illos longa domant inopi ieiunia victu.

Separat Aonios Oetaeis Phocis ab arvis, terra ferax, dum terra fuit, sed tempore in illo pars maris et latus subitarum campus aquarum. 315 mons ibi verticibus petit arduus astra duobus, nomine Parnasos, superantque cacumina nubes.
hic ubi Deucalion (nam cetera texerat aequor) cum consorte tori parva rate vectus adhaesit,

Corycidas nymphas et numina montis adorant 320 fatidicamque Themis, quae tunc oracla tenebat:
non illo melior quisquam nec amantior aequi vir fuit aut illa metuentior ulla deorum.
Iuppiter ut liquidis stagnare paludibus orbem et superesse virum de tot modo milibus unum, 325 et superesse vidit de tot modo milibus unam, innocuos ambo, cultores numinis ambo, nubila disiecit nimbisque aquilone remotis et caelo terras ostendit et aethera terris.
nec maris ira manet, positoque tricuspide telo 330 mulcet aquas rector pelagi supraque profundum exstantem atque umeros innato murice tectum caeruleum Tritona vocat conchaeque sonanti inspirare iubet fluctusque et flumina signo iam revocare dato: cava bucina sumitur illi, 335 tortilis in latum quae turbine crescit ab imo, bucina, quae medio concepit ubi aera ponto, litora voce replet sub utroque iacentia Phoebos;
tum quoque, ut ora dei madida rorantia barba contigit et cecinit iussos inflata receptus, 340 omnibus audita est telluris et aequoris undis, et quibus est undis audita, coercuit omnes.
iam mare litus habet, plenos capit alveus amnes, flumina subsidunt collesque exire videntur;
surgit humus, crescunt sola decrescentibus undis, 345 postque diem longam nudata cacumina silvae ostendunt limumque tenent in fronde relictum Redditus orbis erat; quem postquam vidit inanem et desolatas agere alta silentia terras, Deucalion lacrimis ita Pyrrham adfatur obortis: 350 ‘o soror, o coniunx, o femina sola superstes, quam commune mihi genus et patruelis origo, deinde torus iunxit, nunc ipsa pericula iungunt, errarum, quascumque vident occasus et ortus, nos duo turba sumus; possedit cetera pontus. 355

haec quoque adhuc vitae non est fiducia nostrae certa satis; terrent etiamnum nubila mentem.
quis tibi, si sine me fatis erepta fuisses, nunc animus, miseranda, foret? quo sola timorem ferre modo posses? quo consolante doleres! 360 namque ego (crede mihi), si te quoque pontus haberet, te sequerer, coniunx, et me quoque pontus haberet.
o utinam possim populos reparare paternis artibus atque animas formatae infundere terrae!
nunc genus in nobis restat mortale duobus. 365 sic visum superis: hominumque exempla manemus.'
dixerat, et flebant: placuit caeleste precari numen et auxilium per sacras quaerere sortes.
nulla mora est: adeunt pariter Cephesidas undas, ut nondum liquidas, sic iam vada nota secantes. 370 inde ubi libatos inroravere liquores vestibus et capiti, flectunt vestigia sanctae ad delubra deae, quorum fastigia turpi pallebant musco stabantque sine ignibus arae.
ut templi tetigere gradus, procumbit uterque 375 pronus humi gelidoque pavens dedit oscula saxo atque ita 'si precibus' dixerunt 'numina iustis victa remollescunt, si flectitur ira deorum, dic, Themis, qua generis damnum reparabile nostri arte sit, et mersis fer opem, mitissima, rebus!' 380 Mota dea est sortemque dedit: 'discedite templo et velate caput cinctasque resolvite vestes ossaque post tergum magnae iactate parentis!'
obstupere diu: rumpitque silentia voce Pyrrha prior iussisque deae parere recusat, 385 detque sibi veniam pavido rogat ore pavetque laedere iactatis maternas ossibus umbras.
interea repetunt caecis obscura latebris verba datae sortis secum inter seque volutant.
inde Promethides placidis Epimethida dictis 390 mulcet et 'aut fallax' ait 'est sollertia nobis, aut (pia sunt nullumque nefas oracula suadent!)

magna parens terra est: lapides in corpore terrae ossa reor dici; iacere hos post terga iubemur.'

Coniugis augurio quamquam Titania mota est, 395 spes tamen in dubio est: adeo caelestibus ambo diffidunt monitis; sed quid temptare nocebit?
descendunt: velantque caput tunicasque recingunt et iussos lapides sua post vestigia mittunt.
saxa (quis hoc credat, nisi sit pro teste vetustas?) 400 ponere duritiem coepere suumque rigorem mollirique mora mollitaque ducere formam.
mox ubi creverunt naturaque mitior illis contigit, ut quaedam, sic non manifesta videri forma potest hominis, sed uti de marmore coepta 405 non exacta satis rudibusque simillima signis, quae tamen ex illis aliquo pars umida suco et terrena fuit, versa est in corporis usum; quod solidum est flectique nequit, mutatur in ossa, quae modo vena fuit, sub eodem nomine mansit, 410 inque brevi spatio superiorum numine saxa missa viri manibus faciem traxere virorum et de femineo reparata est femina iactu.
inde genus durum sumus experiensque laborum et documenta damus qua simus origine nati. 415

Cetera diversis tellus animalia formis sponte sua peperit, postquam vetus umor ab igne percaluit solis, caenumque udaeque paludes intumuere aestu, fecundaque semina rerum vivaci nutrita solo ceu matris in alvo 420 creverunt faciemque aliquam cepere morando.
sic ubi deseruit madidos septemfluus agros Nilus et antiquo sua flumina reddidit alveo aetherioque recens exarsit sidere limus, plurima cultores versis animalia glaebis 425 inveniunt et in his quaedam modo coepta per ipsum nascendi spatium, quaedam imperfecta suisque trunca vident numeris, et eodem in corpore saepe altera pars vivit, rudis est pars altera tellus.

quippe ubi temperiem sumpsero umorque calorque, 430 conciunt, et ab his oriuntur cuncta duobus, cumque sit ignis aquae pugna, vapor umidus omnes res creat, et discors concordia fetibus apta est.
ergo ubi diluvio tellus lutulenta recenti solibus aetheriis altoque recanduit aestu, 435 edidit innumeras species; partimque figuras rettulit antiquas, partim nova monstra creavit.

Illa quidem nollet, sed te quoque, maxime Python, tum genuit, populisque novis, incognita serpens, terror eras: tantum spatii de monte tenebas. 440 hunc deus arcitenens, numquam letalibus armis ante nisi in damnis capreisque fugacibus usus, mille gravem telis exhausta paene pharetra perdidit effuso per vulnera nigra veneno.
neve operis famam posset delere vetustas, 445 instituit sacros celebri certamine ludos, Pythia de domitae serpentis nomine dictos.
hic iuvenum quicumque manu pedibusve rotave vicerat, aesculeae capiebat frondis honorem.
nondum laurus erat, longoque decentia crine 450
tempora cingebat de qualibet arbore Phoebus.

Primus amor Phoebi Daphne Peneia, quem non fors ignara dedit, sed saeva Cupidinis ira, Delius hunc nuper, victa serpente superbus, viderat adducto flectentem cornua nervo 455
'quid' que 'tibi, lascive puer, cum fortibus armis?'
dixerat: 'ista decent umeros gestamina nostros, qui dare certa ferae, dare vulnera possumus hosti, qui modo pestifero tot iugera ventre prementem stravimus innumeris tumidum Pythona sagittis. 460 tu face nescio quos esto contentus amores inritare tua, nec laudes adsere nostras!' filius huic Veneris 'figat tuus omnia, Phoebe, te meus arcus' ait; 'quantoque animalia cedunt cuncta deo, tanto minor est tua gloria nostra.' 465 dixit et eliso percussis aere pennis inpiger umbrosa Parnasi constitit arce eque sagittifera prompsit duo tela pharetra diversorum operum: fugat hoc, facit illud amorem; quod facit, auratum est et cuspide fulget acuta, 470 quod fugat, obtusum est et habet sub harundine plumbum.

hoc deus in nympa Peneide fixit, at illo laesit Apollineas traiecta per ossa medullas; protinus alter amat, fugit altera nomen amantis silvarum latebris captivarumque ferarum 475 exuviis gaudens innuptaeque aemula Phoebes:
vitta coercebat positos sine lege capillos.
multi illam petiere, illa aversata petentes inpatiens expersque viri nemora avia lustrat nec, quid Hymen, quid Amor, quid sint conubia curat. 480 saepe pater dixit: 'generum mihi, filia, debes,' saepe pater dixit: 'debes mihi, nata, nepotes'; illa velut crimen taedas exosa iugales pulchra verecundo suffuderat ora rubore inque patris blandis haerens cervice lacertis 485
'da mihi perpetua, genitor carissime,' dixit
'virginitate frui! dedit hoc pater ante Dianae.'
ille quidem obsequitur, sed te decor iste quod optas esse vetat, votoque tuo tua forma repugnat: Phoebus amat visaeque cupit conubia Daphnes, 490 quodque cupit, sperat, suaque illum oracula fallunt, utque leves stipulae demptis adolentur aristis, ut facibus saepes ardent, quas forte viator vel nimis admovit vel iam sub luce reliquit, sic deus in flammis abiit, sic pectore toto 495
uritur et sterilem sperando nutrit amorem.
spectat inornatos collo pendere capillos et 'quid, si comantur?' ait. videt igne micantes sideribus similes oculos, videt oscula, quae non est vidisse satis; laudat digitosque manusque 500 bracchiaque et nudos media plus parte lacertos;

si qua latent, meliora putat. fugit ocior aura illa levi neque ad haec revocantis verba resistit:
'nympha, precor, Penei, mane! non insequor hostis;
nympha, mane! sic agna lupum, sic cerva leonem, 505 sic aquilam penna fugiunt trepidante columbae, hostes quaeque suos: amor est mihi causa sequendi!
me miserum! ne prona cadas indignave laedi crura notent sentes et sim tibi causa doloris!
aspera, qua properas, loca sunt: moderatius, oro, 510
curre fugamque inhihe, moderatius insequar ipse.
cui placeas, inquire tamen: non incola montis, non ego sum pastor, non hic armenta gregesque horridus observo. nescis, temeraria, nescis, quem fugias, ideoque fugis: mihi Delphica tellus 515 et Claros et Tenedos Patareaque regia servit; Iuppiter est genitor; per me, quod eritque fuitque estque, patet; per me concordant carmina nervis.
certa quidem nostra est, nostra tamen una sagitta certior, in vacuo quae vulnera pectore fecit! 520 inventum medicina meum est, opiferque per orbem dicor, et herbarum subiecta potentia nobis.
ei mihi, quod nullis amor est sanabilis herbis nec prosunt domino, quae prosunt omnibus, artes!' Plura locuturum timido Peneia cursu 525 fugit cumque ipso verba imperfecta reliquit, tum quoque visa decens; nudabant corpora venti, obviaque adversas vibrabant flamina vestes, et levis impulsos retro dabat aura capillos, auctaque forma fuga est. sed enim non sustinet ultra 530 perdere blanditias iuvenis deus, utque monebat ipse Amor, admisso sequitur vestigia passu.
ut canis in vacuo leporem cum Gallicus arvo vidit, et hic praedam pedibus petit, ille salutem; alter inhaesuro similis iam iamque tenere 535

sperat et extento stringit vestigia rostro, alter in ambiguo est, an sit comprehensus, et ipsis morsibus eripitur tangentiisque ora relinquit:
sic deus et virgo est hic spe celer, illa timore.
qui tamen insequitur pennis adiutus Amoris, 540 ocior est requiemque negat tergoque fugacis inminet et crinem sparsum cervicibus adflat.
viribus absumptis expalluit illa citaeque victa labore fugae spectans Peneidas undas 'fer, pater,' inquit 'opem! si flumina numen habetis, 545 qua nimium placui, mutando perde figuram!' [quae facit ut laedar mutando perde figuram.] vix prece finita torpor gravis occupat artus, mollia cinguntur tenui praecordia libro, in frondem crines, in ramos bracchia crescunt, 550
pes modo tam velox pigris radicibus haeret, ora cacumen habet: remanet nitor unus in illa.

Hanc quoque Phoebus amat positaque in stipite dextra sentit adhuc trepidare novo sub cortice pectus complexusque suis ramos ut membra lacertis 555 oscula dat ligno; refugit tamen oscula lignum.
cui deus 'at, quoniam coniunx mea non potes esse, arbor eris certe' dixit 'mea! semper habebunt te coma, te citharae, te nostrae, laure, pharetrae; tu ducibus Latiis aderis, cum laeta Triumphum 560 vox canet et visent longas Capitolia pompas; postibus Augustis eadem fidissima custos ante fores stabis mediamque tuebere quercum, utque meum intonsis caput est iuvenale capillis, tu quoque perpetuos semper gere frondis honores!' 565 finierat Paeon: factis modo laurea ramis adnuit utque caput visa est agitasse cacumen.

Est nemus Haemoniae, praerupta quod undique claudit silva: vocant Tempe; per quae Peneos ab imo effusus Pindo spumosis volvitur undis 570 deiectuque gravi tenues agitantia fumos nubila conducit summisque adspergine silvis inpluit et sonitu plus quam vicina fatigat:

haec domus, haec sedes, haec sunt penetralia magni amnis, in his residens facto de cautibus antro, 575 undis iura dabat nymphisque colentibus undas.
conveniunt illuc popularia flumina primum, nescia, gratentur consolenturne parentem, populifer Sperchios et inquietus Enipeus Apidanosque senex lenisque Amphrysos et Aeas, 580 moxque amnes alii, qui, qua tulit inpetus illos, in mare deducunt fessas erroribus undas.
Inachus unus abest imoque reconditus antro fletibus auget aquas natamque miserrimus Io luget ut amissam: nescit, vitane fruatur 585 an sit apud manes; sed quam non invenit usquam, esse putat nusquam atque animo peiora veretur.

Viderat a patrio redeuntem Iuppiter illam flumine et 'o virgo love digna tuoque beatum nescio quem factura toro, pete' dixerat 'umbras 590 altorum nemorum' (et nemorum monstraverat umbras)
'dum calet, et medio sol est altissimus orbe!
quodsi sola times latebras intrare ferarum, praeside tuta deo nemorum secreta subibis, nec de plebe deo, sed qui caelestia magna 595 sceptra manu teneo, sed qui vaga fulmina mitto.
ne fuge me!' fugiebat enim. iam pascua Lerna consitaque arboribus Lyrcea reliquerat arva, cum deus inducta latas caligine terras occuluit tenuitque fugam rapuitque pudorem. 600

Interea medios Iuno despexit in Argos et noctis faciem nebulas fecisse volucres sub nitido mirata die, non fluminis illas esse, nec umentis sensit tellure remitti; atque suus coniunx ubi sit circumspicit, ut quae 605
deprenti totiens iam nosset furta mariti.
quem postquam caelo non repperit, 'aut ego fallor aut ego laedor' ait delapsaque ab aethere summo constitit in terris nebulasque recedere iussit.

coniugis adventum praesenserat inque nitentem 610 Inachidos vultus mutaverat ille iuvenecam;
bos quoque formosa est. speciem Saturnia vaccae, quamquam invita, probat nec non, et cuius et unde quove sit armento, veri quasi nescia quaerit.
Iuppiter e terra genitam mentitur, ut auctor 615 desinat inquiri: petit hanc Saturnia munus.
quid faciat? crudele suos addicere amores,
non dare suspectum est: Pudor est, qui suadeat illinc, hinc dissuadet Amor. victus Pudor esset Amore, sed leve si munus sociae generisque torique 620
vacca negaretur, poterat non vacca videri!

Paelice donata non protinus exiit omnem diva metum timuitque Iovem et fuit anxia furti, donec Arestoridae servandam tradidit Argo.
centum luminibus cinctum caput Argus habebat 625 inde suis vicibus capiebant bina quietem, cetera servabant atque in statione manebant.
constiterat quocumque modo, spectabat ad Io, ante oculos Io, quamvis aversus, habebat.
luce sinit pasci; cum sol tellure sub alta est, 630
claudit et indigno circumdat vincula collo.
frondibus arboreis et amara pascitur herba.
proque toro terrae non semper gramen habenti incubabat infelix limosaque flumina potat.
illa etiam supplex Argo cum bracchia vellet 635
tendere, non habuit, quae bracchia tenderet Argo,
conatoque queri mugitus edidit ore
pertimuitque sonos propriaque exterrita voce est.
venit et ad ripas, ubi ludere saepe solebat, Inachidas: rictus novaque ut conspexit in unda 640
cornua, pertimuit seque exsternata refugit.
naides ignorant, ignorat et Inachus ipse, quae sit; at illa patrem sequitur sequiturque sorores et patitur tangi seque admirantibus offert.

decerptas senior porrexerat Inachus herbas: 645 illa manus lambit patriisque dat oscula palmis nec retinet lacrimas et, si modo verba sequantur, oret opem nomenque suum casusque loquatur;
littera pro verbis, quam pes in pulvere duxit, corporis indicium mutati triste peregit. 650
'me miserum!' exclamat pater Inachus inque gementis cornibus et nivea pendens cervice iuvencae
'me miserum!' ingeminat; 'tunc es quaesita per omnes nata mihi terras? tu non inventa reperta luctus eras levior! retices nec mutua nostris 655 dicta refers, alto tantum suspiria ducis pectore, quodque unum potes, ad mea verba remugis!
at tibi ego ignarus thalamos taedasque parabam, spesque fuit generi mihi prima, secunda nepotum.
de grege nunc tibi vir, nunc de grege natus habendus. 660 nec finire licet tantos mihi morte dolores;
sed nocet esse deum, praeclosaque ianua leti aeternum nostros luctus extendit in aevum.'
taliam maerenti stellatus submovet Argus ereptamque patri diversa in pascua natam 665 abstrahit. ipse procul montis sublime cacumen occupat, unde sedens partes speculatur in omnes.

Nec superum rector mala tanta Phoronidos ultra ferre potest natumque vocat, quem lucida partu Pleias enixa est letoque det imperat Argum. 670 parva mora est alas pedibus virgamque potenti somniaferam sumpsisse manu tegumenque capillis.
haec ubi disposuit, patria love natus ab arce desilit in terras; illic tegumenque removit et posuit pennas, tantummodo virga retenta est: 675 hac agit, ut pastor, per devia rura capellas dum venit abductas, et structis cantat avenis.
voce nova captus custos lunonius 'at tu, quisquis es, hoc poteris mecum considerare saxo'

Argus ait; 'neque enim pecori fecundior ullo 680
herba loco est, aptamque vides pastoribus umbram.'

Sedit Atlantiades et euntem multa loquendo detinuit sermone diem iunctisque canendo vincere harundinibus servantia lumina temptat.
ille tamen pugnat molles evincere somnos 685 et, quamvis sopor est oculorum parte receptus, parte tamen vigilat. quaerit quoque (namque reperta fistula nuper erat), qua sit ratione reperta.

Tum deus 'Arcadiae gelidis sub montibus' inquit
'inter hamadryadas celeberrima Nonacrinas 690
naias una fuit: nymphae Syringa vocabant.
non semel et satyros eluserat illa sequentes et quoscumque deos umbrosaue silva feraxque rus habet. Ortygiam studiis ipsaque colebat virginitate deam; ritu quoque cincta Dianae 695 falleret et posset credi Latonia, si non corneus huic arcus, si non foret aureus illi;
sic quoque fallebat.

Redeuntem colle Lycaeo
Pan videt hanc pinuque caput praecinctus acuta talìa verba refert — restabat verba referre 700 et precibus spretis fugisse per avia nympham, donec harenosi placidum Ladonis ad amnem venerit; hic illam cursum inpedientibus undis ut se mutarent liquidas orasse sorores, Panaque cum prensam sibi iam Syringa putaret, 705 corpore pro nymphae calamos tenuisse palustres, dumque ibi suspirat, motos in harundine ventos effecisse sonum tenuem similemque querenti.
arte nova vocisque deum dulcedine captum 'hoc mihi colloquium tecum' dixisse 'manebit,' 710 atque ita disparibus calamis compagine cerae inter se iunctis nomen tenuisse puellae.
talìa dicturus vidit Cyllenius omnes subcubuisse oculos adopertaque lumina somno;

supprimit extemplo vocem firmatque soporem 715
languida permulcens medicata lumina virga.
nec mora, falcato nutantem vulnerat ense, qua collo est confine caput, saxoque cruentum deicit et maculat praeruptam sanguine rupem.
Arge, iaces, quodque in tot lumina lumen habebas, 720 extinctum est, centumque oculos nox occupat una.

Excipit hos volucrisque suae Saturnia pennis collocat et gemmis caudam stellantibus inplet.
protinus exarsit nec tempora distulit irae horriferaeque oculis animoque obiecit Erinyn 725 paelicis Argolicae stimulosque in pectore caecos condidit et profugam per totum exercuit orbem.
ultimus inmenso restabas, Nile, labori;
quem simulac tetigit, positisque in margine ripae procubuit genibus resupinoque ardua collo, 730 quos potuit solos, tollens ad sidera vultus et gemitu et lacrimis et luctisono mugitu cum love visa queri finemque orare malorum.
coniugis ille suae complexus colla lacertis, finiat ut poenas tandem, rogat 'in' que 'futurum 735 pone metus' inquit: 'numquam tibi causa doloris haec erit,' et Stygias iubet hoc audire paludes.

Ut lenita dea est, vultus capit illa priores fitque, quod ante fuit: fugiunt e corpore saetae, cornua decrescunt, fit luminis artior orbis, 740 contrahitur rictus, redeunt umerique manusque, ungulaeque in quinos dilapsa absumitur unguis:
de bove nil superest formae nisi candor in illa.
officioque pedum nympha contenta duorum erigitur metuitque loqui, ne more iuvencae 745 mugiat, et timide verba intermissa retemptat.

Nunc dea linigera colitur celeberrima turba.
huic Epaphus magni genitus de semine tandem creditur esse Iovis perque urbes iuncta parenti templa tenet. fuit huic animis aequalis et annis 750

Sole satus Phaethon, quem quondam magna loquentem nec sibi cedentem Phoeboque parente superbum non tulit Inachides 'matri' que ait 'omnia demens credis et es tumidus genitoris imagine falsi.' erubuit Phaethon iramque pudore repressit 755 et tulit ad Clymenen Epaphi convicia matrem 'quo' que 'magis doleas, genetrix' ait, 'ille ego liber, ille ferox tacui! pudet haec opprobria nobis et dici potuisse et non potuisse refelli.
at tu, si modo sum caelesti stirpe creatus, 760 ede notam tanti generis meque adsere caelo!
dixit et implicuit materno bracchia collo perque suum Meropisque caput taedasque sororum traderet oravit veri sibi signa parentis.
ambiguum Clymene precibus Phaethontis an ira 765 mota magis dicti sibi criminis utraque caelo bracchia porrexit spectansque ad lumina solis
'per iubar hoc' inquit 'radiis insigne coruscis, nate, tibi iuro, quod nos auditque videtque, hoc te, quem spectas, hoc te, qui temperat orbem, 770 Sole satum; si ficta loquor, neget ipse videndum se mihi, sitque oculis lux ista novissima nostris!
nec longus labor est patrios tibi nosse penates.
unde oritur, domus est terrae contermina nostrae:
si modo fert animus, gradere et scitabere ab ipso!' 775 emicat extemplo laetus post talia matris dicta suae Phaethon et concipit aethera mente Aethiopasque suos positosque sub ignibus Indos sidereis transit patriosque adit inpiger ortus.

LIBER SECVNDVS

Regia Solis erat sublimibus alta columnis, clara micante auro flammisque imitante pyropo, cuius ebur nitidum fastigia summa tegebat, argenti bifores radiabant lumine valvae.
materiam superabat opus: nam Mulciber illic 5 aequora caelarat medias cingentia terras terrarumque orbem caelumque, quod imminet orbi.
caeruleos habet unda deos, Tritona canorum Proteaue ambiguum ballaenarumque prementem Aegaeona suis inmania terga lacertis 10
Doridaque et natas, quarum pars nare videtur, pars in mole sedens viridis siccare capillos, pisce vehi quaedam: facies non omnibus una,
non diversa tamen, qualem decet esse sororum.
terra viros urbesque gerit silvasque ferasque 15 fluminaque et nymphas et cetera numina ruris.
haec super inposita est caeli fulgentis imago, signaque sex foribus dextris totidemque sinistris.

Quo simul adclivi Clymeneia limite proles venit et intravit dubitati tecta parentis, 20 protinus ad patrios sua fert vestigia vultus consistitque procul; neque enim propiora ferebat lumina: purpurea velatus veste sedebat in solio Phoebus claris lucente smaragdis.
a dextra laevaue Dies et Mensis et Annus 25
Saeculaque et positae spatiis aequalibus Horae Verque novum stabat cinctum florente corona, stabat nuda Aestas et spiceaserta gerebat, stabat et Autumnus calcatis sordidus uvis et glacialis Hiems canos hirsuta capillos. 30 Ipse loco medius rerum novitate paventem

Sol oculis iuvenem, quibus adspicit omnia, vidit
'quae' que 'viae tibi causa? quid hac' ait 'arce petisti, progenies, Phaethon, haud infitianda parenti?'
ille refert: 'o lux inmensi publica mundi, 35 Phoebe pater, si das usum mihi nominis huius, nec falsa Clymene culpam sub imagine celat, pignora da, genitor, per quae tua vera propago credar, et hunc animis errorem detrahe nostris!' dixerat, at genitor circum caput omne micantes 40 deposuit radios propiusque accedere iussit amplexumque dato 'nec tu meus esse negari dignus es, et Clymene veros' ait 'edidit ortus, quoque minus dubites, quodvis pete munus, ut illud me tribuente feras! promissi testis adesto 45 dis iuranda palus, oculis incognita nostris!'
vix bene desierat, currus rogat ille paternos inque diem alipedum ius et moderamen equorum.

Paenituit iurasse patrem: qui terque quaterque concutiens inlustre caput 'temeraria' dixit 50
'vox mea facta tua est; utinam promissa liceret non dare! confiteor, solum hoc tibi, nate, negarem.
dissuadere licet: non est tua tuta voluntas!
magna petis, Phaethon, et quae nec viribus istis munera convenient nec tam puerilibus annis: 55 sors tua mortalis, non est mortale, quod optas.
plus etiam, quam quod superis contingere possit, nescius adfectas; placeat sibi quisque licebit, non tamen ignifero quisquam consistere in axe me valet excepto; vasti quoque rector Olympi, 60 qui fera terribili iaculatur fulmina dextra, non agat hos currus: et quid love maius habemus?
ardua prima via est et qua vix mane recentes enituntur equi; medio est altissima caelo, unde mare et terras ipsi mihi saepe videre 65 fit timor et pavida trepidat formidine pectus; ultima prona via est et eget moderamine certo:

tunc etiam quae me subiectis excipit undis, ne ferar in praeceps, Tethys solet ipsa vereri.
adde, quod adsidua rapitur vertigine caelum 70
sideraque alta trahit celerique volumine torquet.
nitor in adversum, nec me, qui cetera, vincit inpetus, et rapido contrarius evehor orbi.
finge datos currus: quid ages? poterisne rotatis obvius ire polis, ne te citus auferat axis? 75 forsitan et lucos illic urbesque deorum conciplas animo delubraque ditia donis esse: per insidias iter est formasque ferarum!
utque viam teneas nulloque errore traharis, per tamen adversi gradieris cornua tauri 80 Haemoniosque arcus violentique ora Leonis saevaque circuitu curvantem bracchia longo Scorpion atque aliter curvantem bracchia Cancrum.
nec tibi quadripedes animosos ignibus illis, quos in pectore habent, quos ore et naribus efflant, 85 in promptu regere est: vix me patiuntur, ubi acres incaluere animi cervixque repugnat habenis. — at tu, funesti ne sim tibi muneris auctor, nate, cave, dum resque sinit tua corrige vota!
scilicet ut nostro genitum te sanguine credas, 90 pignora certa petis: do pignora certa timendo et patrio pater esse metu probor. adspice vultus ecce meos; utinamque oculos in pectora posses inserere et patrias intus deprendere curas!
denique quidquid habet dives, circumspice, mundus 95 eque tot ac tantis caeli terraeque marisque posce bonis aliquid; nullam patiere repulsam.
deprecor hoc unum, quod vero nomine poena,
non honor est: poenam, Phaethon, pro munere poscis!
quid mea colla tenes blandis, ignare, lacertis? 100 ne dubita! dabitur (Stygias iuravimus undas), quodcumque optaris; sed tu sapientius opta!
Finierat monitus; dictis tamen ille repugnat propositumque premit flagratque cupidine currus.

ergo, qua licuit, genitor cunctatus ad altos 105
deducit iuvenem, Vulcania munera, currus.
aureus axis erat, temo aureus, aurea summae curvatura rotae, radiorum argenteus ordo; per iuga chrysolithi positaeque ex ordine gemmae clara repercusso reddebant lumina Phoebos. 110

Dumque ea magnanimus Phaethon miratur opusque perspicit, ecce vigil nitido patefecit ab ortu purpureas Aurora fores et plena rosarum atria: diffugiunt stellae, quarum agmina cogit Lucifer et caeli statione novissimus exit. 115

Quem petere ut terras mundumque rubescere vidit cornuaque extremae velut evanescere lunae, iungere equos Titan velocibus imperat Horis.
iussa deae celeres peragunt ignemque vomentes, ambrosiae suco saturos, praesepibus altis 120 quadripedes ducunt adduntque sonantia frena.
tum pater ora sui sacro medicamine nati contigit et rapidae fecit patientia flammae inposuitque comae radios praesagaque luctus pectore sollicito repetens suspiria dixit: 125
'si potes his saltem monitis parere parentis parce, puer, stimulis et fortius utere loris!
sponte sua properant, labor est inhibere volentes.
nec tibi directos placeat via quinque per arcus!
sectus in obliquum est lato curvamine limes, 130 zonarumque trium contentus fine polumque effugit australem iunctamque aquilonibus arcton:
hac sit iter — manifesta rotae vestigia cernes — utque ferant aequos et caelum et terra calores, nec preme nec summum molire per aethera currum! 135 altius egressus caelestia tecta cremabis, inferius terras; medio tutissimus ibis.
neu te dexterior tortum declinet ad Anguem, neve sinisterior pressam rota ducat ad Aram, inter utrumque tene! Fortunae cetera mando, 140 quae iuuet et melius quam tu tibi consulat opto.

dum loquor, Hesperio positas in litore metas umida nox tetigit; non est mora libera nobis!
poscimur: effulget tenebris Aurora fugatis.
corripe lora manu, vel, si mutabile pectus 145
est tibi, consiliis, non curribus utere nostris!
dum potes et solidis etiamnum sedibus adstas, dumque male optatos nondum premis inscius axes, quae tutus spectes, sine me dare lumina terris!’

Occupat ille levem iuvenali corpore currum 150 statque super manibusque leves contingere habenas gaudet et invito grates agit inde parenti.

Interea volucres Pyrois et Eous et Aethon, Solis equi, quartusque Phlegon hinnitibus auras flammiferis inplent pedibusque repagula pulsant. 155 quae postquam Tethys, fatorum ignara nepotis, reppulit, et facta est inmensi copia caeli, corripuere viam pedibusque per aera motis obstantes scindunt nebulas pennisque levati praetereunt ortos isdem de partibus Euros. 160 sed leve pondus erat nec quod cognoscere possent Solis equi, solitaque iugum gravitate carebat; utque labant curvae iusto sine pondere naves perque mare instabiles nimia levitate feruntur, sic onere adsueto vacuus dat in aera saltus 165 succutiturque alte similisque est currus inani.

Quod simulac sensere, ruunt tritumque relinquunt quadriugi spatium nec quo prius ordine currunt.
ipse pavet nec qua commissas flectat habenas nec scit qua sit iter, nec, si sciat, imperet illis. 170 tum primum radiis gelidi caluere Triones et vetito frustra temptarunt aequore tingui, quaeque polo posita est glaciali proxima Serpens,
frigore pigra prius nec formidabilis ulli, incaluit sumpsitque novas fervoribus iras; 175

te quoque turbatum memorant fugisse, Boote, quamvis tardus eras et te tua plaustra tenebant.

Ut vero summo despexit ab aethere terras infelix Phaethon penitus penitusque iacentes, palluit et subito genua intremuere timore 180 suntque oculis tenebrae per tantum lumen abortae, et iam mallet equos numquam tetigisse paternos, iam cognosse genus piget et valuisse rogando, iam Meropis dici cupiens ita fertur, ut acta praecipiti pinus borea, cui victa remisit 185 frena suus rector, quam dis votisque reliquit.
quid faciat? multum caeli post terga relictum, ante oculos plus est: animo metitur utrumque et modo, quos illi fatum contingere non est, prospicit occasus, interdum respicit ortus, 190 quidque agat ignarus stupet et nec frena remittit nec retinere valet nec nomina novit equorum.
sparsa quoque in vario passim miracula caelo vastarumque videt trepidus simulacra ferarum.
est locus, in geminos ubi bracchia concavat arcus 195 Scorpius et cauda flexisque utrimque lacertis porrigit in spatium signorum membra duorum:
hunc puer ut nigri madidum sudore veneni vulnera curvata minitantem cuspide vidit, mentis inops gelida formidine lora remisit. 200

Quae postquam summum tetigere iacentia tergum, exspatiantur equi nulloque inhibente per auras ignotae regionis eunt, quaque inpetus egit, hac sine lege ruunt altoque sub aethere fixis incursant stellis rapiuntque per avia currum 205 et modo summa petunt, modo per declive viasque praecipites spatio terrae propiore feruntur, inferiusque suis fraternos currere Luna admiratur equos, ambustaque nubila fumant.
corripitur flammis, ut quaeque altissima, tellus 210
fissaque agit rimas et sucis aret ademptis;

pabula canescunt, cum frondibus uritur arbor, materiamque suo praebet seges arida damno.
parva queror: magnae pereunt cum moenibus urbes, cumque suis totas populis incendia gentis 215 in cinerem vertunt; silvae cum montibus ardent;
ardet Athos Taurusque Cilix et Tmolus et Oete et tum sicca, prius creberrima fontibus, Ide virgineusque Helicon et nondum Oeagrius Haemus:
ardet in inmensum geminatis ignibus Aetne 220 Parnasosque biceps et Eryx et Cynthus et Othrys et tandem nivibus Rhodope caritura Mimasque Dindymaque et Mycale natusque ad sacra Cithaeron.
nec prosunt Scythiae sua frigora: Caucasus ardet Ossaque cum Pindo maiorque ambobus Olympus 225 aeriaeque Alpes et nubifer Appenninus.

Tum vero Phaethon cunctis e partibus orbem adspicit accensum nec tantos sustinet aestus ferventisque auras velut e fornace profunda ore trahit currusque suos candescere sentit; 230 et neque iam cineres eiectatamque favillam ferre potest calidoque involvitur undique fumo, quoque eat aut ubi sit, picea caligine tectus nescit et arbitrio volucrum raptatur equorum.

Sanguine tum credunt in corpora summa vocato 235
Aethiopum populos nigrum traxisse colorem;
tum facta est Libye raptis umoribus aestu arida, tum nymphae passis fontesque lacusque deflevare comis; quaerit Boeotia Dircen, Argos Amymonen, Ephyre Pirenidas undas; 240 nec sortita loco distantes flumina ripas tuta manent: mediis Tanais fumavit in undis Peneosque senex Teuthranteusque Caicus et celer Ismenos cum Phegiaco Erymantho arsurusque iterum Xanthos flavusque Lycormas, 245 quique recurvatis ludit Maeandros in undis, Mygdoniusque Melas et Taenarius Eurotas.

arsit et Euphrates Babylonius, arsit Orontes Thermodonque citus Gangesque et Phasis et Hister; aestuat Alpheos, ripae Spercheides ardent, 250 quodque suo Tagus amne vehit, fluit ignibus aurum, et, quae Maeonias celebrabant carmine ripas flumineae volucres, medio caluere Caystro; Nilus in extremum fugit perterritus orbem occulitque caput, quod adhuc latet: ostia septem 255 pulverulenta vacant, septem sine flumine valles.
fors eadem Ismarios Hebrum cum Strymone siccat Hesperiosque amnes, Rhenum Rhodanumque Padumque cuique fuit rerum promissa potentia, Thybrin.
dissilit omne solum, penetratque in Tartara rimis 260 lumen et infernum terret cum coniuge regem;
et mare contrahitur siccaeque est campus harenae, quod modo pontus erat, quosque altum texerat aequor, existunt montes et sparsas Cycladas augent.
ima petunt pisces, nec se super aequora curvi 265 tollere consuetas audent delphines in auras;
corpora phocarum summo resupina profundo exanimata natant: ipsum quoque Nerea fama est Doridaque et natas tepidis latuisse sub antris.
ter Neptunus aquis cum torvo bracchia vultu 270
exserere ausus erat, ter non tulit aeris ignes.

Alma tamen Tellus, ut erat circumdata ponto, inter aquas pelagi contractosque undique fontes, qui se condiderant in opacae viscera matris, sustulit oppressos collo tenus arida vultus 275 opposuitque manum fronti magnoque tremore omnia concutiens paulum subsedit et infra, quam solet esse, fuit fractaque ita voce locuta est:
'si placet hoc meruique, quid o tua fulmina cessant, summe deum? liceat periturae viribus ignis 280
igne perire tuo clademque auctore levare!
vix equidem fauces haec ipsa in verba resolvo'; (presserat ora vapor) 'tostos en adspice crines inque oculis tantum, tantum super ora favillae!

hosne mihi fructus, hunc fertilitatis honorem 285 officiiue refers, quod adunci vulnera aratri rastrorumque fero totoque exerceo anno, quod pecori frondes alimentaue mitia, fruges humano generi, vobis quoque tura ministro?
sed tamen exitium fac me meruisse: quid undae, 290 quid meruit frater? cur illi tradita sorte aequora decrescunt et ab aethere longius absunt?
quodsi nec fratris nec te mea gratia tangit,
at caeli miserere tui! circumspice utrumque:
fumat uterque polus! quos si vitiaverit ignis, 295 atria vestra ruent! Atlas en ipse laborat vixque suis umeris candentem sustinet axem!
si freta, si terrae pereunt, si regia caeli,
in chaos antiquum confundimur! eripe flammis, si quid adhuc superest, et rerum consule summae!' 300

Dixerat haec Tellus: neque enim tolerare vaporem ulterius potuit nec dicere plura suumque rettulit os in se propioraque manibus antra;
at pater omnipotens, superos testatus et ipsum, qui dederat currus, nisi opem ferat, omnia fato 305 interitura gravi, summam petit arduus arcem, unde solet nubes latis inducere terris, unde movet tonitrus vibrataue fulmina iactat;
sed neque quas posset terris inducere nubes tunc habuit, nec quos caelo demitteret imbres: 310 intonat et dextra libratum fulmen ab aure misit in aurigam pariterque animaue rotisque expulit et saevis conpescuit ignibus ignes.
consternantur equi et saltu in contraria facto colla iugo eripiunt abruptaque lora relinquunt: 315 illic frena iacent, illic temone revulsus axis, in hac radii fractarum parte rotarum sparsaque sunt late laceri vestigia currus.

At Phaethon rutilos flamma populante capillos volvitur in praecipit longoque per aera tractu 320 fertur, ut interdum de caelo stella sereno etsi non cecidit, potuit cecidisse videri.

quem procul a patria diverso maximus orbe excipit Eridanus fumantiaque abluit ora.
Naiades Hesperiae trifida fumantia flamma 325 corpora dant tumulo, signant quoque carmine saxum:
hic : situs : est : phaethon : curvus : avriga : paterni quem : si : non : tenuit : magnis : tamen : excidit : avsis Nam pater obductos luctu miserabilis aegro condiderat vultus, et, si modo credimus, unum 330 uisse diem sine sole ferunt: incendia lumen praebebant aliquisque malo fuit usus in illo.
at Clymene postquam dixit, quaecumque fuerunt in tantis dicenda malis, lugubris et amens et laniata sinus totum percensuit orbem 335 exanimesque artus primo, mox ossa requirens repperit ossa tamen peregrina condita ripa incubuitque loco nomenque in marmore lectum perfudit lacrimis et aperto pectore fovit.
nec minus Heliades fletus et, inania morti 340 munera, dant lacrimas, et caesae pectora palmis non auditurum miseras Phaethonta querellas nocte dieque vocant adsternunturque sepulcro.
luna quater iunctis inplerat cornibus orbem;
illae more suo (nam morem fecerat usus) 345 plangorem dederant: e quis Phaethusa, sororum maxima, cum vellet terra procumbere, quae est deriguisse pedes; ad quam conata venire candida Lampetie subita radice retenta est; tertia, cum crinem manibus laniare pararet, 350 avellit frondes; haec stipite crura teneri, illa dolet fieri longos sua bracchia ramos, dumque ea mirantur, conplectitur inguina cortex perque gradus uterum pectusque umerosque manusque ambit, et exstabant tantum ora vocantia matrem. 355

quid faciat mater, nisi, quo trahat inpetus illam, huc eat atque illuc et, dum licet, oscula iungat?
non satis est: truncis avellere corpora temptat et teneros manibus ramos abrumpit, at inde sanguineae manant tamquam de vulnere guttae. 360
'parce, precor, mater,' quaecumque est saucia, clamat,
'parce, precor: nostrum laceratur in arbore corpus iamque vale' — cortex in verba novissima venit.
inde fluunt lacrimae, stillataque sole rigescunt de ramis electra novis, quae lucidus amnis 365 excipit et nuribus mittit gestanda Latinis.

Adfuit huic monstro proles Stheneleia Cycnus, qui tibi materno quamvis a sanguine iunctus, mente tamen, Phaethon, propior fuit. ille relicto (nam Ligurum populos et magnas rexerat urbes) 370 imperio ripas virides amnemque querellis Eridanum inplerat silvamque sororibus auctam, cum vox est tenuata viro canaeque capillos dissimulant plumae collumque a pectore longe porrigitur digitosque ligat iunctura rubentis, 375 penna latus velat, tenet os sine acumine rostrum.
fit nova Cycnus avis nec se caeloque Iovique credit, ut iniuste missi memor ignis ab illo; stagna petit patulosque lacus ignemque perosus quae colat elegit contraria flumina flammis. 380

Squalidus interea genitor Phaethontis et expers ipse sui decoris, qualis, cum deficit orbem, esse solet, lucemque odit seque ipse diemque datque animum in luctus et luctibus adicit iram officiumque negat mundo. 'satis' inquit 'ab aevi 385 sors mea principiis fuit inrequieta, pigetque actorum sine fine mihi, sine honore laborum!
quilibet alter agat portantes lumina currus!
si nemo est omnesque dei non posse fatentur, ipse agat ut saltem, dum nostras temptat habenas, 390 orbatura patres aliquando fulmina ponat!

tum sciet ignipedum vires expertus equorum non meruisse necem, qui non bene rexerit illos.'

Talia dicentem circumstant omnia Solem numina, neve velit tenebras inducere rebus, 395 supplice voce rogant; missos quoque Iuppiter ignes excusat precibusque minas regaliter addit.
colligit amentes et adhuc terrore paventes Phoebus equos stimuloque dolens et verberare saevit (saevit enim) natumque obiectat et inputat illis. 400

At pater omnipotens ingentia moenia caeli circuit et, ne quid labefactum viribus ignis corruat, explorat. quae postquam firma suique roboris esse videt, terras hominumque labores perspicit. Arcadiae tamen est inpensior illi 405 cura suae: fontesque et nondum audentia labi flumina restituit, dat terrae gramina, frondes arboribus, laesasque iubet revirescere silvas.
dum redit itque frequens, in virgine Nonacrina haesit, et accepti caluere sub ossibus ignes. 410 non erat huius opus lanam mollire trahendo nec positu variare comas; ubi fibula vestem, vitta coercuerat neglectos alba capillos;
et modo leve manu iaculum, modo sumpserat arcum, miles erat Phoebes: nec Maenalon attigit ulla 415
gratior hac Triviae; sed nulla potentia longa est.

Ulterius medio spatium sol altus habebat, cum subit illa nemus, quod nulla ceciderat aetas;
exiit hic umero pharetram lentosque retendit arcus inque solo, quod texerat herba, iacebat 420 et pictam posita pharetram cervice premebat.
Iuppiter ut vidit fessam et custode vacantem,
'hoc certe furtum coniunx mea nesciet' inquit,
'aut si rescierit, sunt, o sunt iurgia tanti!'
protinus induitur faciem cultumque Dianae 425 atque ait: 'o comitum, virgo, pars una mearum, in quibus es venata iugis?' de caespite virgo se levat et 'salve numen, me iudice' dixit, 'audiat ipse licet, maius love.' ridet et audit et sibi praeferri se gaudet et oscula iungit, 430 nec moderata satis nec sic a virgine danda.

qua venata foret silva, narrare parantem inpedit amplexu nec se sine crimine prodit.
illa quidem contra, quantum modo femina posset (adspiceres utinam, Saturnia, mitior esses), 435 illa quidem pugnat, sed quem superare puella, quisve lovem poterat? superum petit aethera victor Iuppiter: huic odio nemus est et conscia silva; unde pedem referens paene est oblita pharetram tollere cum telis et quem suspenderat arcum. 440

Ecce, suo comitata choro Dictynna per altum Maenalon ingrediens et caede superba ferarum adspicit hanc visamque vocat: clamata refugit et timuit primo, ne Iuppiter esset in illa; sed postquam pariter nymphas incedere vidit, 445 sensit abesse dolos numerumque accessit ad harum.
heu! quam difficile est crimen non prodere vultu!
vix oculos attollit humo nec, ut ante solebat, iuncta deae lateri nec toto est agmine prima, sed silet et laesi dat signa rubore pudoris; 450 et, nisi quod virgo est, poterat sentire Diana mille notis culpam: nymphae sensisse feruntur.
orbe resurgebant lunaria cornua nono, cum de venatu fraternis languida flammis, nacta nemus gelidum dea, quo cum murmure labens 455 ibat et attritas versabat rivus harenas.
ut loca laudavit, summas pede contigit undas;
his quoque laudatis 'procul est' ait 'arbiter omnis:
nuda superfusis tinguamus corpora lymphis!' Parrhasis erubuit; cunctae velamina ponunt; 460 una moras quaerit: dubitanti vestis adempta est, qua posita nudo patuit cum corpore crimen.
attonitae manibusque uterum celare volenti

'i procul hinc' dixit 'nec sacros pollue fontis!'

Cynthia deque suo iussit secedere coetu. 465

Senserat hoc olim magni matrona Tonantis distuleratque graves in idonea tempora poenas.

causa morae nulla est, et iam puer Arcas (id ipsum indoluit Iuno) fuerat de Paelice natus.

quo simul obvertit saevam cum lumine mentem, 470

'scilicet hoc etiam restabat, adultera' dixit,

'ut fecunda fores, fieretque iniuria partu nota, Iovisque mei testatum dedecus esset.

haud inpune feres: adimam tibi namque figuram, qua tibi, quaque places nostro, inportuna, marito.' 475

dixit et adversam prensis a fronte capillis stravit humi pronam. tendebat brachia supplex:

brachia coeperunt nigris horrescere villis curvarique manus et aduncos crescere in unguis officioque pedum fungi laudataque quondam 480

ora Iovi lato fieri deformia rictu.

neve preces animos et verba precantia flectant, posse loqui eripitur: vox iracunda minaxque plenaque terroris rauco de gutture fertur;

mens antiqua tamen facta quoque mansit in ursa, 485 adsiduoque suos gemitu testata dolores qualescumque manus ad caelum et sidera tollit ingratumque Iovem, nequeat cum dicere, sentit.

a! quotiens, sola non ausa quiescere silva, ante domum quondamque suis erravit in agris! 490

a! quotiens per saxa canum latratibus acta est venatrixque metu venantium territa fugit!

saepe feris latuit visis, oblita quid esset, ursaque inspectos in montibus horruit ursos pertimuitque lupos, quamvis pater esset in illis. 495

Ecce Lycaoniae proles ignara parentis,

Arcas adest ter quinque fere natalibus actis;

dumque feras sequitur, dum saltus eligit aptos nexilibusque plagis silvas Erymanthidas ambit, incidit in matrem, quae restitit Arcade viso 500 et cognoscenti similis fuit: ille refugit inmotosque oculos in se sine fine tenentem nescius extimuit propiusque accedere aventi vulnifico fuerat fixurus pectora telo:

arcuit omnipotens pariterque ipsosque nefasque 505 sustulit et pariter raptos per inania vento inposuit caelo vicinaque sidera fecit.

Intumuit Iuno, postquam inter sidera paelex fulsit, et ad canam descendit in aequora Tethyn Oceanumque senem, quorum reverentia movit 510 saepe deos, causamque viae scitantibus inquit:
'quaeritis, aetheriis quare regina deorum sedibus huc adsim? pro me tenet altera caelum!
mentior, obscurum nisi nox cum fecerit orbem, nuper honoratas summo, mea vulnera, caelo 515 videritis stellas illic, ubi circulus axem ultimus extremum spatioque brevissimus ambit.
et vero quisquam lunonem laedere nolit offensamque tremat, quae prosum sola nocendo?
o ego quantum egi! quam vasta potentia nostra est! 520 esse hominem vetui: facta est dea! sic ego poenas sontibus inpono, sic est mea magna potestas!
vindictet antiquam faciem vultusque ferinos detrahat, Argolica quod in ante Phoronide fecit cur non et pulsa ducit lunone meoque 525 collocat in thalamo socerumque Lycaona sumit?
at vos si laesae tangit contemptus alumnae, gurgite caeruleo septem prohibete triones sideraque in caelo stupri mercede recepta pellite, ne puro tinguatur in aequore paelex!' 530

Di maris adnuerant: habili Saturnia curru, ingreditur liquidum pavonibus aethera pictis, tam nuper pictis caeso pavonibus Argo, quam tu nuper eras, cum candidus ante fuisses, corve loquax, subito nigrantis versus in alas. 535 nam fuit haec quondam niveis argentea pennis ales, ut aequaret totas sine labe columbas, nec servaturis vigili Capitolia voce cederet anseribus nec amanti flumina cycno.

lingua fuit damno: lingua faciente loquaci 540 qui color albus erat, nunc est contrarius albo Pulchrior in tota quam Larisaea Coronis non fuit Haemonia: placuit tibi, Delphice, certe, dum vel casta fuit vel inobservata, sed ales sensit adulterium Phoebus, utque latentem 545 detegeret culpam, non exorabilis index, ad dominum tendebat iter. quem garrula motis consequitur pennis, scitetur ut omnia, cornix auditaque viae causa 'non utile carpis' inquit 'iter: ne sperne meae praesagia linguae! 550 quid fuerim quid simque vide meritumque require:
invenies nocuisse fidem. nam tempore quodam Pallas Erichthonium, prolem sine matre creatam, clauserat Actaeo texta de vimine cista virginibusque tribus gemino de Cecrope natis 555 et legem dederat, sua ne secreta viderent.
abdita fronde levi densa speculabar ab ulmo, quid facerent: commissa duae sine fraude tuentur, Pandrosos atque Herse; timidus vocat una sorores Aglauros nodosque manu diducit, et intus 560 infantemque vident adporrectumque draconem.
acta deae refero. pro quo mihi gratia talis redditur, ut dicar tutela pulsa Minervae et ponar post noctis avem! mea poena volucres admonuisse potest, ne voce pericula quaerant. 565 at, puto, non ultro nequiquam tale rogantem me petiit! — ipsa licet hoc a Pallade quaeras:
quamvis irata est, non hoc irata negabit.
nam me Phocaica clarus tellure Coroneus (nota loquor) genuit, fueramque ego regia virgo 570 divitibusque procis (ne me contemne) petebar:

forma mihi nocuit. nam cum per litora lentis passibus, ut soleo, summa spatiarer harena, vidit et incaluit pelagi deus, utque precando tempora cum blandis absumpsit inania verbis, 575 vim parat et sequitur. fugio densumque relinquo litus et in molli nequiquam lassor harena.
inde deos hominesque voco; nec contigit ullum vox mea mortalem: mota est pro virgine virgo auxiliumque tulit. tendebam bracchia caelo: 580 bracchia coeperunt levibus nigrescere pennis; reicere ex umeris vestem molibar, at illa pluma erat inque cutem radices egerat imas;
plangere nuda meis conabar pectora palmis, sed neque iam palmas nec pectora nuda gerebam; 585 currebam, nec, ut ante, pedes retinebat harena, sed summa tollebar humo; mox alta per auras evehor et data sum comes inculpata Minervae.
quid tamen hoc prodest, si diro facta volucris crimine Nyctimene nostro successit honori? 590 an quae per totam res est notissima Lesbon, non audita tibi est, patrium temerasse cubile Nyctimenen? avis illa quidem, sed conscia culpae conspectum lucemque fugit tenebrisque pudorem celat et a cunctis expellitur aethere toto.' 595

Talia dicenti 'tibi' ait 'revocamina' corvus
'sint, precor, ista malo: nos vanum spernimus omen.'
nec coeptum dimittit iter dominoque iacentem cum iuvene Haemonio vidisse Coronida narrat.
laurea delapsa est audito crimine amantis, 600 et pariter vultusque deo plectrumque colorque excidit, utque animus tumida fervebat ab ira, arma adsueta capit flexumque a cornibus arcum tendit et illa suo totiens cum pectore iuncta indevitato traiecit pectora telo. 605 icta dedit gemitum tractoque a corpore ferro candida puniceo perfudit membra cruore et dixit: 'potui poenas tibi, Phoebе, dedisse, sed peperisse prius; duo nunc moriemur in una.'

hactenus, et pariter vitam cum sanguine fudit; 610 corpus inane animae frigus letale secutum est.

Paenitet heu! sero poenae crudelis amantem, seque, quod audierit, quod sic exarserit, odit;
odit avem, per quam crimen causamque dolendi scire coactus erat, nec non arcumque manumque 615 odit cumque manu temeraria tela sagittas conlapsamque fovet seraque ope vincere fata nititur et medicas exercet inaniter artes.
quae postquam frustra temptata rogamque parari vidit et arsuros supremis ignibus artus, 620 tum vero gemitus (neque enim caelestia tingui ora licet lacrimis) alto de corde petitos edidit, haud aliter quam cum spectante iuvenca lactentis vituli dextra libratus ab aure tempora discussit claro cava malleus ictu. 625 ut tamen ingratos in pectora fudit odores et dedit amplexus iniustaque iusta peregit, non tulit in cineres labi sua Phoebus eosdem semina, sed natum flammis uteroque parentis eripuit geminique tulit Chironis in antrum, 630 sperantemque sibi non falsae praemia linguae
inter aves albas vetuit consistere corvum.

Semifer interea divinae stirpis alumno laetus erat mixtoque oneri gaudebat honore; ecce venit rutilus umeros protecta capillis 635 filia centauri, quam quondam nymphea Chariclo fluminis in rapidi ripis enixa vocavit Ocyroen: non haec artes contenta paternas edidicisse fuit, fatorum arcana canebat.
ergo ubi vaticinos concepit mente furores 640 incaluitque deo, quem clausum pectore habebat, adspicit infantem 'toto' que 'salutifer orbi cresce, puer!' dixit; 'tibi se mortalia saepe corpora debebunt, animas tibi reddere ademptas fas erit, idque semel dis indignantibus ausus 645 posse dare hoc iterum flamma prohibebere avita, equae deo corpus fies exsanguis deusque, qui modo corpus eras, et bis tua fata novabis.

tu quoque, care pater, nunc immortalis et aevus omnibus ut maneat nascendi lege creatus, 650 posse mori cupies, tum cum cruciaberis dirae sanguine serpentis per saucia membra recepto; teque ex aeterno patientem numina mortis efficient, triplicesque deae tua fila solvent.’
restabat fatis aliquid: suspirat ab imis 655 pectoribus, lacrimaeque genas labuntur obortae, atque ita ‘praevertunt’ inquit ‘me fata, vetorque plura loqui, vocisque meae praeccluditur usus.
non fuerant artes tanti, quae numinis iram contraxere mihi: mallem nescisse futura! 660 iam mihi subdici facies humana videtur, iam cibus herba placet, iam latis currere campis impetus est: in equam cognataque corpora vertor.
tota tamen quare? pater est mihi nempe biformis.’
taliam dicenti pars est extrema querellae 665 intellecta parum confusaque verba fuerunt;
mox nec verba quidem nec equae sonus ille videtur sed simulantis equam, parvoque in tempore certos edidit hinnitus et brachia movit in herbas.
tum digiti coeunt et quinos alligat ungues 670 perpetuo cornu levis ungula, crescit et oris et colli spatium, longae pars maxima pallae cauda fit, utque vagi crines per colla iacebant, in dextras abiere iubas, pariterque novata est et vox et facies; nomen quoque monstra dedere. 675

Flebat opemque tuam frustra Philyreus heros, Delphice, poscebat. nam nec rescindere magni iussa Iovis poteras, nec, si rescindere posses, tunc aderas: Elin Messeniaque arva colebas.

illud erat tempus, quo te pastoria pellis 680 textit, onusque fuit baculum silvestre sinistrae, alterius dispar septenis fistula cannis.
dumque amor est curae, dum te tua fistula mulcet, incustoditae Pylios memorantur in agros processisse boves: videt has Atlantide Maia 685 natus et arte sua silvis occultat abactas.
senserat hoc furtum nemo nisi notus in illo rure senex; Battum vicinia tota vocabat.
divitis hic saltus herbosaque pascua Nelei nobiliumque greges custos servabat equarum. 690 hunc tenuit blandaque manu seduxit et illi
'quisquis es, hospes' ait, 'si forte armenta requiret haec aliquis, vidisse nega neu gratia facto nulla rependatur, nitidam cape praemia vaccam!' et dedit. accepta voces has reddidit hospes: 695
'tutus eas! lapis iste prius tua furta loquetur,' et lapidem ostendit. simulat love natus abire;
mox redit et versa pariter cum voce figura
'rustice, vidisti si quas hoc limite' dixit
'ire boves, fer opem furtoque silentia deme! 700 iuncta suo pretium dabitur tibi femina tauro.'
at senior, postquam est merces geminata, 'sub illis montibus' inquit 'erunt,' et erant sub montibus illis.
risit Atlantiades et 'me mihi, perfide, prodis?
me mihi prodis?' ait periuraque pectora vertit 705
in durum silicem, qui nunc quoque dicitur index, inque nihil merito vetus est infamia saxo.

Hinc se sustulerat paribus caducifer alis, Munychiosque volans agros gratamque Minervae despectabat humum cultique arbusta Lycei. 710 illa forte die castae de more puellae vertice supposito festas in Palladis arces pura coronatis portabant sacra canistris.
inde revertentes deus adspicit ales iterque non agit in rectum, sed in orbem curvat eundem: 715

ut volucris visis rapidissima miluus extis, dum timet et densi circumstant sacra ministri, flectitur in gyrum nec longius audet abire spemque suam motis avidus circumvolat alis, sic super Actaeas agilis Cyllenius arces 720
inclinat cursus et easdem circinat auras.
quanto splendidior quam cetera sidera fulget Lucifer, et quanto quam Lucifer aurea Phoebe, tanto virginibus praestantior omnibus Herse ibat eratque decus pompae comitumque suarum. 725 obstipuit forma Iove natus et aethere pendens non secus exarsit, quam cum Balearica plumbum funda iacit: volat illud et incandescit eundo et, quos non habuit, sub nubibus invenit ignes.
vertit iter caeloque petit terrena relicto 730 nec se dissimulat: tanta est fiducia formae.
quae quamquam iusta est, cura tamen adiuvat illam permulcetque comas chlamydemque, ut pendeat apte, collocat, ut limbus totumque adpareat aurum, ut teres in dextra, qua somnos ducit et arcet, 735
virga sit, ut tersis niteant talaria plantis.

Pars secreta domus ebore et testudine cultos tres habuit thalamos, quorum tu, Pandrose, dextrum, Aglauros laevum, medium possederat Herse.
quae tenuit laevum, venientem prima notavit 740 Mercurium nomenque dei scitarier ausa est et causam adventus; cui sic respondit Atlantis Pleionesque nepos 'ego sum, qui iussa per auras verba patris porto; pater est mihi Iuppiter ipse.
nec fingam causas, tu tantum fida sorori 745 esse velis prolisque meae matertera dici: Herse causa viae; faveas oramus amanti.'
adspicit hunc oculis isdem, quibus abdita nuper viderat Aglauros flavae secreta Minervae, proque ministerio magni sibi ponderis aurum 750
postulat: interea tectis excedere cogit.

Vertit ad hanc torvi dea bellica luminis orbem et tanto penitus traxit suspiria motu, ut pariter pectus positamque in pectore forti aegida concuteret: subit, hanc arcana profana 755 detexisse manu, tum cum sine matre creatam Lemnicolae stirpem contra data foedera vidit, et gratamque deo fore iam gratamque sorori
et ditem sumpto, quod avara poposcerat, auro.
protinus Invidiae nigro squalentia tabo 760 tecta petit: domus est imis in vallibus huius abditā, sole carens, non ulli pervia vento, tristis et ignavi plenissima frigoris et quae igne vacet semper, caligine semper abundet.
huc ubi pervenit belli metuenda virago, 765 constitit ante domum (neque enim succedere tectis fas habet) et postes extrema cuspide pulsat.
concussae patuere fores. videt intus edentem vipereas carnes, vitiorum alimenta suorum, Invidiam visaque oculos avertit; at illa 770 surgit humo pigre semesarumque relinquit corpora serpentum passuque incedit inertī.
utque deam vidit formaque armisque decoram, ingemuit vultumque una ac suspiria duxit.
pallor in ore sedet, macies in corpore toto. 775 nusquam recta acies, livent robigine dentes, pectora felle virent, lingua est suffusa veneno;
risus abest, nisi quem visi movere dolores;
nec fruitur somno, vigilantibus excita curis, sed videt ingratos intabescitque videndo 780 successus hominum carpitque et carpitur una suppliciumque suum est. quamvis tamen oderat illam, talibus adfata est breviter Tritonia dictis:
'infice tabe tua natarum Cecropis unam:
sic opus est. Aglauros ea est.' haud plura locuta 785 fugit et inpressa tellurem reppulit hasta.

Illa deam obliquo fugientem lumine cernens murmura parva dedit successurumque Minervae indoluit baculumque capit, quod spinea totum vincula cingebant, adopertaque nubibus atris, 790 quacumque ingreditur, florentia proterit arva exuritque herbas et summa cacumina carpit adflatuque suo populos urbesque domosque polluit et tandem Tritonida conspicit arcem ingeniis opibusque et festa pace virentem 795 vixque tenet lacrimas, quia nil lacrimabile cernit.

sed postquam thalamos intravit Cecrope natae, iussa facit pectusque manu ferrugine tincta tangit et hamatis praecordia sentibus inplet inspiratque nocens virus piceumque per ossa 800 dissipat et medio spargit pulmone venenum, neve mali causae spatium per latius errent, germanam ante oculos fortunatumque sororis coniugium pulchraque deum sub imagine ponit cunctaque magna facit; quibus inritata dolore 805 Cecropis occulto mordetur et anxia nocte anxia luce gemit lentaque miserrima tabe liquitur, et glacies incerto saucia sole, felicisque bonis non lenius uritur Hersedes, quam cum spinosis ignis supponitur herbis, 810 quae neque dant flammam lentoque vapore cremantur.
saepe mori voluit, ne quicquam tale videret, saepe velut crimen rigido narrare parenti;
denique in adverso venientem limine sedit exclusura deum. cui blandimenta precesque 815 verbaque iactanti mitissima 'desine!' dixit,
'hinc ego me non sum nisi te motura repulso.'
'stemus' ait 'pacto' velox Cyllenius 'isto!'
caelestique fores virga patefecit: at illi surgere conanti partes, quascumque sedendo 820 flectimur, ignava nequeunt gravitate moveri:
illa quidem pugnat recto se attollere trunco, sed genuum iunctura riget, frigusque per unguis labitur, et pallent amisso sanguine venae; utque malum late solet inmedicabile cancer 825 serpere et inlaesas vitiatis addere partes, sic letalis hiems paulatim in pectora venit vitalesque vias et respiramina clausit, nec conata loqui est nec, si conata fuisset, vocis habebat iter: saxum iam colla tenebat, 830 oraeque duruerant, signumque exsanguie sedebat;

nec lapis albus erat: sua mens infecerat illam.

Has ubi verborum poenas mentisque profanae cepit Atlantiades, dictas a Pallade terras linquit et ingreditur iactatis aethera pennis. 835 se vocat hunc genitor nec causam fassus amoris
'fide minister' ait 'iussorum, nate, meorum, pelle moram solitoque celer delabere cursu, quaeque tuam matrem tellus a parte sinistra suspicit (indigenae Sidonida nomine dicunt), 840 hanc pete, quodque procul montano gramine pasci armentum regale vides, ad litora verte!'
dixit, et expulsi iam dudum monte iuvenici litora iussa petunt, ubi magni filia regis ludere virginibus Tyriis comitata solebat. 845 non bene conveniunt nec in una sede morantur maiestas et amor; sceptri gravitate relicta ille pater rectorque deum, cui dextra trisulcis ignibus armata est, qui nutu concutit orbem, induitur faciem tauri mixtusque iuvenicis 850
mugit et in teneris formosus obambulat herbis.
quippe color nivis est, quam nec vestigia duri calcavere pedis nec solvit aquaticus auster.
colla toris exstant, armis palearia pendent, cornua vara quidem, sed quae contendere possis 855
facta manu, puraque magis perlucida gemma.
nullae in fronte minae, nec formidabile lumen:
pacem vultus habet. miratur Agenore nata, quod tam formosus, quod proelia nulla minetur;

sed quamvis mitem metuit contingere primo, 860 mox adit et flores ad candida porrigit ora.
gaudet amans et, dum veniat sperata voluptas, oscula dat manibus; vix iam, vix cetera differt;
et nunc adludit viridique exsultat in herba, nunc latus in fulvis niveum deponit harenis; 865 paulatimque metu dempto modo pectora praebet virginea plaudenda manu, modo cornua sertis inpedienda novis; ausa est quoque regia virgo nescia, quem premeret, tergo considerare tauri, cum deus a terra siccoque a litore sensim 870
falsa pedum primis vestigia ponit in undis; inde abit ulterius mediique per aequora ponti fert praedam: pavet haec litusque ablata relictum respicit et dextra cornum tenet, altera dorso inposita est; tremulae sinuantur flamine vestes.

LIBER TERTIVS

Iamque deus posita fallacis imagine tauri se confessus erat Dictaeaque rura tenebat, cum pater ignarus Cadmo perquirere raptam imperat et poenam, si non invenerit, addit exilium, facto pius et sceleratus eodem. 5 orbe pererrato (quis enim deprendere possit furta Iovis?) profugus patriamque iramque parentis vitat Agenorides Phoebique oracula supplex consulit et, quae sit tellus habitanda, requirit.
'bos tibi' Phoebus ait 'solis occurret in arvis, 10 nullum passa iugum curvique immunis aratri.
hac duce carpe vias et, qua requieverit herba, moenia fac condas Boeotiaque illa vocato.'
vix bene Castalio Cadmus descenderat antro, incustoditam lente videt ire iuvenecam 15
nullum servitii signum cervice gerentem.
subsequitur pressoque legit vestigia gressu auctoremque viae Phoebum taciturnus adorat.
iam vada Cephisi Panopesque evaserat arva:
bos stetit et tollens speciosam cornibus altis 20 ad caelum frontem mugitibus inpulit auras atque ita respiciens comites sua terga sequentis procubuit teneraque latus submisit in herba.
Cadmus agit grates peregrinaeque oscula terrae figit et ignotos montes agrosque salutat. 25

Sacra Iovi facturus erat: iubet ire ministros et petere e vivis libandas fontibus undas.
silva vetus stabat nulla violata securi, et specus in media virgis ac vimine densus efficiens humilem lapidum conpagibus arcum 30 uberibus fecundus aquis; ubi conditus antro

Martius anguis erat, cristis praesignis et auro;
igne micant oculi, corpus tumet omne venenis, tresque vibrant linguae, triplici stant ordine dentes.
quem postquam Tyria lucum de gente profecti 35 infausto tetigere gradu, demissaque in undas urna dedit sonitum, longo caput extulit antro caeruleus serpens horrendaque sibila misit.
effluxere urnae manibus sanguisque reliquit corpus et attonitos subitus tremor occupat artus. 40 ille volubilibus squamosos nexibus orbis torquet et inmensos saltu sinuatur in arcus ac media plus parte leves erectus in auras despicit omne nemus tantoque est corpore, quanto, si totum spectes, geminas qui separat arctos. 45 nec mora, Phoenicas, sive illi tela parabant sive fugam, sive ipse timor prohibebat utrumque, occupat: hos morsu, longis complexibus illos,
hos necat adflati funesta tabe veneni.

Fecerat exiguas iam sol altissimus umbras: 50
quae mora sit sociis, miratur Agenore natus vestigatque viros. tegumen derepta leoni pellis erat, telum splendenti lancea ferro et iaculum teloque animus praestantior omni.
ut nemus intravit letataque corpora vidit 55 victoremque supra spatiosi tergoris hostem tristia sanguinea lambentem vulnera lingua,
'aut ultor vestrae, fidissima pectora, mortis, aut comes' inquit 'ero.' dixit dextraque molarem sustulit et magnum magno conamine misit. 60 illius impulsu cum turribus ardua celsis moenia mota forent, serpens sine vulnere mansit loricaeque modo squamis defensus et atrae durtia pellis validos cute reppulit ictus;
at non durtia iaculum quoque vicit eadem, 65 quod medio lentae spinae curvamine fixum constitit et totum descendit in ilia ferrum.

ille dolore ferox caput in sua terga retorsit vulneraque adspexit fixumque hastile momordit, idque ubi vi multa partem labefecit in omnem, 70
vix tergo eripuit; ferrum tamen ossibus haesit.
tum vero postquam solitas accessit ad iras causa recens, plenis tumuerunt guttura venis, spumaque pestiferos circumfluit albida rictus, terraque rasa sonat squamis, quique halitus exit 75
ore niger Stygio, vitiatas inficit auras.

ipse modo inmensum spiris facientibus orbem cingitur, interdum longa trabe rectior adstat, inpete nunc vasto ceu concitus imbribus amnis fertur et obstantis proturbat pectore silvas. 80 cedit Agenorides paulum spolioque leonis sustinet incursus instantiaque ora retardat cuspidem praetenta: furit ille et inania duro vulnera dat ferro figitque in acumine dentes.
iamque venenifero sanguis manare palato 85 coeperat et virides adspergine tinxerat herbas;
sed leve vulnus erat, quia se retrahebat ab ictu laesaque colla dabat retro plagamque sedere cedendo arcebat nec longius ire sinebat, donec Agenorides coniectum in guttura ferrum 90 usque sequens pressit, dum retro quercus eunti obstitit et fixa est pariter cum robore cervix.
pondere serpentis curvata est arbor et ima parte flagellari gemuit sua robora caudae.

Dum spatium victor victi considerat hostis, 95
vox subito audita est; neque erat cognoscere promptum, unde, sed audita est: 'quid, Agenore nate, peremptum serpentem spectas? et tu spectabere serpens.'
ille diu pavidus pariter cum mente colorem perdiderat, gelidoque comae terrore rigeabant: 100 ecce viri fautrix superas delapsa per auras Pallas adest motaeque iubet supponere terrae vipereos dentes, populi incrementa futuri.

paret et, ut presso sulcum patefecit aratro, spargit humi iussos, mortalia semina, dentes. 105 inde (fide maius) glaebae coepere moveri, primaque de sulcis acies adparuit hastae, tegmina mox capitum picto nutantia cono, mox umeri pectusque onerataque bracchia telis existunt, crescitque seges clipeata virorum: 110 sic, ubi tolluntur festis aulaea theatris, surgere signa solent primumque ostendere vultus, cetera paulatim, placidoque educta tenore tota patent imoque pedes in margine ponunt.

Territus hoste novo Cadmus capere arma parabat: 115
'ne cape!' de populo, quem terra creaverat, unus exclamat 'nec te civilibus insere bellis!'
atque ita terrigenis rigido de fratribus unum comminus ense ferit, iaculo cadit eminus ipse; hunc quoque qui leto dederat, non longius illo 120
vivit et exspirat, modo quas acceperat auras, exemploque pari furit omnis turba, suoque Marte cadunt subiti per mutua vulnera fratres.
iamque brevis vitae spatium sortita iuventus sanguineam tepido plangebatur pectore matrem, 125 quinque superstitibus, quorum fuit unus Echion.
is sua iecit humo monitu Tritonidis arma fraternaeque fidem pacis petiitque deditque:
hos operis comites habuit Sidonius hospes, cum posuit iussus Phoebeis sortibus urbem. 130

Iam stabant Thebae, poterat iam, Cadme, videri exilio felix: soceri tibi Marsque Venusque contigerant; huc adde genus de coniuge tanta, tot natos natasque et, pignora cara, nepotes, hos quoque iam iuvenes; sed scilicet ultima semper 135 expectanda dies hominis, dicique beatus ante obitum nemo supremaque funera debet.

Prima nepos inter tot res tibi, Cadme, secundas causa fuit luctus, alienaque cornua fronti addita, vosque, canes satiatae sanguine erili. 140 at bene si quaeras, Fortunae crimen in illo, non scelus invenies; quod enim scelus error habebat?

Mons erat infectus variarum caede ferarum, iamque dies medius rerum contraxerat umbras et sol ex aequo meta distabat utraque, 145 cum iuvenis placido per devia lustra vagantes participes operum conpellat Hyantius ore:
'lina madent, comites, ferrumque cruore ferarum, fortunaque dies habuit satis; altera lucem cum croceis invecta rotis Aurora reducet, 150 propositum repetemus opus: nunc Phoebus utraque distat idem meta finditque vaporibus arva.
sistite opus praesens nodosaque tollite lina!
iussa viri faciunt intermittuntque laborem.

Vallis erat piceis et acuta densa cupressu, 155 nomine Gargaphie succinctae sacra Dianae, cuius in extremo est antrum nemorale recessu arte laboratum nulla: simulaverat artem ingenio natura suo; nam pumice vivo et levibus tofis nativum duxerat arcum; 160 fons sonat a dextra tenui perlucidus unda, margine gramineo patulos incinctus hiatus.
hic dea silvarum venatu fessa solebat virgineos artus liquido perfundere rore.
quo postquam subiit, nympharum tradidit uni 165 armigerae iaculum pharetramque arcusque retentos, altera depositae subiecit bracchia pallae, vincla duae pedibus demunt; nam doctior illis Ismenis Crocale sparsos per colla capillos colligit in nodum, quamvis erat ipsa solutis. 170 excipiunt laticem Nepheleque Hyaleque Rhanisque et Psecas et Phiale funduntque capacibus urnis.
dumque ibi perluitur solita Titania lympa, ecce nepos Cadmi dilata parte laborum per nemus ignotum non certis passibus errans 175

pervenit in lucum: sic illum fata ferebant.
qui simul intravit rorantia fontibus antra, sicut erant, nudae viso sua pectora nymphae percussere viro subitisque ululatibus omne inplevere nemus circumfusaeque Dianam 180 corporibus texere suis; tamen altior illis ipsa dea est colloque tenus supereminet omnis.
qui color infectis adversi solis ab ictu nubibus esse solet aut purpureae Aurorae, is fuit in vultu visae sine veste Dianae. 185 quae, quamquam comitum turba est stipata suarum, in latus obliquum tamen adstitit oraque retro flexit et, ut vellet promptas habuisse sagittas, quas habuit sic hausit aquas vultumque virilem perfudit spargensque comas ultricibus undis 190 addidit haec cladis praenuntia verba futurae:
'nunc tibi me posito visam velamine narres, sit poteris narrare, licet!' nec plura minata dat sparso capiti vivacis cornua cervi, dat spatium collo summasque cacuminat aures 195 cum pedibusque manus, cum longis bracchia mutat cruribus et velat maculoso vellere corpus; additus et pavor est: fugit Autonoeius heros et se tam celerem cursu miratur in ipso.
ut vero vultus et cornua vidit in unda, 200
'me miserum!' dicturus erat: vox nulla secuta est!
ingemuit: vox illa fuit, lacrimaeque per ora non sua fluxerunt; mens tantum pristina mansit.
quid faciat? repetatne domum et regalia tecta an lateat silvis? pudor hoc, timor inpedit illud. 205 Dum dubitat, videre canes, primique Melampus Ichnobatesque sagax latratu signa dedere, heu! famulos fugit ipse suos. clamare libebat:

'Actaeon ego sum: dominum cognoscite vestrum!' 230
verba animo desunt; resonat latratibus aether.
prima Melanchaetes in tergo vulnera fecit, proxima Theridamas, Oresitrophos haesit in armo:
tardius exierant, sed per compendia montis anticipata via est; dominum retinentibus illis, 235

ignari instigant oculisque Actaeona quaerunt et velut absentem certatim Actaeona clamant (ad nomen caput ille refert) et abesse queruntur 245 nec capere oblatae segnem spectacula praedae.
vellet abesse quidem, sed adest; velletque videre,

non etiam sentire canum fera facta suorum.
undique circumstant, mersisque in corpore rostris dilacerant falsi dominum sub imagine cervi, 250 nec nisi finita per plurima vulnera vita ira pharetratae fertur satiata Dianae.

Rumor in ambiguo est; aliis violentior aequo visa dea est, alii laudant dignamque severa virginitate vocant: pars invenit utraque causas. 255 sola Iovis coniunx non tam, culpae probe, ne, eloquitur, quam clade domus ab Agenore ductae gaudet et a Tyria collectum paelice transfert in generis socios odium; subit ecce priori causa recens, gravidamque dolet de semine magni 260 esse Iovis Semeles; dum linguam ad iurgia solvit,
'profeci quid enim totiens per iurgia?' dixit,
'ipsa petenda mihi est; ipsam, si maxima Iuno rite vocor, perdam, si me gemmantia dextra sceptra tenere decet, si sum regina Iovisque 265 et soror et coniunx, certe soror. at, puto, furto est contenta, et thalami brevis est iniuria nostri.
concipit++id derat++manifestaque crimina pleno fert utero et mater, quod vix mihi contigit, uno de Iove vult fieri: tanta est fiducia formae. 270 fallat eam faxo; nec sum Saturnia, si non ab Iove mersa suo Stygias penetrabit in undas.'

Surgit ab his solio fulvaeque recondita nube limen adit Semeles nec nubes ante removit quam simulavit anum posuitque ad tempora canos 275 sulcavitque cutem rugis et curva trementi membra tulit passu; vocem quoque fecit anilem, ipsaque erat Beroe, Semeles Epidauria nutrix.
ergo ubi captato sermone diuque loquendo ad nomen venere Iovis, suspirat et 'opto, 280 Iuppiter ut sit' ait; 'metuo tamen omnia: multi nomine divorum thalamos iniere pudicos.
nec tamen esse Iovem satis est: det pignus amoris, si modo verus is est; quantusque et qualis ab alta lunone excipitur, tantus talisque, rogato, 285 det tibi complexus suaque ante insignia sumat!

Talibus ignaram Iuno Cadmeida dictis formarat: rogat illa Iovem sine nomine munus.
cui deus 'elige!' ait 'nullam patiere repulsam, quoque magis credas, Stygii quoque conscia sunt 290 numina torrentis: timor et deus ille deorum est.'
laeta malo nimiumque potens perituraque amantis obsequio Semele 'qualem Saturnia' dixit
'te solet amplecti, Veneris cum foedus initis, da mihi te talem!' voluit deus ora loquentis 295
opprimere: exierat iam vox properata sub auras.
ingemuit; neque enim non haec optasse, neque ille non iurasse potest. ergo maestissimus altum aethera conscendit vultuque sequentia traxit nubila, quis nimbos inmixtaque fulgura ventis 300 addidit et tonitrus et inevitabile fulmen;
qua tamen usque potest, vires sibi demere temptat nec, quo centimanum deiecerat igne Typhoea, nunc armatur eo: nimium feritatis in illo est.
est aliud levius fulmen, cui dextra cyclosum 305 saevitiae flammaeque minus, minus addidit irae:
tela secunda vocant superi; capit illa domumque intrat Agenoream. corpus mortale tumultus non tulit aetherios donisque iugalibus arsit.
inperfectus adhuc infans genetricis ab alvo 310 eripitur patrioque tener (si credere dignum est) insuitur femori maternaque tempora complet.
furtim illum primis Iuno matertera cunis educat, inde datum nympphae Nyseides antris occuluere suis lactisque alimenta dedere. 315

Dumque ea per terras fatali lege geruntur tutaque bis geniti sunt incunabula Bacchi, forte Iovem memorant diffusum nectare curas seposuisse graves vacuaque agitasse remissos cum lunone iocos et 'maior vestra profecto est, 320 quam quae contingit maribus' dixisse 'voluptas.'

illa negat. placuit quae sit sententia docti quaerere Tiresiae: Venus huic erat utraque nota.
nam duo magnorum viridi coeuntia silva corpora serpentum baculi violaverat ictu 325 deque viro factus (mirabile) femina septem egerat autumnos; octavo rursus eosdem vidit, et 'est vestrae si tanta potentia plagae' dixit, 'ut auctoris sortem in contraria mutet, nunc quoque vos feriam.' percussis anguibus isdem 330 forma prior rediit, genetivaque venit imago.
arbiter hic igitur sumptus de lite iocosa dicta Iovis firmat: gravius Saturnia iusto nec pro materia fertur doluisse sui que iudicis aeterna damnavit lumina nocte; 335 at pater omnipotens (neque enim licet inrita cuiquam facta dei fecisse deo) pro lumine adempto scire futura dedit poenamque levavit honore.

Ille per Aonias fama celeberrimus urbes inreprehensa dabat populo responsa petenti; 340 prima fide vocisque ratae temptamina sumpsit caerulea Liriope, quam quondam flumine curvo implicuit clausaeque suis Cephisos in undis vim tulit: enixa est utero pulcherrima pleno infantem nympha, iam tunc qui posset amari, 345 Narcissumque vocat. de quo consultus, an esset tempora maturae visurus longa senectae, fatidicus vates 'si se non noverit' inquit.
vana diu visa est vox auguris: exitus illam resque probat letique genus novitasque furoris. 350 namque ter ad quinos unum Cephisius annum addiderat poteratque puer iuvenisque videri:
multi illum iuvenes, multae cupiere puellae;
sed fuit in tenera tam dura superbia forma, nulli illum iuvenes, nullae tetigere puellae. 355

adspicit hunc trepidos agitantem in retia cervos vocalis nymphe, quae nec reticere loquenti nec prior ipsa loqui didicit, resonabilis Echo.

Corpus adhuc Echo, non vox erat et tamen usum garrula non alium, quam nunc habet, oris habebat, 360 reddere de multis ut verba novissima posset.
fecerat hoc Iuno, quia, cum deprendere posset sub Iove saepe suo nymphas in monte iacentis, illa deam longo prudens sermone tenebat, dum fugerent nymphae. postquam hoc Saturnia sensit, 365
'huius' ait 'linguae, qua sum delusa, potestas parva tibi dabitur vocisque brevissimus usus,' reque minas firmat. tantum haec in fine loquendi ingeminat voces auditaque verba reportat.
ergo ubi Narcissum per devia rura vagantem 370
vidit et incaluit, sequitur vestigia furtim, quoque magis sequitur, flamma propiore calescit, non aliter quam cum summis circumlita taedis admotas rapiunt vivacia sulphura flammis.
o quotiens voluit blandis accedere dictis 375 et mollis adhibere preces! natura repugnat nec sinit, incipiat, sed, quod sinit, illa parata est expectare sonos, ad quos sua verba remittat.
forte puer comitum seductus ab agmine fido dixerat: 'ecquis adest?' et 'adest' responderat Echo. 380 hic stupet, utque aciem partes dimittit in omnis, voce 'veni!' magna clamat: vocat illa vocantem.
respicit et rursus nullo veniente 'quid' inquit
'me fugis?' et totidem, quot dixit, verba recepit.
perstat et alternae deceptus imagine vocis 385
'huc coeamus' ait, nullique libentius umquam responsura sono 'coeamus' rettulit Echo et verbis favet ipsa suis egressaque silva ibat, ut iniceret sperato brachia collo; ille fugit fugiensque 'manus complexibus aufer! 390 ante' ait 'emoriar, quam sit tibi copia nostri';

rettulit illa nihil nisi 'sit tibi copia nostri!'
spreta latet silvis pudibundaque frondibus ora protegit et solis ex illo vivit in antris; sed tamen haeret amor crescitque dolore repulsae; 395 extenuant vigiles corpus miserabile curae adducitque cutem macies et in aera sucus corporis omnis abit; vox tantum atque ossa supersunt:
vox manet, ossa ferunt lapidis traxisse figuram.
inde latet silvis nulloque in monte videtur, 400 omnibus auditur: sonus est, qui vivit in illa.

Sic hanc, sic alias undis aut montibus ortas luserat hic nymphas, sic coetus ante viriles; inde manus aliquis despectus ad aethera tollens
'sic amet ipse licet, sic non potiatur amato!' 405 dixerat: adsensit precibus Rhamnusia iustis.
fons erat inlimis, nitidis argenteus undis, quem neque pastores neque pastae monte capellae contigerant aliudve pecus, quem nulla volucris nec fera turbarat nec lapsus ab arbore ramus; 410 gramen erat circa, quod proximus umor alebat, silvaque sole locum passura tepescere nullo.
hic puer et studio venandi lassus et aestu procubuit faciemque loci fontemque secutus, dumque sitim sedare cupit, sitis altera crevit, 415 dumque bibit, visae correptus imagine formae spem sine corpore amat, corpus putat esse, quod umbra est.
adstupet ipse sibi vultuque inmotus eodem haeret, ut e Pario formatum marmore signum; spectat humi positus geminum, sua lumina, sidus 420 et dignos Baccho, dignos et Apolline crines inpubesque genas et eburnea colla decusque oris et in niveo mixtum candore ruborem, cunctaque miratur, quibus est mirabilis ipse:
se cupit inprudens et, qui probat, ipse probatur, 425 dumque petit, petitur, pariterque accendit et ardet.
inrita fallaci quotiens dedit oscula fonti,

in mediis quotiens visum captantia collum bracchia mersit aquis nec se deprendit in illis!
quid videat, nescit; sed quod videt, uritur illo, 430
atque oculos idem, qui decipit, incitat error.
credule, quid frustra simulacra fugacia captas?
quod petis, est nusquam; quod amas, avertere, perdes!
ista repercussae, quam cernis, imaginis umbra est:
nil habet ista sui; tecum venitque manetque; 435
tecum discedet, si tu discedere possis!

Non illum Cereris, non illum cura quietis abstrahere inde potest, sed opaca fusus in herba spectat inexploto mendacem lumine formam perque oculos perit ipse suos; paulumque levatus 440 ad circumstantes tendens sua bracchia silvas
'ecquis, io silvae, crudelius' inquit 'amavit?
scitis enim et multis latebra opportuna fuistis.
ecquem, cum vestrae tot agantur saecula vitae, qui sic tabuerit, longo meministis in aevo? 445 et placet et video; sed quod videoque placetque, non tamen invenio'++tantus tenet error amantem++
'quoque magis doleam, nec nos mare separat ingens nec via nec montes nec clausis moenia portis; exigua prohibemur aqua! cupit ipse teneri: 450 nam quotiens liquidis porreximus oscula lymphis, hic totiens ad me resupino nititur ore.
posse putes tangi: minimum est, quod amantibus obstat.
quisquis es, huc exi! quid me, puer unice, fallis quove petitus abis? certe nec forma nec aetas 455 est mea, quam fugias, et amarunt me quoque nymphae!
spem mihi nescio quam vultu promittis amico, cumque ego porrexi tibi bracchia, porrigis ultro, cum risi, adrides; lacrimas quoque saepe notavi me lacrimante tuas; nutu quoque signa remittis 460 et, quantum motu formosi suspicor oris, verba refers aures non pervenientia nostras!
iste ego sum: sensi, nec me mea fallit imago;

uror amore mei: flammam moveoque feroque.
quid faciam? rogem ane rogem? quid deinde rogabo? 465 quod cupio mecum est: inopem me copia fecit.
o utinam a nostro secedere corpore possem!
votum in amante novum, vellem, quod amamus, abesset.
iamque dolor vires adimit, nec tempora vitae longa meae superant, primoque exstinguor in aevo. 470 nec mihi mors gravis est posituro morte dolores, hic, qui diligitur, vellem diuturnior esset;
nunc duo concordem anima moriemur in una.'

Dixit et ad faciem rediit male sanus eandem et lacrimis turbavit aquas, obscuraque moto 475 reddita forma lacu est; quam cum vidisset abire,
'quo refugis? remane nec me, crudelis, amantem desere!' clamavit; 'liceat, quod tangere non est, adspicere et misero praebere alimenta furori!'
dumque dolet, summa vestem deduxit ab ora 480 nudaque marmoreis percussit pectora palmis.
pectora traxerunt roseum percussa ruborem, non aliter quam poma solent, quae candida parte, parte rubent, aut ut variis solet uva racemis ducere purpureum nondum matura colorem. 485 quae simul adspexit liquefacta rursus in unda, non tulit ulterius, sed ut intabescere flavae igne levi cerae matutinaeque pruinae sole tepente solent, sic attenuatus amore liquitur et tecto paulatim carpitur igni; 490 et neque iam color est mixto candore rubori, nec vigor et vires et quae modo visa placebant, nec corpus remanet, quondam quod amaverat Echo.
quae tamen ut vidit, quamvis irata memorque, indoluit, quotiensque puer miserabilis 'eheu' 495 dixerat, haec resonis iterabat vocibus 'eheu';
cumque suos manibus percusserat ille lacertos,
haec quoque reddebat sonitum plangoris eundem.
ultima vox solitam fuit haec spectantis in undam:

'heu frustra dilecte puer!' totidemque remisit 500
verba locus, dictoque vale 'vale' inquit et Echo.
ille caput viridi fessum submisit in herba, lumina mors clausit domini mirantia formam:
tum quoque se, postquam est inferna sede receptus, in Stygia spectabat aqua. planxere sorores 505
naides et sectos fratri posuere capillos, planxerunt dryades; plangentibus adsonat Echo.
iamque rogum quassasque faces feretrumque parabant:
nusquam corpus erat; croceum pro corpore florem inveniunt foliis medium cingentibus albis. 510

Cognita res meritam vati per Achaidas urbes attulerat famam, nomenque erat auguris ingens; spernit Echionides tamen hunc ex omnibus unus contemptor superum Pentheus praesagaque ridet verba senis tenebrasque et cladem lucis ademptae 515 obicit. ille movens albentia tempora canis
'quam felix esses, si tu quoque luminis huius orbis' ait 'fieres, ne Bacchica sacra videres!
namque dies aderit, quam non procul auguror esse, qua novus huc veniat, proles Semeleia, Liber, 520 quem nisi templorum fueris dignatus honore, mille lacer spargere locis et sanguine silvas foedabis matremque tuam matrisque sorores.
eveniet! neque enim dignabere numen honore, meque sub his tenebris nimium vidisse quereris.' 525 taliam dicentem proturbat Echione natus;
dicta fides sequitur, responsaque vatis aguntur.

Liber adest, festisque fremunt ululatibus agri:
turba ruit, mixtaeque viris matresque nurusque vulgusque proceresque ignota ad sacra feruntur. 530
'Quis furor, anguigenae, proles Mavortia, vestras attonuit mentes?' Pentheus ait; 'aerane tantum aere repulsa valent et adunco tibia cornu et magicae fraudes, ut, quos non bellicus ensis, non tuba terruerit, non strictis agmina telis, 535

femineae voces et mota insania vino obscenique greges et inania tympana vincant?
vosne, senes, mirer, qui longa per aequora vecti hac Tyron, hac profugos posuistis sede penates, nunc sinitis sine Marte capi? vosne, acrior aetas, 540
o iuvenes, propiorque meae, quos arma tenere, non thyrsos, galeaque tegi, non fronde decebat?
este, precor, memores, qua sitis stirpe creati, illiusque animos, qui multos perdidit unus, sumite serpentis! pro fontibus ille lacuque 545
interiit: at vos pro fama vincite vestra!
ille dedit leto fortes: vos pellite molles et patrium retinete decus! si fata vetabant stare diu Thebas, utinam tormenta virique moenia diruerent, ferrumque ignisque sonarent! 550 essemus miseri sine crimine, sorsque querenda, non celanda foret, lacrimaeque pudore carerent;
at nunc a puero Thebae capientur inermi, quem neque bella iuvant nec tela nec usus equorum, sed madidus murra crinis mollesque coronae 555 purpuraque et pictis intextum vestibibus aurum, quem quidem ego actutum (modo vos absistite) cogam adsumptumque patrem commentaque sacra fateri.
an satis Acrisio est animi, contemnere vanum numen et Argolicas venienti claudere portas: 560 Pentheia terrebit cum totis advena Thebis?
ite citi' (famulis hoc imperat), 'ite ducemque attrahite huc vinctum! iussis mora segnis abesto!'
hunc avus, hunc Athamas, hunc cetera turba suorum corripiunt dictis frustra que inhibere laborant. 565 acrior admonitu est inritaturque retenta et crescit rabies remoraminaque ipsa nocebant:
sic ego torrentem, qua nil obstabat eunti, lenius et modico strepitu decurrere vidi;
at quacumque trabes obstructaque saxa tenebant, 570
spumeus et fervens et ab obice saevior ibat.

Ecce cruentati redeunt et, Bacchus ubi esset, quaerenti domino Bacchum vidisse negarunt;
'hunc' dixere 'tamen comitem famulumque sacrorum cepimus' et tradunt manibus post terga ligatis 575 sacra dei quendam Tyrrhena gente secutum.
adspicit hunc Pentheus oculis, quos ira tremendos fecerat, et quamquam poenae vix tempora differt,
'o periture tuaque aliis documenta dature morte,' ait, 'ede tuum nomen nomenque parentum 580 et patriam, morisque novi cur sacra frequentes!'
ille metu vacuus 'nomen mihi' dixit 'Acoetes, patria Maeonia est, humili de plebe parentes.
non mihi quae duri colerent pater arva iuveni, lanigerosve greges, non ulla armenta reliquit; 585 pauper et ipse fuit linoque solebat et hamis decipere et calamo salientis ducere pisces.
ars illi sua census erat; cum traderet artem,
"accipe, quas habeo, studii successor et heres," dixit "opes," moriensque mihi nihil ille reliquit 590 praeter aquas: unum hoc possum adpellare paternum.
mox ego, ne scopulis haererem semper in isdem, addidici regimen dextra moderante carinae flectere et Oleniae sidus pluviale capellae Taygetenque Hyadasque oculis Arctonque notavi 595 ventorumque domos et portus puppibus aptos.
forte petens Delum Chiaie telluris ad oras adplicor et dextris adducor litora remis doque levis saltus udaeque inmittor harenae:
nox ibi consumpta est; aurora rubescere primo 600 coeperat: exsurgo laticesque inferre recentis admoneo monstroque viam, quae ducat ad undas; ipse quid aura mihi tumulo promittat ab alto prospicio comitesque voco repetoque carinam.
"adsumus en" inquit sociorum primus Opheltis, 605 utque putat, praedam deserto nactus in agro, virginea puerum ducit per litora forma.

ille mero somnoque gravis titubare videtur vixque sequi; specto cultum faciemque gradumque:
nil ibi, quod credi posset mortale, videbam. 610 et sensi et dixi sociis: "quod numen in isto corpore sit, dubito; sed corpore numen in isto est!
quisquis es, o faveas nostrisque laboribus adsis;
his quoque des veniam!" "pro nobis mitte precari!" Dictys ait, quo non alius conscendere summas 615
ocior antemnas prenoque rudente relabi.
hoc Libys, hoc flavus, prorae tutela, Melanthus, hoc probat Alcimedon et, qui requiemque modumque voce dabat remis, animorum hortator, Epopeus, hoc omnes alii: praedae tam caeca cupido est. 620
"non tamen hanc sacro violari pondere pinum perpetiar" dixi: "pars hic mihi maxima iuris" inque aditu obsisto: furit audacissimus omni de numero Lycabas, qui Tusca pulsus ab urbe exilium dira poenam pro caede luebat; 625 is mihi, dum resto, iuvenali guttura pugno rupit et excussum misisset in aequora, si non haessem, quamvis amens, in fune retentus.
in pia turba probat factum; tum denique Bacchus (Bacchus enim fuerat), veluti clamore solutus 630 sit sopor aque mero redeant in pectora sensus,
"quid facitis? quis clamor?" ait "qua, dicite, nautae, huc ope perveni? quo me deferre paratis?"
"pone metum" Proreus, "et quos contingere portus ede velis!" dixit; "terra sistere petita." 635
"Naxon" ait Liber "cursus advertite vestros!
illa mihi domus est, vobis erit hospita tellus." per mare fallaces perque omnia numina iurant sic fore meque iubent pictae dare vela carinae.
dextera Naxos erat: dextera mihi lintea danti 640
"quid facis, o demens? quis te furor," inquit "Acoete," pro se quisque, "tenet? laevam pete!" maxima nutu pars mihi significat, pars quid velit ore susurro.

obstipui "capiat" que "aliquis moderamina!" dixi meque ministerio scelerisque artisque removi. 645 increpor a cunctis, totumque inmurmurat agmen;
e quibus Aethalion "te scilicet omnis in uno nostra salus posita est!" ait et subit ipse meumque explet opus Naxoque petit diversa relictata.
tum deus inludens, tamquam modo denique fraudem 650 senserit, e puppi pontum prospectat adunca et flenti similis "non haec mihi litora, nautae, promisistis" ait, "non haec mihi terra rogata est!
quo merui poenam facto? quae gloria vestra est, si puerum iuvenes, si multi fallitis unum?" 655 iamdudum flebam: lacrimas manus inopia nostras ridet et inpellit properantibus aequora remis.
per tibi nunc ipsum (nec enim praesentior illo est deus) adiuro, tam me tibi vera referre quam veri maiora fide: stetit aequore puppis 660 haud aliter, quam si siccam navale teneret.
illi admirantes remorum in verbere perstant velaque deducunt geminaque ope currere temptant:
inpediunt hederiae remos nexuque recurvo serpunt et gravidis distinguunt vela corymbis. 665 ipse racemiferis frontem circumdatus uvis pampineis agit velatam frondibus hastam; quem circa tigres simulacraque inania lyncum
pictarumque iacent fera corpora pantherarum.
exsiluere viri, sive hoc insania fecit 670 sive timor, primusque Medon nigrescere toto corpore et expresso spinae curvamine flecti incipit. huic Lycabas "in quae miracula" dixit
"verteris?" et lati rictus et panda loquenti naris erat, squamamque cutis durata trahebat. 675 at Libys obstantis dum vult obvertere remos, in spatium resilire manus breve vidit et illas iam non esse manus, iam pinnas posse vocari.
alter ad intortos cupiens dare bracchia funes bracchia non habuit truncoque repandus in undas 680 corpore desiluit: falcata novissima cauda est, qualia dividuae sinuantur cornua lunae.

undique dant saltus multaque adspergine rorant emerguntque iterum redeuntque sub aequora rursus inque chori ludunt speciem lascivaque iactant 685 corpora et acceptum patulis mare naribus efflant.

de modo viginti (tot enim ratis illa ferebat) restabam solus: pavidum gelidumque trementi corpore vixque meum firmat deus "excute" dicens
"corde metum Diamque tene!" delatus in illam 690 accessi sacris Baccheaque sacra frequento.'

'Praebuimus longis' Pentheus 'ambagibus aures,' inquit 'ut ira mora vires absumere posset.

praecipitem, famuli, rapite hunc cruciataque diris protinus abstractus solidis Tyrrhenus Acoetes

sponte sua patuisse fores lapsasque lacertis

Perstat Echionides, nec iam iubet ire, sed ipse vadit, ubi electus facienda ad sacra Cithaeron ut fremit acer equus, cum bellicus aere canoro

Pentheia sic ictus longis ululatibus aether

Monte fere medio est, cingentibus ultima silvis, purus ab arboribus, spectabilis undique, campus:
hic oculis illum cernentem sacra profanis 710

prima suum misso violavit Penthea thyrsos

ille mihi feriendus aper.' ruit omnis in unum 715

iam trepidum, iam verba minus violenta loquentem, iam se damnantem, iam se peccasse fatentem.
saucius ille tamen 'fer opem, matertera' dixit
'Autonoe! moveant animos Actaeonis umbrae!' 720 illa, quis Actaeon, nescit dextramque precanti abstulit, Inoo lacerata est altera raptu.
non habet infelix quae matri bracchia tendat, trunca sed ostendens dereptis vulnera membris
'adspice, mater!' ait. visis ululavit Agaue 725 collaque iactavit movitque per aera crinem avulsumque caput digitis complexa cruentis clamat: 'io comites, opus hoc victoria nostra est!'
non citius frondes autumnii frigore tactas iamque male haerentes alta rapit arbore ventus, 730 quam sunt membra viri manibus direpta nefandis.
talibus exemplis monitae nova sacra frequentant turaque dant sanctasque colunt Ismenides aras.

id vitium nulli per saecula longa notatum++ quid non sentit amor? ++ primi vidistis amantes et vocis fecistis iter, tutaeque per illud murmure blanditiae minimo transire solebant. 70 saepe, ubi constiterant hinc Thisbe, Pyramus illinc, inque vices fuerat captatus anhelitus oris, “invide” dicebant “paries, quid amantibus obstas?

quantum erat, ut sineres toto nos corpore iungi aut, hoc si nimium est, vel ad oscula danda pateres? 75 nec sumus ingrati: tibi nos debere fatemur, oscula quisque suae non pervenientia contra. 80 postera nocturnos Aurora removerat ignes, solque pruinosas radiis siccaverat herbas:

ad solitum coiere locum. tum murmure parvo pacta placent; et lux, tarde discedere visa, praecipitatur aquis, et aquis nox exit ab isdem.

‘Callida per tenebras versato cardine Thisbe egreditur fallitque suos adopertaque vultum pervenit ad tumulum dictaque sub arbore sedit. 95 audacem faciebat amor. venit ecce recenti caede leaena boum spumantis oblita rictus quam procul ad lunae radios Babylonia Thisbe vidit et obscurum timido pede fugit in antrum, 100 dumque fugit, tergo velamina lapsa reliquit.

ut lea saeva sitim multa conpescuit unda, dum redit in silvas, inventos forte sine ipsa ore cruentato tenues laniavit amictus.

serius egressus vestigia vidit in alto 105 pulvere certa ferae totoque expalluit ore Pyramus; ut vero vestem quoque sanguine tinctam repperit, "una duos" inquit "nox perdet amantes, e quibus illa fuit longa dignissima vita;
nostra nocens anima est. ego te, miseranda, peremi, 110 in loca plena metus qui iussi nocte venires nec prior huc veni. nostrum divellite corpus et scelerata fero consumite viscera morsu, utque dedit notae lacrimas, dedit oscula vesti,

"accipe nunc" inquit "nostri quoque sanguinis haustus!"

'Ecce metu nondum posito, ne fallat amantem, illa redit iuvenemque oculis animoque requirit,

dum dubitat, tremebunda videt pulsare cruentum membra solum, retroque pedem tulit, oraque buxo pallidiora gerens exhorruit aequoris instar, 135 quod tremit, exigua cum summum stringitur aura.
sed postquam remorata suos cognovit amores, percutit indignos claro plangore lacertos et laniata comas amplexaque corpus amatum vulnera supplevit lacrimis fletumque cruori 140 miscuit et gelidis in vultibus oscula figens “Pyrame,” clamavit, “quis te mihi casus ademit?

Pyrame, responde! tua te carissima Thisbe nominat; exaudi vultusque attolle iacentes!”
ad nomen Thisbes oculos a morte gravatos 145
Pyramus erexit visaque recondidit illa.

‘Quae postquam vestemque suam cognovit et ense vidit ebur vacuum, “tua te manus” inquit “amorque perdidit, infelix! est et mihi fortis in unum hoc manus, est et amor: dabit hic in vulnera vires. 150 persequar extinctum letique miserrima dicar causa comesque tui: quique a me morte revelli heu sola poteris, poteris nec morte revelli.
hoc tamen amborum verbis estote rogati,
o multum miseri meus illiusque parentes, 155
ut, quos certus amor, quos hora novissima iunxit, conponi tumulo non invideatis eodem;
at tu quae ramis arbor miserabile corpus nunc tegis unius, mox es tectura duorum, signa tene caedis pullosque et luctibus aptos 160 semper habe fetus, gemini monimenta cruoris.”
dixit et aptato pectus mucrone sub imum incubuit ferro, quod adhuc a caede tepebat.
vota tamen tetigere deos, tetigere parentes;
nam color in pomo est, ubi permaturuit, ater, 165 quodque rogis superest, una requiescit in urna.’

Desierat: mediumque fuit breve tempus, et orsa est dicere Leuconoe: vocem tenuere sorores.
‘hunc quoque, siderea qui temperat omnia luce, cepit amor Solem: Solis referemus amores. 170 primus adulterium Veneris cum Marte putatur hic vidisse deus; videt hic deus omnia primus.
indoluit facto Iunonigenaeque marito furta tori furtique locum monstravit, at illi et mens et quod opus fabrilis dextra tenebat 175

excidit: extemplo graciles ex aere catenas retiaque et laqueos, quae lumina fallere possent, elimat. non illud opus tenuissima vincant stamina, non summo quae pendet aranea tigno; utque levis tactus momentaque parva sequantur, 180
efficit et lecto circumdata collocat arte.
ut venere torum coniunx et adulter in unum, arte viri vinclisque nova ratione paratis in mediis ambo deprensi amplexibus haerent.
Lemnius extemplo valvas patefecit eburnas 185 inmisitque deos; illi iacuere ligati turpiter, atque aliquis de dis non tristibus optat sic fieri turpis; superi risere, diuque haec fuit in toto notissima fabula caelo.

‘Exigit indicii memorem Cythereia poenam 190 inque vices illum, tectos qui laesit amores, laedit amore pari. quid nunc, Hyperione nate, forma colorque tibi radiataque lumina prosunt?
nempe, tuis omnes qui terras ignibus uris, ureris igne novo; quique omnia cernere debes, 195 Leucothoen spectas et virgine figis in una, quos mundo debes, oculos. modo surgis Eoo temperius caelo, modo serius incidis undis, spectandique mora brumalis porrigis horas;
deficis interdum, vitiumque in lumina mentis 200 transit et obscurus mortalia pectora terres.
nec tibi quod lunae terris propioris imago obstiterit, palles: facit hunc amor iste colorem.
diligis hanc unam, nec te Clymeneque Rhodosque nec tenet Aeaetae genetrix pulcherrima Circes 205 quaeque tuos Clytie quamvis despecta petebat concubitus ipsoque illo grave vulnus habebat tempore: Leucothoe multarum obliviam fecit, gentis odoriferae quam formosissima partu edidit Eurynome; sed postquam filia crevit, 210 quam mater cunctas, tam matrem filia vicit.

rexit Achaemenias urbes pater Orchamus isque septimus a prisco numeratur origine Belo.

'Axe sub Hesperio sunt pascua Solis equorum: ambrosiam pro gramine habent; ea fessa diurnis 215
membra ministeriis nutrit reparatque labori.
dumque ibi quadrupedes caelestia pabula carpunt noxque vicem peragit, thalamos deus intrat amatos, versus in Eurynomes faciem genetricis, et inter bis sex Leucothoen famulas ad lumina cernit 220 levia versato ducentem stamina fuso.
ergo ubi ceu mater carae dedit oscula natae,
"res" ait "arcana est: famulae, discedite neve eripite arbitrium matri secreta loquendi." paruerant, thalamoque deus sine teste relicto 225
"ille ego sum" dixit, "qui longum metior annum, omnia qui video, per quem videt omnia tellus, mundi oculus: mihi, crede, places." pavet illa, metuque et colus et fusus digitis cecidere remissis.
ipse timor decuit. nec longius ille moratus 230
in veram rediit speciem solitumque nitorem;
at virgo quamvis inopino territa visu victa nitore dei posita vim passa querella est.

'Invidit Clytie (neque enim moderatus in illa Solis amor fuerat) stimulataque paelicis ira 235 vulgat adulterium diffamatamque parenti indicat. ille ferox inmansuetusque precantem tendentemque manus ad lumina Solis et "ille vim tulit invitae" dicentem defodit alta crudus humo tumulumque super gravis addit harenae. 240 dissipat hunc radiis Hyperione natus iterque dat tibi, qua possis defossos promere vultus; nec tu iam poteris enectum pondere terrae tollere, nympa, caput corpusque exsanguie iacebas:
nil illo fertur volucrum moderator equorum 245
post Phaethonteos vidisse dolentius ignes.
ille quidem gelidos radiorum viribus artus si queat in vivum temptat revocare calorem;

sed quoniam tantis fatum conatibus obstat, nectare odorato sparsit corpusque locumque 250 multaque praequestus "tanges tamen aethera" dixit.
protinus inbutum caelesti nectare corpus delicuit terramque suo madefecit odore, virgaque per glaebas sensim radicibus actis turea surrexit tumulumque cacumine rupit. 255

'At Clytlen, quamvis amor excusare dolorem indiciumque dolor poterat, non amplius auctor lucis adit Venerisque modum sibi fecit in illa.
tabuit ex illo dementer amoribus usa;
nympharum inpatiens et sub love nocte dieque 260
sedit humo nuda nudis incompta capillis, perque novem luces expers undaeque cibique rore mero lacrimisque suis ieiunia pavit nec se movit humo; tantum spectabat euntis ora dei vultusque suos flectebat ad illum. 265 membra ferunt haesisse solo, partemque coloris luridus exsanguis pallor convertit in herbas;
est in parte rubor violaeque simillimus ora flos tegit. illa suum, quamvis radice tenetur, vertitur ad Solem mutataque servat amorem.' 270 dixerat, et factum mirabile ceperat auris;
pars fieri potuisse negant, pars omnia veros posse deos memorant: sed non est Bacchus in illis.

Poscitur Alcithoe, postquam siluere sorores.
quae radio stantis percurrens stamina telae 275
'vulgatos taceo' dixit 'pastoris amores Daphnidis Idaeae, quem nympha paelicis ira contulit in saxum: tantus dolor urit amantes; nec loquor, ut quondam naturae iure novato ambiguus fuerit modo vir, modo femina Sithon. 280 te quoque, nunc adamas, quondam fidissime parvo, Celmi, Iovi largoque satos Curetas ab imbri et Crocon in parvos versum cum Smilace flores praetereo dulcique animos novitate tenebo.

‘Unde sit infamis, quare male fortibus undis 285
Salmacis enervet tactosque remolliat artus, discite. causa latet, vis est notissima fontis.
Mercurio puerum diva Cythereide natum naides Idaeis enutrivere sub antris, cuius erat facies, in qua materque paterque 290 cognosci possent; nomen quoque traxit ab illis.
is tria cum primum fecit quinquennia, montes deseruit patrios Idaque altrice relictas ignotis errare locis, ignota videre flumina gaudebat, studio minuente laborem. 295 ille etiam Lycias urbes Lyciaeque propinquos Caras adit: videt hic stagnum lucentis ad imum usque solum lymphae; non illic canna palustris nec steriles ulvae nec acuta cuspide iunci; perspicuus liquor est; stagni tamen ultima vivo 300 caespite cinguntur semperque virentibus herbis.
nympha colit, sed nec venatibus apta nec arcus flectere quae soleat nec quae contendere cursu, solaque naiadum celeri non nota Dianae.
saepe suas illi fama est dixisse sorores 305 “Salmaci, vel iaculum vel pictas sume pharetras et tua cum duris venatibus otia misce!”
nec iaculum sumit nec pictas illa pharetras, nec sua cum duris venatibus otia miscet, sed modo fonte suo formosos perluit artus, 310 saepe Cytoriaco deducit pectine crines et, quid se deceat, spectatas consulit undas; nunc perlucenti circumdata corpus amictu mollibus aut foliis aut mollibus incubat herbis, saepe legit flores. et tum quoque forte legebat, 315 cum puerum vidit visumque optavit habere.

‘Nec tamen ante adiit, etsi properabat adire, quam se conposuit, quam circumspexit amictus et finxit vultum et meruit formosa videri.

tunc sic orsa loqui: "puer o dignissime credi 320 esse deus, seu tu deus es, potes esse Cupido, sive es mortalis, qui te genuere, beati, et frater felix, et fortunata profecto, si qua tibi soror est, et quae dedit ubera nutrix;
sed longe cunctis longaeque beatior illa, 325
si qua tibi sponsa est, si quam dignabere taeda.
haec tibi sive aliqua est, mea sit furtiva voluptas, seu nulla est, ego sim, thalamumque ineamus eundem."
nais ab his tacuit. pueri rubor ora notavit; nescit, enim, quid amor; sed et erubuisse decebat: 330 hic color aprica pendentibus arbore pomis aut ebori tincto est aut sub candore rubenti, cum frustra resonant aera auxiliaria, lunae.
poscenti nymphae sine fine sororia saltem oscula iamque manus ad eburnea colla ferenti 335
"desinis, an fugio tecumque" ait "ista relinquo?" Salmacis extimuit "loca" que "haec tibi libera trado, hospes" ait simulatque gradu discedere verso, tum quoque respiciens, fruticumque recondita silva delituit flexuque genu submitit; at ille, 340 scilicet ut vacuis et inobservatus in herbis, huc it et hinc illuc et in adludentibus undis summa pedum taloque tenus vestigia tinguit;
nec mora, temperie blandarum captus aquarum mollia de tenero velamina corpore ponit. 345 tum vero placuit, nudaeque cupidine formae Salmacis exarsit; flagrant quoque lumina nymphae, non aliter quam cum puro nitidissimus orbe opposita speculi referitur imagine Phoebus; vixque moram patitur, vix iam sua gaudia differt, 350
iam cupit amplecti, iam se male continet amens.
ille cavis velox adplauso corpore palmis desilit in latices alternaque bracchia ducens in liquidis translucet aquis, ut eburnea si quis signa tegat claro vel candida lilia vitro. 355

“vicimus et meus est” exclamat nais, et omni veste procul iacta mediis inmittitur undis, pugnantemque tenet, luctantiaque oscula carpit, subiectatque manus, invitaque pectora tangit, et nunc hac iuveni, nunc circumfunditur illac; 360 denique nitentem contra elabique volentem inpicat ut serpens, quam regia sustinet ales sublimemque rapit: pendens caput illa pedesque adligat et cauda spatiantes inpicat alas; utve solent hederæ longos intexere truncos, 365 utque sub æquoribus deprensus polypus hostem continet ex omni dimissis parte flagellis.
perstat Atlantiades sperataque gaudia nymphae denegat; illa premit commissaque corpore toto sicut inhaerebat, “pugnes licet, inprobe,” dixit, 370 “non tamen effugies. ita, di, iubeatis, et istum nulla dies a me nec me deducat ab isto.”
vota suos habuere deos; nam mixta duorum corpora iunguntur, faciesque inducitur illis una. velut, si quis conducat cortice ramos, 375 crescendo iungi pariterque adolescere cernit, sic ubi complexu coierunt membra tenaci, nec duo sunt et forma duplex, nec femina dici nec puer ut possit, neutrumque et utrumque videntur.

‘Ergo ubi se liquidas, quo vir descenderat, undas 380 semimarem fecisse videt mollitaque in illis membra, manus tendens, sed iam non voce virili Hermaphroditus ait: “nato date munera vestro, et pater et genetrix, amborum nomen habenti: quisquis in hos fontes vir venerit, exeat inde 385 semivir et tactis subito mollescat in undis!”
motus uterque parens nati rata verba biformis fecit et incesto fontem medicamine tinxit.’

Finis erat dictis, et adhuc Minyeia proles urguet opus spernitque deum festumque profanat, 390 tympana cum subito non adparentia raucis obstrepere sonis, et adunco tibia cornu tinnulaque aera sonant; redolent murræque crocique, resque fide maior, coepere virescere telæ inque hederæ faciem pendens frondescere vestis; 395 pars abit in vites, et quæ modo fila fuerunt, palmite mutantur; de stamine pampinus exit;

purpura fulgorem pictis adcommodat uvis.
iamque dies exactus erat, tempusque subibat, quod tu nec tenebras nec possis dicere lucem, 400 sed cum luce tamen dubiæ confinia noctis:
tectæ repente quati pinguesque ardere videntur lampades et rutilis conlucere ignibus aedes falsaque sævarum simulacra ululare ferarum, fumida iamdudum latitant per tectæ sorores 405 diversæque locis ignes ac lumina vitant, dumque petunt tenebras, parvos membrana per artus porrigitur tenuique includit brachia pinna;
nec qua perdidierint veterem ratione figuram, scire sinunt tenebræ: non illas pluma levavit, 410 sustinuere tamen se perlucentibus alis conataeque loqui minimam et pro corpore vocem emittunt peraguntque levi stridore querellas.
tectaque, non silvas celebrant lucemque perosæ nocte volant seroque tenent a vespere nomen. 415

Tum vero totis Bacchi memorabile Thebis numen erat, magnasque novi matertera vires narrat ubique dei de totque sororibus expers una doloris erat, nisi quem fecere sorores:
adspicit hanc natis thalamoque Athamantis habentem 420 sublimes animos et alumno numine Iuno nec tulit et secum: 'potuit de Pælice natus vertere Mæonios pelagoque inmergere nautas et laceranda suæ nati dare viscera matri et triplices operire novis Minyidas alis: 425 nil poterit Iuno nisi inultos flere dolores?
idque mihi satis est? hæc una potentia nostra est?

ipse docet, quid agam (fas est et ab hoste doceri), quidque furor valeat, Penthea caede satisque ac super ostendit: cur non stimuletur eatque 430 per cognata suis exempla furoribus Ino?’

Est via declivis funesta nubila taxo:
ducit ad infernas per muta silentia sedes; Styx nebulas exhalat iners, umbraeque recentes descendunt illac simulacraque functa sepulcris: 435 pallor hiemsque tenent late loca senta, novique, qua sit iter, manes, Stygiam quod ducat ad urbem, ignorant, ubi sit nigri fera regia Ditis.

mille capax aditus et apertas undique portas urbs habet, utque fretum de tota flumina terra, 440 sic omnes animas locus accipit ille nec ulli exiguus populo est turbamve accedere sentit.
errant exsanguis sine corpore at ossibus umbrae, parsque forum celebrant, pars imi tecta tyranni, pars aliquas artes, antiquae imitamina vitae. 445

Sustinet ire illuc caelesti sede relicta 447 (tantum odiis iraeque dabat) Saturnia Iuno; quo simul intravit sacroque a corpore pressum ingemuit limen, tria Cerberus extulit ora 450 et tres latratus semel edidit; illa sorores Nocte vocat genitas, grave et inplacabile numen:
carceris ante fores clausas adamante sedebant
deque suis atros pectebant crinibus angues.
quam simul agnorunt inter caliginis umbras, 455 surrexere deae; sedes scelerata vocatur:
viscera praebebat Tityos lanianda novemque iugeribus distentus erat; tibi, Tantale, nullae deprenduntur aquae, quaeque inminet, effugit arbor; aut petis aut urges rediturum, Sisyphus, saxum; 460
volvitur Ixion et se sequiturque fugitque, molirique suis letum patruelibus ausae adsiduae repetunt, quas perdant, Belides undas.

Quos omnes acie postquam Saturnia torva

vidit et ante omnes Ixiona, rursus ab illo 465 Sisyphon adspiciens 'cur hic e fratribus' inquit
'perpetuas patitur poenas, Athamanta superbum regia dives habet, qui me cum coniuge semper sprevit?' et exponit causas odiique viaeque, quidque velit: quod vellet, erat, ne regia Cadmi 470
staret, et in facinus traherent Athamanta sorores.
imperium, promissa, preces confundit in unum sollicitatque deas: sic haec Iunone locuta, Tisiphone canos, ut erat, turbata capillos movit et obstantes reiecit ab ore colubras 475 atque ita 'non longis opus est ambagibus,' inquit;
'facta puta, quaecumque iubes; inamabile regnum desere teque refer caeli melioris ad auras.'
laeta redit Iuno, quam caelum intrare parantem roratis lustravit aquis Thaumantias Iris. 480

Nec mora, Tisiphone madefactam sanguine sumit inportuna facem, fluidoque cruore rubentem induitur pallam, tortoque incingitur angue egrediturque domo. Luctus comitatur euntem et Pavor et Terror trepidoque Insania vultu. 485 limine constiterat: postes tremuisse feruntur Aeolii pallorque fores infecit acernas solque locum fugit. monstris est territa coniunx, territus est Athamas, tectoque exire parabant:
obstitit infelix aditumque obsedit Erinys, 490 nexaque vipereis distendens bracchia nodis caesariem excussit: motae sonuere colubrae, parsque iacent umeris, pars circum pectora lapsae sibila dant saniemque vomunt linguisque coruscant.
inde duos mediis abrumpit crinibus angues 495 pestiferaque manu raptos inmisit, at illi Inoosque sinus Athamanteosque pererrant inspirantque graves animas; nec vulnera membris ulla ferunt: mens est, quae diros sentiat ictus.
attulerat secum liquidi quoque monstra veneni, 500

oris Cerberei spumas et virus Echidnae erroresque vagos caecaeque oblivia mentis et scelus et lacrimas rabiemque et caedis amorem, omnia trita simul, quae sanguine mixta recenti coxerat aere cavo viridi versata cicuta; 505 dumque pavent illi, vergit furiale venenum pectus in amborum praecordiaque intima movit.
tum face iactata per eundem saepius orbem consequitur motis velociter ignibus ignes.
sic victrix iussique potens ad inania magni 510
regna redit Ditis sumptumque recingitur anguem.

Protinus Aeolides media furibundus in aula clamat 'io, comites, his retia tendite silvis!
hic modo cum gemina visa est mihi prole leaena' utque ferae sequitur vestigia coniugis amens 515 deque sinu matris ridentem et parva Learchum bracchia tendentem rapit et bis terque per auras more rotat fundae rigidoque infantia saxo discutit ora ferox; tum denique concita mater, seu dolor hoc fecit seu sparsi causa veneni, 520 exululat passisque fugit male sana capillis teque ferens parvum nudis, Melicerta, lacertis
'euhoe Bacche' sonat: Bacchi sub nomine Iuno risit et 'hos usus praestet tibi' dixit 'alumnus!' inminet aequoribus scopulus: pars ima cavatur 525 fluctibus et tectas defendit ab imbribus undas, summa riget frontemque in apertum porrigit aequor;
occupat hunc (vires insania fecerat) Ino seque super pontum nullo tardata timore mittit onusque suum; percussa recanduit unda. 530

At Venus, inmeritae neptis miserata labores, sic patruo blandita suo est 'o numen aquarum, proxima cui caelo cessit, Neptune, potestas, magna quidem posco, sed tu miserere meorum, iactari quos cernis in Ionio inmenso, 535 et dis adde tuis. aliqua et mihi gratia ponto est, si tamen in medio quondam concreta profundo spuma fui Graiumque manet mihi nomen ab illa.

adnuit oranti Neptunus et abstulit illis, quod mortale fuit, maiestatemque verendam 540 inposuit nomenque simul faciemque novavit Leucothoeque deum cum matre Palaemona dixit.

Sidoniae comites, quantum valuere secutae signa pedum, primo videre novissima saxo; nec dubium de morte ratae Cadmeida palmis 545 deplanxere domum scissae cum veste capillos, utque parum iustae nimiumque in paelice saevae invidiam fecere deae. convicia luno non tulit et 'faciam vos ipsas maxima' dixit 'saevitiae monimenta meae'; res dicta secuta est. 550 nam quae praecipue fuerat pia, 'persequar' inquit
'in freta reginam' saltumque datura moveri haud usquam potuit scopuloque adfixa cohaesit;
altera, dum solito temptat plangore ferire pectora, temptatos sensit riguisse lacertos; 555 illa, manus ut forte tetenderat in maris undas;
saxea facta manus in easdem porrigit undas;
huius, ut arreptum laniabat vertice crinem, duratos subito digitos in crine videres:
quo quaeque in gestu deprensa est, haesit in illo. 560 pars volucres factae, quae nunc quoque gurgite in illo aequora destringunt summis Ismenides alis.

Nescit Agenorides natam parvumque nepotem aequoris esse deos; luctu serieque malorum victus et ostentis, quae plurima viderat, exit 565 conditor urbe sua, tamquam fortuna locorum, non sua se premeret, longisque erroribus actus contigit Illyricos profuga cum coniuge fines.
iamque malis annisque graves dum prima retractant fata domus releguntque suos sermone labores, 570
'num sacer ille mea traiectus cuspide serpens' Cadmus ait 'fuerat, tum cum Sidone profectus vipereos sparsi per humum, nova semina, dentes?

quem si cura deum tam certa vindicat ira, ipse precor serpens in longam porrigar alvum.' 575 dixit, et ut serpens in longam tenditur alvum durataeque cuti squamas increocere sentit nigraque caeruleis variari corpora guttis in pectusque cadit pronus, commissaque in unum paulatim tereti tenuantur acumine crura. 580 bracchia iam restant: quae restant bracchia tendit et lacrimis per adhuc humana fluentibus ora
'accede, o coniunx, accede, miserrima' dixit,
'dumque aliquid superest de me, me tange manumque accipe, dum manus est, dum non totum occupat anguis.' 585

ille quidem vult plura loqui, sed lingua repente in partes est fissa duas, nec verba volenti sufficiunt, quotiensque aliquos parat edere questus, sibilat: hanc illi vocem natura reliquit.
nuda manu feriens exclamat pectora coniunx: 590
'Cadme, mane teque, infelix, his exue monstris!
Cadme, quid hoc? ubi pes, ubi sunt umerique manusque et color et facies et, dum loquor, omnia? cur non me quoque, caelestes, in eandem vertitis anguem?' dixerat, ille suae lambebat coniugis ora 595 inque sinus caros, veluti cognosceret, ibat et dabat amplexus adsuetaque colla petebat.
quisquis adest (aderant comites), terretur; at illa lubrica permulcet cristati colla draconis, et subito duo sunt iunctoque volumine serpunt, 600
donec in adpositi nemoris subiere latebras, nunc quoque nec fugiunt hominem nec vulnere laedunt quidque prius fuerint, placidi meminere dracones.

Sed tamen ambobus versae solacia formae magna nepos dederat, quem debellata colebat 605 India, quem positis celebrabat Achaia templis;
solus Abantiades ab origine cretus eadem

Acrisius superest, qui moenibus arceat urbis Argolicae contraque deum ferat arma genusque non putet esse Iovis: neque enim Iovis esse putabat 610 Persea, quem pluvio Danae conceperat auro.
mox tamen Acrisium (tanta est praesentia veri) tam violasse deum quam non agnosse nepotem paenitet: inpositus iam caelo est alter, at alter viperei referens spoliū memorabile monstri 615 aera carpebat tenerum stridentibus alis, cumque super Libycas victor penderet harenas, Gorgonei capitis guttae cecidere cruentae;
quas humus exceptas varios animavit in angues, unde frequens illa est infestaque terra colubris. 620

Inde per inmensum ventis discordibus actus nunc huc, nunc illuc exemplo nubis aquosae fertur et ex alto seductas aethere longe despectat terras totumque supervolat orbem.
ter gelidas Arctos, ter Cancri bracchia vidit, 625 saepe sub occasus, saepe est ablatas in ortus, iamque cadente die, veritus se credere nocti, constitit Hesperio, regnis Atlantis, in orbe exiguamque petit requiem, dum Lucifer ignes evocet Aurorae, currus Aurora diurnos. 630 hic hominum cunctos ingenti corpore praestans lapetionides Atlas fuit: ultima tellus rege sub hoc et pontus erat, qui Solis anhelis aequora subdit equis et fessos excipit axes.
mille greges illi totidemque armenta per herbas 635 errabant, et humum vicinia nulla premebat;
arboreae frondes auro radiante nitentes ex auro ramos, ex auro poma tegebant.
'hospes' ait Perseus illi, 'seu gloria tangit te generis magni, generis mihi Iuppiter auctor; 640 sive es mirator rerum, mirabere nostras; hospitium requiemque peto.' memor ille vetustae sortis erat; Themis hanc dederat Parnasia sortem:

'tempus, Atlas, veniet, tua quo spoliabitur auro arbor, et hunc praedae titulum love natus habebit.' 645 id metuens solidis pomaria clauserat Atlas moenibus et vasto dederat servanda draconi arcebatque suis externos finibus omnes.
huic quoque 'vade procul, ne longe gloria rerum, quam mentiris' ait, 'longe tibi Iuppiter absit!' 650 vimque minis addit manibusque expellere temptat cunctantem et placidis miscentem fortia dictis. viribus inferior (quis enim par esset Atlantis viribus?) 'at, quoniam parvi tibi gratia nostra est, accipe munus!' ait laevaue a parte Medusae 655
ipse retro versus squalentia protulit ora.
quantus erat, mons factus Atlas: nam barba comaeque in silvas abeunt, iuga sunt umerique manusque, quod caput ante fuit, summo est in monte cacumen, ossa lapis fiunt; tum partes altus in omnes 660 crevit in inensum (sic, di, statuistis) et omne cum tot sideribus caelum requievit in illo.

Cluserat Hippotades Aetnaeo carcere ventos, admonitorque operum caelo clarissimus alto Lucifer ortus erat: pennis ligat ille resumptis 665 parte ab utraque pedes teloque accingitur unco et liquidum motis talaribus aera findit.
gentibus innumeris circumque infraque relictis Aethiopum populos Cepheaue conspicit arva.
illic inmeritam maternae pendere linguae 670 Andromedan poenas iniustus iusserat Ammon;
quam simul ad duras religatam bracchia cautes vidit Abantiades, nisi quod levis aura capillos moverat et tepido manabant lumina fletu, marmoreum ratus esset opus; trahit inscius ignes 675 et stupet et visae correptus imagine formae paene suas quater est oblitus in aere pennas.
ut stetit, 'o' dixit 'non istis digna catenis, sed quibus inter se cupidi iunguntur amantes, pande requirenti nomen terraeque tuumque, 680 et cur vincla geras.' primo silet illa nec audet adpellare virum virgo, manibusque modestos celasset vultus, si non religata fuisset;

lumina, quod potuit, lacrimis inplevit obortis.
saepius instanti, sua ne delicta fateri 685
nolle videretur, nomen terraeque suumque, quantaque maternae fuerit fiducia formae, indicat, et nondum memoratis omnibus unda insonuit, veniensque inmenso belua ponto inminet et latum sub pectore possidet aequor. 690 conclamat virgo: genitor lugubris et una mater adest, ambo miseri, sed iustius illa, nec secum auxilium, sed dignos tempore fletus plangoremque ferunt vinctoque in corpore adhaerent, cum sic hospes ait 'lacrimarum longa manere 695 tempora vos poterunt, ad opem brevis hora ferendam est.
hanc ego si peterem Perseus love natus et illa, quam clausam inplevit fecundo Iuppiter auro, Gorgonis anguicomae Perseus superator et alis aerias ausus iactatis ire per auras, 700 praeferrer cunctis certe gener; addere tantis dotibus et meritum, faveant modo numina, tempto:
ut mea sit servata mea virtute, paciscor.'
accipiunt legem (quis enim dubitaret?) et orant promittuntque super regnum dotale parentes. 705

Ecce, velut navis praefixo concita rostro sulcat aquas iuvenum sudantibus acta lacertis, sic fera dimotis impulsu pectoris undis;
tantum aberat scopulis, quantum Balearica torto funda potest plumbo medii transmittere caeli, 710 cum subito iuvenis pedibus tellure repulsa arduus in nubes abiit: ut in aequore summo umbra viri visa est, visam fera saevit in umbram, utque Iovis praepes, vacuo cum vidit in arvo praebentem Phoebos liventia terga draconem, 715

occupat aversum, neu saeva retorqueat ora, squamigeris avidos figit cervicibus ungues, sic celeri missus praeceps per inane volatu terga ferae pressit dextroque frementis in armo Inachides ferrum curvo tenus abdidit hamo. 720 vulnere laesa gravi modo se sublimis in auras attollit, modo subdit aquis, modo more ferocis versat apri, quem turba canum circumsona terret.
ille avidos morsus velocibus effugit alis quaque patet, nunc terga cavis super obsita conchis, 725 nunc laterum costas, nunc qua tenuissima cauda desinit in piscem, falcato verberat ense; belua puniceo mixtos cum sanguine fluctus ore vomit: maduere graves adspergine pennae.
nec bibulis ultra Perseus talaribus ausus 730 credere conspexit scopulum, qui vertice summo stantibus exstat aquis, operitur ab aequore moto.
nixus eo rupisque tenens iuga prima sinistra ter quater exegit repetita per ilia ferrum.
litora cum plausu clamor superasque deorum 735 inplevere domos: gaudent generumque salutant auxiliumque domus servatoremque fatentur Cassiope Cepheusque pater; resoluta catenis incedit virgo, pretiumque et causa laboris.
ipse manus hausta victrices abluit unda, 740 anguiferumque caput dura ne laedat harena, mollit humum foliis natasque sub aequore virgas
sternit et inponit Phorcynidos ora Medusae.
virga recens bibulaque etiamnum viva medulla vim rapuit monstri tactuque induruit huius 745 percepitque novum ramis et fronde rigorem.
at pelagi nymphae factum mirabile temptant pluribus in virgis et idem contingere gaudent seminaque ex illis iterant iactata per undas:
nunc quoque curaliis eadem natura remansit, 750 duritiam tacto capiant ut ab aere quodque vimen in aequore erat, fiat super aequora saxum.

Dis tribus ille focus totidem de caespite ponit, laevum Mercurio, dextrum tibi, bellica virgo, ara Iovis media est; mactatur vacca Minervae, 755 alipedi vitulus, taurus tibi, summe deorum.
protinus Andromedan et tanti praemia facti indotata rapit; taedas Hymenaeus Amorque praecutiunt; largis satiantur odoribus ignes, sertaque dependent tectis et ubique lyraeque 760 tibiaeque et cantus, animi felicia laeti argumenta, sonant; reseratis aurea valvis atria tota patent, pulchroque instructa paratu Cepheni proceres ineunt convivium regis.

Postquam epulis functi generosi munere Bacchi 765 diffudere animos, cultusque genusque locorum quaerit Lyncides moresque animumque virorum; qui simul edocuit, 'nunc, o fortissime,' dixit 769
'fare, precor, Perseu, quanta virtute quibusque artibus abstuleris crinita draconibus ora!'
narrat Agenorides gelido sub Atlante iacentem esse locum solidae tutum munimine molis;
cuius in introitu geminas habitasse sorores Phorcidas unius partitas luminis usum; 775 id se sollerti furtim, dum traditur, astu supposita cepisse manu perque abdita longe deviaque et silvis horrentia saxa fragosis Gorgoneas tetigisse domos passimque per agros perque vias vidisse hominum simulacra ferarumque 780 in silicem ex ipsis visa conversa Medusa.

se tamen horrendae clipei, quem laeva gerebat, aere repercusso formam adspexisse Medusae, dumque gravis somnus colubrasque ipsamque tenebat, eripuisse caput collo; pennisque fugacem 785
Pegason et fratrem matris de sanguine natos.

Addidit et longi non falsa pericula cursus, quae freta, quas terras sub se vidisset ab alto et quae iactatis tetigisset sidera pennis; ante expectatum tacuit tamen. excipit unus 790 ex numero procerum quaerens, cur sola sororum gesserit alternis inmixtos crinibus angues.

hospes ait: 'quoniam scitaris digna relatu, accipe quaesiti causam. clarissima forma multorumque fuit spes invidiosa procorum 795 illa, nec in tota conspectior ulla capillis pars fuit: inveni, qui se vidisse referret.
hanc pelagi rector templo vitiasse Minervae dicitur: aversa est et castos aegide vultus nata Iovis texit, neve hoc inpune fuisset, 800 Gorgoneum crinem turpes mutavit in hydros.
nunc quoque, ut attonitos formidine terreat hostes, pectore in adverso, quos fecit, sustinet angues.'

LIBER QVINTVS

Dumque ea Cephenum medio Danaei heros agmine commemorat, fremida regalia turba atria conplentur, nec coniugialia festa qui canat est clamor, sed qui fera nuntiet arma; inque repentinos convivia versa tumultus 5 adsimilare freto possis, quod saeva quietum ventorum rabies motis exasperat undis.
primus in his Phineus, belli temerarius auctor, fraxineam quatiens aeratae cuspidis hastam
'en' ait, 'en adsum praereptae coniugis ultor; 10 nec mihi te pennae nec falsum versus in aurum Iuppiter eripiet!' conanti mittere Cepheus
'quid facis?' exclamat, 'quae te, germane, furentem mens agit in facinus? meritisne haec gratia tantis redditur? hac vitam servatae dote rependis? 15 quam tibi non Perseus, verum si quaeris, ademit, sed grave Nereidum numen, sed corniger Ammon, sed quae visceribus veniebat belua ponti exsaturanda meis; illo tibi tempore rapta est, quo peritura fuit, nisi si, crudelis, id ipsum 20
exigis, ut pereat, luctuque levabere nostro.
scilicet haud satis est, quod te spectante revincta est et nullam quod opem patruus sponsusve tulisti; insuper, a quoquam quod sit servata, dolebis praemiaque eripies? quae si tibi magna videntur, 25 ex illis scopulis, ubi erant adfixa, petisses.
nunc sine, qui petiit, per quem haec non orba senectus, ferre, quod et meritis et voce est pactus, eumque non tibi, sed certae praelatum intellege morti.'

Ille nihil contra, sed et hunc et Persea vultu 30 alterno spectans petat hunc ignorat an illum:

cunctatusque brevi contortam viribus hastam, quantas ira dabat, nequiquam in Persea misit.
ut stetit illa toro, stratis tum denique Perseus exsiluit teloque ferox inimica remisso 35 pectora rupisset, nisi post altaria Phineus isset: et (indignum) scelerato profuit ara.
fronte tamen Rhoeti non inrita cuspis adhaesit, qui postquam cecidit ferrumque ex osse revulsum est calcitrat et positas adspergit sanguine mensas. 40 tum vero indomitas ardescit vulgus in iras, telaque coniciunt, et sunt, qui Cephea dicunt cum genero debere mori; sed limine tecti exierat Cepheus testatus iusque fidemque hospitiique deos, ea se prohibente moveri. 45 bellica Pallas adest et protegit aegide fratrem datque animos.

Erat Indus Athis, quem flumine Gange edita Limnaee vitreis peperisse sub undis creditur, egregius forma, quam divite cultu augebat, bis adhuc octonis integer annis, 50 indutus chlamydem Tyriam, quam limbus obibat aureus; ornabant aurata monilia collum et madidos murra curvum crinale capillos;
ille quidem iaculo quamvis distantia misso figere doctus erat, sed tendere doctior arcus. 55 tum quoque lenta manu flectentem cornua Perseus stipite, qui media positus fumabat in ara, perculit et fractis confudit in ossibus ora.

Hunc ubi laudatos iactantem in sanguine vultus Assyrius vidit Lycabas, iunctissimus illi 60 et comes et veri non dissimulator amoris, postquam exhalantem sub acerbo vulnere vitam deploravit Athin, quos ille tetenderat arcus arripit et 'mecum tibi sint certamina!' dixit;
'nec longum pueri fato laetabere, quo plus 65 invidiae quam laudis habes.' haec omnia nondum dixerat: emicuit nervo penetrabile telum vitatumque tamen sinuosa veste pependit.

vertit in hunc harpen spectatam caede Medusae Acrisioniades adigitque in pectus; at ille 70
iam moriens oculis sub nocte natantibus atra circumspexit Athin seque adclinavit ad illum et tulit ad manes iunctae solacia mortis.

Ecce Syenites, genitus Metione, Phorbas et Libys Amphimedon, avidi committere pugnam, 75 sanguine, quo late tellus madefacta tepebat, concliderant lapsi; surgentibus obstitit ensis, alterius costis, iugulo Phorbantis adactus.

At non Actoriden Erytum, cui lata bipennis telum erat, hamato Perseus petit ense, sed altis 80 exstantem signis multaeque in pondere massae ingentem manibus tollit cratera duabus infligitque viro; rutilum vomit ille cruorem et resupinus humum moribundo vertice pulsat.
inde Semiramio Polydegmona sanguine cretum 85 Caucasiumque Abarin Sperchionidenque Lycetum intonsumque comas Helicen Phlegyanque Clytumque sternit et exstructos morientum calcat acervos.

Nec Phineus ausus concurrere cominus hosti intorquet iaculum, quod detulit error in Idan, 90 expertem frustra belli et neutra arma secutum.
ille tuens oculis inमितem Phinea torvis
'quandoquidem in partes' ait 'abstrahor, accipe, Phineu, quem fecisti, hostem pensaque hoc vulnere vulnus!'
iamque remissurus tractum de corpore telum 95 sanguine defectos cecidit conlapsus in artus.

Tum quoque Cephenum post regem primus Hodites ense iacet Clymeni, Prothoenora percutit Hypseus, Hypsea Lyncides. fuit et grandaevus in illis Emathion, aequi cultor timidusque deorum, 100 qui, quoniam prohibent anni bellare, loquendo pugnat et incessit scelerataque devovet arma;

huic Chromis amplexo tremulis altaria palmis decutit ense caput, quod protinus incidit arae atque ibi semianimi verba execrantia lingua 105 edidit et medios animam expiravit in ignes.

Hinc gemini fratres Broteasque et caestibus Ammon invicti, vinci si possent caestibus enses, Phinea cecidere manu Cererisque sacerdos Ampycus albenti velatus tempora vitta, 110 tu quoque, Lampetide, non hos adhibendus ad usus, sed qui, pacis opus, citharam cum voce moveres;
iussus eras celebrare dapes festumque canendo.
quem procul adstantem plectrumque inbelle tenentem Pedasus inridens 'Stygiis cane cetera' dixit 115
'manibus!' et laevo mucronem tempore fixit;
concidit et digitis morientibus ille retemptat fila lyrae, casuque ferit miserabile carmen.
nec sinit hunc inpune ferox cecidisse Lycormas raptaque de dextro robusta repagula posti 120 ossibus inlisit mediae cervicis, at ille procubuit terrae mactati more iuvenci.
demere temptabat laevi quoque robora postis Cinyphius Pelates; temptanti dextera fixa est cuspede Marmaridae Corythi lignoque cohaesit; 125 haerenti latus hausit Abas, nec corrui ille, sed retinente manum moriens e poste pependit.
sternitur et Melaneus, Perseia castra secutus, et Nasamoniaci Dorylas ditissimus agri, dives agri Dorylas, quo non possederat alter 130 latius aut totidem tollebat turis acervos.
huius in obliquo missum stetit inguine ferrum:
letifer ille locus. quem postquam vulneris auctor singultantem animam et versantem lumina vidit Bactrius Halcyoneus, 'hoc, quod premis,' inquit 'habeto 135 de tot agris terrae!' corpusque exsangue reliquit.
torquet in hunc hastam calido de vulnere raptam ultor Abantiades; media quae nare recepta cervice exacta est in partesque eminent ambas; dumque manum Fortuna iuvat, Clytiumque Claninque, 140 matre satos una, diverso vulnere fudit:

nam Clytii per utrumque gravi librata lacerto fraxinus acta femur, iaculum Clanis ore momordit.
occidit et Celadon Mendesius, occidit Astreus matre Palaestina dubio genitore creatus, 145 Aethionque sagax quondam ventura videre, tunc ave deceptus falsa, regisque Thoactes armiger et caeso genitore infamis Agyrtes.

Plus tamen exhausto superest; namque omnibus unum opprimere est animus, coniurata undique pugnant 150 agmina pro causa meritum inpugnante fidemque;
hac pro parte socer frustra pius et nova coniunx cum genetrice favent ululatuque atria conplent, sed sonus armorum superat gemitusque cadentum, pollutosque simul multo Bellona penates 155 sanguine perfundit renovataque proelia miscet.

Circueunt unum Phineus et mille secuti Phinea: tela volant hiberna grandine plura praeter utrumque latus praeterque et lumen et aures.
adplicat hic umeros ad magnae saxa columnae 160 tutaque terga gerens adversaque in agmina versus sustinet instantes: instabat parte sinistra Chaonius Molpeus, dextra Nabataeus Ethemon.
tigris ut auditis diversa valle duorum exstimulata fame mugitibus armentorum 165 nescit, utro potius ruat, et ruere ardet utroque, sic dubius Perseus, dextra laevane feratur, Molpea traiectione submovit vulnere cruris contentusque fuga est; neque enim dat tempus Ethemon, sed furit et cupiens alto dare vulnera collo 170 non circumspicere exactum viribus ensem fregit, in extrema percussae parte columnae:
lamina dissiluit dominique in gutture fixa est.
non tamen ad letum causas satis illa valentes plaga dedit; trepidum Perseus et inermia frustra 175 bracchia tendentem Cyllenide confodit harpe.

Verum ubi virtutem turbae succumbere vidit,
'auxilium' Perseus, 'quoniam sic cogitis ipsi,' dixit 'ab hoste petam: vultus avertite vestros, si quis amicus adest!' et Gorgonis extulit ora. 180
'quaere alium, tua quem moveant miracula' dixit Thescelus; utque manu iaculum fatale parabat mittere, in hoc haesit signum de marmore gestu.
proximus huic Ampyx animi plenissima magni pectora Lyncidae gladio petit: inque petendo 185 dextera dirigit nec citra mota nec ultra est.
at Nileus, qui se genitum septemplice Nilo ementitus erat, clipeo quoque flumina septem argento partim, partim caelaverat auro, 'adspice' ait 'Perseu, nostrae primordia gentis: 190 magna feres tacitas solacia mortis ad umbras, a tanto cecidisse viro'; pars ultima vocis in medio suppressa sono est, adapertaque velle ora loqui credas, nec sunt ea pervia verbis.
increpat hos 'vitio' que 'animi, non viribus' inquit 195
'Gorgoneis torpetis' Eryx. 'incurrite mecum et prosternite humi iuvenem magica arma moventem!'
incursurus erat: tenuit vestigia tellus, inmotusque silex armataque mansit imago.

Hi tamen ex merito poenas subiere, sed unus 200 miles erat Persei: pro quo dum pugnat, Aconteus Gorgone inspecta saxo concrevit oborto;
quem ratus Astyages etiamnum vivere, longo ense ferit: sonuit tinnitibus ensis acutis.
dum stupet Astyages, naturam traxit eandem, 205 marmoreoque manet vultus mirantis in ore.
nomina longa mora est media de plebe virorum dicere: bis centum restabant corpora pugnae, Gorgone bis centum riguerunt corpora visa.

Paenitet iniusti tum denique Phinea belli; 210

sed quid agat? simulacra videt diversa figuris adgnoscatque suos et nomine quemque vocatum poscit opem credensque parum sibi proxima tangit corpora: marmor erant; avertitur atque ita supplex confessasque manus obliquaque bracchia tendens 215
'vincis' ait, 'Perseu! remove tua monstra tuaeque saxificos vultus, quaecumque est, tolle Medusae, tolle, precor! non nos odium regnique cupido compulit ad bellum, pro coniuge movimus arma!
causa fuit meritis melior tua, tempore nostra: 220 non cessisse piget; nihil, o fortissime, praeter hanc animam concede mihi, tua cetera sunt!'
taliam dicenti neque eum, quem voce rogabat, respicere audenti 'quod' ait, 'timidissime Phineu, et possum tribuisse et magnum est munus inertii,++ 225
pone metum!++tribuam: nullo violabere ferro.
quin etiam mansura dabo monimenta per aevum, inque domo soceri semper spectabere nostri, ut mea se sponsi soletur imagine coniunx.'
dixit et in partem Phorcynida transtulit illam, 230 ad quam se trepido Phineus obverterat ore.
tum quoque conanti sua vertere lumina cervix deriguit, saxoque oculorum induruit umor, sed tamen os timidum vultusque in marmore supplex submissaeque manus faciesque obnoxia mansit. 235

Victor Abantiades patrios cum coniuge muros intrat et inmeriti vindex ultorque parentis adgreditur Proetum; nam fratre per arma fugato Acrisioneas Proetus possederat arces.
sed nec ope armorum nec, quam male ceperat, arce 240
torva colubriferi superavit lumina monstri.

Te tamen, o parvae rector, Polydecta, Seriphi, nec iuvenis virtus per tot spectata labores nec mala mollierant, sed inexorabile durus exerces odium, nec iniqua finis in ira est; 245 detrectas etiam laudem fictamque Medusae arguis esse necem. 'dabimus tibi pignora veri. parcite luminibus!' Perseus ait oraque regis ore Medusaeo silicem sine sanguine fecit.

Hactenus aurigenae comitem Tritonia fratri 250 se dedit; inde cava circumdata nube Seriphon deserit, a dextra Cythno Gyaroque relictis, quaque super pontum via visa brevissima, Thebas virgineumque Heliconam petit. quo monte potita constitit et doctas sic est adfata sorores: 255
'fama novi fontis nostras pervenit ad aures, dura Medusaei quem praepetis ungula rupit.
is mihi causa viae; volui mirabile factum cernere; vidi ipsum materno sanguine nasci.'
excipit Uranie: 'quaecumque est causa videndi 260 has tibi, diva, domos, animo gratissima nostro es.
vera tamen fama est: est Pegasus huius origo fontis' et ad latices deduxit Pallada sacros.
quae mirata diu factas pedis ictibus undas silvarum lucos circumspicit antiquarum 265 antraque et innumeris distinctas floribus herbas felicesque vocat pariter studioque locoque Mnemonidas; quam sic adfata est una sororum:
'o, nisi te virtus opera ad maiora tulisset, in partem ventura chori Tritonia nostri, 270 vera refers meritoque probas artesque locumque, et gratam sortem, tutae modo simus, habemus.
sed (vetitum est adeo scelere nihil) omnia terrent virgineas mentes, dirusque ante ora Pyreneus vertitur, et nondum tota me mente recepi. 275 Daulida Threicio Phoceaue milite rura ceperat ille ferox iniustaque regna tenebat; templa petebamus Parnasia: vidit euntes nostraque fallaci veneratus numina vultu
'Mnemonides' (cognorat enim), 'consistite' dixit 280
'nec dubitate, precor, tecto grave sidus et imbrem' (imber erat) 'vitare meo; subiere minores saepe casas superi." dictis et tempore motae adnuimusque viro primasque intravimus aedes.

desierant imbres, victoque aquilonibus austro 285
fusca repurgato fugiebant nubila caelo:
inpetus ire fuit; claudit sua tecta Pyreneus vimque parat, quam nos sumptis effugimus alis.
ipse secuturo similis stetit arduus arce
"qua" que "via est vobis, erit et mihi" dixit "eadem" 290 seque iacit vecors e summae culmine turris et cadit in vultus discussisque ossibus oris tundit humum moriens scelerato sanguine tinctam.'

Musa loquebatur: pennae sonuere per auras, voxque salutantum ramis veniebat ab altis. 295 suspicit et linguae quaerit tam certa loquentes unde sonent hominemque putat love nata locutum; ales erat. numeroque novem sua fata querentes institerant ramis imitantes omnia picae.
miranti sic orsa deae dea 'nuper et istae 300
auxerunt volucrum victae certamine turbam.
Pieros has genuit Pellaeis dives in arvis,
Paeonis Euippe mater fuit; illa potentem Lucinam noviens, noviens paritura, vocavit.
intumuit numero stolidarum turba sororum 305 perque tot Haemonias et per tot Achaidas urbes huc venit et tali committit proelia voce:
"desinite indoctum vana dulcedine vulgus fallere; nobiscum, si qua est fiducia vobis, Thespiades, certate, deae. nec voce, nec arte 310
vincemur totidemque sumus: vel cedite victae fonte Medusaeo et Hyantea Aganippe, vel nos Emathiis ad Paeonas usque nivosos cedemus campis! dirimant certamina nymphae."

'Turpe quidem contendere erat, sed cedere visum 315 turpius; electae iurant per flumina nymphae factaque de vivo pressere sedilia saxo.
tunc sine sorte prior quae se certare professa est,

bella canit superum falsoque in honore gigantas ponit et extenuat magnorum facta deorum; 320 emissumque ima de sede Typhoea terrae caelitibus fecisse metum cunctosque dedisse terga fugae, donec fessos Aegyptia tellus ceperit et septem discretus in ostia Nilus.
huc quoque terrigenam venisse Typhoea narrat 325 et se mentitis superos celasse figuris; “duxque gregis” dixit “fit Iuppiter: unde recurvis nunc quoque formatus Libys est cum cornibus Ammon; Delius in corvo, proles Semeleia capro, fele soror Phoebi, nivea Saturnia vacca, 330
pisce Venus latuit, Cyllenius ibidis alis.”

‘Hactenus ad citharam vocalia moverat ora:
poscimus Aonides,++sed forsitan otia non sint, nec nostris praebere vacet tibi cantibus aures.’ ‘ne dubita vestrumque mihi refer ordine carmen!’ 335
Pallas ait nemorisque levi consedit in umbra;
Musa refert: ‘dedimus summam certaminis uni;
surgit et inmissos hedera collecta capillos Calliope querulas praetemptat pollice chordas atque haec percussis subiungit carmina nervis: 340 “Prima Ceres unco glaebam dimovit aratro, prima dedit fruges alimentaue mitia terris, prima dedit leges; Cereris sunt omnia munus;
illa canenda mihi est. utinam modo dicere possim carmina digna dea! certe dea carmine digna est. 345

“Vasta giganteis ingesta est insula membris Trinacris et magnis subiectum molibus urguet aetherias ausum sperare Typhoea sedes.
nititur ille quidem pugnatque resurgere saepe, dextra sed Ausonio manus est subiecta Peloro, 350
laeva, Pachyne, tibi, Lilybaeo crura premuntur, degravat Aetna caput, sub qua resupinus harenas eiectat flammamque ferox vomit ore Typhoeus.
saepe remoliri luctatur pondera terrae oppidaque et magnos devolvere corpore montes: 355 inde tremit tellus, et rex pavet ipse silentum, ne pateat latoque solum retegatur hiatu inmissusque dies trepidantes terreat umbras.

hanc metuens cladem tenebrosa sede tyrannus exierat curruque atrorum vectus equorum 360 ambibat Siculae cautus fundamina terrae.
postquam exploratum satis est loca nulla labare depositoque metu, videt hunc Erycina vagantem monte suo residens natumque amplexa volucrum
'arma manusque meae, mea, nate, potentia' dixit, 365
'illa, quibus superas omnes, cape tela, Cupido, inque dei pectus celeres molire sagittas, cui triplicis cessit fortuna novissima regni.
tu superos ipsumque Iovem, tu numina ponti victa domas ipsumque, regit qui numina ponti: 370 Tartara quid cessant? cur non matrisque tuumque imperium profers? agitur pars tertia mundi, et tamen in caelo, quae iam patientia nostra est,
spernimur, ac mecum vires minuuntur Amoris.
Pallada nonne vides iaculatricemque Dianam 375 abscessisse mihi? Cereris quoque filia virgo, si patiemur, erit; nam spes adfectat easdem.
at tu pro socio, si qua est ea gratia, regno iunge deam patruo.' dixit Venus; ille pharetram solvit et arbitrio matris de mille sagittis 380 unam seposuit, sed qua nec acutior ulla nec minus incerta est nec quae magis audiat arcus, oppositoque genu curvavit flexile cornum inque cor hamata percussit harundine Ditem.

“Haud procul Hennaëis lacus est a moenibus altae, 385 nomine Pergus, aquae: non illo plura Caystros carmina cycnorum labentibus audit in undis.
silva coronat aquas cingens latus omne suisque frondibus ut velo Phoebeos submovet ictus; frigora dant rami, Tyrios humus umida flores: 390

perpetuum ver est. quo dum Proserpina luco ludit et aut violas aut candida lilia carpit, dumque puellari studio calathosque sinumque inplet et aequales certat superare legendo, paene simul visa est dilectaque raptaque Diti: 395 usque adeo est properatus amor. dea territa maesto et matrem et comites, sed matrem saepius, ore clamat, et ut summa vestem laniarat ab ora, collecti flores tunicis cecidere remissis, tantaque simplicitas puerilibus adfuit annis, 400
haec quoque virgineum movit iactura dolorem.
raptor agit currus et nomine quemque vocando exhortatur equos, quorum per colla iubasque excudit obscura tinctas ferrugine habenas, perque lacus altos et olentia sulphure fertur 405 stagna Palicorum rupta ferventia terra et qua Bacchiadae, bimari gens orta Corinθο, inter inaequales posuerunt moenia portus.

“Est medium Cyanes et Pisaeae Arethusae, quod coit angustis inclusum cornibus aequor: 410 hic fuit, a cuius stagnum quoque nomine dictum est, inter Sicelidas Cyane celeberrima nymphas.
gurgite quae medio summa tenus exstitit alvo adgnovitque deam ‘ne’ c ‘longius ibitis!’ inquit; ‘non potes invitae Cereris gener esse: roganda, 415 non rapienda fuit. quodsi componere magnis parva mihi fas est, et me dilexit Anapis;
exorata tamen, nec, ut haec, exterrita nupsi.’
dixit et in partes diversas bracchia tendens obstitit. haud ultra tenuit Saturnius iram 420 terribilesque hortatus equos in gurgitis ima contortum valido sceptrum regale lacerto condidit; icta viam tellus in Tartara fecit et pronos currus medio cratere recepit.

“At Cyane, raptamque deam contemptaque fontis 425 iura sui maerens, inconsolabile vulnus mente gerit tacita lacrimisque absumitur omnis et, quarum fuerat magnum modo numen, in illas extenuatur aquas: molliri membra videres, ossa pati flexus, ungues posuisse rigorem; 430 primaque de tota tenuissima quaeque liquescunt, caerulei crines digitique et crura pedesque (nam brevis in gelidas membris exilibus undas transitus est); post haec umeri terqusque latusque pectoraque in tenues abeunt evanida rivos; 435 denique pro vivo vitiatas sanguine venas lympha subit, restatque nihil, quod prendere possis.

“Interea pavidae nequiquam filia matri omnibus est terris, omni quaesita profundo.
illam non udis veniens Aurora capillis 440 cessantem vidit, non Hesperus; illa duabus flammiferas pinus manibus succendit ab Aetna perque pruinosas tulit inrequieta tenebras; rursus ubi alma dies hebetarat sidera, natam solis ab occasu solis quaerebat ad ortus. 445 fessa labore sitim conceperat, oraque nulli conluerant fontes, cum tectam stramine vidit forte casam parvasque fores pulsavit; at inde prodit anus divamque videt lymphamque roganti dulce dedit, tosta quod texerat ante polenta. 450 dum bibit illa datum, duri puer oris et audax constitit ante deam risitque avidamque vocavit.
offensa est neque adhuc epota parte loquentem cum liquido mixta perfudit diva polenta:
conbibit os maculas et, quae modo bracchia gessit, 455 crura gerit; cauda est mutatis addita membris, inque brevem formam, ne sit vis magna nocendi, contrahitur, parvaque minor mensura lacerta est.
mirantem flentemque et tangere monstra parantem fugit anum latebramque petit aptumque pudori 460 nomen habet variis stellatus corpora guttis.

“Quas dea per terras et quas erraverit undas, dicere longa mora est; quaerenti defuit orbis; Sicaniam repetit, dumque omnia lustrat eundo, venit et ad Cyanen. ea ni mutata fuisset, 465 omnia narrasset; sed et os et lingua volenti dicere non aderant, nec, quo loqueretur, habebat;

signa tamen manifesta dedit notamque parenti, illo forte loco delapsam in gurgite sacro Persephones zonam summis ostendit in undis. 470 quam simul agnovit, tamquam tum denique raptam scisset, inornatos laniavit diva capillos et repetita suis percussit pectora palmis.
nescit adhuc, ubi sit; terras tamen increpat omnes ingratasque vocat nec frugum munere dignas, 475 Trinacriam ante alias, in qua vestigia damni repperit. ergo illic saeva vertentia glaebas fregit aratra manu, parilique irata colonos ruricolaeque boves leto dedit arvaeque iussit fallere depositum vitiataque semina fecit. 480 fertilitas terrae latum vulgata per orbem falsa iacet: primis segetes moriuntur in herbis, et modo sol nimius, nimius modo corripit imber;
sideraque ventique nocent, avidaeque volucres semina iacta legunt; lolium tribulique fatigant 485 triticeas messes et inexpugnabile gramen.

“Tum caput Eleis Alpheias extulit undis rorantesque comas a fronte removit ad aures atque ait ‘o toto quaesitae virginis orbe et frugum genetrix, inmensos siste labores 490 neve tibi fidae violenta irascere terrae.
terra nihil meruit patuitque invita rapinae, nec sum pro patria supplex: huc hospita veni.
Pisa mihi patria est et ab Elide ducimus ortus, Sicaniam peregrina colo, sed gratior omni 495
haec mihi terra solo est: hos nunc Arethusa penates, hanc habeo sedem. quam tu, mitissima, serva.
mota loco cur sim tantique per aequoris undas advehar Ortygiam, veniet narratibus hora tempestitiva meis, cum tu curaque levata 500 et vultus melioris eris. mihi pervia tellus praebet iter, subterque imas ablata cavernas hic caput attollo desuetaque sidera cerno.

ergo dum Stygio sub terris gurgite labor, visa tua est oculis illic Proserpina nostris: 505 illa quidem tristis neque adhuc interrita vultu, sed regina tamen, sed opaci maxima mundi,
sed tamen inferni pollens matrona tyranni!
Mater ad auditas stupuit ceu saxea voces attonitaeque diu similis fuit, utque dolore 510 pulsa gravi gravis est amentia, curribus oras exit in aetherias: ibi toto nubila vultu ante Iovem passis stetit invidiosa capillis
'pro' que 'meo veni supplex tibi, Iuppiter,' inquit
'sanguine proque tuo: si nulla est gratia matris, 515 nata patrem moveat, neu sit tibi cura, precamur, vilior illius, quod nostro est edita partu.
en quaesita diu tandem mihi nata reperta est, si reperire vocas amittere certius, aut si scire, ubi sit, reperire vocas. quod rapta, feremus, 520 dummodo reddat eam! neque enim praedone marito filia digna tua est, si iam mea filia non est.' Iuppiter excepit 'commune est pignus onusque nata mihi tecum; sed si modo nomina rebus addere vera placet, non hoc iniuria factum, 525 verum amor est; neque erit nobis gener ille pudori, tu modo, diva, velis. ut desint cetera, quantum est esse Iovis fratrem! quid, quod nec cetera desunt nec cedit nisi sorte mihi?++sed tanta cupido si tibi discidii est, repetet Proserpina caelum, 530 lege tamen certa, si nullos contigit illic ore cibos; nam sic Parcarum foedere cautum est.'

“Dixerat, at Cereri certum est educere natam;
non ita fata sinunt, quoniam ieiunia virgo solverat et, cultis dum simplex errat in hortis, 535 puniceum curva decerpserat arbore pomum sumptaque pallenti septem de cortice grana presserat ore suo, solusque ex omnibus illud Ascalaphus vidit, quem quondam dicitur Orphne, inter Avernales haud ignotissima nymphas, 540

ex Acheronte suo silvis peperisse sub atris;
vidit et indicio reditum crudelis ademit.
ingemuit regina Erebi testemque profanam fecit avem sparsumque caput Phlegethontide lympha in rostrum et plumas et grandia lumina vertit. 545 ille sibi ablati fulvis amicitur in alis inque caput crescit longosque reflectitur ungues vixque movet natas per inertia bracchia pennas foedaque fit volucris, venturi nuntia luctus, ignavus bubo, dirum mortalibus omen. 550

“Hic tamen indicio poenam linguaque videri commeruisse potest; vobis, Acheloides, unde pluma pedesque avium, cum virginis ora geratis?
an quia, cum legeret vernos Proserpina flores, in comitum numero, doctae Sirenes, eratis? 555 quam postquam toto frustra quaesistis in orbe, protinus, et vestram sentirent aequora curam, posse super fluctus alarum insistere remis optastis facilesque deos habuistis et artus vidistis vestros subitis flavescere pennis. 560 ne tamen ille canor mulcendas natus ad aures tantaque dos oris linguae deperderet usum, virginei vultus et vox humana remansit.

“At medius fratrisque sui maestaeque sororis Iuppiter ex aequo volventem dividit annum: 565 nunc dea, regnorum numen commune duorum, cum matre est totidem, totidem cum coniuge menses.
vertitur extemplo facies et mentis et oris;
nam modo quae poterat Diti quoque maesta videri, laeta deae frons est, ut sol, qui tectus aquosis 570

nubibus ante fuit, victis e nubibus exit.

“Exigit alma Ceres nata secura recepta, quae tibi causa fugae, cur sis, Arethusa, sacer fons.
conticuere undae, quarum dea sustulit alto fonte caput viridesque manu siccata capillos 575 fluminis Elei veteres narravit amores.
‘pars ego nympharum, quae sunt in Achaide,’ dixit ‘una fui, nec me studiosius altera saltus legit nec posuit studiosius altera casses.
sed quamvis formae numquam mihi fama petita est, 580 quamvis fortis eram, formosae nomen habebam, nec mea me facies nimium laudata iuvabat, quaque aliae gaudere solent, ego rustica dote corporis erubui crimenque placere putavi.
lassa revertabar (memini) Stymphalide silva; 585 aestus erat, magnumque labor geminaverat aestum:
invenio sine vertice aquas, sine murmure euntes, perspicuas ad humum, per quas numerabilis alte calculus omnis erat, quas tu vix ire putares.
cana salicta dabant nutritaque populus unda 590
sponte sua natas ripis declivibus umbras.
accessi primumque pedis vestigia tinxi, poplite deinde tenus; neque eo contenta, recingor molliaque inpono salici velamina curvae nudaque mergor aquis. quas dum ferioque trahoque 595 mille modis labens excussa que bracchia iacto, nescio quod medio sensi sub gurgite murmur territaque insisto propioris margine ripae.
“quo properas, Arethusa?” suis Alpheos ab undis, “quo properas?” iterum rauco mihi dixerat ore. 600 sicut eram, fugio sine vestibus (altera vestes ripa meas habuit): tanto magis instat et ardet, et quia nuda fui, sum visa paratior illi.
sic ego currebam, sic me ferus ille premebat, ut fugere accipitrem penna trepidante columbae, 605 ut solet accipiter trepidas urguere columbas.

usque sub Orchomenon Psophidaque Cyllenenque Maenaiosque sinus gelidumque Erymanthon et Elin currere sustinui, nec me velocior ille;
sed tolerare diu cursus ego viribus inpar 610 non poteram, longi patiens erat ille laboris.
per tamen et campos, per opertos arbore montes, saxa quoque et rupes et, qua via nulla, cucurri.
sol erat a tergo: vidi praecedere longam ante pedes umbram, nisi si timor illa videbat; 615 sed certe sonitusque pedum terrebat et ingens crinales vittas adflabat anhelitus oris.
fessa labore fugae “fer opem, deprendimur,” inquam “armigerae, Diana, tuae, cui saepe dedisti ferre tuos arcus inclusaque tela pharetra!” 620 mota dea est spissisque ferens e nubibus unam me super iniecit: lustrat caligine tectam amnis et ignarus circum cava nubila quaerit bisque locum, quo me dea texerat, inscius ambit et bis “io Arethusa” vocavit, “io Arethusa!” 625 quid mihi tunc animi miserae fuit? anne quod agnae est, si qua lupos audit circum stabula alta frementes, aut lepori, qui vepre latens hostilia cernit ora canum nullosque audet dare corpore motus?
non tamen abscedit; neque enim vestigia cernit 630 longius ulla pedum: servat nubemque locumque.
occupat obsessos sudor mihi frigidus artus, caeruleaeque cadunt toto de corpore guttae, quaque pedem movi, manat lacus, eque capillis ros cadit, et citius, quam nunc tibi facta renarro, 635 in latices mutor. sed enim cognoscit amatas amnis aquas positoque viri, quod sumpserat, ore vertitur in proprias, et se mihi misceat, undas.
Delia rupit humum, caecisque ego mersa cavernis advehor Ortygiam, quae me cognomine divae 640 grata meae superas eduxit prima sub auras.’

“Hac Arethusa tenus; geminos dea fertilis angues curribus admovit frenisque coercuit ora et medium caeli terraeque per aera vecta est atque levem currum Tritonida misit in urbem 645 Triptolemo partimque rudi data semina iussit spargere humo, partim post tempora longa recultae.

iam super Europen sublimis et Asida terram vectus erat iuvenis: Scythicas advertitur oras.
rex ibi Lyncus erat; regis subit ille penates. 650 qua veniat, causamque viae nomenque rogatus et patriam, 'patria est clarae mihi' dixit 'Athenae; Triptolemus nomen; veni nec puppe per undas, nec pede per terras: patuit mihi pervius aether.
dona fero Cereris, latos quae sparsa per agros 655 frugiferas messes alimentaue mitia reddant.'
barbarus invidit tantique ut muneris auctor ipse sit, hospitio recipit somnoque gravatum adgreditur ferro: conantem figere pectus lynca Ceres fecit rursusque per aera iussit 660 Mopsopium iuvenem sacros agitare iugales."

'Finierat doctos e nobis maxima cantus;
at nymphae vicisse deas Heliconae colentes concordi dixere sono: convicia victae cum iacerent, "quoniam" dixi "certamine vobis 665 supplicium meruisse parum est maledictaque culpae additis et non est patientia libera nobis, ibimus in poenas et, qua vocat ira, sequemur."
rident Emathides spernuntque minacia verba, conantesque loqui et magno clamore protervas 670 intentare manus pennas exire per unguis adspexere suos, operiri bracchia plumis, alteraque alterius rigido concrecere rostro ora videt volucresque novas accedere silvis; dumque volunt plangi, per bracchia mota levatae 675
aere pendebant, nemorum convicia, picae.
Nunc quoque in alitibus facundia prisca remansit raucaeque garrulitas studiumque inmane loquendi.'

LIBER SEXTVS

Praebuerat dictis Tritonia talibus aures carminaque Aonidum iustamque probaverat iram; tum secum: 'laudare parum est, laudemur et ipsae numina nec sperni sine poena nostra sinamus.' Maeoniaeque animum fatis intendit Arachnes, 5 quam sibi lanificae non cedere laudibus artis audierat. non illa loco nec origine gentis clara, sed arte fuit: pater huic Colophonius Idmon Phocaico bibulas tinguebat murice lanas; occiderat mater, sed et haec de plebe suoque 10 aequa viro fuerat; Lydas tamen illa per urbes quaesierat studio nomen memorabile, quamvis orta domo parva parvis habitabat Hypaepis.
huius ut adspicerent opus admirabile, saepe deseruere sui nymphae vineta Timoli, 15 deseruere suas nymphae Pactolides undas.
nec factas solum vestes, spectare iuvabat tum quoque, cum fierent: tantus decor adfuit arti, sive rudem primos lanam glomerabat in orbes, seu digitis subigebat opus repetitaque longo 20 vellera mollibat nebulas aequantia tractu, sive levi teretem versabat pollice fusum, seu pingebat acu; scires a Pallade doctam.
quod tamen ipsa negat tantaque offensa magistra
'certet' ait 'mecum: nihil est, quod victa recusem!' 25

Pallas anum simulat: falsosque in tempora canos addit et infirmos, baculo quos sustinet, artus.
tum sic orsa loqui 'non omnia grandior aetas, quae fugiamus, habet: seris venit usus ab annis.
consilium ne sperne meum: tibi fama petatur 30 inter mortales faciendae maxima lanae;

cede deae veniamque tuis, temeraria, dictis supplice voce roga: veniam dabit illa roganti.’ adspicit hanc torvis inceptaque fila relinquit vixque manum retinens confessaque vultibus iram 35 talibus obscuram resecuta est Pallada dictis: ‘mentis inops longaque venis confecta senecta, et nimium vixisse diu nocet. audiat istas, si qua tibi nurus est, si qua est tibi filia, voces;
consilii satis est in me mihi, neve monendo 40 profecisse putes, eadem est sententia nobis.
cur non ipsa venit? cur haec certamina vitat?’
tum dea ‘venit!’ ait formamque removit anilem Palladaque exhibuit: venerantur numina nymphae Mygdonidesque nurus; sola est non territa virgo, 45 sed tamen erubuit, subitusque invita notavit ora rubor rursusque evanuit, ut solet aer purpureus fieri, cum primum Aurora movetur, et breve post tempus candescere solis ab ortu.
perstat in incepto stolidaeque cupidine palmae 50 in sua fata ruit; neque enim love nata recusat nec monet ulterius nec iam certamina differt.
haud mora, constituunt diversis partibus ambae et gracili geminas intendunt stamine telas:
tela iugo vincta est, stamen secernit harundo, 55 inseritur medium radiis subtemen acutis, quod digiti expediunt, atque inter stamina ductum percusso paviunt insecti pectine dentes.
utraque festinant cinctaeque ad pectora vestes bracchia docta movent, studio fallente laborem. 60 illic et Tyrium quae purpura sensit aenum textitur et tenues parvi discriminis umbrae;
qualis ab imbre solent percussis solibus arcus inficere ingenti longum curvamine caelum;
in quo diversi niteant cum mille colores, 65
transitus ipse tamen spectantia lumina fallit:
usque adeo, quod tangit, idem est; tamen ultima distant.

illic et lentum filis inmittitur aurum et vetus in tela deducitur argumentum.

Cecropia Pallas scopulum Mavortis in arce 70 pingit et antiquam de terrae nomine litem.
bis sex caelestes medio Iove sedibus altis augusta gravitate sedent; sua quemque deorum inscribit facies: Iovis est regalis imago; stare deum pelagi longoque ferire tridente 75 aspera saxa facit, medioque e vulnere saxi exsiluisse fretum, quo pignore vindicet urbem;
at sibi dat clipeum, dat acutae cuspidis hastam, dat galeam capiti, defenditur aegide pectus, percussamque sua simulat de cuspide terram 80
edere cum bacis fetum canentis olivae; mirarique deos: operis Victoria finis.
ut tamen exemplis intellegat aemula laudis, quod pretium speret pro tam furialibus ausis quattuor in partes certamina quattuor addit, 85 clara colore suo, brevibus distincta sigillis: Threiciam Rhodopen habet angulus unus et Haemum, nunc gelidos montes, mortalia corpora quondam, nomina summorum sibi qui tribuere deorum;
altera Pygmaeae fatum miserabile matris 90 pars habet: hanc Iuno victam certamine iussit esse gruem populisque suis indicere bellum; pinxit et Antigonem, ausam contendere quondam cum magni consorte Iovis, quam regia Iuno in volucrem vertit, nec profuit Ilion illi 95 Laomedonve pater, sumptis quin candida pennis ipsa sibi plaudat crepitante ciconia rostro;
qui superest solus, Cinyran habet angulus orbem;
isque gradus templi, natarum membra suarum, amplectens saxoque iacens lacrimare videtur. 100 circuit extremas oleis pacalibus oras (is modus est) operisque sua facit arbore finem.

Maeonis elusam designat imagine tauri

Europam: verum taurum, freta vera putares; ipsa videbatur terras spectare relictas 105 et comites clamare suas tactumque vereri adsilientis aquae timidasque reducere plantas.
fecit et Asterien aquila luctante teneri, fecit olorinis Ledam recubare sub alis;
addidit, ut satyri celatus imagine pulchram 110
Iuppiter inplerit gemino Nycteida fetu, Amphitryon fuerit, cum te, Tirynthia, cepit, aureus ut Danaen, Asopida luserit ignis, Mnemosynen pastor, varius Deoidea serpens.
te quoque mutatum torvo, Neptune, iuvenco 115 virgine in Aeolia posuit; tu visus Enipeus gignis Aloidas, aries Bisaltida fallis, et te flava comas frugum mitissima mater sensit equum, sensit volucrem crinita colubris mater equi volucris, sensit delphina Melantho: 120 omnibus his faciemque suam faciemque locorum reddidit. est illic agrestis imagine Phoebus, utque modo accipitris pennas, modo terga leonis gesserit, ut pastor Macareida luserit Issen, Liber ut Erigonen falsa deceperit uva, 125
ut Saturnus equo geminum Chirona creavit.
ultima pars telae, tenui circumdata limbo, nexilibus flores hederis habet intertextos.

Non illud Pallas, non illud carpere Livor possit opus: doluit successu flava virago 130 et rupit pictas, caelestia crimina, vestes, utque Cytoriaco radium de monte tenebat, ter quater Idmoniae frontem percussit Arachnes.
non tulit infelix laqueoque animosa ligavit guttura: pendentem Pallas miserata levavit 135 atque ita 'vive quidem, pende tamen, inproba' dixit,
'lexque eadem poenae, ne sis secura futuri, dicta tuo generi serisque nepotibus esto!'
post ea discedens sucis Hecateidos herbae sparsit: et extemplo tristi medicamine tactae 140 defluxere comae, cum quis et naris et aures, fitque caput minimum; toto quoque corpore parva est:

in latere exiles digiti pro cruribus haerent, cetera venter habet, de quo tamen illa remittit stamen et antiquas exercet aranea telas. 145

Lydia tota fremit, Phrygiaeque per oppida facti rumor it et magnum sermonibus occupat orbem.
ante suos Niobe thalamos cognoverat illam, tum cum Maeoniam virgo Sipylumque colebat;
nec tamen admonita est poena popularis Arachnes, 150
cedere caelitibus verbisque minoribus uti.
multa dabant animos; sed enim nec coniugis artes nec genus amborum magnique potentia regni sic placuere illi, quamvis ea cuncta placerent, ut sua progenies; et felicissima matrum 155
dicta foret Niobe, si non sibi visa fuisset.
nam sata Tiresia venturi praescia Manto per medias fuerat divino concita motu vaticinata vias: 'Ismenides, ite frequentes et date Latonae Latonigenisque duobus 160 cum prece tura pia lauroque innectite crinem:
ore meo Latona iubet.' paretur, et omnes Thebaides iussis sua tempora frondibus ornant turaque dant sanctis et verba precantia flammis.

Ecce venit comitum Niobe celeberrima turba 165 vestibus intexto Phrygiis spectabilis auro et, quantum ira sinit, formosa; movensque decoro cum capite inmissos umerum per utrumque capillos constitit, utque oculos circumtulit alta superbos,
'quis furor auditos' inquit 'praeponere visis 170
caelestes? aut cur colitur Latona per aras, numen adhuc sine ture meum est? mihi Tantalus auctor, cui licuit soli superiorum tangere mensas; Pleiadum soror est genetrix mea; maximus Atlas est avus, aetherium qui fert cervicibus axem; 175

Iuppiter alter avus; socero quoque gloriator illo.
me gentes metuunt Phrygiae, me regia Cadmi sub domina est, fidibusque mei commissa mariti moenia cum populis a meque viroque reguntur.
in quamcumque domus adverti lumina partem, 180 inmensae spectantur opes; accedit eodem digna dea facies; huc natas adice septem et totidem iuvenes et mox generosque nurusque!
quaerite nunc, habeat quam nostra superbia causam, nescio quoque audete satam Titanida Coeo 185 Latonam praeferre mihi, cui maxima quondam exiguam sedem pariturae terra negavit!
nec caelo nec humo nec aquis dea vestra recepta est:
exsul erat mundi, donec miserata vagantem “hospita tu terris erras, ego” dixit “in undis” 190 instabilemque locum Delos dedit. illa duorum facta parens: uteri pars haec est septima nostri.
sum felix (quis enim neget hoc?) felixque manebo (hoc quoque quis dubitet?): tutam me copia fecit.
maior sum quam cui possit Fortuna nocere, 195
multaque ut eripiat, multo mihi plura relinquet.
excessere metum mea iam bona. fingite demi huic aliquid populo natorum posse meorum:
non tamen ad numerum redigar spoliata duorum, Latonae turbam, qua quantum distat ab orba? 200
ite — satis pro re sacri — laurumque capillis ponite!’ deponunt et sacra infecta relinquunt, quodque licet, tacito venerantur murmure numen.

Indignata dea est summoque in vertice Cynthi talibus est dictis gemina cum prole locuta: 205 ‘en ego vestra parens, vobis animosa creatis, et nisi Iunoni nulli cessura dearum, an dea sim, dubitor perque omnia saecula cultis arceor, o nati, nisi vos succurritis, aris.
nec dolor hic solus; diro convicia facto 210 Tantalus adiecit vosque est postponere natis

ausa suis et me, quod in ipsam reccidat, orbam dixit et exhibuit linguam scelerata paternam.
adiectura preces erat his Latona relatis:
'desine!' Phoebus ait, 'poenae mora longa querella est!' 215 dixit idem Phoebe, celerique per aera lapsu contigerant tecti Cadmeida nubibus arcem.

Planus erat lateque patens prope moenia campus, adsiduis pulsatus equis, ubi turba rotarum duraque mollierat subiectas ungula glaebas. 220 pars ibi de septem genitis Amphione fortes conscendunt in equos Tyrioque rubentia suco terga premunt auroque graves moderantur habenas.
e quibus Ismenus, qui matri sarcina quondam prima suae fuerat, dum certum flectit in orbem 225 quadripedis cursus spumantiaque ora coercet,
'ei mihi!' conclamat medioque in pectore fixa tela gerit frenisque manu moriente remissis in latus a dextro paulatim defluit armo.
proximus audito sonitu per inane pharetrae 230 frena dabat Sipylus, veluti cum praescius imbris nube fugit visa pendentiaque undique rector carbasa deducit, ne qua levis effluat aura: frena tamen dantem non evitabile telum consequitur, summaque tremens cervice sagitta 235 haesit, et exstabat nudum de gutture ferrum;
ille, ut erat, pronus per crura admissa iubasque volvitur et calido tellurem sanguine foedat.
Phaedimus infelix et aviti nominis heres Tantalus, ut solito finem inposuere labori, 240 transierant ad opus nitidae iuvenale palaestrae;
et iam contulerant arto luctantia nexu pectora pectoribus, cum tento concita nervo, sicut erant iuncti, traiecit utrumque sagitta.
ingemuere simul, simul incurvata dolore 245 membra solo posuere, simul suprema iacentes lumina versarunt, animam simul exhalarunt.

adspicit Alphenor laniataque pectora plangens advolat, ut gelidos complexibus adlevet artus, inque pio cadit officio; nam Delius illi 250
intima fatifero rupit praecordia ferro.
quod simul eductum est, pars et pulmonis in hamis eruta cumque anima cruor est effusus in auras.
at non intonsum simplex Damasicthona vulnus adficit: ictus erat, qua crus esse incipit et qua 255 mollia nervosus facit internodia poples.
dumque manu temptat trahere exitiabile telum, altera per iugulum pennis tenuis acta sagitta est.
expulit hanc sanguis seque eiaculatus in altum emicat et longe terebrata prosilit aura. 260 ultimus Ilioneus non profectura precando bracchia sustulerat 'di' que 'o communiter omnes,' dixerat ignarus non omnes esse rogandos 'parcite!' motus erat, cum iam revocabile telum non fuit, arcitenens; minimo tamen occidit ille 265 vulnere, non alte percusso corde sagitta.

Fama mali populique dolor lacrimaeque suorum tam subitae matrem certam fecere ruinae, mirantem potuisse irascentemque, quod ausi hoc essent superi, quod tantum iuris haberent; 270 nam pater Amphion ferro per pectus adacto finierat moriens pariter cum luce dolorem.
heu! quantum haec Niobe Niobe distabat ab illa, quae modo Latois populum submoverat aris et mediam tulerat gressus resupina per urbem 275 invidiosa suis; at nunc miseranda vel hosti!
corporibus gelidis incumbit et ordine nullo oscula dispensat natos suprema per omnes;
a quibus ad caelum liventia bracchia tollens
'pascere, crudelis, nostro, Latona, dolore, 280 pascere' ait 'satiisque meo tua pectora luctu!
[corque ferum satia!' dixit. 'per funera septem] efferor: exsulta victrixque inimica triumphat!

cur autem victrix? miserae mihi plura supersunt, quam tibi felici; post tot quoque funera vinco!' 285

Dixerat, et sonuit contento nervus ab arcu;
qui praeter Nioben unam conterruit omnes:
illa malo est audax. stabant cum vestibus atris ante toros fratrum demisso crine sorores;
e quibus una trahens haerentia viscere tela 290 inposito fratri moribunda relanguit ore;
altera solari miseram conata parentem conticuit subito duplicataque vulnere caeco est.
[oraeque compressit, nisi postquam spiritus ibat] haec frustra fugiens collabatur, illa sorori 295 inmoritur; latet haec, illam trepidare videres.
sexque datis leto diversaque vulnera passis ultima restabat; quam toto corpore mater, tota veste tegens 'unam minimamque relinque!
de multis minimam posco' clamavit 'et unam.' 300 dumque rogat, pro qua rogat, occidit: orba resedit exanimes inter natos natasque virumque deriguitque malis; nullos movet aura capillos, in vultu color est sine sanguine, lumina maestis stant inmota genis, nihil est in imagine vivum. 305 ipsa quoque interius cum duro lingua palato congelat, et venae desistunt posse moveri; nec flecti cervix nec bracchia reddere motus nec pes ire potest; intra quoque viscera saxum est.
flet tamen et validi circumdata turbine venti 310 in patriam rapta est: ibi fixa cacumine montis liquitur, et lacrimas etiam nunc marmora manant.

Tum vero cuncti manifestam numinis iram femina virque timent cultuque inpensius omnes magna gemelliparae venerantur numina divae; 315 utque fit, a facto propiore priora renarrant.
e quibus unus ait: 'Lyciae quoque fertilis agris non inpune deam veteres sprevere coloni.
res obscura quidem est ignobilitate virorum, mira tamen: vidi praesens stagnumque locumque 320 prodigio notum. nam me iam grandior aevo inpatiensque viae genitor deducere lectos iusserat inde boves gentisque illius eunti ipse ducem dederat, cum quo dum pascua lustrō, ecce lacu medio sacrorum nigra favilla 325 ara vetus stabat tremulis circumdata cannis.

restitit et pavido “faveas mihi!” murmure dixit dux meus, et simili “faveas!” ego murmure dixi.
Naiadum Faunine foret tamen ara rogabam indigenaene, dei, cum talia rettulit hospes: 330 “non hac, o iuvenis, montanum numen in ara est;
illa suam vocat hanc, cui quondam regia coniunx orbem interdixit, quam vix erratica Delos orantem accepit tum, cum levis insula nabat; illic incumbens cum Palladis arbore palmae 335
edidit invita geminos Latona noverca.
hinc quoque lunonem fugisse puerpera fertur inque suo portasse sinu, duo numina, natos.
iamque Chimaeriferae, cum sol gravis ureret arva, finibus in Lyciae longo dea fessa labore 340
sidereo siccata sitim collegit ab aestu, uberaque ebiberant avidi lactantia nati.
forte lacum mediocris aquae prospexit in imis vallibus; agrestes illic fruticosa legebant vimina cum iuncis gratamque paludibus ulvam; 345 accessit positoque genu Titania terram pressit, ut hauriret gelidos potura liquores.
rustica turba vetat; dea sic adfata vetantis: ‘quid prohibetis aquis? usus communis aquarum est.
nec solem proprium natura nec aera fecit 350
nec tenues undas: ad publica munera veni;
quae tamen ut detis, supplex peto. non ego nostros abluere hic artus lassataque membra parabam, sed relevare sitim. caret os umore loquentis, et fauces arent, vixque est via vocis in illis. 355

haustus aquae mihi nectar erit, vitamque fatebor accepisse simul: vitam dederitis in unda.
hi quoque vos moveant, qui nostro bracchia tendunt parva sinu,' et casu tendebant bracchia nati.
quem non blanda deae potuissent verba movere? 360
hi tamen orantem perstant prohibere minasque, ni procul abscedat, conviciaque insuper addunt.
nec satis est, ipsos etiam pedibusque manuque turbavere lacus imoque e gurgite mollem huc illuc limum saltu movere maligno. 365 distulit ira sitim; neque enim iam filia Coei supplicat indignis nec dicere sustinet ultra verba minora dea tollensque ad sidera palmas
'aeternum stagno' dixit 'vivatis in isto!'
eveniunt optata deae: iuvat esse sub undis 370 et modo tota cava submergere membra palude, nunc proferre caput, summo modo gurgite nare, saepe super ripam stagni consistere, saepe in gelidos resilire lacus, sed nunc quoque turpes litibus exercent linguas pulsoque pudore, 375 quamvis sint sub aqua, sub aqua maledicere temptant.
vox quoque iam rauca est, inflataque colla tumescunt, ipsaque dilatant patulos convicia rictus;
terga caput tangunt, colla intercepta videntur, spina viret, venter, pars maxima corporis, albet, 380 limosoque novae saliunt in gurgite ranae."

Sic ubi nescio quis Lycia de gente virorum rettulit exitium, satyri reminiscitur alter, quem Tritoniaca Latous harundine victum adfecit poena. 'quid me mihi detrahis?' inquit; 385
'a! piget, a! non est' clamabat 'tibia tanti.'
clamanti cutis est summos direpta per artus, nec quicquam nisi vulnus erat; cruor undique manat, detectique patent nervi, trepidaeque sine ulla pelle micant venae; salientia viscera possis 390 et perlucentes numerare in pectore fibras.

illum ruricolae, silvarum numina, fauni et satyri fratres et tunc quoque carus Olympus et nymphae flerunt, et quisquis montibus illis lanigerosque greges armentaque bucera pavit. 395 fertilis inmaduit madefactaque terra caducas concepit lacrimas ac venis perbibit imis;
quas ubi fecit aquam, vacuas emisit in auras.
inde petens rapidus ripis declivibus aequor Marsya nomen habet, Phrygiae liquidissimus amnis. 400

Talibus extemplo redit ad praesentia dictis vulgus et extinctum cum stirpe Amphiona luget; mater in invidia est: hanc tunc quoque dicitur unus flesse Pelops umeroque, suas a pectore postquam deduxit vestes, ebur ostendisse sinistro. 405 concolor hic umerus nascendi tempore dextro corporeusque fuit; manibus mox caesa paternis membra ferunt iunxisse deos, aliisque repertis, qui locus est iuguli medius summique lacerti, defuit: inpositum est non conparentis in usum 410
partis ebur, factoque Pelops fuit integer illo.

Finitimi proceres coeunt, urbesque propinquae oravere suos ire ad solacia reges, Argosque et Sparte Pelopeiadesque Mycenae et nondum torvae Calydon invisae Dianae 415 Orchomenosque ferax et nobilis aere Corinthus Messeneque ferox Patraeque humilesque Cleonae et Nelea Pylos neque adhuc Pittheia Troezen, quaeque urbes aliae bimari clauduntur ab Isthmo exteriusque sitae bimari spectantur ab Isthmo; 420 credere quis posset? solae cessastis Athenae.
obstitit officio bellum, subvectaque ponto barbara Mopsopios terrebant agmina muros.

Threicius Tereus haec auxiliaribus armis fuderat et clarum vincendo nomen habebat; 425 quem sibi Pandion opibusque virisque potentem et genus a magno ducentem forte Gradivo conubio Procnes iunxit; non pronuba Iuno, non Hymenaeus adest, non illi Gratia lecto:

Eumenides tenuere faces de funere raptas, 430 Eumenides stravere torum, tectoque profanus incubuit bubo thalamique in culmine sedit.
hac ave coniuncti Procne Tereusque, parentes hac ave sunt facti; gratata est scilicet illis Thracia, disque ipsi grates egere; diemque, 435 quaque data est claro Pandione nata tyranno quaque erat ortus Itys, festum iussere vocari:
usque adeo latet utilitas.

Iam tempora Titan

quinque per autumnos repetiti duxerat anni, cum blandita viro Procne 'si gratia' dixit 440
'ulla mea est, vel me visendae mitte sorori, vel soror huc veniat: redituram tempore parvo promittes socero; magni mihi muneris instar germanam vidisse dabis.' iubet ille carinas in freta deduci veloque et remige portus 445 Cecropios intrat Piraeaque litora tangit.
ut primum soceri data copia, dextera dextrae iungitur, et fausto committitur omine sermo.
coeperat, adventus causam, mandata referre coniugis et celeres missae spondere recursus: 450 ecce venit magno dives Philomela paratu, divitior forma; quales audire solemus naidas et dryadas mediis incedere silvis, si modo des illis cultus similesque paratus.
non secus exarsit conspecta virgine Tereus, 455 quam si quis canis ignem supponat aristis aut frondem positasque cremet faenilibus herbas.
digna quidem facies; sed et hunc innata libido exstimulat, pronumque genus regionibus illis in Venerem est: flagrat vitio gentisque suoque. 460 impetus est illi comitum corrumpere curam nutricisque fidem nec non ingentibus ipsam sollicitare datis totumque inpendere regnum aut rapere et saevo raptam defendere bello; et nihil est, quod non effreno captus amore 465

ausit, nec capiunt inclusas pectora flammās.
iamque moras male fert cupidoque revertitur ore ad mandata Procnes et agit sua vota sub illa.
facundum faciebat amor, quotiensque rogabat ulterius iusto, Procnen ita velle ferebat. 470 addidit et lacrimas, tamquam mandasset et illas.
pro superi, quantum mortalia pectora caecae noctis habent! ipso sceleris molimine Tereus creditur esse pius laudemque a crimine sumit.
quid, quod idem Philomela cupit, patriosque lacertis 475 blanda tenens umeros, ut eat visura sororem, perque suam contraque suam petit ipsa salutem.
spectat eam Tereus praecontrectatque videndo osculaque et collo circumdata bracchia cernens omnia pro stimulis facibusque ciboque furoris 480 accipit, et quotiens amplectitur illa parentem, esse parens vellet: neque enim minus inpius esset.
vincitur ambarum genitor prece: gaudet agitque illa patri grates et successisse duabus id putat infelix, quod erit lugubre duabus. 485 Iam labor exiguus Phoebō restabat, equique pulsabant pedibus spatium declivis Olympi:
regales epulae mensis et Bacchus in auro ponitur; hinc placido dant turgida corpora somno.
at rex Odrysius, quamvis secessit, in illa 490 aestuat et repetens faciem motusque manusque qualia vult fingit quae nondum vidit et ignes ipse suos nutrit cura removente soporem.
lux erat, et generi dextram complexus euntis Pandion comitem lacrimis commendat obortis: 495
'hanc ego, care gener, quoniam pia causa coegit, et voluere ambae (voluisti tu quoque, Tereu)
do tibi perque fidem cognataque pectora supplex, per superos oro, patrio ut tuearis amore et mihi sollicitae lenimen dulce senectae 500 quam primum (omnis erit nobis mora longa) remittas;

tu quoque quam primum (satis est procul esse sororem), si pietas ulla est, ad me, Philomela, redito!
mandabat pariterque suae dabat oscula natae, et lacrimae mites inter mandata cadebant; 505 utque fide pignus dextras utriusque poposcit inter seque datas iunxit natamque nepotemque absentes pro se memori rogat ore salutent; supremumque vale pleno singultibus ore vix dixit timuitque suae praesagia mentis. 510

Ut semel inposita est pictae Philomela carinae, admotumque fretum remis tellusque repulsa est,
'vicimus!' exclamat, 'mecum mea vota feruntur!'
exsultatque et vix animo sua gaudia differt barbarus et nusquam lumen detorquet ab illa, 515 non aliter quam cum pedibus praedator obuncis deposuit nido leporem Iovis ales in alto;
nulla fuga est capto, spectat sua praemia raptor.

Iamque iter effectum, iamque in sua litora fessis puppibus exierant, cum rex Pandione natam 520 in stabula alta trahit, silvis obscura vetustis, atque ibi pallentem trepidamque et cuncta timentem et iam cum lacrimis, ubi sit germana, rogantem includit fassusque nefas et virginem et unam vi superat frustra clamato saepe parente, 525 saepe sorore sua, magnis super omnia divis.
illa tremit velut agna pavens, quae saucia cani ore excussa lupi nondum sibi tuta videtur, utque columba suo madefactis sanguine plumis horret adhuc avidosque timet, quibus haeserat, ungues. 530 mox ubi mens rediit, passos laniata capillos, lugenti similis caesis plangore lacertis intendens palmas 'o diris barbare factis, o crudelis' ait, 'nec te mandata parentis cum lacrimis movere piis nec cura sororis 535 nec mea virginitas nec coniugialia iura?

omnia turbasti; paelex ego facta sororis, tu geminus coniunx, hostis mihi debita Procne!
quin animam hanc, ne quod facinus tibi, perfide, restet, eripis? atque utinam fecisses ante nefandos 540 concubitus: vacuas habuissem criminis umbras.
si tamen haec superi cernunt, si numina divum sunt aliquid, si non perierunt omnia mecum, quandocumque mihi poenas dabis! ipsa pudore proiecto tua facta loquar: si copia detur, 545 in populos veniam; si silvis clausa tenebor, inplebo silvas et conscia saxa movebo;
audiet haec aether et si deus ullus in illo est!'

Talibus ira feri postquam commota tyranni nec minor hac metus est, causa stimulatus utraque, 550 quo fuit accinctus, vagina liberat ensem arreptamque coma fixis post terga lacertis vincla pati cogit; iugulum Philomela parabat spemque suae mortis viso conceperat ense:
ille indignantem et nomen patris usque vocantem 555 luctantemque loqui comprehensam forcipe linguam abstulit ense fero. radix micat ultima linguae, ipsa iacet terraeque tremens inmurmurat atrae, utque salire solet mutilatae cauda colubrae, palpitat et moriens dominae vestigia quaerit. 560 hoc quoque post facinus (vix ausim credere) fertur saepe sua lacerum repetisse libidine corpus.

Sustinet ad Procnen post talia facta reverti; coniuge quae viso germanam quaerit, at ille dat gemitus fictos commentaque funera narrat, 565 et lacrimae fecere fidem. velamina Procne deripit ex umeris auro fulgentia lato induiturque atras vestes et inane sepulcrum constituit falsisque piacula manibus infert et luget non sic lugendae fata sororis. 570

Signa deus bis sex acto lustraverat anno;
quid faciat Philomela? fugam custodia claudit, structa rigent solido stabulorum moenia saxo, os mutum facti caret indice. grande doloris ingenium est, miserisque venit sollertia rebus: 575 stamina barbarica suspendit callida tela purpureasque notas filis intexuit albis, indicium sceleris; perfectaue tradidit uni, utque ferat dominae, gestu rogat; illa rogata pertulit ad Procnen nec scit, quid tradat in illis. 580 evolvit vestes saevi matrona tyranni germanaeque suae fatum miserabile legit et (mirum potuisse) silet: dolor ora repressit, verbaque quaerenti satis indignantia linguae defuerunt, nec flere vacat, sed fasque nefasque 585 confusura ruit poenaeque in imagine tota est.

Tempus erat, quo sacra solent trieterica Bacchi Sithoniae celebrare nurus: (nox conscia sacris, nocte sonat Rhodope tinnitibus aeris acuti) nocte sua est egressa domo regina deique 590 ritibus instruitur furialiaque accipit arma;
vite caput tegitur, lateri cervina sinistro vellera dependent, umero levis incubat hasta.
concita per silvas turba comitante suarum terribilis Procne furiisque agitata doloris, 595 Bacche, tuas simulat: venit ad stabula avia tandem exululatque euhoeque sonat portasque refringit germanamque rapit raptaeque insignia Bacchi induit et vultus hederarum frondibus abdit attonitamque trahens intra sua moenia ducit. 600

Ut sensit tetigisse domum Philomela nefandam, horruit infelix totoque expalluit ore;
nacta locum Procne sacrorum pignora demit oraeque develat miserae pudibunda sororis amplexumque petit; sed non attollere contra 605 sustinet haec oculos paelex sibi visa sororis deiectoque in humum vultu iurare volenti testarique deos, per vim sibi dedecus illud inlatum, pro voce manus fuit. ardet et iram non capit ipsa suam Procne fletumque sororis 610 corripiens 'non est lacrimis hoc' inquit 'agendum, sed ferro, sed si quid habes, quod vincere ferrum possit. in omne nefas ego me, germana, paravi:

aut ego, cum facibus regalia tecta cremabo, artificem mediis inmittam Terea flammis, 615 aut linguam atque oculos et quae tibi membra pudorem abstulerunt ferro rapiam, aut per vulnera mille sontem animam expellam! magnum quodcumque paravi;
quid sit, adhuc dubito.'

Peragit dum talia Procne, ad matrem veniebat Itys; quid possit, ab illo 620 admonita est oculisque tuens inmitibus 'a! quam es similis patri!' dixit nec plura locuta triste parat facinus tacitaque exaestuat ira.
ut tamen accessit natus matrique salutem attulit et parvis adduxit colla lacertis 625 mixtaque blanditiis puerilibus oscula iunxit, mota quidem est genetrix, infractaque constitit ira invitique oculi lacrimis maduere coactis;
sed simul ex nimia mentem pietate labare sensit, ab hoc iterum est ad vultus versa sororis 630 inque vicem spectans ambos 'cur admovet' inquit
'alter blanditias, rapta silet altera lingua?
quam vocat hic matrem, cur non vocat illa sororem?
cui sis nupta, vide, Pandione nata, marito!
degeneras! scelus est pietas in coniuge Tereo.' 635 nec mora, traxit Ityn, veluti Gangetica cervae lactentem fetum per silvas tigris opacas, utque domus altae partem tenuere remotam, tendentemque manus et iam sua fata videntem et 'mater! mater!' clamantem et colla petentem 640 ense ferit Procne, lateri qua pectus adhaeret, nec vultum vertit. satis illi ad fata vel unum vulnus erat: iugulum ferro Philomela resolvit, vivaque adhuc animaeque aliquid retinentia membra dilaniant. pars inde cavis exsultat aenis, 645 pars veribus stridunt; manant penetralia tabo.

His adhibet coniunx ignarum Terea mensis et patrii moris sacrum mentita, quod uni fas sit adire viro, comites famulosque removit.
ipse sedens solio Tereus sublimis avito 650 vescitur inque suam sua viscera congerit alvum, tantaque nox animi est, 'Ityn huc accersite!' dixit.
dissimulare nequit crudelia gaudia Procne iamque suae cupiens existere nuntia cladis
'intus habes, quem poscis' ait: circumspicit ille 655 atque, ubi sit, quaerit; quaerenti iterumque vocanti, sicut erat sparsis furiali caede capillis, prosiluit Ityosque caput Philomela cruentum misit in ora patris nec tempore maluit ullo posse loqui et meritis testari gaudia dictis. 660 Thracius ingenti mensas clamore repellit vipereasque ciet Stygia de valle sorores et modo, si posset, reserato pectore diras egerere inde dapes semesaque viscera gestit, flet modo seque vocat bustum miserabile nati, 665
nunc sequitur nudo genitas Pandione ferro.
corpora Cecropidum pennis pendere putares:
pendebant pennis. quarum petit altera silvas, altera tecta subit, neque adhuc de pectore caedis excessere notae, signataque sanguine pluma est. 670 ille dolore suo poenaeque cupidine velox vertitur in volucrem, cui stant in vertice cristae.
prominet inmodicum pro longa cuspidis rostrum;
nomen epops volucris, facies armata videtur.

Hic dolor ante diem longaeque extrema senectae 675
tempora Tartareas Pandiona misit ad umbras.
sceptra loci rerumque capit moderamen Erectheus, iustitia dubium validisne potentior armis.

quattuor ille quidem iuvenes totidemque creatat femineae sortis, sed erat par forma duarum. 680
e quibus Aeolides Cephalus te coniuge felix, Procri, fuit; Boreae Tereus Thracesque nocebant, dilectaque diu caruit deus Orithyia, dum rogat et precibus mavult quam viribus uti;
ast ubi blanditiis agitur nihil, horridus ira, 685 quae solita est illi nimiumque domestica vento,
'et merito!' dixit; 'quid enim mea tela reliqui, saevitiam et vires iramque animosque minaces, admovique preces, quarum me dedecet usus?
apta mihi vis est: vi tristia nubila pello, 690 vi freta concutio nodosaque robora verto induroque nives et terras grandine pulso;
idem ego, cum fratres caelo sum nactus aperto (nam mihi campus is est), tanto molimine luctor, ut medius nostris concursibus insonet aether 695 exsiliantque cavis elisi nubibus ignes;
idem ego, cum subii convexa foramina terrae supposuique ferox imis mea terga cavernis, sollicito manes totumque tremoribus orbem.
hac ope debueram thalamos petiisse, socerque 700 non orandus erat mihi sed faciendus Erectheus.'
haec Boreas aut his non inferiora locutus excussit pennas, quarum iactatibus omnis adflata est tellus latumque perhorruit aequor, pulvereamque trahens per summa cacumina pallam 705 verrit humum pavidamque metu caligine tectus Orithyian amans fulvis amplectitur alis.
dum volat, arserunt agitati fortius ignes, nec prius aeri cursus suppressit habenas, quam Ciconum tenuit populos et moenia raptor. 710 illic et gelidi coniunx Actaea tyranni et genetrix facta est, partus enixa gemellos, cetera qui matris, pennas genitoris haberent.

non tamen has una memorant cum corpore natas, barbaque dum rutilis aberat subnixa capillis, 715 inplumes Calaisque puer Zetesque fuerunt;
mox pariter pennae ritu coepere volucrum cingere utrumque latus, pariter flavescere malae.
ergo ubi concessit tempus puerile iuventae, vellera cum Minyis nitido radiantia villo 720 per mare non notum prima petiere carina.

LIBER SEPTIMVS

Iamque fretum Minyae Pagasaea puppe secabant, perpetuaque trahens inopem sub nocte senectam Phineus visus erat, iuvenesque Aquilone creati virgineas volucres miseri senis ore fugarant, multaque perpassi claro sub Iasone tandem 5 contigerant rapidas limosi Phasidos undas.
dumque adeunt regem Phrixearum vellera poscunt lexque datur Minyis magnorum horrenda laborum, concipit interea validos Aetias ignes et luctata diu, postquam ratione furorem 10 vincere non poterat, 'frustra, Medea, repugnas:
nescio quis deus obstat,' ait, 'mirumque, nisi hoc est,
aut aliquid certe simile huic, quod amare vocatur.
nam cur iussa patris nimium mihi dura videntur?
sunt quoque dura nimis! cur, quem modo denique vidi, 15 ne pereat, timeo? quae tanti causa timoris?
excute virgineo conceptas pectore flammam, si potes, infelix! si possem, sanior essem!
sed trahit invitam nova vis, aliudque cupido, mens aliud suadet: video meliora proboque, 20 deteriora sequor. quid in hospite, regia virgo, ureris et thalamos alieni concipis orbis?
haec quoque terra potest, quod ames, dare. vivat an ille occidat, in dis est. vivat tamen! idque precari vel sine amore licet: quid enim commisit Iason? 25 quem, nisi crudelem, non tangat Iasonis aetas et genus et virtus? quem non, ut cetera desint, ore movere potest? certe mea pectora movit.
at nisi opem tulero, taurorum adflabitur ore concurrentque suae segeti, tellure creatis 30 hostibus, aut avido dabitur fera praeda draconi.

hoc ego si patiar, tum me de tigride natam, tum ferrum et scopulos gestare in corde fatebor!
cur non et specto pereuntem oculosque videndo conscelero? cur non tauros exhortor in illum 35 terrigenasque feros insopitumque draconem?
di meliora velint! quamquam non ista precanda, sed facienda mihi. — prodamne ego regna parentis, atque ope nescio quis servabitur advena nostra, ut per me sospes sine me det linthea ventis 40 virque sit alterius, poenae Medea relinqueret?
si facere hoc aliamve potest praeponere nobis, occidat ingratus! sed non is vultus in illo,
non ea nobilitas animo est, ea gratia formae, ut timeam fraudem meritique obliviam nostri. 45 et dabit ante fidem, cogamque in foedera testes esse deos. quid tuta times? accingere et omnem pelle moram: tibi se semper debebit Iason, te face sollemni iunget sibi perque Pelasgas servatrix urbes matrum celebrabere turba. 50 ergo ego germanam fratremque patremque deosque et natale solum ventis ablata relinquam?
nempe pater saevus, nempe est mea barbara tellus, frater adhuc infans; stant mecum vota sororis, maximus intra me deus est! non magna relinquam, 55 magna sequar: titulum servatae pubis Achivae notitiamque soli melioris et oppida, quorum hic quoque fama viget, cultusque artesque locorum, quemque ego cum rebus, quas totus possidet orbis, Aesoniden mutasse velim, quo coniuge felix 60 et dis cara ferar et vertice sidera tangam.
quid, quod nescio qui mediis concurrere in undis dicuntur montes ratibusque inimica Charybdis nunc sorbere fretum, nunc reddere, cinctaque saevis Scylla rapax canibus Siculo latrare profundo? 65 nempe tenens, quod amo, gremioque in Iasonis haerens per freta longa ferar; nihil illum amplexa verebor aut, siquid metuam, metuam de coniuge solo. — coniugiumne putas speciosaque nomina culpae inponis, Medea, tuae? — quin adspice, quantum 70 adgrediare nefas, et, dum licet, effuge crimen!

dixit, et ante oculos rectum pietasque pudorque constiterant, et victa dabat iam terga Cupido.

Ibat ad antiquas Hecates Perseidos aras, quas nemus umbrosum secretaque silva tegebat, 75 et iam fortis erat, pulsusque recesserat ardor, cum videt Aesoniden exstinctaque flamma reluxit.
erubuere genae, totoque recanduit ore, utque solet ventis alimenta adsumere, quaeque parva sub inducta latuit scintilla favilla 80 crescere et in veteres agitata resurgere vires, sic iam lenis amor, iam quem languere putares, ut vidit iuvenem, specie praesentis inarsit.
et casu solito formosior Aesone natus illa luce fuit: posses ignoscere amanti. 85 spectat et in vultu veluti tum denique viso lumina fixa tenet nec se mortalia demens ora videre putat nec se declinat ab illo;
ut vero coepitque loqui dextramqueprehendit hospes et auxilium submissa voce rogavit 90 promisitque torum, lacrimis ait illa profusis:
'quid faciam, video: nec me ignorantia veri decipiet, sed amor. servabere munere nostro, servatus promissa dato!' per sacra triformis ille deae lucoque foret quod numen in illo 95 perque patrem soceri cernentem cuncta futuri eventusque suos et tanta pericula iurat:
creditus accepit cantatas protinus herbas edidicitque usum laetusque in tecta recessit.

Postera depulerat stellas Aurora micantes: 100 conveniunt populi sacrum Mavortis in arvom consistuntque iugis; medio rex ipse resedit agmine purpureus sceptroque insignis eburno.

ecce adamanteis Vulcanum naribus efflant aeripedes tauri, tactaeque vaporibus herbae 105 ardent, utque solent pleni resonare camini, aut ubi terrena silices fornace soluti concipiunt ignem liquidarum adspergine aquarum, pectora sic intus clausas volventia flammis gutturaque usta sonant; tamen illis Aesone natus 110 obvius it. vertere truces venientis ad ora terribiles vultus praefixaque cornua ferro pulveremque solum pede pulsavere bisulco fumificisque locum mugitibus inpleverunt.
deriguere metu Minyae; subit ille nec ignes 115 sentit anhelatos (tantum medicamina possunt!)
pendulaque audaci mulcet palearia dextra suppositosque iugo pondus grave cogit aratri ducere et insuetum ferro proscindere campum:
mirantur Colchi, Minyae clamoribus augent 120 adiciuntque animos. galea tum sumit aena vipereos dentes et aratos spargit in agros.
semina mollit humus valido praetincta veneno, et crescunt fiuntque sati nova corpora dentes, utque hominis speciem materna sumit in alvo 125 perque suos intus numeros componitur infans nec nisi maturus communes exit in auras, sic, ubi visceribus gravidae telluris imago effecta est hominis, feto consurgit in arvo, quodque magis mirum est, simul edita concutit arma. 130 quos ubi viderunt praeacutae cuspidis hastas in caput Haemonii iuvenis torquere parantis, demisere metu vultumque animumque Pelasgi;
ipsa quoque extimuit, quae tutum fecerat illum.
utque peti vidit iuvenem tot ab hostibus unum, 135 palluit et subito sine sanguine frigida sedit, neve parum valeant a se data gramina, carmen auxiliare canit secretasque advocat artes.
ille gravem medios silicem iaculatus in hostes

a se depulsum Martem convertit in ipsos: 140 terrigenae pereunt per mutua vulnera fratres civilique cadunt acie. gratantur Achivi victoremque tenent avidisque amplexibus haerent.
tu quoque victorem complecti, barbaras, velles:
obstitit incepto pudor, at complexa fuisses, 145
sed te, ne faceres, tenuit reverentia fama.
quod licet, adfectu tacito laetaris agisque carminibus grates et dis auctoribus horum.

Pervigilem superest herbis sopire draconem, qui crista linguisque tribus praesignis et uncis 150 dentibus horrendus custos erat arboris aureae.
hunc postquam sparsit Lethaei gramine suci verbaque ter dixit placidos facientia somnos, quae mare turbatum, quae concita flumina sistunt, somnus in ignotos oculos sibi venit, et auro 155 heros Aesonius potitur spolioque superbus muneris auctorem secum, spolia altera, portans victor Iolciacos tetigit cum coniuge portus.

Haemoniae matres pro gnatis dona receptis grandaevique ferunt patres congestaque flamma 160 tura liquefaciunt, inductaque cornibus aurum victima vota cadit, sed abest gratantibus Aeson iam propior leto fessusque senilibus annis, cum sic Aesonides: 'o cui debere salutem confiteor, coniunx, quamquam mihi cuncta dedisti 165 excessitque fidem meritorum summa tuorum, si tamen hoc possunt (quid enim non carmina possunt?)
deme meis annis et demptos adde parenti!'
nec tenuit lacrimas: mota est pietate rogantis, dissimilemque animum subiit Aeeta relictus; 170 nec tamen adfectus talis confessa 'quod' inquit
'excidit ore tuo, coniunx, scelus? ergo ego cuiquam posse tuae videor spatium transcribere vitae?
nec sinat hoc Hecate, nec tu petis aequa; sed isto, quod petis, experiar maius dare munus, Iason. 175

arte mea soceri longum temptabimus aevum, non annis revocare tuis, modo diva triformis adiuvet et praesens ingentibus adnuat ausis.'

Tres aberant noctes, ut cornua tota coirent efficerentque orbem; postquam plenissima fulsit 180 ac solida terras spectavit imagine luna, egreditur tectis vestes induta recinctas, nuda pedem, nudos umeris infusa capillos, fertque vagos mediae per muta silentia noctis incomitata gradus: homines volucresque ferasque 185 solverat alta quies, nullo cum murmure saepes, inmotaeque silent frondes, silet umidus aer, sidera sola micant: ad quae sua bracchia tendens ter se convertit, ter sumptis flumine crinem inroravit aquis ternisque ululatibus ora 190 solvit et in dura submisso poplite terra
'Nox' ait 'arcanis fidissima, quaeque diurnis aurea cum luna succeditis ignibus astra, tuque, triceps Hecate, quae coeptis conscia nostris adiutrixque venis cantusque artisque magorum, 195 quaeque magos, Tellus, pollutibus instruis herbis, auraeque et venti montesque amnesque lacusque, dique omnes nemorum, dique omnes noctis adeste, quorum ope, cum volui, ripis mirantibus amnes in fontes rediere suos, concussaue sisto, 200 stantia concutio cantu freta, nubila pello nubilaque induco, ventos abigoque vocoque, vipereas rumpo verbis et carmine fauces, vivaque saxa sua convulsaue robora terra et silvas moveo iubeoque tremescere montis 205 et mugire solum manesque exire sepulcris!
te quoque, Luna, traho, quamvis Temesaea labores aera tuos minuant; currus quoque carmine nostro pallet avi, pallet nostris Aurora venenis!
vos mihi taurorum flammis hebetastis et unco 210
inpatiens oneris collum pressistis aratro, vos serpentigenis in se fera bella dedistis custodemque rudem somni sopistis et aurum vindice decepto Graias misistis in urbes:

nunc opus est sucis, per quos renovata senectus 215
in florem redeat primosque recolligat annos, et dabitis. neque enim micuerunt sidera frustra, nec frustra volucrum tractus cervice draconum currus adest.' aderat demissus ab aethere currus.
quo simul adscendit frenataque colla draconum 220 permulsit manibusque leves agitavit habenas, sublimis rapitur subiectaque Thessala Tempe despicit et certis regionibus adplicat angues:
et quas Ossa tulit, quas altum Pelion herbas, Othrysque Pindusque et Pindo maior Olympus, 225 perspicit et placitas partim radice revellit, partim succidit curvamine falcis aenae.
multa quoque Apidani placuerunt gramina ripis, multa quoque Amphrysi, neque eras inmunis, Enipeu;
nec non Peneos nec non Spercheides undae 230 contribuere aliquid iuncosaque litora Boebes; carpsit et Euboica vivax Anthedone gramen, nondum mutato vulgatum corpore Glauci.

Et iam nona dies curru pennisque draconum nonaque nox omnes lustrantem viderat agros, 235 cum rediit; neque erant tacti nisi odore dracones, et tamen annosae pellem posuere senectae.
constitit adveniens citra limenque foresque et tantum caelo tegitur refugitque viriles contactus, statuitque aras de caespite binas, 240 dexteriore Hecates, ast laeva parte Iuventae.
has ubi verbenis silvaque incinxit agresti, haud procul egesta scrobibus tellure duabus sacra facit cultrosque in guttura velleris atri conicit et patulas perfundit sanguine fossas; 245 tum super invergens liquidi carchesia mellis alteraque invergens tepidi carchesia lactis, verba simul fudit terrenaque numina civit umbrarumque rogat rapta cum coniuge regem, ne properent artus anima fraudare senili. 250

Quos ubi placavit precibusque et murmure longo, Aesonis effatum proferri corpus ad auras iussit et in plenos resolutum carmine somnos exanimi similem stratis porrexit in herbis.
hinc procul Aesoniden, procul hinc iubet ire ministros 255 et monet arcanis oculos remove profanos.
diffugiunt iussi; passis Medea capillis bacchantum ritu flagrantis circuit aras multifidasque faces in fossa sanguinis atra tinguit et infectas geminis accendit in aris 260 terque senem flamma, ter aqua, ter sulphure lustrat.

Interea validum posito medicamen aeno fervet et exultat spumisque tumentibus albet.
illic Haemonia radices valle resectas seminaque floresque et sucos incoquit atros; 265 adicit extremo lapides Oriente petitos et quas Oceani refluxum mare lavit harenas; addit et exceptas luna pernocte pruinas et strigis infamis ipsis cum carnibus alas inque virum soliti vultus mutare ferinos 270 ambigui prosecta lupi; nec defuit illis squamea Cinyphii tenuis membrana chelydri vivacisque iecur cervi; quibus insuper addit ova caputque novem cornicis saecula passae.
his et mille aliis postquam sine nomine rebus 275 propositum instruxit mortali barbara maius, arenti ramo iam pridem mitis olivae omnia confudit summisque inmiscuit ima.
ecce vetus calido versatus stipes aeno fit viridis primo nec longo tempore frondes 280 induit et subito gravidis oneratur olivis:
at quacumque cavo spumas eiecit aeno ignis et in terram guttae cecidere calentes, vernāt humus, floresque et mollia pabula surgunt.

quae simul ac vidit, stricto Medea recludit 285 ense senis iugulum veteremque exire cruorem passa replet sucis; quos postquam conbibit Aeson aut ore acceptos aut vulnere, barba comaeque canitie posita nigrum rapuere colorem, pulsa fugit macies, abeunt pallorque situsque, 290 adiectoque cavae suppleantur corpore rugae, membraque luxuriant: Aeson miratur et olim ante quater denos hunc se reminiscitur annos.

Viderat ex alto tanti miracula monstri Liber et admonitus, iuvenes nutricibus annos 295 posse suis reddi, capit hoc a Colchide munus.

Neve doli cessent, odium cum coniuge falsum Phasias adsimulat Peliaeque ad limina supplex confugit; atque illam, quoniam gravis ipse senecta est, excipiunt natae; quas tempore callida parvo 300 Colchis amicitiae mendacis imagine cepit, dumque refert inter meritorum maxima demptos Aesonis esse situs atque hac in parte moratur, spes est virginibus Pelia subiecta creatis, arte suum parili revirescere posse parentem, 305
idque petunt pretiumque iubent sine fine pacisci.
illa brevi spatio silet et dubitare videtur suspenditque animos ficta gravitate rogantum.
mox ubi pollicita est, 'quo sit fiducia maior muneris huius' ait, 'qui vestri maximus aevo est 310 dux gregis inter oves, agnus medicamine fiet.'
protinus innumeris effetus laniger annis atrahitur flexo circum cava tempora cornu; cuius ut Haemonio marcentia guttura cultro fodit et exiguo maculavit sanguine ferrum, 315 membra simul pecudis validosque venefica sucos mergit in aere cavo: minuunt ea corporis artus cornuaque exurunt nec non cum cornibus annos, et tener auditur medio balatus aeno:

nec mora, balatum mirantibus exsilit agnus 320 lascivitque fuga lactantiaque ubera quaerit.

Obstipuere satae Pelia, promissaque postquam exhibuere fidem, tum vero inpensius instant.
ter iuga Phoebus equis in Hiberno flumine mersis dempserat et quarta radiantia nocte micabant 325 sidera, cum rapido fallax Aetias igni imponit purum laticem et sine viribus herbas.
iamque neci similis resoluta corpore regem et cum rege suo custodes somnus habebat, quem dederant cantus magicaeque potentia linguae; 330 intrarant iussae cum Colchide limina natae ambierantque torum: 'quid nunc dubitatis inertes?
stringite' ait 'gladios veteremque haurite crurorem, ut repleam vacuas iuvenali sanguine venas!
in manibus vestris vita est aetasque parentis: 335 si pietas ulla est nec spes agitatis inanis, officium praestate patri telisque senectam exigite, et saniem coniecto emittite ferro!'
his, ut quaeque pia est, hortatibus in pia prima est et, ne sit scelerata, facit scelus: haud tamen ictus 340 ulla suos spectare potest, oculosque reflectunt, caecaque dant saevis aversae vulnera dextris.
ille cruore fluens, cubito tamen adlevat artus, semilacerque toro temptat consurgere, et inter tot medius gladios pallentia bracchia tendens 345
'quid facitis, gnatae? quid vos in fata parentis armat?' ait: cecidere illis animique manusque; plura locuturo cum verbis guttura Colchis abstulit et calidis laniatum mersit in undis.

Quod nisi pennatis serpentibus isset in auras, 350
non exempta foret poenae: fugit alta superque Pelion umbrosum, Philyreia tecta, superque Othryn et eventu veteris loca nota Cerambi:
hic ope nympharum sublatus in aera pennis, cum gravis infuso tellus foret obruta ponto, 355

Deucalioneas effugit inobrutus undas.
Aeoliam Pitane a laeva parte relinquit factaque de saxo longi simulacra draconis Idaeumque nemus, quo nati furta, iuencum, occulit Liber falsi sub imagine cervi, 360 quaque pater Corythi parva tumulatus harena est, et quos Maera novo latratu terruit agros, Eurypylique urbem, qua Coae cornua matres gesserunt tum, cum discederet Herculis agmen, Phoebeamque Rhodon et Ialysios Telchinas, 365 quorum oculos ipso vitiantes omnia visu Iuppiter exosus fraternis subdidit undis; transit et antiquae Cartheia moenia Ceae, qua pater Alcidas placidam de corpore natae miraturus erat nasci potuisse columbam. 370 inde lacus Hyries videt et Cycneia Tempe, quae subitus celebravit olor: nam Phylus illic imperio pueri volucrisque ferumque leonem tradiderat domitos; taurum quoque vincere iussus vicerat et spreto totiens iratus amore 375 praemia poscenti taurum suprema negabat;
ille indignatus 'cupies dare' dixit et alto desiluit saxo; cuncti cecidisse putabant:
factus olor niveis pendebat in aere pennis;
at genetrix Hyrie, servati nescia, flendo 380
delicuit stagnumque suo de nomine fecit.
adiacet his Pleuron, in qua trepidantibus alis Ophias effugit natorum vulnera Combe; inde Calaureae Letoidos adspicit arva in volucrum versi cum coniuge conscia regis. 385 dextera Cyllene est, in qua cum matre Menephron concubiturus erat saevarum more ferarum; Cephison procul hinc deflentem fata nepotis respicit in tumidam phocen ab Apolline versi Eumelique domum lugentis in aere natum. 390 Tandem vipereis Ephyren Pirenida pennis contigit: hic aevo veteres mortalia primo corpora vulgarunt pluvialibus edita fungis.

sed postquam Colchis arsit nova nupta venenis flagrantemque domum regis mare vidit utrumque, 395 sanguine natorum perfunditur inpius ensis, ultraque se male mater Iasonis effugit arma.
hinc Titaniacis ablata draconibus intrat Palladas arces, quae te, iustissima Phene, teque, senex Peripha, pariter videre volantes 400 innixamque novis neptem Polypemonis alis.
excipit hanc Aegeus facto damnandus in uno, nec satis hospitium est, thalami quoque foedere iungit.

Iamque aderat Theseus, proles ignara parenti, qui virtute sua bimarem pacaverat Isthmon: 405 huius in exitium miscet Medea, quod olim attulerat secum Scythicis aconiton ab oris.
illud Echidnaeae memorant e dentibus ortum esse canis: specus est tenebroso caecus hiatu, est via declivis, per quam Tiryntius heros 410 restantem contraque diem radiosque micantes obliquantem oculos nexis adamante catenis Cerberon abstraxit, rabida qui concitus ira inplevit pariter ternis latratibus auras et sparsit virides spumis albentibus agros; 415 has concreasse putant nactasque alimenta feracis fecundique soli vires cepisse nocendi;
quae quia nascuntur dura vivacia caute, agrestes aconita vocant. ea coniugis astu ipse parens Aegeus nato porrexit ut hosti. 420 sumpserat ignara Theseus data pocula dextra, cum pater in capulo gladii cognovit eburno signa sui generis facinusque excussit ab ore.
effugit illa necem nebulis per carmina motis;

At genitor, quamquam laetatur sospite nato, 425 attonitus tamen est, ingens discrimine parvo committi potuisse nefas: foveat ignibus aras muneribusque deos inplet, feriuntque secures colla torosa boum victorum cornua vittis.

nullus Erechthidis fertur celebratior illo 430 inluxisse dies: agitant convivium patres et medium vulgus nec non et carmina vino ingenium faciente canunt: 'te, maxime Theseu, mirata est Marathon Cretaei sanguine tauri, quodque suis securus arat Cromyona colonus, 435 munus opusque tuum est; tellus Epidauria per te clavigeram vidit Vulcani occumbere prolem, vidit et inमितem Cephisias ora Procrusten, Cercyonis letum vidit Cerealis Eleusin.
occidit ille Sinis magnis male viribus usus, 440 qui poterat curvare trabes et agebat ab alto ad terram late sparsuras corpora pinus.
tutus ad Alcatheen, Lelegeia moenia, limes composito Scirone patet, sparsisque latronis terra negat sedem, sedem negat ossibus unda; 445 quae iactata diu fertur durasse vetustas in scopulos: scopulis nomen Scironis inhaeret.
si titulos annosque tuos numerare velimus, facta prement annos. pro te, fortissime, vota publica suscipimus, Bacchi tibi sumimus haustus.' 450 consonat adsensu populi precibusque faventum regia, nec tota tristis locus ullus in urbe est.

Nec tamen (usque adeo nulla est sincera voluptas, sollicitumque aliquid laetis intervenit) Aegeus gaudia percepit nato secunda recepto: 455 bella parat Minos; qui quamquam milite, quamquam classe valet, patria tamen est firmissimus ira Androgeique necem iustis ulciscitur armis.
ante tamen bello vires acquirit amicas, quaque potens habitus volucris freta classe pererrat: 460 hinc Anaphen sibi iungit et Astypaleia regna, (promissis Anaphen, regna Astypaleia bello);
hinc humilem Myconon cretosaque rura Cimoli florentemque thymo Syron planamque Seriphon marmoreamque Paron, quamque inopia prodidit Arne 465 Siphnon et accepto, quod avara poposcerat, auro mutata est in avem, quae nunc quoque diligit aurum, nigra pedes, nigris velata monedula pennis.

At non Olios Didymeque et Tenos et Andros et Gyaros nitidaeque ferax Peparethos olivae 470 Cnosiacas iuvere rates; latere inde sinistro Oenopiam Minos petit, Aeacidea regna:
Oenopiam veteres adpellavere, sed ipse Aeacus Aeginam genetricis nomine dixit.
turba ruit tantaeque virum cognoscere famae 475 expetit; occurrunt illi Telamonque minorque quam Telamon Peleus et proles tertia Phocus;
ipse quoque egreditur tardus gravitate senili Aeacus et, quae sit veniendi causa, requirit.
admonitus patrii luctus suspirat et illi 480 dicta refert rector populorum talia centum:
'arma iuves oro pro gnato sumpta piaequae pars sis militiae; tumulo solacia posco.'
huic Asopiades 'petis inrita' dixit 'et urbi non facienda meae; neque enim coniunctior ulla 485 Cecropidis est hac tellus: ea foedera nobis.'
tristis abit 'stabunt' que 'tibi tua foedera magno' dixit et utilius bellum putat esse minari quam gerere atque suas ibi praeconsumere vires.
classis ab Oenopiis etiamnum Lyctia muris 490 spectari poterat, cum pleno concita velo Attica puppis adest in portusque intrat amicos, quae Cephalum patriaeque simul mandata ferebat.
Aeacidae longo iuvenes post tempore visum agnovere tamen Cephalum dextrasque dedere 495 inque patris duxere domum: spectabilis heros et veteris retinens etiamnum pignora formae ingreditur ramumque tenens popularis olivae a dextra laevaue duos aetate minores maior habet, Clyton et Buten, Pallante creatos. 500

Postquam congressus primi sua verba tulerunt, Cecropidae Cephalus peragit mandata rogatque auxilium foedusque refert et iura parentum, imperiumque peti totius Achaidos addit.
sic ubi mandatam iuivit facundia causam, 505 Aeacus, in capulo sceptri nitente sinistra,
'ne petite auxilium, sed sumite' dixit, 'Athenae, nec dubie vires, quas haec habet insula, vestras ducite, et (o maneat rerum status iste mearum!) robora non desunt; superat mihi miles et hoc est, 510 gratia dis, felix et inexcusabile tempus.'

'immo ita sit' Cephalus, 'crescat tua civibus opto urbs' ait; 'adveniens equidem modo gaudia cepi, cum tam pulchra mihi, tam par aetate iuventus obvia processit; multos tamen inde requiro, 515 quos quondam vidi vestra prius urbe receptus.'
Aeacus ingemuit tristisque ita voce locutus:
'flebile principium melior fortuna secuta est;
hanc utinam possem vobis memorare sine illo!
ordine nunc repetam, neu longa ambage morer vos, 520 ossa cinisque iacent, memori quos mente requiris, et quota pars illi rerum periere mearum!

dira lues ira populis Iunonis iniquae incidit exosae dictas a paelice terras.
dum visum mortale malum tantaeque latebat 525 causa nocens cladis, pugnatum est arte medendi:
exitium superabat opem, quae victa iacebat.
principio caelum spissa caligine terras pressit et ignavos inclusit nubibus aestus; dumque quater iunctis explevit cornibus orbem 530 Luna, quater plenum tenuata retexuit orbem, letiferis calidi spirarunt aestibus austri.
constat et in fontis vitium venisse lacusque, miliaque incultos serpentum multa per agros errasse atque suis fluvios temerasse venenis. 535

strage canum primo volucrumque oviumque boumque inque feris subiti deprensa potentia morbi.

concidere infelix validos miratur arator inter opus tauros medioque recumbere sulco; lanigeris gregibus balatus dantibus aegros 540 sponte sua lanaeque cadunt et corpora tabent;
acer equus quondam magnaеque in pulvere famaе degenerat palmas veterumque oblitus honorum ad praesepe gemit leto moriturus inertī.

non aper irasci meminit, non fidere cursu 545
cerva nec armentis incurrere fortibus ursi.
omnia languor habet: silvisque agrisque viisque corpora foeda iacent, vitiantur odoribus aerae.
mira loquar: non illa canes avidaeque volucres, non cani tetigere lupi; dilapsa liquescunt 550 adflatuque nocent et agunt contagia late.

‘Pervenit ad miseros damno graviore colonos pestis et in magnaе dominatur moenibus urbis.
viscera torrentur primo, flammaeque latentis indiciū rubor est et ductus anhelitus; igni 555 aspera lingua tumet, tepidisque arentia ventis ora patent, aeraeque graves captantur hiatu.
non stratum, non ulla pati velamina possunt, nuda sed in terra ponunt praecordia, nec fit corpus humo gelidum, sed humus de corpore fervet. 560 nec moderator adest, inque ipsos saeva medentes erumpit clades, obsuntque auctoribus artes; quo propior quisque est servitque fidelius aegro,
in partem leti citius venit, utque salutis spes abiit finemque vident in funere morbi, 565 indulgent animis et nulla, quid utile, cura est:
utile enim nihil est. passim positoque pudore fontibus et fluviis puteisque capacibus haerent, nec sitis est exstincta prius quam vita bibendo.
inde graves multi nequeunt consurgere et ipsis 570 inmoriuntur aquis, aliquis tamen haurit et illas;

tantaque sunt miseris invisi taedia lecti, prosiliunt aut, si prohibent consistere vires, corpora devolvunt in humum fugiuntque penates quisque suos, sua cuique domus funesta videtur, 575 et quia causa latet, locus est in crimine; partim semianimes errare viis, dum stare valebant, adspiceres, flentes alios terraque iacentes lassaque versantes supremo lumina motu; membraque pendentis tendunt ad sidera caeli, 580
hic illic, ubi mors deprenderat, exhalantes.

‘Quid mihi tunc animi fuit? an, quod debuit esse, ut vitam odissem et cuperem pars esse meorum?
quo se cumque acies oculorum flexerat, illic vulgus erat stratum, veluti cum putria motis 585 poma cadunt ramis agitataque ilice glandes.
templa vides contra gradibus sublimia longis:
Iuppiter illa tenet. quis non altaribus illis inrita tura dedit? quotiens pro coniuge coniunx, pro gnato genitor dum verba precantia dicit, 590
non exoratis animam finivit in aris, inque manu turis pars inconsumpta reperta est!
admoti quotiens templis, dum vota sacerdos concipit et fundit durum inter cornua vinum, haud exspectato ceciderunt vulnere tauri! 595 ipse ego sacra Iovi pro me patriaque tribusque cum facerem natis, mugitus victima diros edidit et subito conlapsa sine ictibus ullis exiguo tinxit subiectos sanguine cultros.
exta quoque aegra notas veri monitusque deorum 600 perdiderant: tristes penetrant ad viscera morbi.
ante sacros vidi proiecta cadavera postes, ante ipsas, quo mors foret invidiosior, aras.
pars animam laqueo claudunt mortisque timorem morte fugant ultroque vocant venientia fata. 605 corpora missa neci nullis de more feruntur funeribus (neque enim capiebant funera portae):

aut inhumata premunt terras aut dantur in altos indotata rogos; et iam reverentia nulla est, deque rogis pugnant alienisque ignibus ardent. 610 qui lacrimant, desunt, indefletaeque vagantur natorumque patrumque animae iuvenumque senumque, nec locus in tumulos, nec sufficit arbor in ignes.

Attonitus tanto miserarum turbine rerum, “Iuppiter o!” dixi, “si te non falsa loquuntur 615 dicta sub amplexus Aeginae Asopidos isse, nec te, magne pater, nostri pudet esse parentem, aut mihi redde meos aut me quoque conde sepulcro!”
ille notam fulgore dedit tonitruque secundo.
“accipio sintque ista precor felicia mentis 620 signa tuae!” dixi, “quod das mihi, pigneror omen.”
forte fuit iuxta patulis rarissima ramis sacra Iovi quercus de semine Dodonaeo; hic nos frugilegas adspeximus agmine longo grande onus exiguo formicas ore gerentes 625 rugosoque suum servantes cortice callem;
dum numerum miror, “totidem, pater optime,” dixi, “tu mihi da cives et inania moenia supple!”
intremuit ramisque sonum sine flamine motis alta dedit quercus: pavido mihi membra timore 630 horruerant, stabantque comae; tamen oscula terrae roboribusque dedi, nec me sperare fatebar;
sperabam tamen atque animo mea vota fovebam.
nox subit, et curis exercita corpora somnus occupat: ante oculos eadem mihi quercus adesse 635 et ramis totidem totidemque animalia ramis ferre suis visa est pariterque tremescere motu graniferumque agmen subiectis spargere in arvis; crescere desubito et maius maiusque videri ac se tollere humo rectoque adsistere trunco 640 et maciem numerumque pedum nigrumque colorem ponere et humanam membris inducere formam.
somnus abit: damno vigilans mea visa querorque

in superis opis esse nihil; at in aedibus ingens murmur erat, vocesque hominum exaudire videbar 645 iam mihi desuetas; dum suspicor has quoque somni esse, venit Telamon properus foribusque reclusis “speque fideque, pater”, dixit “maiora videbis:
egredere!” egredior, qualesque in imagine somni visus eram vidisse viros, ex ordine tales 650 adspicio noscoque: adeunt regemque salutant.
vota Iovi solvo populisque recentibus urbem partior et vacuos priscis cultoribus agros, Myrmidonasque voco nec origine nomina fraudo.
corpora vidisti; mores, quos ante gerebant, 655 nunc quoque habent: parcum genus est patiensque laborum quaesitique tenax et quod quaesita reservet.
hi te ad bella pares annis animisque sequentur, cum primum qui te feliciter attulit eurus’ (eurus enim attulerat) ‘fuerit mutatus in austrum.’ 660

Talibus atque aliis longum sermonibus illi inplevere diem; lucis pars ultima mensae est data, nox somnis. iubar aureus extulerat Sol, flabat adhuc eurus redituraque vela tenebat:
ad Cephalum Pallante sati, cui grandior aetas, 665 ad regem Cephalus simul et Pallante creati conveniunt, sed adhuc regem sopor altus habebat.
excipit Aeacides illos in limine Phocus;
nam Telamon fraterque viros ad bella legebant.
Phocus in interius spatium pulchrosque recessus 670 Cecropidas ducit, cum quis simul ipse resedit.
adspicit Aeoliden ignota ex arbore factum ferre manu iaculum, cuius fuit aurea cuspis.
pauca prius mediis sermonibus ille locutus ‘sum nemorum studiosus’ ait ‘caedisque ferinae; 675 qua tamen e silva teneas hastile recisum, iamdudum dubito: certe si fraxinus esset, fulva colore foret; si cornus, nodus inesset.
unde sit, ignoro, sed non formosius isto viderunt oculi telum iaculabile nostri.' 680 excipit Actaeis e fratribus alter et 'usum maiolem specie mirabere' dixit 'in isto.

consequitur, quodcumque petit, fortunaque missum non regit, et revolat nullo referente cruentum.'
tum vero iuvenis Nereius omnia quaerit, 685 cur sit et unde datum, quis tanti muneris auctor.
quae petit, ille refert, sed enim narrare pudori est, qua tulerit mercede; silet tactusque dolore coniugis amissae lacrimis ita fatur obortis: 'hoc me, nate dea, (quis possit credere?) telum 690 flere facit facietque diu, si vivere nobis fata diu dederint; hoc me cum coniuge cara perdidit: hoc utinam caruissem munere semper!
'Procris erat, si forte magis pervenit ad aures Orithyia tuas, raptae soror Orithyiae, 695 si faciem moresque velis conferre duarum, dignior ipsa rapi! pater hanc mihi iunxit Erectheus, hanc mihi iunxit amor: felix dicebar eramque;
non ita dis visum est, aut nunc quoque forsitan essem.
alter agebatur post sacra iugalia mensis, 700 cum me cornigeris tendentem retia cervis vertice de summo semper florentis Hymetti lutea mane videt pulsus Aurora tenebris invitumque rapit. liceat mihi vera referre pace deae: quod sit roseo spectabilis ore, 705 quod teneat lucis, teneat confinia noctis, nectareis quod alatur aquis, ego Procrin amabam;
pectore Procris erat, Procris mihi semper in ore.
sacra tori coitusque novos thalamosque recentes primaque deserti referebam foedera lecti: 710 mota dea est et "siste tuas, ingrate, querellas; Procrin habe!" dixit, "quod si mea provida mens est,
non habuisse voles." meque illi irata remisit.
cum redeo mecumque deae memorata retracto, esse metus coepit, ne iura iugalia coniunx 715

non bene servasset: facies aetasque iubebat credere adulterium, prohibebant credere mores;
sed tamen afueram, sed et haec erat, unde redibam, criminis exemplum, sed cuncta timemus amantes.
quaerere, quod doleam, statuo donisque pudicam 720 sollicitare fidem; favet huic Aurora timori inmutatque meam (videor sensisse) figuram.
Palladius in eo non cognoscendus Athenas ingrediorque domum; culpa domus ipsa carebat castaque signa dabat dominoque erat anxia raptio: 725 vix aditus per mille dolos ad Erecthida factus.
ut vidi, obstipui meditataque paene reliqui temptamenta fide; male me, quin vera faterer, continui, male, quin, et oportuit, oscula ferrem.
tristis erat (sed nulla tamen formosior illa 730 esse potest tristi) desiderioque dolebat coniugis abrepti: tu collige, qualis in illa, Phoece, decor fuerit, quam sic dolor ipse decebat!
quid referam, quotiens temptamina nostra pudici reppulerint mores, quotiens "ego" dixerit "uni 735 servor; ubicumque est, uni mea gaudia servo."
cui non ista fide satis experientia sano magna foret? non sum contentus et in mea pugno vulnera, dum census dare me pro nocte loquendo muneraque augendo tandem dubitare coegi. 740 exclamo male victor: "adest, mala, fictus adulter!
verus eram coniunx! me, perfida, teste teneris."
illa nihil; tacito tantummodo victa pudore insidiosa malo cum coniuge limina fugit; offensaque mei genus omne perosa virorum 745 montibus errabat, studiis operata Dianae.
tum mihi deserto violentior ignis ad ossa pervenit: orabam veniam et peccasse fatebar et potuisse datis simili succumbere culpae me quoque muneribus, si munera tanta darentur. 750
haec mihi confesso, laesum prius ultra pudorem, redditur et dulces concorditer exigit annos;

dat mihi praeterea, tamquam se parva dedisset dona, canem munus; quem cum sua traderet illi Cynthia, "currendo superabit" dixerat "omnes." 755
dat simul et iaculum, manibus quod, cernis, habemus.
muneris alterius quae sit fortuna, requiris?
accipe mirandum: novitate movebere facti!

'Carmina Laiades non intellecta priorum solverat ingeniis, et praecipitata iacebat 760 inmemor ambagum vates obscura suarum:
protinus Aoniis inmittitur altera Thebis 763 [scilicet alma Themis nec talia linquit inulta!] 762 pestis, et exitio multi pecorumque suoque 764 rurigenae pavere feram; vicina iuventus venimus et latos indagine cinximus agros.
illa levi velox superabat retia saltu summaque transibat postarum lina plagarum:
copula detrahitur canibus, quas illa sequentes effugit et coetum non segnior alite ludit. 770 poscor et ipse meum consensu Laelapa magno (muneris hoc nomen): iamdudum vincula pugnat exuere ipse sibi colloque morantia tendit.
vix bene missus erat, nec iam poteramus, ubi esset, scire; pedum calidus vestigia pulvis habebat, 775 ipse oculis ereptus erat: non ocior illo hasta nec excussae contorto verbere glandes nec Gortyniaco calamus levis exit ab arcu.
collis apex medii subiectis inminet arvis:
tollor eo capioque novi spectacula cursus, 780 quo modo deprendi, modo se subducere ab ipso vulnere visa fera est; nec limite callida recto in spatiumque fugit, sed decipit ora sequentis et redit in gyrum, ne sit suus inpetus hosti:
inminet hic sequiturque parem similisque tenenti 785
non tenet et vanos exercet in aera morsus.
ad iaculi vertebar opem; quod dextera librat dum mea, dum digitos amentis addere tempto, lumina deflexi. revocataque rursus eodem rettuleram: medio (mirum) duo marmora campo 790 adspicio; fugere hoc, illud captare putares.

scilicet invictos ambo certamine cursus esse deus voluit, si quis deus adfuit illis.’
hactenus, et tacuit; ‘iaculo quod crimen in ipso est?’
Phocus ait; iaculi sic crimina reddidit ille: 795

‘Gaudia principium nostri sunt, Phoce, doloris:
illa prius referam. iuvat o meminisse beati temporis, Aeacide, quo primos rite per annos coniuge eram felix, felix erat illa marito.
mutua cura duos et amor socialis habebat, 800 nec Iovis illa meo thalamos praeferret amori, nec me quae caperet, non si Venus ipsa veniret,
ulla erat; aequales urebant pectora flammae.
sole fere radiis feriente cacumina primis venatum in silvas iuvenaliter ire solebam 805 nec mecum famuli nec equi nec naribus acres ire canes nec lina sequi nodosa solebant:
tutus eram iaculo; sed cum satiata ferinae dextera caedis erat, repetebam frigus et umbras et quae de gelidis exhibat vallibus aura: 810 aura petebatur medio mihi lenis in aestu, auram exspectabam, requies erat illa labori.
“aura” (recordor enim), “venias” cantare solebam, “meque iuves intresque sinus, gratissima, nostros, utque facis, relevare velis, quibus urimur, aestus!” 815 forsitan addiderim (sic me mea fata trahebant), blanditias plures et “tu mihi magna voluptas” dicere sim solitus, “tu me reficisque fovesque, tu facis, ut silvas, ut amem loca sola: meoque spiritus iste tuus semper captatur ab ore.” 820 vocibus ambiguis deceptam praebuit aurem nescio quis nomenque aurae tam saepe vocatum esse putat nymphae: nympham mihi credit amari.

criminis extemplo ficti temerarius index Procrin adit linguaque refert audita susurra. 825 credula res amor est: subito conlapsa dolore, ut mihi narratur, cecidit; longoque refecta tempore se miseram, se fati dixit iniqui deque fide questa est et crimine concita vano, quod nihil est, metuit, metuit sine corpore nomen 830 et dolet infelix veluti de paelice vera.
saepe tamen dubitat speratque miserrima falli indiciiue fidem negat et, nisi viderit ipsa, damnatura sui non est delicta mariti.
postera depulerant Aurorae lumina noctem: 835 egredior silvamque peto victorque per herbas “aura, veni” dixi “nostroque medere labori!”
et subito gemitus inter mea verba videbar nescio quos audisse; “veni” tamen “optima!” dicens fronde levem rursus strepitum faciente caduca 840 sum ratus esse feram telumque volatile misi:
Procris erat medioque tenens in pectore vulnus “ei mihi” conclamat! vox est ubi cognita fidae coniugis, ad vocem praeceps amensque cucurri.
semianimem et sparsas foedantem sanguine vestes 845 et sua (me miserum!) de vulnere dona trahentem invenio corpusque meo mihi carius ulnis mollibus attollo scissaque a pectore veste vulnera saeva ligo conorque inhibere cruorem neu me morte sua sceleratum deserat, oro. 850 viribus illa carens et iam moribunda coegit haec se pauca loqui: “per nostri foedera lecti perque deos supplex oro superosque meosque, per si quid merui de te bene perque manentem nunc quoque, cum pereo, causam mihi mortis amorem, 855 ne thalamis Auram patiare innubere nostris!”
dixit, et errorem tum denique nominis esse et sensi et docui. sed quid docuisse iuvabat?
labitur, et parvae fugiunt cum sanguine vires, dumque aliquid spectare potest, me spectat et in me 860 infelicem animam nostroque exhalat in ore;

sed vultu meliore mori segura videtur.'

Flentibus haec lacrimans heros memorabat, et ecce Aeacus ingreditur duplici cum prole novoque milite; quem Cephalus cum fortibus accipit armis.

LIBER OCTAVVS

Iam nitidum retegente diem noctisque fugante tempora Lucifero cadit Eurus, et umida surgunt nubila: dant placidi cursum redeuntibus Austri Aeacidis Cephaloque; quibus feliciter acti ante expectatum portus tenuere petitos. 5 interea Minos Lelegeia litora vastat praetemptatque sui vires Mavortis in urbe Alcathoi, quam Nisus habet, cui splendidus ostro inter honoratos medioque in vertice canos crinis inhaerebat, magni fiducia regni. 10

Sexta resurgebant orientis cornua lunae, et pendeat adhuc belli fortuna, diuque inter utrumque volat dubiis Victoria pennis.
regia turris erat vocalibus addita muris, in quibus auratam proles Letoia fertur 15 deposuisse lyram: saxo sonus eius inhaesit.
saepe illuc solita est ascendere filia Nisi et petere exiguo resonantia saxa lapillo, tum cum pax esset; bello quoque saepe solebat spectare ex illa rigidi certamina Martis, 20 iamque mora belli procerum quoque nomina norat armaque equosque habitusque Cydoneasque pharetras;
noverat ante alios faciem ducis Europaei, plus etiam, quam nosse sat est: hac iudice Minos, seu caput abdiderat cristata casside pennis, 25
in galea formosus erat; seu sumpserat aere fulgentem clipeum, clipeum sumpsisse decebat;
torserat adductis hastilia lenta lacertis:
laudabat virgo iunctam cum viribus artem;
inposito calamo patulos sinuaverat arcus: 30
sic Phoebum sumptis iurabat stare sagittis;

cum vero faciem dempto nudaverat aere purpureusque albi stratis insignia pictis terga premebat equi spumantiaque ora regebat, vix sua, vix sanae virgo Niseia compos 35 mentis erat: felix iaculum, quod tangeret ille, quaeque manu premeret, felicia frena vocabat.
impetus est illi, liceat modo, ferre per agmen virgineos hostile gradus, est impetus illi turribus e summis in Cnosia mittere corpus 40 castra vel aeratas hosti recludere portas, vel siquid Minos aliud velit. utque sedebat candida Dictaei spectans tentoria regis,
'laeter,' ait 'doleamne geri lacrimabile bellum, in dubio est; doleo, quod Minos hostis amanti est. 45
sed nisi bella forent, numquam mihi cognitus esset!
me tamen accepta poterat deponere bellum obside: me comitem, me pacis pignus haberet.
si quae te peperit, talis, pulcherrime regum, qualis es ipse, fuit, merito deus arsit in illa. 50
o ego ter felix, si pennis lapsa per auras Cnosiaci possem castris insistere regis fassaque me flammisque meas, qua dote, rogarem, vellet emi, tantum patrias ne posceret arces!
nam pereant potius sperata cubilia, quam sim 55 proditione potens! — quamvis saepe utile vinci victoris placidi fecit clementia multis.
iusta gerit certe pro nato bella perempto:
et causaque valet causamque tuentibus armis.
at, puto, vincemur; qui si manet exitus urbem, 60 cur suus haec illi reseret mea moenia Mavors et non noster amor? melius sine caede moraque impensaque sui poterit superare cruoris.
non metuam certe, ne quis tua pectora, Minos, vulneret imprudens: quis enim tam durus, ut in te 65
derigere inमितem non inscius audeat hastam?
coepta placent, et stat sententia tradere mecum dotalem patriam finemque inponere bello;

verum velle parum est! aditus custodia servat, claustraque portarum genitor tenet: hunc ego solum 70
infelix timeo, solus mea vota moratur.
di facerent, sine patre forem! sibi quisque profecto est deus: ignavis precibus Fortuna repugnat.
altera iamdudum succensa cupidine tanto perdere gauderet, quodcumque obstaret amori. 75 et cur ulla foret me fortior? ire per ignes et gladios ausim; nec in hoc tamen ignibus ullis aut gladiis opus est, opus est mihi crine paterno.
illa mihi est auro pretiosior, illa beatam purpura me votique mei factura potentem.’ 80

Talia dicenti curarum maxima nutrix nox intervenit, tenebrisque audacia crevit.
prima quies aderat, qua curis fessa diurnis pectora somnus habet: thalamos taciturna paternos intrat et (heu facinus!) fatali nata parentem 85 crine suum spoliat praedaeque potita nefanda per medios hostes (meriti fiducia tanta est) 88 pervenit ad regem; quem sic adfata paventem est:
‘suasit amor facinus: proles ego regia Nisi Scylla tibi trado patriaeque meosque penates; praemia nulla peto nisi te: cape pignus amoris purpureum crinem nec me nunc tradere crinem, sed patrium tibi crede caput!’ scelerataque dextra munera porrexit; Minos porrecta refugit 95 turbatusque novi respondit imagine facti: ‘di te summoveant, o nostri infamia saeculi, orbe suo, tellusque tibi pontusque negetur!
certe ego non patiar Iovis incunabula, Creten, qui meus est orbis, tantum contingere monstrum.’ 100

Dixit, et ut leges captis iustissimus auctor hostibus inposuit, classis retinacula solvi iussit et aeratas impelli remige puppes.
Scylla freto postquam deductas nare carinas nec praestare ducem sceleris sibi praemia vidit, 105 consumptis precibus violentam transit in iram intendensque manus passis furibunda capillis

'quo fugis' exclamat 'meritorum auctore relicta, o patriae praelate meae, praelate parenti?
quo fugis, inmitis, cuius victoria nostrum 110 et scelus et meritum est? nec te data munera, nec te noster amor movit, nec quod spes omnis in unum te mea congesta est? nam quo deserta revertar?
in patriam? superata iacet! sed finge manere:
proditione mea clausa est mihi! patris ad ora? 115
quem tibi donavi? cives odere merentem, finitimi exemplum metuunt: exponimur orbae terrarum, nobis ut Crete sola pateret.
hac quoque si prohibes et nos, ingrata, relinquis, non genetrix Europa tibi est, sed inhospita Syrtis, 120
Armeniae tigres austroque agitata Charybdis.
Nec love tu natus, nec mater imagine tauri ducta tua est: generis falsa est ea fabula! verus, [et ferus et captus nullius amore iuvencae] qui te progenuit, taurus fuit. exige poenas, 125 Nise pater! gaudete malis, modo prodita, nostris, moenia! nam, fateor, merui et sum digna perire.
sed tamen ex illis aliquis, quos impia laesi, me perimat! cur, qui vicisti crimine nostro, insequeris crimen? scelus hoc patriaeque patrique est, 130 officium tibi sit! te vere coniuge digna est, quae torvum ligno decepit adultera taurum discordemque utero fetum tulit. ecquid ad aures perveniunt mea dicta tuas, an inania venti verba ferunt idemque tuas, ingrata, carinas? 135 iam iam Pasiphaen non est mirabile taurum praeposuisse tibi: tu plus feritatis habebas.
me miseram! properare iubet! divulsaque remis unda sonat, mecumque simul mea terra recedit.
nil agis, o frustra meritorum oblite meorum: 140

insequar invitum puppimque amplexa recurvam per freta longa trahar.' Vix dixerat, insilit undis consequiturque rates faciente cupidine vires Cnosiacaque haeret comes invidiosa carinae.
quam pater ut vidit (nam iam pendebat in aura 145 et modo factus erat fulvis haliaeetus alis), ibat, ut haerentem rostro laceraret adunco;
illa metu puppim dimisit, et aura cadentem sustinuisse levis, ne tangeret aequora, visa est.
pluma subit palmis: in avem mutata vocatur 150
Ciris et a tonso est hoc nomen adepta capillo.

Vota Iovi Minos taurorum corpora centum solvit, ut egressus ratibus Curetida terram contigit, et spoliis decorata est regia fixis.
creverat obprobrium generis, foedumque patebat 155 matris adulterium monstri novitate biformis;
destinat hunc Minos thalamo remove pudorem multiplicique domo caecisque includere tectis.
Daedalus ingenio fabrae celeberrimus artis ponit opus turbatque notas et lumina flexum 160 ducit in errorem variarum ambage viarum.
non secus ac liquidus Phrygiis Maeandros in arvis ludit et ambiguo lapsu refluitque fluitque occurrensque sibi venturas aspicit undas et nunc ad fontes, nunc ad mare versus apertum 165 incertas exercet aquas: ita Daedalus implet innumeras errore vias vixque ipse reverti ad limen potuit: tanta est fallacia tecti.

Quo postquam geminam tauri iuvenisque figuram clausit, et Actaeo bis pastum sanguine monstrum 170 tertia sors annis domuit repetita novenis, utque ope virginea nullis iterata priorum ianua difficilis filo est inventa relecto, protinus Aegides rapta Minoide Diam vela dedit comitemque suam crudelis in illo 175 litore destituit; desertae et multa querenti amplexus et opem Liber tulit, utque perenni sidere clara foret, sumptam de fronte coronam inmisit caelo: tenues volat illa per auras dumque volat, gemmae nitidos vertuntur in ignes 180 consistuntque loco specie remanente coronae, qui medius Nixique genu est Anguemque tenentis.

Daedalus interea Creten longumque perosus exilium tactusque loci natalis amore clausus erat pelago. 'terras licet' inquit 'et undas 185 obstruat: et caelum certe patet; ibimus illac:
omnia possideat, non possidet aera Minos.'
dixit et ignotas animum dimittit in artes naturamque novat. nam ponit in ordine pennas a minima coeptas, longam brevior sequenti, 190 ut clivo crevisse putes: sic rustica quondam fistula disparibus paulatim surgit avenis;
tum lino medias et ceris alligat imas atque ita conpositas parvo curvamine flectit, ut veras imitetur aves. puer Icarus una 195
stabat et, ignarus sua se tractare pericla, ore renidenti modo, quas vaga moverat aura, captabat plumas, flavam modo pollice ceram mollibat lusuque suo mirabile patris impediebat opus. postquam manus ultima coepto 200 inposita est, geminas opifex libravit in alas ipse suum corpus motaque pependit in aura;
instruit et natum 'medio' que 'ut limite curras, Icare,' ait 'moneo, ne, si demissior ibis, unda gravet pennas, si celsior, ignis adurat: 205 inter utrumque vola. nec te spectare Booten aut Helicen iubeo strictumque Orionis ense:
me duce carpe viam!' pariter praecepta volandi tradit et ignotas umeris accommodat alas.
inter opus monitusque genae maduere seniles, 210 et patriae tremuere manus; dedit oscula nato non iterum repetenda suo pennisque levatus ante volat comitique timet, velut ales, ab alto quae teneram prolem produxit in aera nido, hortaturque sequi damnosaeque erudit artes 215

et movet ipse suas et nati respicit alas.
hos aliquis tremula dum captat harundine pisces, aut pastor baculo stivave innixus arator vidit et obstipuit, quique aethera carpere possent, credidit esse deos. et iam lunonia laeva 220 parte Samos (fuerant Delosque Parosque relictæ) dextra Lebinthos erat fecundaque melle Calymne, cum puer audaci coepit gaudere volatu deseruitque ducem caelique cupidine tractus altius egit iter. rapidi vicinia solis 225 mollit odoratas, pennarum vincula, ceras;
tabuerant cerae: nudos quatit ille lacertos,
remigioque carens non ullas percipit auras, oraque caerulea patrium clamantia nomen excipiuntur aqua, quae nomen traxit ab illo. 230 at pater infelix, nec iam pater, 'Icare,' dixit,
'Icare,' dixit 'ubi es? qua te regione requiram?'
'Icare' dicebat: pennas aspexit in undis devovitque suas artes corpusque sepulcro condidit, et tellus a nomine dicta sepulti. 235

Hunc miseri tumulo ponentem corpora nati garrula limoso prospexit ab elice perdix et plausit pennis testataque gaudia cantu est, unica tunc volucris nec visa prioribus annis, factaque nuper avis longum tibi, Daedale, crimen. 240 namque huic tradiderat, fatorum ignara, docendam progeniem germana suam, natalibus actis bis puerum senis, animi ad praecepta capacis; ille etiam medio spinas in pisce notatas traxit in exemplum ferroque incidit acuto 245 perpetuos dentes et serrae repperit usum;
primus et ex uno duo ferrea bracchia nodo vinxit, ut aequali spatio distantibus illis altera pars staret, pars altera duceret orbem.

Daedalus invidit sacraque ex arce Minervae 250 praecipitem misit, lapsum mentitus; at illum, quae favet ingeniis, excepit Pallas avemque reddidit et medio velavit in aere pennis, sed vigor ingenii quondam velocis in alas inque pedes abiit; nomen, quod et ante, remansit. 255 non tamen haec alte volucris sua corpora tollit, nec facit in ramis altoque cacumine nidos:
propter humum volitat ponitque in saepibus ova antiquique memor metuit sublimia casus.

Iamque fatigatum tellus Aetnaea tenebat 260 Daedalon, et sumptis pro supplice Cocalus armis mitis habebatur; iam lamentabile Athenae pendere desierant Thesea laude tributum:
templa coronantur, bellatricemque Minervam cum Iove disque vocant aliis, quos sanguine voto 265 muneribusque datis et acerris turis honorant;
sparserat Argolicas nomen vaga fama per urbes Theseos, et populi, quos dives Achaia cepit, huius opem magnis inploravere periculis, huius opem Calydon, quamvis Meleagron haberet, 270 sollicita supplex petiit prece: causa petendi sus erat, infestae famulus vindexque Dianae.
Oenea namque ferunt pleni successibus anni primitias frugum Cereri, sua vina Lyaeo, Palladios flavae latices libasse Minervae; 275 coeptus ab agricolis superos pervenit ad omnes ambitiosus honor: solas sine ture relictas praeteritae cessasse ferunt Latoidos aras.
tangit et ira deos. 'at non inpune feremus, quaeque inhonoratae, non et dicemur inultae' 280 inquit, et Olenios ultorem spreta per agros misit aprum, quanto maiores herbida tauros non habet Epiros, sed habent Sicula arva minores:
sanguine et igne micant oculi, riget horrida cervix, et setae similes rigidis hastilibus horrent: 285 fervida cum rauco latos stridore per armos 287 spuma fluit, dentes aequantur dentibus Indis, fulmen ab ore venit, frondes afflatibus ardent.

is modo crescentes segetes proculcat in herba, 290 nunc matura metit fleturi vota coloni et Cererem in spicis intercipit: area frustra et frustra expectant promissas horrea messes.
sternuntur gravidi longo cum palmite fetus bacaque cum ramis semper frondentis olivae. 295 saevit et in pecudes: non has pastorve canisve, non armenta truces possunt defendere tauri.
diffugiunt populi nec se nisi moenibus urbis esse putant tutos, donec Meleagros et una lecta manus iuvenum coiere cupidine laudis: 300 Tyndaridae gemini, praestantes caestibus alter, alter equo, primaeque ratis molitor Iason, et cum Pirithoo, felix concordia, Theseus, et duo Thestiadae prolesque Aphareia, Lynceus et velox Idas, et iam non femina Caeneus, 305 Leucippusque ferox iaculoque insignis Acastus Hippothousque Dryasque et cretus Amyntore Phoenix Actoridaeque pares et missus ab Elide Phyleus.
nec Telamon aberat magnique creator Achillis cumque Pheretiade et Hyanteo Iolao 310 inpiger Eurytion et cursu invictus Echion Naryciusque Lelex Panopeusque Hyleusque feroxque Hippasus et primis etiamnum Nestor in annis, et quos Hippocoon antiquis misit Amyclis, Penelopaeque socer cum Parrhasio Ancaeo, 315
Ampycidesque sagax et adhuc a coniuge tutus Oeclides nemorisque decus Tegeaea Lycaei:
rasilis huic summam mordebat fibula vestem, crinis erat simplex, nodum conlectus in unum, ex umero pendens resonabat eburnea laevo 320
telorum custos, arcum quoque laeva tenebat;

talis erat cultu, facies, quam dicere vere virgineam in puero, puerilem in virgine possis.
hanc pariter vidit, pariter Calydonius heros optavit renuente deo flammisque latentes 325 hausit et 'o felix, si quem dignabitur' inquit
'ista virum!' nec plura sinit tempusque pudorque dicere: maius opus magni certaminis urguet.

Silva frequens trabibus, quam nulla ceciderat aetas, incipit a plano devexaque prospicit arva: 330 quo postquam venere viri, pars retia tendunt, vincula pars adimunt canibus, pars pressa sequuntur signa pedum, cupiuntque suum reperire periculum.
concava vallis erat, quo se demittere rivi adsuerant pluvialis aquae; tenet ima lacunae 335 lenta salix ulvaeque leves iuncique palustres viminaque et longa parvae sub harundine cannae:
hinc aper excitus medios violentus in hostes fertur, ut excussis elisi nubibus ignes.
sternitur incursu nemus, et propulsa fragorem 340 silva dat: exclamant iuvenes praetentaque forti tela tenent dextra lato vibrantia ferro.
ille ruit spargitque canes, ut quisque furenti obstat, et obliquo latrantes dissipat ictu.
cuspis Echionio primum contorta lacerto 345 vana fuit truncoque dedit leve vulnus acerno;
proxima, si nimis mittentis viribus usa
non foret, in tergo visa est haesura petito: longius it; auctor teli Pagasaeus Iason.
'Phoebe,' ait Ampycides, 'si te coluique coloque, 350 da mihi, quod petitur, certo contingere telo!'
qua potuit, precibus deus adnuit: ictus ab illo est, sed sine vulnere aper: ferrum Diana volanti abstulerat iaculo; lignum sine acumine venit.
ira feri mota est, nec fulmine lenius arsit: 355 emicat ex oculis, spirat quoque pectore flamma, utque volat moles adducto concita nervo, cum petit aut muros aut plenas milite turre, in iuvenes certo sic impete vulnificus sus fertur et Hippalmon Pelagonaque, dextra tuentes 360 cornua, prosternit: socii rapuere iacentes;

at non letiferos effugit Enaesimus ictus Hippocoonte satus: trepidantem et terga parantem vertere succiso liquerunt poplite nervi.
forsitan et Pylius citra Troiana perisset 365 tempora, sed sumpto posita conamine ab hasta arboris insiluit, quae stabat proxima, ramis despexitque, loco tutus, quem fugerat, hostem.
dentibus ille ferox in querno stipite tritis inminet exitio fidensque recentibus armis 370 Eurytidae magni rostro femur hausit adunco.
at gemini, nondum caelestia sidera, fratres, ambo conspicui, nive candidioribus ambo vectabantur equis, ambo vibrata per auras hastarum tremulo quatiebant spicula motu. 375 vulnera fecissent, nisi saetiger inter opacas nec iaculis isset nec equo loca pervia silvas.
persequitur Telamon studioque incautus eundi pronus ab arborea cecidit radice retentus.
dum levat hunc Peleus, celerem Tegeaea sagittam 380 inposuit nervo sinuatoque expulit arcu:
fixa sub aure feri summum destrinxit harundo corpus et exiguo rubefecit sanguine saetas;
nec tamen illa sui successu laetior ictus quam Meleagros erat: primus vidisse putatur 385 et primus sociis visum ostendisse cruorem et 'meritum' dixisse 'feres virtutis honorem.'
erubuere viri seque exhortantur et addunt cum clamore animos iaciuntque sine ordine tela:
turba nocet iactis et, quos petit, impedit ictus. 390 ecce furens contra sua fata bipennifer Arcas
'discite, femineis quid tela virilia praestent, o iuvenes, operique meo concedite!' dixit.

'ipsa suis licet hunc Latonia protegat armis, invita tamen hunc perimet mea dextra Diana.' 395 taliam magniloquo tumidus memoraverat ore incipitemque manu tollens utraque securim institerat digitis pronos suspensus in ictus:
occupat audentem, quaque est via proxima leto, summa ferus geminos derexit ad inguina dentes. 400 concidit Ancaeus glomerataque sanguine multo viscera lapsa fluunt: madefacta est terra cruore.
ibat in adversum proles Ixionis hostem Pirithous valida quatiens venabula dextra;
cui 'procul' Aegides 'o me mihi carior' inquit 405
'pars animae consistite meae! licet eminus esse fortibus: Ancaeo nocuit temeraria virtus.'
dixit et aerata torsit grave cuspide cornum;
quo bene librato votique potente futuro obstitit aesculea frondosus ab arbore ramus. 410 misit et Aesonides iaculum: quod casus ab illo vertit in inmeriti fatum latrantis et inter ilia coniectum tellure per ilia fixum est.
at manus Oenidae variat, missisque duabus hasta prior terra, medio stetit altera tergo. 415 nec mora, dum saevit, dum corpora versat in orbem stridentemque novo spumam cum sanguine fundit, vulneris auctor adest hostemque inritat ad iram splendidaque adversos venabula condit in armos.
gaudia testantur socii clamore secundo 420 victricemque petunt dextrae coniungere dextram inmanemque ferum multa tellure iacentem mirantes spectant neque adhuc contingere tutum esse putant, sed tela tamen sua quisque cruentat.
Ipse pede inposito caput exitiabile pressit 425 atque ita 'sume mei spoliū, Nonacria, iuris,' dixit 'et in partem veniat mea gloria tecum.'
protinus exuvias rigidis horrentia saetis terga dat et magnis insignia dentibus ora.

illi laetitiae est cum munere muneris auctor; 430 invidere alii, totoque erat agmine murmur.
e quibus ingenti tendentes bracchia voce
'pone age nec titulos intercipe, femina, nostros,' Thestiadae clamant, 'nec te fiducia formae decipiat, ne sit longe tibi captus amore 435 auctor,' et huic adimunt munus, ius muneris illi.
non tulit et tumida frendens Mavortius ira 'discite, raptores alieni' dixit 'honoris, facta minis quantum distent,' hausitque nefando pectora Plexippi nil tale timentia ferro. 440 Toxea, quid faciat, dubium pariterque volentem ulcisci fratrem fraternaue fata timentem haud patitur dubitare diu calidumque priori caede recalfecit consorti sanguine telum.

Dona deum templis nato victore ferebat, 445 cum videt exstinctos fratres Althaea referri.
quae plangore dato maestis clamoribus urbem inplet et auratis mutavit vestibus atras;
at simul est auctor necis editus, excidit omnis luctus et a lacrimis in poenae versus amorem est. 450

Stipes erat, quem, cum partus enixa iaceret Thestias, in flammam triplices posuere sorores staminaque inpresso fatalia pollice nentes
'tempora' dixerunt 'eadem lignoque tibi que, o modo nate, damus.' quo postquam carmine dicto 455 excessere deae, flagrantem mater ab igne eripuit ramum sparsitque liquentibus undis.
ille diu fuerat penetralibus abditus imis servatusque tuos, iuvenis, servaverat annos.
protulit hunc genetrix taedasque et fragmina poni 460
imperat et positis inimicos admovet ignes.
tum conata quater flammis inponere ramum coepta quater tenuit: pugnat materque sororque, et diversa trahunt unum duo nomina pectus.
saepe metu sceleris pallebant ora futuri, 465

saepe suum fervens oculis dabat ira ruborem, et modo nescio quid similis crudele minanti vultus erat, modo quem misereri credere posses;
cumque ferus lacrimas animi siccaverat ardor, inveniebantur lacrimae tamen, utque carina, 470 quam ventus ventoque rapit contrarius aestus, vim geminam sentit paretque incerta duobus, Thestias haud aliter dubiis affectibus errat inque vices ponit positamque resuscitat iram.
incipit esse tamen melior germana parente 475 et consanguineas ut sanguine leniat umbras, inpietate pia est. nam postquam pestifer ignis convaluit, 'rogus iste cremet mea viscera' dixit, utque manu dira lignum fatale tenebat, ante sepulcrales infelix adstitit aras 480
'poenarum' que 'deae triplices, furialibus,' inquit
'Eumenides, sacris vultus advertite vestros!
ulciscor facioque nefas; mors morte pianda est,
in scelus addendum scelus est, in funera funus:
per coacervatos pereat domus in pia luctus! 485
an felix Oeneus nato victore fruatur, Thestius orbis erit? melius lugebitis ambo.
vos modo, fraterni manes animaeque recentes, officium sentite meum magnoque paratas accipite inferias, uteri mala pignora nostri! 490 ei mihi! quo rapior? fratres, ignoscite matri!
deficiunt ad coepta manus: meruisse fatemur illum, cur pereat; mortis mihi displicet auctor.
ergo inpune feret vivusque et victor et ipso successu tumidus regnum Calydonis habebit, 495 vos cinis exiguus gelidaeque iacebitis umbrae?
haud equidem patiar: pereat sceleratus et ille spemque patris regnumque trahat patriaeque ruinam!
mens ubi materna est? ubi sunt pia iura parentum et quos sustinui bis mensum quinque labores? 500
o utinam primis arsisses ignibus infans, idque ego passa forem! vixisti munere nostro;

nunc merito moriere tuo! cape praemia facti bisque datam, primum partu, mox stipite raptu, redde animam vel me fraternis adde sepulcris! 505 et cupio et nequeo. quid agam? modo vulnera fratrum ante oculos mihi sunt et tantae caedis imago, nunc animum pietas maternaque nomina frangunt.
me miseram! male vincetis, sed vincite, fratres, dummodo, quae dederu vobis, solacia vosque 510 ipsa sequar!' dixit dextraque aversa trementi funereum torrem medios coniecit in ignes:
aut dedit aut visus gemitus est ipse dedisse stipes, ut invitis conreptus ab ignibus arsit.

Inscius atque absens flamma Meleagros ab illa 515 uritur et caecis torreri viscera sentit ignibus ac magnos superat virtute dolores.
quod tamen ignavo cadat et sine sanguine leto, maeret et Ancae felicia vulnera dicit grandaevumque patrem fratresque piasque sorores 520 cum gemitu sociamque tori vocat ore supremo, forsitan et matrem. crescunt ignisque dolorque languescuntque iterum; simul est extinctus uterque, inque leves abiit paulatim spiritus auras paulatim cana prunam velante favilla. 525

Alta iacet Calydon: lugent iuvenesque senesque, vulgusque proceresque gemunt, scissaeque capillos planguntur matres Calydonides Eueninae; pulvere canitiem genitor vultusque seniles foedat humi fusus spatiosumque increpat aevum. 530 nam de matre manus diri sibi conscia facti exegit poenas acto per viscera ferro.
non mihi si centum deus ora sonantia linguis ingeniumque capax totumque Helicon dedisset, tristia persequeretur miserarum fata sororum. 535 inmemores decoris liventia pectora tundunt, dumque manet corpus, corpus refoventque foventque,

oscula dant ipsi, posito dant oscula lecto.
post cinerem cineres haustos ad pectora pressant adfusaeque iacent tumulo signataque saxo 540 nomina complexae lacrimas in nomina fundunt.
quas Parthaoniae tandem Latonia clade exsatiata domus praeter Gorgenque nurumque nobilis Alcmenae natis in corpore pennis adlevat et longas per bracchia porrigit alas 545 corneaque ora facit versasque per aera mittit.

Interea Theseus sociati parte laboris functus Erectheas Tritonidos ibat ad arces.
clausit iter fecitque moras Achelous eunti imbre tumens: 'succede meis,' ait 'inclite, tectis, 550 Cecropide, nec te committe rapacibus undis:
ferre trabes solidas obliquaque volvere magno murmure saxa solent. vidi contermina ripae cum gregibus stabula alta trahi; nec fortibus illic profuit armentis nec equis velocibus esse. 555 multa quoque hic torrens nivibus de monte solutis corpora turbineo iuvenalia vertice mersit.
tutior est requies, solito dum flumina currant limite, dum tenues capiat suus alveus undas.'
adnuat Aegides 'utar,' que 'Acheloe, domoque 560 consilioque tuo' respondit; et usus utroque est.
pumice multicavo nec levibus atria tophis structa subit: molli tellus erat umida musco, summa lacunabant alterno murice conchae.
iamque duas lucis partes Hyperione menso 565 discubuere toris Theseus comitesque laborum, hac Ixionides, illa Troezenius heros parte Lelex, raris iam sparsus tempora canis, quosque alios parili fuerat dignatus honore Amnis Acarnanum, laetissimus hospite tanto. 570 protinus adpositas nudae vestigia nympphae instruxere epulis mensas dapibusque remotis in gemma posuere merum. tum maximus heros, aequora prospiciens oculis subiecta, 'quis' inquit

'ille locus?' (digitoque ostendit) 'et insula nomen 575 quod gerit illa, doce, quamquam non una videtur!' Amnis ad haec 'non est' inquit 'quod cernitis unum:
quinque iacent terrae; spatium discrimina fallit.
quoque minus spretae factum mirere Dianae, naides hae fuerant, quae cum bis quinque iuencos 580 mactassent rurisque deos ad sacra vocassent, inmemores nostri festas duxere choreas.
intumui, quantusque feror, cum plurimus umquam, tantus eram, pariterque animis inmanis et undis a silvis silvas et ab arvis arva revelli 585 cumque loco nymphas, memores tum denique nostri, in freta provolvi. fluctus nosterque marisque continuum diduxit humum partesque resolvit in totidem, mediis quot cernis Echinadas undis.
ut tamen ipse vides, procul, en procul una recessit 590
insula, grata mihi; Perimelen navita dicit:
huic ego virgineum dilectae nomen ademi;
quod pater Hippodamas aegre tulit inque profundum propulit e scopulo periturae corpora natae.
excepi nantemque ferens "o proxima mundi 595 regna vagae" dixi "sortite, Tridentifer, undae, adfer opem, mersaeque, precor, feritate paterna 601 da, Neptune, locum, vel sit locus ipsa licebit!"
dum loquor, amplexa est artus nova terra natantes 609 et gravis increvit mutatis insula membris.'

Amnis ab his tacuit. factum mirabile cunctos moverat: inridet credentes, utque deorum spretor erat mentisque ferox, Ixione natus
'ficta refers nimiumque putas, Acheloe, potentes esse deos,' dixit 'si dant adimuntque figuras.' 615 obstipuere omnes nec talia dicta probarunt, ante omnesque Lelex animo maturus et aevo, sic ait: 'inmensa est finemque potentia caeli non habet, et quicquid superi voluere, peractum est, quoque minus dubites, tiliae contermina quercus 620 collibus est Phrygiis modico circumdata muro; ipse locum vidi; nam me Pelopeia Pittheus misit in arva suo quondam regnata parenti.

haud procul hinc stagnum est, tellus habitabilis olim, nunc celebres mergis fulicisque palustribus undae; 625 Iuppiter huc specie mortali cumque parente venit Atlantiades positus caducifer alis.
mille domos adiere locum requiemque petentes, mille domos clausere serae; tamen una recepit, parva quidem, stipulis et canna tecta palustri, 630 sed pia Baucis anus parilique aetate Philemon illa sunt annis iuncti iuvenalibus, illa consenuere casa paupertatemque fatendo effecere levem nec iniqua mente ferendo; nec refert, dominos illic famulosne requiras: 635 tota domus duo sunt, idem parentque iubentque.
ergo ubi caelicolae parvos tetigere penates summissoque humiles intrarunt vertice postes, membra senex posito iussit relevare sedili;
cui superiniecit textum rude sedula Baucis 640 inque foco tepidum cinerem dimovit et ignes suscitat hesternos foliisque et cortice sicco nutrit et ad flammam anima producit anili multifidasque faces ramaliaque arida tecto detulit et minuit parvoque admovit aeno, 645 quodque suus coniunx riguo conlegerat horto, truncat holus foliis; furca levat ille bicorni sordida terga suis nigro pendentia tigno servatoque diu resecat de tergore partem exiguam sectamque domat ferventibus undis. 650 interea medias fallunt sermonibus horas concutiuntque torum de molli fluminis ulva 655 inpositum lecto sponda pedibusque salignis.
vestibus hunc velant, quas non nisi tempore festo sternere consueverant, sed et haec vilisque vetusque vestis erat, lecto non indignanda saligno.

ad cubuere dei. mensam succincta tremensque 660 ponit anus, mensae sed erat pes tertius impar:
testa parem fecit; quae postquam subdita clivum sustulit, aequatam mentae tersere virentes.
ponitur hic bicolor sinceræ bacca Minervæ conditaque in liquida corna autumnalia faece 665 intibaque et radix et lactis massa coacti ovaque non acri leviter versata favilla, omnia fictilibus. post hæc caelatus eodem sistitur argento crater fabricataque fago pocula, qua cava sunt, flaventibus inlita ceris; 670 parva mora est, epulasque foci misere calentes, nec longæ rursus referuntur vina senectæ dantque locum mensis paulum seducta secundis:
hic nux, hic mixta est rugosis carica palmis prunaque et in patulis redolentia mala canistris 675 et de purpureis conlectæ vitibus uvæ, candidus in medio favus est; super omnia vultus accessere boni nec iners pauperque voluntas.

‘Interea totiens haustum cratera repleti sponte sua per seque vident succrescere vina: 680 attoniti novitate pavent manibusque supinis concipiunt Baucisque preces timidusque Philemon et veniam dapibus nullisque paratibus orant.
unicus anser erat, minimæ custodia villæ:
quem dis hospitibus domini mactare parabant; 685 ille celer penna tardos ætate fatigat eluditque diu tandemque est visus ad ipsos confugisse deos: superi vetuere necari “di” que “sumus, meritasque luet vicinia poenas in pia” dixerunt; “vobis in munibus huius 690 esse mali dabitur; modo vestra relinquitte tecta ac nostros comitate gradus et in ardua montis ite simul!” parent ambo baculisque levati nituntur longo vestigia ponere clivo.

tantum aberant summo, quantum semel ire sagitta 695 missa potest: flexere oculos et mersa palude cetera prospiciunt, tantum sua tecta manere, dumque ea mirantur, dum deflent fata suorum, illa vetus dominis etiam casa parva duobus vertitur in templum: furcas subiere columnae, 700 stramina flavescent aurataque tecta videntur caelataeque fores adopertaque marmore tellus.
taliam tum placido Saturnius edidit ore: “dicite, iuste senex et femina coniuge iusto digna, quid optetis.” cum Baucide pauca locutus 705 iudicium superis aperit commune Philemon:
“esse sacerdotes delubraque vestra tueri poscimus, et quoniam concordem egimus annos, auferat hora duos eadem, nec coniugis umquam busta meae videam, neu sim tumulandus ab illa.” 710 vota fides sequitur: templi tutela fuere, donec vita data est; annis aevoque soluti ante gradus sacros cum starent forte locique narrarent casus, frondere Philemona Baucis, Baucida conspexit senior frondere Philemon. 715
iamque super geminos crescente cacumine vultus mutua, dum licuit, reddebant dicta “vale” que “o coniunx” dixere simul, simul abdita textit ora frutex: ostendit adhuc Thyneius illic incola de gemino vicinos corpore truncos. 720 haec mihi non vani (neque erat, cur fallere vellent) narravere senes; equidem pendentia vidi serta super ramos ponensque recentia dixi “cura deum di sint, et, qui coluere, colantur.”
Desierat, cunctosque et res et moverat auctor, 725 Thesea praecipue; quem facta audire volentem mira deum innixus cubito Calydonius amnis talibus adloquitur: ‘sunt, o fortissime, quorum forma semel mota est et in hoc renovamine mansit; sunt, quibus in plures ius est transire figuras, 730

ut tibi, complexi terram maris incola, Proteu.
nam modo te iuvenem, modo te videre leonem, nunc violentus aper, nunc, quem tetigisse timerent, anguis eras, modo te faciebant cornua taurum;
saepe lapis poteras, arbor quoque saepe videri, 735 interdum, faciem liquidarum imitatus aquarum, flumen eras, interdum undis contrarius ignis.

‘Nec minus Autolyçi coniunx, Erysicthone nata, iuris habet: pater huius erat, qui numina divum sperneret et nullos aris adoleret odores; 740 ille etiam Cereale nemus violasse securi dicitur et lucos ferro temerasse vetustos.
stabat in his ingens annoso robore quercus, una nemus; vittae mediam memoresque tabellae sertaque cingebant, voti argumenta potentum. 745 saepe sub hac dryades festas duxere choreas, saepe etiam manibus nexis ex ordine trunci circuiere modum, mensuraque roboris ulnas quinque ter inplebat, nec non et cetera tantum silva sub hac, silva quantum fuit herba sub omni. 750 non tamen idcirco ferrum Triopeius illa abstinuit famulosque iubet succidere sacrum robur, et ut iussos cunctari vidit, ab uno edidit haec rapta sceleratus verba securi: “non dilecta deae solum, sed et ipsa licebit 755 sit dea, iam tanget frondente cacumine terram.”
dixit, et obliquos dum telum librat in ictus, contremuit gemitumque dedit Deoia quercus, et pariter frondes, pariter pallescere glandes coepere ac longi pallorem ducere rami. 760 cuius ut in trunco fecit manus in pia vulnus, haud aliter fluxit discusso cortice sanguis, quam solet, ante aras ingens ubi victima taurus concidit, abrupta cruor e cervice profundi.
obstipuere omnes, aliquisque ex omnibus audet 765 detertere nefas saevamque inhibere bipennem:

aspicit hunc “mentis” que “piae cape praemia!” dixit Thessalus inque virum convertit ab arbore ferrum de truncatque caput repetitaque robora caedit, redditus e medio sonus est cum robore talis: 770 “nympha sub hoc ego sum Cereri gratissima ligno, quae tibi factorum poenas instare tuorum vaticinor moriens, nostri solacia leti.” persequitur scelus ille suum, labefactaque tandem ictibus innumeris adductaque funibus arbor 775 corrui et multam prostravit pondere silvam.

‘Attonitae dryades damno nemorumque suoque, omnes germanae, Cererem cum vestibus atris maerentes adeunt poenamque Erysichthonis orant.
adnuit his capitisque sui pulcherrima motu 780 concussit gravidis oneratos messibus agros, moliturque genus poenae miserabile, si non ille suis esset nulli miserabilis actis, pestifera lacerare Fame: quae quatenus ipsi non adeunda deae est (neque enim Cereremque Famemque 785 fata coire sinunt), montani numinis unam talibus agrestem conpellat oreada dictis: “est locus extremis Scythiae glacialis in oris, triste solum, sterilis, sine fruge, sine arbore tellus; Frigus iners illic habitant Pallorque Tremorque 790 et ieiuna Fames: ea se in praecordia condat sacrilegi scelerata, iube, nec copia rerum vincat eam superetque meas certamine vires, neve viae spatium te terreat, accipe currus, accipe, quos frenis alte moderere, dracones!” 795 et dedit; illa dato subvecta per aera curru devenit in Scythiam: rigidique cacumine montis (Caucason appellant) serpentum colla levavit quaesitamque Famem lapidoso vidit in agro unguibus et raras vellentem dentibus herbas. 800 hirtus erat crinis, cava lumina, pallor in ore,

labra incana situ, scabrae rubigine fauces, dura cutis, per quam spectari viscera possent;
ossa sub incurvis exstabant arida lumbis, ventris erat pro ventre locus; pendere putares 805 pectus et a spinae tantummodo crate teneri.
auxerat articulos macies, genuumque tumebat orbis, et inmodico prodibant tubere tali.

‘Hanc procul ut vidit, (neque enim est accedere iuxta ausa) refert mandata deae paulumque morata, 810 quamquam aberat longe, quamquam modo venerat illuc, visa tamen sensisse famem est, retroque dracones egit in Haemoniam versis sublimis habenis.

‘Dicta Fames Cereris, quamvis contraria semper illius est operi, peragit perque aera vento 815 ad iussam delata domum est, et protinus intrat sacrilegi thalamos altoque sopore solutum (noctis enim tempus) geminis amplectitur ulnis, seque viro inspirat, faucesque et pectus et ora adflat et in vacuis spargit ieiunia venis; 820 functaque mandato fecundum deserit orbem inque domos inopes adsueta revertitur antra.

‘Lenis adhuc Somnus placidis Erysicthona pennis mulcebat: petit ille dapes sub imagine somni, oraeque vana movet dentemque in dente fatigat, 825 exercetque cibo delusum guttur inani proque epulis tenues nequiquam devorat auras; ut vero est expulsa quies, furit ardor edendi perque avidas fauces incensaque viscera regnat.
nec mora; quod pontus, quod terra, quod educat aer, 830 poscit et adpositis queritur ieiunia mensis inque epulis epulas quaerit; quodque urbibus esse, quodque satis poterat populo, non sufficit uni, plusque cupit, quo plura suam demittit in alvum.
utque fretum recipit de tota flumina terra 835 nec satiatur aquis peregrinosque ebibit amnes, utque rapax ignis non umquam alimenta recusat innumerasque trabes cremat et, quo copia maior est data, plura petit turbaque voracior ipsa est:

sic epulas omnes Erycithonis ora profani 840 accipiunt poscuntque simul. cibus omnis in illo causa cibi est, semperque locus fit inanis edendo.

'Iamque fame patrias altique voragine ventris attenuarat opes, sed inattenuata manebat tum quoque dira fames, inplacataeque vigebat 845 flamma gulae. tandem, demisso in viscera censu, filia restabat, non illo digna parente.

hanc quoque vendit inops: dominum generosa recusat et vicina suas tendens super aequora palmas

"eripe me domino, qui raptae praemia nobis 850 virginitatis habes!" ait: haec Neptunus habebat; qui prece non sprete, quamvis modo visa sequenti esset ero, formamque novat vultumque virilem induit et cultus piscem capientibus aptos.

hanc dominus spectans "o qui pendentia parvo 855 aera cibo celas, moderator harundinis," inquit
"sic mare conpositum, sic sit tibi piscis in unda credulus et nullos, nisi fixus, sentiat hamos:
quae modo cum vili turbatis veste capillis litore in hoc steterat (nam stantem in litore vidi), 860 dic, ubi sit: neque enim vestigia longius exstant."

illa dei munus bene cedere sensit et a se se quaeri gaudens his est resecuta rogantem:
"quisquis es, ignoscas; in nullam lumina partem gurgite ab hoc flexi studioque operatus inhaesi, 865 quoque minus dubites, sic has deus aequoris artes adiuvet, ut nemo iam dudum litore in isto, me tamen excepto, nec femina constitit ulla."

credidit et verso dominus pede pressit harenam elususque abiit: illi sua reddita forma est. 870 ast ubi habere suam transformia corpora sensit, saepe pater dominis Triopeida tradit, at illa nunc equa, nunc ales, modo bos, modo cervus abibat praebebatque avido non iusta alimenta parenti.

vis tamen illa mali postquam consumpserat omnem 875 materiam derantque gravi nova pabula morbo, ipse suos artus lacerans divellere morsu coepit et infelix minuendo corpus alebat. —

‘Quid moror externis? etiam mihi nempe novandi est corporis, o iuvenis, numero finita, potestas. 880 nam modo, qui nunc sum, videor, modo flector in anguem, armenti modo dux vires in cornua sumo, — cornua, dum potui. nunc pars caret altera telo frontis, ut ipse vides.’ gemitus sunt verba secuti.

LIBER NONVS

Quae gemitus truncaeque deo Neptunius heros causa rogat frontis; cui sic Calydonius amnis coepit inornatos redimitus harundine crines: ‘triste petis munus. quis enim sua proelia victus commemorare velit? referam tamen ordine, nec tam 5 turpe fuit vinci, quam contendisse decorum est, magnaue dat nobis tantus solacia victor.
nomine siqua suo fando pervenit ad aures Deianira tuas, quondam pulcherrima virgo
multorumque fuit spes invidiosa procorum. 10
cum quibus ut soceri domus est intrata petiti, “accipe me generum,” dixi “Parthaone nate”:
dixit et Alcides. alii cessere duobus.
ille Iovem socerum dare se, famamque laborum, et superata suae referebat iussa novercae. 15 contra ego “turpe deum mortali cedere” dixi — nondum erat ille deus—“dominum me cernis aquarum cursibus obliquis inter tua regna fluentum.
nec gener externis hospes tibi missus ab oris, sed popularis ero et rerum pars una tuarum. 20 tantum ne noceat, quod me nec regia Iuno odit, et omnis abest iussorum poena laborum.
nam, quo te iactas, Alcmena nate, creatum, Iuppiter aut falsus pater est, aut crimine verus.
matris adulterio patrem petis. elige, fictum 25 esse Iovem malis, an te per dedecus ortum.”
taliam dicentem iam dudum lumine torvo spectat, et accensae non fortiter imperat irae, verbaque tot reddit: “melior mihi dextera lingua.
dummodo pugnando superem, tu vince loquendo” 30 congregaturque ferox. puduit modo magna locutum cedere: reieci viridem de corpore vestem, bracchiaque opposui, tenuique a pectore varas in statione manus et pugnae membra paravi.

ille cavis hausto spargit me pulvere palmis, 35
inque vicem fulvae tactu flavescit harenae.
et modo cervicem, modo crura, modo ilia captat, aut captare putes, omnique a parte lacessit.
me mea defendit gravitas frustra que petebar;
haud secus ac moles, magno quam murmure fluctus 40
oppugnant; manet illa, suoque est pondere tuta.
digredimur paulum, rursusque ad bella coimus, inque gradu stetimus, certi non cedere, eratque cum pede pes iunctus, totoque ego pectore pronus et digitos digitis et frontem fronte premebam. 45 non aliter vidi fortes concurrere tauros, cum, pretium pugnae, toto nitidissima saltu expetitur coniunx: spectant armenta paventque nescia, quem maneat tanti victoria regni.
ter sine profectu voluit nitentia contra 50 reicere Alcides a se mea pectora; quarto excutit amplexus, adductaque bracchia solvit, impulsumque manu — certum est mihi vera fateri — protinus avertit, tergoque onerosus inhaesit.
siqua fides, — neque enim ficta mihi gloria voce 55
quaeritur — inposito pressus mihi monte videbar.
vix tamen inserui sudore fluentia multo bracchia, vix solvi duros a corpore nexus.
instat anhelanti, prohibetque resumere vires, et cervice mea potitur. tum denique tellus 60 pressa genu nostro est, et harenas ore momordi.
inferior virtute, meas devertor ad artes, elaborque viro longum formatus in anguem.
qui postquam flexos sinuavi corpus in orbem, cumque fero movi linguam stridore bisulcam, 65
risit, et inludens nostras Tirynthius artes “cunarum labor est angues superare mearum,” dixit "et ut vincas alios, Acheloe, dracones, pars quota Lernaee serpens eris unus echidnae?

vulneribus fecunda suis erat illa, nec ullum 70
de centum numero caput est inpune recisum, quin gemino cervix herede valentior esset.
hanc ego ramosam natis e caede colubris crescentemque malo domui, domitamque reclusi.
quid fore te credis, falsum qui versus in anguem 75 arma aliena moves, quem forma precaria celat?"
dixerat, et summo digitorum vincula collo inicit: angebar, ceu guttura forcipe pressus, pollicibusque meas pugnabam evellere fauces.
sic quoque devicto restabat tertia tauri 80 forma trucis. tauro mutatus membra rebello.
induit ille toris a laeva parte lacertos, admissumque trahens sequitur, depressaque dura cornua figit humo, meque alta sternit harena.
nec satis hoc fuerat: rigidum fera dextera cornu 85
dum tenet, infregit, truncaque a fronte revellit.
naides hoc, pomis et odoro flore repletum, sacrarunt; divesque meo Bona Copia cornu est.'

Dixerat: et nymphe ritu succincta Dianae, una ministrarum, fuis utrimque capillis, 90 incessit totumque tulit praedivite cornu autumnum et mensas, felicia poma, secundas.
lux subit; et primo feriente cacumina sole discedunt iuvenes, neque enim dum flumina pacem et placidos habeant lapsus totaeque residant 95 opperiuntur aquae. vultus Achelous agrestes et lacerum cornu mediis caput abdidit undis.

Huic tamen ablati doluit iactura decoris, cetera sospes habet. capitis quoque fronde saligna aut superinposita celatur harundine damnum. 100 at te, Nesse ferox, eiusdem virginis ardor perdiderat volucris traiectione terga sagitta.
namque nova repetens patrios cum coniuge muros venerat Eueni rapidas love natus ad undas.

uberior solito, nimbis hiemalibus auctus, 105 verticibusque frequens erat atque inpervius amnis.
intrepidum pro se, curam de coniuge agentem Nessus adit, membrisque valens scitusque vadorum,
'officio' que 'meo ripa sistetur in illa haec,' ait 'Alcide. tu viribus utere nando!' 110 pallentemque metu, fluviumque ipsumque timentem tradidit Aonius pavidam Calydonida Nesso.
mox, ut erat, pharetraque gravis spolioque leonis — nam clavam et curvos trans ripam miserat arcus — 'quandoquidem coepi, superentur flumina' dixit, 115 nec dubitat nec, qua sit clementissimus amnis, quaerit, et obsequio deferri spernit aquarum.
iamque tenens ripam, missos cum tolleret arcus, coniugis agnovit vocem Nessoque paranti fallere depositum 'quo te fiducia' clamat 120
'vana pedum, violente, rapit? tibi, Nesse biformis, dicimus. exaudi, nec res intercipe nostras.
si te nulla mei reverentia movit, at orbes concupitus vetitos poterant inhibere paterni.
haud tamen effugies, quamvis ope fidis equina; 125 vulnere, non pedibus te consequar.' ultima dicta re probat, et missa fugientia terga sagitta traicit. exstabat ferrum de pectore aduncum.
quod simul evulsum est, sanguis per utrumque foramen emicuit mixtus Lernaevi tabe veneni. 130 excipit hunc Nessus 'ne' que enim 'moriemur inulti' secum ait, et calido velamina tincta cruore dat munus raptae velut inritamen amoris.

Longa fuit medii mora temporis, actaque magni Herculis inplerant terras odiumque novercae. 135 victor ab Oechalia Ceneo sacra parabat vota Iovi, cum Fama loquax praecessit ad aures, Deianira, tuas, quae veris addere falsa gaudet, et e minimo sua per mendacia crescit,

Amphitryoniaden loles ardore teneri. 140 credit amans, venerisque novae perterrita fama indulsit primo lacrimis, flendoque dolorem diffudit miseranda suum. mox deinde 'quid autem flemus?' ait 'paelex lacrimis laetabitur istis.
quae quoniam adveniet, properandum aliquidque novandum est, 145

dum licet, et nondum thalamos tenet altera nostros.
conquerar, an sileam? repetam Calydonia, morerne?
excedam tectis? an, si nihil amplius, obstem?
quid si me, Meleagre, tuam memor esse sororem forte paro facinus, quantumque iniuria possit 150 femineusque dolor, iugulata paelice testor?'
in cursus animus varios abit. omnibus illis praetulit inbutam Nesseo sanguine vestem mittere, quae vires defecto reddat amori, ignaroque Lichae, quid tradat, nescia, luctus 155 ipsa suos tradit blandisque miserrima verbis, dona det illa viro, mandat. capit inscius heros, induiturque umeris Lernaee virus echidnae.

Tura dabat primis et verba precantia flammis, vinaque marmoreas patera fundebat in aras: 160
incaluit vis illa mali, resolutaque flammis Herculeos abiit late dilapsa per artus.
dum potuit, solita gemitum virtute repressit.
victa malis postquam est patientia, reppulit aras, inplevitque suis nemorosam vocibus Oeten. 165 nec mora, letiferam conatur scindere vestem:
qua trahitur, trahit illa cutem, foedumque relatu, aut haeret membris frustra temptata revelli, aut laceros artus et grandia detegit ossa.
ipse cruor, gelido ceu quondam lammina candens 170 tincta lacu, stridit coquiturque ardente veneno.
nec modus est, sorbent avidae praecordia flammae, caeruleusque fluit toto de corpore sudor, ambustique sonant nervi, caecaque medullis tabe liquefactis tollens ad sidera palmas 175

'cladibus,' exclamat 'Saturnia, pascere nostris:
pascere, et hanc pestem specta, crudelis, ab alto, corque ferum satia. vel si miserandus et hosti, hoc est, si tibi sum, diris cruciatibus aegram invisamque animam natamque laboribus aufer. 180 mors mihi munus erit; decet haec dare dona novercam.
ergo ego foedantem peregrino templa cruore Busirin domui? saevoque alimenta parentis Antaeo eripui? nec me pastoris Hiberi forma triplex, nec forma triplex tua, Cerbere, movit? 185 vosne, manus, validi pressistis cornua tauri?
vestrum opus Elis habet, vestrum Stymphalides undae, Partheniumque nemus? vestra virtute relatus Thermodontiaco caelatus balteus auro, pomaque ab insomni concustodita dracone? 190 nec mihi centauri potuere resistere, nec mi Arcadiae vastator aper? nec profuit hydrae crescere per damnum geminasque resumere vires?
quid, cum Thracis equos humano sanguine pingues plenaque corporibus laceris praesepia vidi, 195 visaue deieci, dominumque ipsosque peremi?
his elisa iacet moles Nemeaea lacertis:
hac caelum cervice tuli. defessa iubendo est saeva lovis coniunx: ego sum indefessus agendo.
sed nova pestis adest, cui nec virtute resisti 200 nec telis armisque potest. pulmonibus errat ignis edax imis, perque omnes pascitur artus.
at valet Eurystheus! et sunt, qui credere possint esse deos?' dixit, perque altam saucius Oeten haud aliter graditur, quam si venabula taurus 205 corpore fixa gerat, factique refugerit auctor.
saepe illum gemitus edentem, saepe frementem, saepe retemptantem totas infringere vestes sternentemque trabes irascentemque videres montibus aut patrio tendentem bracchia caelo. 210

Ecce Lichan trepidum latitantem rupe cavata aspicit, utque dolor rabiem conlegerat omnem,
'tune, Licha,' dixit 'feralia dona dedisti?
tune meae necis auctor eris?' tremit ille, pavetque pallidus, et timide verba excusantia dicit. 215 dicentem genibusque manus adhibere parantem corripit Alcides, et terque quaterque rotatum mittit in Euboicas tormento fortius undas.
ille per aérias pendens induruit auras:
utque ferunt imbres gelidis concreescere ventis, 220 inde nives fieri, nivibus quoque molle rotatis astringi et spissa glomerari grandine corpus, sic illum validis iactum per inane lacertis exsanguemque metu nec quicquam umoris habentem in rigidos versum silices prior edidit aetas. 225 nunc quoque in Euboico scopulus brevis eminent alto gurgite et humanae servat vestigia formae, quem, quasi sensurum, nautae calcare verentur, appellantque Lichan. at tu, Iovis inclita proles, arboribus caesis, quas ardua gesserat Oete, 230 inque pyram structis arcum pharetramque capacem regnaque visuras iterum Troiana sagittas ferre iubet Poeante satum, quo flamma ministro subdita. dumque avidis comprehenditur ignibus agger, congeriem silvae Nemeaeo vellere summam 235
sternis, et inposita clavae cervice recumbis, haud alio vultu, quam si conviva iaceres inter plena meri redimitus pocula sertis.

Iamque valens et in omne latus diffusa sonabat, securosque artus contemptoremque petebat 240 flamma suum. timere dei pro vindice terrae.
quos ita, sensit enim, laeto Saturnius ore Iuppiter adloquitur: 'nostra est timor iste voluptas, o superi, totoque libens mihi pectore grator, quod memoris populi dicor rectorque paterque 245 et mea progenies vestro quoque tuta favore est.

nam quamquam ipsius datur hoc inmanibus actis, obligor ipse tamen. sed enim nec pectora vano fida metu paveant. Oetaeas spernite flammās!
omnia qui vicit, vincet, quos cernitis, ignes; 250 nec nisi materna Vulcanum parte potentem sentiet. aeternum est a me quod traxit, et expers atque immune necis, nullaque domabile flamma.
idque ego defunctum terra caelestibus oris accipiam, cunctisque meum laetabile factum 255 dis fore confido. siquis tamen Hercule, siquis forte deo doliturus erit, data praemia nolet, sed meruisse dari sciet, invitique probabit.
adsensere dei. coniunx quoque regia visa est cetera non duro, duro tamen ultima vultu 260 dicta tulisse Iovis, seque indoluisse notatam.
interea quodcumque fuit populabile flammae, Malciber abstulerat, nec cognoscenda remansit Herculis effigies, nec quicquam ab imagine ductum matris habet, tantumque Iovis vestigia servat. 265 utque novus serpens posita cum pelle senecta luxuriare solet, squamaque nitere recenti, sic ubi mortales Tirynthius exuit artus, parte sui meliore viget, maiorque videri coepit et augusta fieri gravitate verendus. 270 quem pater omnipotens inter cava nubila raptum quadriiugo curru radiantibus intulit astris.

Sensit Atlas pondus. neque adhuc Sthenelēus iras solverat Eurystheus, odiumque in prole paternum exercebat atrox. at longis anxia curis 275 Argolis Alcmena, questus ubi ponat aniles, cui referat nati testatos orbe labores, cuive suos casus, Iolen habet. Herculis illam imperiiis thalamoque animoque receperat Hyllus, inpleratque uterum generoso semine; cui sic 280 incipit Alcmena: 'faveant tibi numina saltem, conripiantque moras tum cum matura vocabis praepositam timidis parientibus Ilithyiam, quam mihi difficilem lunonis gratia fecit.

namque laboriferi cum iam natalis adesset 285 Herculis et decimum premeretur sidere signum, tendebat gravitas uterum mihi, quodque ferebam, tantum erat, ut posses auctorem dicere tecti ponderis esse Iovem. nec iam tolerare labores ulterius poteram. quin nunc quoque frigidus artus, 290 dum loquor, horror habet, parsque est meminisse doloris.
septem ego per noctes, totidem cruciata diebus, fessa malis, tendensque ad caelum bracchia, magno Lucinam Nixosque pares clamore vocabam.
illa quidem venit, sed praecorrupta, meumque 295
quae donare caput lunoni vellet iniquae.
utque meos audit gemitus, subsedit in illa ante fores ara, dextroque a poplite laevum pressa genu et digitis inter se pectine iunctis sustinuit partus. tacita quoque carmina voce 300 dixit, et inceptos tenuerunt carmina partus.
nitor, et ingrato facio convicia demens vana Iovi, cupioque mori, moturaque duos verba queror silices. matres Cadmeides adsunt, votaque suscipiunt, exhortanturque dolentem. 305 una ministrarum, media de plebe, Galanthis, flava comas, aderat, faciendis strenua iussis, officiis dilecta suis. ea sensit iniqua nescio quid lunone geri, dumque exit et intrat saepe fores, divam residentem vidit in ara 310 bracchiaque in genibus digitis conexas tenentem, et "quaecumque es," ait "dominae gratulare. levata est Argolis Alcmene, potiturque puerpera voto." exsiluit, iunctasque manus pavefacta remisit diva potens uteri: vinculis levor ipsa remissis. 315 numine decepto risisse Galanthis fama est.
ridentem prensamque ipsis dea saeva capillis traxit, et e terra corpus relevare volentem arcuit, inque pedes mutavit bracchia primos.

strenuitas antiqua manet; nec terga colorem 320
amisere suum: forma est diversa priori.
quae quia mendaci parientem iuverat ore, ore parit nostrasque domos, ut et ante, frequentat.'

Dixit, et admonitu veteris commota ministrae ingemuit. quam sic nurus est affata dolentem: 325
'te tamen, o genetrix, alienae sanguine nostro rapta movet facies. quid si tibi mira sororis fata meae referam? quamquam lacrimaeque dolorque impediunt, prohibentque loqui. fuit unica matri — me pater ex alia genuit — notissima forma 330 Oechalidum, Dryope. quam virginitate carentem vimque dei passam Delphos Delonque tenentis excipit Andraemon, et habetur coniuge felix.
est lacus, adclivis devexo margine formam litoris efficiens, summum myrteta coronant. 335 venerat huc Dryope fatorum nescia, quoque indignere magis, nymphis latura coronas, inque sinu puerum, qui nondum impleverat annum, dulce ferebat onus tepidique ope lactis alebat.
haut procul a stagno Tyrios imitata colores 340
in spem bacarum florebat aquatica lotos.
carpserat hinc Dryope, quos oblectamina nato porrigeret, flores, et idem factura videbar — namque aderam — vidi guttas e flore cruentas decidere et tremulo ramos horrore moveri. 345 scilicet, ut referunt tardi nunc denique agrestes, Lotis in hanc nymphe, fugiens obscena Priapi, contulerat versos, servato nomine, vultus.

'Nescierat soror hoc. quae cum perterrita retro ire et adoratis vellet discedere nymphis, 350 haeserunt radice pedes. convellere pugnat, nec quicquam, nisi summa movet. subcrescit ab imo, totaque paulatim lentus premit inguina cortex.
ut vidit, conata manu laniare capillos, fronde manum implevit: frondes caput omne tenebant. 355 at puer Amphissos (namque hoc avus Eurytus illi addiderat nomen) materna rigescere sentit ubera; nec sequitur ducentem lacteus umor.

spectatrix aderam fati crudelis, opemque non poteram tibi ferre, soror, quantumque valebam, 360 crescentem truncum ramosque amplexa morabar, et, fateor, volui sub eodem cortice condi.

‘Ecce vir Andraemon genitorque miserrimus adsunt, et quaerunt Dryopen: Dryopen quaerentibus illis ostendi loton. tepido dant oscula ligno, 365 adfusique suae radicibus arboris haerent.
nil nisi iam faciem, quod non foret arbor, habebat cara soror: lacrimae misero de corpore factis inrorant foliis, ac, dum licet, oraque praestant vocis iter, tales effundit in aera questus: 370 “siqua fides miseris, hoc me per numina iuro non meruisse nefas. patior sine crimine poenam.
viximus innocuae. si mentior, arida perdam quas habeo frondes, et caesa securibus urar.
hunc tamen infantem maternis demite ramis, 375 et date nutrici, nostrarque sub arbore saepe lac facitote bibat, nostrarque sub arbore ludat.
cumque loqui poterit, matrem facitote salutet, et tristis dicat ‘latet hoc in stipite mater.’ stagna tamen timeat, nec carpat ab arbore flores, 380 et frutices omnes corpus putet esse dearum.
care vale coniunx, et tu, germana, paterque!
qui, siqua est pietas, ab acutae vulnere falcis,
a pecoris morsu frondes defendite nostras.
et quoniam mihi fas ad vos incumbere non est, 385 erigite huc artus, et ad oscula nostra venite, dum tangi possum, parvumque attollite natum!
plura loqui nequeo. nam iam per candida mollis colla liber serpit, summoque cacumine condor.
ex oculis removete manus. sine munere vestro 390

contegat inductus morientia lumina cortex!" desierant simul ora loqui, simul esse. diuque corpore mutato rami caluere recentes.'

Dumque refert Iole factum mirabile, dumque Eurytidos lacrimas admoto pollice siccatur 395 Alcmene (flet et ipsa tamen) compescuit omnem res nova tristitiam. nam limine constitit alto paene puer dubiaque tegens lanugine malas, ora reformatus primos Iolaus in annos.
hoc illi dederat Iunonia muneris Hebe, 400
victa viri precibus. quae cum iurare pararet, dona tributuram post hunc se talia nulli, non est passa Themis: 'nam iam discordia Thebae bella movent,' dixit 'Capaneusque nisi ab Iove vinci haud poterit, fientque pares in vulnere fratres, 405 subductaque suos manes tellure videbit vivus adhuc vates; ultusque parente parentem natus erit factus pius et sceleratus eodem attonitusque malis, exul mentisque domusque, vultibus Eumenidum matrisque agitabitur umbris, 410 donec eum coniunx fatale poposcerit aurum, cognatumque latus Phegeius hauserit ensis.
tum demum magno petet hos Achelonia supplex ab Iove Calliroe natis infantibus annos addat, neve necem sinat esse ultoris inultam. 415 Iuppiter his motus privignae dona nurusque praecipiet, facietque viros in pubibus annis.'

Haec ubi fatigato venturi praescia dixit ore Themis, vario superi sermone fremebant, et, cur non aliis eadem dare dona liceret, 420 murmur erat. queritur veteres Pallantias annos coniugis esse sui, queritur canescere mitis Iasiona Ceres, repetitum Mulciber aevum poscit Erichonio, Venerem quoque cura futuri tangit, et Anchisae renovare paciscitur annos. 425 cui studeat, deus omnis habet; crescitque favore turbida seditio, donec sua Iuppiter ora solvit, et 'o! nostri si qua est reverentia,' dixit

'quo ruitis? tantumne aliquis sibi posse videtur, fata quoque ut superet? fati Iolaus in annos, 430 quos egit, rediit. fati iuvenescere debent Calliroe geniti, non ambitione nec armis.
vos etiam, quoque hoc animo meliore feratis, me quoque fata regunt. quae si mutare valerem, nec nostrum seri curvarent Aeacon anni, 435 perpetuumque aevi florem Rhadamanthus haberet cum Minoe meo, qui propter amara senectae pondera despicitur, nec quo prius ordine regnat.'

Dicta Iovis movere deos; nec sustinet ullus, cum videat fessos Rhadamanthon et Aeacon annis 440 et Minoa, queri. qui, dum fuit integer aevi, terruebat magnas ipso quoque nomine gentes;
tunc erat invalidus, Deionidenque iuventae robore Miletum Phoeboque parente superbum pertimuit, credensque suis insurgere regnis, 445 haut tamen est patriis arcere penatibus ausus.
sponte fugis, Milete, tua, celerique carina Aegaeas metiris aquas, et in Aside terra moenia constituis positoris habentia nomen.
hic tibi, dum sequitur patriae curvamina ripae, 450 filia Maeandri totiens redeuntis eodem cognita Cyaneae, praestanti corpora forma, Byblida cum Cauno, prolem est enixa gemellam.

Byblis in exemplo est, ut ament concessa puellae, Byblis Apollinei correpta cupidine fratris; 455 non soror ut fratrem, nec qua debebat, amabat.
illa quidem primo nullos intellegit ignes, nec peccare putat, quod saepius oscula iungat, quod sua fraterno circumdet brachia collo;
mendacique diu pietatis fallitur umbra. 460 paulatim declinat amor, visuraque fratrem cultu venit, nimiumque cupit formosa videri et si qua est illic formosior, invidet illi.

sed nondum manifesta sibi est, nullumque sub illo igne facit votum, verumtamen aestuat intus. 465
iam dominum appellat, iam nomina sanguinis odit, Byblida iam mavult, quam se vocet ille sororem.

Spes tamen obscenas animo demittere non est ausa suo vigilans; placida resoluta quiete saepe videt quod amat: visa est quoque iungere fratri 470 corpus et erubuit, quamvis sopita iacebat.
somnia abit; silet illa diu repetitque quietis ipsa suae speciem dubiaque ita mente profatur:
'me miseram! tacitae quid vult sibi noctis imago?
quam nolim rata sit! cur haec ego somnia vidi? 475 ille quidem est oculis quamvis formosus iniquis et placet, et possim, si non sit frater, amare, et me dignus erat. verum nocet esse sororem.
dummodo tale nihil vigilans committere temptem, saepe licet simili redeat sub imagine somnus! 480 testis abest somno, nec abest imitata voluptas.
pro Venus et tenera volucer cum matre Cupido, gaudia quanta tuli! quam me manifesta libido contigit! ut iacui totis resoluta medullis!
ut meminisse iuvat! quamvis brevis illa voluptas 485 noxque fuit praeceps et coeptis invida nostris.

'O ego, si liceat mutato nomine iungi, quam bene, Caene, tuo poteram nurus esse parenti!
quam bene, Caene, meo poteras gener esse parenti!
omnia, di facerent, essent communia nobis, 490
praeter avos: tu me vellem generosior esses!
nescioquam facies igitur, pulcherrime, matrem;
at mihi, quae male sum, quos tu, sortita parentes, nil nisi frater eris. quod obest, id habebimus unum.
quid mihi significant ergo mea visa? quod autem 495
somnia pondus habent? an habent et somnia pondus?
di melius! di nempe suas habuere sorores.
sic Saturnus Opem iunctam sibi sanguine duxit,

Oceanus Tethyn, Iunonem rector Olympi.
sunt superis sua iura! quid ad caelestia ritus 500
exigere humanos diversaque foedera tempto?
aut nostro vetitus de corde fugabitur ardor, aut hoc si nequeo, peream, precor, ante toroque mortua componar, positaeque det oscula frater.
et tamen arbitrium quaerit res ista duorum! 505
finge placere mihi: scelus esse videbitur illi.

‘At non Aeolidae thalamos timuere sororum!
unde sed hos novi? cur haec exempla paravi?
quo feror? obscenae procul hinc discedite flammae nec, nisi qua fas est germanae, frater ametur! 510 si tamen ipse mei captus prior esset amore, forsitan illius possem indulgere furori.
ergo ego, quae fueram non reiectura petentem, ipsa petam! poterisne loqui? poterisne fateri?
coget amor, potero! vel, si pudor ora tenebit, 515 littera celatos arcana fatebitur ignes.’

Hoc placet, haec dubiam vicit sententia mentem.
in latus erigitur cubitoque innixa sinistro ‘viderit: insanos’ inquit ‘fateamur amores!
ei mihi, quo labor? quem mens mea concipit ignem?’ 520 et meditata manu componit verba trementi.
dextra tenet ferrum, vacuam tenet altera ceram.
incipit et dubitat, scribit damnatque tabellas, et notat et delet, mutat culpatque probatque inque vicem sumptas ponit positasque resumit. 525 quid velit ignorat; quicquid factura videtur, displicet. in vultu est audacia mixta pudori.
scripta ‘soror’ fuerat; visum est delere sororem verbaque correctis incidere talia ceris: ‘quam, nisi tu dederis, non est habitura salutem, 530 hanc tibi mittit amans: pudet, a, pudet edere nomen, et si quid cupiam quaeris, sine nomine vellem posset agi mea causa meo, nec cognita Byblis ante forem, quam spes votorum certa fuisset.

'Esse quidem laesi poterat tibi pectoris index 535 et color et macies et vultus et umida saepe lumina nec causa suspiria mota patienti et crebri amplexus, et quae, si forte notasti, oscula sentiri non esse sororia possent.
ipsa tamen, quamvis animo grave vulnus habebam, 540 quamvis intus erat furor igneus, omnia feci (sunt mihi di testes), ut tandem sanior essem, pugnavi que diu violenta Cupidinis arma effugere infelix, et plus, quam ferre puellam posse putes, ego dura tuli. superata fateri 545 cogor, opemque tuam timidis exposcere votis.
tu servare potes, tu perdere solus amantem:
elige, utrum facias. non hoc inimica precatur, sed quae, cum tibi sit iunctissima, iunctior esse expetit et vinclo tecum propiore ligari. 550 iura senes norint, et quid liceatque nefasque fasque sit, inquirant, legumque examina servent.
conveniens Venus est annis temeraria nostris.
quid liceat, nescimus adhuc, et cuncta licere credimus, et sequimur magnorum exempla deorum. 555 nec nos aut durus pater aut reverentia famae aut timor impediet: tantum sit causa timendi, dulcia fraterno sub nomina furta tegemus.
est mihi libertas tecum secreta loquendi, et damus amplexus, et iungimus oscula coram. 560 quantum est, quod desit? miserere fatentis amorem, et non fassurae, nisi cogeret ultimus ardor, neve merere meo subscribi causa sepulchro.'

Talia nequiquam perarantem plena reliquit cera manum, summusque in margine versus adhaesit. 565 protinus inpressa signat sua crimina gemma, quam tinxit lacrimis (linguam defecerat umor):
deque suis unum famulis pudibunda vocavit, et pavidum blandita 'fer has, fidissime, nostro' dixit, et adiecit longo post tempore 'fratri.' 570 cum daret, elapsae manibus cecidere tabellae.

omine turbata est, misit tamen. apta minister tempora nactus adit traditque latentia verba. attonitus subita iuvenis Maeandrius ira proicit acceptas lecta sibi parte tabellas, 575 vixque manus retinens trepidantis ab ore ministri,
'dum licet, o vetitae scelerate libidinis auctor, effuge!' ait 'qui, si nostrum tua fata pudorem non traherent secum, poenas mihi morte dedisses.'
ille fugit pavidus, dominaeque ferocia Cauni 580 dicta refert. palles audita, Bybli, repulsa, et pavet obsessum glaciali frigore corpus.
mens tamen ut rediit, pariter rediere furores, linguaque vix tales icto dedit aere voces:
'et merito! quid enim temeraria vulneris huius 585
indicium feci? quid, quae celandae fuerunt, tam cito commisi properatis verba tabellis?
ante erat ambiguus animi sententia dictis praetemptanda mihi. ne non sequeretur euntem, parte aliqua veli, qualis foret aura, notare 590 debueram, tutoque mari decurrere, quae nunc non exploratis inplevi linthea ventis.
auferor in scopulos igitur, subversaue toto obruor oceano, neque habent mea vela recursus.

'Quid quod et omnibus certis prohibebar amori 595 indulgere meo, tum cum mihi ferre iubenti excidit et fecit spes nostras cera caducas?
nonne vel illa dies fuerat, vel tota voluntas, sed potius mutanda dies? deus ipse monebat signaque certa dabat, si non male sana fuisset. 600 et tamen ipsa loqui, nec me committere cerae debueram, praesensque meos aperire furores.
vidisset lacrimas, vultum vidisset amantis;
plura loqui poteram, quam quae cepere tabellae.
invito potui circumdare brachia collo, 605 et, si reicerer, potui moritura videri amplectique pedes, adfusaque poscere vitam.

omnia fecissem, quorum si singula duram flectere non poterant, potuissent omnia, mentem.
forsitan et missi sit quaedam culpa ministri: 610
non adiit apte, nec legit idonea, credo, tempora, nec petiit horamque animumque vacantem.

‘Haec nocuere mihi. neque enim est de tigride natus nec rigidas silices solidumve in pectore ferrum aut adamanta gerit, nec lac bibit ille leaenae. 615 vincetur! repetendus erit, nec taedia coepti ulla mei capiam, dum spiritus iste manebit.
nam primum, si facta mihi revocare liceret,
non coepisse fuit: coepta expugnare secundum est.
quippe nec ille potest, ut iam mea vota relinquam, 620
non tamen ausorum semper memor esse meorum.
et, quia desierim, leviter voluisse videbor, aut etiam temptasse illum insidiisque petisse, vel certe non hoc, qui plurimus urget et urit pectora nostra, deo, sed victa libidine credar; 625 denique iam nequeo nil commisisse nefandum.
et scripsi et petii: reserata est nostra voluntas;
ut nihil adiciam, non possum innoxia dici.
quod superest, multum est in vota, in crimina parvum.’
dixit, et (incertae tanta est discordia mentis), 630 cum pigeat temptasse, libet temptare. modumque exit et infelix committit saepe repelli.
mox ubi finis abest, patriam fugit ille nefasque, inque peregrina ponit nova moenia terra.

Tum vero maestam tota Miletida mente 635 defecisse ferunt, tum vero a pectore vestem diripuit planxitque suos furibunda lacertos; iamque palam est demens, inconcessaque fatetur spem veneris, siquidem patriam invisosque penates deserit, et profugi sequitur vestigia fratris. 640 utque tuo motae, proles Semeleia, thyrsos Ismariae celebrant repetita triennia bacchae,

Byblida non aliter latos ululasse per agros
Bubasides videre nurus. quibus illa relictis Caras et armiferos Lelegas Lyciamque pererrat. 645 iam Cragon et Limyren Xanthique reliquerat undas, quoque Chimaera iugo mediis in partibus ignem, pectus et ora leae, caudam serpentis habebat.
deficiunt silvae, cum tu lassata sequendo concidis, et dura positis tellure capillis, 650 Bybli, iaces, frondesque tuo premis ore caducas.
saepe illam nymphae teneris Lelegeides ulnis tollere conantur, saepe, ut medeatur amori, praecipiant, surdaeque adhibent solacia menti.
muta iacet, viridesque suis tenet unguibus herbas 655 Byblis, et umectat lacrimarum gramina rivo.
naldas his venam, quae numquam arescere posset, subposuisse ferunt. quid enim dare maius habebant?
protinus, ut secto piceae de cortice guttae, utve tenax gravida manat tellure bitumen; 660 utve sub adventu spirantis lene favoni sole remollescit quae frigore constitit unda; sic lacrimis consumpta suis Phoebeia Byblis vertitur in fontem, qui nunc quoque vallibus illis nomen habet dominae, nigraque sub ilice manat. 665

Fama novi centum Cretaeas forsitan urbes implesset monstri, si non miracula nuper Iphide mutata Crete propiora tulisset.
proxima Cnosiaco nam quondam Phaestia regno progenuit tellus ignotum nomine Ligdum, 670 ingenua de plebe virum, nec census in illo nobilitate sua maior, sed vita fidesque inculpata fuit. gravidae qui coniugis aures vocibus his monuit, cum iam prope partus adesset.
'quae voveam, duo sunt: minimo ut relevere dolore, 675 utque marem parias. onerosior altera sors est, et vires fortuna negat. quod abominor, ergo edita forte tuo fuerit si femina partu, — invitus mando; pietas, ignosce! — necetur.’ dixerat, et lacrimis vultum lavere profusis, 680 tam qui mandabat, quam cui mandata dabantur.

sed tamen usque suum vanis Telethusa maritum sollicitat precibus, ne spem sibi ponat in arto.
certa sua est Ligdo sententia. iamque ferendo vix erat illa gravem maturo pondere ventrem, 685 cum medio noctis spatio sub imagine somni Inachis ante torum, pompa comitata sacrorum, aut stetit aut visa est. inerant lunaria fronti cornua cum spicis nitido flaventibus auro et regale decus; cum qua latrator Anubis, 690 sanctaque Bubastis, variusque coloribus Apis, quique premit vocem digitoque silentia suadet;
sistraque erant, numquamque satis quaesitus Osiris, plenaque somniferis serpens peregrina venenis.
tum velut excussam somno et manifesta videntem 695 sic adfata dea est: ‘pars o Telethusa mearum, pone graves curas, mandataque falle mariti.
nec dubita, cum te partu Lucina levarit, tollere quicquid erit. dea sum auxiliaris opemque exorata fero; nec te coluisse quereris 700 ingratum numen.’ monuit, thalamoque recessit.
laeta toro surgit, purasque ad sidera supplex Cressa manus tollens, rata sint sua visa, precatur.

Ut dolor increvit, seque ipsum pondus in auras expulit, et nata est ignaro femina patre, 705 iussit ali mater puerum mentita. fidemque res habuit, neque erat ficti nisi conscia nutrix.
vota pater solvit, nomenque inponit avitum:
Iphis avus fuerat. gavisata est nomine mater, quod commune foret, nec quemquam falleret illo. 710 inde incepta pia mendacia fraude latebant.
cultus erat pueri; facies, quam sive puellae, sive dares puero, fuerat formosus uterque.

Tertius interea decimo successerat annus:

cum pater, Iphi, tibi flavam despondet lanthen, 715 inter Phaestiadas quae laudatissima formae dote fuit virgo, Dictaeo nata Teleste.
par aetas, par forma fuit, primasque magistris accepere artes, elementa aetatis, ab isdem.
hinc amor ambarum tetigit rude pectus, et aequum 720 vulnus utrique dedit, sed erat fiducia dispar:
coniugium pactaeque exspectat tempora taedae, quamque virum putat esse, virum fore credit lanthe; Iphis amat, qua posse frui desperat, et auget hoc ipsum flammam, ardetque in virgine virgo, 725 vixque tenens lacrimas 'quis me manet exitus,' inquit
'cognita quam nulli, quam prodigiosa novaeque cura tenet Veneris? si di mihi parcere vellent, parcere debuerant; si non, et perdere vellent, naturale malum saltem et de more dedissent. 730 nec vaccam vaccae, nec equas amor urit equarum:
urit oves aries, sequitur sua femina cervum.
sic et aves coeunt, interque animalia cuncta femina femineo conrepta cupidine nulla est.
vellem nulla forem! ne non tamen omnia Crete 735
monstra ferat, taurum dilexit filia Solis, femina nempe marem. meus est furiosior illo, si verum profitemur, amor. tamen illa secuta est spem Veneris; tamen illa dolis et imagine vaccae passa bovem est, et erat, qui deciperetur, adulter. 740 huc licet ex toto sollertia confluat orbe, ipse licet revolet ceratis Daedalus alis, quid faciet? num me puerum de virgine doctis artibus efficiet? num te mutabit, lanthe?
'Quin animum firmas, teque ipsa recolligis, Iphi, 745 consiliique inopes et stultos excutis ignes?
quid sis nata, vide, nisi te quoque decipis ipsam, et pete quod fas est, et ama quod femina debes!
spes est, quae faciat, spes est, quae pascat amorem.
hanc tibi res adimit. non te custodia caro 750

arcet ab amplexu, nec cauti cura mariti, non patris asperitas, non se negat ipsa roganti, nec tamen est potiunda tibi, nec, ut omnia fiant, esse potes felix, ut dique hominesque laborent.
nunc quoque votorum nulla est pars vana meorum, 755 dique mihi faciles, quicquid valuere, dederunt;
quodque ego, vult genitor, vult ipsa, socerque futurus.
at non vult natura, potentior omnibus istis, quae mihi sola nocet. venit ecce optabile tempus, luxque iugalis adest, et iam mea fiet lanthe — 760 nec mihi continget: mediis sitiemus in undis.
pronuba quid Iuno, quid ad haec, Hymenaeae, venitis sacra, quibus qui ducat abest, ubi nubimus ambae?’ pressit ab his vocem. nec lenius altera virgo aestuat, utque celer venias, Hymenaeae, precatur. 765 quae petit, haec Telethusa timens modo tempora differt, nunc ficto languore moram trahit, omina saepe visaue causatur. sed iam consumpserat omnem materiam ficti, dilataque tempora taedae institerant, unusque dies restabat. at illa 770 crinalem capiti vittam nataeque sibi detrahit, et passis aram complexa capillis ‘Isi, Paraetonium Mareoticaeque arva Pharonque quae colis, et septem digestum in cornua Nilum:
fer, precor,’ inquit ‘opem, nostroque medere timori! 775 te, dea, te quondam tuaeque haec insignia vidi cunctaque cognovi, sonitum comitantiaque aera sistrorum, memorique animo tua iussa notavi.
quod videt haec lucem, quod non ego punior, ecce consilium munusque tuum est. miserere duarum, 780 auxilioque iuva!’ lacrimae sunt verba secutae.
visa dea est movisse suas (et moverat) aras, et templi tremuere fores, imitataque lunam cornua fulserunt, crepuitque sonabile sistrum.
non segura quidem, fausto tamen omine laeta 785 mater abit templo. sequitur comes Iphis euntem,

quam solita est, maiore gradu, nec candor in ore permanet, et vires augentur, et acrior ipse est vultus, et incomptis brevior mensura capillis, plusque vigoris adest, habuit quam femina. nam quae 790
femina nuper eras, puer es! date munera templis, nec timida gaudete fide! dant munera templis, addunt et titulum: titulus breve carmen habebat:
dona : puer : solvit : quae : femina : voverat : iphis.
postera lux radiis latum patefecerat orbem, 795 cum Venus et Iuno sociosque Hymenaeus ad ignes conveniunt, potiturque sua puer Iphis lanthe.

LIBER DECIMVS

Inde per inmensum croceo velatus amictu aethera digreditur Ciconumque Hymenaeus ad oras tendit et Orphea nequiquam voce vocatur.
adfuit ille quidem, sed nec sollemnia verba nec laetos vultus nec felix attulit omen. 5 fax quoque, quam tenuit, lacrimoso stridula fumo usque fuit nullosque invenit motibus ignes.
exitus auspicio gravior: nam nupta per herbas dum nova naiadum turba comitata vagatur, occidit in talum serpentis dente recepto. 10 quam satis ad superas postquam Rhodopeius auras deflevit vates, ne non temptaret et umbras, ad Styga Taenaria est ausus descendere porta perque leves populos simulacraque functa sepulcro Persephonen adiit inamoenaque regna tenentem 15 umbrarum dominum pulsisque ad carmina nervis sic ait: 'o positi sub terra numina mundi, in quem reccidimus, quicquid mortale creamur, si licet et falsi positis ambagibus oris vera loqui sinitis, non huc, ut opaca viderem 20 Tartara, descendi, nec uti villosa colubris terna Medusaei vincirem guttura monstri:
causa viae est coniunx, in quam calcata venenum vipera diffudit crescentesque abstulit annos.
posse pati volui nec me temptasse negabo: 25
vicit Amor. supera deus hic bene notus in ora est;
an sit et hic, dubito: sed et hic tamen auguror esse, famaque si veteris non est mentita rapinae, vos quoque iunxit Amor. per ego haec loca plena timoris, per Chaos hoc ingens vastique silentia regni, 30 Eurydices, oro, properata retexite fata.

omnia debemur vobis, paulumque morati serius aut citius sedem properamus ad unam.
tendimus huc omnes, haec est domus ultima, vosque humani generis longissima regna tenetis. 35 haec quoque, cum iustos matura peregerit annos, iuris erit vestri: pro munere poscimus usum;
quodsi fata negant veniam pro coniuge, certum est nolle redire mihi: leto gaudete duorum.'

Talia dicentem nervosque ad verba moventem 40 exsanguis flebant animae; nec Tantalus undam captavit refugam, stupuitque Ixionis orbis, nec carpere iecur volucres, urnisque vacarunt Belides, inque tuo sedisti, Sisyphe, saxo.
tunc primum lacrimis victarum carmine fama est 45 Eumenidum maduisse genas, nec regia coniunx sustinet oranti nec, qui regit ima, negare, Eurydicenque vocant: umbras erat illa recentes inter et incessit passu de vulnere tardo.
hanc simul et legem Rhodopeius accipit heros, 50
ne flectat retro sua lumina, donec Avernas exierit valles; aut inrita dona futura.
carpitur adclivis per muta silentia trames, arduus, obscurus, caligine densus opaca, nec procul afuerunt telluris margine summae: 55 hic, ne deficeret, metuens avidusque videndi flexit amans oculos, et protinus illa relapsa est, bracchiaque intendens prendique et prendere certans nil nisi cedentes infelix arripit auras.
iamque iterum moriens non est de coniuge quicquam 60
questa suo (quid enim nisi se quereretur amatam?)
supremumque 'vale,' quod iam vix auribus ille acciperet, dixit revolutaque rursus eodem est.

Non aliter stupuit gemina nece coniugis Orpheus, quam tria qui timidus, medio portante catenas, 65
colla canis vidit, quem non pavor ante reliquit, quam natura prior saxo per corpus oborto,

quique in se crimen traxit voluitque videri Olenos esse nocens, tuque, o confisa figurae, infelix Lethaea, tuae, iunctissima quondam 70 pectora, nunc lapides, quos umida sustinet Ide.
orantem frustra que iterum transire volentem portitor arcuerat: septem tamen ille diebus squalidus in ripa Cereris sine munere sedit; cura dolorque animi lacrimaeque alimenta fuere. 75 esse deos Erebi crudeles questus, in altam se recipit Rhodopen pulsumque aquilonibus Haemum.

Tertius aequoreis inclusum Piscibus annum finierat Titan, omnemque refugerat Orpheus femineam Venerem, seu quod male cesserat illi, 80 sive fidem dederat; multas tamen ardor habebat iungere se vati, multae doluere repulsae. ille etiam Thracum populis fuit auctor amorem in teneros transferre mares citraque iuventam aetatis breve ver et primos carpere flores. 85

Collis erat collemque super planissima campi area, quam viridem faciebant graminis herbae:
umbra loco deerat; qua postquam parte resedit dis genitus vates et fila sonantia movit, umbra loco venit: non Chaonis a fuit arbor, 90
non nemus Heliadum, non frondibus aesculus altis, nec tiliae molles, nec fagus et innuba laurus, et coryli fragiles et fraxinus utilis hastis enodisque abies curvataque glandibus ilex et platanus genialis acerque coloribus inpar 95 amnicolaeque simul salices et aquatica lotos perpetuoque virens buxum tenuesque myricae et bicolor myrtus et bacis caerulea tinus.
vos quoque, flexipedes hederarum, venistis et una pampineae vites et amictae vitibus ulmi 100 ornique et piceae pomoque onerata rubenti arbutus et lentae, victoris praemia, palmae et succincta comas hirsutaque vertice pinus, grata deum matri, siquidem Cybeleius Attis exuit hac hominem truncoque induruit illo. 105

Adfuit huic turbae metas imitata cupressus, nunc arbor, puer ante deo dilectus ab illo, qui citharam nervis et nervis temperat arcum.
namque sacer nymphis Carthaea tenentibus arva ingens cervus erat, lateque patentibus altis 110 ipse suo capiti praebebat cornibus umbras.
cornua fulgebant auro, demissaque in armos pendebant tereti gemmata monilia collo.
bulla super frontem parvis argentea loris vincta movebatur; parilesque ex aere nitebant 115 auribus e geminis circum cava tempora baccae;
isque metu vacuus naturalique pavore deposito celebrare domos mulcendaque colla quamlibet ignotis manibus praeberere solebat.
sed tamen ante alios, Caeae pulcherrime gentis, 120 gratus erat, Cyparisse, tibi: tu pabula cervum ad nova, tu liquidi ducebas fontis ad undam, tu modo texebas varios per cornua flores, nunc eques in tergo residens huc laetus et illuc mollia purpureis frenabas ora capistris. 125

Aestus erat mediusque dies, solisque vapore concava litorei fervebant bracchia Cancri:
fessus in herbosa posuit sua corpora terra cervus et arborea frigus ducebat ab umbra.
hunc puer inprudens iaculo Cyparissus acuto 130
fixit et, ut saevo morientem vulnere vidit, velle mori statuit. quae non solacia Phoebus dixit et, ut leviter pro materiaque doleret, admonuit! gemit ille tamen munusque supremum hoc petit a superis, ut tempore lugeat omni. 135 iamque per inmensos egesto sanguine fletus in viridem verti coeperunt membra colorem, et, modo qui nivea pendebant fronte capilli, horrida caesaries fieri sumptoque rigore sidereum gracili spectare cacumine caelum. 140 ingemuit tristisque deus 'lugebere nobis lugebisque alios aderisque dolentibus' inquit.

Tale nemus vates attraxerat inque ferarum concilio, medius turbae, volucrumque sedebat.
ut satis impulsas temptavit pollice chordas 145 et sensit varios, quamvis diversa sonarent, concordare modos, hoc vocem carmine movit:
'ab Iove, Musa parens, (cedunt Iovis omnia regno) carmina nostra move! Iovis est mihi saepe potestas dicta prius: cecini plectro graviore Gigantas 150 sparsaque Phlegraeis victricia fulmina campis.
nunc opus est leviores lyra, puerosque canamus dilectos superis inconcessisque puellas ignibus attonitas meruisse libidine poenam.

'Rex superum Phrygii quondam Ganymedis amore 155
arsit, et inventum est aliquid, quod Iuppiter esse, quam quod erat, mallet. nulla tamen alite verti dignatur, nisi quae posset sua fulmina ferre.
nec mora, percusso mendacibus aere pennis abripit Iliaden; qui nunc quoque pocula miscet 160 invitaeque Iovi nectar Iunone ministrat.

'Te quoque, Amyclide, posuisset in aethere Phoebus, tristia si spatium ponendi fata dedissent.
qua licet, aeternus tamen es, quotiensque repellit ver hiemem, Piscique Aries succedit aquoso, 165 tu totiens oreris viridique in caespite flores.
te meus ante omnes genitor dilexit, et orbe in medio positi caruerunt praeside Delphi, dum deus Eurotan inmunitamque frequentat Sparten, nec citharae nec sunt in honore sagittae: 170 inmemor ipse sui non retia ferre recusat, non tenuisse canes, non per iuga montis iniqui ire comes, longaque alit adsuetudine flammam.
iamque fere medius Titan venientis et actae noctis erat spatiumque pari distabat utrimque, 175 corpora veste levant et suco pinguis olivi splendescunt latique ineunt certamina disci.

quem prius aerias libratum Phoebus in auras misit et oppositas disiecit pondere nubes; reccidit in solidam longo post tempore terram 180 pondus et exhibuit iunctam cum viribus artem.
protinus inprudens actusque cupidine lusus tollere Taenarides orbem properabat, at illum dura repercusso subiecit verberare tellus in vultus, Hyacinthe, tuos. expalluit aequae 185 quam puer ipse deus conlapsosque excipit artus, et modo te refovet, modo tristia vulnera siccant, nunc animam admotis fugientem sustinet herbis.
nil prosunt artes: erat inmedicabile vulnus.
ut, si quis violas rigidumve papaver in horto 190 liliaque infringat fulvis horrentia linguis, marcida demittant subito caput illa vietum nec se sustineant spectentque cacumine terram:
sic vultus moriens iacet et defecta vigore ipsa sibi est oneri cervix umeroque recumbit. 195 “laberis, Oebalide, prima fraudate iuventa,” Phoebus ait “videoque tuum, mea crimina, vulnus.
tu dolor es facinusque meum: mea dextera leto inscribenda tuo est. ego sum tibi funeris auctor.
quae mea culpa tamen, nisi si lusisse vocari 200
culpa potest, nisi culpa potest et amasse vocari?
atque utinam tecumque mori vitamque liceret reddere! quod quoniam fatali lege tenemur, semper eris mecum memorique haerebis in ore.
te lyra pulsa manu, te carmina nostra sonabunt, 205 flosque novus scripto gemitus imitabere nostros.
tempus et illud erit, quo se fortissimus heros addat in hunc florem folioque legatur eodem.”
taliam dum vero memorantur Apollinis ore, ecce cruor, qui fusus humo signaverat herbas, 210 desinit esse cruor, Tyrioque nitentior ostro flos oritur formamque capit, quam lilia, si non purpureus color his, argenteus esset in illis.

non satis hoc Phoebus est (is enim fuit auctor honoris):
ipse suos gemitus foliis inscribit, et Al Al 215 flos habet inscriptum, funestaque littera ducta est.
nec genuisse pudet Sparten Hyacinthon: honorque durat in hoc aevi, celebrandaque more priorum annua praelata redeunt Hyacinthia pompa.

‘At si forte roges fecundam Amathunta metallis, 220 an genuisse velit Propoetidas, abnuat aequae atque illos, gemino quondam quibus aspera cornu frons erat, unde etiam nomen traxere Cerastae.
ante fores horum stabat Iovis Hospitis ara;
ignarus sceleris quam si quis sanguine tinctam 225 advena vidisset, mactatos crederet illic lactantes vitulos Amathusiacasque bidentes:
hospes erat caesus! sacris offensa nefandis ipsa suas urbes Ophiusiaque arva parabat deserere alma Venus. “sed quid loca grata, quid urbes 230 peccavere meae? quod” dixit “crimen in illis?
exilio poenam potius gens impia pendat vel nece vel siquid medium est mortisque fugaeque.
idque quid esse potest, nisi versae poena figurae?”
dum dubitat, quo mutet eos, ad cornua vultum 235 flexit et admonita est haec illis posse relinqui grandiaque in torvos transformat membra iuvencos.

‘Sunt tamen obscenae Venerem Propoetides ausae esse negare deam; pro quo sua numinis ira corpora cum fama primae vulgasse feruntur, 240 utque pudor cessit, sanguisque induruit oris, in rigidum parvo silicem discrimine versae.

‘Quas quia Pygmalion aevum per crimen agentis viderat, offensus vitiiis, quae plurima menti femineae natura dedit, sine coniuge caelebs 245 vivebat thalamique diu consorte carebat.
interea niveum mira feliciter arte sculpsit ebur formamque dedit, qua femina nasci nulla potest, operisque sui concepit amorem.

virginis est verae facies, quam vivere credas, 250 et, si non obstet reverentia, velle moveri:
ars adeo latet arte sua. miratur et haurit pectore Pygmalion simulati corporis ignes.
saepe manus operi temptantes admovet, an sit corpus an illud ebur, nec adhuc ebur esse fatetur. 255 oscula dat reddique putat loquiturque tenetque et credit tactis digitos insidere membris et metuit, pressos veniat ne livor in artus, et modo blanditias adhibet, modo grata puellis munera fert illi conchas teretesque lapillos 260 et parvas volucres et flores mille colorum liliaque pictasque pilas et ab arbore lapsas Heliadum lacrimas; ornat quoque vestibus artus, dat digitis gemmas, dat longa monilia collo, aure leves baccae, redimicula pectore pendent: 265 cuncta decent; nec nuda minus formosa videtur.
conlocat hanc stratis concha Sidonide tinctis adpellatque tori sociam adclinataque colla mollibus in plumis, tamquam sensura, reponit.

'Festa dies Veneris tota celeberrima Cypro 270 venerat, et pandis inductae cornibus aurum concliderant ictae nivea cervice iuvencae, turaque fumabant, cum munere functus ad aras constitit et timide "si, di, dare cuncta potestis, sit coniunx, opto," non ausus "eburnea virgo" 275 dicere, Pygmalion "similis mea" dixit "eburnae."
sensit, ut ipsa suis aderat Venus aurea festis, vota quid illa velint et, amici numinis omen, flamma ter accensa est apicemque per aera duxit.
ut rediit, simulacra suae petit ille puellae 280 incumbensque toro dedit oscula: visa tepere est;
admovet os iterum, manibus quoque pectora temptat:
temptatum mollescit ebur positoque rigore subsidit digitis ceditque, ut Hymettia sole cera remollescit tractataque pollice multas 285 flectitur in facies ipsoque fit utilis usu.

dum stupet et dubie gaudet fallique veretur, rursus amans rursusque manu sua vota retractat.
corpus erat! saliunt temptatae pollice venae.
tum vero Paphius plenissima concipit heros 290 verba, quibus Veneri grates agat, oraque tandem ore suo non falsa premit, dataque oscula virgo sensit et erubuit timidumque ad lumina lumen attollens pariter cum caelo vidit amantem.
coniugio, quod fecit, adest dea, iamque coactis 295 cornibus in plenum noviens lunaribus orbem illa Paphon genuit, de qua tenet insula nomen.

‘Editus hac ille est, qui si sine prole fuisset, inter felices Cinyras potuisset haberi.
dira canam; procul hinc natae, procul este parente 300 aut, mea si vestras mulcebunt carmina mentes, desit in hac mihi parte fides, nec credite factum, vel, si credetis, facti quoque credite poenam.
si tamen admissum sinit hoc natura videri, [gentibus Ismariis et nostro gratulor orbi,] 305 gratulor huic terrae, quod abest regionibus illis, quae tantum genuere nefas: sit dives amomo cinnamaque costumque suum sudataque ligno tura ferat floresque alios Panchaia tellus, dum ferat et murram: tanti nova non fuit arbor. 310
ipse negat nocuisse tibi sua tela Cupido, Myrrha, facesque suas a crimine vindicat isto;
stipite te Stygio tumidisque adflavit echidnis
e tribus una soror: scelus est odisse parentem, hic amor est odio maius scelus. — undique lecti 315 te cupiunt proceres, totoque Oriente iuventus ad thalami certamen adest: ex omnibus unum elige, Myrrha, virum, dum ne sit in omnibus unus.
illa quidem sentit foedoque repugnat amori et secum “quo mente feror? quid molior?” inquit 320 “di, precor, et pietas sacrataque iura parentum, hoc prohibete nefas scelerique resistite nostro, si tamen hoc scelus est. sed enim damnare negatur hanc Venerem pietas: coeunt animalia nullo cetera dilectu, nec habetur turpe iuvencae 325 ferre patrem tergo, fit equo sua filia coniunx, quasque creavit init pecudes caper, ipsaque, cuius semine concepta est, ex illo concipit ales.

felices, quibus ista licent! humana malignas cura dedit leges, et quod natura remittit, 330 invida iura negant. gentes tamen esse feruntur, in quibus et nato genetrix et nata parenti iungitur, et pietas geminato crescit amore.
me miseram, quod non nasci mihi contigit illic, fortunaque loci laedor! — quid in ista revolvor? 335 spes interdictae, discedite! dignus amari ille, sed ut pater, est. — ergo, si filia magni non essem Cinyrae, Cinyrae concumbere possem:
nunc, quia iam meus est, non est meus, ipsaque damno est mihi proximitas: aliena potentior essem. 340 ire libet procul hinc patriaeque relinquere fines, dum scelus effugiam; retinet malus ardor euntem, ut praesens spectem Cinyran tangamque loquarque osculaue admoveam, si nil conceditur ultra.
ultra autem spectare aliquid potes, in pia virgo? 345 et quot confundas et iura et nomina, sentis?
tune eris et matris paelex et adultera patris?
tune soror nati genetrixque vocabere fratris?
nec metues atro crinitas angue sorores, quas facibus saevis oculos atque ora petentes 350 noxia corda vident? at tu, dum corpore non es passa nefas, animo ne concipe neve potentis concubitu vetito naturae pollue foedus!
velle puta: res ipsa vetat; pius ille memorque est moris — et o vellem similis furor esset in illo!” 355

'Dixerat, at Cinyras, quem copia digna procorum, quid faciat, dubitare facit, scitatur ab ipsa, nominibus dictis, cuius velit esse mariti;
illa silet primo patriisque in vultibus haerens aestuat et tepido suffundit lumina rore. 360 virginei Cinyras haec credens esse timoris, flere vetat siccatque genas atque oscula iungit; Myrrha datis nimium gaudet consultaque, qualem optet habere virum, "similem tibi" dixit; at ille non intellectam vocem conlaudat et "esto 365 tam pia semper" ait. pietatis nomine dicto demisit vultus sceleris sibi conscia virgo.

'Noctis erat medium, curasque et corpora somnus solverat; at virgo Cinyreia pervigil igni carpitur indomito furiosaque vota retractat 370 et modo desperat, modo vult temptare, pudetque et cupit, et, quid agat, non invenit, utque securi saucia trabs ingens, ubi plaga novissima restat, quo cadat, in dubio est omnique a parte timetur, sic animus vario labefactus vulnere nutat 375 huc levis atque illuc momentaque sumit utroque, nec modus et requies, nisi mors, reperitur amoris.
mors placet. erigitur laqueoque innectere fauces destinat et zona summo de poste revincta "care, vale, Cinyra, causamque intellege mortis!" 380 dixit et aptabat pallenti vincula collo.

'Murmura verborum fidas nutricis ad aures pervenisse ferunt limen servantis alumnae.
surgit anus reseratque fores mortisque paratae instrumenta videns spatio conclamat eodem 385 seque ferit scinditque sinus ereptaque collo vincula dilaniat; tum denique flere vacavit, tum dare complexus laqueique requirere causam.
muta silet virgo terramque inmota tuetur et deprensa dolet tardae conamina mortis. 390 instat anus canosque suos et inania nudans

ubera per cunas alimentaque prima precatur, ut sibi committat, quicquid dolet. illa rogantem aversata gemit; certa est exquirere nutrix nec solam spondere fidem. "dic" inquit "opemque 395 me sine ferre tibi: non est mea pigra senectus.
seu furor est, habeo, quae carmine sanet et herbis;
sive aliquis nocuit, magico lustrabere ritu;
ira deum sive est, sacris placabilis ira.
quid rear ulterius? certe fortuna domusque 400 sospes et in cursu est: vivunt genetrixque paterque." Myrrha patre audito suspiria duxit ab imo pectore; nec nutrix etiamnum concipit ullum mente nefas aliquemque tamen praesentit amorem; propositique tenax, quodcumque est, orat, ut ipsi 405 indicet, et gremio lacrimantem tollit anili atque ita conplectens infirmis membra lacertis
"sensimus," inquit "amas! et in hoc mea (pone timorem) sedulitas erit apta tibi, nec sentiet umquam hoc pater." exiit gremio furibunda torumque 410 ore premens "discede, precor, miseroque pudori parce!" ait; instanti "discede, aut desine" dixit
"quaerere, quid doleam! scelus est, quod scire laboras."
horret anus tremulasque manus annisque metuque tendit et ante pedes supplex procumbit alumnae 415 et modo blanditur, modo, si non conscia fiat, terret et indicium laquei coeptaeque minatur mortis et officium commisso spondet amori.
extulit illa caput lacrimisque inplevit obortis pectora nutricis conataque saepe fateri 420 saepe tenet vocem pudibundaque vestibus ora textit et "o" dixit "felicem coniuge matrem!"
hactenus, et gemuit. gelidus nutricis in artus ossaque (sensit enim) penetrat tremor, albaque toto vertice canities rigidis stetit hirta capillis, 425 multaque, ut excuteret diros, si posset, amores, addidit. at virgo scit se non falsa moneri;

certa mori tamen est, si non potiat amorē.

“vive,” ait haec, “potiere tuo” — et, non ausa “parente” dicere, conticuit promissaque numine firmat. 430

‘Festa piae Cereris celebrabant annua matres illa, quibus nivea velatae corpora veste primitias frugum dant spicea sarta suarum perque novem noctes venerem tactusque viriles in vetitis numerant: turba Cenchreis in illa 435

regis adest coniunx arcanaque sacra frequentat.
ergo legitima vacuus dum coniuge lectus, nacta gravem vino Cinyran male sedula nutrix, nomine mentito veros exponit amores et faciem laudat; quaesitis virginis annis 440

“par” ait “est Myrrhae.” quam postquam adducere iussa est utque domum rediit, “gaude, mea” dixit “alumna:

vicimus!” infelix non toto pectore sentit laetitiam virgo, praesagaque pectora maerent, sed tamen et gaudet: tanta est discordia mentis. 445

‘Tempus erat, quo cuncta silent, interque triones flexerat obliquo plastrum temone Bootes:

ad facinus venit illa suum; fugit aurea caelo luna, tegunt nigrae latitantia sidera nubes;

nox caret igne suo; primus tegis, Icare, vultus, 450

Erigoneque pio sacrata parentis amore.

ter pedis offensi signo est revocata, ter omen funereus bubo letali carmine fecit:

it tamen, et tenebrae minuunt noxque atra pudorem;

nutricisque manum laeva tenet, altera motu 455

caecum iter explorat. thalami iam limina tangit, iamque fores aperit, iam ducitur intus: at illi poplite succiduo genua intremuere, fugitque et color et sanguis, animusque relinquit euntem.

quoque suo propior sceleri est, magis horret, et ausi 460

paenitet, et vellet non cognita posse reverti.

cunctantem longaeva manu deducit et alto admotam lecto cum traderet “accipe,” dixit, “ista tua est, Cinyra” devotaque corpora iunxit.

accipit obsceno genitor sua viscera lecto 465 virgineosque metus levat hortaturque timentem.
forsitan aetatis quoque nomine “filia” dixit, dixit et illa “pater,” sceleri ne nomina desint.

‘Plena patris thalamis excedit et in pia diro semina fert utero conceptaque crimina portat. 470 postera nox facinus geminat, nec finis in illa est, cum tandem Cinyras, avidus cognoscere amantem post tot concubitus, inlato lumine vidit et scelus et natam verbisque dolore retentis pendenti nitidum vagina deripit ensem; 475 Myrrha fugit: tenebrisque et caecae munere noctis intercepta neci est latosque vagata per agros palmiferos Arabas Panchaeaque rura relinquit perque novem erravit redeuntis cornua lunae, cum tandem terra requievit fessa Sabaea; 480 vixque uteri portabat onus. tum nescia voti atque inter mortisque metus et taedia vitae est tales complexa preces: “o si qua patetis numina confessis, merui nec triste recuso supplicium, sed ne violem vivosque superstes 485 mortuaque extinctos, ambobus pellite regnis mutataeque mihi vitamque necemque negate!”
numen confessis aliquod patet: ultima certe vota suos habuere deos. nam crura loquentis terra supervenit, ruptosque obliqua per ungues 490 porrigitur radix, longi firmamina trunci, ossaque robur agunt, mediaque manente medulla sanguis it in sucos, in magnos bracchia ramos, in parvos digiti, duratur cortice pellis.
iamque gravem crescens uterum perstrinxerat arbor 495 pectoraque obruerat collumque operire parabat:
non tulit illa moram venientique obvia ligno subsedit mersitque suos in cortice vultus.
quae quamquam amisit veteres cum corpore sensus, flet tamen, et tepidae manant ex arbore guttae. 500 est honor et lacrimis, stillataque cortice murra nomen erile tenet nulloque tacebitur aevo.

'At male conceptus sub robore creverat infans quaerebatque viam, qua se genetrice relicta exsereret; media gravidus tumet arbore venter. 505 tendit onus matrem; neque habent sua verba dolores, nec Lucina potest parientis voce vocari.

nitenti tamen est similis curvataque crebros dat gemitus arbor lacrimisque cadentibus umet.
constitit ad ramos mitis Lucina dolentes 510 admovitque manus et verba puerpera dixit:
arbor agit rimas et fissa cortice vivum reddit onus, vagitque puer; quem mollibus herbis naides inpositum lacrimis unxere parentis.
laudaret faciem Livor quoque; qualia namque 515 corpora nudorum tabula pinguntur Amorum, talis erat, sed, ne faciat discrimina cultus, aut huic adde leves, aut illis deme pharetras.

'Labitur occulte fallitque volatilis aetas, et nihil est annis velocius: ille sorore 520
natus avoque suo, qui conditus arbore nuper, nuper erat genitus, modo formosissimus infans,
iam iuvenis, iam vir, iam se formosior ipso est,
iam placet et Veneri matrisque ulciscitur ignes.
namque pharetratus dum dat puer oscula matri, 525 inscius exstanti destrinxit harundine pectus;
laesa manu natum dea reppulit: altius actum vulnus erat specie primoque fefellerat ipsam.
capta viri forma non iam Cythereia curat litora, non alto repetit Paphon aequore cinctam 530 piscosamque Cnidon gravidamve Amathunta metallis; abstinet et caelo: caelo praefertur Adonis.
hunc tenet, huic comes est adsuetaque semper in umbra indulgere sibi formamque augere colendo per iuga, per silvas dumosaque saxa vagatur 535 fine genus vestem ritu succincta Dianae hortaturque canes tutaeque animalia praedae, aut pronos lepores aut celsum in cornua cervum aut agitat dammas; a fortibus abstinet apris raptosque lupos armatosque unguibus ursos 540 vitat et armenti saturatos caede leones.

te quoque, ut hos timeas, siquid prodesse monendo possit, Adoni, monet, "fortis" que "fugacibus esto" inquit; "in audaces non est audacia tuta.
parce meo, iuvenis, temerarius esse periclo, 545 neve feras, quibus arma dedit natura, lacesse, stet mihi ne magno tua gloria. non movet aetas nec facies nec quae Venerem movere, leones saetigerosque sues oculosque animosque ferarum.
fulmen habent acres in aduncis dentibus apri, 550 impetus est fulvis et vasta leonibus ira, invisumque mihi genus est." quae causa, roganti
"dicam," ait "et veteris monstrum mirabere culpae.
sed labor insolitus iam me lassavit, et, ecce, opportuna sua blanditur populus umbra, 555 datque torum caespes: libet hac requiescere tecum" (et requievit) "humo" pressitque et gramen et ipsum inque sinu iuvenis posita cervice reclinis sic ait ac mediis interserit oscula verbis:
"Forsitan audieris aliquam certamine cursus 560 veloces superasse viros: non fabula rumor ille fuit; superabat enim. nec dicere posses, laude pedum formaene bono praestantior esset.
scitanti deus huic de coniuge 'coniuge' dixit
'nil opus est, Atalanta, tibi: fuge coniugis usum. 565 nec tamen effugies teque ipsa viva carebis.'
territa sorte dei per opacas innuba silvas vivit et instantem turbam violenta procorum condicione fugat, 'ne' c 'sum potiunda, nisi' inquit
'victa prius cursu. pedibus contendite mecum: 570 praemia veloci coniunx thalamique dabuntur, mors pretium tardis: ea lex certaminis esto.’

illa quidem inmitis, sed (tanta potentia formae est)
venit ad hanc legem temeraria turba procorum.
sederat Hippomenes cursus spectator iniqui 575 et ‘petitur cuiquam per tanta pericula coniunx?’
dixerat ac nimios iuvenum damnarat amores;
ut faciem et posito corpus velamine vidit, quale meum, vel quale tuum, si femina fias, obstipuit tollensque manus ‘ignoscite,’ dixit 580 ‘quos modo culpavi! nondum mihi praemia nota, quae peteretis, erant.’ laudando concipit ignes et, ne quis iuvenum currat velocius, optat invidiaque timet. ‘sed cur certaminis huius intemptata mihi fortuna relinquatur?’ inquit 585 ‘audentes deus ipse iuvat!’ dum talia secum exigit Hippomenes, passu volat alite virgo.
quae quamquam Scythica non setius ire sagitta Aonio visa est iuveni, tamen ille decorem miratur magis: et cursus facit ipse decorem. 590 aura refert ablata citis talaria plantis, tergaque iactantur crines per eburnea, quaeque poplitibus suberant picto genualia limbo; inque puellari corpus candore ruborem traxerat, haud aliter, quam cum super atria velum 595 candida purpureum simulatas inficit umbras.
dum notat haec hospes, decursa novissima meta est, et tegitur festa victrix Atalanta corona.
dant gemitum victi penduntque ex foedere poenas.

“Non tamen eventu iuvenis deterritus horum 600 constitit in medio vultuque in virgine fixo ‘quid facilem titulum superando quaeris inertes?
mecum confer’ ait. ‘seu me fortuna potentem fecerit, a tanto non indignabere vinci:
namque mihi genitor Megareus Onchestius, illi 605 est Neptunus avus, pronepos ego regis aquarum, nec virtus citra genus est; seu vincar, habebis

Hippomene victo magnum et memorabile nomen.
taliam dicentem molli Schoeneia vultu aspicit et dubitat, superari an vincere malit, 610 atque ita 'quis deus hunc formosis' inquit 'iniquus perdere vult caraque iubet discrimine vitae coniugium petere hoc? non sum, me iudice, tanti.
nec forma tangor, (poteram tamen hac quoque tangi) sed quod adhuc puer est; non me movet ipse, sed aetas.
615

quid, quod inest virtus et mens interrita leti?
quid, quod ab aequorea numeratur origine quartus?
quid, quod amat tantique putat conubia nostra, ut pereat, si me fors illi dura negarit?
dum licet, hospes, abi thalamosque relinque cruentos. 620 coniugium crudele meum est, tibi nubere nulla nolet, et optari potes a sapiente puella. — cur tamen est mihi cura tui tot iam ante peremptis?
viderit! intereat, quoniam tot caede procorum admonitus non est agiturque in taedia vitae. — 625 occidet hic igitur, voluit quia vivere mecum, indignamque necem pretium patietur amoris?
non erit invidiae victoria nostra ferendae.
sed non culpa mea est! utinam desistere velles, aut, quoniam es demens, utinam velocior esses! 630
at quam virgineus puerili vultus in ore est!
a! miser Hippomene, nollem tibi visa fuissem!
vivere dignus eras. quodsi felicius essem, nec mihi coniugium fata inportuna negarent, unus eras, cum quo sociare cubilia vellem.' 635 dixerat, utque rudis primoque cupidine tacta, quod facit, ignorans amat et non sentit amorem.

“Iam solitos poscunt cursus populusque paterque, cum me sollicita proles Neptunia voce invocat Hippomenes 'Cytherea,' que 'conprecor, ausis 640 adsit' ait 'nostris et quos dedit, adiuvet ignes.'
detulit aura preces ad me non invida blandas:

motaque sum, fateor, nec opis mora longa dabatur.
est ager, indigenae Tamasenum nomine dicunt, telluris Cypriae pars optima, quem mihi prisca 645 sacravere senes templisque accedere dotem hanc iussere meis; medio nitet arbor in arvo, fulva comas, fulvo ramis crepitantibus auro:
hinc tria forte mea veniens decerpta ferebam aurea poma manu nullique videnda nisi ipsi 650 Hippomenen adii docuique, quis usus in illis.
signa tubae dederant, cum carcere pronus uterque emicat et summam celeri pede libat harenam:
posse putes illos sicco freta radere passu et segetis canae stantes percurrere aristas. 655 adiciunt animos iuveni clamorque favorque verbaque dicentum 'nunc, nunc incumbere tempus!
Hippomene, propera! nunc viribus utere totis!
pelle moram: vinces!' dubium, Megareius heros gaudeat an virgo magis his Schoeneia dictis. 660 o quotiens, cum iam posset transire, morata est spectatosque diu vultus invita reliquit!
aridus e lasso veniebat anhelitus ore, metaque erat longe: tum denique de tribus unum fetibus arboreis proles Neptunia misit. 665 obstipuit virgo nitidique cupidine pomi declinat cursus aurumque volubile tollit; praeterit Hippomenes: resonant spectacula plausu.
illa moram celeri cessataque tempora cursu corrigit atque iterum iuvenem post terga relinquit: 670 et rursus pomi iactu remorata secundi consequitur transitque virum. pars ultima cursus restabat; 'nunc' inquit 'ades, dea muneris auctor!'
inque latus campi, quo tardius illa rediret, iecit ab obliquo nitidum iuvenaliter aurum. 675 an peteret, virgo visa est dubitare: coegi tollere et adieci sublato pondera malo inpediique oneris pariter gravitate moraque, neve meus sermo cursu sit tardior ipso, praeterita est virgo: duxit sua praemia victor. 680

“Dignane, cui grates ageret, cui turis honorem ferret, Adoni, fui? nec grates inmemor egit, nec mihi tura dedit. subitam convertor in iram, contemptuque dolens, ne sim spernenda futuris, exemplo caveo meque ipsa exhortor in ambos: 685 templa, deum Matri quae quondam clarus Echion fecerat ex voto, nemorosis abdita silvis, transibant, et iter longum requiescere suasit;
illic concubitus intempestiva cupido occupat Hippomenen a numine concita nostro. 690 luminis exigui fuerat prope templa recessus, speluncae similis, nativo pumice tectus, religione sacer prisca, quo multa sacerdos lignea contulerat veterum simulacra deorum; hunc inquit et vetito temerat sacraria probro. 695 sacra retorserunt oculos, turritaque Mater an Stygia sontes dubitavit mergeret unda:
poena levis visa est; ergo modo levia fulvae colla iubae velant, digiti curvantur in ungues, ex umeris armi fiunt, in pectora totum 700
pondus abit, summae cauda verruntur harenae;
iram vultus habet, pro verbis murmura reddunt, pro thalamis celebrant silvas aliisque timendi dente premunt domito Cybeleia frena leones.
hos tu, care mihi, cumque his genus omne ferarum, 705 quod non terga fugae, sed pugnae pectora praebet, effuge, ne virtus tua sit damnosa duobus!”

‘Illa quidem monuit iunctisque per aera cynnis carpit iter, sed stat monitis contraria virtus.
forte suem latebris vestigia certa secuti 710 excivere canes, silvisque exire parantem fixerat obliquo iuvenis Cinyreius ictu:
protinus excussit pando venabula rostro sanguine tincta suo trepidumque et tuta petentem trux aper insequitur totosque sub inguine dentes 715 abdidit et fulva moribundum stravit harena.

vecta levi curru medias Cytherea per auras Cypron olorinis nondum pervenerat alis:
agnovit longe gemitum morientis et albas flexit aves illuc, utque aethere vidit ab alto 720 exanimem inque suo iactantem sanguine corpus, desiluit pariterque sinum pariterque capillos rupit et indignis percussit pectora palmis questaque cum fati "at non tamen omnia vestri iuris erunt" dixit. "luctus monimenta manebunt 725 semper, Adoni, mei, repetitaque mortis imago annua plangoris peraget simulamina nostri;
at cruor in florem mutabitur. an tibi quondam femineos artus in olentes vertere mentas, Persephone, licuit: nobis Cinyreius heros 730 invidiae mutatus erit?" sic fata cruorem nectare odorato sparsit, qui tinctus ab illo intumuit sic, ut fulvo perlucida caeno surgere bulla solet, nec plena longior hora facta mora est, cum flos de sanguine concolor ortus, 735 qualem, quae lento celant sub cortice granum, punica ferre solent; brevis est tamen usus in illo;
namque male haerentem et nimia levitate caducum excutiunt idem, qui praestant nomina, venti.'

LIBER VNDECIMVS

Carmine dum tali silvas animosque ferarum Threicius vates et saxa sequentia ducit, ecce nurus Ciconum tectae lymphata ferinis pectora velleribus tumuli de vertice cernunt Orphea percussis sociantem carmina nervis. 5
e quibus una leves iactato crine per auras,
'en,' ait 'en, hic est nostri contemptor!' et hastam vatis Apollinei vocalia misit in ora, quae foliis praesuta notam sine vulnere fecit;
alterius telum lapis est, qui missus in ipso 10 aere concentu victus vocisque lyraeque est ac veluti supplex pro tam furialibus ausis ante pedes iacuit. sed enim temeraria crescunt bella modusque abiit insanaque regnat Erinys; cunctaque tela forent cantu mollita, sed ingens 15 clamor et infracto Berecynthia tibia cornu tympanaque et plausus et Bacchei ululatus obstrepere sono citharae, tum denique saxa non exauditi rubuerunt sanguine vatis.
ac primum attonitas etiamnum voce canentis 20 innumeras volucres anguesque agmenque ferarum maenades Orphei titulum rapuere triumphii; inde cruentatis vertuntur in Orphea dextris et coeunt ut aves, si quando luce vagantem noctis avem cernunt, structoque utrimque theatro 25 ceu matutina cervus periturus harena praeda canum est, vatemque petunt et fronde virentes coniciunt thyrsos non haec in munera factos.
hae glaebas, illae direptos arbore ramos, pars torquent silices; neu desint tela furori, 30 forte boves presso subigebant vomere terram, nec procul hinc multo fructum sudore parantes dura lacertosi fodiebant arva coloni, agmine qui viso fugiunt operisque relinquunt arma sui, vacuosque iacent dispersa per agros 35 sarculaque rastrique graves longique ligones;

quae postquam rapuere ferae cornuque minaces divulsere boves, ad vatis fata recurrunt tendentemque manus et in illo tempore primum inrita dicentem nec quicquam voce moventem 40 sacrilegae perimunt, perque os, pro Iuppiter! illud auditum saxi intellectumque ferarum sensibus in ventos anima exhalata recessit.

Te maestae volucres, Orpheu, te turba ferarum, te rigidi silices, te carmina saepe secutae 45 fleverunt silvae, positis te frondibus arbor tonsa comas luxit; lacrimis quoque flumina dicunt increvisse suis, obstrusaque carbasa pullo naides et dryades passosque habuere capillos.
membra iacent diversa locis, caput, Hebre, Iyramque 50 excipis: et (mirum!) medio dum labitur amne, flebile nescio quid queritur Iyra, flebile lingua murmurat exanimis, respondent flebile ripae.
iamque mare invectae flumen populare relinquunt et Methymnaeae potiuntur litore Lesbi: 55 hic ferus expositum peregrinis anguis harenis os petit et sparsos stillanti rore capillos.
tandem Phoebus adest morsusque inferre parantem arcet et in lapidem rictus serpentis apertos congelat et patulos, ut erant, indurat hiatus. 60

Umbra subit terras, et quae loca viderat ante, cuncta recognoscit quaerensque per arva piorum invenit Eurydicen cupidisque amplectitur ulnis;
hic modo coniunctis spatiantur passibus ambo, nunc praecedentem sequitur, nunc praevious anteit 65
Eurydicenque suam iam tuto respicit Orpheus.

Non inpune tamen scelus hoc sinit esse Lyaeus amissoque dolens sacrorum vate suorum protinus in silvis matres Edonidas omnes, quae videre nefas, torta radice ligavit; 70

quippe pedum digitos via, quam tum est quaeque secuta, traxit et in solidam detrusit acumina terram, utque suum laqueis, quos callidus abdidit auceps, crus ubi commisit volucris sensitque teneri, plangitur ac trepidans adstringit vincula motu: 75 sic, ut quaeque solo defixa cohaeserat harum, exsternata fugam frustra temptabat, at illam lenta tenet radix exsultantemque coercet, dumque ubi sint digiti, dum pes ubi, quaerit, et ungues, aspicit in teretes lignum succedere suras 80 et conata femur maerenti plangere dextra robora percussit, pectus quoque robora fiunt, robora sunt umeri; nodosaque bracchia veros esse putes ramos, et non fallare putando.

Nec satis hoc Baccho est, ipsos quoque deserit agros 85
cumque choro meliore sui vineta Timoli Pactolonque petit, quamvis non aureus illo tempore nec caris erat invidiosus harenis.
hunc adsueta cohors, satyri bacchaeque, frequentant, at Silenus abest: titubantem annisque meroque 90 ruricolae cepere Phryges vinctumque coronis ad regem duxere Midan, cui Thracius Orpheus orgia tradiderat cum Cecropio Eumolpo.
qui simul agnovit socium comitemque sacrorum, hospitis adventu festum genialiter egit 95 per bis quinque dies et iunctas ordine noctes, et iam stellarum sublime coegerat agmen Lucifer undecimus, Lydos cum laetus in agros rex venit et iuveni Silenum reddit alumno.

Huic deus optandi gratum, sed inutile, fecit 100
muneris arbitrium gaudens altore recepto.
ille male usus donis ait 'effice, quicquid corpore contigero, fulvum vertatur in aurum.'

adnuit optatis nocituraque munera solvit Liber et indoluit, quod non meliora petisset. 105 laetus abit gaudetque malo Berecyntius heros pollicitique fidem tangendo singula temptat vixque sibi credens, non alta fronde virentem ilice detraxit virgam: virga aurea facta est; tollit humo saxum: saxum quoque palluit auro; 110 contigit et glaebam: contactu glaeba potenti massa fit; arentis Cereris decerpsit aristas:
aurea messis erat; demptum tenet arbore pomum: Hesperidas donasse putes; si postibus altis admovit digitos, postes radiare videntur; 115 ille etiam liquidis palmas ubi laverat undis, unda fluens palmis Danaen eludere posset;
vix spes ipse suas animo capit aurea fingens omnia. gaudenti mensas posuere ministri exstructas dapibus nec tostae frugis egentes: 120 tum vero, sive ille sua Cerealia dextra munera contigerat, Cerealia dona rigebant, sive dapes avido convellere dente parabat, lammina fulva dapes admoto dente premebat;
miscuerat puris auctorem muneris undis: 125
fusile per rictus aurum fluitare videres.

Attonitus novitate mali divesque miserque effugere optat opes et quae modo voverat, odit.
copia nulla famem relevat; sitis arida guttur urit, et invisio meritis torquetur ab auro 130 ad caelumque manus et splendida bracchia tollens
'da veniam, Lenae pater! peccavimus' inquit,
'sed miserere, precor, speciosoque eripe damno!'
mite deum numen: Bacchus peccasse fatentem restituit pactique fide data munera solvit 135
'ne' ve 'male optato maneat circumlitus auro, vade' ait 'ad magnis vicinum Sardibus amnem perque iugum nitens labentibus obvius undis carpe viam, donec venias ad fluminis ortus, spumigeroque tuum fonti, qua plurimus exit, 140 subde caput corpusque simul, simul elue crimen.'

rex iussae succedit aquae: vis aurea tinxit flumen et humano de corpore cessit in amnem;
nunc quoque iam veteris percepto semine venae arva rigent auro madidis pallentia glaebis. 145

Ille perosus opes silvas et rura colebat Panaque montanis habitantem semper in antris, pingue sed ingenium mansit, nocituraque, ut ante, rursus erant domino stultae praecordia mentis.
nam freta prospiciens late riget arduus alto 150
Tmolus in ascensu clivoque extensus utroque Sardibus hinc, illinc parvis finitur Hypaepis.
Pan ibi dum teneris iactat sua sibila nymphis et leve cerata modulatur harundine carmen ausus Apollineos prae se contemnere cantus, 155 iudice sub Tmolo certamen venit ad inpar.

Monte suo senior iudex consedit et aures liberat arboribus: quercu coma caerulea tantum cingitur, et pendent circum cava tempora glandes.
isque deum pecoris spectans 'in iudice' dixit 160
'nulla mora est.' calamis agrestibus insonat ille barbaricoque Midan (aderat nam forte canenti) carmine delenit; post hunc sacer ora retorsit Tmolus ad os Phoebi: vultum sua silva secuta est.
ille caput flavum lauro Parnaside vinctus 165 verrit humum Tyrio saturata murice palla instructamque fidem gemmis et dentibus Indis sustinet a laeva, tenuit manus altera plectrum; artificis status ipse fuit. tum stamina docto pollice sollicitat, quorum dulcedine captus 170
Pana iubet Tmolus citharae submittere cannas.

Iudicium sanctique placet sententia montis omnibus, arguitur tamen atque iniusta vocatur unius sermone Midae; nec Delius aures humanam stolidas patitur retinere figuram, 175

sed trahit in spatium villisque albentibus inplet instabilesque imas facit et dat posse moveri:
cetera sunt hominis, partem damnatur in unam induiturque aures lente gradientis aselli.
ille quidem celare cupit turpique pudore 180 tempora purpureis temptat relevare tiaris;
sed solitus longos ferro resecare capillos viderat hoc famulus, qui cum nec prodere visum dedecus auderet, cupiens efferre sub auras, nec posset reticere tamen, secedit humumque 185 effodit et, domini quales adspexerit aures, voce refert parva terraeque inmurmurat haustae indiciumque suae vocis tellure regesta obruit et scrobibus tacitus discedit opertis.
creber harundinibus tremulis ibi surgere lucus 190 coepit et, ut primum pleno maturuit anno, prodidit agricolam: leni nam motus ab austro obruta verba refert dominique coarguit aures.

Ultus abit Tmolo liquidumque per aera vectus angustum citra pontum Nepheleidos Helles 195 Laomedonteis Latoius adstitit arvis.
dextera Sigei, Rhoetei laeva profundi ara Panomphaeo vetus est sacrata Tonanti:
inde novae primum moliri moenia Troiae Laomedonta videt susceptaque magna labore 200 crescere difficili nec opes exposcere parvas cumque tridentigero tumidi genitore profundi mortalem induitur formam Phrygiaeque tyranno aedificat muros pactus pro moenibus aurum.
stabat opus: pretium rex infitiatur et addit, 205 perfidiae cumulum, falsis periuria verbis.
'non inpune ferēs' rector maris inquit, et omnes inclinavit aquas ad avarae litora Troiae inque freti formam terras conplevit opesque abstulit agricolis et fluctibus obruit agros. 210 poena neque haec satis est: regis quoque filia monstro poscitur aequoreo, quam dura ad saxa revinctam vindicat Alcides promissaque munera dictos poscit equos tantique operis mercede negata bis periura capit superatae moenia Troiae. 215 nec, pars militiae, Telamon sine honore recessit Hesioneque data potitur. nam coniuge Peleus clarus erat diva nec avi magis ille superbus nomine quam soceri, siquidem Iovis esse nepoti contigit haut uni, coniunx dea contigit uni. 220

Namque senex Thetidi Proteus 'dea' dixerat 'undae, concipe: mater eris iuvenis, qui fortibus annis acta patris vincet maiorque vocabitur illo.'
ergo, ne quicquam mundus Iove maius haberet, quamvis haut tepidos sub pectore senserat ignes, 225 Iuppiter aequoreae Thetidis conubia fugit, in suaque Aeaciden succedere vota nepotem iussit et amplexus in virginis ire marinae.

Est sinus Haemoniae curvos falcatus in arcus, bracchia procurrunt: ubi, si foret altior unda, 230 portus erat; summis inductum est aequor harenis; litus habet solidum, quod nec vestigia servet nec remoretur iter nec opertum pendeat alga;
myrtea silva subest bicoloribus obsita bacis.
est specus in medio, natura factus an arte, 235 ambiguum, magis arte tamen: quo saepe venire frenato delphine sedens, Theti, nuda solebas.
illic te Peleus, ut somno vincta iacebas, occupat, et quoniam precibus temptata repugnas, vim parat, innectens ambobus colla lacertis; 240 quod nisi venisses variatis saepe figuris ad solitas artes, auso foret ille potitus;
sed modo tu volucris: volucrem tamen ille tenebat;
nunc gravis arbor eras: haerebat in arbore Peleus;
tertia forma fuit maculosae tigridis: illa 245
territus Aeacides a corpore bracchia solvit.
inde deos pelagi vino super aequora fuso et pecoris fibris et fumo turis adorat, donec Carpathius medio de gurgite vates

'Aeacide,' dixit 'thalamis potiere petitis, 250 tu modo, cum rigido sopita quiescet in antro, ignaram laqueis vincloque innecte tenaci.
nec te decipiat centum mentita figuras, sed preme, quicquid erit, dum, quod fuit ante, reformat.'
dixerat haec Proteus et condidit aequore vultum 255 admisitque suos in verba novissima fluctus.

Pronus erat Titan inclinatoque tenebat
Hesperium temone fretum, cum pulchra relicto Nereis ingreditur consueta cubilia ponto; vix bene virgineos Peleus invaserat artus: 260 illa novat formas, donec sua membra teneri sentit et in partes diversas bracchia tendi.
tum denum ingemuit, 'ne' que ait 'sine numine vincis' exhibita estque Thetis: confessam amplectitur heros et potitur votis ingentique inplet Achille. 265

Felix et nato, felix et coniuge Peleus, et cui, si demas iugulati crimina Phoci, omnia contigerant: fraterno sanguine sontem expulsumque domo patria Trachinia tellus accipit. hic regnum sine vi, sine caede gerebat 270 Lucifero genitore satus patriumque nitorem ore ferens Ceyx, illo qui tempore maestus dissimilisque sui fratrem lugebat ademptum.
quo postquam Aeacides fessus curaque viaque venit et intravit paucis comitantibus urbem, 275 quosque greges pecorum, quae secum armenta trahebat, haut procul a muris sub opaca valle reliquit;
copia cum facta est adeundi prima tyranni, velamenta manu praetendens supplice, qui sit quoque satus, memorat, tantum sua crimina celat 280 mentiturque fugae causam; petit, urbe vel agro se iuvet. hunc contra placido Trachinius ore talibus adloquitur: 'mediae quoque commoda plebi nostra patent, Peleu, nec inhospita regna tenemus; adiciis huic animo momenta potentia, clarum 285 nomen avumque lovem; ne tempora perde precando!

quod petis, omne feres tuaque haec pro parte vocato, qualiacumque vides! utinam meliora videres!
et flebat: moveat tantos quae causa dolores, Peleusque comitesque rogant; quibus ille profatur: 290
'forsitan hanc volucrem, raptu quae vivit et omnes terret aves, semper pennas habuisse putetis:
vir fuit (et — tanta est animi constantia — iam tum acer erat belloque ferox ad vimque paratus) nomine Daedalion. illo genitore creatis, 295 qui vocat Auroram caeloque novissimus exit, culta mihi pax est, pacis mihi cura tenendae coniugiique fuit, fratri fera bella placebant:
illius virtus reges gentesque subegit, quae nunc Thisbaeas agitat mutata columbas. 300 nata erat huic Chione, quae dotatissima forma mille procos habuit, bis septem nubilis annis.
forte revertentes Phoebus Maiaque creatus, ille suis Delphis, hic vertice Cyllenaeo, videre hanc pariter, pariter traxere colorem. 305 spem veneris differt in tempora noctis Apollo;
non fert ille moras virgaque movente soporem virginis os tangit: tactu iacet illa potenti vimque dei patitur; nox caelum sparserat astris: Phoebus anum simulat praereptaque gaudia sumit. 310 ut sua maturus conplevit tempora venter, alipedis de stirpe dei versuta propago nascitur Autolycus furtum ingeniosus ad omne, candida de nigris et de candentibus atra qui facere adsuerat, patriae non degener artis; 315 nascitur e Phoebo (namque est enixa gemellos) carmine vocali clarus citharaque Philammon.
quid peperisse duos et dis placuisse duobus et forti genitore et progenitore nitenti esse satam prodest? an obest quoque gloria multis? 320 obfuit huic certe! quae se praeferre Dianae sustinuit faciemque deae culpavit, at illi ira ferox mota est “factis” que “placebimus” inquit.

nec mora, curvavit cornu nervoque sagittam inpulit et meritam traiecit harundine linguam. 325 lingua tacet, nec vox temptataque verba sequuntur, conantemque loqui cum sanguine vita reliquit;
quam miser amplexans ego tum patriumque dolorem corde tuli fratrique pio solacia dixi, quae pater haut aliter quam cautes murmura ponti 330 accipit et natam delamentatur ademptam;
ut vero ardentem vidit, quater impetus illi in medios fuit ire rogos, quater inde repulsus concita membra fugae mandat similisque iuvenco spicula crabronum pressa cervice gerenti, 335 qua via nulla, ruit. iam tum mihi currere visus plus homine est, alasque pedes sumpsisse putares.
effugit ergo omnes veloxque cupidine leti vertice Parnasi potitur; miseratus Apollo, cum se Daedalion saxo misisset ab alto, 340 fecit avem et subitis pendentem sustulit alis oraque adunca dedit, curvos dedit unguibus hamos, virtutem antiquam, maiores corpore vires, et nunc accipiter, nulli satis aequus, in omnes saevit aves aliisque dolens fit causa dolendi.’ 345

Quae dum Lucifero genitus miracula narrat de consorte suo, cursu festinus anhelato advolat armenti custos Phoceus Onetor et ‘Peleu, Peleu! magnae tibi nuntius adsum cladis’ ait. quodcumque ferat, iubet edere Peleus, 350 pendet et ipse metu trepidi Trachinius oris;
ille refert ‘fessos ad litora curva iuvencos adpuleram, medio cum Sol altissimus orbe tantum respiceret, quantum superesse videret, parsque boum fulvis genua inclinarat harenis 355

latarumque iacens campos spectabat aquarum, pars gradibus tardis illuc errabat et illuc;
nant alii celsoque exstant super aequora collo.
templa mari subsunt nec marmore clara neque auro, sed trabibus densis lucoque umbrosa vetusto: 360 Nereides Nereusque tenent (hos navita ponti edidit esse deos, dum retia litore siccat); iuncta palus huic est densis obsessa salictis, quam restagnantis fecit maris unda paludem:
inde fragore gravi strepitans loca proxima terret, 365 belua vasta, lupus iuncisque palustribus exit, oblitus et spumis et sparsus sanguine rictus fulmineos, rubra suffusus lumina flamma.
qui quamquam saevit pariter rabieque fameque, acrior est rabie: neque enim ieiunia curat 370 caede boum diramque famem finire, sed omne vulnerat armentum sternitque hostiliter omne.
pars quoque de nobis funesto saucia morsu, dum defensamus, leto est data; sanguine litus undaque prima rubet demugitaeque paludes. 375 sed mora damnosa est, nec res dubitare remittit:
dum superest aliquid, cuncti coeamus et arma, arma capessamus coniunctaque tela feramus!
dixerat agrestis: nec Pelea damna movebant, sed memor admissi Nereida conligit orbam 380
damna sua inferias extincto mittere Phoco.
induere arma viros violentaque sumere tela rex iubet Oetaeus; cum quis simul ipse parabat ire, sed Alcyone coniunx excita tumultu prosilit et nondum totos ornata capillos 385 disicit hos ipsos colloque infusa mariti, mittat ut auxilium sine se, verbisque precatur et lacrimis, animasque duas ut servet in una.
Aeacides illi: 'pulchros, regina, piosque pone metus! plena est promissi gratia vestri. 390 non placet arma mihi contra nova monstra moveri;

numen adorandum pelagi est!' erat ardua turris, arce focus summa, fessis nota grata carinis:
ascendunt illuc stratosque in litore tauros cum gemitu adspiciunt vastatoremque cruento 395 ore ferum, longos infectum sanguine villos.
inde manus tendens in aperti litora ponti caeruleam Peleus Psamathen, ut finiat iram, orat, opemque ferat; nec vocibus illa rogantis flectitur Aeacidae, Thetis hanc pro coniuge supplex 400 accepit veniam. sed enim revocatus ab acri caede lupus perstat, dulcedine sanguinis asper, donec inhaerentem lacerae cervice iuvencae marmore mutavit: corpus praeterque colorem omnia servavit, lapidis color indicat illum 405
iam non esse lupum, iam non debere timeri.
nec tamen hac profugum consistere Pelea terra fata sinunt, Magnetas adit vagus exul et illic sumit ab Haemonio purgamina caedis Acasto.

Interea fratrisque sui fratremque secutis 410
anxia prodigiis turbatus pectora Ceyx, consulat ut sacras, hominum oblectamina, sortes, ad Clarium parat ire deum; nam templa profanus invia cum Phlegyis faciebat Delphica Phorbas. consilii tamen ante sui, fidissima, certam 415 te facit, Alcyone; cui protinus intima frigus ossa receperunt, buxoque simillimus ora pallor obit, lacrimisque genae maduere profusis.
ter conata loqui, ter fletibus ora rigavit singultuque pias interrumpente querellas 420
'quae mea culpa tuam,' dixit 'carissime, mentem vertit? ubi est quae cura mei prior esse solebat?
iam potes Alcyone securus abesse relicta?
iam via longa placet? iam sum tibi carior absens?
at, puto, per terras iter est, tantumque dolebo, 425 non etiam metuam, curaeque timore carebunt.
aequora me terrent et ponti tristis imago:

et laceras nuper tabulas in litore vidi et saepe in tumultis sine corpore nomina legi.
neve tuum fallax animum fiducia tangat, 430 quod socer Hippotades tibi sit, qui carcere fortes contineat ventos, et, cum velit, aequora placet.
cum semel emissi tenuerunt aequora venti, nil illis vetitum est: incommendataque tellus omnis et omne fretum est, caeli quoque nubila vexant 435 excutiuntque feris rutilos concursibus ignes.
quo magis hos novi (nam novi et saepe paterna parva domo vidi), magis hoc reor esse timendos.
quod tua si flecti precibus sententia nullis, care, potest, coniunx, nimiumque es certus eundi, 440 me quoque tolle simul! certe iactabimur una, nec nisi quae patiar, metuam, pariterque feremus, quicquid erit, pariter super aequora lata feremur.'

Talibus Aeolidis dictis lacrimisque movetur sidereus coniunx: neque enim minor ignis in ipso est; 445 sed neque propositos pelagi dimittere cursus, nec vult Alcyonen in partem adhibere pericli multaque respondit timidum solantia pectus.
non tamen idcirco causam probat; addidit illis hoc quoque lenimen, quo solo flexit amantem: 450
'longa quidem est nobis omnis mora, sed tibi iuro per patrios ignes, si me modo fata remittant, ante reversurum, quam luna bis inpleat orbem.'
his ubi promissis spes est admota recursus, protinus eductam navalibus aequore tingui 455 aptarique suis pinum iubet armamentis;
qua rursus visa veluti praesaga futuri horruit Alcyone lacrimasque emisit obortas amplexusque dedit tristisque miserrima tandem ore 'vale' dixit conlapsaque corpore toto est; 460 ast iuvenes quaerente moras Ceyce reducunt ordinibus geminis ad fortia pectora remos aequalique ictu scindunt freta: sustulit illa umentes oculos stantemque in puppe recurva concussa que manu dantem sibi signa maritum 465 prona videt redditque notas; ubi terra recessit longius, atque oculi nequeunt cognoscere vultus, dum licet, insequitur fugientem lumine pinum;

haec quoque ut haut poterat spatio submota videri, vela tamen spectat summo fluitantia malo; 470 ut nec vela videt, vacuum petit anxia lectum seque toro ponit: renovat lectusque torusque Alcyonae lacrimas et quae pars admonet absit.

Portibus exierant, et moverat aura rudentes:
obvertit lateri pendentes navita remos 475 cornuaque in summa locat arbore totaque malo carbasa deducit venientesque accipit auras.
aut minus, aut certe medium non amplius aequor puppe secabatur, longeque erat utraque tellus, cum mare sub noctem tumidis albescere coepit 480 fluctibus et praeceps spirare valentius eurus.
'ardua iam dudum demittite cornua' rector clamat 'et antemnis totum subnectite velum.'
hic iubet; inpediunt adversae iussa procellae, nec sinit audiri vocem fragor aequoris ullam: 485 sponte tamen properant alii subducere remos, pars munire latus, pars ventis vela negare;
egerit hic fluctus aequorque refundit in aequor, hic rapit antemnas; quae dum sine lege geruntur, aspera crescit hiems, omnique e parte feroces 490 bella gerunt venti fretaque indignantia miscent.
ipse pavet nec se, qui sit status, ipse fatetur scire ratis rector, nec quid iubeatve vetetve:
tanta mali moles tantoque potentior arte est.
quippe sonant clamore viri, stridore rudentes, 495 undarum incursu gravis unda, tonitribus aether.
fluctibus erigitur caelumque aequare videtur pontus et inductas aspergine tangere nubes;
et modo, cum fulvas ex imo vertit harenas, concolor est illis, Stygia modo nigrior unda, 500

sternitur interdum spumisque sonantibus albet.
ipsa quoque his agitur vicibus Trachinia puppis et nunc sublimis veluti de vertice montis despicere in valles imumque Acheronta videtur, nunc, ubi demissam curvum circumstetit aequor, 505
suspicere inferno summum de gurgite caelum.
saepe dat ingentem fluctu latus icta fragorem nec levius pulsata sonat, quam ferreus olim cum laceras aries balistave concutit arces, utque solent sumptis incursu viribus ire 510 pectore in arma feri protentaque tela leones, sic, ubi se ventis admiserat unda coortis, ibat in alta ratis multoque erat altior illis; iamque labant cunei, spoliataque tegmine cerae rima patet praebetque viam letalibus undis. 515 ecce cadunt largi resolutis nubibus imbres, inque fretum credas totum descendere caelum, inque plagas caeli tumefactum ascendere pontum.
vela madent nimbis, et cum caelestibus undis aequoreae miscentur aquae; caret ignibus aether, 520 caecaque nox premitur tenebris hiemisque suisque.
discutiunt tamen has praebentque micantia lumen fulmina: fulmineis ardescunt ignibus imbres.
dat quoque iam saltus intra cava texta carinae fluctus; et ut miles, numero praestantior omni, 525 cum saepe adsiluit defensae moenibus urbis, spe potitur tandem laudisque accensus amore inter mille viros murum tamen occupat unus, sic ubi pulsarunt noviens latera ardua fluctus, vastius insurgens decimae ruit impetus undae 530 nec prius absistit fessam oppugnare carinam, quam velut in captae descendat moenia navis.
pars igitur temptabat adhuc invadere pinum, pars maris intus erat: trepidant haud setius omnes, quam solet urbs aliis murum fodientibus extra 535

atque aliis murum trepidare tenentibus intus.
deficit ars, animique cadunt, totidemque videntur, quot veniunt fluctus, ruere atque inrumpere mortes.
non tenet hic lacrimas, stupet hic, vocat ille beatos, funera quos maneant, hic votis numen adorat 540 bracchiaque ad caelum, quod non videt, inrita tollens poscit opem; subeunt illi fraterque parensque, huic cum pignoribus domus et quodcunque relictum est; Alcyone Ceyca movet, Ceycis in ore nulla nisi Alcyone est et, cum desideret unam, 545 gaudet abesse tamen; patriae quoque vellet ad oras respicere inque domum supremos vertere vultus, verum, ubi sit, nescit: tanta vertigine pontus fervet, et inducta piceis e nubibus umbra omne latet caelum, duplicataque noctis imago est. 550 frangitur incursu nimborum turbinis arbor, frangitur et regimen, spoliisque animosa superstes unda, velut victrix, sinuataque despicit undas; nec levius, quam si quis Athon Pindumve revulsos sede sua totos in apertum everterit aequor, 555 praecipitata cadit pariterque et pondere et ictu mergit in ima ratem; cum qua pars magna virorum gurgite pressa gravi neque in aera reddita fato functa suo est, alii partes et membra carinae trunca tenent: tenet ipse manu, qua scepra solebat, 560 fragmina navigii Ceyx socerumque patremque invocat heu! frustra, sed plurima nantis in ore Alcyone coniunx: illam meminitque refertque, illius ante oculos ut agant sua corpora fluctus optat et exanimis manibus tumuletur amicis. 565 dum natat, absentem, quotiens sinit hiscere fluctus, nominat Alcyonen ipsisque inmurmurat undis.
ecce super medios fluctus niger arcus aquarum frangitur et rupta mersum caput obruit unda.
Lucifer obscurus nec quem cognoscere posses 570 illa luce fuit, quoniamque excedere caelo

non licuit, densis textit sua nubibus ora.

Aeolis interea, tantorum ignara malorum, dinumerat noctes et iam, quas induat ille, festinat vestes, iam quas, ubi venerit ille, 575 ipsa gerat, reditusque sibi promittit inanes.
omnibus illa quidem superis pia tura ferebat, ante tamen cunctos lunonis templa colebat proque viro, qui nullus erat, veniebat ad aras utque foret sospes coniunx suus utque rediret, 580 optabat, nullamque sibi praeferret; at illi hoc de tot votis poterat contingere solum.

At dea non ultra pro functo morte rogari sustinet utque manus funestas arceat aris,
'Iri, meae' dixit 'fidissima nuntia vocis, 585 vise soporiferam Somni velociter aulam exstinctique iube Ceycis imagine mittat somnia ad Alcyonen veros narrantia casus.' dixerat: induitur velamina mille colorum Iris et arquato caelum curvamine signans 590 tectata petit iussi sub nube latentia regis.

Est prope Cimmerios longo spelunca recessu, mons cavus, ignavi domus et penetralia Somni, quo numquam radiis oriens mediusve cadensve Phoebus adire potest: nebulae caligine mixtae 595 exhalantur humo dubiaeque crepuscula lucis.
non vigil ales ibi cristati cantibus oris evocat Auroram, nec voce silentia rumpunt sollicitive canes canibusve sagacior anser;
non fera, non pecudes, non moti flamine rami 600
humanaeve sonum reddunt convicia linguae.
muta quies habitat; saxo tamen exit ab imo rivus aquae Lethes, per quem cum murmure labens invitat somnos crepitantibus unda lapillis.
ante fores antri fecunda papavera florent 605 innumeraeque herbae, quarum de lacte soporem Nox legit et spargit per opacas umida terras.

ianua, ne verso stridores cardine reddat, nulla domo tota est, custos in limine nullus;
at medio torus est ebene sublimis in antro, 610 plumeus, atricolor, pullo velamine tectus, quo cubat ipse deus membris languore solutis.
hunc circa passim varias imitantia formas Somnia vana iacent totidem, quot messis aristas, silva gerit frondes, eiectas litus harenas. 615

Quo simul intravit manibusque obstantia virgo Somnia dimovit, vestis fulgore reluxit sacra domus, tarda que deus gravitate iacentes vix oculos tollens iterumque iterumque relabens summaque percutiens nutanti pectora mento 620 excussit tandem sibi se cubitoque levatus, quid veniat, (cognovit enim) scitatur, at illa:
'Somne, quies rerum, placidissime, Somne, deorum, pax animi, quem cura fugit, qui corpora duris fessa ministeriis mulces reparasque labori, 625
Somnia, quae veras aequent imitamine formas, Herculea Trachine iube sub imagine regis Alcyonen adeant simulacraque naufraga fingant.
imperat hoc Iuno.' postquam mandata peregit, Iris abit: neque enim ulterius tolerare soporis 630 vim poterat, labique ut somnum sensit in artus, effugit et remeat per quos modo venerat arcus.

At pater e populo natorum mille suorum excitat artificem simulatoremque figurae Morphea: non illo quisquam sollertius alter 635 exprimit incessus vultumque sonumque loquendi;
adicit et vestes et consuetissima cuique verba; sed hic solos homines imitatur, at alter fit fera, fit volucris, fit longo corpore serpens:
hunc Icelon superi, mortale Phobetora vulgus 640
nominat; est etiam diversae tertius artis Phantasos: ille in humum saxumque undamque trabemque, quaeque vacant anima, fallaciter omnia transit;

regibus hi ducibusque suos ostendere vultus nocte solent, populos alii plebemque pererrant. 645 praeterit hos senior cunctisque e fratribus unum Morphea, qui peragat Thaumantidos edita, Somnus eligit et rursus molli languore solutus deposuitque caput stratoque recondidit alto.

Ille volat nullos strepitus facientibus alis 650 per tenebras intraque morae breve tempus in urbem pervenit Haemoniam, positisque e corpore pennis in faciem Ceycis abit sumptaque figura luridus, exanimi similis, sine vestibus ullis, coniugis ante torum miserae stetit: uda videtur 655 barba viri, madidisque gravis fluere unda capillis.
tum lecto incumbens fletu super ora profuso haec ait: 'agnoscis Ceyca, miserrima coniunx, an mea mutata est facies nece? respice: nosces inveniesque tuo pro coniuge coniugis umbram! 660 nil opis, Alcyone, nobis tua vota tulerunt!
occidimus! falso tibi me promittere noli!
nubilus Aegaeo deprendit in aequore navem auster et ingenti iactatam flamine solvit, oraque nostra tuum frustra clamantia nomen 665 inplerunt fluctus. — non haec tibi nuntiat auctor ambiguus, non ista vagis rumoribus audis:
ipse ego fata tibi praesens mea naufragus edo.
surge, age, da lacrimas lugubriaque indue nec me indeploratum sub inania Tartara mitte!' 670 adicit his vocem Morpheus, quam coniugis illa crederet esse sui (fletus quoque fundere veros visus erat), gestumque manus Ceycis habebat.
ingemit Alcyone lacrimans, motatque lacertos per somnum corpusque petens amplectitur auras 675 exclamatque: 'mane! quo te rapis? ibimus una.'
voce sua specieque viri turbata soporem excudit et primo, si sit, circumspicit, illic, qui modo visus erat; nam moti voce ministri intulerant lumen. postquam non invenit usquam, 680 percutit ora manu laniatque a pectore vestes pectoraque ipsa ferit nec crines solvere curat:

scindit et altrici, quae luctus causa, roganti
'nulla est Alcyone, nulla est' ait. 'occidit una cum Ceyce suo. solantia tollite verba! 685 naufragus interiit: vidi agnovique manusque ad discedentem cupiens retinere tetendi.
umbra fuit, sed et umbra tamen manifesta virique vera mei. non ille quidem, si quaeris, habebat adsuetos vultus nec quo prius, ore nitebat: 690 pallentem nudumque et adhuc umentem capillo infelix vidi. stetit hoc miserabilis ipso ecce loco'; et quaerit, vestigia siqua supersint.
'hoc erat, hoc, animo quod divinante timebam, et ne me fugiens ventos sequerere rogabam. 695
at certe vellem, quoniam periturus abibas, me quoque duxisses: multum fuit utile tecum ire mihi; neque enim de vitae tempore quicquam non simul egissem, nec mors discreta fuisset.
nunc absens perii, iactor quoque fluctibus absens, 700 et sine me me pontus habet. crudelior ipso sit mihi mens pelago, si vitam ducere nitar longius et tanto pugnam superesse dolori!
sed neque pugnabo nec te, miserande, relinquam et tibi nunc saltem veniam comes, inque sepulcro 705 si non urna, tamen iunget nos littera: si non ossibus ossa meis, at nomen nomine tangam.' plura dolor prohibet, verboque intervenit omni plangor, et attonito gemitus a corde trahuntur.
Mane erat: egreditur tectis ad litus et illum 710 maesta locum repetit, de quo spectarat euntem, dumque moratur ibi dumque 'hic retinacula solvit, hoc mihi discedens dedit oscula litore' dicit dumque notata locis reminiscitur acta fretumque prospicit, in liquida, spatio distante, tuetur 715

nescio quid quasi corpus aqua, primoque, quid illud esset, erat dubium; postquam paulum adpulit unda, et, quamvis aberat, corpus tamen esse liquebat, qui foret, ignorans, quia naufragus, omine mota est et, tamquam ignoto lacrimam daret, 'heu! miser,' inquit 720
'quisquis es, et si qua est coniunx tibi!' fluctibus actum fit propius corpus: quod quo magis illa tuetur, hoc minus et minus est mentis, vae! iamque propinquae admotum terrae, iam quod cognoscere posset, cernit: erat coniunx! 'ille est!' exclamat et una 725 ora, comas, vestem lacerat tendensque trementes ad Ceyca manus 'sic, o carissime coniunx, sic ad me, miserande, redis?' ait. adiacet undis facta manu moles, quae primas aequoris iras frangit et incursus quae praedelassat aquarum. 730 insilit huc, mirumque fuit potuisse: volabat percutiensque levem modo natis aera pennis stringebat summas ales miserabilis undas, dumque volat, maesto similem plenumque querellae ora dedere sonum tenui crepitantia rostro. 735 ut vero tetigit mutum et sine sanguine corpus, dilectos artus amplexa recentibus alis frigida nequiquam duro dedit oscula rostro.
senserit hoc Ceyx, an vultum motibus undae tollere sit visus, populus dubitabat, at ille 740 senserat: et tandem, superis miserantibus, ambo alite mutantur; fatis obnoxius isdem tunc quoque mansit amor nec coniugiale solutum foedus in alitibus: coeunt fiuntque parentes, perque dies placidos hiberno tempore septem 745 incubat Alcyone pendentibus aequore nidis.
tunc iacet unda maris: ventos custodit et arcet Aeolus egressu praestatque nepotibus aequor.

Hos aliquis senior iunctim freta lata volantes spectat et ad finem servatos laudat amores: 750 proximus, aut idem, si fors tulit, 'hic quoque,' dixit

'quem mare carpentem substrictaque crura gerentem aspicis,' (ostendens spatiosum in guttura mergum)
'regia progenies, et si descendere ad ipsum ordine perpetuo quaeris, sunt huius origo 755 Ilus et Assaracus raptusque Iovi Ganymedes Laomedonque senex Priamusque novissima Troiae tempora sortitus; frater fuit Hectoris iste:
qui nisi sensisset prima nova fata iuventa, forsitan inferius non Hectore nomen haberet, 760
quamvis est illum proles enixa Dymantis, Aesacon umbrosa furtim peperisse sub Ida fertur Alexiroe, Granico nata bicorni.
oderat hic urbes nitidaque remotus ab aula secretos montes et inambitiosa colebat 765 rura nec Iliacos coetus nisi rarus adibat.
non agreste tamen nec inexpugnabile amori pectus habens silvas captatam saepe per omnes aspicit Hesperien patria Cebrenida ripa iniectos umeris siccantem sole capillos. 770 visa fugit nympha, veluti perterrita fulvum cerva lupum longeque lacu deprensa relicto accipitrem fluvialis anas; quam Troius heros insequitur celeremque metu celer urget amore.
ecce latens herba coluber fugientis adunco 775 dente pedem strinxit virusque in corpore liquit;
cum vita suppressa fuga est: amplectitur amens exanimem clamatque "piget, piget esse secutum!
sed non hoc timui, neque erat mihi vincere tanti.
perdidimus miseram nos te duo: vulnus ab angue, 780
a me causa data est! ego sim sceleratior illo, ni tibi morte mea mortis solacia mittam."
dixit et e scopulo, quem rauca subederat unda, se dedit in pontum. Tethys miserata cadentem molliter excepit nantemque per aequora pennis 785 textit, et optatae non est data copia mortis.
indignatur amans, invitum vivere cogi obstarique animae misera de sede volenti exire, utque novas umeris adsumpserat alas, subvolat atque iterum corpus super aequora mittit. 790 pluma levat casus: furit Aesacos inque profundum pronus abit letique viam sine fine retemptat.

fecit amor maciem: longa internodia crurum, longa manet cervix, caput est a corpore longe;
aequora amat nomenque tenet, quia mergitur illo.'

LIBER DVODECIMVS

Nescius adsumptis Priamus pater Aesacon alis vivere lugebat: tumulo quoque nomen habenti inferias dederat cum fratribus Hector inanes;
defuit officio Paridis praesentia tristi, postmodo qui rapta longum cum coniuge bellum 5 attulit in patriam: coniurataeque sequuntur mille rates gentisque simul commune Pelasgae; nec dilata foret vindicta, nisi aequora saevi invia fecissent venti, Boeotaque tellus Aulide piscosa puppes tenuisset ituras. 10
hic patrio de more lovi cum sacra parassent, ut vetus accensis incanduit ignibus ara, serpere caeruleum Danai videre draconem in platanum, coeptis quae stabat proxima sacris.
nidus erat volucrum bis quattuor arbore summa: 15 quas simul et matrem circum sua damna volantem corripuit serpens avidoque recondidit ore, obstipuere omnes, at veri providus augur Thestorides 'vincemus'; ait, 'gaudete, Pelasgi!
Troia cadet, sed erit nostri mora longa laboris,' 20
atque novem volucres in belli digerit annos.
ille, ut erat virides amplexus in arbore ramos,
fit lapis et signat serpentis imagine saxum.

Permanet Aoniis Boreas violentus in undis bellaque non transfert, et sunt, qui parcere Troiae 25 Neptunum credant, quia moenia fecerat urbi;
at non Thestorides: nec enim nescitve tacetve sanguine virgineo placandam virginis iram esse deae. postquam pietatem publica causa rexque patrem vicit, castumque datura cruorem 30 flentibus ante aram stetit Iphigenia ministris, victa dea est nubemque oculis obiecit et inter officium turbamque sacri vocesque precantum supposita fertur mutasse Mycenida cerva.

ergo ubi, qua decuit, lenita est caede Diana, 35 et pariter Phoebes, pariter maris ira recessit, accipiunt ventos a tergo mille carinae multaque perpressae Phrygia potiuntur harena.

Orbe locus medio est inter terrasque fretumque caelestesque plagas, triplicis confinia mundi; 40 unde quod est usquam, quamvis regionibus absit, inspicitur, penetratque cavas vox omnis ad aures:
Fama tenet summaque domum sibi legit in arce, innumerosque aditus ac mille foramina tectis addidit et nullis inclusit limina portis; 45 nocte dieque patet: tota est ex aere sonanti, tota fremit vocesque refert iteratque quod audit;
nulla quies intus nullaque silentia parte, nec tamen est clamor, sed parvae murmura vocis, qualia de pelagi, siquis procul audiat, undis 50 esse solent, qualemve sonum, cum Iuppiter atras increpuit nubes, extrema tonitrua reddunt.
atria turba tenet: veniunt, leve vulgus, euntque mixtaque cum veris passim commenta vagantur milia rumorum confusaque verba volutant; 55
e quibus hi vacuas implent sermonibus aures, hi narrata ferunt alio, mensuraque ficti crescit, et auditis aliquid novus adicit auctor.
illic Credulitas, illic temerarius Error vanaque Laetitia est consternatique Timores 60 Seditioque repens dubioque auctore Susurri;
ipsa, quid in caelo rerum pelagoque geratur et tellure, videt totumque inquirat in orbem.

Fecerat haec notum, Graias cum milite forti adventare rates, neque inexpectatus in armis 65 hostis adest: prohibent aditus litusque tuentur Troes, et Hectorea primus fataliter hasta,

Protesilae, cadis, commissaque proelia magno stant Danais, fortisque animae nece cognitus Hector.
nec Phryges exiguo, quid Achaica dextera posset, 70 sanguine senserunt, et iam Sigea rubebant litora, iam leto proles Neptunia, Cycnus, mille viros dederat, iam curru instabat Achilles totaque Peliacae sternebat cuspidis ictu agmina perque acies aut Cycnum aut Hectors quaerens 75 congruitur Cycno (decimum dilatus in annum Hector erat): tum colla iugo candentia pressos exhortatus equos currum derexit in hostem concutiensque suis vibrantia tela lacertis 'quisquis es, o iuvenis,' dixit 'solamen habeto 80 mortis, ab Haemonio quod sis iugulatus Achille!'
hactenus Aeacides: vocem gravis hasta secuta est, sed quamquam certa nullus fuit error in hasta, nil tamen emissi profecit acumine ferri utque hebeti pectus tantummodo contudit ictu. 85
'nate dea, nam te fama praenovimus,' inquit ille 'quid a nobis vulnus miraris abesse?' (mirabatur enim.) 'non haec, quam cernis, equinis fulva iubis cassis neque onus, cava parma, sinistrae auxilio mihi sunt: decor est quaesitus ab istis; 90 Mars quoque ob hoc capere arma solet! removebitur huius tegminis officium: tamen indestrictus abibo;
est aliquid non esse satum Nereide, sed qui Nereaque et natas et totum temperat aequor.'
dixit et haesurum clipei curvamine telum 95 misit in Aeaciden, quod et aes et proxima rupit terga novena boum, decimo tamen orbe moratum est.
excutit hoc heros rursusque trementia forti tela manu torsit: rursus sine vulnere corpus sincerumque fuit; nec tertia cuspis apertum 100 et se praebentem valuit destringere Cycnum.
haut secus exarsit, quam circo taurus aperto, cum sua terribili petit inritamina cornu, poeniceas vestes, elusaque vulnera sentit;

num tamen exciderit ferrum considerat hastae: 105 haerebat ligno. 'manus est mea debilis ergo, quasque' ait 'ante habuit vires, effudit in uno?
nam certe valuit, vel cum Lyrnesia primus moenia deieci, vel cum Tenedonque suoque Eetioneas inplevi sanguine Thebas, 110 vel cum purpureus populari caede Caicus fluxit, opusque meae bis sensit Telephus hastae.
hic quoque tot caesis, quorum per litus acervos et feci et video, valuit mea dextra valetque.' dixit et, ante actis veluti male crederet, hastam 115 misit in adversum Lycia de plebe Menoeten loricamque simul subiectaque pectora rupit.
quo plangente gravem moribundo vertice terram extrahit illud idem calido de vulnere telum atque ait: 'haec manus est, haec, qua modo vicimus, hasta: 120
utar in hoc isdem; sit in hoc, precor, exitus idem!'
sic fatus Cycnum repetit, nec fraxinus errat inque umero sonuit non evitata sinistro, inde velut muro solidaque a caute repulsa est;
qua tamen ictus erat, signatum sanguine Cycnum 125 viderat et frustra fuerat gavisus Achilles:
vulnus erat nullum, sanguis fuit ille Menoetae!
tum vero praecipit curru fremebundus ab alto desilit et nitido securum comminus hostem ense petens parmam gladio galeamque cavari 130 cernit, at in duro laedi quoque corpore ferrum.
haut tulit ulterius clipeoque adversa reducto ter quater ora viri, capulo et cava tempora pulsat cedentique sequens instat turbatque ruitque attonitoque negat requiem: pavor occupat illum, 135 ante oculosque natant tenebrae retroque ferenti aversos passus medio lapis obstitit arvo;
quem super impulsus resupino corpore Cycnum

vi multa vertit terraeque adflixit Achilles.
tum clipeo genibusque premens praecordia duris 140 vincla trahit galeae, quae presso subdita mento elidunt fauces et respiramen iterque eripiunt animae. victum spoliare parabat:
arma relicta videt; corpus deus aequoris albam contulit in volucrem, cuius modo nomen habebat. 145

Hic labor, haec requiem multorum pugna dierum attulit et positis pars utraque substitit armis.
dumque vigil Phrygios servat custodia muros, et vigil Argolicas servat custodia fossas, festa dies aderat, qua Cycni victor Achilles 150 Pallada mactatae placabat sanguine vaccae;
cuius ut inposuit prosecta calentibus aris, et dis acceptus penetravit in aethera nidor, sacra tulere suam, pars est data cetera mensis.
discubuere toris proceres et corpora tosta 155 carne replent vinoque levant curasque sitimque.
non illos citharae, non illos carmina vocum longave multifori delectat tibia buxi, sed noctem sermone trahunt, virtusque loquendi materia est: pugnas referunt hostisque suasque, 160 inque vices adita atque exhausta pericula saepe commemorare iuvat; quid enim loqueretur Achilles, aut quid apud magnum potius loquerentur Achillem?
proxima praecipue domito victoria Cycno in sermone fuit: visum mirabile cunctis, 165 quod iuveni corpus nullo penetrabile telo invictumque a vulnere erat ferrumque terebat.
hoc ipse Aeacides, hoc mirabantur Achivi, cum sic Nestor ait: 'vestro fuit unicus aevo contemptor ferri nulloque forabilis ictu 170 Cycnus. at ipse olim patientem vulnera mille corpore non laeso Perrhaebum Caenea vidi, Caenea Perrhaebum, qui factis inclitus Othryn incoluit, quoque id mirum magis esset in illo, femina natus erat.' monstri novitate moventur 175 quisquis adest, narretque rogant: quos inter Achilles:

'dic age! nam cunctis eadem est audire voluntas,
o facunde senex, aevi prudentia nostri, quis fuerit Caeneus, cur in contraria versus,
qua tibi militia, cuius certamine pugnae 180 cognitus, a quo sit victus, si victus ab ullo est.'
tum senior: 'quamvis obstet mihi tarda vetustas, multaque me fugiant primis spectata sub annis, plura tamen memini. nec quae magis haereat ulla pectore res nostro est inter bellique domique 185 acta tot, ac si quem potuit spatiosa senectus spectatorem operum multorum reddere, vixi annos bis centum; nunc tertia vivitur aetas.

'Clara decore fuit proles Elateia Caenis, Thessalidum virgo pulcherrima, perque propinquas 190 perque tuas urbes (tibi enim popularis, Achille), multorum frustra votis optata procorum.
temptasset Peleus thalamos quoque forsitan illos:
sed iam aut contigerant illi conubia matris aut fuerant promissa tuae, nec Caenis in ullos 195 denupsit thalamos secretaque litora carpens aequorei vim passa dei est (ita fama ferebat), utque novae Veneris Neptunus gaudia cepit,
"sint tua vota licet" dixit "secura repulsae:
elige, quid voveas!" (eadem hoc quoque fama ferebat) 200
"magnum" Caenis ait "facit haec iniuria votum, tale pati iam posse nihil; da, femina ne sim:
omnia praestiteris." graviore novissima dixit verba sono poteratque viri vox illa videri, sicut erat; nam iam voto deus aequoris alti 205 adnuerat dederatque super, nec saucius ullis vulneribus fieri ferrove occumbere posset.
munere laetus abit studiisque virilibus aevum exigit Atracides Peneiaque arva pererrat.

'Duxerat Hippodamen audaci Ixione natus 210

nubigenasque feros positis ex ordine mensis arboribus tecto discumbere iusserat antro.
Haemonii proceres aderant, aderamus et ipsi, festaque confusa resonabat regia turba.
ecce canunt Hymenaeon, et ignibus atria fumant, 215 cinctaque adest virgo matrum nuruumque caterva, praesignis facie; felicem diximus illa coniuge Pirithoum, quod paene fefellimus omen.
nam tibi, saevorum saevissime Centaurorum, Euryte, quam vino pectus, tam virgine visa 220
ardet, et ebrietas geminata libidine regnat.
protinus eversae turbant convivia mensae, raptaturque comis per vim nova nupta prehensis.
Eurytus Hippodamen, alii, quam quisque probabant aut poterant, rapiunt, captaeque erat urbis imago. 225 femineo clamore sonat domus: ocius omnes surgimus, et primus “quae te vecordia,” Theseus “Euryte, pulsat,” ait, “qui me vivente laccessas Pirithoum viosque duos ignarus in uno?” [neve ea magnanimus frustra memoraverit ore, 230 submovet instantes raptamque furentibus aufert.] ille nihil contra, (neque enim defendere verbis talibus facta potest) sed vindicis ora protervis insequitur manibus generosaque pectora pulsat.
forte fuit iuxta signis exstantibus asper 235 antiquus crater; quem vastum vastior ipse sustulit Aegides adversaque misit in ora:
sanguinis ille globos pariter cerebrumque merumque vulnere et ore vomens madida resupinus harena calcitrat. ardescunt germani caede bimembres 240 certatimque omnes uno ore “arma, arma” loquuntur.
vina dabant animos, et prima pocula pugna missa volant fragilesque cadi curvique lebetes, res epulis quondam, tum bello et caedibus aptae.
‘Primus Ophionides Amycus penetralia donis 245 haut timuit spoliare suis et primus ab aede lampadibus densum rapuit funale coruscis elatumque alte, veluti qui candida tauri rumpere sacrificia molitur colla securi, inlisis fronti Lapithae Celadontis et ossa 250

non cognoscendo confusa relinquit in ore.
exsiluere oculi, disiectisque ossibus oris acta retro naris medioque est fixa palato.
hunc pede convulso mensae Pellaeus acernae stravit humi Pelates deiecto in pectora mento 255 cumque atro mixtos sputantem sanguine dentes vulnere Tartareas geminato mittit ad umbras.

‘Proximus ut steterat spectans altaria vultu fumida terribili “cur non” ait “utimur istis?”
cumque suis Gryneus inmanem sustulit aram 260 ignibus et medium Lapitharum iecit in agmen depressitque duos, Brotean et Orion: Orio mater erat Mycale, quam deduxisse canendo saepe reluctanti constabat cornua lunae.
“non impune feres, teli modo copia detur!” 265 dixerat Exadius telique habet instar, in alta quae fuerant pinu votivi cornua cervi.
figitur hinc duplici Gryneus in lumina ramo eruiturque oculos, quorum pars cornibus haeret, pars fluit in barbam concretaque sanguine pendet. 270

‘Ecce rapit mediis flagrantem Rhoetus ab aris pruniceum torrem dextraque a parte Charaxi tempora perfringit fulvo protecta capillo.
correpti rapida, veluti seges arida, flamma arserunt crines, et vulnere sanguis inustus 275 terribilem stridore sonum dedit, ut dare ferrum igne rubens plerumque solet, quod forcipe curva cum faber eduxit, lacubus demittit: at illud stridet et in trepida submersum sibilat unda.
saucius hirsutis avidum de crinibus ignem 280 excudit inque umeros limen tellure revulsum tollit, onus plaustris, quod ne permittat in hostem, ipsa facit gravitas: socium quoque saxea moles oppressit spatio stantem propiore Cometen.

gaudia nec retinet Rhoetus: "sic, conprecor," inquit 285
"cetera sit fortis castrorum turba tuorum!"
semicremoque novat repetitum stipite vulnus terque quaterque gravi iuncturas verticis ictu rupit, et in liquido sederunt ossa cerebro.

'Victor ad Euagrum Corythumque Dryantaque transit; 290

e quibus ut prima tectus lanugine malas procubuit Corythus, "puero quae gloria fuso parta tibi est?" Euagrus ait, nec dicere Rhoetus plura sinit rutilasque ferox in aperta loquentis condidit ora viri perque os in pectora flammis. 295 te quoque, saeve Drya, circum caput igne rotato insequitur, sed non in te quoque constitit idem exitus: adsiduae successu caedis ovantem, qua iuncta est umero cervix, sude figis obusta.
ingemuit duroque sudem vix osse revulsit 300 Rhoetus et ipse suo madefactus sanguine fugit.
fugit et Orneus Lycabasque et saucius armo dexteriore Medon et cum Pisenore Thaumias, quique pedum nuper certamine vicerat omnes Mermeros, accepto tum vulnere tardius ibat; 305 et Pholus et Melaneus et Abas praedator aprorum, quique suis frustra bellum dissuaserat augur Asbolus: ille etiam metuenti vulnera Nesso
"ne fuge! ad Herculeos" inquit "servaberis arcus."
at non Eurynomus Lycidasque et Areos et Imbreus 310 effugere necem; quos omnes dextra Dryantis perculit adversos. adversum tu quoque, quamvis terga fugae dederas, vulnus, Crenaeae, tulisti:
nam grave respiciens inter duo lumina ferrum, qua naris fronti committitur, accipis, imae. 315

'In tanto fremitu cunctis sine fine iacebat sopitus venis et inexperrectus Aphidas languentique manu carchesia mixta tenebat, fusus in Ossaee villosis pelibus ursae;

quem procul ut vidit frustra nulla arma moventem, 320 inserit amento digitos "miscenda" que dixit
"cum Styge vina bibes" Phorbas; nec plura moratus in iuvenem torsit iaculum, ferrataque collo fraxinus, ut casu iacuit resupinus, adacta est.
mors caruit sensu, plenoque e gutture fluxit 325
inque toros inque ipsa niger carchesia sanguis.

'Vidi ego Petraeum conantem tollere terra glandiferam quercum; quam dum complexibus ambit et quatit huc illuc labefactaque robora iactat, lancea Pirithoi costis inmissa Petraei 330
pectora cum duro luctantia robore fixit.
Pirithoi virtute Lycum cecidisse ferebant, Pirithoi virtute Chromin, sed uterque minorem victori titulum quam Dictys Helopsque dederunt, fixus Helops iaculo, quod pervia tempora fecit 335 et missum a dextra laevam penetravit ad aurem, Dictys ab ancipiti delapsus acumine montis, dum fugit instantem trepidans Ixione natum, decidit in praeceps et pondere corporis ornum ingentem fregit suaque induit ilia fractae. 340

'Ultor adest Aphareus saxumque e monte revulsum mittere conatur; conantem stipite querno occupat Aegides cubitique ingentia frangit ossa nec ulterius dare corpus inutile leto aut vacat aut curat tergoque Bienoris alti 345 insilit, haut solito quemquam portare nisi ipsum, opposuitque genu costis prensamque sinistra caesariem retinens vultum minitantiaque ora robore nodoso praeduraque tempora fregit.
robore Nedymnum iaculatoremque Lycopen 350
sternit et inmissa protectum pectora barba Hippason et summis exstantem Riphea silvis Thereaque, Haemoniis qui prensos montibus ursos ferre domum vivos indignantesque solebat.

haut tulit utentem pugnae successibus ultra 355 Thesea Demoleon: solidoque revellere trunco annosam pinum magno molimine temptat;
quod quia non potuit, prae fractam misit in hostem, sed procul a telo Theseus veniente recessit Pallados admonitu: credi sic ipse volebat. 360 non tamen arbor iners cecidit; nam Crantoris alti abscidit iugulo pectusque umerumque sinistrum:
armiger ille tui fuerat genitoris, Achille, quem Dolopum rector, bello superatus, Amyntor Aeacidae dederat pacis pignusque fidemque. 365 Hunc procul ut foedo disiectum vulnere Peleus vidit, "at inferias, iuvenum gratissime Crantor, accipe" ait validoque in Demoleonta lacerto fraxineam misit contentis viribus hastam, quae laterum cratem praerupit et ossibus haerens 370 intremuit: trahit ille manu sine cuspide lignum (id quoque vix sequitur), cuspis pulmone retenta est;
ipse dolor vires animo dabat: aeger in hostem erigitur pedibusque virum proculcat equinis.
excipit ille ictus galea clipeoque sonantes 375 defensatque umeros praetentaque sustinet arma perque armos uno duo pectora perforat ictu.
ante tamen leto dederat Phlegraeon et Hylen eminus, Iphinoum conlato Marte Claninque; additur his Dorylas, qui tempora tecta gerebat 380
pelle lupi saevique vicem praestantia teli cornua vara boum multo rubefacta cruore.

'Huic ego (nam viris animus dabat) "aspice," dixi
"quantum concedant nostro tua cornua ferro" et iaculum torsi: quod cum vitare nequiret, 385 opposuit dextram passurae vulnera fronti:
adfixa est cum fronte manus; fit clamor, at illum haerentem Peleus et acerbo vulnere victum (stabat enim propior) mediam ferit ense sub alvum.

prosiluit terraque ferox sua viscera traxit 390 tractaque calcavit calcataque rupit et illis crura quoque inpediit et inani concidit alvo.

‘Nec te pugnantem tua, Cyllare, forma redemit, si modo naturae formam concedimus illi.
barba erat incipiens, barbae color aureus, aurea 395
ex umeris medios coma dependebat in armos.
gratus in ore vigor; cervix umerique manusque pectoraque artificum laudatis proxima signis, et quacumque vir est; nec equi mendosa sub illo

Castore dignus erit: sic tergum sessile, sic sunt pectora celsa toris. totus pice nigrior atra, candida cauda tamen; color est quoque cruribus albus.
multae illum petiere sua de gente, sed una abstulit Hylonome, qua nulla decentior inter 405 semiferos altis habitavit femina silvis;
haec et blanditiis et amando et amare fatendo Cyllaron una tenet, cultu quoque, quantus in illis esse potest membris, ut sit coma pectine levis, ut modo rore maris, modo se violave rosave 410 bisque die lapsis Pagasaeae vertice silvae fontibus ora lavet, bis flumine corpora tinguat, nec nisi quae deceant electarumque ferarum aut umero aut lateri praetendat vellera laevo. 415 par amor est illis: errant in montibus una, antra simul subeunt; et tum Lapitheia tecta intranant pariter, pariter fera bella gerebant: (auctor in incerto est) iaculum de parte sinistra venit et inferius quam collo pectora subsunt, 420 Cyllare, te fixit; parvo cor vulnere laesum corpore cum toto post tela educta refrixit.

protinus Hylonome morientes excipit artus inpositaque manu vulnus fovet oraque ad ora admovet atque animae fugienti obsistere temptat; 425

ut videt extinctum, dictis, quae clamor ad aures arcuit ire meas, telo, quod inhaeserat illi, incubuit moriensque suum complexa maritum est.

‘Ante oculos stat et ille meos, qui sena leonum

Tectaphon Oleniden a summo vertice fregit; [fracta volubilitas capitis latissima, perque os perque cavas nares oculosque auresque cerebrum 435 molle fluit, veluti concretum vimine querno manat et exprimitur per densa foramina spissus.]

ast ego, dum parat hic armis nudare iacentem, (scit tuus hoc genitor) gladium spoliantis in ima 440 ilia demisi. Cthonius quoque Teleboasque ense iacent nostro: ramum prior ille bifurcum gesserat, hic iaculum; iaculo mihi vulnera fecit:
signa vides! adparet adhuc vetus inde cicatrix.
tunc ego debueram capienda ad Pergama mitti; 445 tum poteram magni, si non superare, morari Hectoris arma meis! illo sed tempore nullus, aut puer, Hector erat, nunc me mea deficit aetas.
quid tibi victorem gemini Periphanta Pyraethi, Ampyca quid referam, qui quadrupedantis Echecli 450
fixit in adverso cornum sine cuspidе vultu?
vecte Pelethronium Macareus in pectus adacto stravit Erigdupum; memini et venabula condi inguine Nesseis manibus coniecta Cymeli.
nec tu credideris tantum cecinisse futura 455 Ampyciden Mopsum: Mopso iaculante biformis occubuit frustra loqui temptavit Hodites ad mentum lingua mentoque ad guttura fixo.

‘Quinque neci Caeneus dederat Styphelumque vulnera non memini, numerum nomenque notavi.

provocat Emathii spoliis armatus Halesi, quem dederat leto, membris et corpore Latreus maximus: huic aetas inter iuvenemque senemque, vis iuvenalis erat, variabant tempora cani. 465 qui clipeo galeaque Macedoniaque sarisa conspicuus faciemque obversus in agmen utrumque armaque concussit certumque equitavit in orbem verbaque tot fudit vacuas animosus in auras: “et te, Caeni, feram? nam tu mihi femina semper, 470 tu mihi Caenis eris. nec te natalis origo commonuit, mentemque subit, quo praemia facto quaque viri falsam speciem mercede pararis?
quid sis nata, vide, vel quid sis passa, columque,
i, cape cum calathis et stamina pollice torque; 475 bella relinque viris.” iactanti talia Caeneus extentum cursu missa latus eruit hasta, qua vir equo commissus erat. furit ille dolore nudaque Phyllei iuvenis ferit ora sarisa:
non secus haec resilit, quam tecti a culmine grando, 480 aut si quis parvo feriat cava tympana saxo.
comminus adgreditur laterique recondere duro luctatur gladium: gladio loca pervia non sunt.
“haut tamen effugies! medio iugulaberis ense, quandoquidem mucro est hebes” inquit et in latus ensem 485
obliquat longaue amplectitur ilia dextra.
plaga facit gemitus ut corpore marmoris icto, fractaque dissiluit percusso lammina callo.
ut satis inlaesos miranti praebuit artus, “nunc age” ait Caeneus “nostro tua corpora ferro 490 temptemus!” capuloque tenuis demisit in armos ensem fatiferum caecamque in viscera movit versavitque manum vulnusque in vulnere fecit.
ecce ruunt vasto rabidi clamore bimembres telaque in hunc omnes unum mittuntque feruntque. 495 tela retusa cadunt: manet inperfossus ab omni inque cruentatus Caeneus Elateius ictu.

fecerat attonitos nova res. "heu dedecus ingens!" Monychus exclamat. "populus superamur ab uno vixque viro; quamquam ille vir est, nos segnibus actis, 500 quod fuit ille, sumus. quid membra inmania prosunt?
quid geminae vires et quod fortissima rerum in nobis natura duplex animalia iunxit?
nec nos matre dea, nec nos Ixione natos esse reor, qui tantus erat, Iunonis ut altae 505 spem caperet: nos semimari superamur ab hoste!
saxa trabesque super totosque involvite montes vivacemque animam missis elidite silvis!
massa premat fauces, et erit pro vulnere pondus."
dixit et insanis deiectam viribus austri 510 forte trabem nactus validum coniecit in hostem exemplumque fuit, parvoque in tempore nudus arboris Othrys erat, nec habebat Pelion umbras. obrutus inmani cumulo sub pondere Caeneus aestuat arboreo congestaque robora duris 515 fert umeris, sed enim postquam super ora caputque crevit onus neque habet, quas ducat, spiritus auras, deficit interdum, modo se super aera frustra tollere conatur iactasque evolvere silvas interdumque movet, veluti, quam cernimus, ecce, 520 ardua si terrae quatiatur motibus Ide.
exitus in dubio est: alii sub inania corpus Tartara detrusum silvarum mole ferebant; abnuit Ampycides medioque ex aggere fulvis vidit avem pennis liquidas exire sub auras, 525 quae mihi tum primum, tunc est conspecta supremum.
hanc ubi lustrantem leni sua castra volatu Mopsus et ingenti circum clangore sonantem adspexit pariterque animis oculisque secutus
"o salve," dixit "Lapithaeae gloria gentis, 530

maxime vir quondam, sed nunc avis unica, Caencu!"
credita res auctore suo est: dolor addidit iram, oppressumque aegre tulimus tot ab hostibus unum;
nec prius abstitimus ferro exercere dolorem, quam data pars leto, partem fuga noxque removit.' 535

Haec inter Lapithas et semihomines Centauros proelia Tlepolemus Pylio referente dolorem praeteriti Alcidae tacito non pertulit ore atque ait: 'Herculeae mirum est obliviam laudis acta tibi, senior; certe mihi saepe referre 540 nubigenas domitos a se pater esse solebat.'
tristis ad haec Pylius: 'quid me meminisse malorum cogis et obductos annis rescindere luctus inque tuum genitorem odium offensasque fateri?
ille quidem maiora fide, di! gessit et orbem 545 inplevit meritis, quod mallem posse negare; sed neque Deiphobum nec Pulydamanta nec ipsum Hectora laudamus: quis enim laudaverit hostem?
ille tuus genitor Messenia moenia quondam stravit et inmeritas urbes Elinque Pylonque 550 diruit inque meos ferrum flammamque penatis inpulit, utque alios taceam, quos ille peremit, mira Periclymeni mors est, cui posse figuras sumere, quas vellet, rursusque reponere sumptas Neptunus dederat, Nelei sanguinis auctor.

hic ubi nequiquam est formas variatus in omnes, vertitur in faciem volucris, quae fulmina curvis 560 ferre solet pedibus divum gratissima regi;
viribus usus avis pennis rostroque redunco hamatisque viri laniaverat unguibus ora.
tendit in hanc nimium certos Tiryntius arcus atque inter nubes sublimia membra ferentem 565 pendentemque ferit, lateri qua iungitur ala;

nec grave vulnus erat, sed rupti vulnere nervi deficiunt motumque negant viresque volandi.
decidit in terram, non concipientibus auras infirmis pennis, et qua levis haeserat alae 570 corporis adflicti pressa est gravitate sagitta perque latus summum iugulo est exacta sinistro.
nunc videor debere tui praeconia rebus Herculis, o Rhodiae ductor pulcherrime classis?
nec tamen ulterius, quam fortia facta silendo 575 ulciscor fratres: solida est mihi gratia tecum.'

Haec postquam dulci Neleius edidit ore, a sermone senis repetito munere Bacchi surrexere toris: nox est data cetera somno.

At deus, aequoreas qui cuspide temperat undas, 580 in volucrem corpus nati Phaethontida versum mente dolet patria saevumque perosus Achillem exercet memores plus quam civiliter iras.
iamque fere tracto duo per quinquennia bello talibus intonsum compellat Sminthea dictis: 585
'o mihi de fratris longe gratissime natis, inrita qui mecum posuisti moenia Troiae, ecquid, ubi has iamiam casuras adspicis arces, ingemis? aut ecquid tot defendentia muros milia caesa doles? ecquid, ne persequar omnes, 590 Hectoris umbra subit circum sua Pergama tracti?
cum tamen ille ferox belloque cruentior ipso vivit adhuc, operis nostri populator, Achilles.
det mihi se: faxo, triplici quid cuspide possim, sentiat; at quoniam concurrere comminus hosti 595
non datur, occulta necopinum perde sagitta!
adnuit atque animo pariter patruique suoque Delius indulgens nebula velatus in agmen pervenit Iliacum mediaque in caede virorum rara per ignotos spargentem cernit Achivos 600 tela Parin fassusque deum, 'quid spicula perdis sanguine plebis?' ait. 'siqua est tibi cura tuorum, vertere in Aeaciden caesosque ulciscere fratres!

dixit et ostendens sternentem Troica ferro corpora Peliden, arcus obvertit in illum 605 certaque letifera derexit spicula dextra.
quod Priamus gaudere senex post Hectora posset, hoc fuit; ille igitur tantorum victor, Achille, victus es a timido Graiae raptore maritae!
at si femineo fuerat tibi Marte cadendum, 610
Thermodontiaca malles cecidisse bipenni.

Iam timor ille Phrygum, decus et tutela Pelasgi nominis, Aeacides, caput insuperabile bello, arserat: armarat deus idem idemque cremarat;
iam cinis est, et de tam magno restat Achille 615 nescio quid parvum, quod non bene conpleat urnam, at vivit totum quae gloria conpleat orbem.
haec illi mensura viro respondet, et hac est par sibi Pelides nec inania Tartara sentit.
ipse etiam, ut, cuius fuerit, cognoscere posses, 620 bella movet clipeus, deque armis arma feruntur.
non ea Tydides, non audet Oileos Ajax, non minor Atrides, non bello maior et aevo poscere, non alii: solis Telamone creatis Laertaque fuit tantae fiducia laudis. 625 a se Tantalides onus invidiamque removit Argolicosque duces mediis considerare castris iussit et arbitrium litis traiecit in omnes.

LIBER TERTIVS DECIMVS

Consedere duces et vulgi stante corona surgit ad hos clipei dominus septemplicis Ajax, utque erat inpatiens irae, Sigeia torvo litora respexit classemque in litore vultu intendensque manus 'agimus, pro Iuppiter!' inquit 5
'ante rates causam, et mecum confertur Ulixes!
at non Hectoreis dubitavit cedere flammis, quas ego sustinui, quas hac a classe fugavi.
tutius est igitur fictis contendere verbis, quam pugnare manu, sed nec mihi dicere promptum, 10 nec facere est isti: quantumque ego Marte feroci inque acie valeo, tantum valet iste loquendo.
nec memoranda tamen vobis mea facta, Pelasgi, esse reor: vidistis enim; sua narret Ulixes, quae sine teste gerit, quorum nox conscia sola est! 15 praemia magna peti fateor; sed demit honorem aemulus: Aiaci non est tenuisse superbum, sit licet hoc ingens, quicquid speravit Ulixes;
iste tulit pretium iam nunc temptaminis huius, quod, cum victus erit, mecum certasse feretur. 20
'Atque ego, si virtus in me dubitabilis esset, nobilitate potens essem, Telamone creatus, moenia qui forti Troiana sub Hercule cepit litoraque intravit Pagasaea Colcha carina; Aeacus huic pater est, qui iura silentibus illic 25 reddit, ubi Aeoliden saxum grave Sisyphon urget; Aeacon agnoscit summus prolemque fatetur Iuppiter esse suam: sic a Iove tertius Ajax.
nec tamen haec series in causam prosit, Achivi, si mihi cum magno non est communis Achille: 30 frater erat, fraterna peto! quid sanguine cretus

Sisyphio furtisque et fraude simillimus illi inseriris Aeacidis alienae nomina gentis?

'An quod in arma prior nulloque sub indice veni, arma neganda mihi, potiorque videbitur ille, 35 ultima qui cepit detractavitque furore militiam ficto, donec sollertior isto sed sibi inutilior timidi commenta retexit Naupliades animi vitataque traxit ad arma?
optima num sumat, quia sumere noluit ulla: 40 nos inhonorati et donis patruelibus orbi, obtulimus quia nos ad prima pericula, simus?

'Atque utinam aut verus furor ille, aut creditus esset, nec comes hic Phrygias umquam venisset ad arces hortator scelerum! non te, Poeantia proles, 45 expositum Lemnos nostro cum crimine haberet!
qui nunc, ut memorant, silvestribus abditus antris saxa moves gemitu Laertiadaeque precaris, quae meruit, quae, si di sunt, non vana precaris.
et nunc ille eadem nobis iuratus in arma, 50 heu! pars una ducum, quo successore sagittae Herculis utuntur, fractus morboque fameque velaturque aliturque avibus, volucresque petendo debita Troianis exercet spicula fati.

ille tamen vivit, quia non comitavit Ulixem; 55 mallet et infelix Palamedes esse relictus, [viveret aut certe letum sine crimine haberet] quem male convicti nimium memor iste furoris prodere rem Danaam finxit fictumque probavit crimen et ostendit, quod iam praefoderat, aurum. 60 ergo aut exilio vires subduxit Achivis, aut nece: sic pugnat, sic est metuendus Ulixes!

'Qui licet eloquio fidum quoque Nestora vincat, haut tamen efficiet, desertum ut Nestora crimen esse rear nullum; qui cum inploraret Ulixem 65 vulnere tardus equi fessusque senilibus annis, proditus a socio est; non haec mihi crimina fingi scit bene Tydides, qui nomine saepe vocatum corripuit trepidoque fugam exprobravit amico.

aspiciunt oculis superi mortalia iustis! 70 en eget auxilio, qui non tulit, utque reliquit, sic linquendus erat: legem sibi dixerat ipse.
conclamat socios: adsum videoque trementem pallentemque metu et trepidantem morte futura; opposui molem clipei texique iacentem 75 servavique animam (minimum est hoc laudis) inertem.
si perstas certare, locum redeamus in illum:
redde hostem vulnusque tuum solitumque timorem post clipeumque late et mecum contende sub illo!
at postquam eripui, cui standi vulnera vires 80 non dederant, nullo tardatus vulnere fugit.

'Hector adest secumque deos in proelia ducit, quaque ruit, non tu tantum terreris, Ulixé, sed fortes etiam: tantum trahit ille timoris.
hunc ego sanguineae successu caedis ovantem 85
eminus ingenti resupinum pondere fudi, hunc ego poscentem, cum quo concurreret, unus sustinui: sortemque meam vovistis, Achivi, et vestrae valere preces. si quaeritis huius fortunam pugnae, non sum superatus ab illo. 90 ecce ferunt Troes ferrumque ignesque lovemque in Danaas classes: ubi nunc facundus Ulixes?
nempe ego mille meo protexi pectore puppes, spem vestri reditus: date pro tot navibus arma.

'Quodsi vera licet mihi dicere, quaeritur istis 95
quam mihi maior honos, coniunctaque gloria nostra est, atque Ajax armis, non Aiaci arma petuntur.
conferat his Ithacus Rhesum inbellemque Dolona Priamidenque Helenum rapta cum Pallade captum:
luce nihil gestum, nihil est Diomedé remoto; 100 si semel ista datis meritis tam vilibus arma, dividite, et pars sit maior Diomedis in illis.

'Quo tamen haec Ithaco, qui clam, qui semper inermis rem gerit et furtis incautum decipit hostem?

ipse nitor galeae claro radiantis ab auro 105 insidias prodet manifestabitque latentem; sed neque Dulichius sub Achillis casside vertex pondera tanta feret, nec non onerosa gravisque Pelias hasta potest inbellibus esse lacertis, nec clipeus vasti caelatus imagine mundi 110 conveniet timidae nataeque ad furta sinistrae:
debilitaturum quid te petis, inprobe, munus, quod tibi si populi donaverit error Achivi, cur spolieris, erit, non, cur metuaris ab hoste, et fuga, qua sola cunctos, timidissime, vincis, 115
tarda futura tibi est gestamina tanta trahenti?
adde quod iste tuus, tam raro proelia passus, integer est clipeus; nostro, qui tela ferendo mille patet plagis, novus est successor habendus.

‘Denique (quid verbis opus est?) spectemur agendo! 120 arma viri fortis medios mittantur in hostes:
inde iubete peti et referentem ornate relatis.’

Finierat Telamone satus, vulgique secutum ultima murmur erat, donec Laertius heros adstitit atque oculos paulum tellure moratos 125 sustulit ad proceres exspectatoque resolvit ora sono, neque abest facundis gratia dictis.

‘Si mea cum vestris valuissent vota, Pelasgi, non foret ambiguus tanti certaminis heres, tuque tuis armis, nos te poteremur, Achille, 130 quem quoniam non aequa mihi vobisque negarunt fata,’ (manuque simul veluti lacrimantia tersit lumina) ‘quis magno melius succedat Achilli, quam per quem magnus Danais successit Achilles?
huic modo ne prosit, quod, uti est, hebes esse videtur, 135 neve mihi noceat, quod vobis semper, Achivi, profuit ingenium, meaque haec facundia, siqua est,
quae nunc pro domino, pro vobis saepe locuta est, invidia careat, bona nec sua quisque recuset.

'Nam genus et proavos et quae non fecimus ipsi, 140
vix ea nostra voco, sed enim, quia rettulit Ajax esse Iovis pronepos, nostri quoque sanguinis auctor Iuppiter est, totidemque gradus distamus ab illo:
nam mihi Laertes pater est, Arcesius illi, Iuppiter huic, neque in his quisquam damnatus et exul; 145 est quoque per matrem Cyllenius addita nobis altera nobilitas: deus est in utroque parente.
sed neque materno quod sum generosior ortu, nec mihi quod pater est fraterni sanguinis insons, proposita arma peto: meritis expendite causam, 150 dummodo, quod fratres Telamon Peleusque fuerunt, Aiaceis meritum non sit nec sanguinis ordo, sed virtutis honor spoliis quaeratur in istis!
aut si proximitas primusque requiritur heres, est genitor Peleus, est Pyrrhus filius illi: 155 quis locus Aiacei? Pthiam haec Scyrumve ferantur!
nec minus est isto Teucer patruelis Achilli:
num petit ille tamen? num, si petat, auferat illa?
ergo, operum quoniam nudum certamen habetur, plura quidem feci, quam quae comprehendere dictis 160
in promptu mihi sit, rerum tamen ordine ducar.

'Praescia venturi genetrix Nereia Ieti dissimulat cultu natum, et deceperat omnes, in quibus Aiacem, sumptae fallacia vestis:
arma ego femineis animum motura virilem 165 mercibus inserui, neque adhuc proiecerat heros virgineos habitus, cum parmam hastamque tenenti
"nate dea," dixi "tibi se peritura reservant Pergama! quid dubitas ingentem evertere Troiam?" inieci que manum fortemque ad fortia misi. 170 ergo opera illius mea sunt: ego Telephon hasta pugnantem domui, victum orantemque refeci;
quod Thebae cecidere, meum est; me credite Lesbon, me Tenedon Chrysenque et Cillan, Apollinis urbes, et Scyrum cepisse; mea concussa putate 175

procubuisse solo Lyrnesia moenia dextra, utque alios taceam, qui saevum perdere posset Hectora, nempe dedi: per me iacet inclitus Hector!
illis haec armis, quibus est inventus Achilles, arma peto: vivo dederam, post fata reposco. 180

‘Ut dolor unius Danaos pervenit ad omnes, Aulidaque Euboicam conplerunt mille carinae, expectata diu, nulla aut contraria classi flamina erant, duraeque iubent Agamemnona sortes inmeritam saevae natam mactare Dianae. 185 denegat hoc genitor divisque irascitur ipsis atque in rege tamen pater est, ego mite parentis ingenium verbis ad publica commoda verti:
hanc equidem (fateor, fassoque ignoscat Atrides) difficilem tenui sub iniquo iudice causam. 190 hunc tamen utilitas populi fraterque datique summa movet sceptri, laudem ut cum sanguine penset; mittor et ad matrem, quae non hortanda, sed astu decipienda fuit, quo si Telamonius isset, orba suis essent etiam nunc linthea ventis. 195

‘Mittor et Iliacas audax orator ad arces, visaque et intrata est altae mihi curia Troiae, plenaque adhuc erat illa viris; interritus egi quam mihi mandarat communem Graecia causam accusoque Parin praedamque Helenamque reposco 200 et moveo Priamum Priamoque Antenora iunctum;
at Paris et fratres et qui rapuere sub illo, vix tenere manus (scis hoc, Menelae) nefandas, primaque lux nostri tecum fuit illa pericli.

‘Longa referre mora est, quae consilioque manumque 205 utiliter feci spatiosi tempore belli.
post acies primas urbis se moenibus hostes continuere diu, nec aperti copia Martis ulla fuit; decimo demum pugnavimus anno:
quid facis interea, qui nil nisi proelia nosti? 210
quis tuus usus erat? nam si mea facta requiris, hostibus insidior, fossa munimina cingo, consolor socios, ut longi taedia belli mente ferant placida, doceo, quo simus alendi armandique modo, mittor, quo postulat usus. 215

‘Ecce Iovis monitu deceptus imagine somni rex iubet incepti curam dimittere belli;
ille potest auctore suam defendere vocem:
non sinat hoc Ajax delendaque Pergama poscat, quodque potest, pugnet! cur non remoratur ituros? 220 cur non arma capit, dat, quod vaga turba sequatur?
non erat hoc nimium numquam nisi magna loquenti.
quid, quod et ipse fugit? vidi, puduitque videre, cum tu terga dares inhonestaque vela parares;
nec mora, “quid facitis? quae vos dementia” dixi 225 “conciat, o socii, captam dimittere Troiam, quidque domum fertis decimo, nisi dedecus, anno?”
talibus atque aliis, in quae dolor ipse disertum fecerat, aversos profuga de classe reduxi.
convocat Atrides socios terrore paventes: 230 nec Telamoniades etiamnunc hiscere quicquam audet, at ausus erat reges incessere dictis Thersites etiam, per me haut inpune protervis!
erigor et trepidos cives exhortor in hostem amissamque mea virtutem voce repono. 235 tempore ab hoc, quodcumque potest fecisse videri fortiter iste, meum est, qui dantem terga retraxi.

‘Denique de Danais quis te laudatve petitve?
at sua Tydides mecum communicat acta, me probat et socio semper confidit Ulixes. 240 est aliquid, de tot Graiorum milibus unum a Diomede legi! nec me sors ire iubebat:
sic tamen et spreto noctisque hostisque periculo ausum eadem, quae nos, Phrygia de gente Dolona interimo, non ante tamen, quam cuncta coegi 245 prodere et edidici, quid perfida Troia pararet.
omnia cognoram nec, quod specularer, habebam et iam promissa poteram cum laude reverti:

haut contentus eo petii tentoria Rhesi inque suis ipsum castris comitesque peremi 250 atque ita captivo, victor votisque potitus, ingredior curru laetos imitante triumphos;
cuius equos pretium pro nocte poposcerat hostis, arma negate mihi, fueritque benignior Ajax.
quid Lycii referam Sarpedonis agmina ferro 255 devastata meo? cum multo sanguine fudi Coeranon Iphitiden et Alastoraque Chromiumque Alcandrumque Haliumque Noemonaque Prytaniumque exitioque dedi cum Chersidamante Thoona et Charopem fatisque inmitibus Ennomon actum 260 quique minus celebres nostra sub moenibus urbis procubuere manu. sunt et mihi vulnera, cives, ipso pulchra loco; nec vanis credite verbis, aspicite! en' vestemque manu diduxit et 'haec sunt pectora semper' ait 'vestris exercita rebus! 265 at nihil inpendit per tot Telamonius annos sanguinis in socios et habet sine vulnere corpus!

'Quid tamen hoc refert, si se pro classe Pelasga arma tulisse refert contra Troasque Iovemque? confiteorque, tulit (neque enim benefacta maligne 270 detractare meum est), sed ne communia solus occupet atque aliquem vobis quoque reddat honorem, reppulit Actorides sub imagine tutus Achillis Troas ab arsuris cum defensore carinis. ausum etiam Hectoreis solum concurrere telis 275 se putat, oblitus regisque ducumque meique, nonus in officio et praelatus munere sortis.
sed tamen eventus vestrae, fortissime, pugnae quis fuit? Hector abit violatus vulnere nullo!

'Me miserum, quanto cogor meminisse dolore 280 temporis illius, quo, Graium murus, Achilles procubuit! nec me lacrimae luctusque timorque tardarunt, quin corpus humo sublime referrem:

his umeris, his inquam, umeris ego corpus Achillis et simul arma tuli, quae nunc quoque ferre laboro. 285 sunt mihi, quae valeant in talia pondera, vires, est animus certe vestros sensurus honores:
scilicet idcirco pro nato caerulea mater ambitiosa suo fuit, ut caelestia dona, artis opus tantae, rudis et sine pectore miles 290 indueret? neque enim clipei caelamina novit, Oceanum et terras cumque alto sidera caelo Pleiadasque Hyadasque innumquam aequoris Arcton diversosque orbis nitidumque Orionis ensem.
[postulat, ut capiat, quae non intellegit, arma!] 295

‘Quid, quod me duri fugientem munera belli arguit incepto serum accessisse labori nec se magnanimo maledicere sentit Achilli?
si simulasse vocas crimen, simulavimus ambo;
si mora pro culpa est, ego sum maturior illo. 300 me pia detinuit coniunx, pia mater Achillem, primaque sunt illis data tempora, cetera vobis:
haut timeo, si iam nequeam defendere, crimen cum tanto commune viro: deprensus Ulixis ingenio tamen ille, at non Aiakis Ulixes. 305

‘Neve in me stolidae convicia fundere linguae admiremur eum, vobis quoque digna pudore obicit. an falso Palameden crimine turpe accusasse mihi, vobis damnasse decorum est?
sed neque Naupliades facinus defendere tantum 310 tamque patens valuit, nec vos audistis in illo crimina: vidistis, pretioque obiecta patebant.

‘Nec, Poeantiaden quod habet Vulcania Lemnos, esse reus merui (factum defendite vestrum! consensistis enim), nec me suasisse negabo, 315 ut se subtraheret bellique viaeque labori temptaretque feros requie lenire dolores.
paruit — et vivit! non haec sententia tantum fida, sed et felix, cum sit satis esse fidelem.

quem quoniam vates delenda ad Pergama poscunt, 320 ne mandate mihi! melius Telamonius ibit eloquioque virum morbis iraque furentem molliet aut aliqua producet callidus arte!
ante retro Simois fluet et sine frondibus Ide stabit, et auxilium promittet Achaia Troiae, 325 quam, cessante meo pro vestris pectore rebus, Aiacis stolidi Danais sollertia prosit.
sis licet infestus sociis regique mihi dure Philoctete, licet exsecrere meumque devoveas sine fine caput cupiasque dolenti 330 me tibi forte dari nostrumque haurire cruorem, utque tui mihi sit, fiat tibi copia nostri:
te tamen adgrediar mecumque reducere nitar tamque tuis potiar (faveat Fortuna) sagittis, quam sum Dardanio, quem cepi, vate potitus, 335
quam responsa deum Troianaque fata retexi, quam rapui Phrygiae signum penetrale Minervae hostibus e mediis. et se mihi conferat Ajax?
nempe capi Troiam prohibebant fata sine illo:
fortis ubi est Ajax? ubi sunt ingentia magni 340
verba viri? cur hic metuis? cur audet Ulixes ire per excubias et se committere nocti perque feros enses non tantum moenia Troium, verum etiam summas arces intrare suaque eripere aede deam raptamque adferre per hostes? 345 quae nisi fecissem, frustra Telamone creatus gestasset laeva taurorum tergora septem.
illa nocte mihi Troiae victoria parta est:
Pergama tunc vici, cum vinci posse coegi.
    'Desine Tydiden vultuque et murmure nobis 350
ostentare meum: pars est sua laudis in illo!
nec tu, cum socia clipeum pro classe tenebas, solus eras: tibi turba comes, mihi contigit unus.
qui nisi pugnacem sciret sapiente minorem esse nec indomitae deberi praemia dextrae, 355

ipse quoque haec peteret; peteret moderatior Ajax Eurypylusque ferox claroque Andraemone natus nec minus Idomeneus patriaque creatus eadem Meriones, peteret maioris frater Atridae:
quippe manu fortes nec sunt mihi Marte secundi, 360 consiliis cessere meis. tibi dextera bello utilis, ingenium est, quod eget moderamine nostro;
tu vires sine mente geris, mihi cura futuri;
tu pugnare potes, pugnandi tempora mecum eligit Atrides; tu tantum corpore prodes, 365 nos animo; quantoque ratem qui temperat, anteit remigis officium, quanto dux milite maior, tantum ego te supero. nec non in corpore nostro pectora sunt potiora manu: vigor omnis in illis.

‘At vos, o proceres, vigili date praemia vestro, 370 proque tot annorum cura, quibus anxius egi, hunc titulum meritis pensandum reddite nostris:
iam labor in fine est; obstantia fata removi altaque posse capi faciendo Pergama, cepi.
per spes nunc socias casuraque moenia Troium 375
perque deos oro, quos hosti nuper ademi, per siquid superest, quod sit sapienter agendum, siquid adhuc audax ex praecipitique petendum est, [si Troiae fati aliquid restare putatis,] este mei memores! aut si mihi non datis arma, 380 huic date!’ et ostendit signum fatale Minervae.

Mota manus procerum est, et quid facundia posset, re patuit, fortisque viri tulit arma disertus.
Hectora qui solus, qui ferrum ignesque lovemque sustinuit totiens, unam non sustinet iram, 385 invictumque virum vicit dolor: arripit ensem et ‘meus hic certe est! an et hunc sibi poscit Ulixes?
hoc’ ait ‘utendum est in me mihi, quique cruore saepe Phrygum maduit, domini nunc caede madebit, ne quisquam Aiace[m] possit superare nisi Ajax.’ 390
dixit et in pectus tum demum vulnera passum, qua patuit ferrum, letalem condidit ensem.

nec valere manus infixum educere telum:
expulit ipse cruor, rubefactaque sanguine tellus purpureum viridi genuit de caespite florem, 395 qui prius Oebalio fuerat de vulnere natus;
littera communis mediis pueroque viroque inscripta est foliis, haec nominis, illa querellae.

Victor ad Hypsipyles patriam clarique Thoantis et veterum terras infames caede virorum 400 vela dat, ut referat Tirynthia tela, sagittas;
quae postquam ad Graios domino comitante revexit, inposita est sero tandem manus ultima bello.
[Troia simul Priamusque cadunt. Priameia coniunx perdidit infelix hominis post omnia formam 405 externasque novo latratu terruit auras, longus in angustum qua clauditur Hellespontus.] Ilion ardebat, neque adhuc consederat ignis, exiguumque senis Priami Iovis ara cruorem conbiberat, tractata comis antistita Phoebi 410 non profecturas tendebat ad aethera palmas; Dardanidas matres patriorum signa deorum, dum licet, amplexas succensaque templa tenentes invidiosa trahunt victores praemia Grai; mittitur Astyanax illis de turribus, unde 415 pugnantem pro se proavitaque regna tuentem saepe videre patrem monstratum a matre solebat.
iamque viam suadet Boreas, flatuque secundo carbasa mota sonant: iubet uti navita ventis;
'Troia, vale! rapimur' clamant, dant oscula terrae 420
Troades et patriae fumantia tecta relinquunt.
ultima conscendit classem — miserabile visu! —
in mediis Hecabe natorum inventa sepulcris:
prensantem tumulos atque ossibus oscula dantem Dulichiae traxere manus, tamen unius hausit 425 inque sinu cineres secum tulit Hectoris haustos; Hectoris in tumulo canum de vertice crinem,

inferias inopes, crinem lacrimasque reliquit, Est, ubi Troia fuit, Phrygiae contraria tellus Bistoniis habitata viris: Polymestoris illic 430 regia dives erat, cui te commisit alendum clam, Polydore, pater Phrygiisque removit ab armis, consilium sapiens, sceleris nisi praemia magnas adiecisset opes, animi inritamen avari.

ut cecidit fortuna Phrygum, capit inpius ensem 435 rex Thracum iuguloque sui demisit alumni et, tamquam tolli cum corpore crimina possent, exanimem scopulo subiectas misit in undas.

Litore Threicio classem religarat Atrides, dum mare pacatum, dum ventus amicier esset: 440 hic subito, quantus, cum viveret, esse solebat, exit humo late rupta similisque minanti temporis illius vultum referebat Achilles, quo ferus iniustum petiit Agamemnona ferro
'inmemores' que 'mei disceditis,' inquit 'Achivi, 445 obrutaque est mecum virtutis gratia nostrae!
ne facite! utque meum non sit sine honore sepulcrum, placet Achilleos mactata Polyxena manes!'
dixit, et inmiti sociis parentibus umbrae, rapta sinu matris, quam iam prope sola fovebat, 450 fortis et infelix et plus quam femina virgo ducitur ad tumulum diroque fit hostia busto.
quae memor ipsa sui postquam crudelibus aris admota est sensitque sibi fera sacra parari, utque Neoptoleum stantem ferrumque tenentem; 455
inque suo vidit figentem lumina vultu,
'utere iamdudum generoso sanguine' dixit
'nulla mora est; at tu iugulo vel pectore telum conde meo' iugulumque simul pectusque retexit.
'scilicet haud ulli servire Polyxena vellem. 460
haud per tale sacrum numen placabitis ullum!
mors tantum vellem matrem mea fallere posset:
mater obest minuitque necis mihi gaudia, quamvis non mea mors illi, verum sua vita tremenda est.

vos modo, ne Stygios adeam non libera manes, 465 ite procul, si iusta peto, tactuque viriles virgineo removete manus! acceptior illi, quisquis is est, quem caede mea placare paratis, liber erit sanguis. siquos tamen ultima nostri verba movent oris (Priami vos filia regis, 470 non captiva rogat), genetrici corpus inemptum reddite, neve auro redimat ius triste sepulcri, sed lacrimis! tum, cum poterat, redimebat et auro.'
dixerat, at populus lacrimas, quas illa tenebat, non tenet; ipse etiam flens invitique sacerdos 475
praebita coniecto rupit praecordia ferro.
illa super terram defecto poplite labens pertulit intrepidus ad fata novissima vultus;
tunc quoque cura fuit partes velare tegendas, cum caderet, castique decus servare pudoris. 480

Troades excipiunt deploratosque recensent Priamidas et quot dederit domus una cruores, teque gemunt, virgo, teque, o modo regia coniunx, regia dicta parens, Asiae florentis imago, nunc etiam praedae mala sors; quam victor Ulixes 485 esse suam nollet, nisi quod tamen Hectora partu edideras: dominum matri vix repperit Hector!
quae corpus complexa animae tam fortis inane, quas totiens patriae dederat natisque viroque, huic quoque dat lacrimas; lacrimas in vulnera fundit 490 osculaque ore tegit consuetaque pectora plangit canitiemque suam concretam sanguine vellens plura quidem, sed et haec laniato pectore, dixit:
'nata, tuae — quid enim superest? — dolor ultime matris, nata, iaces, videoque tuum, mea vulnera, vulnus: 495 en, ne perdiderim quemquam sine caede meorum, tu quoque vulnus habes; at te, quia femina, rebar
a ferro tutam: cecidisti et femina ferro, totque tuos idem fratres, te perdidit idem, exitium Troiae nostrique orbator, Achilles; 500

at postquam cecidit Paridis Phoebique sagittis, nunc certe, dixi, non est metuendus Achilles:
nunc quoque mi metuendus erat; cinis ipse sepulti in genus hoc saevit, tumulo quoque sensimus hostem: Aeacidae fecunda fui! iacet Ilion ingens, 505 eventuque gravi finita est publica clades, sed finita tamen; soli mihi Pergama restant.
in cursuque meus dolor est: modo maxima rerum, tot generis natisque potens nuribusque viroque nunc trahor exul, inops, tumultis avulsa meorum, 510 Penelopae munus, quae me data pensa trahentem matribus ostendens Ithacis "haec Hectoris illa est clara parens, haec est" dicet "Priameia coniunx," postque tot amissos tu nunc, quae sola levabas maternos luctus, hostilia busta piasti! 515 inferias hosti peperisti! quo ferrea resto?
quidve moror? quo me servas, annosa senectus?
quo, di crudeles, nisi uti nova funera cernam, vivacem differtis anum? quis posse putaret felicem Priamum post diruta Pergama dici? 520 felix morte sua est! nec te, mea nata, peremptam adspicit et vitam pariter regnumque reliquit.
at, puto, funeribus dotabere, regia virgo, condeturque tuum monumentis corpus avitis!
non haec est fortuna domus: tibi munera matris 525 contingent fletus peregrinaeque haustus harenae!
omnia perdidimus: superest, cur vivere tempus in breve sustineam, proles gratissima matri, nunc solus, quondam minimus de stirpe virili, has datus Ismario regi Polydorus in oras. 530 quid moror interea crudelia vulnera lymphis abluere et sparsos inmiti sanguine vultus?'

Dixit et ad litus passu processit anili, albentes lacerata comas. 'date, Troades, urnam!
dixerat infelix, liquidas hauriret ut undas: 535 adspicit eiectum Polydori in litore corpus factaque Threiciis ingentia vulnera telis; Troades exclamant, obmutuit illa dolore, et pariter vocem lacrimasque introrsus obortas devorat ipse dolor, duroque simillima saxo 540 torpet et adversa figit modo lumina terra, interdum torvos sustollit ad aethera vultus, nunc positi spectat vultum, nunc vulnera nati, vulnera praecipue, seque armat et instruit ira.

qua simul exarsit, tamquam regina maneret, 545 ulcisci statuit poenaeque in imagine tota est, utque furit catulo lactente orbata leaena signaque nacta pedum sequitur, quem non videt, hostem, sic Hecabe, postquam cum luctu miscuit iram, non oblita animorum, annorum oblita suorum, 550 vadit ad artificem dirae, Polymestora, caedis conloquiumque petit; nam se monstrare relictum velle latens illi, quod nato redderet, aurum.
credidit Odrysius praedaeque adsuetus amore in secreta venit: tum blando callidus ore 555
'tolle moras, Hecabe,' dixit 'da munera nato!
omne fore illius, quod das, quod et ante dedisti, per superos iuro.' spectat truculenta loquentem falsaque iurantem tumidaque exaestuat ira atque ita correpto captivarum agmina matrum 560 invocat et digitos in perfida lumina condit expellitque genis oculos (facit ira potentem) inmergitque manus foedataque sanguine sonti non lumen (neque enim superest), loca luminis haurit.
clade sui Thracum gens inritata tyranni 565 Troada telorum lapidumque incessere iactu coepit, at haec missum rauco cum murmure saxum morsibus insequitur rictuque in verba parato latravit, conata loqui: locus exstat et ex re nomen habet, veterumque diu memor illa malorum 570 tum quoque Sithonios ululavit maesta per agros.

illius Troasque suos hostesque Pelasgos, illius fortuna deos quoque moverat omnes, sic omnes, ut et ipsa Iovis coniunxque sororque eventus Hecabem meruisse negaverit illos. 575

Non vacat Aurorae, quamquam isdem faverat armis, cladibus et casu Troiaeque Hecabesque moveri.
cura deam propior luctusque domesticus angit Memnonis amissi, Phrygiis quem lutea campis vidit Achillea pereuntem cuspide mater; 580 vidit, et ille color, quo matutina rubescunt tempora, palluerat, latuitque in nubibus aether.
at non inpositos supremis ignibus artus sustinuit spectare parens, sed crine soluto sicut erat, magni genibus procumbere non est 585 dedignata Iovis lacrimisque has addere voces:
'omnibus inferior, quas sustinet aureus aether, (nam mihi sunt totum rarissima templa per orbem) diva tamen, veni, non ut delubra diesque des mihi sacrificos caliturasque ignibus aras: 590 si tamen adspicias, quantum tibi femina praestem, tum cum luce nova noctis confinia servo, praemia danda putes; sed non ea cura neque hic est nunc status Aurorae, meritos ut poscat honores: Memnonis orba mei venio, qui fortia frustra 595 pro patruo tulit arma suo primisque sub annis occidit a forti (sic vos voluistis) Achille.
da, precor, huic aliquem, solacia mortis, honorem, summe deum rector, maternaque vulnera leni!' Iuppiter adnuerat, cum Memnonis arduus alto 600 corrui igne rogos, nigrique volumina fumi infecere diem, veluti cum flumine Nais exhalat nebulas, nec sol admittitur infra; atra favilla volat glomerataque corpus in unum densetur faciemque capit sumitque calorem 605 atque animam ex igni (levitas sua praebuit alas) et primo similis volucris, mox vera volucris insonuit pennis, pariter sonuere sorores innumerae, quibus est eadem natalis origo, terque rogam lustrant, et consonus exit in auras 610

ter plangor, quarto seducunt castra volatu; tum duo diversa populi de parte feroces bella gerunt rostrisque et aduncis unguibus iras exercent alasque adversaque pectora lassant, inferiaeque cadunt cineri cognata sepulto 615 corpora seque viro forti meminere creatas.
praepetibus subitis nomen facit auctor: ab illo Memnonides dictae, cum sol duodena peregit signa, parentali moriturae more rebellant.
ergo aliis latrasse Dymantida flebile visum est; 620 luctibus est Aurora suis intenta piasque nunc quoque dat lacrimas et toto rorat in orbe.

Non tamen eversam Troiae cum moenibus esse spem quoque fata sinunt: sacra et, sacra altera, patrem fert umeris, venerabile onus, Cythereius heros. 625 de tantis opibus praedam pius eligit illam Ascaniumque suum profugaque per aequora classe fertur ab Antandro scelerataque limina Thracum et Polydoreo manantem sanguine terram linquit et utilibus ventis aestuque secundo 630 intrat Apollineam sociis comitantibus urbem.
hunc Anius, quo rege homines, antistite Phoebus rite colebatur, temploque domoque recepit urbemque ostendit delubraque nota duasque Latona quondam stirpes pariente retentas. 635 ture dato flammis vinoque in tura profuso caesarumque boum fibris de more crematis regia tecta petunt, positique tapetibus altis munera cum liquido capiunt Cerealia Baccho.
tum pius Anchises: 'o Phoebi lecte sacerdos, fallor, an et natum, cum primum haec moenia vidi, bisque duas natas, quantum reminiscor, habebas?'
huic Anius niveis circumdata tempora vittis concutiens et tristis ait: 'non falleris, heros maxime; vidisti natorum quinque parentem, quem nunc (tanta homines rerum inconstantia versat) paene vides orbem. quod enim mihi filius absens auxilium, quem dicta suo de nomine tellus Andros habet pro patre locumque et regna tenentem?

Delius augurium dedit huic, dedit altera Liber femineae stirpi voto maiora fideque munera: nam tactu natarum cuncta mearum in segetem laticemque meri canaeque Minervae transformabantur, divesque erat usus in illis.
hoc ubi cognovit Troiae populator Atrides, (ne non ex aliqua vestram sensisse procellam nos quoque parte putes), armorum viribus usus abstrahit invitas gremio genitoris alantque imperat Argolicam caelesti munere classem.
effugiunt, quo quaeque potest: Euboea duabus et totidem natis Andros fraterna petita est.
miles adest et, ni dedantur, bella minatur:
victa metu pietas consortia corpora poenae dedit; et timido possis ignoscere fratri:
non hic Aeneas, non, qui defenderet Andron, Hector erat, per quem decimum durastis in annum.
iamque parabantur captivis vincla lacertis:
illae tollentes etiamnum libera caelo bracchia "Bacche pater, fer opem!" dixere, tulitque muneris auctor opem, Æsi miro perdere more ferre vocatur opem, nec qua ratione figuram perdiderint, potui scire aut nunc dicere possum; summa mali nota est: pennas sumpsere tuaeque coniugis in volucres, niveas abiere columbas.'

Talibus atque aliis postquam convivia dictis inplerunt, mensa somnum petiere remota cumque die surgunt adeuntque oracula Phoebi, qui petere antiquam matrem cognataque iussit litora; prosequitur rex et dat munus ituris,

Anchisae sceptrum, chlamydem pharetramque nepoti, cratera Aeneae, quem quondam transtulit illi hospes ab Aoniis Therses Ismenius oris:
miserat hunc illi Therses, fabricaverat Alcon Hyleus et longo caelaverat argumento.
urbs erat, et septem posses ostendere portas:
hae pro nomine erant, et quae foret illa, docebant;
ante urbem exequiae tumulique ignesque rogique effusaeque comas et apertae pectora matres significant luctum; nymphae quoque flere videntur siccatosque queri fontes: sine frondibus arbor nuda riget, rodunt arentia saxa capellae.
ecce facit mediis natas Orione Thebis hac non femineum iugulo dare vulnus aperto, illac demisso per fortia pectora telo pro populo cecidisse suo pulchrisque per urbem funeribus ferri celebrique in parte cremari.
tum de virginea geminos exire favilla, ne genus intereat, iuvenes, quos fama Coronas nominat, et cineri materno ducere pompam.
hactenus antiquo signis fulgentibus aere, summus inaurato crater erat asper acantho.
nec leviora datis Troiani dona remittunt dantque sacerdoti custodem turis acerram, dant pateram claramque auro gemmisque coronam.

Inde recordati Teucros a sanguine Teucri ducere principium Creten tenuere locique ferre diu nequiere lovem centumque relictis urbibus Ausonios optant contingere portus, saevit hiems iactatque viros, Strophadumque receptos portibus infidis exterruit ales Aello.
et iam Dulichios portus Ithacamque Samonque Neritiasque domus, regnum fallacis Ulixis, praeter erant vecti: certatam lite deorum Ambraciam versique vident sub imagine saxum iudicis, Actiaco quae nunc ab Apolline nota est, vocalemque sua terram Dodonida quercu Chaoniosque sinus, ubi nati rege Molosso inopia subiectis fugere incendia pennis.

Proxima Phaeacum felicibus obsita pomis rura petunt, Epiros ab his regnataque vati Buthrotos Phrygio simulataque Troia tenetur; inde futurorum certi, quae cuncta fideli Priamides Helenus monitu praedixerat, intrant Sicaniam: tribus haec excurrit in aequora linguis, e quibus imbriferos est versa Pachynos ad austros, mollibus oppositum zephyris Lilybaeon, ad arctos aequoris expertes spectat boreaque Peloros.
hac subeunt Teucri, et remis aestuque secundo sub noctem potitur Zanclaea classis harena: Scylla latus dextrum, laevum inrequieta Charybdis infestat; vorat haec raptas revomitque carinas, illa feris atram canibus succingitur alvum, virginis ora gerens, et, si non omnia vates ficta reliquerunt, aliquo quoque tempore virgo:
hanc multi petiere proci, quibus illa repulsis ad pelagi nymphas, pelagi gratissima nymphis, ibat et elusos iuvenum narrabat amores.
cui dum pectendos praebet Galatea capillos, talibus adloquitur repetens suspiria dictis:
'te tamen, o virgo, genus haut inmite virorum expetit, utque facis, potes his inpune negare; at mihi, cui pater est Nereus, quam caerula Doris enixa est, quae sum turba quoque tuta sororum, non nisi per luctus licuit Cyclopis amorem effugere.' et lacrimae vocem inpediere loquentis.
quas ubi marmoreo deterisit pollice virgo et solata deam est, 'refer, o carissima' dixit
'neve tui causam tege (sic sum fida) doloris!'
Nereis his contra resecuta Crataeide natam est:
'Acis erat Fauno nymphaque Symaethide cretus magna quidem patrisque sui matrisque voluptas, nostra tamen maior; nam me sibi iunxerat uni.

pulcher et octonis iterum natalibus actis signarat teneras dubia lanugine malas.
hunc ego, me Cyclops nulla cum fine petebat.
nec, si quaesieris, odium Cyclopis amorne Acidis in nobis fuerit praesentior, edam:
par utrumque fuit. pro, quanta potentia regni est, Venus alma, tui! nempe ille inmitis et ipsis horrendus silvis et visus ab hospite nullo inpune et magni cum dis contemptor Olympi, quid sit amor, sentit validaque cupidine captus uritur oblitus pecorum antrorumque suorum.
iamque tibi formae, iamque est tibi cura placendi, iam rigidos pectis rastris, Polypheme, capillos, iam libet hirsutam tibi falce recidere barbam et spectare feros in aqua et componere vultus.
caedis amor feritasque sitisque inmensa cruoris cessant, et tutae veniuntque abeuntque carinae.
Telemus interea Siculam delatus ad Aetnen, Telemus Eurymides, quem nulla fefellerat ales, terribilem Polyphemon adit "lumen" que, "quod unum fronte geris media, rapiet tibi" dixit "Ulixes."
risit et "o vatum stolidissime, falleris," inquit,
"altera iam rapuit." sic frustra vera monentem spernit et aut gradiens ingenti litora passu degravat, aut fessus sub opaca revertitur antra.
prominet in pontum cuneatus acumine longo collis (utrumque latus circumfluit aequoris unda):
huc ferus adscendit Cyclops mediusque resedit;
lanigerae pecudes nullo ducente secutae.
cui postquam pinus, baculi quae praebuit usum, ante pedes posita est antemnis apta ferendis sumptaque harundinibus compacta est fistula centum, senserunt toti pastoria sibila montes, senserunt undae; latitans ego rupe meique Acidis in gremio residens procul auribus hausi

talia dicta meis auditaque mente notavi:

“Candidior folio nivei Galatea ligustri, floridior pratis, longa procerior alno, splendidior vitro, tenero lascivior haedo, levior adsiduo detritis aequore conchis, solibus hibernis, aestiva gratior umbra, mobilior damma, platano conspectior alta, lucidior glacie, matura dulcior uva, mollior et cycni plumis et lacta coacto, et, si non fugias, riguo formosior horto;

“Saevior indomitis eadem Galatea iuvenicis, durior annosa quercu, fallacior undis, lentior et salicis virgis et vitibus albis,
his immobilior scopulis, violentior amne, laudato pavone superbior, acrior igni, asperior tribulis, feta truculentior ursa, surdior aequoribus, calcato inimitior hydro, et, quod praecipue vellem tibi demere possem,
non tantum cervo claris latratibus acto, verum etiam ventis volucrique fugacior aura, (at bene si noris, pigeat fugisse, morasque ipsa tuas damnes et me retinere labores) sunt mihi, pars montis, vivo pendentia saxo antra, quibus nec sol medio sentitur in aestu, nec sentitur hiems; sunt poma gravantia ramos, sunt auro similes longis in vitibus uvae, sunt et purpureae: tibi et has servamus et illas.
ipsa tuis manibus silvestri nata sub umbra mollia fraga leges, ipsa autumnalia corna prunaque non solum nigro liventia suco, verum etiam generosa novasque imitantia ceras.
nec tibi castanae me coniuge, nec tibi deerunt arbuti fetus: omnis tibi serviet arbor.

“Hoc pecus omne meum est, multae quoque vallibus errant,
multas silva tegit, multae stabulantur in antris,

nec, si forte roges, possim tibi dicere, quot sint:
pauperis est numerare pecus; de laudibus harum nil mihi credideris, praesens potes ipsa videre, ut vix circumeant distentum cruribus uber.
sunt, fetura minor, tepidis in ovilibus agni.
sunt quoque, par aetas, aliis in ovilibus haedi.
lac mihi semper adest niveum: pars inde bibenda servatur, partem liquefacta coagula durant.

“Nec tibi deliciae faciles vulgataque tantum munera contingent, dammae leporesque caperque, parve columbarum demptusve cacumine nidus:
inveni geminos, qui tecum ludere possint, inter se similes, vix ut dignoscere possis, villosae catulos in summis montibus ursae:
inveni et dixi ‘dominae servabimus istos.’

“Iam modo caeruleo nitidum caput exere ponto, iam, Galatea, veni, nec munera despice nostra!
certe ego me novi liquidaeque in imagine vidi nuper aquae, placuitque mihi mea forma videnti.
adspice, sim quantus: non est hoc corpore maior Iuppiter in caelo, nam vos narrare soletis nescio quem regnare Iovem; coma plurima torvos prominet in vultus, umerosque, ut lucus, obumbrat; nec mea quod rigidis horrent densissima saetis corpora, turpe puta: turpis sine frondibus arbor, turpis equus, nisi colla iubae flaventia velent;
pluma tegit volucres, ovibus sua lana decori est:
barba viros hirtaeque decent in corpore saetae.
unum est in media lumen mihi fronte, sed instar ingentis clipei. quid? non haec omnia magnus Sol videt e caelo? Soli tamen unicus orbis.

“Adde, quod in vestro genitor meus aequore regnat:
hunc tibi do socerum; tantum miserere precesque supplicis exaudi! tibi enim succumbimus uni, quique Iovem et caelum sperno et penetrabile fulmen, Nerei, te vereor, tua fulmine saevior ira est.

atque ego contemptus essem patientior huius, si fugeres omnes; sed cur Cyclope repulso Acin amas praefersque meis complexibus Acin?
ille tamen placeatque sibi placeatque licebit, quod nollem, Galatea, tibi; modo copia detur:
sentiet esse mihi tanto pro corpore vires!
viscera viva traham divulsaque membra per agros perque tuas spargam (sic se tibi misceat!) undas.
uror enim, laesusque exaestuat acrius ignis, cumque suis videor translata viribus Aetnen pectore ferre meo, nec tu, Galatea, moveris.”

‘Talia nequiquam questus (nam cuncta videbam) surgit et ut taurus vacca furibundus adempta stare nequit silvaeque et notis saltibus errat, cum ferus ignaros nec quicquam tale timentes me videt atque Acin “video” que exclamat “et ista ultima sit, faciam, Veneris concordia vestrae.”
tantaque vox, quantam Cyclops iratus habere debit, illa fuit: clamore perhorruit Aetne.
ast ego vicino pavefacta sub aequore mergor;
terga fugae dederat conversa Symaethius heros et “fer opem, Galatea, precor, mihi! ferte, parentes,” dixerat “et vestris peritulum admittite regnis!”
insequitur Cyclops partemque e monte revulsam mittit, et extremus quamvis pervenit ad illum angulus e saxo, totum tamen obruit Acin, at nos, quod fieri solum per fata licebat, fecimus, ut vires adsumeret Acis avitas. puniceus de mole cruor manabat, et intra temporis exiguum rubor evanescere coepit, fitque color primo turbati fluminis imbre purgaturque mora; tum moles iacta dehiscit, vivaque per rimas proceraque surgit harundo, osque cavum saxi sonat exsultantibus undis, miraque res, subito media tenus exstitit alvo incinctus iuvenis flexis nova cornua cannis, qui, nisi quod maior, quod toto caerulus ore, Acis erat, sed sic quoque erat tamen Acis, in amnem versus, et antiquum tenuerunt flumina nomen.'

Desierat Galatea loqui, coetuque soluto discedunt placidisque natant Nereides undis.
Scylla redit; neque enim medio se credere ponto audet, et aut bibula sine vestibus errat harena aut, ubi lassata est, seductos nacta recessus gurgitis, inclusa sua membra refrigerat unda:
ecce fretum stringens, alti novus incola ponti, nuper in Euboica versis Anthedone membris, Glaucus adest, visaeque cupidine virginis haeret et, quaecumque putat fugientem posse morari, verba refert; fugit illa tamen veloxque timore pervenit in summum positi prope litora montis.
ante fretum est ingens, apicem conlectus in unum longa sub arboribus convexus in aequora vertex:
constitit hic et tuta loco, monstrumne deusne ille sit, ignorans admiraturque colorem caesariemque umeros subiectaue terga tegentem, ultimaque excipiat quod tortilis inguina piscis.
sensit et innitens, quae stabat proxima, moli
'non ego prodigium nec sum fera belua, virgo, sed deus' inquit 'aquae: nec maius in aequora Proteus ius habet et Triton Athamantiadesque Palaemon.
ante tamen mortalis eram, sed, scilicet altis debitus aequoribus, iam tum exercebar in illis;
nam modo ducebam ducentia retia pisces, nunc in mole sedens moderabar harundine linum.
sunt viridi prato confinia litora, quorum altera pars undis, pars altera cingitur herbis, quas neque cornigeræ morsu laesere iuvencae, nec placidae carpsistis oves hirtaeve capellae;
non apis inde tulit conlectos sedula flores, non data sunt capiti genialia sarta, neque umquam falciferae secuere manus; ego primus in illo caespite consedi, dum lina madentia sicco, utque recenserem captivos ordine pisces, insuper exposui, quos aut in retia casus aut sua credulitas in aduncos egerat hamos.

res similis fictae, sed quid mihi fingere prodest?
gramine contacto coepit mea praeda moveri et mutare latus terraque ut in aequore niti.
dumque moror mirorque simul, fugit omnis in undas turba suas dominumque novum litusque relinquunt.
obstipui dubitoque diu causamque requiro,
num deus hoc aliquis, num sucus fecerit herbae: “quae tamen has” inquam “vires habet herba?” manumque pabula decerpsi decerptaque dente momordi.
vix bene conbiberant ignotos guttura sucos, cum subito trepidare intus praecordia sensi alteriusque rapi naturae pectus amore; nec potui restare diu “repetenda” que “numquam terra, vale!” dixi corpusque sub aequora mersi.
di maris exceptum socio dignantur honore, utque mihi, quaecumque feram, mortalia demant, Oceanum Tethynque rogant: ego lustror ab illis, et purgante nefas noviens mihi carmine dicto pectora fluminibus iubeor supponere centum; nec mora, diversis lapsi de partibus amnes totaque vertuntur supra caput aequora nostrum.
hactenus acta tibi possum memoranda referre, hactenus haec memini, nec mens mea cetera sensit.
quae postquam rediit, alium me corpore toto, ac fueram nuper, neque eundem mente recepi:
hanc ego tum primum viridem ferrugine barbam caesariemque meam, quam longa per aequora verro, ingentesque umeros et caerulea bracchia vidi cruraque pinnigero curvata novissima pisce.
quid tamen haec species, quid dis placuisse marinis, quid iuvat esse deum, si tu non tangeris istis?’
taliam dicentem, dicturum plura, reliquit

Scylla deum; furit ille inritatusque repulsa prodigiosa petit Titanidos atria Circes.

LIBER QVARTVS DECIMVS

Iamque Giganteis iniectam faucibus Aetnen arvaque Cyclopum, quid rastra, quid usus aratri, nescia nec quicquam iunctis debentia bubus liquerat Euboicus tumidarum cultor aquarum, liquerat et Zanclen adversaque moenia Regi 5 navifragumque fretum, gemino quod litore pressum Ausoniae Sicalaeque tenet confinia terrae.
inde manu magna Tyrrhena per aequora vectus herbiferos adiit colles atque atria Glaucus Sole satae Circes, variarum plena ferarum. 10 quam simul adspexit, dicta acceptaque salute,
'diva, dei miserere, precor! nam sola levare tu potes hunc,' dixit 'videar modo dignus, amorem.
quanta sit herbarum, Titani, potentia, nulli quam mihi cognitius, qui sum mutatus ab illis. 15 neve mei non nota tibi sit causa furoris:
litore in Italico, Messenia moenia contra, Scylla mihi visa est. pudor est promissa precesque blanditiasque meas contemptaque verba referre;
at tu, sive aliquid regni est in carmine, carmen 20 ore move sacro, sive expugnacior herba est, utere temptatis operosae viribus herbae nec medeare mihi sanesque haec vulnera mando, fine nihil opus est: partem ferat illa caloribus.'
at Circe (neque enim flammis habet aptius ulla 25 talibus ingenium, seu causa est huius in ipsa, seu Venus indicio facit hoc offensa paterno,) talibus verba refert: 'melius sequerere volentem optantemque eadem parilique cupidine captam.
dignus eras ultro (poteras certeque) rogari, 30 et, si spem dederis, mihi crede, rogaberis ultro.

neu dubites absitque tuae fiducia formae, en ego, cum dea sim, nitidi cum filia Solis, carmine cum tantum, tantum quoque gramine possim, ut tua sim, voveo. spernentem sperne, sequenti 35 redde vices, unoque duas ulciscere facto.'
taliam temptanti 'prius' inquit 'in aequore frondes' Glaucus 'et in summis nascentur montibus algae, Sospite quam Scylla nostri mutantur amores.'
indignata dea est et laedere quatenus ipsum 40 non poterat (nec vellet amans), irascitur illi, quae sibi praelata est; venerisque offensa repulsa, protinus horrendis infamia pabula sucis conterit et tritis Hecateia carmina miscet caeruleaque induitur velamina perque ferarum 45 agmen adulantum media procedit ab aula oppositumque petens contra Zancleia saxa Region ingreditur ferventes aestibus undas, in quibus ut solida ponit vestigia terra summaque decurrit pedibus super aequora siccis. 50 parvus erat gurgis, curvos sinuatus in arcus, grata quies Scyllae: quo se referebat ab aestu et maris et caeli, medio cum plurimus orbe sol erat et minimas a vertice fecerat umbras.
hunc dea praevitiat portentificisque venenis 55 inquinat; hic pressos latices radice nocenti spargit et obscurum verborum ambage novorum ter noviens carmen magico demurmurat ore.
Scylla venit mediaque tenus descenderat alvo, cum sua foedari latrantibus inguina monstris 60 adspicit ac primo credens non corporis illas esse sui partes, refugitque abigitque timetque ora proterva canum, sed quos fugit, attrahit una et corpus quaerens femorum crurumque pedumque Cerberios rictus pro partibus invenit illis: 65 statque canum rabie subiectaque terga ferarum inguinibus truncis uteroque exstante coercet.

Flevit amans Glaucus nimiumque hostiliter usae viribus herbarum fugit conubia Circes; Scylla loco mansit cumque est data copia, primum 70
in Circes odium sociis spoliavit Ulixem; mox eadem Teucras fuerat mersura carinas, ni prius in scopulum, qui nunc quoque saxeus exstat, transformata foret: scopulum quoque navita vitat.

Hunc ubi Troianae remis avidamque Charybdis 75
evicere rates, cum iam prope litus adessent Ausonium, Libycas vento referuntur ad oras.
excipit Aenean illic animoque domoque non bene discidium Phrygii latura mariti Sidonis; inque pyra sacri sub imagine facta 80 incubuit ferro deceptaque decipit omnes.
rursus harenosae fugiens nova moenia terrae ad sedemque Erycis fidumque relatus Acesten sacrificat tumulumque sui genitoris honorat.
quasque rates Iris lunonia paene cremarat, 85 solvit et Hippotadae regnum terrasque calenti sulphure fumantis Acheloiadumque relinquit Sirenum scopulos, orbataque praeside pinus Inarimen Prochytenque legit sterilique locatas colle Pitheccusas, habitantum nomine dictas. 90 quippe deum genitor, fraudem et periuria quondam Cercopum exosus gentisque admissa dolosae, in deforme viros animal mutavit, ut idem dissimiles homini possent similesque videri, membraque contraxit naresque a fronte resimas 95 contudit et rugis peraravit anilibus ora totaque velatos flamenti corpora villo misit in has sedes nec non prius abstulit usum verborum et natae dira in periuria linguae;
posse queri tantum rauco stridore reliquit. 100

Has ubi praeteriit et Parthenopeia dextra moenia deseruit, laeva de parte canori Aeolidae tumulum et, loca feta palustribus ulvis, litora Cumarum vivacisque antra Sibyllae intrat et, ut manes adeat per Averna paternos, 105 orat. at illa diu vultum tellure moratum erexit tandemque deo furibunda recepto

'magna petis,' dixit, 'vir factis maxime, cuius dextera per ferrum, pietas spectata per ignes.
pone tamen, Troiane, metum: potiere petitis 110 Elysiasque domos et regna novissima mundi me duce cognosces simulacraque cara parentis.
invia virtuti nulla est via.' dixit et auro fulgentem ramum silva lunonis Avernae monstravit iussitque suo divellere trunco. 115 paruit Aeneas et formidabilis Orci vidit opes atavosque suos umbramque senilem magnanimi Anchisae; didicit quoque iura locorum, quaeque novis essent adeunda pericula bellis.
inde ferens lassos averso tramite passus 120 cum duce Cumaea mollit sermone laborem.
dumque iter horrendum per opaca crepuscula carpit,
'seu dea tu praesens, seu dis gratissima,' dixit,
'numinis instar eris semper mihi, meque fatebor muneris esse tui, quae me loca mortis adire, 125 quae loca me visae voluisti evadere mortis.
pro quibus aeras meritis evectus ad auras templa tibi statuam, tribuam tibi turis honores.'
respicit hunc vates et suspiratibus haustis
'nec dea sum,' dixit 'nec sacri turis honore 130 humanum dignare caput, neu nescius erres, lux aeterna mihi carituraque fine dabatur, si mea virginitas Phoebos patuisset amanti.
dum tamen hanc sperat, dum praecorruptere donis me cupit, "elige," ait "virgo Cumaea, quid optes: 135 optatis potiere tuis." ego pulveris hausti ostendens cumulum, quot haberet corpora pulvis, tot mihi natales contingere vana rogavi;
excidit, ut peterem iuvenes quoque protinus annos.

hos tamen ille mihi dabat aeternamque iuventam, 140 si Venerem paterer: contempto munere Phoebi innuba permaneo; sed iam felicior aetas terga dedit, tremuloque gradu venit aegra senectus, quae patienda diu est. nam iam mihi saecula septem acta, tamen superest, numeros ut pulveris aequem, 145 ter centum messes, ter centum musta videre.
tempus erit, cum de tanto me corpore parvam longa dies faciet, consumptaque membra senecta ad minimum redigentur onus: nec amata videbor nec placuisse deo, Phoebus quoque forsitan ipse 150 vel non cognoscet, vel dilexisse negabit:
usque adeo mutata ferar nullique videnda, voce tamen noscar; vocem mihi fata relinquent.'

Talia convexum per iter memorante Sibylla sedibus Euboicam Stygiis emergit in urbem 155 Troius Aeneas sacrisque ex more litatis litora adit nondum nutricis habentia nomen.
hic quoque substiterat post taedia longa laborum Neritius Macareus, comes experientis Ulixis.
desertum quondam mediis qui rupibus Aetnae 160 noscit Achaemeniden improvisoque repertum vivere miratus, 'qui te casusve deusve servat, Achaemenide? cur' inquit 'barbara Graium prora vehit? petitur vestra quae terra carina?' talia quaerenti, iam non hirsutus amictu, 165
iam suus et spinis conserto tegmine nullis, fatur Achaemenides: 'iterum Polyphemon et illos adspiciam fluidos humano sanguine rictus, hac mihi si potior domus est Ithaceque carina, si minus Aenean veneror genitore, nec umquam 170 esse satis potero, praestem licet omnia, gratus.
quod loquor et spiro caelumque et sidera solis respicio, possimne ingratus et inmemor esse?
ille dedit, quod non anima haec Cyclopi in ora venit, et ut iam nunc lumen vitale relinquam, 175

aut tumulo aut certe non illa condar in alvo.
quid mihi tunc animi (nisi si timor abstulit omnem sensum animumque) fuit, cum vos petere alta relictus aequora conspexi? volui inclamare, sed hosti prodere me timui: vestrae quoque clamor Ulixis 180 paene rati nocuit. vidi, cum monte revulsum inmanem scopulum medias permisit in undas; vidi iterum veluti tormenti viribus acta vasta Giganteo iaculantem saxa lacerto et, ne deprimeret fluctus ventusve carinam, 185 pertimui, iam me non esse oblitus in illa.
ut vero fuga vos a certa morte reduxit, ille quidem totam gemebundus obambulat Aetnam praetemptatque manu silvas et luminis orbis rupibus incursat foedataque bracchia tabo 190 in mare protendens gentem exsecratur Achivam atque ait: "o si quis referat mihi casus Ulixem, aut aliquem e sociis, in quem mea saeviat ira, viscera cuius edam, cuius viventia dextra membra mea laniem, cuius mihi sanguis inundet 195 guttur, et elisi trepident sub dentibus artus:
quam nullum aut leve sit damnum mihi lucis ademptae!"
haec et plura ferox, me luridus occupat horror spectantem vultus etiamnum caede madentes crudelesque manus et inanem luminis orbem 200 membraque et humano concretam sanguine barbam.
mors erat ante oculos, minimum tamen illa malorum, et iam prensurum, iam nunc mea viscera rebar in sua mersurum, mentique haerebat imago temporis illius, quo vidi bina meorum 205 ter quater adfligi sociorum corpora terrae, cum super ipse iacens hirsuti more leonis visceraque et carnes cumque albis ossa medullis semianimesque artus avidam condebat in alvum; me tremor invasit: stabam sine sanguine maestus, 210
mandentemque videns eiectantemque cruentas

ore dapes et frusta mero glomerata vomentem:
taliam fingebam misero mihi fata parari perque dies multos latitans omnemque tremiscens ad strepitum mortemque timens cupidusque moriri 215 glande famem pellens et mixta frondibus herba solus inops exspes leto poenaeque relictus hanc procul adspexi longo post tempore navem oravique fugam gestu ad litusque cucurri, et movi: Graiumque ratis Troiana recepit! 220 tu quoque pande tuos, comitum gratissime, casus et ducis et turbae, quae tecum est credita ponto.'

    Aeolon ille refert Tusco regnare profundo, Aeolon Hippotaden, cohibentem carcere ventos;
quos bovis inclusos tergo, memorabile munus, 225 Dulichium sumpsisse ducem flatuque secundo lucibus isse novem et terram aspexisse petitam;
proxima post nonam cum sese aurora moveret, invidia socios praedaeque cupidine victos esse; ratos aurum, dempsisse ligamina ventis; 230 cum quibus isse retro, per quas modo venerat undas, Aeolique ratem portus repetisse tyranni.
'inde Lami veterem Laestrygonis' inquit 'in urbem venimus: Antiphates terra regnabat in illa.
missus ad hunc ego sum, numero comitante duorum, 235 vixque fuga quaesita salus comitique mihi, tertius e nobis Laestrygonis inopia tinxit ora cruore suo. fugientibus instat et agmen conciat Antiphates; coeunt et saxa trabesque coniciunt merguntque viros merguntque carinas. 240 una tamen, quae nos ipsumque vehebat Ulixem, effugit. amissa sociorum parte dolentes multaque conquesti terris adlabimur illis, quas procul hinc cernis (procul est, mihi crede, videnda insula visa mihi!) tuque o iustissime Troum, 245 nate dea, (neque enim finito Marte vocandus hostis es, Aenea) moneo, fuge litora Circes!

nos quoque Circaeο religata in litore pinu, Antiphatae memores inmansuetique Cyclopis, ire negabamus; sed tecta ignota subire 250 sorte sumus lecti: sors me fidumque Politen Eurylochumque simul nimiique Elpenora vini bisque novem socios Circaeα ad moenia misit.
quae simul attigimus stetimusque in limine tecti, mille lupi mixtaeque lupis ursaeque leaeque 255 occurso fecere metum, sed nulla timenda nullaque erat nostro factura in corpore vulnus;
quin etiam blandas movere per aera caudas nostraeque adulantes comitant vestigia, donec excipiunt famulae perque atria marmore tecta 260 ad dominam ducunt: pulchro sedet illa recessu sollemni solio pallamque induta nitentem insuper aurato circumvelatur amictu.
Nereides nymphaeque simul, quae vellera motis nulla trahunt digitis nec fila sequentia ducunt: 265 gramina disponunt sparsosque sine ordine flores secernunt calathis variasque coloribus herbas; ipsa, quod hae faciunt, opus exigit, ipsa, quis usus quove sit in folio, quae sit concordia mixtis, novit et advertens pensas examinat herbas. 270
haec ubi nos vidit, dicta acceptaque salute diffudit vultus et reddidit omina votis.
nec mora, misceri tosti iubet hordea grani mellaque vimque meri cum lacte coagula passo, quique sub hac lateant furtim dulcedine, sucos 275
adicit. accipimus sacra data pocula dextra.
quae simul arenti sitientes hausimus ore,
et tetigit summos virga dea dira capillos, (et pudet et referam) saetis horrescere coepi, nec iam posse loqui, pro verbis edere raucum 280 murmur et in terram toto procumbere vultu, osque meum sensi pando occallescere rostro, colla tumere toris, et qua modo pocula parte sumpta mihi fuerant, illa vestigia feci cumque eadem passis (tantum medicamina possunt!) 285 claudor hara, solumque suis caruisse figura vidimus Eurylochum: solus data pocula fugit; quae nisi vitasset, pecoris pars una manerem nunc quoque saetigeri, nec tantae cladis ab illo certior ad Circen ultor venisset Ulixes. 290 pacifer huic dederat florem Cyllenius album:

moly vocant superi, nigra radice tenetur;
tutus eo monitisque simul caelestibus intrat ille domum Circes et ad insidiosa vocatus pocula conantem virga mulcere capillos 295 reppulit et stricto pavidam deterruit ense.
inde fides dextraeque datae thalamoque receptus
coniugii dotem sociorum corpora poscit.
spargimur ignotae sucis melioribus herbae percutimurque caput conversae verbere virgae, 300 verbaque dicuntur dictis contraria verbis.
quo magis illa canit, magis hoc tellure levati erigimur, saetaeque cadunt, bifidosque relinquit rima pedes, redeunt umeri et subiecta lacertis bracchia sunt: flentem flentes amplectimur ipsi 305 haeremusque ducis collo nec verba locuti ulla priora sumus quam nos testantia gratos.
annua nos illic tenuit mora, multaque praesens tempore tam longo vidi, multa auribus hausi, hoc quoque cum multis, quod clam mihi rettulit una 310
quattuor e famulis ad talia sacra paratis.
cum duce namque meo Circe dum sola moratur, illa mihi niveo factum de marmore signum ostendit iuvenale gerens in vertice picum, aede sacra positum multisque insigne coronis. 315 quis foret et quare sacra coleretur in aede, cur hanc ferret avem, quaerenti et scire volenti “accipe” ait, “Macareu, dominaeque potentia quae sit hinc quoque disce meae; tu dictis adice mentem!

venerat in silvas et filia Solis easdem, utque novas legeret fecundis collibus herbas, nomine dicta suo Circaea reliquerat arva.
quae simul ac iuvenem virgultis abdita vidit, obstipuit: cecidere manu, quas legerat, herbae, 350 flammaque per totas visa est errare medullas.
ut primum valido mentem conlegit ab aestu, quid cuperet, fassura fuit: ne posset adire, cursus equi fecit circumfususque satellites.
‘non’ ait ‘effugies, vento rapiare licebit, 355

si modo me novi, si non evanuit omnis herbarum virtus, nec me mea carmina fallunt.’
dixit et effigiem nullo cum corpore falsi fingit apri praeterque oculos transcurrere regis iussit et in densum trabibus nemus ire videri, 360 plurima qua silva est et equo loca pervia non sunt.
haut mora, continuo praedae petit inscius umbram Picus equique celer spumantia terga relinquit spemque sequens vanam silva pedes errat in alta.
concipit illa preces et verba venefica dicit 365 ignotosque deos ignoto carmine adorat, quo solet et niveae vultum confundere Lunae et patrio capiti bibulas subtexere nubes.
tum quoque cantato densetur carmine caelum et nebulas exhalat humus, caecisque vagantur 370 limitibus comites, et abest custodia regis.
nacta locum tempusque ‘per o, tua lumina,’ dixit ‘quae mea ceperunt, perque hanc, pulcherrime, formam, quae facit, ut supplex tibi sim dea, consule nostris ignibus et socerum, qui pervidet omnia, Solem 375 accipe nec durus Titanida despice Circen.’
dixerat; ille ferox ipsamque precesque repellit et ‘quaecumque es,’ ait ‘non sum tuus; altera captum me tenet et teneat per longum, conprecor, aevum, nec Venere externa socialia foedera laedam, 380
dum mihi lanigenam servabunt fata Canentem.’
saepe retemptatis precibus Titania frustra ‘non inpune feres, neque’ ait ‘reddere Canenti, laesaque quid faciat, quid amans, quid femina, disces rebus; at est et amans et laesa et femina Circe!’ 385 tum bis ad occasus, bis se convertit ad ortus, ter iuvenem baculo tetigit, tria carmina dixit.
ille fugit, sed se solito velocius ipse currere miratur: pennas in corpore vidit, seque novam subito Latiis accedere silvis 390 indignatus avem duro fera robora rostro figit et iratus longis dat vulnera ramis;

purpureum chlamydis pennae traxere colorem;
fibula quod fuerat vestemque momorderat aurum, pluma fit, et fulvo cervix praecingitur auro, 395 nec quicquam antiquum Pico nisi nomina restat.

“Interea comites, clamato saepe per agros nequiquam Pico nullaque in parte reperto, inveniunt Circen (nam iam tenuaverat auras passaque erat nebulas ventis ac sole recludi) 400 criminibusque premunt veris regemque reposcunt vimque ferunt saevisque parant incessere telis:
illa nocens spargit virus sucosque veneni et Noctem Noctisque deos Ereboque Chaoque convocat et longis Hecaten ululatibus orat. 405 exsiluere loco (dictu mirabile) silvae, ingemuitque solum, vincinaque palluit arbor, sparsaque sanguineis maduerunt pabula guttis, et lapides visi mugitus edere raucos et latrare canes et humus serpentibus atris 410 squalere et tenues animae volitare silentum:
attonitum monstris vulgus pavet; illa paventis ora venenata tetigit mirantia virga, cuius ab attactu variarum monstra ferarum in iuvenes veniunt: nulli sua mansit imago. 415

“Sparserat occiduus Tartessia litora Phoebus, et frustra coniunx oculis animoque Canentis expectatus erat: famuli populusque per omnes discurrunt silvas atque obvia lumina portant; nec satis est nympphae flere et lacerare capillos 420 et dare plangorem (facit haec tamen omnia) seque proripit ac Latios errat vesana per agros.
sex illam noctes, totidem redeuntia solis lumina viderunt inopem somnique cibique per iuga, per valles, qua fors ducebat, euntem; 425 ultimus adspexit Thybris luctuque viaque fessam et iam longa ponentem corpora ripa.

illic cum lacrimis ipso modulata dolore verba sono tenui maerens fundebat, ut olim carmina iam moriens canit exequialia cyncus; 430 luctibus extremum tenues liquefacta medullas tabuit inque leves paulatim evanuit auras, fama tamen signata loco est, quem rite Canentem nomine de nymphae veteres dixere Camenae.”

‘Talia multa mihi longum narrata per annum 435 visa que sunt. resides et desuetudine tardi rursus inire fretum, rursus dare vela iubemur, ancipitesque vias et iter Titania vastum dixerat et saevi restare pericula ponti:
pertimui, fateor, nactusque hoc litus adhaesi.’ 440

Finierat Macareus, urnaque Aeneia nutrix condita marmorea tumulo breve carmen habebat hic : me : caietam : notae : pietatis : alumnus ereptam : argolico : quo : debuit : igne : cremavit solvitur herboso religatus ab aggere funis, 445 et procul insidias infamataeque relinquunt tectae deae lucosque petunt, ubi nubilus umbra in mare cum flava prorumpit Thybris arena; Faunigenaeque domo potitur nataque Latini, non sine Marte tamen. bellum cum gente feroci 450 suscipitur, pactaque fuit pro coniuge Turnus.
concurrit Latio Tyrrhenia tota, diuque ardua sollicitis victoria quaeritur armis.
auget uterque suas externo robore vires, et multi Rutulos, multi Troiana tuentur 455 castra, neque Aeneas Euandri ad moenia frustra, at Venulus frustra profugi Diomedis ad urbem venerat: ille quidem sub lapyge maxima Dauno moenia condiderat dotaliaque arva tenebat; sed Venulus Turni postquam mandata peregit 460 auxiliumque petit, vires Aetolius heros excusat: nec se aut soceri committere pugnae velle sui populos, aut quos e gente suorum armet habere ullos, 'neve haec commenta putetis, admonitu quamquam luctus renoventur amari, 465 perpetiar memorare tamen. postquam alta cremata est Ilios, et Danaas paverunt Pergama flammam, Naryciusque heros, a virgine virgine rapta, quam meruit poenam solus, digessit in omnes, spargimur et ventis inimica per aequora rapti 470 fulmina, noctem, imbres, iram caelique marisque perpetimur Danai cumulumque Capherea cladis, neve morer referens tristes ex ordine casus, Graecia tum potuit Priamo quoque flenda videri.

me tamen armiferae servatum cura Minervae 475 fluctibus eripuit, patriis sed rursus ab agris pellor, et antiquo memores de vulnere poenas exigit alma Venus, tantosque per alta labores aequora sustinui, tantos terrestribus armis, ut mihi felices sint illi saepe vocati, 480 quos communis hiems inportunusque Caphereus mersit aquis, vellemque horum pars una fuissem.

'Ultima iam passi comites belloque fretoque deficiunt finemque rogant erroris, at Acmon fervidus ingenio, tum vero et cladibus asper, 485
"quid superest, quod iam patientia vestra recuset ferre, viri?" dixit "quid habet Cytherea, quod ultra, velle puta, faciat? nam dum peiora timentur, est in vota locus: sors autem ubi pessima rerum, sub pedibus timor est securaque summa malorum. 490 audiat ipsa licet, licet, ut facit, oderit omnes sub Diomede viros, odium tamen illius omnes spernimus: haud magno stat magna potentia nobis."
talibus irritans Venerem Pleuronius Acmon instimulat verbis veteremque resuscitat iram. 495 dicta placent paucis, numeri maioris amici Acmona conripimus; cui respondere volenti vox pariter vocisque via est tenuata, comaeque in plumas abeunt, plumis nova colla teguntur pectoraque et tergum, maiores bracchia pennas 500 accipiunt, cubitique leves sinuantur in alas;

magna pedis digitos pars occupat, oraque cornu indurata rigent finemque in acumine ponunt.
hunc Lycus, hunc Idas et cum Rhexenore Nycteus, hunc miratur Abas, et dum mirantur, eandem 505 accipiunt faciem, numerusque ex agmine maior subvolat et remos plausis circumvolat alis:
si volucrum quae sit subitarum forma requiris, ut non cycnorum, sic albis proxima cygnis.
vix equidem has sedes et lapygis arida Dauni 510 arva gener teneo minima cum parte meorum.'

Hactenus Oenides, Venulus Calydonia regna Peucetiosque sinus Messapiaque arva relinquit.
in quibus antra videt, quae, multa nubila silva et levibus cannis latitantia semicaper Pan 515 nunc tenet, at quodam tenuerunt tempore nymphae.
Apulus has illa pastor regione fugatas terruit et primo subita formidine movit, mox, ubi mens rediit et contempserunt sequentem, ad numerum motis pedibus duxere choreas; 520 inprobat has pastor saltuque imitatus agresti addidit obscenis convicia rustica dictis, nec prius os tacuit, quam guttura condidit arbor:
arbor enim est, sucoque licet cognoscere mores.
quippe notam linguae bacis oleaster amaris 525
exhibet: asperitas verborum cessit in illa.

Hinc ubi legati rediere, negata ferentes arma Aetola sibi, Rutuli sine viribus illis bella instructa gerunt, multumque ab utraque cruoris parte datur; fert ecce avidas in pinea Turnus 530 texta faces, ignesque timent, quibus unda pepercit.
iamque picem et ceras alimentaue cetera flammae Mulciber urebat perque altum ad carbasa malum ibat, et incurvae fumabant transtra carinae, cum memor has pinus Idaeo vertice caesas 535

sancta deum genetrix tinnitibus aera pulsi aeris et inflati conplevit murmure buxi perque leves domitis invecta leonibus auras
'inrita sacrilega iactas incendia dextra, Turne!' ait. 'eripiam: nec me patiente cremabit 540 ignis edax nemorum partes et membra meorum.'
intonuit dicente dea, tonitrumque secuti cum saliente graves ceciderunt grandine nimbi, aeraque et tumidum subitis concursibus aequor Astraei turbant et eunt in proelia fratres. 545
e quibus alma parens unius viribus usa stuppea praerupit Phrygiae retinacula classis, fertque rates pronas medioque sub aequore mergit;
robore mollito lignoque in corpora verso in capitum faciem puppes mutantur aduncae, 550 in digitos abeunt et crura natantia remi, quodque prius fuerat, latus est, mediisque carina subdita navigiis spinae mutatur in usum, lina comae molles, antemnae bracchia fiunt, caerulus, ut fuerat, color est; quasque ante timebant, 555 illas virgineis exercent lusibus undas Naides aequoreae durisque in montibus ortae molle fretum celebrant nec eas sua tangit origo;
non tamen oblitae, quam multa pericula saepe pertulerint pelago, iactatis saepe carinis 560 subposuere manus, nisi siqua vehebat Achivos:
cladis adhuc Phrygiae memores odere Pelasgos Neritiaeque ratis viderunt fragmina laetis vultibus et laetis videre rigescere puppim vultibus Alcinoi saxumque increscere ligno. 565

Spes erat, in nymphas animata classe marinas posse metu monstri Rutulum desistere bello:
perstat, habetque deos pars utraque, quodque deorum est instar, habent animos; nec iam dotalia regna, nec sceptrum soceri, nec te, Lavinia virgo, 570 sed vicisse petunt deponendique pudore bella gerunt, tandemque Venus victricia nati arma videt, Turnusque cadit: cadit Ardea, Turno sospite dicta potens; quam postquam barbarus ignis abstulit et tepida latuerunt tecta favilla, 575 congerie e media tum primum cognita praepes subvolat et cineres plausis everberat alis.

et sonus et macies et pallor et omnia, captam quae deceant urbem, nomen quoque mansit in illa urbis, et ipsa suis deplangitur Ardea pennis. 580

Iamque deos omnes ipsamque Aeneia virtus lunonem veteres finire coegerat iras, cum, bene fundatis opibus crescentis Iuli, tempestivus erat caelo Cythereius heros.
ambieratque Venus superos colloque parentis 585 circumfusa sui 'numquam mihi' dixerat 'ullo tempore dure pater, nunc sis mitissimus, opto, Aeneaeque meo, qui te de sanguine nostro fecit avum, quamvis parvum des, optime, numen, dummodo des aliquod! satis est inamabile regnum 590 adspexisse semel, Stygios semel isse per amnes.'

adsensere dei, nec coniunx regia vultus inmotos tenuit placatoque adnuit ore;
tum pater 'estis' ait 'caelesti munere digni, quaeque petis pro quoque petis: cape, nata, quod optas!' 595

fatus erat: gaudet gratesque agit illa parenti perque leves auras iunctis invecta columbis litus adit Laurens, ubi tectus harundine serpit in freta flumineis vicina Numicius undis.

hunc iubet Aeneae, quaecumque obnoxia morti, 600 abluere et tacito deferre sub aequora cursu;
corniger exsequitur Veneris mandata suisque, quicquid in Aenea fuerat mortale, repurgat et respersit aquis; pars optima restitit illi.

lustratum genetrix divino corpus odore 605 unxit et ambrosia cum dulci nectare mixta contigit os fecitque deum, quem turba Quirini nuncupat Indigetem temploque arisque recepit.

Inde sub Ascanii dicione binominis Alba resque Latina fuit. succedit Silvius illi. 610 quo satus antiquo tenuit repetita Latinus nomina cum sceptro, clarus subit Alba Latinum.
Epytus ex illo est; post hunc Capetusque Capysque, sed Capys ante fuit; regnum Tiberinus ab illis cepit et in Tusci demersus fluminis undis 615 nomina fecit aquae; de quo Remulusque feroxque Acrota sunt geniti. Remulus maturior annis fulmineo periit, imitator fulminis, ictu.
fratre suo sceptrum moderatior Acrota forti tradit Aventino, qui, quo regnarat, eodem 620 monte iacet positus tribuitque vocabula monti;
iamque Palatinae summam Proca gentis habebat.

Rege sub hoc Pomona fuit, qua nulla Latinas inter hamadryadas coluit sollertius hortos nec fuit arborei studiosior altera fetus; 625 unde tenet nomen: non silvas illa nec amnes, rus amat et ramos felicia poma ferentes;
nec iaculo gravis est, sed adunca dextera falce, qua modo luxuriam premit et spatiantia passim bracchia conpescit, fisso modo cortice virgam 630 inserit et sucos alieno praestat alumno;
nec sentire sitim patitur bibulaeque recurvas radicis fibras labentibus inrigat undis.
hic amor, hoc studium, Veneris quoque nulla cupido est;
vim tamen agrestum metuens pomaria claudit 635 intus et accessus prohibet refugitque viriles.
quid non et Satyri, saltatibus apta iuventus, fecere et pinu praecincti cornua Panes Silvanusque, suis semper iuvenilior annis, quique deus fures vel falce vel inguine terret, 640 ut poterentur ea? sed enim superabat amando hos quoque Vertumnus neque erat felicior illis.

o quotiens habitu duri messoris aristas corbe tulit verique fuit messoris imago!
tempora saepe gerens faeno religata recenti 645 desectum poterat gramen versasse videri;
saepe manu stimulos rigida portabat, ut illum iurares fessos modo disiunxisse iuencos.
falce data frondator erat vitisque putator;
induerat scalas: lecturum poma putares; 650 miles erat gladio, piscator harundine sumpta; denique per multas aditum sibi saepe figuras repperit, ut caperet spectatae gaudia formae.
ille etiam picta redimitus tempora mitra, innitens baculo, positus per tempora canis, 655 adsimulavit anum: cultosque intravit in hortos pomaque mirata est 'tanto' que 'potentior!' inquit paucaque laudatae dedit oscula, qualia numquam vera dedisset anus, glaebaque incurva resedit suspiciens pandos autumnni pondere ramos. 660 ulmus erat contra speciosa nitentibus uvis:
quam socia postquam pariter cum vite probavit,
'at si staret' ait 'caelebs sine palmite truncus,
nil praeter frondes, quare peteretur, haberet;
haec quoque, quae iuncta est, vitis requiescit in ulmo: 665 si non nupta foret, terrae acclinata iaceret;
tu tamen exemplo non tangeris arboris huius concubitusque fugis nec te coniungere curas.
atque utinam velles! Helene non pluribus esset sollicitata procis nec quae Lapitheia movit 670 proelia nec coniunx nimium tardantis Ulixis.
nunc quoque, cum fugias averserisque petentes, mille viri cupiunt et semideique deique et quaecumque tenent Albanos numina montes.
sed tu si sapias, si te bene iungere anumque 675 hanc audire voles, quae te plus omnibus illis, plus, quam credis, amo: vulgares reice taedas Vertumnumque tori socium tibi selige! pro quo me quoque pignus habe: neque enim sibi notior ille est, quam mihi; nec passim toto vagus errat in orbe, 680

haec loca sola colit; nec, uti pars magna procorum, quam modo vidit, amat: tu primus et ultimus illi ardor eris, solique suos tibi devovet annos.
adde, quod est iuvenis, quod naturale decoris munus habet formasque apte fingetur in omnes, 685 et quod erit iussus, iubeas licet omnia, fiet.
quid, quod amatis idem, quod, quae tibi poma coluntur, primus habet laetaque tenet tua munera dextra!
sed neque iam fetus desiderat arbore demptos nec, quas hortus alit, cum sucis mitibus herbas 690 nec quicquam nisi te: miserere ardentis et ipsum, qui petit, ore meo praesentem crede precari.
ultoresque deos et pectora dura perosam Idalien memoremque time Rhamnusidis iram!
quoque magis timeas, (etenim mihi multa vetustas 695 scire dedit) referam tota notissima Cypro facta, quibus flecti facile et mitescere possis.

‘Viderat a veteris generosam sanguine Teucri Iphis Anaxareten, humili de stirpe creatus, viderat et totis perceperat ossibus aestum 700 luctatusque diu, postquam ratione furorem vincere non potuit, supplex ad limina venit et modo nutrici miserum confessus amorem, ne sibi dura foret, per spes oravit alumnae, et modo de multis blanditus cuique ministris 705 sollicita petiit propensum voce favorem;
saepe ferenda dedit blandis sua verba tabellis, interdum madidas lacrimarum rore coronas postibus intendit posuitque in limine duro molle latus tristisque serae convicia fecit. 710 saevior illa freto surgente cadentibus Haedis, durior et ferro, quod Noricus excoquit ignis, et saxo, quod adhuc vivum radice tenetur, spernit et inridet, factisque inmitibus addit verba superba ferox et spe quoque fraudat amantem. 715 non tulit impatiens longi tormenta doloris Iphis et ante fores haec verba novissima dixit: “vincis, Anaxarete, neque erunt tibi taedia tandem ulla ferenda mei: laetos molire triumphos et Paeana voca nitidaque incingere lauru! 720 vincis enim, moriorque libens: age, ferrea, gaude!

certe aliquid laudare mei cogeris amoris, quo tibi sim gratus, meritumque fatebere nostrum.
non tamen ante tui curam excessisse memento quam vitam geminaque simul mihi luce carendum. 725 nec tibi fama mei ventura est nuntia leti:
ipse ego, ne dubites, adero praesensque videbor, corpore ut exanimi crudelia lumina pascas.
si tamen, o superi, mortalia facta videtis, este mei memores (nihil ultra lingua precari 730 sustinet) et longo facite ut narremur in aevo, et, quae dempsistis vitae, date tempora famae!”
dixit, et ad postes ornatos saepe coronis umentes oculos et pallida bracchia tollens, cum foribus laquei religaret vincula summis, 735 “haec tibi sarta placent, crudelis et inopia!” dixit inseruitque caput, sed tum quoque versus ad illam, atque onus infelix elisa fauce pependit.
icta pedum motu trepidantium aperire iubentem visa dedisse sonum est adapertaque ianua factum 740 prodidit, exclamant famuli frustra levatum (nam pater occiderat) referunt ad limina matris; accipit illa sinu complexaque frigida nati membra sui postquam miserorum verba parentum edidit et matrum miserarum facta peregit, 745 funera ducebat mediam lacrimosa per urbem luridaque arsuro portabat membra feretro.
forte viae vicina domus, qua flebilis ibat pompa, fuit, duraeque sonus plangoris ad aures venit Anaxaretes, quam iam deus ultor agebat. 750

mota tamen "videamus" ait "miserabile funus" et patulis iniit tectum sublime fenestris vixque bene inpositum lecto prospexerat Iphin:
deriguere oculi, calidusque e corpore sanguis inducto pallore fugit, conataque retro 755 ferre pedes haesit, conata avertere vultus hoc quoque non potuit, paulatimque occupat artus, quod fuit in duro iam pridem pectore, saxum.
neve ea ficta putes, dominae sub imagine signum servat adhuc Salamis, Veneris quoque nomine templum 760 Prospicientis habet. — quorum memor, o mea, lentos pone, precor, fastus et amanti iungere, nympha:
sic tibi nec vernum nascentia frigus adurat poma, nec excutiant rapidi florentia venti!

Haec ubi nequiquam formae deus aptus anili 765 edidit, in iuvenem rediit et anilia demit instrumenta sibi talisque apparuit illi, qualis ubi oppositas nitidissima solis imago evicit nubes nullaque obstante reluxit, vimque parat: sed vi non est opus, inque figura 770 capta dei nympha est et mutua vulnera sensit.

Proximus Ausonias iniusti miles Amuli rexit opes, Numitorque senex amissa nepotis munere regna capit, festisque Palilibus urbis moenia conduntur; Tatiisque patresque Sabini 775 bella gerunt, arcisque via Tarpeia reclusa dignam animam poena congestis exuit armis; inde sati Curibus tacitorum more luporum ore premunt voces et corpora victa sopore invadunt portasque petunt, quas obice firmo 780 clauserat Iliades: unam tamen ipse reclusit nec strepitum verso Saturnia cardine fecit; sola Venus portae cecidisse repagula sensit et clausura fuit, nisi quod rescindere numquam dis licet acta deum. Iano loca iuncta tenebant 785 naides Ausoniae gelido rorantia fonte:

has rogat auxilium, nec nympphae iusta petentem sustinuere deam venasque et flumina fontis elicuere sui; nondum tamen invia Iani ora patentis erant, neque iter praecloserat unda: 790 lurida subponunt fecundo sulphura fonti incenduntque cavas fumante bitumine venas.
viribus his aliisque vapor penetravit ad ima fontis, et Alpino modo quae certare rigori audebatis aquae, non ceditis ignibus ipsis! 795 flammifera gemini fumant aspergine postes, portaue nequiquam rigidis promissa Sabinis fonte fuit praestructa novo, dum Martius arma indueret miles; quae postquam Romulus ultro obtulit, et strata est tellus Romana Sabinis 800 corporibus strata estque suis, generique cruorem sanguine cum soceri permiscuit inpius ensis.
pace tamen sisti bellum nec in ultima ferro decertare placet Tatiumque accedere regno.

Occiderat Tadius, populisque aequata duobus, 805 Romule, iura dabas: posita cum casside Mavors talibus adfatur divumque hominumque parentem:
'tempus adest, genitor, quoniam fundamine magno res Romana valet nec praeside pendet ab uno, praemia, (sunt promissa mihi dignoque nepoti) 810 solvere et ablatum terris inponere caelo.
tu mihi concilio quondam praesente deorum (nam memoro memorique animo pia verba notavi)
"unus erit, quem tu tolles in caerulea caeli" dixisti: rata sit verborum summa tuorum!' 815 adnuit omnipotens et nubibus aera caecis occuluit tonitruque et fulgure terruit orbem.
quae sibi promissae sensit rata signa rapinae, innixusque hastae pressos temone cruento inpavidus conscendit equos Gradivus et ictu 820 verberis increpuit pronusque per aera lapsus constitit in summo nemorosi colle Palati reddentemque suo iam regia iura Quiriti abstulit Iliaden: corpus mortale per auras dilapsum tenues, ceu lata plumbea funda 825 missa solet medio glans intabescere caelo;

pulchra subit facies et pulvinaribus altis dignior, est qualis trabeati forma Quirini.

Flebat ut amissum coniunx, cum regia Iuno Irin ad Hersilien descendere limite curvo 830 imperat et vacuae sua sic mandata referre:
'o et de Latia, o et de gente Sabina praecipuum, matrona, decus, dignissima tanti ante fuisse viri coniunx, nunc esse Quirini, siste tuos fletus, et, si tibi cura videndi 835 coniugis est, duce me lucum pete, colle Quirini qui viret et templum Romani regis obumbrat';
paret et in terram pictos delapsa per arcus, Hersilien iussis conpellat vocibus Iris;
illa verecundo vix tollens lumina vultu 840
'o dea (namque mihi nec, quae sis, dicere promptum est, et liquet esse deam) duc, o duc' inquit 'et offer coniugis ora mihi, quae si modo posse videre fata semel dederint, caelum accepisse fatebor!' nec mora, Romuleos cum virgine Thaumantea 845 ingreditur colles: ibi sidus ab aethere lapsum decidit in terras; a cuius lumine flagrans Hersilie crinis cum sidere cessit in auras:
hanc manibus notis Romanae conditor urbis excipit et priscum pariter cum corpore nomen 850 mutat Horamque vocat, quae nunc dea iuncta Quirino est.

LIBER QVINTVS DECIMVS

Quaeritur interea qui tantae pondera molis sustineat tantoque queat succedere regi:
destinat imperio clarum praenuntia veri fama Numam; non ille satis cognosse Sabinae gentis habet ritus, animo maiora capaci 5 concipit et, quae sit rerum natura, requirit.
huius amor curae patria Curibusque relictis fecit ut Herculei penetraret ad hospitis urbem.
Graia quis Italicis auctor posuisset in oris moenia, quaerenti sic e senioribus unus 10 rettulit indigenis, veteris non inscius aevi:
'dives ab Oceano bobus love natus Hiberis litora felici tenuisse Lacinia cursu fertur, et armento teneras errante per herbas ipse domum magni nec inhospita tecta Crotonis 15 intrasse et requie longum relevasse laborem atque ita discedens, "aevo" dixisse "nepotum hic locus urbis erit," promissaque vera fuerunt.
nam fuit Argolico generatus Alemone quidam Myscelus, illius dis acceptissimus aevi. 20 hunc super incumbens pressum gravitate soporis claviger adloquitur: 22a
"patrias, age, desere sedes; 23b
i, pete diversi 23a
lapidosas Aesaris undas!" 22b et, nisi paruerit, multa ac metuenda minatur; 24 post ea discedunt pariter somnusque deusque surgit Alemonides tacitaque recentia mente visa refert, pugnatque diu sententia secum:
numen abire iubet, prohibent discedere leges, poenaque mors posita est patriam mutare volenti.

candidus Oceano nitidum caput abdiderat Sol, 30 et caput extulerat densissima sidereum Nox:
visus adesse idem deus est eademque monere et, nisi paruerit, plura et graviora minari.
pertimuit patriumque simul transferre parabat in sedes penetrare novas: fit murmur in urbe, 35 spretarumque agitur legum reus, utque peracta est causa prior, crimenque patet sine teste probatum, squalidus ad superos tollens reus ora manusque “o cui ius caeli bis sex fecere labores, fer, precor” inquit “opem! nam tu mihi criminis auctor.” 40 mos erat antiquus niveis atrisque lapillis, his damnare reos, illis absolvere culpa;
tunc quoque sic lata est sententia tristis, et omnis calculus in mitem demittitur ater in urnam:
quae simul effudit numerandos versa lapillos, 45 omnibus e nigro color est mutatus in album, candidaque Herculeo sententia numine facta solvit Alemoniden: grates agit ille parenti Amphitryoniadae ventisque faventibus aequor navigat Ionium Sallentinumque Neretum 50 praeterit et Sybarin Lacedaemoniumque Tarentum Sirinosque sinus Crimisenque et lapygis arva, vixque pererratis, quae spectant aequora, terris, invenit Aesarei fatalia fluminis ora nec procul hinc tumulum, sub quo sacrata Crotonis 55 ossa tegebat humus, iussaue ibi moenia terra condidit et nomen tumulati traxit in urbem.’
taliam constabat certa primordia fama esse loci positaeque Italis in finibus urbis.

Vir fuit hic ortu Samius, sed fugerat una 60 et Samon et dominos odioque tyrannidis exul sponte erat isque licet caeli regione remotos mente deos adiit et, quae natura negabat visibus humanis, oculis ea pectoris hausit, cumque animo et vigili perspexerat omnia cura, 65

in medium discenda dabat coetusque silentum dictaque mirantum magni primordia mundi et rerum causas et, quid natura, docebat, quid deus, unde nives, quae fulminis esset origo, Iuppiter an venti discussa nube tonarent, 70 quid quateret terras, qua sidera lege mearent, et quodcumque latet, primusque animalia mensis arguit inponi, primus quoque talibus ora docta quidem solvit, sed non et credita, verbis:

    'Parcite, mortales, dapibus temerare nefandis 75 corpora! sunt fruges, sunt deducunt ramos pondere poma suo tumidaeque in vitibus uvae, sunt herbae dulces, sunt quae mitescere flamma mollisque queant; nec vobis lacteus umor eripitur, nec mella thymi redolentia florem: 80 prodiga divitias alimentaue mitia tellus suggerit atque epulas sine caede et sanguine praebet.
carne ferae sedant ieiunia, nec tamen omnes:
quippe equus et pecudes armentaue gramine vivunt;
at quibus ingenium est inmansuetumque ferumque, 85 Armeniae tigres iracundique leones cumque lupis ursi, dapibus cum sanguine gaudent.
heu quantum scelus est in viscera viscera condi ingestoque avidum pinguescere corpore corpus alteriusque animans animantis vivere leto! 90 scilicet in tantis opibus, quas, optima matrum, terra parit, nil te nisi tristia mandere saevo vulnera dente iuvat ritusque referre Cyclopum, nec, nisi perdideris alium, placare voracis et male morati poteris ieiunia ventris! 95

    'At vetus illa aetas, cui fecimus aurea nomen, fetibus arboreis et, quas humus educat, herbis fortunata fuit nec polluit ora cruore.
tunc et aves tutae movere per aera pennas, et lepus inpavidus mediis erravit in arvis, 100 nec sua credulitas piscem suspenderat hamo:

cuncta sine insidiis nullamque timentia fraudem plenaque pacis erant. postquam non utilis auctor victibus invidit, quisquis fuit ille, leonum corporeasque dapes avidum demersit in alvum, 105 fecit iter sceleri, primoque e caede ferarum incaluisse potest maculatum sanguine ferrum (idque satis fuerat) nostrumque petentia letum corpora missa neci salva pietate fatemur:
sed quam danda neci, tam non epulanda fuerunt. 110

    'Longius inde nefas abiit, et prima putatur hostia sus meruisse mori, quia semina pando eruerit rostro spemque interceperit anni; vite caper morsa Bacchi mactandus ad aras ducitur ultoris: nocuit sua culpa duobus! 115 quid meruistis oves, placidum pecus inque tuendos natum homines, pleno quae fertis in ubere nectar, mollia quae nobis vestras velamina lanas praebetis vitaque magis quam morte iuvatis?
quid meruere boves, animal sine fraude dolisque, 120 innocuum, simplex, natum tolerare labores?
inmemor est demum nec frugum munere dignus, qui potuit curvi dempto modo pondere aratri ruricolam mactare suum, qui trita labore illa, quibus totiens durum renovaverat arvum, 125 quot dederat messes, percussit colla securi.
nec satis est, quod tale nefas committitur: ipsos inscribere deos sceleri numenque supernum caede laboriferi credunt gaudere iuvenci!
victima labe carens et praestantissima forma 130 (nam placuisse nocet) vittis insignis et auro sistitur ante aras auditque ignara precantem inponique suae videt inter cornua fronti, quas coluit, fruges percussaque sanguine cultros inficit in liquida praevisos forsitan unda. 135 protinus ereptas viventi pectore fibras inspiciunt mentesque deum scrutantur in illis;

inde (fames homini vetitorum tanta ciborum) audetis vesci, genus o mortale! quod, oro, ne facite, et monitis animos advertite nostris! 140
cumque boum dabitur caesorum membra palato, mandere vos vestros scite et sentite colonos.

'Et quoniam deus ora movet, sequar ora moventem rite deum Delphosque meos ipsumque recludam aethera et augustae reserabo oracula mentis: 145 magna nec ingeniis investigata priorum quaeque diu latuere, canam; iuvat ire per alta astra, iuvat terris et inertis sede relicta nube vehi validique umeris insistere Atlantis palantesque homines passim et rationis egentes 150 despectare procul trepidosque obitumque timentes sic exhortari seriemque evolvere fati!

'O genus attonitum gelidae formidine mortis, quid Stygia, quid tenebras et nomina vana timetis, materiem vatum, falsi terricula mundi? 155 corpora, sive rogi flamma seu tabe vetustas abstulerit, mala posse pati non ulla putetis!
morte carent animae semperque priore relicta sede novis domibus vivunt habitantque receptae:
ipse ego (nam memini) Troiani tempore belli 160 Panthoides Euphorbus eram, cui pectore quondam haesit in adverso gravis hasta minoris Atridae;
cognovi clipeum, laevae gestamina nostrae, nuper Abanteis templo Iunonis in Argis!
omnia mutantur, nihil interit: errat et illinc 165 huc venit, hinc illuc, et quoslibet occupat artus spiritus eque feris humana in corpora transit inque feras noster, nec tempore deperit ullo, utque novis facilis signatur cera figuris nec manet ut fuerat nec formam servat eandem, 170 sed tamen ipsa eadem est, animam sic semper eandem esse, sed in varias doceo migrare figuras.
ergo, ne pietas sit victa cupidine ventris, parcite, vaticinor, cognatas caede nefanda exturbare animas, nec sanguine sanguis alatur! 175

'Et quoniam magno feror aequore plenaque ventis vela dedi: nihil est toto, quod perstet, in orbe.
cuncta fluunt, omnisque vagans formatur imago;
ipsa quoque adsiduo labuntur tempora motu, non secus ac flumen; neque enim consistere flumen 180 nec levis hora potest: sed ut unda inpellitur unda urgeturque prior veniente urgetque priorem, tempora sic fugiunt pariter pariterque sequuntur et nova sunt semper; nam quod fuit ante, relictum est, fitque, quod haut fuerat, momentaque cuncta novantur. 185

'Cernis et emensas in lucem tendere noctes, et iubar hoc nitidum nigrae succedere nocti;
nec color est idem caelo, cum lassa quiete cuncta iacent media cumque albo Lucifer exit clarus equo rursusque alius, cum praevia lucis 190 tradendum Phoebos Pallantias inficit orbem.
ipse dei clipeus, terra cum tollitur ima,
mane rubet, terraque rubet cum conditur ima, candidus in summo est, melior natura quod illic aetheris est terraeque procul contagia fugit. 195 nec par aut eadem nocturnae forma Dianae esse potest umquam semperque hodierna sequente, si crescit, minor est, maior, si contrahit orbem.

'Quid? non in species succedere quattuor annum adspicis, aetatis peragentem imitamina nostrae? 200 nam tener et lactens puerique simillimus aevo vere novo est: tunc herba recens et roboris expers turget et insolida est et spe delectat agrestes; omnia tunc florent, florumque coloribus almus ludit ager, neque adhuc virtus in frondibus ulla est. 205 transit in aestatem post ver robustior annus fitque valens iuvenis: neque enim robustior aetas ulla nec uberior, nec quae magis ardeat, ulla est.
excipit autumnus, posito fervore iuventae maturus mitisque inter iuvenemque senemque 210 temperie medius, sparsus quoque tempora canis.

inde senilis hiems tremulo venit horrida passu, aut spoliata suos, aut, quos habet, alba capillos.

‘Nostra quoque ipsorum semper requieque sine ulla corpora vertuntur, nec quod fuimusve sumusve, 215 cras erimus; fuit illa dies, qua semina tantum spesque hominum primae matris latitavimus alvo:
artifices natura manus admovit et angi corpora visceribus distentae condita matris noluit eque domo vacuas emisit in auras. 220 editus in lucem iacuit sine viribus infans;
mox quadrupes rituque tulit sua membra ferarum, paulatimque tremens et nondum poplite firmo constitit adiutis aliquo conamine nervis.
inde valens veloxque fuit spatiumque iuventae 225 transit et emeritis medii quoque temporis annis labitur occiduae per iter declive senectae.
subruit haec aevi demoliturque prioris robor: fletque Milon senior, cum spectat inanes illos, qui fuerant solidorum mole tororum 230 Herculeis similes, fluidos pendere lacertos;
flet quoque, ut in speculo rugas adspexit aniles, Tyndaris et secum, cur sit bis rapta, requirit.
tempus edax rerum, tuque, invidiosa vetustas, omnia destruitis vitiataque dentibus aevi 235
paulatim lenta consumitis omnia morte!

‘Haec quoque non perstant, quae nos elementa vocamus, quasque vices peragant, animos adhibete: docebo.
quattuor aeternus genitalia corpora mundus continet; ex illis duo sunt onerosa suoque 240 pondere in inferius, tellus atque unda, feruntur, et totidem gravitate carent nulloque premente alta petunt, aer atque aere purior ignis.
quae quamquam spatio distent, tamen omnia fiunt ex ipsis et in ipsa cadunt: resolutaque tellus 245

in liquidas rarescit aquas, tenuatus in auras aeraque umor abit, dempto quoque pondere rursus in superos aer tenuissimus emicat ignes;
inde retro redeunt, idemque retextitur ordo.
ignis enim densum spissatus in aera transit, 250
hic in aquas, tellus glomerata cogitur unda.

‘Nec species sua cuique manet, rerumque novatrix ex aliis alias reparat natura figuras:

nec perit in toto quicquam, mihi credite, mundo, sed variat faciemque novat, nascique vocatur 255 incipere esse aliud, quam quod fuit ante, morique desinere illud idem. cum sint huc forsitan illa, haec translata illuc, summa tamen omnia constant.

‘Nil equidem durare diu sub imagine eadem crediderim: sic ad ferrum venistis ab auro, 260 saecula, sic totiens versa est fortuna locorum.
vidi ego, quod fuerat quondam solidissima tellus, esse fretum, vidi factas ex aequore terras;
et procul a pelago conchae iacuere marinae, et vetus inventa est in montibus ancora summis; 265 quodque fuit campus, vallem decursus aquarum fecit, et eluvie mons est deductus in aequor, eque paludosa siccis humus aret harenis, quaeque sitim tulerant, stagnata paludibus ument.
hic fontes natura novos emisit, at illic 270 clausit, et aut imis commota tremoribus orbis flumina prosiliunt, aut exsiccata residunt.
sic ubi terreno Lycus est epotus hiatu, existit procul hinc alioque renascitur ore;
sic modo conbibitur, tecto modo gurgite lapsus 275 redditur Argolicis ingens Erasinus in arvis, et Mysum capitisque sui ripaeque prioris paenituisse ferunt, alia nunc ire Caicum; nec non Sicanias volvens Amenanus harenas nunc fluit, interdum suppressis fontibus aret. 280 ante bibebatur, nunc, quas contingere nolis, fundit Anigrus aquas, postquam, nisi vatibus omnis eripienda fides, illic lavere bimembres vulnera, clavigeri quae fecerat Herculis arcus.

quid? non et Scythicis Hypanis de montibus ortus, 285 qui fuerat dulcis, salibus vitiatur amaris?

‘Fluctibus ambitae fuerant Antissa Pharosque et Phoenissa Tyros: quarum nunc insula nulla est.
Leucada continuam veteres habuere coloni:
nunc freta circueunt; Zancle quoque iuncta fuisse 290 dicitur Italiae, donec confinia pontus abstulit et media tellurem reppulit unda;
si quaeras Helicen et Burin, Achaidas urbes, invenies sub aquis, et adhuc ostendere nautae inclinata solent cum moenibus oppida mersis. 295 est prope Pittheam tumulus Troezena, sine ullis arduus arboribus, quondam planissima campi area, nunc tumulus; nam (res horrenda relatu) vis fera ventorum, caecis inclusa cavernis, exspirare aliqua cupiens luctataque frustra 300 liberiores frui caelo, cum carcere rima nulla foret toto nec pervia flatibus esset, extentam tumefecit humum, ceu spiritus oris tendere vesicam solet aut derepta bicorni terga capro; tumor ille loci permansit et alti 305 collis habet speciem longoque induruit aevo.

‘Plurima cum subeant audita et cognita nobis, pauca super referam. quid? non et lympha figuras datque capitque novas? medio tua, corniger Ammon, unda die gelida est, ortuque obituque calescit, 310 admotis Athamanas aquis accendere lignum narratur, minimos cum luna recessit in orbis.
flumen habent Cicones, quod potum saxea reddit viscera, quod tactis inducit marmora rebus; Crathis et huic Subaris nostris conterminus oris 315 electro similes faciunt auroque capillos;
quodque magis mirum est, sunt, qui non corpora tantum, verum animos etiam valeant mutare liquores:

cui non audita est obscenae Salmacis undae Aethiopesque lacus? quos si quis faucibus hausit, 320 aut furit aut patitur mirum gravitate soporem; Clitorio quicumque sitim de fonte levavit, vina fugit gaudetque meris abstemius undis, seu vis est in aqua calido contraria vino, sive, quod indigenae memorant, Amythaone natus, 325 Proetidas attonitas postquam per carmen et herbas eripuit furiis, purgamina mentis in illas misit aquas, odiumque meri permansit in undis.
huic fluit effectu dispar Lyncestius amnis, quem quicumque parum moderato guttore traxit, 330 haut aliter titubat, quam si mera vina bibisset.
est locus Arcadiae, Pheneon dixere priores, ambiguus suspectus aquis, quas nocte timeto:
nocte nocent potae, sine noxa luce bibuntur;
sic alias aliasque lacus et flumina vires 335 concipiunt.++tempusque fuit, quo navit in undis, nunc sedet Ortygie; timuit concursibus Argo undarum sparsas Symplegadas elisarum, quae nunc inmotae perstant ventisque resistunt.
nec quae sulphureis ardet fornacibus Aetne, 340
igneae semper erit, neque enim fuit ignea semper.
nam sive est animal tellus et vivit habetque spiramenta locis flammam exhalantia multis, spirandi mutare vias, quotiensque movetur, has finire potest, illas aperire cavernas; 345 sive leves imis venti cohibentur in antris saxaque cum saxis et habentem semina flammae materiam iactant, ea concipit ictibus ignem, antra relinquuntur sedatis frigida ventis;
sive bitumineae rapiunt incendia vires, 350 luteave exiguis ardescunt sulphura fumis, nempe, ubi terra cibos alimenta pingua flammae non dabit absumptis per longum viribus aevum, naturaeque suum nutrimentum deerit edaci,

non feret illa famem desertaque deseret ignis. 355

‘Esse viros fama est in Hyperborea Pallene, qui soleant levibus velari corpora plumis, cum Tritoniacam noviens subiere paludem;
haut equidem credo: sparsae quoque membra venenis exercere artes Scythides memorantur easdem. 360

‘Siqua fides rebus tamen est addenda probatis, nonne vides, quaecumque mora fluidove calore corpora tabuerint, in parva animalia verti?
in scrobe deiecto mactatos obrue tauros (cognita res usu): de putri viscere passim 365 florilegae nascuntur apes, quae more parentum rura colunt operique favent in spemque laborant.
pressus humo bellator equus crabronis origo est;
concava litoreo si demas brachia cancro, cetera supponas terrae, de parte sepulta 370 scorpius exhibit caudaque minabitur unca;
quaeque solent canis frondes intexere filis agrestes tineae (res observata colonis) ferali mutant cum papillione figuram.

‘Semina limus habet virides generantia ranas, 375 et generat truncas pedibus, mox apta natando crura dat, utque eadem sint longis saltibus apta, posterior partes superat mensura priores.
nec catulus, partu quem reddidit ursa recenti, sed male viva caro est; lambendo mater in artus 380
fingit et in formam, quantam capit ipse, reducit.
nonne vides, quos cera tegit sexangula fetus melliferarum apium sine membris corpora nasci et serosque pedes serasque adsumere pennas?
lunonis volucrem, quae cauda sidera portat, 385 armigerumque Iovis Cythereiadasque columbas et genus omne avium mediis e partibus ovi, ni sciret fieri, fieri quis posse putaret?
sunt qui, cum clauso putrefacta est spina sepulcro, mutari credant humanas angue medullas. 390

'Haec tamen ex aliis generis primordia ducunt, una est, quae reparet seque ipsa reseminet, ales:
Assyrii phoenica vocant; non fruge neque herbis, sed turis lacrimis et suco vivit amomi.

haec ubi quinque suae conplevit saecula vitae, 395

ilicet in ramis tremulaeque cacumine palmae unguibus et puro nidum sibi construit ore, quo simul ac casias et nardi lenis aristas quassaque cum fulva substravit cinnama murra, se super inponit finitque in odoribus aevum. 400 inde ferunt, totidem qui vivere debeat annos, corpore de patrio parvum phoenica renasci;
cum dedit huic aetas vires, onerique ferendo est, ponderibus nidi ramos levat arboris altae fertque pius cunasque suas patriumque sepulcrum 405 perque leves auras Hyperionis urbe potitus ante fores sacras Hyperionis aede reponit.

'Si tamen est aliquid mirae novitatis in istis, alternare vices et, quae modo femina tergo passa marem est, nunc esse marem miremur hyaenam; 410 id quoque, quod ventis animal nutritur et aura, protinus adsimulat, tetigit quoscumque colores.
victa racemifero lyncas dedit India Baccho:
e quibus, ut memorant, quicquid vesica remisit, vertitur in lapides et congelat aere tacto. 415 sic et curalium quo primum contigit auras tempore, durescit: mollis fuit herba sub undis.

'Desinet ante dies et in alto Phoebus anhelos aequore tinguet equos, quam consequar omnia verbis in species translata novas: sic tempora verti 420 cernimus atque illas adsumere robora gentes, concidere has; sic magna fuit censuque virisque perque decem potuit tantum dare sanguinis annos, nunc humilis veteres tantummodo Troia ruinas et pro divitiis tumulos ostendit avorum. 425

clara fuit Sparte, magnae viguere Mycenae, nec non et Cecropis, nec non Amphionis arces.
vile solum Sparte est, altae cecidere Mycenae, Oedipodioniae quid sunt, nisi nomina, Thebae?
quid Pandioniae restant, nisi nomen, Athenae? 430 nunc quoque Dardanium fama est consurgere Romam, Appenninigenae quae proxima Thybridis undis mole sub ingenti rerum fundamina ponit:
haec igitur formam crescendo mutat et olim inmensi caput orbis erit! sic dicere vates 435 faticinasque ferunt sortes, quantumque recordor, Priamides Helenus flenti dubioque salutis 438 dixerat Aeneae, cum res Troiana labaret: 437 “nate dea, si nota satis praesagia nostrae 439 mentis habes, non tota cadet te sospite Troia!
flamma tibi ferrumque dabunt iter: ibis et una Pergama rapta feres, donec Troiaeque tibi que externum patria contingat amicus arvum, urbem et iam cerno Phrygios debere nepotes, quanta nec est nec erit nec visa prioribus annis. 445 hanc alii proceres per saecula longa potentem, sed dominam rerum de sanguine natus Iuli efficiet, quo cum tellus erit usa, fruentur aetheriae sedes, caelumque erit exitus illi.”
haec Helenum cecinisse penatigero Aeneae 450 mente memor refero cognataque moenia laetor crescere et utiliter Phrygibus vicisse Pelasgos.

‘Ne tamen oblitis ad metam tendere longe exspatiemur equis, caelum et quodcumque sub illo est, inmutat formas, tellusque et quicquid in illa est. 455 nos quoque, pars mundi, quoniam non corpora solum, verum etiam volucres animae sumus, inque ferinas possumus ire domos pecudumque in pectora condi, corpora, quae possint animas habuisse parentum aut fratrum aut aliquo iunctorum foedere nobis 460 aut hominum certe, tuta esse et honesta sinamus neve Thyesteis cumulemus viscera mensis!

quam male consuescit, quem se parat ille cruori inpius humano, vituli qui guttura ferro rumpit et inmotas praebet mugitibus aures, 465 aut qui vagitus similes puerilibus haedum edentem iugulare potest aut alite vesci, cui dedit ipse cibos! quantum est, quod desit in istis ad plenum facinus? quo transitus inde paratur?
bos aret aut mortem senioribus inputet annis, 470 horriferum contra borean ovis arma ministret, ubera dent saturae manibus pressanda capellae!
retia cum pedicis laqueosque artesque dolosas tollite! nec volucrem viscata fallite virga nec formidatis cervos includite pinnis 475 nec celate cibis uncos fallacibus hamos;
perdite siqua nocent, verum haec quoque perdite tantum:
ora cruore vacent alimentaue mitia carpant!’

Talibus atque aliis instructo pectore dictis in patriam remeasse ferunt ultroque petitum 480 accepisse Numam populi Latialis habenas.
coniuge qui felix nymphea ducibusque Camenis sacrificos docuit ritus gentemque feroci adsuetam bello pacis traduxit ad artes.
qui postquam senior regnumque aevumque peregit, 485 extinctum Latiaeque nurus populusque patresque deflevit Numam; nam coniunx urbe relicta vallis Aricinae densis latet abdita silvis sacraque Oresteae gemitu questuque Dianae inpedit. a! quotiens nymphae nemorisque lacusque, 490 ne faceret, monuere et consolantia verba dixerunt! quotiens flenti Theseius heros ‘siste modum,’ dixit ‘neque enim fortuna querenda sola tua est; similes aliorum respice casus:
mitius ista feret, utinamque exempla dolentem 495
non mea te possent relevare! sed et mea possunt.

‘Fando aliquem Hippolytum vestras si contigit aures credulitate patris, sceleratae fraude novercae occubuisse neci, mirabere, vixque probabo, sed tamen ille ego sum. me Pasiphaeia quondam 500 temptatum frustra patrium temerare cubile, quod voluit, finxit voluisse et, crimine verso (indiciine metu magis offensane repulsae?) damnavit, meritumque nihil pater eicit urbe hostilique caput prece detestatur euntis. 505 Pittheam profugo curru Troezena petebam iamque Corinthiaci carpebam litora ponti, cum mare surrexit, cumulusque inmanis aquarum in montis speciem curvari et crescere visus et dare mugitus summoque cacumine findi; 510 corniger hinc taurus ruptis expellitur undis pectoribusque tenus molles erectus in auras naribus et patulo partem maris evomit ore.

corda pavent comitum, mihi mens interrita mansit exiliis contenta suis, cum colla feroces 515 ad freta convertunt adrectisque auribus horrent quadrupes monstrique metu turbantur et altis praecipitant currum scopulis; ego ducere vana frena manu spumis albentibus oblita luctor et retro lentas tendo resupinus habenas. 520 nec tamen has vires rabies superasset equorum, ni rota, perpetuum qua circumvertitur axem, stipitis occursu fracta ac disiecta fuisset.
excitior curru, lorisque tenentibus artus viscera viva trahi, nervos in stipe teneri, 525 membra rapi partim partimque reprensa relinqui, ossa gravem dare fracta sonum fessamque videres exhalari animam nullasque in corpore partes, noscere quas posses: unumque erat omnia vulnus.
num potes aut audes cladi componere nostrae, 530 nympha, tuam? vidi quoque luce carentia regna et lacerum fovi Phlegethontide corpus in unda, nec nisi Apollineae valido medicamine prolis reddita vita foret; quam postquam fortibus herbis atque ope Paeonia Dite indignante recepi, 535 tum mihi, ne praesens augerem muneris huius invidiam, densas obiecit Cynthia nubes, utque forem tutus possemque inpune videri, addidit aetatem nec cognoscenda reliquit ora mihi Cretenque diu dubitavit habendam 540 traderet an Delon: Delo Creteque relictis hic posuit nomenque simul, quod possit equorum admonuisse, iubet deponere "qui" que "fuisti Hippolytus," dixit "nunc idem Virbius esto!" hoc nemus inde colo de disque minoribus unus 545 numine sub dominae lateo atque accenseor illi.'

Non tamen Egeriae luctus aliena levare damna valent; montisque iacens radicibus imis liquitur in lacrimas, donec pietate dolentis mota soror Phoebi gelidum de corpore fontem 550 fecit et aeternas artus tenuavit in undas.

Et nymphas tetigit nova res, et Amazone natus haut aliter stupuit, quam cum Tyrrhenus arator fatalem glaebam mediis adspexit in arvis sponte sua primum nulloque agitante moveri, 555 sumere mox hominis terraeque amittere formam oraque venturis aperire recentia fatis:
indigenae dixere Tagen, qui primus Etruscam edocuit gentem casus aperire futuros; utve Palatinis haerentem collibus olim 560 cum subito vidit frondescere Romulus hastam, quae radice nova, non ferro stabat adacto et iam non telum, sed lenti viminis arbor non exspectatas dabat admirantibus umbras; aut sua fluminea cum vidit Cibus in unda 565 cornua (vidit enim) falsamque in imagine credens esse fidem, digitis ad frontem saepe relatis, quae vidit, tetigit, nec iam sua lumina damnans restitit, ut victor domito remeabat ab hoste, ad caelumque oculos et eodem bracchia tollens 570

'quicquid,' ait 'superi, monstro portenditur isto, seu laetum est, patriae laetum populoque Quirini, sive minax, mihi sit.' viridique e caespite factas placat odoratis herbosas ignibus aras vinaque dat pateris mactatarumque bidentum, 575 quid sibi significant, trepidantia consulit exta;
quae simul adspexit Tyrrhenae gentis haruspex, magna quidem rerum molimina vidit in illis, non manifesta tamen; cum vero sustulit acre a pecudis fibris ad Cipi cornua lumen, 580
'rex,' ait 'o! salve! tibi enim, tibi, Cipe, tuisque hic locus et Latiae parebunt cornibus arces.
tu modo rumpe moras portasque intrare patentes adpropera! sic fata iubent; namque urbe receptus rex eris et sceptro tutus potiere perenni.' 585 rettulit ille pedem torvamque a moenibus urbis avertens faciem 'procul, a! procul omnia' dixit
'taliam di pellant! multoque ego iustius aevum exul agam, quam me videant Capitolia regem.'
dixit et extemplo populumque gravemque senatum 590 convocat, ante tamen pacali cornua lauro velat et aggeribus factis a milite forti insistit priscosque deos e more precatus
'est' ait 'hic unus, quem vos nisi pellitis urbe, rex erit: is qui sit, signo, non nomine dicam: 595 cornua fronte gerit! quem vobis indicat augur, si Romam intrarit, famularia iura daturum.
ille quidem potuit portas inrumpere apertas, sed nos obstitimus, quamvis coniunctior illo nemo mihi est: vos urbe virum prohibete, Quirites, 600 vel, si dignus erit, gravibus vincite catenis aut finite metum fatalis morte tyranni!
qualia succinctis, ubi trux insibilat eurus, murmura pinetis fiunt, aut qualia fluctus aequorei faciunt, siquis procul audiat illos, 605 tale sonat populus; sed per confusa frementis verba tamen vulgi vox eminent una 'quis ille est?'

et spectant frontes praedictaque cornua quaerunt.
rursus ad hos Cibus 'quem poscitis,' inquit 'habetis' et dempta capiti populo prohibente corona 610 exhibuit gemino praesignia tempora cornu.
demisere oculos omnes gemitumque dedere atque illud meritis clarum (quis credere possit?) inviti videre caput: nec honore carere ulterius passi festam inposuere coronam; 615 at proceres, quoniam muros intrare vetaris, ruris honorati tantum tibi, Cibe, dedere, quantum depresso subiectis bobus aratro conplecti posses ad finem lucis ab ortu.
cornuaque aeratis miram referentia formam 620 postibus insculpunt, longum mansura per aevum.

Pandite nunc, Musae, praesentia numina vatam, (scitis enim, nec vos fallit spatiosa vetustas,) unde Coroniden circumflua Thybridis alti
insula Romuleae sacris adiecerit urbis. 625

Dira lues quondam Latias vitiaverat auras, pallidaque exsanguis squalebant corpora morbo.
funeribus fessi postquam mortalia cernunt temptamenta nihil, nihil artes posse medentum, auxilium caeleste petunt mediamque tenentes 630
orbis humum Delphos adeunt, oracula Phoebi, utque salutifera miseris succurrere rebus sorte velit tantaque urbis mala finiat, orant:
et locus et laurus et, quas habet ipse, pharetrae intremuere simul, cortinaque reddidit imo 635 hanc adyto vocem pavefactaque pectora movit
'quod petis hinc, propiore loco, Romane, petisses, et pete nunc propiore loco: nec Apolline vobis,
qui minuat luctus, opus est, sed Apolline nato.
ite bonis avibus prolemque accersite nostram.' 640 iussa dei prudens postquam accepere senatus, quam colat, explorant, iuvenis Phoebius urbem, quique petant ventis Epidauria litora, mittunt;

quae simul incurva missi tetigere carina, concilium Graiosque patres adiere, darentque, 645 oravere, deum, qui praesens funera gentis finiat Ausoniae: certas ita dicere sortes.
dissidet et variat sententia, parsque negandum non putat auxilium, multi retinere suamque non emittere opem nec numina tradere suadent: 650 dum dubitant, seram pepulere crepuscula lucem;
umbraque telluris tenebras induxerat orbi, cum deus in somnis opifer consistere visus ante tuum, Romane, torum, sed qualis in aede esse solet, baculumque tenens agreste sinistra 655 caesariem longae dextra deducere barbae et placido tales emittere pectore voces:
'pone metus! veniam simulacraque nostra relinquam.
hunc modo serpentem, baculum qui nexibus ambit, perspice et usque nota visu, ut cognoscere possis! 660 vertar in hunc: sed maior ero tantusque videbor, in quantum verti caelestia corpora debent.'
extemplo cum voce deus, cum voce deoque somnus abit, somnique fugam lux alma secuta est.
postera sidereos aurora fugaverat ignes: 665 incerti, quid agant, proceres ad templa petiti conveniunt operosa dei, quaque ipse morari sede velit, signis caelestibus indicet, orant.
vix bene desierant, cum cristis aureus altis in serpente deus praenuntia sibila misit 670 adventuque suo signumque arasque foresque marmoreumque solum fastigiaque aurea movit pectoribusque tenus media sublimis in aede constitit atque oculos circumtulit igne micantes:
terrata turba pavet, cognovit numina castos 675 evinctus vitta crines albente sacerdos et 'deus en, deus est! animis linguisque favete, quisquis ades!' dixit 'sis, o pulcherrime, visus utiliter populosque iuves tua sacra colentes!

quisquis adest, iussum veneratur numen, et omnes 680 verba sacerdotis referunt geminata piūmque Aeneadae praestant et mente et voce favorem.
adnuit his motisque deus rata pignora cristis ter repetita dedit vibrata sibila lingua; tum gradibus nitidis delabitur oraque retro 685 flectit et antiquas abiturus respicit aras adsuetasque domos habitataque templa salutat.
inde per iniectis adopertam floribus ingens serpit humum flectitque sinus mediamque per urbem tendit ad incurvo munitos aggere portus. 690 restitit hic agmenque suum turbaeque sequentis officium placido visus dimittere vultu corpus in Ausonia posuit rate: numinis illa sensit onus, pressa estque dei gravitate carina; Aeneadae gaudent caesoque in litore tauro 695
torta coronatae solvunt retinacula navis.
inpulerat levis aura ratem: deus eminet alte inpositaque premens puppim cervice recurvam caeruleas despectat aquas modicisque per aequor Ionium zephyris sextae Pallantidos ortu 700 Italiam tenuit praeterque Lacinia templo nobilitate deae Scylaceaue litora fertur; linquit Iapygiam laevisque Amphrisia remis saxa fugit, dextra praerupta Cocinthia parte, Romethiumque legit Caulonaque Naryciamque 705 evincitque fretum Siculique angusta Pelori Hippotadaeque domos regis Temesesque metalla Leucosiamque petit tepidique rosaria Paesti.
inde legit Capreas promunturiumque Minervae et Surrentino generosos palmite colles 710 Herculeamque urbem Stabiasque et in otia natam Parthenopen et ab hac Cumaeae templa Sibyllae.
hinc calidi fontes lentisciferumque tenetur

Liternum multamque trahens sub gurgite harenam Volturnus niveisque frequens Sinuessa columbis 715
Minturnaeque graves et quam tumulavit alumnus Antiphataeque domus Trachasque obsessa palude et tellus Circaea et spissi litoris Antium.
huc ubi veliferam nautae advertere carinam, (asper enim iam pontus erat), deus explicat orbis 720 perque sinus crebros et magna volumina labens templa parentis init flavum tangentia litus.
aequore placato patrias Epidaurius aras linquit et hospitio iuncti sibi numinis usus litoream tractu squamae crepitantis harenam 725 sulcat et innixus moderamine navis in alta puppe caput posuit, donec Castrumque sacrasque Lavini sedes Tiberinaque ad ostia venit.
huc omnis populi passim matrumque patrumque obvia turba ruit, quaeque ignes, Troica, servant, 730 Vesta, tuos, laetoque deum clamore salutant.
quaque per adversas navis cita ducitur undas, tura super ripas aris ex ordine factis parte ab utraque sonant et odorant aera fumis, ictaque coniectos incalfacit hostia cultros. 735 iamque caput rerum, Romanam intraverat urbem:
erigitur serpens summoque acclinia malo colla movet sedesque sibi circumspicit aptas.
scinditur in geminas partes circumfluus amnis (Insula nomen habet) laterumque a parte duorum 740 porrigit aequales media tellure lacertos:
huc se de Latia pinu Phoebeius anguis contulit et finem specie caeleste resumpta luctibus inposuit venitque salutifer urbi.

Hic tamen accessit delubris advena nostris: 745 Caesar in urbe sua deus est; quem Marte togaque praecipuum non bella magis finita triumphis resque domi gestae properataque gloria rerum in sidus vertere novum stellamque comantem, quam sua progenies; neque enim de Caesaris actis 750

ullum maius opus, quam quod pater exstitit huius:
scilicet aequoreos plus est domuisse Britannos perque papyriferi septemflua flumina Nili victrices egisse rates Numidasque rebelles Cinyphiumque Iubam Mithridateisque tumentem 755 nominibus Pontum populo adiecisse Quirini et multos meruisse, aliquos egisse triumphos, quam tantum genuisse virum, quo praeside rerum humano generi, superi, favistis abunde!
ne foret hic igitur mortali semine cretus, 760 ille deus faciendus erat; quod ut aurea vidit Aeneae genetrix, vidit quoque triste parari pontifici letum et coniurata arma moveri, palluit et cunctis, ut cuique erat obvia, divis
'adspice,' dicebat 'quanta mihi mole parentur 765 insidiae, quantaque caput cum fraude petatur, quod de Dardanio solum mihi restat Iulo.
solane semper ero iustis exercita curis, quam modo Tydidae Calydonia vulneret hasta, nunc male defensae confundant moenia Troiae, 770 quae videam natum longis erroribus actum iactarique freto sedesque intrare silentium bellaque cum Turno gerere, aut, si vera fatemur, cum Iunone magis? quid nunc antiqua recordor damna mei generis? timor hic meminisse priorum 775 non sinit; en acui sceleratos cernitis enses.
quos prohibete, precor, facinusque repellite neve caede sacerdotis flammam exstinguite Vestae!'

Talia nequiquam toto Venus anxia caelo verba iacit superosque movet, qui rumpere quamquam 780 ferrea non possunt veterum decreta sororum, signa tamen luctus dant haut incerta futuri;
arma ferunt inter nigras crepitantia nubes terribilesque tubas auditaque cornua caelo praemonuisse nefas; solis quoque tristis imago 785

lurida sollicitis praebebat lumina terris;
saepe faces visae mediis ardere sub astris, saepe inter nimbos guttae cecidere cruentae;
caerulus et vultum ferrugine Lucifer atra sparsus erat, sparsi lunares sanguine currus; 790 tristia mille locis Stygius dedit omina bubo, mille locis lacrimavit ebur, cantusque feruntur auditi sanctis et verba minantia lucis.
victima nulla litat, magnosque instare tumultus fibra monet, caesumque caput reperitur in extis, 795 inque foro circumque domos et templa deorum nocturnos ululasse canes umbrasque silentum erravisse ferunt motamque tremoribus urbem.
non tamen insidias venturaque vincere fata praemonitus potuere deum, strictique feruntur 800 in templum gladii: neque enim locus ullus in urbe ad facinus diramque placet nisi curia caedem.
tum vero Cytherea manu percussit utraque pectus et Aeneaden molitur condere nube, qua prius infesto Paris est ereptus Atridae, 805 et Diomedeos Aeneas fugerat enses.
talibus hanc genitor: 'sola insuperabile fatum, nata, movere paras? intres licet ipsa sororum tectata trium: cernes illic molimine vasto ex aere et solido rerum tabularia ferro, 810 quae neque concursum caeli neque fulminis iram nec metuunt ullas tuta atque aeterna ruinas; invenies illic incisa adamante perenni fata tui generis: legi ipse animoque notavi et referam, ne sis etiamnum ignara futuri. 815 hic sua conplevit, pro quo, Cytherea, laboras, tempora, perfectis, quos terrae debuit, annis.
ut deus accedat caelo templisque colatur, tu facies natusque suus, qui nominis heres inpositum feret unus onus caesique parentis 820 nos in bella suos fortissimus ultor habebit.

illius auspiciis obsessae moenia pacem victa petent Mutinae, Pharsalia sentiet illum, Emathiique iterum madefient caede Philippi, et magnum Siculis nomen superabitur undis, 825 Romanique ducis coniunx Aegyptia taedae non bene fisa cadet, frustra que erit illa minata, servitura suo Capitolia nostra Canopo.
quid tibi barbariam gentesque ab utroque iacentes oceano numerem? quodcunque habitabile tellus 830 sustinet, huius erit: pontus quoque serviet illi!

‘Pace data terris animum ad civilia vertet iura suum legesque feret iustissimus auctor exemploque suo mores reget inque futuri temporis aetatem venturorumque nepotum 835 prospiciens prolem sancta de coniuge natam ferre simul nomenque suum curasque iubebit, nec nisi cum senior meritis aequaverit annos, aetherias sedes cognataque sidera tanget.
hanc animam interea caeso de corpore raptam 840 fac iubar, ut semper Capitolia nostra forumque divus ab excelsa prospectet Iulius aede!’

Vix ea fatus erat, medi cum sede senatus constitit alma Venus nulli cernenda suique Caesaris eripuit membris nec in aera solvi 845 passa recentem animam caelestibus intulit astris dumque tulit, lumen capere atque ignescere sensit emisitque sinu: luna volat altius illa flammiferumque trahens spatioso limite crinem stella micat nati que videns bene facta fatetur 850 esse suis maiora et vinci gaudet ab illo.
hic sua praeferrere quamquam vetat acta paternis,
libera fama tamen nullisque obnoxia iussis invitum praefert unaque in parte repugnat: sic magnus cedit titulis Agamemnonis Atreus, 855 Aegea sic Theseus, sic Pelea vicit Achilles; denique, ut exemplis ipsos aequantibus utar,

sic et Saturnus minor est Iove: Iuppiter arces temperat aetheras et mundi regna triformis, terra sub Augusto est; pater est et rector uterque. 860 di, precor, Aeneae comites, quibus ensis et ignis cesserunt, dique Indigetes genitorque Quirine urbis et invicti genitor Gradive Quirini Vestaque Caesareos inter sacrata penates, et cum Caesarea tu, Phoebae domestice, Vesta, 865 quique tenes altus Tarpeias Iuppiter arces, quosque alios vati fas appellare piisque est:
tarda sit illa dies et nostro serior aevo, qua caput Augustum, quem temperat, orbe relicto accedat caelo faveatque precantibus absens! 870

Iamque opus exegi, quod nec Iovis ira nec ignis nec poterit ferrum nec edax abolere vetustas.
cum volet, illa dies, quae nil nisi corporis huius ius habet, incerti spatium mihi finiat aevi:
parte tamen meliore mei super alta perennis 875 astra ferar, nomenque erit indelebile nostrum, quaque patet domitis Romana potentia terris, ore legar populi, perque omnia saecula fama,
siquid habent veri vatum praesagia, vivam.

LIBER PRIMVS

Tempora cum causis Latium digesta per annum lapsaque sub terras orta que signa canam.
excipe pacato, Caesar Germanice, voltu hoc opus et timidæ derige navis iter, officioque, levem non aversatus honorem, 5 en tibi devoto numine dexter ades.
sacra recognosces annalibus eruta priscis et quo sit merito quaeque notata dies.
invenies illic et festa domestica vobis;
saepe tibi pater est, saepe legendus avus, 10 quaeque ferunt illi, pictos signantia fastos, tu quoque cum Druso praemia fratre feres.
Caesaris arma canant alii: nos Caesaris aras et quoscumque sacris addidit ille dies.
adnue conanti per laudes ire tuorum 15
deque meo pavidos excute corde metus.
da mihi te placidum, dederis in carmina vires:
ingenium voltu statque caditque tuo.
pagina iudicium docti subitura movetur principis, ut Clario missa legenda deo. 20 quae sit enim culti facundia sensimus oris, civica pro trepidis cum tulit arma reis.
scimus et, ad nostras cum se tulit impetus artes, ingenii currant flumina quanta tui.
si licet et fas est, vates rege vatis habenas, 25
auspice te felix totus ut annus eat.
Tempora digereret cum conditor Urbis, in anno constituit menses quinque bis esse suo.
scilicet arma magis quam sidera, Romule, noras, curaque finitimos vincere maior erat. 30
est tamen et ratio, Caesar, quae moverit illum, erroremque suum quo tueatur habet.

quod satis est, utero matris dum prodeat infans, hoc anno statuit temporis esse satis;
per totidem menses a funere coniugis uxor 35
sustinet in vidua tristia signa domo.
haec igitur vidit trabeati cura Quirini, cum rudibus populis annua iura daret.
Martis erat primus mensis, Venerisque secundus;
haec generis princeps, ipsius ille pater: 40
tertius a senibus, iuvenum de nomine quartus, quae sequitur, numero turba notata fuit.
at Numa nec Ianum nec avitas praeterit umbras, mensibus antiquis praeposuitque duos.
Ne tamen ignores variorum iura dierum, 45 non habet officii Lucifer omnis idem.
ille nefastus erit, per quem tria verba silentur:
fastus erit, per quem lege licebit agi.
nec toto perstare die sua iura putaris:
qui iam fastus erit, mane nefastus erat; 50 nam simul exta deo data sunt, licet omnia fari, verbaque honoratus libera praetor habet.
est quoque, quo populum ius est includere saeptis;
est quoque, qui nono semper ab orbe redit.
vindicat Ausonias Iunonis cura Kalendas; 55 Idibus alba Iovi grandior agna cadit;
Nonarum tutela deo caret. omnibus istis (ne fallare cave) proximus ater erit.
omen ab eventu est: illis nam Roma diebus damna sub averso tristia Marte tulit. 60
haec mihi dicta semel, totis haerentia fastis, ne seriem rerum scindere cogar, erunt.

1. A K : IAN : F

Ecce tibi faustum, Germanice, nuntiat annum inque meo primum carmine Ianus adest.
Iane biceps, anni tacite labentis origo, 65
solus de superis qui tua terga vides, dexter ades ducibus, quorum secunda labore otia terra ferax, otia pontus habet:
dexter ades patribusque tuis populoque Quirini, et resera nutu candida templa tuo. 70 prospera lux oritur: linguis animisque favete;
nunc dicenda bona sunt bona verba die.
Ite vacent aures, insanaque protinus absint iurgia: differ opus, livida turba, tuum.
cernis odoratis ut luceat ignibus aether, 75 et sonet accensis spica Cilissa focus?
flamma nitore suo templorum verberat aurum, et tremulum summa spargit in aede iubar.
vestibus intactis Tarpeias itur in arces, et populus festo concolor ipse suo est, 80
iamque novi praeceunt fasces, nova purpura fulget, et nova conspicuum pondera sentit ebur.
colla rudes operum praebent ferienda iuveni,
quos aluit campis herba Falisca suis.
Iuppiter arce sua totum cum spectet in orbem, 85
nil nisi Romanum quod tueatur habet.
salve, laeta dies, meliorque revertere semper,
a populo rerum digna potente coli.
Quem tamen esse deum te dicam, Iane biformis?
nam tibi par nullum Graecia numen habet. 90 ede simul causam, cur de caelestibus unus sitque quod a tergo sitque quod ante vides.
haec ego cum sumptis agitarem mente tabellis, lucidior visa est quam fuit ante domus.
tum sacer ancipiti mirandus imagine Ianus 95
bina repens oculis obtulit ora meis.
extimui sensique metu riguisse capillos, et gelidum subito frigore pectus erat.

ille tenens baculum dextra clavemque sinistra edidit hos nobis ore priore sonos: 100
'disce metu posito, vates operose dierum, quod petis, et voces percipe mente meas.
me Chaos antiqui (nam sum res prisca) vocabant:
aspice quam longi temporis acta canam.
lucidus hic aer et quae tria corpora restant, 105
ignis, aquae, tellus, unus acervus erat.
ut semel haec rerum secessit lite suarum inque novas abiit massa soluta domos, flamma petit altum, propior locus aera cepit, sederunt medio terra fretumque solo. 110
tunc ego, qui fueram globus et sine imagine moles, in faciem redii dignaque membra deo.
nunc quoque, confusae quondam nota parva figurae, ante quod est in me postque videtur idem.
accipe quaesitae quae causa sit altera formae, 115 hanc simul ut noris officiumque meum.
quicquid ubique vides, caelum, mare, nubila, terras, omnia sunt nostra clausa patentque manu.
me penes est unum vasti custodia mundi, et ius vertendi cardinis omne meum est. 120 cum libuit Pacem placidis emittere tectis, libera perpetuas ambulat illa vias:
sanguine letifero totus miscebitur orbis, ni teneant rigidae condita Bella serae.
praesideo foribus caeli cum mitibus Horis 125
(it, redit officio Iuppiter ipse meo):
inde vocor Ianus; cui cum Ceriale sacerdos imponit libum farraque mixta sale, nomina ridebis: modo namque Patulcius idem et modo sacrificio Clusius ore vocor. 130 scilicet alterno voluit rudis illa vetustas nomine diversas significare vices. vis mea narrata est; causam nunc disce figurae:
iam tamen hanc aliqua tu quoque parte vides.

omnis habet geminas, hinc atque hinc, ianua frontes, 135
e quibus haec populum spectat, at illa Larem, utque sedens primi vester prope limina tecti ianitor egressus introitusque videt, sic ego perspicio caelestis ianitor aulae Eoas partes Hesperiasque simul. 140 ora vides Hecates in tres vertentia partes, servet ut in ternas compita secta vias:
et mihi, ne flexu cervicis tempora perdam, cernere non moto corpore bina licet.’
dixerat: et voltu, si plura requirere vellem, 145 difficilem mihi se non fore pactus erat.
sumpsi animum, gratesque deo non territus egi, verbaque sum spectans plura locutus humum: ‘dic, age, frigoribus quare novus incipit annus, qui melius per ver incipiendus erat? 150 omnia tunc florent, tunc est nova temporis aetas, et nova de gravido palmite gemma tumet, et modo formatis operitur frondibus arbor, prodit et in summum seminis herba solum, et tepidum volucres concentibus aera mulcent, 155
ludit et in pratis luxuriatque pecus.
tum blandi soles, ignotaque prodit hirundo et luteum celsa sub trabe figit opus:
tum patitur cultus ager et renovatur aratro.
haec anni novitas iure vocanda fuit.’ 160 quaesieram multis; non multis ille moratus contulit in versus sic sua verba duos: ‘bruma novi prima est veterisque novissima solis:
principium capiunt Phoebus et annus idem.’
post ea mirabar cur non sine litibus esset 165 prima dies. ‘causam percipe’ Ianus ait.
‘tempora commisi nascentia rebus agendis, totus ab auspicio ne foret annus iners.
quisque suas artes ob idem delibat agendo, nec plus quam solitum testificatur opus.’ 170

mox ego, 'cur, quamvis aliorum numina placem, lane, tibi primum tura merumque fero?'
'ut possis aditum per me, qui limina servo, ad quoscumque voles' inquit 'habere deos.'
'at cur laeta tuis dicuntur verba Kalendis, 175 et damus alternas accipimusque preces?'
tum deus incumbens baculo, quod dextra gerebat,
'omina principiis' inquit 'inesse solent.
ad primam vocem timidus advertitis aures, et visam primum consulit augur avem. 180 templa patent auresque deum, nec lingua caducas concipit ulla preces, dictaque pondus habent.'
desierat Ianus. nec longa silentia feci, sed tetigi verbis ultima verba meis:
'quid volt palma sibi rugosaque carica' dixi 185
'et data sub niveo candida mella cado?'
'omen' ait 'causa est, ut res sapor ille sequatur et peragat coeptum dulcis ut annus iter.'
'dulcia cur dentur video: stipis adice causam, pars mihi de festo ne labet ulla tuo.' 190 risit, et 'o quam te fallunt tua saecula' dixit,
'qui stipe mel sumpta dulcius esse putas!
vix ego Saturno quemquam regnante videbam cuius non animo dulcia lucra forent.
tempore crevit amor, qui nunc est summus, habendi: 195 vix ultra quo iam progrediatur habet.
pluris opes nunc sunt quam prisci temporis annis, dum populus pauper, dum nova Roma fuit, dum casa Martigenam capiebat parva Quirinum, et dabat exiguum fluminis ulva torum. 200 Iuppiter angusta vix totus stabat in aede, inque Iovis dextra fictile fulmen erat.
frondibus ornabant quae nunc Capitolia gemmis, pasebatque suas ipse senator oves:
nec pudor in stipula placidam cepisse quietem 205 et fenum capiti subposuisse fuit.

iura dabat populis posito modo praetor aratro, et levis argenti lammina crimen erat.
at postquam fortuna loci caput extulit huius et tetigit summo vertice Roma deos, 210 creverunt et opes et opum furiosa cupido, et, cum possideant plurima, plura petunt.
quaerere ut absumant, absumpta requirere certant, atque ipsae vitiis sunt alimenta vices:
sic quibus intumuit suffusa venter ab unda, 215 quo plus sunt potae, plus sitiuntur aquae.
in pretio pretium nunc est: dat census honores, census amicitias; pauper ubique iacet.
tu tamen auspiciam si sit stipis utile quaeris, curque iuvent nostras aera vetusta manus, 220 aera dabant olim: melius nunc omen in auro est, victaque concessit prisca moneta novae.
nos quoque templa iuvant, quamvis antiqua probemus, aurea: maiestas convenit ipsa deo.
laudamus veteres, sed nostris utimur annis: 225 mos tamen est aequae dignus uterque coli.'
finierat monitus. placidis ita rursus, ut ante, clavigerum verbis adloquor ipse deum:
'multa quidem didici: sed cur navalis in aere altera signata est, altera forma biceps?' 230
'noscere me duplici posses ut imagine' dixit,
'ni vetus ipsa dies extenuasset opus.
causa ratis superest: Tuscum rate venit ad amnem ante pererrato falcifer orbe deus.
hac ego Saturnum memini tellure receptum 235 (caelitibus regnis a Iove pulsus erat).
inde diu genti mansit Saturnia nomen;
dicta quoque est Latium terra latente deo.
at bona posteritas puppem formavit in aere, hospitis adventum testificata dei. 240 ipse solum colui, cuius placidissima laevum radit harenosi Thybridis unda latus.

hic, ubi nunc Roma est, incaedua silva virebat, tantaque res paucis pascua bubus erat.
arx mea collis erat, quem volgo nomine nostro 245 nuncupat haec aetas Ianiculumque vocat.
tunc ego regnabam, patiens cum terra deorum esset, et humanis numina mixta locis.
nondum Iustitiam facinus mortale fugarat (ultima de superis illa reliquit humum), 250 proque metu populum sine vi pudor ipse regebat; nullus erat iustis reddere iura labor.
nil mihi cum bello: pacem postesque tuebar, et', clavem ostendens, 'haec' ait 'arma gero.'
presserat ora deus. tunc sic ego nostra resolvi, 255 voce mea voces eliciente dei:
'cum tot sint iani, cur stas sacratus in uno, hic ubi iuncta foris templa duobus habes?'
ille, manu mulcens propexam ad pectora barbam, protinus Oebalii rettulit arma Tati, 260 utque levis custos, armillis capta, Sabinos ad summae tacitos duxerit arcis iter.
'inde, velut nunc est, per quem descenditis', inquit
'arduus in valles per fora clivus erat.
et iam contigerat portam, Saturnia cuius 265 dempserat oppositas invidiosa seras;
cum tanto veritus committere numine pugnam, ipse meae movi callidus artis opus, oraque, qua pollens ope sum, fontana reclusi, sumque repentinas eiaculatus aquas. 270 ante tamen madidis subieci sulphura venis, clauderet ut Tatio fervidus umor iter.
cuius ut utilitas pulsus percepta Sabinis, quae fuerat, tuto reddita forma loco est;
ara mihi posita est parvo coniuncta sacello: 275
haec adolet flammis cum strue farra suis.'
'at cur pace lates, motisque recluderis armis?'
nec mora, quaesiti reddita causa mihi est:

'ut populo reditus pateant ad bella profecto, tota patet dempta ianua nostra sera. 280 pace fores obdo, ne qua discedere possit; Caesareoque diu numine clausus ero.'
dixit, et attollens oculos diversa videntes aspexit toto quicquid in orbe fuit:
pax erat, et vestri, Germanice, causa triumphii, 285 tradiderat famulas iam tibi Rhenus aquas.
Iane, fac aeternos pacem pacisque ministros, neve suum praesta deserat auctor opus.
Quod tamen ex ipsis licuit mihi discere fastis, sacravere patres hac duo templa die. 290 accepit Phoebos nymphaque Coronide natum insula, dividua quam premit amnis aqua.
Iuppiter in parte est: cepit locus unus utrumque iunctaque sunt magno templa nepotis avo.

(2. B F) 3. C C (4. D C)

Quid vetat et stellas, ut quaeque oriturque caditque, dicere? promissi pars sit et ista mei.
felices animae, quibus haec cognoscere primis inque domos superas scandere cura fuit!
credibile est illos pariter vitiisque locisque altius humanis exseruisse caput. 300 non Venus et vinum sublimia pectora fregit officiumque fori militiaeve labor; nec levis ambitio perfusaque gloria fuco magnarumque fames sollicitavit opum.
admovere oculis distantia sidera mentis 305 aetheraque ingenio subposuere suo.
sic petitur caelum, non ut ferat Ossan Olympus summaque Peliculus sidera tangat apex.
nos quoque sub ducibus caelum metabimur illis, ponemusque suos ad vaga signa dies. 310

Ergo ubi nox aderit venturis tertia Nonis, sparsaque caelesti rore madebit humus, octipedis frustra quaerentur bracchia Cancri:
praeceps occiduas ille subibit aquas.

5. E NON : F

Institerint Nonae, missi tibi nubibus atris signa dabunt imbres exoriente Lyra.

(6. F F) (7. G C) (8. H C) 9. A AGON : (? NP)

Quattuor adde dies ductos ex ordine Nonis, lanus Agonali luce piandus erit.
nominis esse potest succinctus causa minister, hostia caelitibus quo feriente cadit, 320 qui calido strictos tincturus sanguine cultros semper agatne rogat nec nisi iussus agit.
pars, quia non veniant pecudes, sed agantur, ab actu nomen Agonalem credit habere diem.
pars putat hoc festum priscis Agnalia dictum, 325 una sit ut proprio littera dempta loco.
an, quia praevisos in aqua timet hostia cultros,
a pecoris lux est ipsa notata metu?
fas etiam fieri solitis aetate priorum nomina de ludis Graeca tulisse diem. 330 et pecus antiquus dicebat agonia sermo;
veraque iudicio est ultima causa meo.
utque ea non certa est, ita rex placare sacrorum numina lanigerae coniuge debet ovis.
victima quae dextra cecidit victrice vocatur; 335 hostibus a domitis hostia nomen habet.

ante, deos homini quod conciliare valeret, far erat et puri lucida mica salis.
nondum pertulerat lacrimatas cortice murras acta per aequoreas hospita navis aquas, 340 tura nec Euphrates nec miserat India costum, nec fuerant rubri cognita fila croci.
ara dabat fumos herbis contenta Sabinis, et non exiguo laurus adusta sono;
siquis erat factis prati de flore coronis 345 qui posset violas addere, dives erat.
hic, qui nunc aperit percussi viscera tauri,
in sacris nullum culter habebat opus.
prima Ceres avidae gavisae est sanguine porcae, ulta suas merita caede nocentis opes: 350 nam sata vere novo teneris lactentia sucis eruta saetigerae comperit ore suis.
sus dederat poenas: exemplo territus huius palmite debueras abstinuisse, caper.
quem spectans aliquis dentes in vite prementem, 355 taliam non tacito dicta dolore dedit:
'rode, caper, vitem: tamen hinc, cum stabis ad aram, in tua quod spargi cornua possit erit.'
verba fides sequitur: noxae tibi deditus hostis spargitur adfuso cornua, Bacche, mero. 360 culpa sui nocuit, nocuit quoque culpa capellae:
quid bos, quid placidae commeruistis oves?
flebat Aristaeus, quod apes cum stirpe necatas viderat inceptos destituisse favos; caerula quem genetrix aegre solata dolentem 365 addidit haec dictis ultima verba suis:
'siste, puer, lacrimas: Proteus tua damna levabit quoque modo repares quae periire dabit.
decipiat ne te versis tamen ille figuris, impediant geminas vincula firma manus.' 370 pervenit ad vatem iuvenis, resolutaque somno alligat aequorei bracchia capta senis.

ille sua faciem transformis adulterat arte;
mox domitus vinclis in sua membra redit, oraque caerulea tollens rorantia barba 375 ‘qua’ dixit ‘repare arte requiris apes?
obruere mactati corpus tellure iuveni:
quod petis a nobis, obrutus ille dabit.’
iussa facit pastor; fervent examina putri de bove: mille animas una necata dedit. 380 poscit ovem fatum: verbenas improba carpsit, quas pia dis ruris ferre solebat anus.
quid tuti superest, animam cum ponat in aris lanigerumque pecus ruricolaeque boves?
placat equo Persis radiis Hyperiona cinctum, 385 ne detur celeri victima tarda deo.
quod semel est geminae pro virgine caesa Dianae, nunc quoque pro nulla virgine cerva cadit.
exta canum vidi Triviae libare Sapaeos et quicumque tuas accolit, Haeme, nives. 390 caeditur et rigido custodi ruris asellus;
causa pudenda quidem, sed tamen apta deo.
festa corymbiferi celebrabas, Graecia, Bacchi, tertia quae solito tempore bruma refert.
di quoque cultores in idem venerunt Lyaei 395 et quicumque iocis non alienus erat, Panes et in Venerem Satyrorum prona iuventus quaeque colunt amnes solaque rura deae.
venerat et senior pando Silenus asello, quique ruber pavidas inguine terret aves. 400 dulcia qui dignum nemus in convivia nacti gramine vestitis accubere toris:
vina dabat Liber, tulerat sibi quisque coronam, miscendas parce rivus agebat aquas.
Naides effusis aliae sine pectinis usu, 405 pars aderant positae arte manuque comis;
illa super suras tunicam collecta ministrat, altera dissuto pectus aperta sinu;

exserit haec umerum, vestes trahit illa per herbas, impediunt teneros vincula nulla pedes. 410
hinc aliae Satyris incendia mitia praebent, pars tibi, qui pinu tempora nexa geris:
te quoque, inexstinctae Silene libidinis, urunt:
nequitia est quae te non sinit esse senem.
at ruber, hortorum decus et tutela, Priapus 415 omnibus ex illis Lotide captus erat:
hanc cupit, hanc optat, sola suspirat in illa, signaque dat nutu sollicitatque notis.
fastus inest pulchris sequiturque superbia formam:
inrisum voltu despicit illa suo. 420 nox erat, et vino somnum faciente iacebant corpora diversis victa sopore locis; Lotis in herbosa sub acernis ultima ramis, sicut erat lusu fessa, quievit humo.
surgit amans animamque tenens vestigia furtim 425 suspenso digitis fert taciturna gradu.
ut tetigit niveae secreta cubilia nymphae, ipsa sui flatus ne sonet aura cavet;
et iam finitima corpus librabat in herba:
illa tamen multi plena soporis erat. 430 gaudet et a pedibus tracto velamine vota ad sua felici coeperat ire via.
ecce rudens rauco Sileni vector asellus intempestivos edidit ore sonos.
territa consurgit nymphe, manibusque Priapum 435
reicit, et fugiens concitat omne nemus.
at deus, obscena nimium quoque parte paratus, omnibus ad lunae lumina risus erat.
morte dedit poenas auctor clamoris; et haec est Hellespontiaco victima grata deo. 440 intactae fueratis aves, solacia ruris, adsuetum silvis innocuumque genus, quae facitis nidos et plumis ova fovetis, et facili dulces editis ore modos;

sed nihil ista iuvant, quia linguae crimen habetis, 445
dique putant mentes vos aperire suas.
(nec tamen hoc falsum: nam, dis ut proxima quaeque, nunc pinna veras, nunc datis ore notas.)
tuta diu volucrum proles tum denique caesa est, iuveruntque deos indicis exta sui. 450 ergo saepe suo coniunx abducta marito uritur Idaliis alba columba focis.
nec defensa iuvant Capitolia, quo minus anser det iecur in lances, Inachioti, tuas.
nocte deae Nocti cristatus caeditur ales, 455 quod tepidum vigili provocet ore diem.
Interea Delphin clarum super aequora sidus tollitur et patriis exserit ora vadis.

11. C CAR : NP (12. D C)

Proxima prospiciet Tithono nupta relicto Arcadiae sacrum pontificale deae.
te quoque lux eadem, Turni soror, aede recepit, hic ubi Virginea Campus obitur aqua.
unde petam causas horum moremque sacrorum? 465 deriget in medio quis mea vela freto?
ipsa mone, quae nomen habes a carmine ductum, propositoque fave, ne tuus erret honor.
orta prior luna, de se si creditur ipsi, a magno tellus Arcade nomen habet. 470
hinc fuit Euander, qui, quamquam clarus utroque, nobilior sacrae sanguine matris erat;

quae, simul aetherios animo conceperat ignes,
ore dabat vero carmina plena dei.
dixerat haec nato motus instare sibi que, 475 multaque praeterea tempore nacta fidem.
nam iuuenis nimium vera cum matre fugatus deserit Arcadium Parrhasiumque larem.
cui genetrix flenti 'fortuna viriliter' inquit '(siste, precor, lacrimas) ista ferenda tibi est. 480 sic erat in fatis, nec te tua culpa fugavit, et lato moriens pectore plangit humum.

immolat ex illis taurum tibi, Iuppiter, unum

lanus habet finem. cum carmine crescit et annus:
alter ut hic mensis, sic liber alter eat.
nunc primum velis, elegi, maioribus itis:
exiguum, memini, nuper eratis opus.
ipse ego vos habui faciles in amore ministros, 5 cum lusit numeris prima iuventa suis.
idem sacra cano signataque tempora fastis:
ecquis ad haec illinc crederet esse viam?
haec mea militia est; ferimus quae possumus arma, dextraque non omni munere nostra vacat. 10 si mihi non valido torquentur pila lacerto nec bellatoris terga premuntur equi, nec galea tegimur, nec acuto cingimur ense at tua prosequimur studioso pectore, Caesar, 15 nomina, per titulos ingredimurque tuos.

ergo ades et placido paulum mea munera voltu respice, pacando siquid ab hoste vacat.
Februa Romani dixere piamina patres:
nunc quoque dant verbo plurima signa fidem. 20 pontifices ab rege petunt et flamine lanas, casta sacerdotum tempora fronde tegit.

mensis ab his dictus, secta quia pelle Luperci omne solum lustrant, idque piamen habent;

aut quia placatis sunt tempora pura sepulcris, omne nefas omnemque mali purgamina causam 35

vectam frenatis per inane draconibus Aegeus credulus immerita Phasida fovit ope; Amphiareiades Naupactoo Acheloo

Sed tamen, antiqui ne nescius ordinis erres, primus, ut est, Iani mensis et ante fuit;

tu quoque sacrorum, Termine, finis eras. 50

Quem modo caelatum stellis Delphina videbas, quodque vident sternunt, nec metus alter inest.

quo ruitis, generosa domus? male creditis hosti: 225 simplex nobilitas, perfida tela cave.

fraude perit virtus: in apertos undique campos prosiliunt hostes et latus omne tenent.
quid faciant pauci contra tot milia fortes?
    quidve, quod in misero tempore restet, adest? 230 sicut aper longe silvis latratibus actus fulmineo celeres dissipat ore canes, mox tamen ipse perit, sic non moriuntur inulti, volneraque alterna dantque feruntque manu.
una dies Fabios ad bellum miserat omnes, 235 ad bellum missos perdidit una dies.
ut tamen Herculeae superessent semina gentis, credibile est ipsos consuluisse deos:
nam puer impubes et adhuc non utilis armis unus de Fabia gente relictus erat; 240 scilicet ut posses olim tu, Maxime, nasci, cui res cunctando restituenda foret.

14. E N 242a

Continuata loco tria sidera, Corvus et Anguis et medius Crater inter utrumque, iacent.
Idibus illa latent, oriuntur nocte sequenti; 245
    quae, tibi, cur tria sint tam sociata, canam.
forte Iovi Phoebus festum sollemne parabat (non faciet longas fabula nostra moras):
'i, mea' dixit 'avis, ne quid pia sacra moretur, et tenuem vivis fontibus adfer aquam.' 250 corvus inauratum pedibus cratera recurvis tollit et aerium pervolat altus iter.
stabat adhuc duris ficus densissima pomis:
    temptat eam rostro, non erat apta legi;
immemor imperii sedisse sub arbore fertur, 255
    dum fierent tarda dulcia poma mora.
iamque satur nigris longum rapit unguibus hydrum, ad dominumque redit, fictaque verba refert:
'hic mihi causa morae, vivarum obsessor aquarum:

hic tenuit fontes officiumque meum.' 260
'addis' ait 'culpae mendacia' Phoebus 'et audes fatidicum verbis fallere velle deum?
at tibi, dum lactens haerebit in arbore ficus,
de nullo gelidae fonte bibentur aquae.'
dixit, et, antiqui monimenta perennia facti, 265
Anguis, avis, Crater sidera iuncta micant.

15. F LVPER : NP 266a

Tertia post Idus nudos aurora Lupercos aspicit, et Fauni sacra bicornis eunt.
dicite, Pierides, sacrorum quae sit origo, attigerint Latias unde petita domos. 270
Pana deum pecoris veteres coluisse feruntur Arcades; Arcadiis plurimus ille iugis.
testis erit Pholoe, testes Stymphalides undae, quique citis Ladon in mare currit aquis, cinctaque pinetis nemoris iuga Nonacrini, 275
altaque Tricrene Parrhasiaequae nives.
Pan erat armenti, Pan illic numen equarum, munus ob incolumes ille ferebat oves.
transtulit Euander silvestria numina secum:
hic, ubi nunc urbs est, tum locus urbis erat. 280
inde deum colimus devectaque sacra Pelasgis:
flamen ad haec prisco more Dialis erat.
cur igitur currant, et cur (sic currere mos est)
nuda ferant posita corpora veste, rogas?
ipse deus velox discurrere gaudet in altis 285 montibus, et subitas concipit ipse fugas:
ipse deus nudus nudos iubet ire ministros;
nec satis ad cursus commoda vestis erit.
ante Iovem genitum terras habuisse feruntur Arcades, et Luna gens prior illa fuit. 290 vita feris similis, nullos agitata per usus:
artis adhuc expers et rude volgus erat.

pro domibus frondes norant, pro frugibus herbas;
nectar erat palmis hausta duabus aqua.
nullus anhelabat sub adunco vomere taurus, 295
nulla sub imperio terra colentis erat:
nullus adhuc erat usus equi; se quisque ferebat:
ibat ovis lana corpus amicta sua.
sub love durabant et corpora nuda gerebant, docta graves imbres et tolerare Notos. 300 nunc quoque detecti referunt monimenta vetusti moris, et antiquas testificantur opes.
Sed cur praecipue fugiat velamina Faunus, traditur antiqui fabula plena ioci.
forte comes dominae iuvenis Tiryntius ibat: 305
vidit ab excelso Faunus utrumque iugo; vidit et incaluit, 'montana' que 'numina', dixit
'nil mihi vobiscum est: hic meus ardor erit.'
ibat odoratis umeros perfusa capillis Maeonis, aurato conspicienda sinu: 310 aurea pellebant tepidos umbracula soles, quae tamen Herculeae sustinere manus.
iam Bacchi nemus et Tmoli vineta tenebat, Hesperos et fusco roscidus ibat equo.
antra subit tofis laqueata et pumice vivo; 315 garrulus in primo limine rivus erat.
dumque parant epulas potandaque vina ministri, cultibus Alciden instruit illa suis:
dat tenues tunicas Gaetulo murice tinctas, dat teretem zonam, qua modo cincta fuit. 320 ventre minor zona est; tunicarum vincla relaxat, ut posset magnas exseruisse manus.
fregerat armillas non illa ad bracchia factas, scindebant magni vincula parva pedes.
ipsa capit clavamque gravem spoliumque leonis 325 conditaque in pharetra tela minora sua.
sic epulis functi sic dant sua corpora somno, et positis iuxta secubuere toris:

causa, repertori vitis quia sacra parabant, quae facerent pure, cum foret orta dies. 330
noctis erat medium. quid non amor improbus audet?
    roscida per tenebras Faunus ad antra venit:
utque videt comites somno vinoque solutos, spem capit in dominis esse soporis idem.
intrat et huc illuc temerarius errat adulter, 335 et praefert cautas subsequiturque manus.
venerat ad strati captata cubilia lecti, et felix prima sorte futurus erat;
ut tetigit fulvi saetis hirsuta leonis vellera, pertimuit sustinuitque manum, 340 attonitusque metu rediit, ut saepe viator turbatum viso rettulit angue pedem.
inde tori qui iunctus erat velamina tangit mollia, mendaci decipiturque nota.
ascendit spondaque sibi propiore recumbit, 345 et tumidum cornu durius inguen erat.
interea tunicas ora subducit ab ima:
    horrebant densis aspera crura pilis. cetera temptantem subito Tirynthius heros reppulit: e summo decidit ille toro. 350 fit sonus, inclamat comites et lumina poscit Maeonis: inlatis ignibus acta patent.
ille gemit lecto graviter deiectus ab alto, membraque de dura vix sua tollit humo.
ridet et Alcides et qui videre iacentem, 355 ridet amatorem Lyda puella suum.
veste deus lusus fallentes lumina vestes non amat, et nudos ad sua sacra vocat.
Adde peregrinis causas, mea Musa, Latinas, inque suo noster pulvere currat equus. 360 cornipedi Fauno caesa de more capella venit ad exiguas turba vocata dapes.
dumque sacerdotes veribus transuta salignis exta parant, medias sole tenente vias,

Romulus et frater pastoralisque iuventus 365
solibus et campo corpora nuda dabant.
vectibus et iaculis et misso pondere saxi bracchia per lusus experienda dabant:
pastor ab excelso 'per devia rura iuencos, Romule, praedones, et Reme', dixit 'agunt.' 370 longum erat armari: diversis exit uterque partibus, occurso praeda recepta Remi.
ut rediit, veribus stridentia detrahit exta atque ait 'haec certe non nisi victor edet.'
dicta facit, Fabiique simul. venit inritus illuc 375 Romulus et mensas ossaque nuda videt.
risit, et indoluit Fabios potuisse Remumque vincere, Quintilios non potuisse suos.
forma manet facti: posito velamine currunt, et memorem famam quod bene cessit habet. 380 Forsitan et quaeras cur sit locus ille Lupercal, quaeve diem tali nomine causa notet.
Silvia Vestalis caelestia semina partu ediderat, patruo regna tenente suo; is iubet auferri parvos et in amne necari: 385 quid facis? ex istis Romulus alter erit.
iussa recusantes peragunt lacrimosa ministri (flent tamen) et geminos in loca sola ferunt.
Albula, quem Tiberim mersus Tiberinus in undis reddidit, hibernis forte tumebat aquis: 390 hic, ubi nunc fora sunt, lintres errare videres, quaque iacent valles, Maxime Circe, tuae.
huc ubi venerunt (neque enim procedere possunt longius), ex illis unus et alter ait:
'at quam sunt similes! at quam formosus uterque! 395
plus tamen ex illis iste vigoris habet.
si genus arguitur voltu, nisi fallit imago, nescioquem in vobis suspicor esse deum.
at siquis vestrae deus esset originis auctor, in tam praecipiti tempore ferret opem: 400

ferret opem certe, si non ope, mater, egeret, quae facta est uno mater et orba die.
nata simul, moritura simul, simul ite sub undas corpora.' desierat, deposuitque sinu.
vagierunt ambo pariter: sensisse putares; 405 hi redeunt udis in sua tecta genis.
sustinet impositos summa cavus alveus unda:
    heu quantum fati parva tabella tulit!
alveus in limo silvis adpulsus opacis paulatim fluvio deficiente sedet. 410 arbor erat: remanent vestigia, quaeque vocatur Rumina nunc ficus Romula ficus erat.
venit ad expositos, mirum, lupa feta gemellos:
    quis credat pueris non nocuisse feram?
non nocuisse parum est, prodest quoque. quos lupa nutrit, 415
    perdere cognatae sustinere manus.
constitit et cauda teneris blanditur alumnis, et fingit lingua corpora bina sua.
Marte satos scires: timor abfuit. ubera ducunt nec sibi promissi lactis aluntur ope. 420 illa loco nomen fecit, locus ipse Lupercis;
    magna dati nutrix praemia lactis habet.
Quid vetat Arcadio dictos a monte Lupercos?
    Faunus in Arcadia templa Lycaeus habet.
Nupta, quid exspectas? non tu pollentibus herbis 425 nec prece nec magico carmine mater eris;
excipe fecundae patienter verbera dextrae,
    iam socer optatum nomen habebit avi.
nam fuit illa dies, dura cum sorte maritae reddebant uteri pignora rara sui. 430
'quid mihi' clamabat 'prodest rapuisse Sabinas' Romulus (hoc illo scepra tenente fuit),
'si mea non vires, sed bellum iniuria fecit?
    utilius fuerat non habuisse nurus.'
monte sub Esquilio multis incaeduis annis 435

lunonis magnae nomine lucus erat.
huc ubi venerunt, pariter nuptaeque virique suppliciter posito procubuere genu:
cum subito motae tremuere cacumina silvae, et dea per lucos mira locuta suos. 440
'Italidas matres' inquit 'sacer hircus inito.'
obstipuit dubio territa turba sono.
augur erat, nomen longis intercidit annis:
nuper ab Etrusca venerat exul humo;
ille caprum mactat: iussae sua terga puellae 445 pellibus exsectis percutienda dabant.
luna resumebat decimo nova cornua motu, virque pater subito nuptaque mater erat.
gratia Lucinae: dedit haec tibi nomina lucus, aut quia principium tu, dea, lucis habes. 450
parce, precor, gravidis, facilis Lucina, puellis, maturumque utero molliter aufer onus.
Orta dies fuerit, tu desine credere ventis;
perdidit illius temporis aura fidem.
flamina non constant, et sex reserata diebus 455
carceris Aeolii ianua lata patet.
iam levis obliqua subsedit Aquarius urna:
proximus aetherios excipe, Piscis, equos.
te memorant fratremque tuum (nam iuncta micatis signa) duos tergo sustinuisse deos. 460 terribilem quondam fugiens Typhona Dione, tum, cum pro caelo Iuppiter arma tulit, venit ad Euphraten comitata Cupidine parvo, inque Palaestinae margine sedit aquae.
populus et cannae riparum summa tenebant, 465 spemque dabant salices hos quoque posse tegi.
dum latet, insonuit vento nemus: illa timore pallet, et hostiles credit adesse manus, utque sinu tenuit natum, 'succurrite, nymphae, et dis auxilium ferte duobus' ait. 470 nec mora, prosiluit. pisces subiere gemelli:

pro quo nunc, cernis, sidera nomen habent.
inde nefas ducunt genus hoc imponere mensis nec violant timidi piscibus ora Syri.

(16. G EN) 17. H QVIR : NP 474a

Proxima lux vacua est; at tertia dicta Quirino, qui tenet hoc nomen (Romulus ante fuit), sive quod hasta 'curis' priscis est dicta Sabinis (bellicus a telo venit in astra deus);
sive suum regi nomen posuere Quirites, seu quia Romanis iunxerat ille Cures. 480 nam pater armipotens postquam nova moenia vidit, multaque Romulea bella peracta manu,
'Iuppiter', inquit 'habet Romana potentia vires:
sanguinis officio non eget illa mei.
redde patri natum: quamvis intercidit alter, 485 pro se proque Remo qui mihi restat erit.
"unus erit quem tu tolles in caerulea caeli"
tu mihi dixisti: sint rata dicta Iovis.' Iuppiter adnuerat: nutu tremefactus uterque est polus, et caeli pondera novit Atlas. 490 est locus, antiqui Caprae dixere paludem:
forte tuis illic, Romule, iura dabas.
sol fugit, et removent subeuntia nubila caelum, et gravis effusis decidit imber aquis.
hinc tonat, hinc missis abrumpitur ignibus aether: 495 fit fuga, rex patriis astra petebat equis.
luctus erat, falsaeque patres in crimine caedis, haesissetque animis forsitan illa fides;
sed Proculus Longa veniebat Iulius Alba, lunaque fulgebat, nec facis usus erat, 500 cum subito motu saepes tremuere sinistrae:
rettulit ille gradus, horrueruntque comae.
pulcher et humano maior trabeaque decorus Romulus in media visus adesse via et dixisse simul 'prohibe lugere Quirites, 505 nec violent lacrimis numina nostra suis:

tura ferant placentque novum pia turba Quirinum, et patrias artes militiamque colant.'
iussit et in tenues oculis evanuit auras; convocat hic populos iussaue verba refert. 510 templa deo fiunt: collis quoque dictus ab illo est, et referunt certi sacra paterna dies.
Lux quoque cur eadem Stultorum festa vocetur accipe: parva quidem causa, sed apta, subest.
non habuit doctos tellus antiqua colonos: 515 lassabant agiles aspera bella viros.
plus erat in gladio quam curvo laudis aratro:
neglectus domino pauca ferebat ager.
farra tamen veteres iaciebant, farra metebant, primitias Cereri farra resecta dabant: 520
usibus admoniti flammis torrenda dederunt, multaque peccato damna tulere suo;
nam modo verrebant nigras pro farre favillas, nunc ipsas ignes corripuere casas.
facta dea est Fornax: laeti Fornace coloni 525
orant ut fruges temperet illa suas. curio legitimis nunc Fornacalia verbis maximus indicit nec stata sacra facit:
inque foro, multa circum pendente tabella, signatur certa curia quaeque nota, 530 stultaque pars populi quae sit sua curia nescit, sed facit extrema sacra relata die.

(18. A C) (19. B C) (20. C C) 21. D FERAL : F vel FP 532a

Est honor et tumulis, animas placare paternas, parvaeque in exstructas munera ferre pyras.
parva petunt manes: pietas pro divite grata est 535 munere; non avidos Styx habet ima deos.
tegula porrectis satis est velata coronis et sparsae fruges parcaque mica salis, inque mero mollita Ceres violaeque solutae:

haec habeat media testa relicta via. 540 nec maiora veto, sed et his placabilis umbra est:
adde preces positis et sua verba focus.
hunc morem Aeneas, pietatis idoneus auctor, attulit in terras, iuste Latine, tuas.
ille patris Genio sollemnia dona ferebat: 545
hinc populi ritus edidicere pios.
at quondam, dum longa gerunt pugnacibus armis bella, Parentales deseruere dies.
non impune fuit; nam dicitur omine ab isto Roma suburbanis incaluisse rogis. 550 vix equidem credo: bustis exisse feruntur et tacitae questi tempore noctis avi, perque vias Urbis latosque ululasse per agros deformes animas, volgus inane, ferunt.
post ea praeteriti tumulis redduntur honores, 555 prodigiisque venit funeribusque modus.
dum tamen haec fiunt, viduae cessate puellae:
expectet puros pinea taeda dies,
nec tibi, quae cupidae matura videbere matri, comat virgineas hasta recurva comas. 560 conde tuas, Hymenaeae, faces, et ab ignibus atris aufer: habent alias maesta sepulcra faces.
di quoque templorum foribus celentur opertis, ture vacent arae stentque sine igne foci.
nunc animae tenues et corpora functa sepulcris 565 errant, nunc posito pascitur umbra cibo.
nec tamen haec ultra, quam tot de mense supersint Luciferi, quot habent carmina nostra pedes.
hanc, quia iusta ferunt, dixere Feralia lucem;
ultima placandis manibus illa dies. 570 Ecce anus in mediis residens annosa puellis sacra facit Tacitae (vix tamen ipsa tacet), et digitis tria tura tribus sub limine ponit, qua brevis occultum mus sibi fecit iter:

tum cantata ligat cum fusco licia plumbo, 575 et septem nigras versat in ore fabas, quodque pice adstrinxit, quod acu traiecit aena, obsutum maenae torret in igne caput;
vina quoque instillat: vini quodcumque relictum est, aut ipsa aut comites, plus tamen ipsa, bibit. 580
'hostiles linguas inimicaque vinximus ora' dicit discedens ebriaque exit anus.
protinus a nobis quae sit dea Muta requires:
disce per antiquos quae mihi nota senes.
Iuppiter, inmodico Iuturnae victus amore, 585 multa tulit tanto non patienda deo:
illa modo in silvis inter Corymbeta latebat, nunc in cognatas desiliebat aquas.
convocat hic nymphas, Latium quaecumque tenebant, et iacit in medio talia verba choro: 590
'invidet ipsa sibi vitatque quod expedit illi vestra soror, summo iungere membra deo.
consulite ambobus: nam quae mea magna voluptas, utilitas vestrae magna sororis erit.
vos illi in prima fugienti obsistite ripa, 595 ne sua fluminea corpora mergat aqua.'
dixerat; adnuerant nymphae Tiberinides omnes quaeque colunt thalamos, Ilia diva, tuos.
forte fuit Nais, Lara nomine; prima sed illi dicta bis antiquum syllaba nomen erat, 600 ex vitio positum. saepe illi dixerat Almo
'nata, tene linguam': nec tamen illa tenet.
quae simul ac tetigit Iuturnae stagna sororis,
'effuge' ait 'ripas', dicta refertque Iovis.
illa etiam Lunonem adiit, miserataque nuptas 605
'Naida Iuturnam vir tuus' inquit 'amat.'
Iuppiter intumuit, quaque est non usa modeste eripit huic linguam, Mercuriumque vocat:
'duc hanc ad manes: locus ille silentibus aptus.

nympha, sed infernae nympha paludis erit.' 610
iussa Iovis fiunt. accepit Iovis euntes:
dicitur illa duci tum placuisse deo.
vim parat hic, vultu pro verbis illa precatur, et frustra muto nititur ore loqui, fitque gravis geminosque parit, qui compita servant 615 et vigilant nostra semper in urbe Lares.

22. E C 616a

Proxima cognati dixere Karistia kari, et venit ad socios turba propinqua deos.
scilicet a tumulis et qui periere propinquis protinus ad vivos ora referre iuvat, 620 postque tot amissos quicquid de sanguine restat aspicere et generis dinumerare gradus.
innocui veniant: procul hinc, procul impius esto frater et in partus mater acerba suos, cui pater est vivax, qui matris digerit annos, 625
quae premit invisam socrus iniqua nurum.
Tantalidae fratres absint et Iasonis uxor,
et quae ruricolis semina tosta dedit, et soror et Procne Tereusque duabus iniquus et quicumque suas per scelus auget opes. 630 dis generis date tura boni: Concordia fertur illa praecipue mitis adesse die;
et libate dapes, ut, grati pignus honoris, nutriat incinctos missa patella Lares.
iamque, ubi suadebit placidos nox umida somnos, 635 larga precaturi sumite vina manu, et 'bene vos, bene te, patriae pater, optime Caesar' dicite; suffuso sint bona verba mero.

23. F TER : NP 638a

Nox ubi transierit, solito celebretur honore separat indicio qui deus arva suo.
Termine, sive lapis sive es defossus in agro stipes, ab antiquis tu quoque numen habes.
te duo diversa domini de parte coronant, binaque sarta tibi binaque liba ferunt.
ara fit: huc ignem curto fert rustica testo 645 sumptum de tepidis ipsa colona focus.
ligna senex minuit concisaque construit arte, et solida ramos figere pugnat humo;
tum sicco primas irritat cortice flammam;
stat puer et manibus lata canistra tenet. 650 inde ubi ter fruges medios immisit in ignes, porrigit incisos filia parva favos.
vina tenent alii: libantur singula flammis;
spectant, et linguis candida turba favet.
spargitur et caeso communis Terminus agno, 655 nec queritur lactans cum sibi porca datur.
conveniunt celebrantque dapes vicinia simplex et cantant laudes, Termine sancte, tuas:
'tu populos urbesque et regna ingentia finis:
omnis erit sine te litigiosus ager. 660 nulla tibi ambitio est, nullo corrumpere auro, legitima servas credita rura fide.
si tu signasses olim Thyreatida terram, corpora non leto missa trecenta forent, nec foret Othryades congestis lectus in armis. 665
o quantum patriae sanguinis ille dedit!
quid, nova cum fierent Capitolia? nempe deorum cuncta Iovi cessit turba locumque dedit; Terminus, ut veteres memorant, inventus in aede restitit et magno cum Iove templa tenet. 670 nunc quoque, se supra ne quid nisi sidera cernat, exiguum templi tecta foramen habent.
Termine, post illud levitas tibi libera non est:
qua positus fueris in statione, mane;

nec tu vicino quicquam concede roganti, 675 ne videare hominem praeposuisse Iovi:
et seu vomeribus seu tu pulsabere rastris, clamato "tuus est hic ager, ille tuus".'
est via quae populum Laurentes ducit in agros, quondam Dardanio regna petita duci: 680 illa lanigeri pecoris tibi, Termine, fibris sacra videt fieri sextus ab Urbe lapis.
gentibus est aliis tellus data limite certo:
Romanae spatium est Urbis et orbis idem.

24. G REGIF : N 684a

Nunc mihi dicenda est regis fuga. traxit ab illa sextus ab extremo nomina mense dies.
ultima Tarquinius Romanae gentis habebat regna, vir iniustus, fortis ad arma tamen.
ceperat hic alias, alias everterat urbes, et Gabios turpi fecerat arte suos. 690 namque trium minimus, proles manifesta Superbi, in medios hostes nocte silente venit.
nudarant gladios: 'occidite' dixit 'inermem:
hoc cupiant fratres Tarquiniusque pater, qui mea crudeli laceravit verbere terga' 695 (dicere ut hoc posset, verbera passus erat).
luna fuit: spectant iuvenem, gladiosque recondunt, tergaque, deducta veste, notata vident:
flent quoque, et ut secum tueatur bella precantur.
callidus ignaris adnuit ille viris. 700 iamque potens misso genitorem appellat amico, perdendi Gabios quod sibi monstret iter.
hortus odoratis suberat cultissimus herbis, sectus humum rivo lene sonantis aquae:
illic Tarquinius mandata latentia nati 705
accipit, et virga lilia summa metit.
nuntius ut rediit decussaque lilia dixit,

filius 'agnosco iussa parentis' ait.
nec mora, principibus caesis ex urbe Gabina, traduntur ducibus moenia nuda suis. 710 ecce, nefas visu, mediis altaribus anguis exit et extinctis ignibus exta rapit.
consulitur Phoebus. sors est ita reddita: 'matri qui dederit princeps oscula, victor erit.' oscula quisque suae matri properata tulerunt, 715 non intellecto credula turba deo.
Brutus erat stulti sapiens imitator, ut esset tutus ab insidiis, dire Superbe, tuis.
ille iacens pronus matri dedit oscula Terrae, creditus offenso procubuisse pede. 720 cingitur interea Romanis Ardea signis, et patitur longas obsidione moras.
dum vacat et metuunt hostes committere pugnam, luditur in castris, otia miles agit.
Tarquinius iuvenis socios dapibusque meroque 725 accipit; ex illis rege creatus ait:
'dum nos sollicitos pigro tenet Ardea bello, nec sinit ad patrios arma referre deos, ecquid in officio torus est socialis? et ecquid coniugibus nostris mutua cura sumus?' 730 quisque suam laudat: studiis certamina crescunt, et fervet multo linguaque corque mero.
surgit cui dederat clarum Collatia nomen:
'non opus est verbis, credite rebus' ait.
'nox superest: tollamur equis Urbemque petamus'; 735
dicta placent, frenis impediuntur equi.
pertulerant dominos. regalia protinus illi tectata petunt: custos in fore nullus erat.
ecce nurum regis fuis per colla coronis inveniunt posito pervigilare mero. 740 inde cito passu petitur Lucretia, cuius ante torum calathi lanaque mollis erat.
lumen ad exiguum famulae data pensa trahebant; inter quas tenui sic ait illa sono:

'mittenda est domino (nunc, nunc properate, puellae) 745 quamprimum nostra facta lacerna manu.
quid tamen auditis (nam plura audire potestis)?
    quantum de bello dicitur esse super?
postmodo victa cades: melioribus, Ardea, restas, improba, quae nostros cogis abesse viros. 750 sint tantum reduces. sed enim temerarius ille est meus, et stricto qualibet ense ruit.
mens abit et morior, quotiens pugnantis imago me subit, et gelidum pectora frigus habet.' desinit in lacrimas inceptaque fila remisit, 755 in gremio voltum deposuitque suum.
hoc ipsum decuit: lacrimae decuere pudicam, et facies animo dignaque parque fuit.
'pone metum, veni' coniunx ait; illa revixit, deque viri collo dulce pependit onus. 760 interea iuvenis furiales regius ignes concipit, et caeco raptus amore furit.
forma placet niveusque color flavique capilli quique aderat nulla factus ab arte decor:
verba placent et vox et quod corrumpere non est; 765 quoque minor spes est, hoc magis ille cupit.
iam dederat cantus lucis praenuntius ales, cum referunt iuvenes in sua castra pedem.
carpitur attonitos absentis imagine sensus ille; recordanti plura magisque placent. 770 sic sedit, sic culta fuit, sic stamina nevit, iniectae collo sic iacuere comae, hos habuit voltus, haec illi verba fuerunt, hic color, haec facies, hic decor oris erat.
ut solet a magno fluctus languescere flatu, 775 sed tamen a vento, qui fuit, unda tumet, sic, quamvis aberat placitae praesentia formae, quem dederat praesens forma, manebat amor.
ardet, et iniusti stimulis agitatus amoris comparat indigno vimque metumque toro. 780

'exitus in dubio est: audebimus ultima' dixit:
    'viderit! audentes forsque deusque iuvat.
cepimus audendo Gabios quoque.' talia fatus ense latus cinxit tergaque pressit equi.
accipit aerata iuvenem Collatia porta, 785
    condere iam voltus sole parante suos.
hostis ut hospes in penetralia Collatini:
    comiter excipitur; sanguine iunctus erat.
quantum animis erroris inest! parat inscia rerum infelix epulas hostibus illa suis. 790 functus erat dapibus: poscunt sua tempora somnum;
    nox erat, et tota lumina nulla domo.
surgit et aurata vagina liberat ensem et venit in thalamos, nupta pudica, tuos; utque torum pressit, 'ferrum, Lucretia, mecum est' 795 natus ait regis, 'Tarquiniusque loquor.'
illa nihil, neque enim vocem viresque loquendi aut aliquid toto pectore mentis habet; sed tremit, ut quondam stabulis deprensa relictis parva sub infesto cum iacet agna lupo. 800 quid faciat? pugnet? vincetur femina pugnans.
    clamet? at in dextra, qui vetet, ensis erat.
effugiat? positis urgentur pectora palmis, tum primum externa pectora tacta manu.
instat amans hostis precibus pretioque minisque: 805 nec prece nec pretio nec movet ille minis.
'nil agis: eripiam' dixit 'per crimina vitam:
    falsus adulterii testis adulter ero:
interimam famulum, cum quo deprensa fereris.'
    succubuit famae victa puella metu. 810 quid, victor, gaudes? haec te victoria perdet.
    heu quanto regnis nox stetit una tuis!
iamque erat orta dies: passis sedet illa capillis, ut solet ad nati mater itura rogum, grandaevumque patrem fido cum coniuge castris 815

evocat: et posita venit uterque mora.
utque vident habitum, quae luctus causa, requirunt, cui paret exsequias, quoque sit icta malo.
illa diu reticet pudibundaque celat amictu ora: fluunt lacrimae more perennis aquae. 820 hinc pater, hinc coniunx lacrimas solantur et orant indicet et caeco flentque paventque metu.
ter conata loqui ter destitit, ausaque quarto non oculos ideo sustulit illa suos.
'hoc quoque Tarquinio debebimus? eloquar' inquit, 825
'eloquar infelix dedecus ipsa meum?'
quaeque potest, narrat; restabant ultima: flevit, et matronales erubuere genae.
dant veniam facto genitor coniunxque coactae:
'quam' dixit 'veniam vos datis, ipsa nego.' 830 nec mora, celato fixit sua pectora ferro, et cadit in patrios sanguinolenta pedes.
tum quoque iam moriens ne non procumbat honeste respicit: haec etiam cura cadentis erat.
ecce super corpus, communia damna gementes, 835 obliti decoris virque paterque iacent.
Brutus adest, tandemque animo sua nomina fallit, fixaque semanimi corpore tela rapit, stillantemque tenens generoso sanguine cultrum edidit impavidos ore minante sonos: 840
'per tibi ego hunc iuro fortem castumque cruorem, perque tuos manes, qui mihi numen erunt, Tarquinium profuga poenas cum stirpe daturum.
iam satis est virtus dissimulata diu.'
illa iacens ad verba oculos sine lumine movit, 845 visaue concussa dicta probare coma.
fertur in exsequias animi matrona virilis et secum lacrimas invidiamque trahit.
volnus inane patet: Brutus clamore Quirites concitatur et regis facta nefanda refert. 850 Tarquinius cum prole fugit: capit annua consul

iura: dies regnis illa suprema fuit.
Fallimur, an veris praenuntia venit hirundo, nec metuit ne qua versa recurrat hiems?
saepe tamen, Procne, nimium properasse quereris, 855 virque tuo Tereus frigore laetus erit.

iamque duae restant noctes de mense secundo, Marsque citos iunctis curribus urget equos;
ex vero positum permansit Equirria nomen, quae deus in campo prospicit ipse suo. 860 iure venis, Gradive: locum tua tempora poscunt, signatusque tuo nomine mensis adest.
venimus in portum libro cum mense peracto.
naviget hinc alia iam mihi linter aqua.

LIBER TERTIVS

Bellice, depositis clipeo paulisper et hasta, Mars, ades et nitidas casside solve comas.
forsitan ipse roges quid sit cum Marte poetae:
a te qui canitur nomina mensis habet.
ipse vides manibus peragi fera bella Minervae: 5 num minus ingenuis artibus illa vacat?
Palladis exemplo ponendae tempora sume cuspidis: invenies et quod inermis agas.
tum quoque inermis eras, cum te Romana sacerdos cepit, ut huic urbi semina magna dares. 10 Silvia Vestalis (quid enim vetat inde moveri?)
sacra lavaturas mane petebat aquas.
ventum erat ad molli declivem tramite ripam;
ponitur e summa fictilis urna coma:
fessa resedit humo, ventosque accepit aperto 15
pectore, turbatas restituitque comas.
dum sedet, umbrosae salices volucresque canorae fecerunt somnos et leve murmur aquae; blanda quies furtim victis obrepsit ocellis, et cadit a mento languida facta manus. 20 Mars videt hanc visamque cupit potiturque cupita, et sua divina furta fefellit ope.
somnus abit, iacet ipsa gravis; iam scilicet intra viscera Romanae conditor urbis erat.
languida consurgit, nec scit cur languida surgat, 25 et peragit tales arbore nixa sonos:
'utile sit faustumque, precor, quod imagine somni vidimus: an somno clarius illud erat?
ignibus Iliacis aderam, cum lapsa capillis decidit ante sacros lanea vitta focus. 30 inde duae pariter, visu mirabile, palmae surgunt: ex illis altera maior erat, et gravibus ramis totum protexerat orbem, contigeratque sua sidera summa coma.

ecce meus ferrum patruus molitur in illas: 35
terreor admonitu, corque timore micat.
Martia, picus, avis gemino pro stipite pugnant et lupa: tuta per hos utraque palma fuit.
dixerat, et plenam non firmis viribus urnam sustulit: implerat, dum sua visa refert. 40 interea crescente Remo, crescente Quirino, caelesti tumidus pondere venter erat.
quo minus emeritis exiret cursibus annus restabant nitido iam duo signa deo:
Silvia fit mater; Vestae simulacra feruntur 45 virgineas oculis opposuisse manus.
ara deae certe tremuit pariente ministra, et subiit cineres territa flamma suos.
hoc ubi cognovit contemptor Amulius aequi (nam raptas fratri victor habebat opes), 50 amne iubet mergi geminos. scelus unda refugit:
in sicca pueri destituuntur humo.
lacte quis infantes nescit crevisse ferino, et picum expositis saepe tulisse cibos?
non ego te, tantae nutrix Larentia gentis, 55 nec taceam vestras, Faustule pauper, opes:
vester honos veniet, cum Larentalia dicam:
acceptus geniis illa December habet.
Martia ter senos proles adoleverat annos, et suberat flavae iam nova barba comae: 60 omnibus agricolis armentorumque magistris Iliadae fratres iura petita dabant.
saepe domum veniunt praedonum sanguine laeti et redigunt actos in sua rura boves.
ut genus audierunt, animos pater editus auget, 65 et pudet in paucis nomen habere casis, Romuleoque cadit traiectus Amulius ense, regnaque longaevo restituuntur avo.

moenia conduntur, quae, quamvis parva fuerunt, non tamen expediit transiluisse Remo. 70
iam, modo quae fuerant silvae pecorumque recessus, urbs erat, aeternae cum pater urbis ait:
'arbiter armorum, de cuius sanguine natus credor et, ut credar, pignora multa dabo, a te principium Romano dicimus anno: 75 primus de patrio nomine mensis erit.'
vox rata fit, patrioque vocat de nomine mensem:
dicitur haec pietas grata fuisse deo.
et tamen ante omnes Martem coluere priores;
hoc dederat studiis bellica turba suis. 80
Pallada Cecropidae, Minoia Creta Dianam, Volcanum tellus Hypsipylaea colit, Iunonem Sparte Pelopeiadesque Mycenae, pinigerum Fauni Maenalis ora caput:
Mars Latio venerandus erat, quia praesidet armis; 85
arma ferae genti remque decusque dabant.
quod si forte vacas, peregrinos inspice fastos:
mensis in his etiam nomine Martis erit.
tertius Albanis, quintus fuit ille Faliscis, sextus apud populos, Hernica terra, tuos; 90 inter Aricinos Albanaque tempora constat factaque Telegoni moenia celsa manu; quintum Laurentes, bis quintum Aequiculus acer,
a tribus hunc primum turba Curensis habet;
et tibi cum proavis, miles Paeligne, Sabinis 95
convenit; huic genti quartus utrique deus.
Romulus, hos omnes ut vinceret ordine saltem, sanguinis auctori tempora prima dedit.
nec totidem veteres, quot nunc, habuere Kalendas:
ille minor geminis mensibus annus erat. 100 nondum tradiderat victas victoribus artes Graecia, facundum sed male forte genus:
qui bene pugnat, Romanam noverat artem;

mittere qui poterat pila, disertus erat.
quis tunc aut Hyadas aut Pliadas Atlanteas 105 senserat, aut geminos esse sub axe polos, esse duas Arctos, quarum Cynosura petatur Sidoniis, Helicen Graia carina notet, signaque quae longo frater percenseat anno, ire per haec uno mense sororis equos? 110 libera currebant et inobservata per annum sidera; constabat sed tamen esse deos.
non illi caelo labentia signa tenebant, sed sua, quae magnum perdere crimen erat, illa quidem <e> feno, sed erat reverentia feno 115
    quantam nunc aquilas cernis habere tuas.
pertica suspensos portabat longa maniplos, unde manipularis nomina miles habet.
ergo animi indociles et adhuc ratione carentes mensibus egerunt lustra minora decem. 120 annus erat decimum cum luna receperat orbem:
    hic numerus magno tunc in honore fuit, seu quia tot digiti, per quos numerare solemus, seu quia bis quinto femina mense parit, seu quod adusque decem numero crescente venit, 125 principium spatii sumitur inde novis.
inde patres centum denos secrevit in orbem Romulus, hastatos instituitque decem, et totidem princeps, totidem pilanus habebat corpora, legitimo quique merebat equo. 130
quin etiam partes totidem Titiensibus ille, quosque vocant Ramnes, Luceribusque dedit. adsuetos igitur numeros servavit in anno;
    hoc luget spatio femina maesta virum.
neu dubites primae fuerint quin ante Kalendae 135 Martis, ad haec animum signa referre potes.
laurea flaminibus quae toto perstitit anno tollitur, et frondes sunt in honore novae;
ianua tum regis posita viret arbore Phoebi;

ante tuas fit idem, Curia prisca, fores. 140 Vesta quoque ut folio niteat velata recenti, cedit ab Iliacis laurea cana focis.
adde quod arcana fieri novus ignis in aede dicitur, et vires flamma relecta capit.
nec mihi parva fides annos hinc isse priores 145
Anna quod hoc coepta est mense Perenna coli.
hinc etiam veteres initi memorantur honores ad spatium belli, perfide Poene, tui.
denique quintus ab hoc fuerat Quintilis, et inde incipit a numero nomina quisquis habet. 150 primus, oliviferis Romam deductus ab arvis, Pompilius menses sensit abesse duos, sive hoc a Samio doctus, qui posse renasci nos putat, Egeria sive monente sua.
sed tamen errabant etiam nunc tempora, donec 155 Caesaris in multis haec quoque cura fuit.
non haec ille deus tantaeque propaginis auctor credidit officiis esse minora suis, promissumque sibi voluit praenoscere caelum nec deus ignotas hospes inire domos. 160 ille moras solis, quibus in sua signa rediret, traditur exactis disposuisse notis;
is decies senos ter centum et quinque diebus iunxit et a pleno tempora quinta die.
hic anni modus est: in lustrum accedere debet, 165
quae consummatur partibus, una dies.

‘Si licet occultos monitus audire deorum vatibus, ut certe fama licere putat, cum sis officiis, Gradive, virilibus aptus, dic mihi matronae cur tua festa colant.’ 170

sic ego. sic posita dixit mihi casside Mavors (sed tamen in dextra missilis hasta fuit):
'nunc primum studiis pacis deus utilis armis advocor, et gressus in nova castra fero.
nec piget incepti: iuvat hac quoque parte morari, 175 hoc solam ne se posse Minerva putet.
disce, Latinorum vates operose dierum, quod petis, et memori pectore dicta nota.
parva fuit, si prima velis elementa referre, Roma, sed in parva spes tamen huius erat. 180
moenia iam stabant, populis angusta futuris, credita sed turbae tum nimis ampla suae.
quae fuerit nostri si quaeris regia nati, aspice de canna straminibusque domum.
in stipula placidi capiebat munera somni, 185 et tamen ex illo venit in astra toro.
iamque loco maius nomen Romanus habebat, nec coniunx illi nec socer ullus erat.
spernebant generos inopes vicinia dives, et male credebar sanguinis auctor ego. 190 in stabulis habitasse et oves pavisse nocebat iugeraque inculti pauca tenere soli.
cum pare quaeque suo coeunt volucresque feraeque atque aliquam de qua procreet anguis habet.
extremis dantur conubia gentibus: at quae 195 Romano vellet nubere nulla fuit.
indolui patriamque dedi tibi, Romule, mentem.
"tolle preces", dixi "quod petis arma dabunt."
festa parat Conso. Consus tibi cetera dicet, illa facta die dum sua sacra canet. 200
intumuere Cures et quos dolor attigit idem:
tum primum generis intulit arma socer.
iamque fere raptae matrum quoque nomen habebant, tractaque erant longa bella propinqua mora:
conveniunt nuptae dictam Iunonis in aedem, 205
quas inter mea sic est nurus ausa loqui:

“o pariter raptae, quoniam hoc commune tenemus, non ultra lente possumus esse piae.
stant acies: sed utra di sint pro parte rogandi eligite; hinc coniunx, hinc pater arma tenet. 210 quaerendum est viduae fieri malitis an orbae.
consilium vobis forte piumque dabo.”
consilium dederat: parent, crinesque resolvunt maestaque funerea corpora veste tegunt.
iam steterant acies ferro mortique paratae, 215
iam lituus pugnae signa daturus erat, cum raptae veniunt inter patresque virosque, inque sinu natos, pignora cara, tenent.
ut medium campi scissis tetigere capillis, in terram posito procubuere genu; 220 et, quasi sentirent, blando clamore nepotes tendebant ad avos bracchia parva suos.
qui poterat, clamabat avum tum denique visum, et, qui vix poterat, posse coactus erat.
tela viris animique cadunt, gladiisque remotis 225 dant soceri generis accipiuntque manus, laudatasque tenent natas, scutoque nepotem fert avus: hic scuti dulcior usus erat.
inde ~diem quae prima~ meas celebrare Kalendas Oebaliae matres non leve munus habent, 230 aut quia committi strictis mucronibus ausae finierant lacrimis Martia bella suis; vel quod erat de me feliciter Iliam mater rite colunt matres sacra diemque meum.
quid quod hiems adoperta gelu tum denique cedit, 235 et pereunt lapsae sole tepente nives;
arboribus redeunt detonsae frigore frondes, uvidaque in tenero palmite gemma tumet;
quaeque diu latuit, nunc, se qua tollat in auras, fertilis occultas invenit herba vias? 240 nunc fecundus ager, pecoris nunc hora creandi, nunc avis in ramo tecta laremque parat.

tempora iure colunt Latiae fecunda parentes, quarum militiam votaue partus habet.
adde quod, excubias ubi rex Romanus agebat, 245 qui nunc Esquilias nomina collis habet, illic a nuribus Iunoni templa Latinis hac sunt, si memini, publica facta die.
quid moror et variis onero tua pectora causis?
eminet ante oculos quod petis ecce tuos. 250 mater amat nuptas: matris me turba frequentat.
haec nos praecipue tam pia causa decet.'
ferre deae flores: gaudet florentibus herbis haec dea; de tenero cingite flore caput:
dicite 'tu nobis lucem, Lucina, dedisti': 255 dicite 'tu voto parturientis ades.'
siqua tamen gravida est, resoluta crine precetur ut solvat partus molliter illa suos.
Quis mihi nunc dicet quare caelestia Martis arma ferant Salii Mamuriumque canant? 260 nympha, mone, nemori stagnoque operata Dianae;
nympha, Numae coniunx, ad tua facta veni.
vallis Aricinae silva praecinctus opaca est lacus, antiqua religione sacer;
hic latet Hippolytus loris direptus equorum, 265
unde nemus nullis illud aditur equis.
licia dependent longas velantia saepes, et posita est meritae multa tabella deae.
saepe potens voti, frontem redimita coronis, femina lucentes portat ab Urbe faces. 270
regna tenent fortes manibus pedibusque fugaces, et perit exemplo postmodo quisque suo.
defluit incerto lapidosus murmure rivus:
saepe, sed exiguis haustibus, inde bibi.
Egeria est quae praebet aquas, dea grata Camenis: 275
illa Numae coniunx consiliumque fuit.
principio nimium promptos ad bella Quirites molliri placuit iure deumque metu.

inde datae leges, ne firmior omnia posset, coeptaque sunt pure tradita sacra coli. 280 exuitur feritas, armisque potentius aequum est, et cum cive pudet conseruisse manus, atque aliquis, modo trux, visa iam vertitur ara vinaque dat tepidis farraque salsa focis.
ecce deum genitor rutilas per nubila flammis 285
spargit, et effusis aethera siccat aquis.
non alias missi cecidere frequentius ignes:
rex pavet et volgi pectora terror habet.
cui dea 'ne nimium terrere: piabile fulmen est' ait 'et saevi flectitur ira Iovis. 290 sed poterunt ritum Picus Faunusque piandi tradere, Romani numen utrumque soli.
nec sine vi tradent: adhibe tu vincula captis';
atque ita qua possint edidit arte capi.
lucus Aventino suberat niger ilicis umbra, 295 quo posses viso dicere 'numen inest'.
in medio gramen, muscoque adoperta virenti manabat saxo vena perennis aquae;
inde fere soli Faunus Picusque bibebant:
huc venit et fonti rex Numa mactat ovem, 300
plenaque odorati disponit pocula Bacchi, cumque suis antro conditus ipse latet.
ad solitos veniunt silvestria numina fontes et relevant multo pectora sicca mero.
vina quies sequitur: gelido Numa prodit ab antro 305 vinclaque sopitas addit in arta manus.
somnus ut abscessit, pugnando vincula temptant rumpere; pugnantes fortius illa tenent.
tum Numa: 'di nemorum, factis ignoscite nostris si scelus ingenio scitis abesse meo, 310 quoque modo possit fulmen monstrare piari.'
sic Numa; sic quatiens cornua Faunus ait:
'magna petis, nec quae monitu tibi discere nostro fas sit: habent fines numina nostra suos.

di sumus agrestes et qui dominemur in altis 315
montibus; arbitrium est in sua tecta Iovi.
hunc tu non poteris per te deducere caelo,
at poteris nostra forsitan usus ope.'
dixerat haec Faunus; par est sententia Pici.
'deme tamen nobis vincula', Picus ait, 320
'Iuppiter huc veniet, valida perductus ab arte:
nubila promissi Styx mihi testis erit.'
emissi laqueis quid agant, quae carmina dicant, quaque trahant superis sedibus arte Iovem scire nefas homini. nobis concessa canentur 325 quaeque pio dici vatis ab ore licet.
eliciunt caelo te, Iuppiter; unde minores nunc quoque te celebrant Eliciumque vocant.
constat Aventinae tremuisse cacumina silvae, terraque subsedit pondere pressa Iovis: 330 corda micant regis totoque e corpore sanguis fugit et hirsutae deriguere comae.
ut rediit animus, 'da certa piamina' dixit
'fulminis, aliorum rexque paterque deum, si tua contigimus manibus donaria puris, 335 hoc quoque quod petitur si pia lingua rogat.'
adnuat oranti, sed verum ambage remota abdidit et dubio terruit ore virum.
'caede caput' dixit; cui rex 'parebimus' inquit;
'caedenda est hortis eruta cepa meis.' 340 addidit hic 'hominis'; 'sumes' ait ille 'capillos.'
postulat hic animam; cui Numa 'piscis' ait.
risit, et 'his' inquit 'facito mea tela procures,
o vir conloquio non abigende deum.
sed tibi, protulerit cum totum crastinus orbem 345 Cynthius, imperii pignora certa dabo.'
dixit et ingenti tonitru super aethera motum fertur, adorantem destituitque Numam.
ille redit laetus memoratque Quiritibus acta:
tarda venit dictis difficilisque fides. 350

'at certe credemur' ait 'si verba sequetur exitus: en audi crastina, quisquis ades.
protulerit terris cum totum Cynthius orbem, Iuppiter imperii pignora certa dabit.'
discedunt dubii, promissaque tarda videntur, 355 dependetque fides a veniente die.
mollis erat tellus rorata mane pruina:
ante sui populus limina regis adest.
prodit et in solio medius consedit acerno;
innumeri circa stantque silentque viri. 360
ortus erat summo tantummodo margine Phoebus:
sollicitae mentes speque metuque pavent.
constitit atque caput niveo velatus amictu iam bene dis notas sustulit ille manus, atque ita 'tempus adest promissi muneris' inquit; 365
'pollicitam dictis, Iuppiter, adde fidem.'
dum loquitur, totum iam sol emoverat orbem, et gravis aetherio venit ab axe fragor.
ter tonuit sine nube deus, tria fulgura misit.
credite dicenti: mira sed acta loquor: 370
a media caelum regione dehiscere coepit:
summisere oculos cum duce turba suo.
ecce levi scutum versatum leniter aura decidit: a populo clamor ad astra venit.
tollit humo munus caesa prius ille iuvenca 375 quae dederat nulli colla premenda iugo, idque ancile vocat, quod ab omni parte recisum est, quaque notes oculis angulus omnis abest.
tum, memor imperii sortem consistere in illo, consilium multae calliditatis inquit: 380
plura iubet fieri simili caelata figura, error ut ante oculos insidiantis eat.
Mamurius, morum fabraene exactior artis difficile est, illud, dicere, clausit opus.
cui Numa munificus 'facti pete praemia' dixit: 385
'si mea nota fides, inrita nulla petes.'

iam dederat Saliis a saltu nomina ducta armaque et ad certos verba canenda modos;
tum sic Mamurius: 'merces mihi gloria detur, nominaque extremo carmine nostra sonent.' 390 inde sacerdotes operi promissa vetusto praemia persolvunt Mamuriumque vocant.
Nubere siqua voles, quamvis properabitis ambo, differ; habent parvae commoda magna morae.
arma movent pugnas, pugna est aliena maritis; 395 condita cum fuerint, aptius omen erit.
His etiam coniunx apicati cincta Dialis lucibus impexas debet habere comas.

Una nota est Marti Nonis, sacrata quod illis templa putant lucos Veiovis ante duos.
Romulus, ut saxo lucum circumdedit alto,
'quilibet huc' inquit 'confuge; tutus eris.'
o quam de tenui Romanus origine crevit, turba vetus quam non invidiosa fuit!
ne tamen ignaro novitas tibi nominis obstet, 435 disce quis iste deus, curve vocetur ita.
Iuppiter est iuvenis: iuvenales aspice voltus;

Cretides, infanti lac dedit illa Iovi.

quae male creverunt, vescaque parva vocant;
vis ea si verbi est, cur non ego Veiovis aedem aedem non magni suspicer esse Iovis?

et nitidus stellis quinque decemque micat.

Protinus aspicias venienti nocte Coronam Cnosida: Theseo crimine facta dea est.
Iam bene periuro mutarat coniuge Bacchum quae dedit ingrato fila legenda viro;
sorte tori gaudens 'quid flebam rustica?' dixit;
'utiliter nobis perfidus ille fuit.'
interea Liber depexos crinibus Indos 465 vicit, et Eoo dives ab orbe redit.
inter captivas facie praestante puellas grata nimis Baccho filia regis erat.
flebat amans coniunx, spatiataque litore curvo edidit incultis talia verba comis: 470

'en iterum, fluctus, similes audite querellas.
en iterum lacrimas accipe, harena, meas.
dicebam, memini, "periure et perfide Theseu!"
ille abiit, eadem crimina Bacchus habet.
nunc quoque "nulla viro" clamabo "femina credat"; 475 nomine mutato causa relata mea est.
o utinam mea sors qua primum coeperat isset, iamque ego praesenti tempore nulla forem.
quid me desertis morituram, Liber, harenis servabas? potui dedoluisse semel. 480 Bacche levis leviorque tuis, quae tempora cingunt, frondibus, in lacrimas cognite Bacche meas, ausus es ante oculos adducta paelice nostros tam bene compositum sollicitare torum?
heu ubi pacta fides? ubi quae iurare solebas? 485 me miseram, quotiens haec ego verba loquar?
Thesea culpabas fallacemque ipse vocabas:
iudicio peccas turpius ipse tuo.
ne sciat haec quisquam tacitisque doloribus urar, ne totiens falli digna fuisse puter. 490 praecipue cupiam celari Thesea, ne te consortem culpa gaudeat esse suae.
at, puto, praeposita est fuscae mihi candida paelex!
eveniat nostris hostibus ille color.
quid tamen hoc refert? vitio tibi gratior ipso est. 495 quid facis? amplexus inquinat illa tuos.
Bacche, fidem praesta, nec praefer amoribus ullam coniugis: adsuevi semper amare virum.
ceperunt matrem formosi cornua tauri, me tua; at hic laudi est, ille pudendus amor. 500
ne noceat quod amo: neque enim tibi, Bacche, nocebat quod flammis nobis fassus es ipse tuas.
nec, quod nos uris, mirum facis: ortus in igne diceris, et patria raptus ab igne manu.
illa ego sum cui tu solitus promittere caelum. 505 ei mihi, pro caelo qualia dona fero!

dixerat; audibat iamdudum verba querentis Liber, ut a tergo forte secutus erat.
occupat amplexu lacrimasque per oscula siccatur, et 'pariter caeli summa petamus' ait: 510
'tu mihi iuncta toro mihi iuncta vocabula sumes, nam tibi mutatae Libera nomen erit, sintque tuae tecum faciam monimenta coronae, Volcanus Veneri quam dedit, illa tibi.'
dicta facit, gemmasque novem transformat in ignes: 515

Idibus est Annae festum geniale Perennae non procul a ripis, advena Thybri, tuis.
plebs venit ac virides passim disiecta per herbas 525 potat, et accumbit cum pare quisque sua.
sub love pars durat, pauci tentoria ponunt, sunt quibus e ramis frondea facta casa est;
pars, ubi pro rigidis calamos statuere columnis, desuper extentas imposuere togas. 530 sole tamen vinoque calent annosque precantur quot sumant cyathos, ad numerumque bibunt.

invenies illic qui Nestoris ebibat annos, quae sit per calices facta Sibylla suos.
illic et cantant quicquid didicere theatri, 535 et iactant faciles ad sua verba manus, et ducunt posito duras crateres choreas, cultaque diffusis saltat amica comis.
cum redeunt, titubant et sunt spectacula volgi, et fortunatos obvia turba vocat. 540 occurrit nuper (visa est mihi digna relatu) pompa: senem potum pota trahebat anus.
quae tamen haec dea sit quoniam rumoribus errat, fabula proposito nulla tegenda meo.
arserat Aeneae Dido miserabilis igne, 545 arserat exstructis in sua fata rogis, compositusque cinis, tumulique in marmore carmen hoc breve, quod moriens ipsa reliquit, erat:
praebuit Aeneas et causam mortis et ensem:
    ipsa sua Dido concidit sua manu. 550 protinus invadunt Numidae sine vindice regnum, et potitur capta Maurus larva domo, seque memor spreto 'thalamis tamen' inquit 'Elissae en ego, quem totiens reppulit illa, fruor.'
diffugiunt Tyrii quo quemque agit error, ut olim 555 amisso dubiae rege vagantur apes.
tertia nudandas acceperat aera messes, inque cavos ierant tertia musta lacus:
pellitur Anna domo, lacrimansque sororia linoquit moenia; germanae iusta dat ante suae. 560 mixta bibunt molles lacrimis unguenta favillae, vertice libatas accipiuntque comas, terque 'vale' dixit, cineres ter ad ora relatos pressit, et est illis visa subesse soror.
nacta ratem comitesque fugae pede labitur aequo 565 moenia respiciens, dulce sororis opus.
fertilis est Melite sterili vicina Cosyrae insula, quam Libyci verberat unda freti.

hanc petit, hospitio regis confisa vetusto:
hospes opum dives rex ibi Battus erat. 570 qui postquam didicit casus utriusque sororis,
'haec' inquit 'tellus quantulacumque tua est.'
et tamen hospitii servasset ad ultima munus;
sed timuit magnas Pygmalionis opes.
signa recensuerat bis sol sua, tertius ibat 575
annus, et exilio terra paranda nova est.
frater adest belloque petit. rex arma perosus
'nos sumus inbelles, tu fuge sospes' ait.
iussa fugit ventoque ratem committit et undis:
asperior quovis aequore frater erat. 580 est prope piscosos lapidosi Crathidis amnes parvus ager, Cameren incola turba vocat:
illuc cursus erat. nec longius abfuit inde quam quantum novies mittere funda potest:
vela cadunt primo et dubia librantur ab aura: 585
'findite remigio' navita dixit 'aquas';
dumque parant torto subducere carbasa lino, percutitur rapido puppis adunca Noto, inque patens aequor, frustra pugnante magistro, fertur, et ex oculis visa refugit humus. 590 adsiliunt fluctus imoque a gurgite pontus vertitur, et canas alveus haurit aquas.
vincitur ars vento nec iam moderator habenis utitur, at votis is quoque poscit opem.
iactatur tumidas exul Phoenissa per undas, 595 umidaque opposita lumina veste tegit.
tum primum Dido felix est dicta sorori et quaecumque aliquam corpore pressit humum. ducitur ad Laurens ingenti flamine litus puppis, et expositis omnibus hausta perit. 600 iam pius Aeneas regno nataque Latini auctus erat, populos miscueratque duos.
litore dotali solo comitatus Achate secretum nudo dum pede carpit iter, aspicit errantem, nec credere sustinet Annam 605 esse: quid in Latios illa veniret agros?

dum secum Aeneas, 'Anna est!' exclamat Achates:
ad nomen voltus sustulit illa suos.
heu, quid agat? fugiat? quos terrae quaerat hiatus?
ante oculos miserae fata sororis erant. 610 sensit, et adloquitur trepidam Cythereius heros (flet tamen admonitu motus, Elissa, tui):
'Anna, per hanc iuro, quam quondam audire solebas tellurem fato prosperiore dari, perque deos comites, hac nuper sede locatos, 615
saepe meas illos increpuisse moras.
nec timui de morte tamen: metus abfuit iste.
ei mihi, credibili fortior illa fuit.
ne refer: aspexi non illo corpore digna volnera Tartareas ausus adire domos. 620 at tu, seu ratio te nostris adpulit oris sive deus, regni commoda carpe mei.
multa tibi memores, nil non debemus Elissae:
nomine grata tuo, grata sororis eris.'
taliam dicenti (neque enim spes altera restat) 625 credidit, errores exposuitque suos;
utque domum intravit Tyrios induta paratus, incipit Aeneas (cetera turba tacet):
'hanc tibi cur tradam, pia causa, Lavinia coniunx, est mihi: consumpsi naufragus huius opes. 630 orta Tyro est, regnum Libyca possedit in ora:
quam precor ut carae more sororis ames.'
omnia promittit falsumque Lavinia volnus mente premit tacita dissimulatque metus; donaque cum videat praeter sua lumina ferri 635
multa, tamen mitti clam quoque multa putat.
non habet exactum quid agat: furialiter odit, et parat insidias et cupit ulta mori.
nox erat: ante torum visa est adstare sororis squalenti Dido sanguinolenta coma 640 et 'fuge, ne dubita, maestum fuge' dicere 'tectum';

sub verbum querulas impulit aura fores.
exsilit et velox humili ~super ausa~ fenestra se iacit (audacem fecerat ipse timor), cumque metu rapitur tunica velata recincta, 645 currit ut auditis territa damma lupis, corniger hanc cupidis rapuisse Numicius undis creditur et stagnis occuluisse suis.
Sidonis interea magno clamore per agros quaeritur: apparent signa notaeque pedum; 650 ventum erat ad ripas: inerant vestigia ripis;
sustinuit tacitas conscius amnis aquas.
ipsa loqui visa est 'placidi sum nympa Numici:
amne perenne latens Anna Perenna vocor.'
protinus erratis laeti vescuntur in agris 655 et celebrant largo seque diemque mero.
Sunt quibus haec Luna est, quia mensibus impleat annum;
pars Themis, Inachiam pars putat esse bovem.
invenies qui te nymphen Azanida dicant teque Iovi primos, Anna, dedisse cibos. 660 haec quoque, quam referam, nostras pervenit ad aures fama, nec a veri dissidet illa fide.
plebs vetus et nullis etiam nunc tuta tribunis fugit et in Sacri vertice Montis erat;
iam quoque quem secum tulerant defecerat illos 665 victus et humanis usibus apta Ceres.
orta suburbanis quaedam fuit Anna Bovillis, pauper, sed multae sedulitatis anus;
illa, levi mitra canos incincta capillos, fingebat tremula rustica liba manu, 670 atque ita per populum fumantia mane solebat dividere: haec populo copia grata fuit.
pace domi facta signum posuere Perennae, quod sibi defectis illa ferebat opem.
Nunc mihi, cur cantent, superest, obscena puellae, 675
dicere; nam coeunt certaue probra canunt.

nuper erat dea facta: venit Gradivus ad Annam, et cum seducta talia verba facit:
'mense meo coleris, iunxi mea tempora tecum;
pendet ab officio spes mihi magna tuo. 680 armifer armiferae correptus amore Minervae uror, et hoc longo tempore volnus alo.
effice, di studio similes coeamus in unum:
conveniunt partes hae tibi, comis anus.'
dixerat; illa deum promisso ludit inani, 685 et stultam dubia spem trahit usque mora.
saepius instanti 'mandata peregrimus' inquit;
'evicta est: precibus vix dedit illa manus.'
credit amans thalamosque parat. deducitur illuc Anna tegens voltus, ut nova nupta, suos. 690 oscula sumpturus subito Mars aspicit Annam:
nunc pudor elusum, nunc subit ira, deum.
ridet amatorem carae nova diva Minervae, nec res hac Veneri gratior ulla fuit.
inde ioci veteres obscenaque dicta canuntur, 695 et iuvat hanc magno verba dedisse deo.
Praeteriturus eram gladios in principe fixos, cum sic a castis Vesta locuta focus:
'ne dubita meminisse: meus fuit ille sacerdos;
sacrilegae telis me petiere manus. 700 ipsa virum rapui simulacraque nuda reliqui:
quae cecidit ferro, Caesaris umbra fuit.'
ille quidem caelo positus Iovis atria vidit, et tenet in magno templa dicata foro;
at quicumque nefas ausi, prohibente deorum 705 numine, polluerant pontificale caput, morte iacent merita: testes estote, Philippi, et quorum sparsis ossibus albet humus.
hoc opus, haec pietas, haec prima elementa fuerunt Caesaris, ulcisci iusta per arma patrem. 710

Tertia post Idus lux est celeberrima Baccho: Bacche, fave vati, dum tua festa cano.

carminis huius opus causas exponere quare 725

Una dies media est, et fiunt sacra Minervae,

LIBER QVARTVS

'Alma, fave', dixi 'geminorum mater Amorum';
ad vatem voltus rettulit illa suos;
'quid tibi' ait 'mecum? certe maiora canebas.
num vetus in molli pectore volnus habes?'
'scis, dea', respondi 'de volnere.' risit, et aether 5 protinus ex illa parte serenus erat.
'saucius an sanus numquid tua signa reliqui?
tu mihi propositum, tu mihi semper opus.
quae decuit primis sine crimine lusimus annis;
nunc teritur nostris area maior equis. 10
tempora cum causis, annalibus eruta priscis, lapsaque sub terras orta que signa cano.
venimus ad quartum, quo tu celeberrima mense:
et vatem et mensem scis, Venus, esse tuos.'
mota Cytheriaca leviter mea tempora myrto 15 contigit et 'coeptum perfice' dixit 'opus'.
sensimus, et causae subito patuere dierum:
dum licet et spirant flamina, navis eat.
Siqua tamen pars te de fastis tangere debet, Caesar, in Aprili quod tuearis habes: 20
hic ad te magna descendit imagine mensis, et fit adoptiva nobilitate tuus.
hoc pater Iliades, cum longum scriberet annum, vidit et auctores rettulit ipse tuos:
utque fero Marti primam dedit ordine sortem, 25 quod sibi nascendi proxima causa fuit, sic Venerem gradibus multis in gente receptam alterius voluit mensis habere locum; principiumque sui generis revolutaque quaerens saecula, cognatos venit adusque deos. 30 Dardanon Electra nesciret Atlantide natum scilicet, Electran concubuisse Iovi?

huius Ericthonius, Tros est generatus ab illo, Assaracō creat hic, Assaracusque Capyn; proximus Anchises, cum quo commune parentis 35 non dedignata est nomen habere Venus:
hinc satus Aeneas; pietas spectata per ignes sacra patremque umeris, altera sacra, tulit.
venimus ad felix aliquando nomen Iuli, unde domus Teucros Iulia tangit avos. 40
Postumus hinc, qui, quod silvis fuit ortus in altis, Silvius in Latia gente vocatus erat.
isque, Latine, tibi pater est; subit Alba Latinum;
proximus est titulis Epytus, Alba, tuis.
ille dedit Capii repetita vocabula Troiae 45 et tuus est idem, Calpete, factus avus.
cumque patris regnum post hunc Tiberinus haberet, dicitur in Tuscae gurgite mersus aquae.
iam tamen Agrippam natum Remulumque nepotem viderat; in Remulum fulmina missa ferunt. 50
venit Aventinus post hos, locus unde vocatur, mons quoque; post illum tradita regna Procae;
quem sequitur duri Numitor germanus Amuli; Ilia cum Lauso de Numitore sati:
ense cadit patruī Lausus; placet Ilia Marti, 55 teque parit, gemino iuncte Quirine Remo.
ille suos semper Venerem Martemque parentes dixit, et emeruit vocis habere fidem:
neve secuturi possent nescire nepotes, tempora dis generis continuata dedit. 60 sed Veneris mensem Graio sermone notatum auguror; a spumis est dea dicta maris.
nec tibi sit mirum Graeco rem nomine dici; Itala nam tellus Graecia maior erat.
venerat Euander plena cum classe suorum, 65
venerat Alcides, Graius uterque genus (hospes Aventinis armentum pavit in herbis claviger, et tanto est Albula pota deo), dux quoque Neritius; testes Laestrygones exstant et quod adhuc Circes nomina litus habet; 70 et iam Telegoni, iam moenia Tiburis udi stabant, Argolicae quod posuere manus.

venerat Atridae fatis agitatus Halaesus, a quo se dictam terra Falisca putat.
adice Troianae suasorem Antenora pacis, 75 et generum Oeniden, Apule Daune, tuum.
serus ab Iliacis, et post Antenora, flammis attulit Aeneas in loca nostra deos.
huius erat Solimus Phrygia comes unus ab Ida, a quo Sulmonis moenia nomen habent, 80 Sulmonis gelidi, patriae, Germanice, nostrae.
me miserum, Scythico quam procul illa solo est!
ergo ego tam longe — sed supprime, Musa, querellas:
non tibi sunt maesta sacra canenda lyra.
Quo non livor abit? sunt qui tibi mensis honorem 85
eripuisse velint invideantque, Venus.
nam, quia ver aperit tunc omnia densaque cedit frigoris asperitas fetaque terra patet, Aprilem memorant ab aperto tempore dictum, quem Venus iniecta vindicat alma manu. 90 illa quidem totum dignissima temperat orbem, illa tenet nullo regna minora deo, iuraque dat caelo, terrae, natalibus undis, perque suos initus continet omne genus.
illa deos omnes (longum est numerare) creavit, 95 illa satis causas arboribusque dedit, illa rudes animos hominum contraxit in unum, et docuit iungi cum pare quemque sua.
quid genus omne creat volucrum, nisi blanda voluptas?
nec coeant pecudes, si levis absit amor. 100 cum mare trux aries cornu decertat, at idem frontem dilectae laedere parcit ovis;
deposita sequitur taurus feritate iuvenecam,

quem toti saltus, quem nemus omne tremit;
vis eadem lato quodcumque sub aequore vivit 105
servat, et innumeris piscibus implet aquas.
prima feros habitus homini detraxit: ab illa venerunt cultus mundaque cura sui.
primus amans carmen vigilatum nocte negata dicitur ad clausas concinuisse fores, 110 eloquiumque fuit duram exorare puellam, proque sua causa quisque disertus erat.
mille per hanc artes motae; studioque placendi, quae latuere prius, multa reperta ferunt.
hanc quisquam titulo mensis spoliare secundi 115 audeat? a nobis sit furor iste procul.
quid quod ubique potens templisque frequentibus aucta, urbe tamen nostra ius dea maius habet?
pro Troia, Romane, tua Venus arma ferebat, cum gemuit teneram cuspide laesa manum; 120 caelestesque duas Troiano iudice vicit (ah nolim victas hoc meminisse deas), Assaracique nurus dicta est, ut scilicet olim magnus luleos Caesar haberet avos.
nec Veneri tempus, quam ver, erat aptius ullum 125 (vere nitent terrae, vere remissus ager;
nunc herbae rupta tellure cacumina tollunt, nunc tumido gemmas cortice palmes agit), et formosa Venus formoso tempore digna est, utque solet, Marti continuata suo est. 130 vere monet curvas materna per aequora puppes ire nec hibernas iam timuisse minas.

Hinc Cereris ludi: non est opus indice causae;
sponte deae munus promeritumque patet.
panis erat primis virides mortalibus herbae, 395 quas tellus nullo sollicitante dabat; et modo carpebant vivax e caespite gramen,
nunc epulae tenera fronde cacumen erant.
postmodo glans nota est: bene erat iam glande reperta, duraque magnificas quercus habebat opes. 400 prima Ceres homine ad meliora alimenta vocato mutavit glandes utiliore cibo.
illa iugo tauros collum praebere coegit:
tum primum soles eruta vidit humus.
aes erat in pretio, Chalybeia massa latebat: 405
eheu, perpetuo debuit illa tegi.
pace Ceres laeta est; et vos orate, coloni, perpetuam pacem pacificumque ducem.
farra deae micaeque licet salientis honorem detis et in veteres turea grana focos; 410 et, si tura aberunt, unctas accendite taedas:
parva bonae Cereri, sint modo casta, placent.
a bove succincti cultros removete ministri:
bos aret; ignavam sacrificate suem.
apta iugo cervix non est ferienda securi: 415
vivat et in dura saepe laboret humo.
Exigit ipse locus raptus ut virginis edam:
plura recognosces, pauca docendus eris.
terra tribus scopulis vastum procurrit in aequor Trinacris, a positu nomen adepta loci, 420 grata domus Cereri: multas ea possidet urbes, in quibus est culto fertilis Henna solo.
frigida caelestum matres Arethusa vocarat:
venerat ad sacras et dea flava dapes.
filia, consuetis ut erat comitata puellis, 425 errabat nudo per sua prata pede.
valle sub umbrosa locus est aspergine multa uvidus ex alto desilientis aquae.

tot fuerant illic, quot habet natura, colores, pictaque dissimili flore nitebat humus. 430 quam simul aspexit, 'comites, accedite' dixit
    'et mecum plenos flore referte sinus.'
praeda puellares animos prolectat inanis, et non sentitur sedulitate labor.
haec implet lento calathos e vimine nexos, 435
    haec gremium, laxos degravat illa sinus;
illa legit calthas, huic sunt violaria curae, illa papavereas subsecat ungue comas;
has, hyacinthe, tenes; illas, amarante, moraris;
    pars thyma, pars rhoean et meliloton amat; 440 plurima lecta rosa est, sunt et sine nomine flores:
    ipsa crocos tenues liliaque alba legit.
carpendi studio paulatim longius itur, et dominam casu nulla secuta comes.
hanc videt et visam patruus velociter aufert 445
    regnaque caeruleis in sua portat equis.
illa quidem clamabat 'io, carissima mater, auferor!', ipsa suos abscideratque sinus:
panditur interea Diti via, namque diurnum lumen inadsueti vix patiuntur equi. 450 at, chorus aequalis, cumulatae flore ministrae
    'Persephone', clamant 'ad tua dona veni.'
ut clamata silet, montes ululatibus implent, et feriunt maesta pectora nuda manu.
attonita est plangore Ceres (modo venerat Hennam) 455 nec mora, 'me miseram! filia' dixit 'ubi es?'
mentis inops rapitur, quales audire solemus Threicias fuis maenadas ire comis.
ut vitulo mugit sua mater ab ubere rapto et quaerit fetus per nemus omne suos, 460 sic dea nec retinet gemitus, et concita cursu fertur, et e campis incipit, Henna, tuis.
inde puellaris nacta est vestigia plantae et pressam noto pondere vidit humum;

forsitan illa dies erroris summa fuisset, 465 si non turbassent signa reperta sues.
iamque Leontinos Amenanaque flumina cursu praeterit et ripas, herbifer Aci, tuas:
praeterit et Cyanen et fontes lenis Anapi et te, verticibus non adeunde Gela. 470
liquerat Ortygien Megareaque Pantagienque, quaque Symaetheas accipit aequor aquas, antraque Cyclopum positis exusta caminis, quique locus curvae nomina falcis habet, Himeraque et Didymen Acragantaque Tauromenumque, 475 sacrarumque Mylas pascua laeta boum:
hinc Camerinan adit Thapsonque et Heloria tempe, quaque iacet Zephyro semper apertus Eryx.
iamque Peloriadem Lilybaeaeque, iamque Pachynon lustrarat, terrae cornua prima suae: 480 quacumque ingreditur, miseris loca cuncta querellis implet, ut amissum cum gemit ales Ityn.
perque vices modo 'Persephone!' modo 'filia!' clamat, clamat et alternis nomen utrumque ciet;
sed neque Persephone Cererem nec filia matrem 485 audit, et alternis nomen utrumque perit;
unaque, pastorem vidisset an arva colentem, vox erat 'hac gressus ecqua puella tulit?'
iam color unus inest rebus tenebrisque teguntur omnia, iam vigiles conticuere canes: 490 alta iacet vasti super ora Typhoeos Aetne, cuius anhelatis ignibus ardet humus;
illic accendit geminas pro lampade pinus:
hinc Cereris sacris nunc quoque taeda datur.
est specus exesi structura pumicis asper, 495 non homini regio, non adeunda ferae:
quo simul ac venit, frenatos curribus angues iungit et aequoreas sicca pererrat aquas.
effugit et Syrtes et te, Zanclaea Charybdi, et vos, Nisei, naufraga monstra, canes, 500

Hadriacumque patens late bimaremque Corinthum:
sic venit ad portus, Attica terra, tuos.
hic primum sedit gelido maestissima saxo:
illud Cecropidae nunc quoque triste vocant.
sub love duravit multis immota diebus, 505 et lunae patiens et pluvialis aquae.
sors sua cuique loco est: quod nunc Cerialis Eleusin dicitur, hoc Celei rura fuere senis.
ille domum glandes excussaque mora rubetis portat et arsuris arida ligna focis. 510 filia parva duas redigebat monte capellas, et tener in cunis filius aeger erat.
'mater' ait virgo (mota est dea nomine matris),
'quid facis in solis incommitata locis?'
perstitit et senior, quamvis onus urget, et orat 515 tectae suae subeat quantulacumque casae.
illa negat (simularat anum mitraque capillos presserat); instanti talia dicta refert:
'sospes eas semperque parens; mihi filia rapta est.
heu, melior quanto sors tua sorte mea est!' 520 dixit, et ut lacrimae (neque enim lacrimare deorum est) decidit in tepidos lucida gutta sinus.
flent pariter molles animis virgoque senexque;
e quibus haec iusti verba fuere senis:
'sic tibi, quam raptam quaeris, sit filia sospes; 525 surge, nec exiguae despice tecta casae.'
cui dea 'duc' inquit; 'scisti qua cogere posses', seque levat saxo subsequiturque senem.
dux comiti narrat quam sit sibi filius aeger, nec capiat somnos invigiletque malis. 530 illa soporiferum, parvos initura penates, colligit agresti lene papaver humo.
dum legit, oblito fertur gustasse palato longamque imprudens exsoluisse famem; quae quia principio posuit ieiunia noctis, 535
tempus habent mystae sidera visa cibi.

limen ut intravit, luctus videt omnia plena;
iam spes in puero nulla salutis erat.
matre salutata (mater Metanira vocatur) iungere dignata est os puerile suo. 540 pallor abit, subitasque vident in corpore vires:
tantus caelesti venit ab ore vigor.
tota domus laeta est, hoc est, materque paterque nataque: tres illi tota fuere domus.
mox epulas ponunt, liquefacta coagula lacte 545 pomaque et in ceris aurea mella suis.
abstinet alma Ceres, somnique papavera causas dat tibi cum tepido lacte bibenda, puer.
noctis erat medium placidique silentia somni: Triptoleum gremio sustulit illa suo, 550 terque manu permulsit eum, tria carmina dixit, carmina mortali non referenda sono, inque foco corpus pueri vivente favilla obruit, humanum purget ut ignis onus.
excutitur somno stulte pia mater, et amens 555
'quid facis?' exclamat, membraque ab igne rapit.
cui dea 'dum non es', dixit 'scelerata fuisti:
inrita materno sunt mea dona metu.
iste quidem mortalis erit: sed primus arabit et seret et culta praemia tollet humo.' 560 dixit et egrediens nubem trahit, inque dracones transit et aligero tollitur axe Ceres.
Sunion expositum Piraeaque tuta recessu linquit et in dextrum quae iacet ora latus; hinc init Aegaeum, quo Cycladas aspicit omnes, 565 Ioniumque rapax Icariumque legit, perque urbes Asiae longum petit Hellespontum, diversumque locis alta pererrat iter.
nam modo turilegos Arabas, modo despicit Indos; hinc Libys, hinc Meroe siccaque terra subest; 570
nunc adit Hesperios, Rhenum Rhodanumque Padumque teque, future parens, Thybri, potentis aquae.

quo feror? immensum est erratas dicere terras:
praeteritus Cereri nullus in orbe locus.
errat et in caelo, liquidique immunia ponti 575 adloquitur gelido proxima signa polo:
'Parrhasides stellae, namque omnia nosse potestis, aequoreas numquam cum subeatis aquas, Persephonen natam miserae monstrate parenti.'
dixerat. huic Helice talia verba refert: 580
'crimine nox vacua est; Solem de virgine rapta consule, qui late facta diurna videt.'
Sol aditus 'quam quaeris', ait 'ne vana labores, nupta Iovis fratri tertia regna tenet.'
questa diu secum, sic est adfata Tonantem 585 (maximaque in voltu signa dolentis erant):
'si memor es de quo mihi sit Proserpina nata, dimidium curae debet habere tuae.
orbe pererrato sola est iniuria facti cognita: commissi praemia raptor habet. 590 at neque Persephone digna est praedone marito, nec gener hoc nobis more parandus erat.
quid gravius victore Gyge captiva tulissem quam nunc te caeli sceptrum tenente tuli?
verum impune ferat, nos haec patiemur inultae; 595 reddat et emendet facta priora novis.' Iuppiter hanc lenit, factumque excusat amore, nec gener est nobis ille pudendus ait;
'non ego nobilior: posita est mihi regia caelo, possidet alter aquas, alter inane chaos. 600
sed si forte tibi non est mutabile pectus, statque semel iuncti rumpere vincula tori, hoc quoque temptemus, siquidem ieiuna remansit;
si minus, inferni coniugis uxor erit.' Tartara iussus adit sumptis Caducifer alis, 605 speque redit citius visaque certa refert:
'rapta tribus' dixit 'solvit ieiunia granis, Punica quae lento cortice poma tegunt.'

non secus indoluit quam si modo rapta fuisset maesta parens, longa vixque refecta mora est. 610 atque ita 'nec nobis caelum est habitabile' dixit;
'Taenaria recipi me quoque valle iube.'
et factura fuit, pactus nisi Iuppiter esset bis tribus ut caelo mensibus illa foret.
tum demum voltumque Ceres animumque recepit, 615 imposuitque suae spiceaserta comae:
largaque provenit cessatis messis in arvis, et vix congestas area cepit opes.
alba decent Cererem: vestes Cereribus albas sumite; nunc pulli velleris usus abest. 620

Tertia post Veneris cum lux surrexerit Idus, rege Numa, fructu non respondente labori,

sex Remus, hic volucres bis sex videt ordine; pacto fossa repletur humo, plenaequae imponitur ara, et novus accenso fungitur igne focus.

inde premens stivam designat moenia sulco; 825 alba iugum niveo cum bove vacca tulit.
vox fuit haec regis: 'condenti, Iuppiter, urbem, et genitor Mavors Vestaque mater, ades, quosque pium est adhibere deos, advertite cuncti:

auspiciis vobis hoc mihi surgat opus. 830
longa sit huic aetas dominaeque potentia terrae, sitque sub hac oriens occiduusque dies.'
ille precabatur, tonitru dedit omina laevo Iuppiter, et laevo fulmina missa polo.
augurio laeti iaciunt fundamenta cives, 835 et novus exiguo tempore murus erat.
hoc Celer urget opus, quem Romulus ipse vocarat,
'sint' que, 'Celer, curae' dixerat 'ista tuae, neve quis aut muros aut factam vomere fossam transeat; audentem talia dede neci.' 840 quod Remus ignorans humiles contemnere muros coepit, et 'his populus' dicere 'tutus erit?'
nec mora, transiluit: rutro Celer occupat ausum;
ille premit duram sanguinolentus humum.
haec ubi rex didicit, lacrimas introrsus obortas 845 devorat et clausum pectore vulnus habet.
flere palam non volt exemplaue fortia servat,
'sic' que 'meos muros transeat hostis' ait.
dat tamen exsequias; nec iam suspendere fletum sustinet, et pietas dissimulata patet; 850 osculaue adplicuit posito suprema feretro, atque ait 'invito frater adempte, vale', arsurosque artus unxit: fecere, quod ille, Faustulus et maestas Acca soluta comas.
tum iuvenem nondum facti flevere Quirites; 855 ultima plorato subdita flamma rogo est.
urbs oritur (quis tunc hoc ulli credere posset?)
victorem terris impositura pedem.
cuncta regas et sis magno sub Caesare semper, saepe etiam plures nominis huius habe; 860 et, quotiens steteris domito sublimis in orbe, omnia sint umeris inferiora tuis.

Dicta Pales nobis: idem Vinalia dicam.
una tamen media est inter utramque dies.
numina, volgares, Veneris celebrate, puellae: 865

poscite ture dato formam populique favorem, poscite blanditias dignaque verba ioco;

Claudius et bello te quoque cepit, Eryx, carmine vivacis Venus est translata Sibyllae, 875
inque suae stirpis maluit urbe coli.
cur igitur Veneris festum Vinalia dicant quaeritis, et quare sit Iovis ista dies?
Turnus an Aeneas Latiae gener esset Amatae bellum erat: Etruscas Turnus adorat opes. 880 clarus erat sumptisque ferox Mezentius armis, et vel equo magnus vel pede maior erat;
quem Rutuli Turnusque suis adsciscere temptat praemia, de lacubus proxima musta tuis.

nulla mora est operae: vestrum est dare, vincere nostrum.
quam velit Aeneas ista negata mihi!' 890 adnuerant Rutuli. Mezentius induit arma, induit Aeneas adloquiturque Iovem:
'hostica Tyrrheno vota est vindemia regi:
Iuppiter, e Latio palmite musta feres.'
vota valent meliora: cadit Mezentius ingens 895

atque indignanti pectore plangit humum.
venerat Autumnus calcatis sordidus uvis:

Sex ubi, quae restant, luces Aprilis habebit, in medio cursu tempora veris erunt, et frustra pecudem quaeres Athamantidos Helles, signaque dant imbres, exoriturque Canis.
hac mihi Nomento Romam cum luce redirem, 905 obstitit in media candida turba via:
flamen in antiquae lucum Robiginis ibat, exta canis flammis, exta daturus ovis.
protinus accessi, ritus ne nescius essem;
edidit haec flamen verba, Quirine, tuus: 910
'aspera Robigo, parcas Cerialibus herbis, et tremat in summa leve cacumen humo.
tu sata sideribus caeli nutrita secundi crescere, dum fiant falcibus apta, sinas.
vis tua non levis est: quae tu frumenta notasti, 915 maestus in amissis illa colonus habet;
nec venti tantum Cereri nocuere nec imbres, nec sic marmoreo pallet adusta gelu, quantum si culmos Titan incalfacit udos:
tum locus est irae, diva timenda, tuae. 920
parce, precor, scabrasque manus a messibus aufer, neve noce cultis; posse nocere sat est.
nec teneras segetes, sed durum amplectere ferrum, quodque potest alios perdere perde prior.
utilius gladios et tela nocentia carpes: 925
nil opus est illis; otia mundus agit.

sarcula nunc durusque bidens et vomer aduncus, ruris opes, niteant; inquinet arma situs, conatusque aliquis vagina ducere ferrum adstrictum longa sentiat esse mora. 930 at tu ne viola Cererem, semperque colonus absenti possit solvere vota tibi.'
dixerat; a dextra villis mantele solutis cumque meri patera turis acerra fuit.
tura focis vinumque dedit fibrasque bidentis 935 turpiaque obscenae (vidimus) exta canis.
tum mihi 'cur detur sacris nova victima quaeris?' (quaesieram) 'causam percipe' flamen ait.
'est Canis, Icarium dicunt, quo sidere moto tosta sitit tellus praecipiturque seges: 940 pro cane sidereo canis hic imponitur arae, et quare fiat nil nisi nomen habet.'

Quaeritis unde putem Maio data nomina mensi?
non satis est liquido cognita causa mihi.
ut stat et incertus qua sit sibi nescit eundum, cum videt ex omni parte, viator, iter, sic, quia posse datur diversas reddere causas, 5 qua ferar ignoro, copiaque ipsa nocet.
dicite, quae fontes Aganippidos Hippocrenes, grata Medusaei signa, tenetis, equi.
dissensere deae; quarum Polyhymnia coepit prima (silent aliae, dictaque mente notant): 10
'post chaos ut primum data sunt tria corpora mundo inque novas species omne recessit opus,

at caelum levitas in loca summa tulit;

et vos, Lunares, exsiluistis, equi.
sed neque terra diu caelo, nec cetera Phoebos

illa datos fasces commendat eburque curule, finierat voces Polyhymnia: dicta probarunt Clioque et curvae scita Thalia lyrae.

haec quoque desierat: laudata est voce suarum.
quid faciam? turbae pars habet omnis idem.
gratia Pieridum nobis aequaliter adsit,

Ab love surgat opus. prima mihi nocte videnda stella est in cunas officiosa lovis:
nascitur Oleniae signum pluviale Capellae;
illa dati caelum praemia lactis habet.
Nais Amalthea, Cretaea nobilis Ida, 115
dicitur in silvis occuluisse lovem.
huic fuit haedorum mater formosa duorum, inter Dictaeos conspicienda greges, cornibus aeriis atque in sua terga recurvis, ubere, quod nutrix posset habere lovis. 120 lac dabat illa deo; sed fregit in arbore cornu, truncaque dimidia parte decoris erat.
sustulit hoc nymphe cinxitque recentibus herbis, et plenum pomis ad lovis ora tulit.
ille ubi res caeli tenuit solioque paterno 125
sedit, et invicto nil love maius erat, sidera nutricem, nutricis fertile cornu fecit, quod dominae nunc quoque nomen habet.
Praestitibus Maiaie Laribus videre Kalendae aram constitui parvaque signa deum: 130 voverat illa quidem Curius, sed multa vetustas destruit; et saxo longa senecta nocet.
causa tamen positi fuerat cognominis illis quod praestant oculis omnia tuta suis:

stant quoque pro nobis et praesunt moenibus Urbis, 135 et sunt praesentes auxiliumque ferunt.
at canis ante pedes saxo fabricatus eodem stabat: quae standi cum Lare causa fuit?
servat uterque domum, domino quoque fidus uterque:
compita grata deo, compita grata cani. 140
exagitant et Lar et turba Diania fures:
pervigilantque Lares, pervigilantque canes.
bina gemellorum quaerebam signa deorum viribus annosae facta caduca morae:
mille Lares Geniumque ducis, qui tradidit illos, 145 Urbs habet, et vici numina terna colunt.
quo feror? Augustus mensis mihi carminis huius ius dabit: interea Diva canenda Bona est.
est moles nativa, loco res nomina fecit:
appellant Saxum; pars bona montis ea est. 150 huic Remus institerat frustra, quo tempore fratri prima Palatinae signa dedistis aves; templa patres illic oculos exosa viriles leniter adclivi constituere iugo. dedicat haec veteris Crassorum nominis heres, 155 virgineo nullum corpore passa virum: Livia restituit, ne non imitata maritum esset et ex omni parte secuta ~virum~.

annua credideram spectacula facta: negavit, 295 addidit et dictis altera verba suis:

cantat, habent unctae mollia sarta comae. 340
nulla coronata peraguntur seria fronte, nec liquidae vinctis flore bibuntur aquae;
donec eras mixtus nullis, Acheloe, racemis, gratia sumendae non erat ulla rosae.
Bacchus amat flores: Baccho placuisse coronam 345

ex Ariadnaeo sidere nosse potes.
scaena levis decet hanc: non est, mihi credite, non est illa cothurnatas inter habenda deas.
turba quidem cur hos celebret meretricia ludos non ex difficili causa petita subest. 350 non est de tetricis, non est de magna professis:
vult sua plebeio sacra patere choro, et monet aetatis specie, dum floreat, uti;
contemni spinam, cum cecidere rosae.
Cur tamen, ut dantur vestes Cerialibus albae, 355 sic haec est cultu versicolore decens?
an quia maturis albescit messis aristas, et color et species floribus omnis inest?
adnuit, et motis flores cecidere capillis, accidere in mensas ut rosa missa solet. 360 lumina restabant, quorum me causa latebat, cum sic errores abstulit illa meos:
'vel quia purpureis conlucent floribus agri, lumina sunt nostros visa decere dies;
vel quia nec flos est hebeti nec flamma colore, 365
atque oculos in se splendor uterque trahit;
vel quia deliciis nocturna licentia nostris convenit: a vero tertia causa venit.'
'est breve praeterea, de quo mihi quaerere restat, si liceat' dixi: dixit et illa 'licet'. 370
'cur tibi pro Libycis clauduntur rete leaenis inbelles capreae sollicitusque lepus?'
non sibi respondit silvas cessisse, sed hortos arvaque pugnaci non adeunda ferae.
omnia finierat: tenues secessit in auras, 375 mansit odor; posses scire fuisse deam.
floreat ut toto carmen Nasonis in aevo, sparge, precor, donis pectora nostra tuis.

Nocte minus quarta promet sua sidera Chiron semivir et flavi corpore mixtus equi.
Pelion Haemoniae mons est obversus in Austros:
summa virent pinu, cetera quercus habet.
Phillyrides tenuit; saxo stant antra vetusto, quae iustum memorant incoluisse senem.
ille manus olim missuras Hectora leto 385 creditur in lyricis detinuisse modis.
venerat Alcides exhausta parte laborum, iussaque restabant ultima paene viro.
stare simul casu Troiae duo fata videres:
hinc puer Aeacides, hinc Iove natus erat. 390 excipit hospitio iuvenem Philyreus heros, et causam adventus hic rogat, ille docet.
respicit interea clavam spoliūque leonis,
'vir' que ait 'his armis, armaque digna viro!'
nec se, quin horrens auderent tangere saetis 395 vellus, Achilleae continuere manus.
dumque senex tractat squalentia tela venenis, excidit et laevo fixa sagitta pede est.
ingemuit Chiron, traxitque e corpore ferrum:
adgemit Alcides Haemoniusque puer. 400 ipse tamen lectas Pagasaeis collibus herbas temperat et varia volnera mulcet ope; virus edax superabat opem, penitusque recepta ossibus et toto corpore pestis erat:
sanguine Centauri Lernaee sanguis echidnae 405
mixtus ad auxilium tempora nulla dabat.
stabat, ut ante patrem, lacrimis perfusus Achilles:
sic flendus Peleus, si moreretur, erat.
saepe manus aegras manibus fingebat amicis:
morum, quos fecit, praemia doctor habet. 410 oscula saepe dedit, dixit quoque saepe iacenti
'vive, precor, nec me, care, relinque, pater.'

nona dies aderat, cum tu, iustissime Chiron, bis septem stellis corpora cinctus eras.

Hinc ubi protulerit formosa ter Hesperos ora, ter dederint Phoebos sidera victa locum, ritus erit veteris, nocturna Lemuria, sacri:
inferias tacitis manibus illa dabunt.
annus erat brevior, nec adhuc pia februa norant, nec tu dux mensum, lane biformis, eras:
iam tamen extincto cineri sua dona ferebant, 425 compositique nepos busta piabat avi.
mensis erat Maius, maiorum nomine dictus, qui partem prisca nunc quoque moris habet.
nox ubi iam media est somnoque silentia praebet, et canis et variae conticuistis aves, 430 ille memor veteris ritus timidusque deorum surgit (habent gemini vincula nulla pedes), signaque dat digitis medio cum pollice iunctis, occurrat tacito ne levis umbra sibi.

cumque manus puras fontana perluit unda, 435 vertitur et nigras accipit ante fabas, aversusque iacit; sed dum iacit, 'haec ego mitto, hoc novies dicit nec respicit: umbra putatur colligere et nullo terga vidente sequi. 440 rursus aquam tangit, Temesaeaque concrepat aera, et rogat ut tectis exeat umbra suis.

cum dixit novies 'manes exite paterni' respicit, et pure sacra peracta putat.
dicta sit unde dies, quae nominis exstet origo 445 me fugit: ex aliquo est invenienda deo.
Pliade nate, mone, virga venerande potenti:
saepe tibi est Stygii regia visa Iovis.
venit adoratus Caducifer. accipe causam nominis: ex ipso est cognita causa deo. 450 Romulus ut tumulo fraternas condidit umbras, et male veloci iusta soluta Remo, Faustulus infelix et passis Acca capillis spargebant lacrimis ossa perusta suis; inde domum redeunt sub prima crepuscula maesti, 455

umbra cruenta Remi visa est adsistere lecto, atque haec exiguo murmure verba loqui:
'en ego dimidium vestri parsque altera voti, cernite sim qualis, qui modo qualis eram! 460 qui modo, si volucres habuissem regna iubentes, in populo potui maximus esse meo, nunc sum elapsa rogi flammis et inanis imago:
haec est ex illo forma relicta Remo.
heu ubi Mars pater est? si vos modo vera locuti, 465

quem lupa servavit, manus hunc temeraria civis saeve Celer, crudelem animam per volnera reddas, noluit hoc frater, pietas aequalis in illo est:

quod potuit, lacrimas in mea fata dedit.
hunc vos per lacrimas, per vestra alimenta rogate ut celebrem nostro signet honore diem.
mandantem amplecti cupiunt et bracchia tendunt: 475 lubrica prensantes effugit umbra manus.
ut secum fugiens somnos abduxit imago, ad regem voces fratris uterque ferunt.
Romulus obsequitur, lucemque Remuria dicit illam, qua positis iusta feruntur avis. 480 aspera mutata est in lenem tempore longo littera, quae toto nomine prima fuit;
mox etiam lemures animas dixere silentum:
hic sensus verbi, vis ea vocis erat.
fana tamen veteres illis clausere diebus, 485 ut nunc ferali tempore operta vides;

Quorum si mediis Boeotum Oriona quaeres, falsus eris: signi causa canenda mihi.
Iuppiter et Iato qui regnat in aequore frater 495 carpebant socias Mercuriusque vias;
tempus erat quo versa iugo referuntur aratra, et pronus saturae lac bibit agnus ovis.
forte senex Hyrieus, angusti cultor agelli, hos videt, exiguam stabat ut ante casam, 500

atque ita 'longa via est, nec tempora longa supersunt', dixit 'et hospitibus ianua nostra patet.'
addidit et voltum verbis, iterumque rogavit:
parent promissis dissimulantque deos.
tectata senis subeunt nigro deformia fumo; 505 ignis in hesterno stipite parvus erat:
ipse genu nixus flammam exsuscitat aura, et promit quassas comminuitque faces.
stant calices; minor inde fabas, holus alter habebat, et spumat testo pressus uterque suo. 510 dumque mora est, tremula dat vina rubentia dextra:
accipit aequoreus pocula prima deus.
quae simul exhausit, 'da nunc bibat ordine' dixit
'Iuppiter.' audito palluit ille Iove.
ut rediit animus, cultorem pauperis agri 515 immolat et magno torret in igne bovem; quaeque puer quondam primis diffuderat annis promit fumoso condita vina cado.
nec mora, flumineam lino celantibus ulvam, sic quoque non altis, incubuere toris. 520
nunc dape, nunc posito mensae nituere Lyaeo;
terra rubens crater, pocula fagus erant.
verba fuere Iovis: 'si quid fert impetus, opta:
omne feres.' placidi verba fuere senis:
'cara fuit coniunx, primae mihi vere iuventae 525
cognita. nunc ubi sit quaeritis? urna tegit.
huic ego iuratus, vobis in verba vocatis,
"coniugio" dixi "sola frui meo."
et dixi et servo; sed enim diversa voluntas est mihi: nec coniunx et pater esse volo.' 530 adnuerant omnes. omnes ad terga iuveni constiterant — pudor est ulteriora loqui.
tum superiniecta texere madentia terra:
iamque decem menses, et puer ortus erat.
hunc Hyrieus, quia sic genitus, vocat Uriona: 535 perdidit antiquum littera prima sonum.

creverat immensum: comitem sibi Delia sumpsit;
ille deae custos, ille satellites erat.
verba movent iras non circumspecta deorum: ‘quam nequeam’ dixit ‘vincere nulla fera est.’ 540 scorpion immisit Tellus: fuit impetus illi curva gemelliparae spicula ferre deae; obstitit Orion. Latona nitentibus astris addidit et ‘meriti praemia’ dixit ‘habe.’

Sed quid et Orion et cetera sidera mundo cedere festinant, noxque coartat iter?
quid solito citius liquido iubar aequore tollit candida, Lucifero praeveniente, dies?
fallor, an arma sonant? non fallimur, arma sonabant:
Mars venit et veniens bellica signa dedit. 550
Ultor ad ipse suos caelo descendit honores templaque in Augusto conspicienda foro.
et deus est ingens et opus: debebat in urbe non aliter nati Mars habitare sui.
digna Giganteis haec sunt delubra tropaeis: 555
hinc fera Gradivum bella movere decet, seu quis ab Eoo nos impius orbe lacesset, seu quis ab occiduo sole domandus erit.
perspicit Armipotens operis fastigia summi, et probat invictas summa tenere deas; 560 perspicit in foribus diversae tela figurae, armaque terrarum milite victa suo.
hinc videt Aenean oneratum pondere caro et tot luleae nobilitatis avos; hinc videt Iliaden umeris ducis arma ferentem, 565
claraque dispositis acta subesse viris.

spectat et Augusto praetextum nomine templum, et visum lecto Caesare maius opus.
voverat hoc iuvenis tum cum pia sustulit arma:
a tantis princeps incipiendus erat. 570 ille manus tendens, hinc stanti milite iusto, hinc coniuratis, talia dicta dedit:
'si mihi bellandi pater est Vestaeque sacerdos auctor, et ulcisci numen utrumque paro, Mars, ades et satia scelerato sanguine ferrum, 575
stetque favor causa pro meliore tuus.
templa feres et, me victore, vocaberis Ultor.'
voverat, et fuso laetus ab hoste redit.
nec satis est meruisse semel cognomina Marti:
persequitur Parthi signa retenta manu. 580 gens fuit et campis et equis et tuta sagittis et circumfusus invia fluminibus;
addiderant animos Crassorum funera genti, cum periit miles signaque duxque simul.
signa, decus belli, Parthus Romana tenebat, 585 Romanaeque aquilae signifer hostis erat;
isque pudor mansisset adhuc, nisi fortibus armis Caesaris Ausoniae protegerentur opes.
ille notas veteres et longi dedecus aevi sustulit: agnorunt signa recepta suos. 590 quid tibi nunc solitae mitti post terga sagittae, quid loca, quid rapidi profuit usus equi?
Parthe, refers aquilas, victos quoque porrigis arcus:
pignora iam nostri nulla pudoris habes.
rite deo templumque datum nomenque bis ulto, 595 et meritis voti debita solvit honor.
sollemnes ludos Circo celebrate, Quirites:
non visa est fortem scaena decere deum.

Pliadas aspicias omnes totumque sororum tum mihi non dubiis auctoribus incipit aestas, et tepidi finem tempora veris habent.

et timor ipse novi causa decoris erat;
aura sinus implet, flavos movet aura capillos: Sidoni, sic fueras aspicienda Iovi. 610
saepe puellares subduxit ab aequore plantas, et metuit tactus adsilientis aquae;
saepe deus prudens tergum demisit in undas, haereat ut collo fortius illa suo.
litoribus tactis stabat sine cornibus ullis 615 Iuppiter inque deum de bove versus erat.

donec in haec venit Tirynthius arva, quotannis

LIBER SEXTVS

Hic quoque mensis habet dubias in nomine causas:
    quae placeat, positis omnibus ipse leges.
facta canam; sed erunt qui me finxisse loquantur, nullaque mortali numina visa putent.
est deus in nobis, agitante calescimus illo; 5 impetus hic sacrae semina mentis habet:
fas mihi praecipue voltus vidisse deorum, vel quia sum vates, vel quia sacra cano.
est nemus arboribus densum, secretus ab omni voce locus, si non obstreperetur aquis: 10 hic ego quaerebam coepti quae mensis origo esset, et in cura nominis huius eram.
ecce deas vidi, non quas praeceptor arandi viderat, Ascraeas cum sequeretur oves; nec quas Priamides in aquosae vallibus Idae 15
    contulit: ex illis sed tamen una fuit, ex illis fuit una, sui germana mariti;
    haec erat, agnovi, quae stat in arce Iovis.
horrueram tacitoque animum pallore fatebar;
    tum dea, quos fecit, sustulit ipsa metus. 20 namque ait 'o vates, Romani conditor anni, ause per exiguos magna referre modos, ius tibi fecisti numen caeleste videndi, cum placuit numeris condere festa tuis:
ne tamen ignores volgique errore traharis, 25
    Iunius a nostro nomine nomen habet.
est aliquid nupsisse Iovi, Iovis esse sororem:
    fratre magis dubito glorier anne viro.
si genus aspicitur, Saturnum prima parentem feci, Saturni sors ego prima fui. 30 a patre dicta meo quondam Saturnia Roma est:

haec illi a caelo proxima terra fuit.
si torus in pretio est, dicor matrona Tonantis, iunctaque Tarpeio sunt mea templa Iovi.
an potuit Maio paelex dare nomina mensi, 35
hic honor in nobis invidiosus erit?
cur igitur regina vocor princepsque dearum, aurea cur dextrae sceptrae dedere meae?
an facient mensem lucas, Lucinaque ab illis dicar, et a nullo nomina mense traham? 40 tum me paeniteat posuisse fideliter iras in genus Electrae Dardaniamque domum.
causa duplex irae: raptu Ganymede dolebam, forma quoque Idaeo iudice victa mea est.
paeniteat quod non foveo Carthaginis arces, 45 cum mea sint illo currus et arma loco:
paeniteat Sparten Argosque measque Mycenae et veterem Latio subposuisse Samon:
adde senem Tatium Iunonicolasque Faliscos, quos ego Romanis succubuisse tuli. 50
sed neque paeniteat, nec gens mihi carior ulla est:
hic colar, hic teneam cum Iove templa meo.
ipse mihi Mavors "commendo moenia" dixit
"haec tibi: tu pollens urbe nepotis eris."
dicta fides sequitur: centum celebramur in aris, 55 nec levior quovis est mihi mensis honor.
nec tamen hunc nobis tantummodo praestat honorem Roma: suburbani dant mihi munus idem.
inspice quos habeat nemoralis Aricia fastos et populus Laurens Lanuviumque meum: 60 est illic mensis Iunonius. inspice Tibur et Praenestinae moenia sacra deae, Iunonale leges tempus: nec Romulus illas condidit, at nostri Roma nepotis erat.'
finierat Iuno, respeximus: Herculis uxor 65 stabat, et in vultu signa vigoris erant.
'non ego, si toto mater me cedere caelo iusserit, invita matre morabor' ait.

'nunc quoque non luctor de nomine temporis huius:
    blandior, et partes paene rogantis ago, 70
remque mei iuris malim tenuisse precando:
    et faveas causae forsitan ipse meae.
aurea possedit socio Capitolia templo mater et, ut debet, cum love summa tenet;
at decus omne mihi contingit origine mensis: 75 unicus est, de quo sollicitamur, honor.
quid grave, si titulum mensis, Romane, dedisti Herculis uxori, posteritasque memor?
haec quoque terra aliquid debet mihi nomine magni coniugis: huc captas adpulit ille boves, 80 hic male defensus flammis et dote paterna Cacus Aventinam sanguine tinxit humum.
ad propiora vocor: populum digessit ab annis Romulus, in partes distribuitque duas;
haec dare consilium, pugnare paratior illa est, 85
    haec aetas bellum suadet, at illa gerit.
sic statuit, mensesque nota secrevit eadem: Iunius est iuvenum; qui fuit ante, senum.'
dixit; et in litem studio certaminis issent, atque ira pietas dissimulata foret: 90
venit Apollinea longas Concordia lauro nexa comas, placidi numen opusque ducis.
haec ubi narravit Tatium fortemque Quirinum binaque cum populis regna coisse suis, et lare communi soceros generosque receptos, 95
    'his nomen iunctis Iunius' inquit 'habet.'
dicta triplex causa est. at vos ignoscite, divae:
    res est arbitrio non dirimenda meo.
ite pares a me. perierunt iudice formae
    Pergama: plus laedunt, quam iuvat una, duae. 100

Prima dies tibi, Carna, datur. dea cardinis haec est:
numine clausa aperit, claudit aperta suo.
unde datas habeat vires, obscurior aevo fama; sed e nostro carmine certus eris.
adiacet antiquus Tiberino lucus Alerni: 105 pontifices illuc nunc quoque sacra ferunt.
inde sata est nympha (Cranaen dixere priores) nequiquam multis saepe petita procis.
rura sequi iaculisque feras agitare solebat, nodosaque cava tendere valle plagas; 110 non habuit pharetram, Phoebi tamen esse sororem credebant, nec erat, Phoebe, pudenda tibi.
huic aliquis iuvenum dixisset amantia verba, reddebat tales protinus illa sonos:
'haec loca lucis habent nimis, et cum luce pudoris: 115 si secreta magis ducis in antra, sequor.'
credulus ante ut iit, frutices haec nacta resistit, et latet et nullo est invenienda modo.
viderat hanc lanus, visaeque cupidine captus ad duram verbis mollibus usus erat. 120 nympha iubet quaeri de more remotius antrum, utque comes sequitur, destituitque ducem.
stulta! videt lanus quae post sua terga gerantur:
nil agis, et latebras respicit ille tuas.
nil agis, en! dixi: nam te sub rupe latentem 125 occupat amplexu, speque potitus ait
'ius pro concubitu nostro tibi cardinis esto:
hoc pretium positae virginitatis habe.'
sic fatus spinam, qua tristes pellere posset a foribus noxas (haec erat alba) dedit. 130 sunt avidae volucres, non quae Phineia mensis guttura fraudabant, sed genus inde trahunt:
grande caput, stantes oculi, rostra apta rapinis;
canities pennis, unguibus hamus inest;
nocte volant puerosque petunt nutricis egentes, 135 et vitiant cunis corpora rapta suis;

carpere dicuntur lactentia viscera rostris, et plenum poto sanguine guttur habent.
est illis strigibus nomen; sed nominis huius causa quod horrenda stridere nocte solent. 140 sive igitur nascuntur aves, seu carmine fiunt neniaque in volucres Marsa figurat anus, in thalamos venere Procae: Proca natus in illis praeda recens avium quinque diebus erat, pectoraque exsorbent avidis infantia linguis; 145
at puer infelix vagit opemque petit.
terrata voce sui nutrix accurrit alumni, et rigido sectas invenit ungue genas.
quid faceret? color oris erat qui frondibus olim esse solet seris, quas nova laesit hiems. 150 pervenit ad Cranaen, et rem docet. illa 'timorem pone: tuus sospes' dixit 'alumnus erit.'
venerat ad cunas; flebant materque paterque:
'sistite vos lacrimas, ipsa medebor' ait.
protinus arbutea postes ter in ordine tangit 155 fronde, ter arbutea limina fronde notat, spargit aquis aditus (et aquae medicamen habebant) extaque de porca cruda bimenstre tenet, atque ita 'noctis aves, extis puerilibus' inquit
'parcite: pro parvo victima parva cadit. 160 cor pro corde, precor, pro fibris sumite fibras:
hanc animam vobis pro meliore damus.'
sic ubi libavit, prosecta sub aethere ponit, quique adsint sacris respicere illa vetat:
virgaque lanalis de spina subditur alba, 165
qua lumen thalamis parva fenestra dabat.
post illud nec aves cunas violasse feruntur, et rediit puero qui fuit ante color.
Pinguia cur illis gustentur larda Kalendis mixtaque cum calido sit faba farre rogas? 170 prisca dea est, aliturque cibis quibus ante solebat, nec petit adscitas luxuriosa dapes.

piscis adhuc illi populo sine fraude natabat, ostreaque in conchis tuta fuere suis;
nec Latium norat quam praebet Ionia dives 175 nec quae Pygmaeo sanguine gaudet avis;
et praeter pennas nihil in pavone placebat, nec tellus captas miserat arte feras.
sus erat in pretio, caesa sue festa colebant;
terra fabas tantum duraque farra dabat. 180 quae duo mixta simul sextis quicumque Kalendis ederit, huic laedi viscera posse negant.
Arce quoque in summa Iunoni templa Monetae ex voto memorant facta, Camille, tuo.
ante domus Manli fuerat, qui Gallica quondam 185
a Capitolino reppulit arma Iove.
quam bene, di magni, pugna cecidisset in illa defensor solii, Iuppiter alte, tui!
vixit, ut occideret damnatus crimine regni:
hunc illi titulum longa senecta dabat. 190 Lux eadem Marti festa est, quem prospicit extra adpositum Tectae porta Capena Viae.
te quoque, Tempestatas, meritam delubra fatemur, cum paene est Corsis obruta classis aquis.
haec hominum monimenta patent: si quaeritis astra, 195
tunc oritur magni praepes adunca Iovis.

2. A F 196a

Postera lux Hyadas, Taurinae cornua frontis, evocat, et multa terra madescit aqua.

3. B C 198a

Mane ubi bis fuerit Phoebusque iteraverit ortus factaque erit posito rore bis uda seges, hac sacrata die Tusco Bellona duello dicitur, et Latio prospera semper adest.

Appius est auctor, Pyrrho qui pace negata multum animo vidit, lumine cas erat.
prospicit a templo summum brevis area Circum: 205
est ibi non parvae parva columna notae;
hinc solet hasta manu, belli praenuntia, mitti,
in regem et gentes cum placet arma capi.

4. C C 208a

Altera pars Circi Custode sub Hercule tuta est, quod deus Euboico carmine munus habet.
muneris est tempus qui Nonas Lucifer ante est;
si titulum quaeris, Sulla probavit opus.

5. D NON : N 212a

Quaerebam Nonas Sanco Fidione referrem an tibi, Semo pater; tum mihi Sancus ait:
'cuicumque ex istis dederis, ego munus habebo: 215 nomina terna fero: sic voluere Cures.'
hunc igitur veteres donarunt aede Sabini, inque Quirinali constituere iugo.

6. E N 218a

Est mihi, sitque, precor, nostris diuturnior annis, filia, qua felix sospite semper ero.
hanc ego cum vellem genero dare, tempora taedis apta requirebam, quaeque cavenda forent:
tum mihi post sacras monstratus Iunius Idus utilis et nuptis, utilis esse viris, primaque pars huius thalamis aliena reperta est; 225 nam mihi sic coniunx sancta Dialis ait:
'donec ab Iliaca placidus purgamina Vesta detulerit flavis in mare Thybris aquis, non mihi detonso crinem depectere buxo, non unguis ferro subsecuisse licet, 230

non tetigisse virum, quamvis Iovis ille sacerdos, quamvis perpetua sit mihi lege datus.
tu quoque ne propera: melius tua filia nubet igneae cum pura Vesta nitebit humo.'

7. F N 234a

Tertia post Nonas remove Lycaona Phoebe fertur, et a tergo non habet Ursa metum.
tunc ego me memini ludos in gramine Campi aspicere et dici, lubrice Thybri, tuos.
festa dies illis qui lina madentia ducunt, quique tegunt parvis aera recurva cibus. 240

8. G N 240a

Mens quoque numen habet: Mentis delubra videmus vota metu belli, perfide Poene, tui.
Poene, rebellaras, et leto consulis omnes attoniti Mauras pertimere manus.
spem metus expulerat, cum Menti vota senatus 245
suscipit, et melior protinus illa venit.
aspicit instantes mediis sex lucibus Idus illa dies qua sunt vota soluta deae.

9. H VEST : N 248a

Vesta, fave: tibi nunc operata resolvimus ora, ad tua si nobis sacra venire licet.
in prece totus eram: caelestia numina sensi,
lactaque purpurea luce refulsit humus.
non equidem vidi (valeant mendacia vatum) te, dea, nec fueras aspicienda viro;
sed quae nescieram quorumque errore tenebar 255

cognita sunt nullo praecipiente mihi.
dena quater memorant habuisse Parilia Romam, cum flammae custos aede recepta dea est, regis opus placidi, quo non metuentius ullum numinis ingenium terra Sabina tulit. 260 quae nunc aere vides, stipula tum tecta videres, et paries lento vimine textus erat.
hic locus exiguus, qui sustinet Atria Vestae, tunc erat intonsi regia magna Numae;
forma tamen templi, quae nunc manet, ante fuisse 265
dicitur, et formae causa probanda subest.
Vesta eadem est et terra: subest vigil ignis utrique:
significant sedem terra focusque suam.
terra pilae similis, nullo fulcimine nixa, aere subiecto tam grave pendet onus: 270 ipsa volubilitas libratum sustinet orbem, quique premat partes angulus omnis abest:
cumque sit in media rerum regione locata, ut tangat nullum plusve minusve latus, ni convexa foret, parti vicinior esset, 275 nec medium terram mundus haberet onus.
arte Syracosia suspensus in aere clauso stat globus, immensi parva figura poli, et quantum a summis, tantum secessit ab imis terra; quod ut fiat forma rotunda facit. 280 par facies templi; nullus procurrit in illo angulus, a pluvio vindicat imbre tholus.
cur sit virginibus, quaeris, dea culta ministris?
inveniam causas hac quoque parte suas.
ex Ope lunonem memorant Cereremque creatas 285 semine Saturni; tertia Vesta fuit.
utraque nupserunt, ambae peperisse feruntur;
de tribus impatiens restitit una viri.
quid mirum, virgo si virgine laeta ministra admittit castas ad sua sacra manus? 290 nec tu aliud Vestam quam vivam intellege flammam;

nataque de flamma corpora nulla vides.
iure igitur virgo est, quae semina nulla remittit nec capit, et comites virginitatis amat.
esse diu stultus Vestae simulacra putavi, 295
mox didici curvo nulla subesse tholo.
ignis inexstinctus templo celatur in illo:
effigiem nullam Vesta nec ignis habet.
stat vi terra sua: vi stando Vesta vocatur;
causaque par Grai nominis esse potest. 300
at focus a flammis et quod fovet omnia dictus;
qui tamen in primis aedibus ante fuit.
hinc quoque vestibulum dici reor; inde precando praefamur Vestam, quae loca prima tenet.
Ante focos olim scamnis considerare longis 305 mos erat, et mensae credere adesse deos;
nunc quoque, cum fiunt antiquae sacra Vacunae, ante Vacunales stantque sedentque focos.
venit in hos annos aliquid de more vetusto:
fert missos Vestae pura patella cibos. 310 Ecce coronatis panis dependet asellis, et velant scabras florida sarta molas.
sola prius furnis torrebant farra coloni (et Fornacali sunt sua sacra deae):
subpositum cineri panem focus ipse parabat, 315
strataque erat tepido tegula quassa solo.
inde focum servat pistor dominamque focorum et quae pumiceas versat asella molas.
praeteream referamne tuum, rubicunde Priape, dedecus? est multi fabula parva ioci. 320 turrigera frontem Cybele redimita corona convocat aeternos ad sua festa deos; convocat et satyros et, rustica numina, nymphas; Silenus, quamvis nemo vocarat, adest.
nec licet et longum est epulas narrare deorum: 325
in multo nox est pervigilata mero.
hi temere errabant in opacae vallibus Idae, pars iacet et molli gramine membra levat;

hi ludunt, hos somnus habet; pars bracchia nectit et viridem celeri ter pede pulsat humum. 330 Vesta iacet placidamque capit secura quietem, sicut erat, positum caespite fulta caput.
at ruber hortorum custos nymphasque deasque captat, et errantes fertque refertque pedes; aspicit et Vestam: dubium nymphamne putarit 335
an scierit Vestam, scisse sed ipse negat.
spem capit obscenam, furtimque accedere temptat, et fert suspensos corde micante gradus.
forte senex, quo vectus erat, Silenus asellum liquerat ad ripas lene sonantis aquae; 340 ibat ut inciperet longi deus Hellesponti, intempestivo cum rudit ille sono.
terrata voce gravi surgit dea; convolat omnis turba, per infestas effugit ille manus.
Lampsacos hoc animal solita est mactare Priapo, 345
'apta' canens 'flammis indicis exta damus.'
quem tu, diva, memor de pane monilibus ornas;
cessat opus, vacuae conticuere molae.
Nomine quam pretio celebratior arce Tonantis dicam Pistoris quid velit ara Iovis. 350 cincta premebantur trucibus Capitolia Gallis:
fecerat obsidio iam diuturna famem.
Iuppiter, ad solium superis regale vocatis,
'incipere' ait Marti; protinus ille refert:
'scilicet ignotum est quae sit fortuna malorum, 355 et dolor hic animi voce querentis eget.
si tamen ut referam breviter mala iuncta pudori exigis, Alpino Roma sub hoste iacet.
haec est cui fuerat promissa potentia rerum, Iuppiter? hanc terris impositurus eras? 360
iamque suburbanos Etruscaque contudit arma:
spes erat in cursu: nunc lare pulsa suo est.
vidimus ornatos aerata per atria picta veste triumphales occubuisse senes; vidimus Iliacae transferri pignora Vestae 365 sede: putant aliquos scilicet esse deos.

at si respicerent qua vos habitatis in arce totque domos vestras obsidione premi, nil opis in cura scirent superesse deorum, et data sollicita tura perire manu. 370
atque utinam pugnae pateat locus; arma capessant, et, si non poterunt exsuperare, cadant.
nunc inopes victus ignavaque fata timentes monte suo clausos barbara turba premit.’
tunc Venus et lituo pulcher trabeaque Quirinus 375 Vestaque pro Latio multa locuta suo est.
‘publica’ respondit ‘cura est pro moenibus istis’ Iuppiter ‘et poenas Gallia victa dabit.
tu modo, quae desunt fruges, superesse putentur effice, nec sedes desere, Vesta, tuas. 380 quodcumque est solidae Cereris, cava machina frangat, mollitamque manu duret in igne focus.’
iusserat, et fratris virgo Saturnia iussis adnuit, et mediae tempora noctis erant.
iam ducibus somnum dederat labor. increpat illos 385
Iuppiter et sacro quid velit ore docet:
‘surgite, et in medios de summis arcibus hostes mittite, quam minime mittere voltis, opem.’
somnus abit, quaeruntque, novis ambagibus acti, tradere quam nolint et iubeantur opem. 390 esse Ceres visa est; iaciunt Cerialia dona:
iacta super galeas scutaque longa sonant.
posse fame vinci spes excidit: hoste repulso candida Pistori ponitur ara Iovi.
Forte revertetar festis Vestalibus illa 395 quae Nova Romano nunc Via iuncta foro est:
huc pede matronam nudo descendere vidi;
obstipui tacitus sustinuique gradum.
sensit anus vicina loci, iussumque sedere adloquitur, quatiens voce tremente caput: 400

'hoc, ubi nunc fora sunt, udae tenuere paludes;
amne redundatis fossa madebat aquis.
Curtius ille lacus, siccas qui sustinet aras, nunc solida est tellus, sed lacus ante fuit;
qua Velabra solent in Circum ducere pompas, 405
nil praeter salices cassaque canna fuit:
saepe suburbanas rediens conviva per undas cantat et ad nautas ebria verba iacit.
nondum conveniens diversis iste figuris nomen ab averso ceperat amne deus. 410 hic quoque lucus erat iuncis et harundine densus et pede velato non adeunda palus.
stagna recesserunt et aquas sua ripa coercet, siccaque nunc tellus: mos tamen ille manet.'
reddiderat causam. 'valeas, anus optima' dixi; 415
'quod superest aevi molle sit omne tui.'
Cetera iam pridem didici puerilibus annis, non tamen idcirco praetereunda mihi.
moenia Dardanides nuper nova fecerat Ilus (Ilus adhuc Asiae dives habebat opes); 420 creditur armiferae signum caeleste Minervae urbis in Iliacae desiluisse iuga.
cura videre fuit: vidi templumque locumque;
hoc superest illi, Pallada Roma tenet.
consulitur Smintheus, lucoque obscurus opaco 425 hos non mentito reddidit ore sonos:
'aetheriam servate deam, servabitis urbem:
imperium secum transferet illa loci.'
servat et inclusam summa tenet Ilus in arce, curaque ad heredem Laomedonta redit; 430 sub Priamo servata parum: sic ipsa volebat, ex quo iudicio forma revicta sua est.
seu gener Adrasti, seu furtis aptus Ulixes, seu fuit Aeneas, eripuisse ferunt;
auctor in incerto, res est Romana: tuetur 435

Vesta, quod assiduo lumine cuncta videt.
heu quantum timuere patres, quo tempore Vesta arsit et est tectis obruta paene suis!
flagrabant sancti sceleratis ignibus ignes, mixtaque erat flammae flamma profana piae; 440 attonitae flebant demisso crine ministrae:
abstulerat vires corporis ipse timor.
provolat in medium, et magna 'succurrite' voce,
'non est auxilium flere' Metellus ait.
'pignora virgineis fatalia tollite palmis: 445 non ea sunt voto, sed rapienda manu.
me miserum! dubitatis?' ait. dubitare videbat et pavidas posito procubuisse genu.
haurit aquas, tollensque manus 'ignoscite', dixit
'sacra: vir intrabo non adeunda viro. 450 si scelus est, in me commissi poena redundet:
sit capitis damno Roma soluta mei.'
dixit, et inrupit: factum dea rapta probavit, pontificisque sui munere tuta fuit.
nunc bene lucetis sacrae sub Caesare flammae: 455 ignis in Iliacis nunc erit estque focus;
nullaque dicetur vittas temerasse sacerdos hoc duce, nec viva defodietur humo:
sic incesta perit, quia, quam violavit, in illam conditur: est Tellus Vestaque numen idem. 460 Tum sibi Callaico Brutus cognomen ab hoste fecit et Hispanam sanguine tinxit humum.
scilicet interdum miscentur tristia laetis, ne populum toto pectore festa iuvent: Crassus ad Euphraten aquilas natumque suosque 465 perdidit, et leto est ultimus ipse datus.
'Parthe, quid exsultas?' dixit dea 'signa remittes, quique necem Crassi vindicet ultor erit.'

At simul auritis violae demuntur asellis, et Cereris fruges aspera saxa terunt, navita puppe sedens 'Delphina videbimus', inquit
'umida cum pulso nox erit orta die.'

11. B MATR : N vel NP 472a

Iam, Phryx, a nupta quereris, Tithone, relinqui, et vigil Eois Lucifer exit aquis:
ite, bonae matres (vestrum Matralia festum), 475
flavaque Thebaeae reddite liba deae.
pontibus et magno iuncta est celeberrima Circo area, quae posito de bove nomen habet.
hac ibi luce ferunt Matutae sacra parenti sceptraferas Servi templa dedisse manus. 480 quae dea sit, quare famulas a limine templi arceat (arceat enim) libaque tosta petat, Bacche racemiferos hedera distincte capillos, si domus illa tua est, derige vatis opus.
arserat obsequio Semele Iovis: accipit Ino 485 te, puer, et summa sedula nutrit ope.
intumuit Iuno, raptum quod Paeleice natum educet: at sanguis ille sororis erat.
hinc agitur furibus Athamas et imagine falsa, tuque cadis patria, parve Learchae, manu; 490 maesta Learchae mater tumulaverat umbras et dederat miseris omnia iusta rogis.
haec quoque, funestos ut erat laniata capillos, prosilit et cunis te, Melicerta, rapit.
est spatio contracta brevi, freta bina repellit, 495 unaque pulsatur, terra, duabus aquis:
huc venit insanis natum complexa lacertis, et secum celso mittit in alta iugo.
excipit inlaesos Panope centumque sorores, et placido lapsu per sua regna ferunt. 500 nondum Leucothea, nondum puer ille Palaemon verticibus densi Thybridis ora tenent.

lucus erat, dubium Semelae Stimulaene vocetur;
maenadas Ausonias incoluisse ferunt:
quaerit ab his Ino quae gens foret. Arcadas esse 505 audit et Euandrum sceptrum tenere loci; dissimulata deam Latias Saturnia Bacchas instimulat fictis insidiosa sonis:
'o nimium faciles, o toto pectore captae, non venit haec nostris hospes amica choris. 510 fraude petit, sacrique parat cognoscere ritum:
quo possit poenas pendere pignus habet.'
vix bene desierat, complent ululatibus auras thyiades, effusis per sua colla comis, iniciuntque manus puerumque revellere pugnant. 515 quos ignorat adhuc, invocat illa deos:
'dique virique loci, miserae succurrite matri.'
clamor Aventini saxa propinqua ferit.
adpulerat ripae vaccas Oetaeus Hiberas;
audit, et ad vocem concitus urget iter: 520 Herculis adventu quae vim modo ferre parabant turpia femineae terga dedere fugae.
'quid petis hinc', (cognorat enim) 'matertera Bacchi?
an numen, quod me, te quoque vexat?' ait.
illa docet partim, partim praesentia nati 525 continet, et furiis in scelus isse pudet.
Rumor, ut est velox, agitatis pervolat alis, estque frequens, Ino, nomen in ore tuum.
hospita Carmentis fidos intrasse penates diceris et longam deposuisse famem. 530 liba sua properata manu Tegeaea sacerdos traditur in subito cocta dedisse foco.
nunc quoque liba iuvant festis Matralibus illam;
rustica sedulitas gratior arte fuit.
'nunc', ait 'o vates, venientia fata resigna, 535 qua licet: hospitiis hoc, precor, adde meis.'
parva mora est, caelum vates ac numina sumit, fitque sui toto pectore plena dei;

vix illam subito posses cognoscere, tanto sanctior et tanto, quam modo, maior erat. 540
'laeta canam: gaude, defuncta laboribus Ino' dixit, 'et huic populo prospera semper ades.
numen eris pelagi: natum quoque pontus habebit.
in vestris aliud sumite nomen aquis:
Leucothea Graia, Matuta vocabere nostris; 545 in portus nato ius erit omne tuo, quem nos Fortunum, sua lingua Palaemona dicet.
ite, precor, nostris aequus uterque locis.'
adnuerat, promissa fides; posuere labores, nomina mutarunt: hic deus, illa dea est. 550 Cur vetet ancillas accedere quaeritis? odit, principiumque odii, si sinat illa, canam.
una ministrarum solita est, Cadmei, tuarum saepe sub amplexus coniugis ire tui.
improbus hanc Athamas furtim dilexit; ab illa 555 comperit agricolis semina tosta dari:
ipsa quidem fecisse negas, sed fama recepit:
hoc est cur odio sit tibi serva manus.
non tamen hanc pro stirpe sua pia mater adoret:
ipsa parum felix visa fuisse parens. 560
alterius prolem melius mandabitis illi:
utilior Baccho quam fuit illa suis.
hanc tibi 'quo properas?' memorant dixisse, Rutili,
'luce mea Marso consul ab hoste cades.'
exitus accessit verbis, flumenque Toleni 565 purpureum mixtis sanguine fluxit aquis.
proximus annus erat: Pallantide caesus eadem Didius hostiles ingeminavit opes.
Lux eadem, Fortuna, tua est, auctorque locusque;
sed superiniectis quis latet iste togis? 570 Servius est, hoc constat enim: sed causa latendi discrepat, et dubium me quoque mentis habet.
dum dea furtivos timide profitetur amores, caelestemque homini concubuisse pudet (arsit enim magno correpta cupidine regis, 575 caecaque in hoc uno non fuit illa viro), nocte domum parva solita est intrare fenestra, unde Fenestellae nomina porta tenet.

nunc pudet, et voltus velamine celat amatos, oraque sunt multa regia tecta toga. 580 an magis est verum post Tulli funera plebem confusam placidi morte fuisse ducis:
nec modus ullus erat, crescebat imagine luctus, donec eum positis occuluere togis?
tertia causa mihi spatio maiore canenda est; 585 nos tamen adductos intus agemus equos.
Tullia coniugio, sceleris mercede, peracto his solita est dictis exstimulare virum:
'quid iuvat esse pares, te nostrae caede sororis meque tui fratris, si pia vita placet? 590 vivere debuerant et vir meus et tua coniunx, si nullum ausuri maius eramus opus.
et caput et regnum facio dotale parentis.
si vir es, i, dictas exige dotis opes.
regia res scelus est: socero cape regna necato, 595 et nostras patrio sanguine tingue manus.'
talibus instinctus solio privatus in alto sederat: attonitum volgus in arma ruit:
hinc cruor et caedes, infirmaque vincitur aetas:
sceptra gener socero rapta Superbus habet. 600
ipse sub Esquiliis, ubi erat sua regia, caesus concidit in dura sanguinolentus humo.
filia carpento, patrios initura penates, ibat per medias alta feroxque vias.
corpus ut aspexit, lacrimis auriga profusis 605 restitit; hunc tali corripit illa sono:
'vadis, an exspectas pretium pietatis amarum?
duc, inquam, invitas ipsa per ora rotas.'
certa fides facti: dictus Sceleratus ab illa vicus, et aeterna res ea pressa nota. 610 post tamen hoc ausa est templum, monimenta parentis, tangere: mira quidem, sed tamen acta loquar.

signum erat in solio residens sub imagine Tulli;
dicitur hoc oculis opposuisse manum, et vox audita est 'voltus abscondite nostros, 615 ne natae videant ora nefanda meae.'
veste data tegitur; vetat hanc Fortuna moveri, et sic e templo est ipsa locuta suo:
'ore revelato qua primum luce patebit Servius, haec positi prima pudoris erit.' 620 parcite, matronae, vetitas attingere vestes (sollemni satis est voce movere preces), sitque caput semper Romano tectus amictu qui rex in nostra septimus urbe fuit.
arserat hoc templum: signo tamen ille pepercit 625
ignis; opem nato Mulciber ipse tulit.
namque pater Tulli Volcanus, Oeresia mater praesignis facie Corniculana fuit.
hanc secum Tanaquil, sacris de more peractis, iussit in ornatum fundere vina focum: 630 hinc inter cineres obsceni forma virilis aut fuit aut visa est, sed fuit illa magis.
iussa foco captiva sedet: conceptus ab illa Servius a caelo semina gentis habet.
signa dedit genitor tunc cum caput igne corusco 635
contigit, inque comis flammeus arsit apex.
Te quoque magnifica, Concordia, dedicat aede Livia, quam caro praestitit ipsa viro.
disce tamen, veniens aetas: ubi Livia nunc est porticus, immensae tecta fuere domus; 640 urbis opus domus una fuit spatiumque tenebat quo brevius muris oppida multa tenent.
haec aequata solo est, nullo sub crimine regni, sed quia luxuria visa nocere sua.
sustinuit tantas operum subvertere moles 645

totque suas heres perdere Caesar opes:
sic agitur censura et sic exempla parantur, cum vindex, alios quod monet, ipse facit.

12. C N 13. D EID : NP ut vid. 648a

Nulla nota est veniente die, quam dicere possis; Idibus Invicto sunt data templa Iovi.
et iam Quinquatrus iubeor narrare minores.
nunc ades o coeptis, flava Minerva, meis.
'cur vagus incedit tota tibicen in Urbe?
quid sibi personae, quid stola longa volunt?'
sic ego. sic posita Tritonia cuspide dixit 655 (possim utinam doctae verba referre deae):
'temporibus veterum tibicinis usus avorum magnus et in magno semper honore fuit:
cantabat fanis, cantabat tibia ludis, cantabat maestis tibia funeribus; 660 dulcis erat mercede labor. tempusque secutum quod subito gratae frangeret artis opus.
adde quod aedilis, pompam qui funeris irent, artifices solos iusserat esse decem.
exilio mutant Urbem Tiburque recedunt: 665 exilium quodam tempore Tibur erat.
quaeritur in scaena cava tibia, quaeritur aris;
ducit supremos nenia nulla toros.
servierat quidam, quantolibet ordine dignus, Tibure, sed longo tempore liber erat. 670 rure dapes parat ille suo, turbamque canoram convocat: ad festas convenit illa dapes.
nox erat, et vinis oculique animique natabant, cum praecomposito nuntius ore venit, atque ita "quid cessas convivium solvere?" dixit 675
"auctor vindictae nam venit ecce tuae."
nec mora, conviviae valido titubantia vino membra movent; dubii stantque labantque pedes.

at dominus "discedite" ait, plaustroque morantes sustulit; in plaustro scirpea lata fuit. 680 adliciunt somnos tempus motusque merumque, potaque se Tibur turba redire putat.
iamque per Esquilias Romanam intraverat urbem, et mane in medio plaustra fuere foro.
Plautius, ut posset specie numeroque senatum 685 fallere, personis imperat ora tegi, admiscetque alios et, ut hunc tibicina coetum augeat, in longis vestibus esse iubet;
sic reduces bene posse tegi, ne forte notentur contra collegi iussa venire sui. 690 res placuit, cultuque novo licet Idibus uti et canere ad veteres verba iocosa modos.'
haec ubi perdocuit, 'superest mihi discere' dixi
'cur sit Quinquatrus illa vocata dies.'
'Martius' inquit 'agit tali mea nomine festa, 695 estque sub inventis haec quoque turba meis.
prima, terebrato per rara foramina buxo, ut daret, effeci, tibia longa sonos.
vox placuit: faciem liquidis referentibus undis vidi virgineas intumuisse genas. 700
"ars mihi non tanti est; valeas, mea tibia" dixi:
excipit abiectam caespite ripa suo.
inventam satyrus primum miratur, et usum nescit, et inflatam sentit habere sonum; et modo dimittit digitis, modo concipit auras, 705
iamque inter nymphas arte superbus erat:
provocat et Phoebum. Phoebo superante pependit; caesa recesserunt a cute membra sua.
sum tamen inventrix auctorque ego carminis huius:
hoc est cur nostros ars colat ista dies.' 710

Tertia nox veniet, qua tu, Dodoni Thyone, stabis Agenorei fronte videnda bovis.
haec est illa dies qua tu purgamina Vestae,

At pater Heliadum radios ubi tinxerit undis, tollet humo validos proles Hyriea lacertos;

    continua Delphin nocte videndus erit. 720 scilicet hic olim Volscos Aequosque fugatos

unde suburbano clarus, Tuberte, triumpho

19. B C 724a

Iam sex et totidem luces de mense supersunt, huic unum numero tu tamen adde diem.
sol abit a Geminis, et Cancri signa rubescunt:
    coepit Aventina Pallas in arce coli.

20. C C 728a

Iam tua, Laomedon, oritur nurus, orta que noctem

Hanc quoque cum patriis Galatea receperit undis, plenaque securae terra quietis erit, surgit humo iuvenis telis adflatus avitis, 735 et gemino nexas porrigit angue manus.
notus amor Phaedrae, nota est iniuria Thesei:
devovit natum credulus ille suum.
non impune pius iuvenis Troezena petebat:
dividit obstantes pectore taurus aquas. 740 solliciti terrentur equi, frustra que retenti per scopulos dominum duraque saxa trahunt.
exciderat curru, lorisque morantibus artus Hippolytus lacero corpore raptus erat, reddideratque animam, multum indignante Diana. 745
'nulla' Coronides 'causa doloris' ait:
'namque pio iuveni vitam sine vulnere reddam, et cedent arti tristia fata meae.'
gramina continuo loculis depromit eburnis:
profuerant Glauci manibus illa prius, 750 tum cum observatas augur descendit in herbas, usus et auxilio est anguis ab angue dato.
pectora ter tetigit, ter verba salubria dixit:
depositum terra sustulit ille caput.
lucus eum nemorisque sui Dictynna recessu 755 celat: Aricino Virbius ille lacu.
at Clymenus Clothoque dolent, haec fila teneri, hic fieri regni iura minora sui.
Iuppiter, exemplum veritus, derexit in ipsum fulmina qui nimiae moverat artis opem. 760 Phoebe, querebaris: deus est, placare parenti:
propter te, fieri quod vetat, ipse facit.

22. E C 23. F C 762a

tempora si veteris quaeris temeraria damni, quintus ab extremo mense bis ille dies.
postera lux melior: superat Masinissa Syphacem, et cecidit telis Hasdrubal ipse suis. 770

24. G C 770a

Tempora labuntur, tacitisque senescimus annis, et fugiunt freno non remorante dies.
quam cito venerunt Fortunae Fortis honores!
post septem luces Iunius actus erit.
ite, deam laeti Fortem celebrate, Quirites: 775 in Tiberis ripa munera regis habet.
pars pede, pars etiam celeri decurrite cumba, nec pudeat potos inde redire domum.
ferte coronatae iuvenum convivia, lintres, plebs colit hanc, quia qui posuit de plebe fuisse fertur, et ex humili sceptrum tulisse loco.

convenit et servis, serva quia Tullius ortus constituit dubiae templa propinqua deae.

sic cecinit Clio, doctae adsensere sorores;
adnuit Alcides increpuitque Iyram.

IBIS

Tempus ad hoc, lustris bis iam mihi quinque peractis, Omne fuit Musae carmen inerme meae;
Nullaque, quae possit, scriptis tot milibus, extat Littera Nasonis sanguinolenta legi:
Nec quemquam nostri nisi me laesere libelli, 5
Artificis periit cum caput Arte sua.
Unus (et hoc ipsum est iniuria magna) perennem Candoris titulum non sinit esse mei.
Quisquis is est (nam nomen adhuc utcumque tacebo), Cogit inassuetas sumere tela manus. 10
Ille relegatum gelidos aquilonis ad ortus
Non sinit exilio delituisse meo; Vulneraque inmitis requiem quaerentia vexat, lactat et in toto nomina nostra foro;
Perpetuoque mihi sociatam foedere lecti 15
Non patitur vivi funera flere viri.
Cumque ego quassa meae complectar membra carinae, Naufragii tabulas pugnat habere mei:
Et qui debuerat subitas extinguere flammam,
Hic praedam medio raptor ab igne petit. 20
Nititur, ut profugae desint alimenta senectae:
Heu! quanto est nostris dignior ipse malis!
Di melius! quorum longe mihi maximus ille est,
Qui nostras inopes noluit esse vias.
Huic igitur meritas grates, ubicumque licebit, 25
Pro tam mansueto pectore semper agam.
Audiat hoc Pontus: faciet quoque forsitan idem, Terra sit ut propior testificanda mihi.
At tibi, calcasti qui me, violente, iacentem,
Qua licet ei misero! debitus hostis ero. 30
Desinet esse prius contrarius ignibus umor, lunctaque cum luna lumina solis erunt;

Parsque eadem caeli zephyros emittet et euros,
Et tepidus gelido flabit ab axe notus;
Et ver autumno, brumae miscebitur aestas, 37
Atque eadem regio vesper et ortus erit;
Et nova fraterno veniet concordia fumo, 35
Quem vetus accensa separat ira pyra:
Quam mihi sit tecum positis, quae sumpsimus, armis 39
Gratia, commissis, improbe, rupta tuis.
Pax erit haec nobis, donec mihi vita manebit, 43
Cum pecore infirmo quae solet esse lupis.
Prima quidem coepto committam proelia versu,
Non soleant quamvis hoc pede bella geri:
Utque petit primo plenum flaventis harenae Nondum calfacti militis hasta solum,
Sic ego te nondum ferro iaculabor acuto,
Protinus invisum nec petet hasta caput; 50
Et neque nomen in hoc nec dicam facta libello, Teque brevi, qui sis, dissimulare sinam.
Postmodo, si perges, in te mihi liber iambus Tincta Lycambeo sanguine tela dabit.
Nunc quo Battiades inimicum devovet Ibin, 55
Hoc ego devoveo teque tuosque modo.
Utque ille, historiis involvam carmina caecis:
Non soleam quamvis hoc genus ipse sequi.
Illius ambages imitatus in Ibide dicar Oblitus moris iudicii que mei. 60
Et quoniam, qui sis, nondum quaerentibus edo, Ibidis interea tu quoque nomen habe;
Utque mei versus aliquantum noctis habebunt,
Sic vitae series tota sit atra tuae.
Haec tibi natali facito, Ianique kalendis 65
Non mentituro quilibet ore legat.
Di maris et terrae, quique his meliora tenetis
Inter diversos cum love regna polos,
Huc, precor, huc vestras omnes advertite mentes,

Et sinite optatis pondus inesse meis: 70
Ipsaque tu tellus, ipsum cum fluctibus aequor, Ipse meas aether accipe summe preces;
Sideraque et radiis circumdata solis imago,
Lunaque, quae numquam quo prius orbe micat,
Noxque tenebrarum specie reverenda tuarum; 75
Quaeque ratum triplici pollice netis opus, Quique per infernas horrendo murmure valles Inperiuratae laberis amnis aquae,
Quasque ferunt torto vittatis angue capillis
Carceris obscuras ante sedere fores; 80
Vos quoque, plebs superum, Fauni Satyrique Laresque Fluminaque et nymphae semideumque genus:
Denique ab antiquo divi veteresque novique
In nostrum cuncti tempus, adeste, chao, Carmina dum capiti male fido dira canentur 85
Et peragent partes ira dolorque suas.
Adnite optatis omnes ex ordine nostris,
Et sit pars voti nulla caduca mei.
Quaeque precor, fiant: ut non mea dicta, sed illa Pasiphaes generi verba fuisse putet. 90
Quasque ego transiero poenas, patiatur et illas;
Plenius ingenio sit miser ille meo!
Neve minus noceant fictum execrantia nomen Vota, minus magnos commoveantve deos:
Illum ego devoveo, quem mens intellegit, Ibin, 95
Qui se scit factis has meruisse preces.
Nulla mora est in me: peragam rata vota sacerdos.
Quisquis ades sacris, ore favete, meis;
Quisquis ades sacris, lugubria dicite verba,
Et fletu madidis Ibin adite genis: 100
Ominibusque malis pedibusque occurrite laevis, Et nigrae vestes corpora vestra tegant!
Tu quoque, quid dubitas ferales sumere vittas?
Iam stat, ut ipse vides, funeris ara tui.
Pompa parata tibi est: votis mora tristibus absit: 105

Da iugulum cultris, hostia dira, meis.
Terra tibi fruges, amnis tibi deneget undas,
Deneget afflatus ventus et aura suos.
Nec tibi sol calidus, nec sit tibi lucida Phoebe, Destituant oculos sidera clara tuos. 110
Nec se Vulcanus nec se tibi praebeat aer, Nec tibi det tellus nec tibi pontus iter.
Exul, inops erres, alienaque limina lustres, Exiguumque petas ore tremente cibum.
Nec corpus querulo nec mens vacet aegra dolore, 115
Noxque die gravior sit tibi, nocte dies.
Sisque miser semper, nec sis miserabilis ulli:
Gaudeat adversis femina virque tuis.
Accedat lacrimis odium, dignusque putere,
Qui, mala cum tuleris plurima, plura feras. 120
Sitque, quod est rarum, solito defecta favore Fortunae facies invidiosa tuae.
Causaque non desit, desit tibi copia mortis:
Optatam fugiat vita coacta necem:
Luctatusque diu cruciatos spiritus artus 125
Deserat, et longa torqueat ante mora.
Evenient. dedit ipse mihi modo signa futuri Phoebus, et a laeva maesta volavit avis.
Certe ego, quae voveo, superos motura putabo, Speque tuae mortis, perfide, semper alar. 130
Et prius hanc animam, nimium tibi saepe petitam, Auferet illa dies, quae mihi sera venit,
Quam dolor hic umquam spatio evanescere possit,
Leniat aut odium tempus et hora meum.
Pugnabunt arcu dum Thraces, lazyges hasta, 135
Dum tepidus Ganges, frigidus Hister erit; Robora dum montes, dum mollia pabula campi,
Dum Tiberis liquidas Tuscus habebit aquas, Tecum bella geram; nec mors mihi finiet iras,
Saeva sed in manes manibus arma dabit. 140
Tum quoque, cum fuero vacuas dilapsus in auras,

Exsanguis mores oderit umbra tuos,
Tum quoque factorum veniam memor umbra tuorum,
Insequar et vultus ossea forma tuos.
Sive ego, quod nolim, longis consumptus ab annis, 145
Sive manu facta morte solutus ero:
Sive per immensas iactabor naufragus undas,
Nostraque longinquus viscera piscis edet:
Sive peregrinae carpent mea membra volucres:
Sive meo tinguent sanguine rostra lupi: 150
Sive aliquis dignatus erit subponere terrae
Et dare plebeio corpus inane rogo:
Quidquid ero, Stygiis erumpere nitar ab oris,
Et tendam gelidas ultor in ora manus.
Me vigilans cernes, tacitis ego noctis in umbris 155
Excutiam somnos visus adesse tuos.
Denique quidquid ages, ante os oculosque volabo
Et querar, et nulla sede quietus eris.
Verbera saeva dabunt sonitum nexaeque colubrae, Conscia fumabunt semper ad ora faces. 160
His vivus furiis agitabere, mortuus isdem, Et brevior poena vita futura tua est.
Nec tibi continget funus lacrimaeque tuorum;
Indeploratum proiciere caput;
Carnificisque manu, populo plaudente, traheris, 165
Infixusque tuis ossibus uncus erit.
Ipsae te fugient, quae carpunt omnia, flammae;
Respuet invisum iusta cadaver humus.
Unguibus et rostro crudus trahet ilia vultur
Et scindent avidi perfida corda canes, 170
Deque tuo fiet++licet hac sis laude superbus++
Insatiabilibus corpore rixa lupis.
In loca ab Elysiis diversa fugabere campis, Quasque tenet sedes noxia turba, coles.
Sisyphus est illic saxum volvensque petensque, 175 Quique agitur rapidae vinctus ab orbe rotae, lugeribusque novem summus qui distat ab imo, 181

Visceraque assiduae debita praebet avi.
Quaeque gerunt umeris perituras Belides undas, 177
Exulis Aegypti, turba cruenta, nurus.
Poma pater Pelopis praesentia quaerit, et idem Semper eget liquidis, semper abundat aquis. 180
Hic tibi de Furiis scindet latus una flagello, 183
Ut sceleris numeros confiteare tui:
Altera Tartareis sectos dabit anguibus artus:
Tertia fumantes incoquet igne genas.
Noxia mille modis lacerabitur umbra, tuasque Aeacus in poenas ingeniosus erit.
In te transcribet veterum tormenta reorum:
Sontibus antiquis causa quietis eris. 190
Sisyphus, cui tradas revolubile pondus, habebis:
Versabunt celeres nunc nova membra rotae:
Hic et erit, ramos frustra qui captet et undas:
Hic inconsumpto viscere pascet aves.
Nec mortis poenas mors altera finiet huius, 195
Horaque erit tantis ultima nulla malis.
Inde ego pauca canam, frondes ut siquis ab Ida Aut summam Libyco de mare carpat aquam.
Nam neque, quot flores Sicula nascantur in Hybla, Quotve ferat, dicam, terra Cilissa crocos, 200
Nec cum tristis hiems Aquilonis inhorruit alis, Quam multa fiat grandine canus Athos;
Nec mala voce mea poterunt tua cuncta referri,
Ora licet tribuas multiplicata mihi.
Tot tibi vae! misero venient talesque ruinae, 205
Ut cogi in lacrimas me quoque posse putem.
Illae me lacrimae facient sine fine beatum:
Dulcior hic risu tunc mihi fletus erit.
Natus es infelix, ++ita di voluere++ nec ulla Commoda nascenti stella levisve fuit. 210
Non Venus affulsit, non illa Iuppiter hora, Lunaque non apto solque fuere loco,
Nec satis utiliter positos tibi praebuit ignes

Quem peperit magno lucida Maia Iovi.
Te fera nec quicquam placidum spondentia Martis 215
Sidera presserunt falciferique senis.
Lux quoque natalis, ne quid nisi triste videres, Turpis et inductis nubibus atra fuit.
Haec est, in fastis cui dat gravis Allia nomen, Quaeque dies Ibin, publica damna tulit. 220
Qui simul impura matris prolapsus ab alvo Cinyphiam foedo corpore pressit humum, Sedit in adverso nocturnus culmine bubo,
Funereoque graves edidit ore sonos.
Protinus Eumenides lavere palustribus undis, 225
Qua cava de Stygiis fluxerat unda vadis,
Pectoraque unxerunt Erebeae felle colubrae, Terque cruentatas increpuere manus.
Gutturaque imbuerunt infantia lacte canino:
Hic primus pueri venit in ora cibus: 230
Perbibit inde suae rabiem nutricis alumnus, Latrat et in toto verba canina foro.
Membraque vinxerunt tinctis ferrugine pannis,
A male deserto quos rapuere rogo:
Et, ne non fultum nuda tellure iaceret, 235
Molle super silices inposuere caput.
Iamque recessurae viridi de stipite factas Admorunt oculos usque sub ora faces.
Flebat, ut est fumis infans contactus amaris,
De tribus est cum sic una locuta soror: 240
'Tempus in inmensum lacrimas tibi movimus istas, Quae semper causa sufficiente cadent.'
Dixerat; at Clotho iussit promissa valere, Nevit et infesta stamina pulla manu;
Et, ne longa suo praesagia diceret ore, 245
'Fata canet vates qui tua,' dixit, 'erit.'
Ille ego sum vates: ex me tua vulnera disces,
Dent modo di vires in mea verba suas;
Carminibusque meis accedent pondera rerum,

Quae rata per luctus experiere tuos. 250
Neve sine exemplis aevi cruciere prioris, Sint tua Troianis non leviora malis, Quantaque clavigeri Poeantius Herculis heres, Tanta venenato vulnera crure geras.
Nec levius doleas, quam qui bibit ubera cervae, 255
Armatique tulit vulnus, inermis opem;
Quique ab equo praeceps in Aleia decidit arva, Exitio facies cui sua paene fuit.
Id quod Amyntorides videas, trepidumque ministro Praetemptes baculo luminis orbus iter. 260
Nec plus aspicias quam quem sua filia rexit, Expertus scelus est cuius uterque parens:
Qualis erat, postquam est iudex de lite iocosa Sumptus, Apollinea clarus in arte senex:
Qualis et ille fuit, quo praecipiente columba 265
Est data Palladiae praevia duxque rati:
Quique oculis caruit, per quos male viderat aurum, Inferias nato quos dedit orba parens:
Pastor ut Aetnaeus, cui casus ante futuros Telemus Eurymides vaticinatus erat: 270
Ut duo Phinidae, quibus idem lumen ademit, Qui dedit: ut Thamyrae Demodocique caput
Sic aliquis tua membra secet, Saturnus ut illas Subsecuit partes, unde creatus erat.
Nec tibi sit melior tumidis Neptunus in undis, 275
Quam cui sunt subitae frater et uxor aves;
Sollertique viro, lacerae quem fracta tenentem
Membra ratis Semeles est miserata soror.
Vel tua, ne poenae genus hoc cognoverit unus,
Viscera diversis scissa ferantur equis: 280
Vel quae, qui redimi Romano turpe putavit,
A duce Puniceo pertulit, ipse feras.
Nec tibi subsidio praesens sit numen, ut illi, Cui nihil Hercei profuit ara Iovis.
Utque dedit saltus a summa Thessalus Ossa, 285

Tu quoque saxoso praecipitere iugo.
Aut velut Eurylochi, qui sceptrum cepit ab illo, Sint artus avidis anguibus esca tui.
Vel tua maturet, sicut Minoia fata,
Per caput infusae fervidus umor aquae. 290 [Utque parum mitis, sed non impune, Prometheus, Aerias volucres sanguine fixus alas.]
Aut ut Erecthides, magno ter ab Hercule victus, Caesus in inensum proiciare fretum.
Aut ut Amyntiaden, turpi dilectus amore 295
Oderit, et saevo vulneret ense puer.
Nec tibi fida magis misceri pocula possint,
Quam qui cornigero de love natus erat.
More vel intereas capti suspensus Achaei,
Qui miser aurifera teste pependit aqua. 300
Aut ut Achilliden, cognato nomine clarum, Opprimat hostili tegula iacta manu.
Nec tua quam Pyrrhi felicius ossa quiescant, Sparsa per Ambracias quae iacuere vias.
Nataque ut Aeacidae iaculis moriaris adactis; 305
Non licet hoc Cereri dissimulare sacrum.
Utque nepos dicti nostro modo carmine regis, Cantharidum sucos dante parente bibas.
Aut pia te caeso dicatur adultera, sicut
Qua cecidit Leucon vindice, dicta pia est. 310
Inque pyram tecum carissima corpora mittas, Quem finem vitae Sardanapallus habet.
Utque Iovis Libyci templum violare parantes, Acta noto vultus condant harena tuos.
Utque necatorum Darei fraude secundi, 315
Sic tua subsidens devoret ora cinis.
Aut ut olivifera quondam Sicyone profecto, Sit frigus mortis causa famesque tuae.
Aut ut Atarnites, insutus pelle iuveni Turpiter ad dominum praeda ferare tuum. 320
Inque tuo thalamo ritu iugulere Pheraei,

Qui datus est leto coniugis ense suae,
Quosque putas fidos, ut Larisaeus Aleuas Vulnere non fidos experiare tuo.
Utque Milo, sub quo cruciata est Pisa tyranno, 325
Vivus in occultas praecipiteris aquas.
Quaeque in Adimantum Phyllesia regna tenentem
A love venerunt, te quoque tela petant.
Aut ut Amastriacis quondam Lenaeus ab oris, Nudus Achillea destituaris humo. 330
Utque vel Eurydamas ter circum busta Thrasylli Est Larisaeis raptus ab hoste rotis,
Vel qui, quae fuerat tutatus moenia saepe, Corpore lustravit non diuturna suo,
Utque novum passa genus Hippomeneide poenae 335
Tractus in Actaea fertur adulter humo,
Sic, ubi vita tuos invisita reliquerit artus,
Ultiores rapiant turpe cadaver equi.
Viscera sic aliquis scopulus tua figat, ut olim
Fixa sub Euboico Graia fuere sinu; 340
Utque ferox perit et fulmine et aequore raptor, Sic te mersuras adiuvet ignis aquas.
Mens quoque sic furiis vecors agitetur, ut illi,
Unum qui toto corpore vulnus habet;
Utque Dryantiadae Rhodopeia regna tenenti, 345
In gemino dispar cui pede cultus erat, Ut fuit Oetaeo quondam generoque draconum Tisamenique patri Calliroesque viro.
Nec tibi contingat matrona pudicior illa,
Qua potuit Tydeus erubuisse nuru: 350
Quaeque sui Venerem iunxit cum fratre mariti, Locris in ancillae dissimulata nece.
Tam quoque, di faciant, possis gaudere fideli Coniuge, quam Talai Tyndareique gener:
Quaeque parare suis letum patruelibus ausae 355
Belides assidua colla premuntur aqua.
Byblidos et Canaces, sicut facit, ardeat igne,

Nec nisi per crimen sit tibi fida soror.
Filia si fuerit, sit quod Pelopea Thyestae, Myrrha suo patri, Nyctimeneque suo. 360
Neve magis pia sit capitique parentis amica, Quam sua vel Pterelae, vel tibi, Nise, fuit:
Infamemque locum sceleris quae nomine fecit,
Pressit et inductis membra paterna rotis.
Ut iuvenes pereas, quorum fastigia vultus 365
Membraque Pisaeae sustinuere foris:
Ut qui perfusam miserorum saepe procorum
Ipse suo melius sanguine tinxit humum:
Proditor ut saevi periit auriga tyranni,
Qui nova Myrtoae nomina fecit aquae: 370
Ut qui velocem frustra petiere puellam,
Dum facta est pomis tardior illa tribus:
Ut qui tecta novi formam celantia monstri Intrarunt caecae non redeunda domus:
Ut quorum Aeacides misit violentus in altum 375
Corpora cum senis altera sena rogam:
Ut quos, obscuri victos ambagibus oris,
Legimus infandae Sphinga dedisse neci:
Ut qui Bistoniae templo cecidere Minervae,
Propter quos acies nunc quoque tecta deae est: 380
Ut qui Threicii quondam praesepia regis Fecerunt dapibus sanguinolenta suis:
Therodamanteos ut qui sensere leones,
Quique Thoanteae Taurica sacra deae:
Ut quos Scylla vorax Scyllaeque adversa Charybdis 385
Dulichiae pavidos eripuerunt rati:
Ut quos demisit vastam Polyphemus in alvum:
Ut Laestrygonias qui subiere manus:
Ut quos dux Poenus mersit putealibus undis
Et iacto canas pulvere fecit aquas: 390
Sex bis ut Icaridos famulae periit procique, Inque caput domini qui dabat arma procis:
Ut iacet Aonio luctator ab hospite fusus,

Qui, mirum, victor, cum cecidisset, erat:
Ut quos Antaei fortes pressere lacerti: 395
Quosque ferae morti Lemnia turba dedit:
Ut qui post longum, sacri monstrator iniqui,
Elicuit pluvias victima caesus aquas:
Frater ut Antaei, quo sanguine debuit, aras
Tinxit, et exemplis occidit ipse suis: 400
Ut qui terribiles pro gramen habentibus herbis Impius humano viscere pavit equos:
Ut duo diversis sub eodem vindice caesi Vulneribus, Nessus Dexamenique gener:
Ut pronepos, Saturne, tuus, quem reddere vitam 405
Urbe Coronides vidit ab ipse sua:
Ut Sinis et Sciron et cum Polypemone natus:
Quique homo parte sui, parte iuventus erat:
Quique trabes pressas ab humo mittebat in auras, Aequoris aspiciens huius et huius aquas: 410
Quaeque Ceres laeto vidit pereuntia vultu Corpora Thesea Cercyonea manu.
Haec tibi, quem meritis precibus mea devovet ira, Evenient, aut his non leviora malis.
Qualis Achaemenidis, Sicula desertus in Aetna 415
Troica cum vidit vela venire, fuit, Qualis erat nec non fortuna binominis Iri, Quique tenent pontem, spe tibi maior erit.
Filius et Cereris frustra tibi semper ametur, Destituatque tuas usque petitus opes: 420
Utque per alternos unda labente recursus Subtrahitur presso mollis harena pedi,
Sic tua nescio qua semper fortuna liquescat,
Lapsaque per medias effluat usque manus.
Utque pater solitae varias mutare figuras, 425
Plenus inextincta conficiare fame;
Nec dapis humanae tibi sint fastidia; quaque Parte potes, Tydeus temporis huius eris.
Atque aliquid facies, a vespere Solis ad ortus

Cur externati rursus agantur equi; 430
Foeda Lycaoniae repetes convivia mensae, Temptabisque cibi fallere fraude Iovem;
Teque aliquis posito temptet vim numinis opto,
Tantalides tu sis, tu Teleique puer.
Et tua sic latos spargantur membra per agros, 435
Tamquam quae patrias detinuere vias.
Aere Perilleo veros imitere iuencos,
Ad formam tauri conveniente sono.
Utque ferox Phalaris, lingua prius ense resecta
More bovis Paphio clausus in aere gemas. 440
Dumque redire voles aevi melioris in annos, Ut vetus Admeti decipiare socer.
Aut eques in medii mergare voragine caeni,
Dummodo sint fati nomina nulla tui.
Atque utinam pereas, veluti de dentibus orti 445
Sidonia iactis Graia per arva manu.
Et quae Pitthides fecit de fratre Medusae, Eveniant capiti vota sinistra tuo:
Et quibus exiguo volucris devota libello est,
Corpora proiecta quae sua purgat aqua. 450
Vulnera totque feras quot dicitur ille tulisse, Cuius ab inferiis culter abesse solet.
Attonitusque seces, ut quos Cybeleia mater
Incitat, ad Phrygios vilia membra modos;
Deque viro fias nec femina nec vir, ut Attis, 455
Et quatias molli tympana rauca manu.
Inque pecus subito Magnae vertare Parentis,
Victor ut est celeri victaque versa pede.
Solaque Limone poenam ne senserit illam,
Et tua dente fero viscera carpat equus. 460
Aut, ut Cassandreu domino non mitior illo, Saucius ingesta contumuleris humo.
Aut ut Abantiades, aut ut Cycneius heros, Clausus in aequoreas praecipiteris aquas.
Victima vel Phoebosacras macteris ad aras, 465

Quam tulit a saevo Theudotus hoste necem.
Aut te devoveat certis Abdera diebus, Saxaque devotum grandine plura petant.
Aut Iovis infesti telo feriare trisulco,
Ut satus Hipponoo, Dexitheaeque pater, 470
Ut soror Autonoes, ut cui matertera Maia, Ut temere optatos qui male rexit equos;
Ut ferus Aeolides, ut sanguine natus eodem,
Quo genita est liquidis quae caret Arctos aquis,
Ut Macelo rapidis icta est cum coniuge flammis, 475
Sic, precor, aetherii vindicis igne cadas.
Praedaque sis illis, quibus est Latonia Delos Ante diem rapti non adeunda Thaso:
Quique verecundae speculantem labra Dianae, Quique Crotopiaden diripere Linum. 480
Neve venenato levius feriaris ab angue, Quam senis Oeagri Calliopesque nurus:
Quam puer Hypsipyles, quam qui cava primus acuta Cuspide suspecti roborum fixit equi.
Neve gradus adeas Elpenore cautius altos, 485
Vimque feras vini quo tulit ille modo.
Tamque cadas domitus, quam quisquis ad arma vocantem Iuvit inhumanum Thiodamanta Dryops:
Quam ferus ipse suo periit mactatus in antro Proditus inclusae Cacus ab ore bovis: 490
Quam qui dona tulit Nesseo tincta veneno, Euboicasque suo sanguine tinxit aquas.
Vel de praecipiti venias in Tartara saxo,
Ut qui Socraticum de nece legit opus;
Ut qui Theseae fallacia vela carinae 495
Vidit, ut Iliaca missus ab arce puer, Ut teneri nutrix, eadem matertera, Bacchi,
Ut cui causa necis serra reperta fuit;
Livida se scopulis ut virgo misit ab altis,
Dixerat invicto quae mala verba deo. 500
Feta tibi occurrat patrio popularis in arvo,

Sitque Phalaeceae causa leaena necis.
Quique Lycurgiden letavit, et arbore natum, Idmonaque audacem, te quoque rumpat aper.
Isque vel exanimis faciat tibi vulnus, ut illi, 505
    Ora super fixi quem cecidere suis.
Sive idem, simili pinus quem morte peremit,
    Phryx ac venator sis Berecyntiades.
Si tua contigerit Minoas puppis harenas,
    Te Corcyraeum Cressia turba putet. 510
Lapsuramque domum subeas, ut sanguis Aleuae, Stella Leoprepidae cum fuit aequa Iovis.
Utque vel Evenus, torrenti flumine mersus Nomina des rapidae, vel Tiberinus, aquae.
Astacidaeque modo decisa cadavere trunco, 515
    Digna feris, hominis sit caput esca tuum, Quodque ferunt Brotean fecisse cupidine mortis,
    Des tua succensae membra cremanda pyrae.
Inclususque necem cavea patiaris, ut ille
    Non profecturae conditor historiae. 520
Utque repertori nocuit pugnacis iambi,
    Sic sit in exitium lingua proterva tuum.
Utque parum stabili qui carmine laesit Athenin, Invisus pereas deficiente cibo.
Utque lyrae vates fertur periisse severae, 525
    Causa sit exitii dextera laesa tui.
Utque Agamemnonio vulnus dedit anguis Orestae,
    Tu quoque de morsu virus habente cadas.
Sit tibi coniugii nox prima novissima vitae:
    Eupolis hoc periit et nova nupta modo. 530
Utque coturnatum periisse Lycophrona narrant, Haereat in fibris fixa sagitta tuis.
Aut lacer in silva manibus spargare tuorum,
    Sparsus ut est Thebis angue creatus avo.
Perque feros montes tauro rapiente traharis, 535
    Ut tracta est coniunx imperiosa Lyci.
Quodque suae passa est paelex invita sororis,

Excidat ante pedes lingua resecta tuos.
Conditor ut tardae, laesus cognomine, Myrrhae, Urbis in innumeris inveniare locis. 540
Inque tuis opifex, vati quod fecit Achaeo, Noxia luminibus spicula condat apis.
Fixus et in duris carparis viscera saxi,
    Ut cui Pyrrha sui filia fratris erat.
Ut puer Harpagides referas exempla Thyestae, 545
    Inque tui caesus viscera patris eas.
Trunca geras saevo mutilatis partibus ense,
    Qualia Mamertae membra fuisse ferunt.
Utve Syracosio praestricta fauce poetae,
    Sic animae laqueo sit via clausa tuae. 550
Nudave derepta pateant tua viscera pelle, Ut Phrygium cuius nomina flumen habet.
Saxificae videas infelix ora Medusae, Cephenum multos quae dedit una neci.
Potniadum morsus subeas, ut Glaucus, equarum, 555
    Inque maris salias, Glaucus ut alter, aquas.
Utque duobus idem dictis modo nomen habenti,
    Praefocent animae Cnosia mella viam.
Sollicitoque bibas, Anyti doctissimus olim Imperturbato quod bibit ore reus. 560
Nec tibi, siquid amas, felicius Haemone cedat:
    Utque sua Macareus, sic potiare tua.
Vel videas quod, iam cum flammae cuncta tenerent, Hectoreus patria vidit ab arce puer.
Sanguine probra luas, ut avo genitore creatus, 565
    Per facinus soror est cui sua facta parens.
Ossibus inque tuis teli genus haereat illud, Traditur Icarii quo cecidisse gener.
Utque loquax in equo est elisum guttur acerno,
    Sic tibi claudatur pollice vocis iter. 570
Aut ut Anaxarchus pila minuaris in alta, Ictaque pro solitis frugibus ossa sonent.
Utque patrem Psamathes, condant te Phoebus in ima

Tartara, quod natae fecerat ille suae.
Inque tuos ea pestis eat, quam dextra Coroebi 575
Vicit, opem miseris Argolisinque tulit.
Utque nepos Aethrae, Veneris moriturus ob iram, Exul ab attonitis excutiaris equis.
Propter opes magnas ut perdidit hospes alumnum, Perdat ob exiguas te tuus hospes opes. 580
Utque ferunt caesos sex cum Damasicthone fratres, Intereat tecum sic genus omne tuum.
Addidit ut fidicen miseris sua funera natis,
Sic tibi sint vitae taedia iusta tuae.
Utve soror Pelopis, saxo dureris oborto, 585
Ut laesus lingua Battus ab ipse sua.
Aera si misso vacuum iaculabere disco,
Quo puer Oeбалides, ictus ab orbe cadas.
Siqua per alternos pulsabitur unda lacertos,
Omnis Abydena sit tibi peior aqua. 590
Comicus ut liquidis periit, dum nabat, in undis, Et tua sic Stygius strangulet ora liquor.
Aut ubi ventosum superaris naufragus aequor,
Contacta pereas, ut Palinurus, humo.
Utque coturnatum vatem tutela Dianae, 595 Dilaniet vigilum te quoque turba canum.
Aut ut Trinacrius salias super ora gigantis, Plurima qua flammis Sicanis Aetna vomit.
Diripiantque tuos insanis unguibus artus Strymoniae matres, Orpheos esse ratae. 600
Natus ut Althaeae flammis absentibus arsit, Sic tuus ardescat stipitis igne rokus.
Ut nova Phasiaca comprehensa est nupta corona, Utque pater nuptae, cumque parente domus;
Ut cruor Herculeos abiit diffusus in artus; 605
Corpora pestiferum sic tua virus edat.
Qua sua Penteliden proles est ulta Lycurgum, Haec maneat teli te quoque plaga novi.
Utque Milo robur diducere fissile temptes,

Nec possis captas inde referre manus. 610
Muneribusque tuis laedaris, ut Icarus, in quem Intulit armatas ebria turba manus.
Quodque dolore necis patriae pia filia fecit,
Vincula per laquei fac tibi guttur eat.
Obstructoque famem patiaris limine tecti, 615
Ut legem poenae cui dedit ipsa parens.
Illius exemplo violes simulacra Minervae, Aulidis a portu qui leve vertit iter.
Naupliadaeve modo poenas pro crimine falso
Morte luas, nec te non meruisse iuuet. 620
Aethalon ut vita spoliavit Isindius hospes, Quem memor a sacris nunc quoque pellit Ion:
Utque Melanthea tenebris a caede latentem Prodidit officio luminis ipsa parens:
Sic tua coniectis fodiantur viscera telis, 625
Sic precor auxiliis impediare tuis.
Qualis equos pacto, quos fortis agebat Achilles, Acta Phrygi timido, nox tibi talis eat.
Nec tu quam Rhesus somno meliore quiescas,
Quam comites Rhesi tum necis, ante viae; 630
Quam quos cum Rutulo morti Ramnete dederunt Impiger Hyrtacides Hyrtacidaeque comes.
Cliniadaeve modo circumdatus ignibus atris Membra feras Stygiae semicremata neci.
Utque Remo muros auso transire recentes, 635
Noxia sint capiti rustica tela tuo.
Denique Sarmaticas inter Geticasque sagittas
His precor ut vivas et moriare locis.
Haec tibi tantisper subito sint missa libello, Inmemores ne nos esse querare tui. 640
Pauca quidem, fateor: sed di dent plura rogatis, Multiplicentque suo vota favore mea.
Postmodo plura leges et nomen habentia verum,
Et pede quo debent acria bella geri.

Parue — nec inuideo — sine me, liber, ibis in urbem:
ei mihi, quod domino non licet ire tuo!
uade, sed incultus, qualem decet exulis esse;
infelix habitum temporis huius habe.
nec te purpureo uelent uaccinia fuco — non est conueniens luctibus ille color — nec titulus minio, nec cedro charta notetur, candida nec nigra cornua fronte geras.
felices ornent haec instrumenta libellos:
fortunae memorem te decet esse meae.
nec fragili geminae poliantur pumice frontes, hirsutus sparsis ut uideare comis.
neue liturarum pudeat; qui uiderit illas,
de lacrimis factas sentiat esse meis.
uade, liber, uerbisque meis loca grata saluta:
contingam certe quo licet illa pede.
siquis, ut in populo, nostri non inmemor illi, siquis, qui, quid agam, forte requirat, erit:
uiuere me dices, saluum tamen esse negabis;
id quoque, quod uiuam, munus habere dei.
atque ita tu tacitus, (quaerenti plura legendum) ne, quae non opus est, forte loquare, caue!
protinus admonitus repetet mea crimina lector, et peragar populi publicus ore reus.
tu caue defendas, quamuis mordebere dictis:
causa patrocinio non bona maior erit.
inuenies aliquem, qui me suspiret ademptum, carmina nec siccis perlegat ista genis, et tacitus secum, ne quis malus audiat, optet, sit mea lenito Caesare poena leuis.
nos quoque, quisquis erit, ne sit miser ille, precamur, placatos miseris qui uolet esse deos;

quaeque uolet, rata sint, ablataque principis ira sedibus in patriis det mihi posse mori.
ut peragas mandata, liber, culpabere forsan ingeniique minor laude ferere mei.
iudicis officium est ut res, ita tempora rerum quaerere; quaesito tempore tutus eris.
carmina proueniunt animo deducta sereno:
nubila sunt subitis pectora nostra malis.
carmina secessum scribentis et otia quaerunt:
me mare, me uenti, me fera iactat hiems.
carminibus metus omnis obest: ego perditus ensem haesurum iugulo iam puto iamque meo.
haec quoque quod facio, iudex mirabitur aequus, scriptaque cum uenia qualiacumque leget.
da mihi Maeoniden et tot circumice casus, ingenium tantis excidet omne malis.
denique securus famae, liber, ire memento, nec tibi sit lecto displicuisse pudor.
non ita se praebet nobis Fortuna secundam, ut tibi sit ratio laudis habenda tuae.
donec eram sospes, tituli tangebar amore, quaerendique mihi nominis ardor erat;
carmina nunc si non studiumque, quod obfuit, odi, sit satis; ingenio sic fuga parta meo.
tu tamen i pro me, tu, cui licet, aspice Romam;
di facerent, possem nunc meus esse liber!
nec te, quod uenias magnam peregrinus in urbem, ignotum populo posse uenire puta.
ut titulo careas, ipso noscere colore;
dissimulare uelis, te liquet esse meum.
clam tamen intrato, ne te mea carmina laedant;
non sunt ut quondam plena fauoris erant.
siquis erit, qui te, quia sis meus, esse legendum non putet, e gremio reiciatque suo,
'inspice' dic 'titulum: non sum praeceptor amoris;

quas meruit, poenas iam dedit illud opus.
forsitan expectes, an in alta Palatia missum scandere te iubeam Caesareamque domum.
ignoscant augusta mihi loca dique locorum.
uenit in hoc illa fulmen ab arce caput.
esse quidem memini mitissima sedibus illis numina, sed timeo qui nocuere deos.
terretur minimo pennae stridore columba, unguibus, accipiter, saucia facta tuis.
nec procul a stabulis audet discedere, siqua excussa est auidi dentibus agna lupi.
uitaret caelum Phaethon, si uiueret, et quos optarat stulte, tangere nollet equos.
me quoque, quae sensi, fateor louis arma timere:
me reor infesto, cum tonat, igne peti.
quicumque Argolica de classe Capherea fugit, semper ab Euboicis uela retorquet aquis;
et mea cumba semel uasta percussa procella illum, quo laesa est, horret adire locum.
ergo caue, liber, et timida circumspice mente, ut satis a media sit tibi plebe legi.
dum petit infirmis nimium sublimia pennis Icarus, aequoreis nomina fecit aquis.
difficile est tamen hinc remis utaris an aura, dicere; consilium resque locusque dabunt.
si poteris uacuo tradi, si cuncta uidebis mitia, si uires fregerit ira suas; siquis erit, qui te dubitantem et adire timentem tradat, et ante tamen pauca loquatur, adi.
luce bona dominoque tuo felicior ipse peruenias illuc et mala nostra leues.
namque ea uel nemo, uel qui mihi uulnera fecit solus Achilleo tollere more potest. tantum ne noceas, dum uis prodesse, uideto — nam spes est animi nostra timore minor — quaeque quiescebat, ne mota resaeuiat ira et poenae tu sis altera causa, caue!

cum tamen in nostrum fueris penetrare receptus, contigerisque tuam, scrinia curua, domum, aspicies illic positos ex ordine fratres, quos studium cunctos euigilauit idem.
cetera turba palam titulos ostendet apertos, et sua detecta nomina fronte geret;
tres procul obscura latitantes parte uidebis:
hi quia, quod nemo nescit, amare docent;
hos tu uel fugias, uel, si satis oris habebis, Oedipodas facito Telegonosque uoces.
deque tribus, moneo, si qua est tibi cura parentis, ne quemquam, quamuis ipse docebit, ames.
sunt quoque mutatae, ter quinque uolumina, formae,
nuper ab exequiis carmina rapta meis.
his mando dicas, inter mutata referri fortunae uultum corpora posse meae, namque ea dissimilis subito est effecta priori, flendaque nunc, aliquo tempore laeta fuit.
plura quidem mandare tibi, si quaeris, habebam, sed uereor tardae causa fuisse uiae;
et si quae subeunt, tecum, liber, omnia ferres, sarcina laturo magna futurus eras.
longa uia est, propera! nobis habitabitur orbis ultimus, a terra terra remota mea.

II

Di maris et caeli — quid enim nisi uota supersunt? — soluere quassatae parcite membra ratis, neue, precor, magni subscribite Caesaris irae:
saepe premente deo fert deus alter opem.
Mulciber in Troiam, pro Troia stabat Apollo;
aequa Venus Teucris, Pallas iniqua fuit.
oderat Aenean propior Saturnia Turno;
ille tamen Veneris numine tutus erat.
saepe ferox cautum petiit Neptunus Vlixem; eripuit patruo saepe Minerua suo.
et nobis aliquod, quamuis distamus ab illis, quis uetat irato numen adesse deo?
uerba miser frustra non proficientia perdo.
ipsa graues spargunt ora loquentis aquae, terribilisque Notus iactat mea dicta, precesque
ad quos mittuntur, non sinit ire deos.
ergo idem uenti, ne causa laedar in una,
uelaque nescio quo uotaque nostra ferunt.
me miserum, quanti montes uoluuntur aquarum!
iam iam tacturos sidera summa putes.
quantae diducto subsidunt aequore ualles!
iam iam tacturas Tartara nigra putes.
quocumque aspicio, nihil est, nisi pontus et aer, fluctibus hic tumidus, nubibus ille minax.
inter utrumque fremunt inmani murmure uenti.
nescit, cui domino pareat, unda maris.
nam modo purpureo uires capit Eurus ab ortu, nunc Zephyrus sero uespere missus adest, nunc sicca gelidus Boreas bacchatur ab Arcto, nunc Notus aduersa proelia fronte gerit.
rector in incerto est nec quid fugiatue petatue inuenit: ambiguis ars stupet ipsa malis.

scilicet occidimus, nec spes est ulla salutis, dumque loquor, uultus obruit unda meos.
opprimet hanc animam fluctus, frustra que precanti ore necaturas accipiemus aquas.
at pia nil aliud quam me dolet exule coniunx:
hoc unum nostri scitque gemitque mali.
nescit in immenso iactari corpora ponto, nescit agi uentis, nescit adesse necem.
o bene, quod non sum mecum conscendere passus, ne mihi mors misero bis patienda foret!
at nunc ut peream, quoniam caret illa periclo, dimidia certe parte superstes ero.
ei mihi, quam celeri micuerunt nubila flamma!
quantus ab aethereo personat axe fragor!
nec leuius tabulae laterum feriuntur ab undis, quam graue ballistae moenia pulsat onus.
qui uenit hic fluctus, fluctus supereminet omnes:
posterior nono est undecimoque prior.
nec letum timeo; genus est miserabile leti;
demite naufragium, mors mihi munus erit.
est aliquid, fatuae suo ferroue cadentem in solida moriens ponere corpus humo, et mandare suis aliqua et sperare sepulcrum et non aequoreis piscibus esse cibum.
fingite me dignum tali nece, non ego solus hic uehor. inmeritos cur mea poena trahit?
pro superi uiridesque dei, quibus aequora curae, utraque iam uestras sistite turba minas;
quamque dedit uitam mitissima Caesaris ira,
hanc sinite infelix in loca iussa feram.
si quoque, quam merui poena me pendere uultis, culpa mea est ipso iudice morte minor.
mittere me Stygias si iam uoluisset in undas Caesar, in hoc uestra non eguisset ope.
est illi nostri non inuidiosa cruoris copia; quodque dedit, cum uolet, ipse feret.

uos modo, quos certe nullo, puto, crimine laesi, contenti nostris iam, precor, este malis.
nec tamen, ut cuncti miserum seruare uelitis, quod periit, saluum iam caput esse potest.
ut mare considat uentisque ferentibus utar, ut mihi parcatis, non minus exul ero.
non ego diuitias auidus sine fine parandi latum mutandis mercibus aequor aro, nec peto, quas quondam petii studiosus, Athenas, oppida non Asiae, non loca uisa prius;
non ut Alexandri claram delatus in urbem delicias uideam, Nile iocose, tuas.
quod faciles opto uentos (quis credere possit?)
Sarmatis est tellus, quam mea uela petunt.
obligor, ut tangam Laeui fera litora Ponti;
quodque sit a patria tam fuga tarda, queror.
nescioquo uideam positos ut in orbe Tomitas, exilem facio per mea uota uiam.
seu me diligitis, tantos conpescite fluctus, pronaque sint nostrae numina uestra rati;
seu magis odistis, iussae me aduertite terrae:
supplicii pars est in regione mei.
ferte — quid hic facio? — rapidi mea carbasa uenti!
Ausonios fines cur mea uela uolunt?
noluit hoc Caesar: quid, quem fugat ille, tenetis?
aspiciat uultus Pontica terra meos.
et iubet et merui; nec, quae damnauerit ille, crimina defendi fasque piumque puto.
si tamen acta deos numquam mortalia fallunt,
a culpa facinus scitis abesse mea.
immo ita, si scitis, si me meus abstulit error, stultaque mens nobis non scelerata fuit, quod licet et minimis, domui si fauimus illi, si satis Augusti publica iussa mihi, hoc duce si dixi felicia saecula, proque

Caesare tura pius Caesaribusque dedi, — si fuit hic animus nobis, ita parcite diui!
si minus, alta cadens obruat unda caput!
fallor, an incipiunt grauidae uanescere nubes, uictaque mutati frangitur ira maris?
non casu, uos sed sub condicione uocati, fallere quos non est, hanc mihi fertis opem.

III

Cum subit illius tristissima noctis imago, quae mihi supremum tempus in urbe fuit, cum repeto noctem, qua tot mihi cara reliqui, labitur ex oculis nunc quoque gutta meis.
iam prope lux aderat, qua me discedere Caesar finibus extremae iusserat Ausoniae.
nec spatium nec mens fuerat satis apta parandi:
    torpuerant longa pectora nostra mora.
non mihi seruorum, comitis non cura legendi,
    non aptae profugo uestis opisue fuit.
non aliter stupui, quam qui louis ignibus ictus uiuuit et est uitae nescius ipse suae.
ut tamen hanc animi nubem dolor ipse remouit, et tandem sensus conualuere mei, alloquor extremum maestos abiturus amicos, qui modo de multis unus et alter erat.
uxor amans flentem flens acrius ipsa tenebat, imbrem per indignas usque cadente genas.
nata procul Libycis aberat diuersa sub oris, nec poterat fati certior esse mei.
quocumque aspiceres, luctus gemitusque sonabant, formaque non taciti funeris intus erat.
femina uirque meo, pueri quoque funere maerent, inque domo lacrimas angulus omnis habet.
si licet exemplis in paruis grandibus uti,
    haec facies Troiae, cum caperetur, erat.
iamque quiescebant uoces hominumque canumque Lunaque nocturnos alta regebat equos.
hanc ego suspiciens et ad hanc Capitolia cernens, quae nostro frustra iuncta fuere Lari,
'numina uicinis habitantia sedibus,' inquam,

'iamque oculis numquam templa uidenda meis, dique relinquendi, quos urbs habet alta Quirini, este salutati tempus in omne mihi.
et quamquam sero clipeum post uulnera sumo, attamen hanc odiis exonerate fugam, caelestique uiro, quis me deceperit error, dicite, pro culpa ne scelus esse putet.
ut quod uos scitis, poenae quoque sentiat auctor:
placato possum non miser esse deo.'
hac prece adorauit superos ego, pluribus uxor, singultu medios impediens sonos.
illa etiam ante Lares passis adstrata capillis contigit extinctos ore tremente focos, multaque in auersos effudit uerba Penates pro deplorato non ualitura uiro.
iamque morae spatium nox praecipitata negabat, uersaque ab axe suo Parrhasis Arctos erat.
quid facerem? blando patriae retinebar amore, ultima sed iussae nox erat illa fugae.
a! quotiens aliquo dixi properante 'quid urges?
uel quo festinas ire, uel unde, uide.'
a! quotiens certam me sum mentitus habere horam, propositae quae foret apta uiae.
ter limen tetigi, ter sum reuocatus, et ipse indulgens animo pes mihi tardus erat.
saepe 'uale' dicto rursus sum multa locutus, et quasi discedens oscula summa dedi.
saepe eadem mandata dedi meque ipse fefelli, respiciens oculis pignora cara meis.
denique 'quid propero? Scythia est, quo mittimur', inquam,
'Roma relinquenda est, utraque iusta mora.
uxor in aeternum uiuo mihi uiua negatur, et domus et fidae dulcia membra domus, quosque ego dilexi fraterno more sodales,
o mihi Thesea pectora iuncta fide!
dum licet, amplectar: numquam fortasse licebit amplius; in lucro est quae datur hora mihi.

nec mora sermonis uerba imperfecta relinquo, complectens animo proxima quaeque meo.
dum loquor et flemus, caelo nitidissimus alto, stella grauis nobis, Lucifer ortus erat.
diuidor haud aliter, quam si mea membra relinquam, et pars abrumpi corpore uisa suo est.
sic doluit Mettus tum cum in contraria uersos ultores habuit proditionis equos.
tum uero exoritur clamor gemitusque meorum, et feriunt maestae pectora nuda manus.
tum uero coniunx umeris abeuntis inhaerens miscuit haec lacrimis tristia uerba suis:
'non potes auelli: simul ah! simul ibimus', inquit,
    'te sequar et coniunx exulis exul ero.
et mihi facta uia est, et me capit ultima tellus:
    accedam profugae sarcina parua rati.
te iubet e patria discedere Caesaris ira, me pietas: pietas haec mihi Caesar erit.'
taliam temptabat, sicut temptauerat ante, uixque dedit uictas utilitate manus.
egredior (siue illud erat sine funere ferri?)
    squalidus inmissis hirta per ora comis.
illa dolore amens tenebris narratur obortis semianimis media procubuisse domo, utque resurrexit foedatis puluere turpi crinibus et gelida membra leuauit humo, se modo, desertos modo complorasse Penates, nomen et erepti saepe uocasse uiri, nec gemuisse minus, quam si nataeque meumque uidisset structos corpus habere rogos, et uoluisse mali moriendo ponere sensum, respectuque tamen non potuisse mei.
uiuat et absentem, quoniam sic fata tulerunt, uiuat ut auxilio subleuet usque suo.

IV

Tingitur oceano custos Erymanthidos ursae, aequoreasque suo sidere turbat aquas.
nos tamen Ionium non nostra findimus aequor sponte, sed audaces cogimur esse metu.
me miserum! quantis increscunt aequora uentis,
erutaque ex imis feruet harena fretis!
monte nec inferior prorae puppique recuruae insilit et pictos uerberat unda deos.
pineae texta sonant pulsu, stridore rudentes, ingemit et nostris ipsa carina malis.
nauita confessus gelidum pallore timorem,
iam sequitur uictus, non regit arte ratem. utque parum ualidus non proficientia rector ceruicis rigidae frena remittit equo, sic non quo uoluit, sed quo rapit impetus undae, aurigam uideo uela dedisse rati.
quod nisi mutatas emiserit Aeolus auras, in loca iam nobis non adeunda ferar.
nam procul Illyriis laeua de parte relictis interdicta mihi cernitur Italia.
desinat in uetitas quaeso contendere terras, et mecum magno pareat aura deo.
dum loquor et timeo pariter cupioque repelli, increpuit quantis uiribus unda latus!
parcite caerulei uos parcite numina ponti, infestumque mihi sit satis esse louem.
uos animam saeuae fessam subducite morti, si modo, qui periit, non periisse potest.

V

O mihi post nullos umquam memorande sodales, et cui praecipue sors mea uisa sua est;
attonitum qui me, memini, carissime, primus ausus es alloquio sustinuisse tuo, qui mihi consilium uiuendi mite dedisti, cum foret in misero pectore mortis amor.
scis bene, cui dicam, positis pro nomine signis,
officium nec te fallit, amice, tuum.
haec mihi semper erunt imis infixae medullis, perpetuusque animae debitor huius ero:
spiritus in uacuas prius hic tenuandus in auras ibit, et in tepido deseret ossa rogo, quam subeant animo meritorum obliuia nostro, et longa pietas excidat ista die.
di tibi sint faciles, et opis nullius egentem fortunam praestent dissimilemque meae.
si tamen haec nauis uento ferretur amico, ignoraretur forsitan ista fides.
Thesea Pirithous non tam sensisset amicum, si non infernas uiuus adisset aquas.
ut foret exemplum ueri Phoceus amoris, fecerunt furiae, tristis Oresta, tuae.
si non Euryalus Rutulos cecidisset in hostes, Hyrtacidae Nisi gloria nulla foret.
scilicet ut flauum spectatur in ignibus aurum, tempore sic duro est inspicienda fides.
dum iuuat et uultu ridet Fortuna sereno, indelibatatas cuncta sequuntur opes:
at simul intonuit, fugiunt, nec noscitur ulli, agminibus comitum qui modo cinctus erat.
atque haec, exemplis quondam collecta priorum,

nunc mihi sunt propriis cognita uera malis.
uix duo tresue mihi de tot superestis amici:
cetera Fortunae, non mea turba fuit.
quo magis, o pauci, rebus succurrite laesis, et date naufragio litora tuta meo, neue metu falso nimium trepidate, timentes hac offendatur ne pietate deus.
saepe fidem aduersis etiam laudauit in armis, inque suis amat hanc Caesar, in hoste probat.
causa mea est melior, qui non contraria foui arma, sed hanc merui simplicitate fugam.
inuigiles igitur nostris pro casibus, oro, deminui siqua numinis ira potest.
scire meos casus siquis desiderat omnes, plus, quam quod fieri res sinit, ille petit.
tot mala sum passus, quot in aethere sidera lucent paruaque quot siccus corpora puluis habet; multaque credibili tulimus maiora ratamque, quamuis acciderint, non habitura fidem.
pars etiam quaedam mecum moriatur oportet, meque uelim possit dissimulante tegi.
si uox infragilis, pectus mihi firmitus aere, pluraque cum linguis pluribus ora forent,
non tamen idcirco complecterer omnia uerbis, materia uires exsuperante meas.
pro duce Neritio docti mala nostra poetae scribite: Neritio nam mala plura tuli.
ille breui spatio multis errauit in annis inter Dulichias Iliacasque domos:
nos freta sideribus totis distantia mensos sors tulit in Geticos Sarmaticosque sinus.
ille habuit fidamque manum sociosque fideles:
me profugum comites deseruere mei.
ille suam laetus patriam uictorque petebat:
a patria fugi uictus et exul ego.
nec mihi Dulichium domus est Ithaceue Samosue, poena quibus non est grandis abesse locis, sed quae de septem totum circumspicit orbem montibus, imperii Roma deumque locus.

illi corpus erat durum patiensque laborum:
inualidae uires ingenuaeque mihi.
ille erat assidue saeuus agitatus in armis:
adsuetus studiis mollibus ipse fui.
me deus oppressit, nullo mala nostra leuante:
bellatrix illi diua ferebat opem.
cumque minor loue sit tumidis qui regnat in undis, illum Neptuni, me louis ira premit.
adde, quod illius pars maxima ficta laborum, ponitur in nostris fabula nulla malis.
denique quaesitos tetigit tamen ille Penates, quaeque diu petiit, contigit arua tamen:
at mihi perpetuo patria tellure carendum est, ni fuerit laesi mollior ira dei.

VI

Nec tantum Clario est Lyde dilecta poetae, nec tantum Coe Bittis amata suo est, pectoribus quantum tu nostris, uxor, inhaeres, digna minus misero, non meliore uiro.
te mea supposita ueluti trabe fulta ruina est:
siquid adhuc ego sum, muneris omne tui est.
tu facis, ut spolium non sim, nec nuder ab illis, naufragii tabulas qui petiere mei.
utque rapax stimulante fame cupidusque cruoris incustoditum captat ouile lupus, aut ut edax uultur corpus circumspicit ecquod sub nulla positum cernere possit humo, sic mea nescioquis, rebus male fidus acerbis in bona uenturus, si paterere, fuit.
hunc tua per fortis uirtus summouit amicos, nulla quibus reddi gratia digna potest.
ergo quam misero, tam uero teste probaris, hic aliquod pondus si modo testis habet.
nec probitate tua prior est aut Hectoris uxor,
aut comes extincto Laodamia uiro.
tu si Maeonium uatem sortita fuisses, Penelopes esset fama secunda tuae:
siue tibi hoc debes, nullo pia facta magistro, cumque noua mores sunt tibi luce dati, femina seu princeps omnes tibi culta per annos te docet exemplum coniugis esse bonae, adsimilemque sui longa adsuetudine fecit, grandia si paruis adsimilare licet.
ei mihi, non magnas quod habent mea carmina uires, nostraque sunt meritis ora minora tuis, siquid et in nobis uiui fuit ante uigoris,

extinctum longis occidit omne malis!
prima locum sanctas heroidas inter haberes, prima bonis animi conspicerere tui.
quantumcumque tamen praeconia nostra ualebunt, carminibus uiues tempus in omne meis.

VII

Si quis habes nostri similes in imagine uultus, deme meis hederas, Bacchicaserta, comis.
ista decent laetos felicia signa poetas:
temporibus non est apta corona meis.
hoc tibi dissimula, senti tamen, optime, dici,
in digito qui me fersque refersque tuo, effigiemque meam fuluo complexus in auro cara relegati, quae potes, ora uides.
quae quotiens spectas, subeat tibi dicere forsan
'quam procul a nobis Naso sodalis abest!'
grata tua est pietas, sed carmina maior imago sunt mea, quae mando qualiacumque legas, carmina mutatas hominum dicentia formas, infelix domini quod fuga rupit opus.
haec ego discedens, sicut bene multa meorum, ipse mea posui maestus in igne manu.
utque cremasse suum fertur sub stipite natum Thestias et melior matre fuisse soror, sic ego non meritos mecum peritura libellos imposui rapidis uiscera nostra rogis:
uel quod eram Musas, ut crimina nostra, perosus,
uel quod adhuc crescens et rude carmen erat.
quae quoniam non sunt penitus sublata, sed extant (pluribus exemplis scripta fuisse reor), nunc precor ut uiuant et non ignaua legentem otia delectent admoneantque mei.
nec tamen illa legi poterunt patienter ab ullo, nesciet his summam siquis abesse manum.
ablatum mediis opus est incudibus illud, defuit et coeptis ultima lima meis.
et ueniam pro laude peto, laudatus abunde,

non fastiditus si tibi, lector, ero.
hos quoque sex uersus, in prima fronte libelli si praeponendos esse putabis, habe:
'orba parente suo quicumque uolumina tangis,
his saltem uestra detur in urbe locus.
quoque magis faueas, non haec sunt edita ab ipso, sed quasi de domini funere rapta sui.
quicquid in his igitur uitii rude carmen habebit, emendaturus, si licuisset, eram.'

VIII

In caput alta suum labentur ab aequore retro flumina, conuersis Solque recurret equis:
terra feret stellas, caelum findetur aratro, unda dabit flammam, et dabit ignis aquas, omnia naturae praepostera legibus ibunt, parsque suum mundi nulla tenebit iter, omnia iam fient, fieri quae posse negabam, et nihil est, de quo non sit habenda fides.
haec ego uaticinor, quia sum deceptus ab illo, laturum misero quem mihi rebar opem.
tantane te, fallax, cepere obliuia nostri, adflictumque fuit tantus adire timor, ut neque respiceres nec solarere iacentem, dure, neque exequias prosequerere meas?
illud amicitiae sanctum et uenerabile nomen re tibi pro uili sub pedibusque iacet?
quid fuit, ingenti prostratum mole sodalem uisere et alloquio parte leuare tuo, inque meos si non lacrimam demittere casus, pauca tamen ficto uerba dolore pati, idque, quod ignoti faciunt uel dicere saltem, et uocem populi publicaque ora sequi?
denique lugubres uultus numquamque uidendos cernere supremo dum licuitque die, dicendumque semel toto non amplius aeuo accipere et parili reddere uoce 'uale'?
at fecere alii nullo mihi foedere iuncti, et lacrimas animi signa dedere sui.
quid, nisi conuictu causisque ualentibus essem temporis et longi uinctus amore tibi?
quid, nisi tot lusus et tot mea seria nesses,

tot nossem lusus seriaque ipse tua?
quid, si dumtaxat Romae mihi cognitus esses, adscitus totiens in genus omne loci?
cunctane in aequoreos abierunt irrita uentos?
cunctane Lethaeis mersa feruntur aquis?
non ego te genitum placida reor urbe Quirini, urbe, meo quae iam non adeunda pede est, sed scopulis, Ponti quos haec habet ora sinistri, inque feris Scythiae Sarmaticisque iugis:
et tua sunt silicis circum praecordia uenae, et rigidum ferri semina pectus habet, quaeque tibi quondam tenero ducenda palato plena dedit nutrix ubera, tigris erat:
aut mala nostra minus quam nunc aliena putares, duritiaeque mihi non agerere reus.
sed quoniam accedit fatalibus hoc quoque damnis, ut careant numeris tempora prima suis, effice, peccati ne sim memor huius, et illo officium laudem, quo queror, ore tuum.

IX

Detur inoffenso uitae tibi tangere metam, qui legis hoc nobis non inimicus opus.
atque utinam pro te possint mea uota ualere, quae pro me duros non tetigere deos!
donec eris sospes, multos numerabis amicos:
tempora si fuerint nubila, solus eris.
aspicis, ut ueniant ad candida tecta columbae, accipiat nullas sordida turris aues.
horrea formicae tendunt ad inania numquam:
nullus ad amissas ibit amicus opes.
utque comes radios per solis euntibus umbra est,
cum latet hic pressus nubibus, illa fugit, mobile sic sequitur Fortunae lumina uulgus:
quae simul inducta nocte teguntur, abit.
haec precor ut semper possint tibi falsa uideri:
sunt tamen euentu uera fatenda meo.
dum stetimus, turbae quantum satis esset, habebat nota quidem, sed non ambitiosa domus.
at simul impulsata est, omnes timuere ruinam, cautaque communi terga dedere fugae.
saeua neque admiror metuunt si fulmina, quorum ignibus adflari proxima quaeque solent.
sed tamen in duris remanentem rebus amicum quamlibet inuiso Caesar in hoste probat, nec solet irasci — neque enim moderatior alter — cum quis in aduersis, siquid amauit, amat.
de comite Argolici postquam cognouit Orestae, narratur Pyladen ipse probasse Thoas.
quae fuit Actoridae cum magno semper Achille, laudari solita est Hectoris ore fides.
quod pius ad Manes Theseus comes iret amico,

Tartareum dicunt indoluisse deum.
Euryali Nisique fide tibi, Turne, relata credibile est lacrimis inmaduisse genas.
est etiam in miseris pietas, et in hoste probatur.
ei mihi, quam paucos haec mea dicta mouent!
is status, haec rerum nunc est fortuna mearum, debeat ut lacrimis nullus adesse modus;
at mea sunt, proprio quamuis maestissima casu,
pectora processu facta serena tuo.
hoc ego uenturum iam tum, carissime, uidi, ferret adhuc istam cum minor aura ratem.
siue aliquod morum seu uitae labe carentis est pretium, nemo pluris emendus erat:
siue per ingenuas aliquis caput extulit artes, quaelibet eloquio fit bona causa tuo.
his ego commotus dixi tibi protinus ipsi
'scaena manet dotes grandis, amice, tuas.'
haec mihi non ouium fibrae tonitrusue sinistri, linguae seruatae pennaue dixit auis:
augurium ratio est et coniectura futuri:
hac diuinaui notitiamque tuli.
quae quoniam uera est, tota tibi mente mihique gratulor, ingenium non latuisse tuum.
at nostrum tenebris utinam latuisset in imis!
expediit studio lumen abesse meo.
utque tibi prosunt artes, facunde, seuerae, dissimiles illis sic nocuere mihi.
uita tamen tibi nota mea est; scis artibus illis auctoris mores abstinuisse sui;
scis uetus hoc iuueni lusum mihi carmen, et istos, ut non laudandos, sic tamen esse iocos.
ergo ut defendi nullo mea posse colore, sic excusari crimina posse puto.
qua potes, excusa, nec amici desere causam:
qua bene coepisti, sic bene semper eas.

X

Est mihi sitque, precor, flauae tutela Mineruae, nauis et a picta casside nomen habet.
siue opus est uelis, minimam bene currit ad auram siue opus est remo, remige carpit iter.
nec comites uolucris contenta est uincere cursu, occupat egressas quamlibet ante rates, et pariter fluctus ferit atque silentia longe aequora, nec saeuus uicta madescit aquis.
illa, Corinthiacis primum mihi cognita Cenchreis, fida manet trepidae duxque comesque fugae, perque tot euentus et iniquis concita uentis aequora Palladio numine tuta fuit.
nunc quoque tuta, precor, uasti secet ostia Ponti, quasque petit, Getici litoris intret aquas.
quae simul Aeoliae mare me deduxit in Helles, et longum tenui limite fecit iter, fleximus in laeuum cursus, et ab Hectoris urbe uenimus ad portus, Imbria terra, tuos.
inde, leui uento Zerynthia litora nacta, Threiciam tetigit fessa carina Samon.
saltus ab hac contra breuis est Tempyra petenti:
    hac dominum tenus est illa secuta suum.
nam mihi Bistonios placuit pede carpere campos:
    Hellespontiacas illa relegit aquas, Dardaniamque petit, auctoris nomen habentem, et te ruricola, Lampsace, tuta deo, quodque per angustas uectae male uirginis undas Seston Abydena separat urbe fretum, inque Propontiatis haerentem Cyzicon oris, Cyzicon, Haemoniae nobile gentis opus, quaeque tenent Ponti Byzantia litora fauces:

hic locus est gemini ianua uasta maris.
haec, precor, euincat, propulsaque fortibus Austris transeat instabilis strenua Cyaneas Thyniacosque sinus, et ab his per Apollinis urbem arta sub Anchiali moenia tendat iter.
inde Mesembriacos portus et Odeson et arces praetereat dictas nomine, Bacche, tuo, et quos Alcathoi memorant e moenibus ortos sedibus his profugos constituisse Larem.
a quibus adueniat Miletida sospes ad urbem, offensi quo me detulit ira dei.
haec si contigerint, merita cadet agna Mineruae:
non facit ad nostras hostia maior opes.
uos quoque, Tyndaridae, quos haec colit insula, fratres, mite, precor, duplici numen adesse uiae!
altera namque parat Symplegadas ire per artas, scindere Bistonias altera puppis aquas.
uos facite ut uentos, loca cum diuersa petamus, illa suos habeat, nec minus illa suos.

XI

Littera quaecumque est toto tibi lecta libello, est mihi sollicito tempore facta uiae.
aut haec me, gelido tremorem cum mense Decembri, scribentem mediis Hadria uidit aquis;
aut, postquam bimarem cursu superauius Isthmon, alteraque est nostrae sumpta carina fugae, quod facerem uersus inter fera murmura ponti, Cycladas Aegaeas obstipuisse puto.
ipse ego nunc miror tantis animique marisque fluctibus ingenium non cecidisse meum.
seu stupor huic studio siue est insania nomen, omnis ab hac cura cura leuata mea est.
saepe ego nimborum dubius iactabar ab Haedis, saepe minax Steropes sidere pontus erat, fuscabatque diem custos Atlantidos Vrsae, aut Hyadas seris hauserat Auster aquis, saepe maris pars intus erat; tamen ipse trementi carmina ducebam qualiacumque manu.
nunc quoque contenti stridunt Aquilone rudentes, inque modum cumuli concaua surgit aqua.
ipse gubernator tollens ad sidera palmas exposcit uotis, inmemor artis, opem.
quocumque aspexi, nihil est nisi mortis imago, quam dubia timeo mente timensque precor.
attigero portum, portu terrebor ab ipso:
plus habet infesta terra timoris aqua;
nam simul insidiis hominum pelagique laboro, et faciunt geminos ensis et unda metus.
ille meo uereor ne speret sanguine praedam,
haec titulum nostrae mortis habere uelit.
barbara pars laeua est auidaeque adsueta rapinae,

quam cruor et caedes bellaque semper habent,
cumque sit hibernis agitatam fluctibus aequor, pectora sunt ipso turbidiora mari.
quo magis his debes ignoscere, candide lector, si spe sunt, ut sunt, inferiora tua.
non haec in nostris, ut quondam, scripsimus hortis, nec, consuete, meum, lectule, corpus habes.
iactor in indomito brumali luce profundo ipsaque caeruleis charta feritur aquis.
improba pugnat hiems indignaturque quod ausim scribere se rigidas incutiente minas.
uincat hiems hominem! sed eodem tempore, quaeso, ipse modum statuam carminis, illa sui.

LIBER SECUNDUS

I

Quid mihi uobiscum est, infelix cura, libelli, ingenio perii qui miser ipse meo?
Cur modo damnatas repeto, mea crimina, Musas?
    An semel est poenam commeruisse parum?
Carmina fecerunt, ut me cognoscere uellet omine non fausto femina uirque meo:
carmina fecerunt, ut me moresque notaret iam demi iussa Caesar ab Arte meos.
Deme mihi studium, uitae quoque crimina demes;
    acceptum refero uersibus esse nocens.
Hoc pretium curae uigilatorumque laborum cepimus: ingenio est poena reperta meo.
Si saperem, doctas odissem iure sorores, numina cultori perniciosa suo.
At nunc (tanta meo conies est insania morbo) saxa malum refero rursus ad ista pedem:
scilicet ut uictus repetit gladiator harenam, et redit in tumidas naufraga puppis aquas.
Forsitan ut quondam Teuthrantia regna tenenti, sic mihi res eadem uulnus opemque feret, Musaque, quam mouit, motam quoque leniet iram:
    exorant magnos carmina saepe deos.
Ipse quoque Ausonias Caesar matresque nurusque carmina turrigerae dicere iussit Opi:
iusserat et Phoebos dici, quo tempore ludos fecit, quos aetas aspicit una semel.
His precor exemplis tua nunc, mitissime Caesar, fiat ab ingenio mollior ira meo.
Illa quidem iusta est, nec me meruisse negabo:
    non adeo nostro fugit ab ore pudor.
Sed nisi peccassem, quid tu concedere posses?

Materiam ueniae sors tibi nostra dedit.
Si, quotiens peccant homines, sua fulmina mittat Iuppiter, exiguo tempore inermis erit;
nunc ubi detonuit strepituque exterruit orbem,
purum discussis aera reddit aquis.
Iure igitur genitorque deum rectorque uocatur, iure capax mundus nil loue maius habet.
Tu quoque, cum patriae rector dicare paterque, utere more dei nomen habentis idem.
Idque facis, nec te quisquam moderatius umquam inperii potuit frena tenere sui.
Tu ueniam parti superatae saepe dedisti,
non concessurus quam tibi uictor erat.
Diuitiis etiam multos et honoribus auctos uidi, qui tulerant in caput arma tuum;
quaeque dies bellum, belli tibi sustulit iram, parsque simul templis utraque dona tulit;
utque tuus gaudet miles, quod uicerit hostem,
sic uictum cur se gaudeat, hostis habet.
Causa mea est melior, qui nec contraria dicor arma nec hostiles esse secutus opes.
Per mare, per terras, per tertia numina iuro, per te praesentem conspicuumque deum, hunc animum fauisse tibi, uir maxime, meque, qua sola potui, mente fuisse tuum.
Optauit, peteres caelestia sidera tarde, parsque fui turbae parua precantis idem, et pia tura dedi pro te, cumque omnibus unus ipse quoque adiui publica uota meis.
Quid referam libros, illos quoque, crimina nostra, mille locis plenos nominis esse tui?
Inspice maius opus, quod adhuc sine fine tenetur,
in non credendos corpora uersa modos:
inuenies uestri praeconia nominis illic, inuenies animi pignora multa mei.
Non tua carminibus maior fit gloria, nec quo,

ut maior fiat, crescere possit, habet.
Fama loui superest: tamen hunc sua facta referri et se materiam carminis esse iuuat, cumque Gigantei memorantur proelia belli, credibile est laetum laudibus esse suis.
Te celebrant alii, quanto decet ore, tuasque ingenio laudes uberiore canunt:
sed tamen, ut fuso taurorum sanguine centum, sic capitur minimo turis honore deus.
A, ferus et nobis crudelior omnibus hostis, delicias legit qui tibi cumque meas, carmina ne nostris quae te uenerantia libris iudicio possint candidiore legi.
Esse sed irato quis te mihi posset amicus?
Vix tunc ipse mihi non inimicus eram.
Cum coepit quassata domus subsidere, partes in proclinatas omne recumbit onus, cunctaque fortuna rimam faciente dehiscunt, ipsa suoque eadem pondere tracta ruunt.
Ergo hominum quaesitum odium mihi carmine, quosque debut, est uultus turba secuta tuos.
At, memini, uitamque meam moresque probabas illo, quem dederas, praetereuntis equo:
quod si non prodest et honesti gloria nulla redditur, at nullum crimen adeptus eram.
Nec male commissa est nobis fortuna reorum lisque decem deciens inspicienda uiris.
Res quoque priuatas statui sine crimine iudex, deque mea fassa est pars quoque uicta fide.
Me miserum! Potui, si non extrema nocerent, iudicio tutus non semel esse tuo.
ultima me perdunt, imoque sub aequore mergit incolumem totiens una procella ratem.
Nec mihi pars nocuit de gurgite parua, sed omnes pressere hoc fluctus oceanusque caput.
Cur aliquid uidi? Cur noxia lumina feci?

Cur imprudenti cognita culpa mihi?
Inscius Actaeon uidit sine ueste Dianam:
    praeda fuit canibus non minus ille suis.
Scilicet in superis etiam fortuna luenda est,
    nec ueniam laeso numine casus habet.
Illa nostra die, qua me malus abstulit error, parua quidem periit, sed sine labe domus:
sic quoque parua tamen, patrio dicatur ut aeuo clara nec ullius nobilitate minor, et neque diuitiis nec paupertate notanda, unde sit in neutrum conspiciendus eques.
Sit quoque nostra domus uel censu parua uel ortu, ingenio certe non latet illa meo:
quo uidear quamuis nimium iuuenaliter usus, grande tamen toto nomen ab orbe fero;
turbaque doctorum Nasonem nouit, et audet non fastiditis adnumerare uiris.
Corruit haec igitur Misis accepta, sub uno sed non exiguo crimine lapsa domus:
atque ea sic lapsa est, ut surgere, si modo laesi ematuruerit Caesaris ira, queat.
Cuius in euentu poenae clementia tanta est, uenerit ut nostro lenior illa metu.
Vita data est, citraque necem tua constitit ira,
    o princeps parce uiribus use tuis!
Insuper accedunt, te non adimente, paternae, tamquam uita parum muneris esset, opes.
Nec mea decreto damnasti facta senatus, nec mea selecto iudice iussa fuga est.
Tristibus inuectus uerbis (ita principe dignum)
    ultus es offensas, ut decet, ipse tuas.
Adde quod edictum, quamuis immite minaxque, attamen in poenae nomine lene fuit:
quippe relegatus, non exul, dicor in illo, priuaque fortunae sunt ibi uerba meae.
Nulla quidem sano grauior mentisque potenti poena est, quam tanto displicuisse uiro:

sed solet interdum fieri placabile numen:
nube solet pulsa candidus ire dies.
Vidi ego pampineis oneratam uitibus ulmum, quae fuerat saeui fulmine tacta louis.
Ipse licet sperare uetes, sperabimus usque;
hoc unum fieri te prohibente potest.
Spes mihi magna subit, cum te, mitissime princeps, spes mihi, respicio cum mea facta, cadit.
Ac ueluti uentis agitantibus aera non est aequalis rabies continuusque furor, sed modo subsidunt intermissique silescent, uimque putes illos deposuisse suam:
sic abeunt redeuntque mei uariantque timores, et spem placandi dantque negantque tui.
Per superos igitur, qui dant tibi longa dabuntque tempora, Romanum si modo nomen amant; per patriam, quae te tuta et segura parente est,
cuius, ut in populo, pars ego nuper eram;
sic tibi, quem semper factis animoque mereris, reddatur gratae debitus urbis amor; Liuiam sic tecum sociales compleat annos, quae, nisi te, nullo coniuge digna fuit, quae si non esset, caelebs te uita deceret, nullaque, cui posses esse maritus, erat;
sospite sit tecum natus quoque sospes, et olim inperium regat hoc cum seniore senex;
ut faciuntque tui, sidus iuuenale, nepotes, per tua perque sui facta parentis, eant;
sic adsueta tuis semper Victoria castris nunc quoque se praestet notaque signa petat, Ausoniumque ducem solitis circumuolet alis, ponat et in nitida laureaserta coma, per quem bella geris, cuius nunc corpore pugnas, auspiciam cui das grande deosque tuos, dimidioque tui praesens es et aspicias urbem, dimidio procul es saeuaque bella geris;

hic tibi sic redeat superato uictor ab hoste, inque coronatis fulgeat altus equis:
parce, precor, fulmenque tuum, fera tela, reconde, heu nimium misero cognita tela mihi!
Parce, pater patriae, nec nominis inmemor huius olim placandi spem mihi tolle tui.
Non precor ut redeam, quamuis maiora petitis credibile est magnos saepe dedisse deos:
mitius exilium si das propiusque roganti, pars erit ex poena magna leuata mea.
ultima perpetior medios eiectus in hostes, nec quisquam patria longius exul abest.
Solus ad egressus missus septemplicis Histri Parrhasiae gelido uirginis axe premor.
Iazyges et Colchi Tereteaque turba Getaeque Danuuii mediis uix prohibentur aquis;
cumque alii causa tibi sint grauiore fugati, ulterior nulli, quam mihi, terra data est.
Longius hac nihil est, nisi tantum frigus et hostes, et maris adstricto quae coit unda gelu.
Hactenus Euxini pars est Romana Sinistri: proxima Bastarnae Sauromataeque tenent.
Haec est Ausonio sub iure nouissima, uixque haeret in inperii margine terra tui.
unde precor supplex ut nos in tuta releges, ne sit cum patria pax quoque adempta mihi, ne timeam gentes, quas non bene summouet Hister, neue tuus possim ciuis ab hoste capi.
Fas prohibet Latio quemquam de sanguine natum Caesaribus saluis barbara uincla pati.
Perdiderint cum me duo crimina, carmen et error, alterius facti culpa silenda mihi:
nam non sum tanti, renouem ut tua uulnera, Caesar,
quem nimio plus est indoluisse semel.
Altera pars superest, qua turpi carmine factus arguor obsceni doctor adulterii.

Fas ergo est aliqua caelestia pectora falli, et sunt notitia multa minora tua;
utque deos caelumque simul sublime tuenti non uacat exiguis rebus adesse Ioui, de te pendentem sic dum circumspicis orbem, effugiunt curas inferiora tuas.
Scilicet inperii princeps statione relictā inparibus legeres carmina facta modis?
Non ea te moles Romani nominis urget, inque tuis umeris tam leue fertur onus, Iusibus ut possis aduertere numen ineptis, excutiasque oculis otia nostra tuis.
Nunc tibi Pannonia est, nunc Illyris ora domanda, Raetica nunc praebent Thraciaque arma metum, nunc petit Armenius pacem, nunc porrigit arcus Parthus eques timida captaque signa manu, nunc te prole tua iuuenem Germania sentit, bellaque pro magno Caesare Caesar obit.
Denique, ut in tanto, quantum non extitit umquam, corpore pars nulla est, quae labet, inperii, urbs quoque te et legum lassat tutela tuarum et morum, similes quos cupis esse tuis.
Non tibi contingunt, quae gentibus otia praestas, bellaque cum multis inrequieta geris.
Mirer in hoc igitur tantarum pondere rerum te numquam nostros euoluisse iocos?
At si, quod mallet, uacuum tibi forte fuisset, nullum legisses crimen in Arte mea.
Illa quidem fateor frontis non esse seuerae scripta, nec a tanto principe digna legi:
non tamen idcirco legum contraria iussis sunt ea Romanas erudiuntque nurus.
Neue, quibus scribam, possis dubitare, libellos, quattuor hos uersus e tribus unus habet:
“este procul, uitae tenues, insigne pudoris,

quaeque tegis medios instita longa pedes!
Nil nisi legitimum concessaque furta canemus,
inque meo nullum carmine crimen erit.”
Ecquid ab hac omnes rigide summouimus Arte, quas stola contingi uittaque sumpta uetat?
“At matrona potest alienis artibus uti, quoque trahat, quamuis non doceatur, habet.” Nil igitur matrona legat, quia carmine ab omni ad delinquendum doctior esse potest.
Quodcumque attigerit siqua est studiosa sinistri, ad uitium mores instruet inde suos.
Sumpserit Annales (nihil est hirsutius illis) facta sit unde parens Ilia, nempe leget.
Sumpserit “Aeneadum genetrix” ubi prima, requiret, Aeneadum genetrix unde sit alma Venus.
Persequar inferius, modo si licet ordine ferri, posse nocere animis carminis omne genus.
Non tamen idcirco crimen liber omnis habebit:
nil prodest, quod non laedere possit idem.
Igne quid utilius? Siquis tamen urere tecta comparat, audaces instruit igne manus.
Eripit interdum, modo dat medicina salutem, quaeque iuuet, monstrat, quaeque sit herba nocens.
Et latro et cautus praecingitur ense uiator ille sed insidias, hic sibi portat opem.
Discitur innocuas ut agat facundia causas:
protegit haec sontes, inmeritosque premit.
Sic igitur carmen, recta si mente legatur, constabit nulli posse nocere meum.
“At quasdam uitio.” Quicumque hoc concipit, errat, et nimium scriptis arrogat ille meis.
ut tamen hoc fatear, ludi quoque semina praebent nequitiae: tolli tota theatra iube:
peccandi causam multis quam saepe dederunt, Martia cum durum sternit harena solum.
Tollatur Circus; non tuta licentia Circi est:

hic sedet ignoto iuncta puella uiro.
Cum quaedam spatientur in hoc, ut amator eodem conueniat, quare porticus ulla patet?
Quis locus est templis augustior? Haec quoque uitet, in culpam siqua est ingeniosa suam.
Cum steterit louis aede, louis succurret in aede quam multas matres fecerit ille deus.
Proxima adoranti lunonis templa subibit, paelicibus multis hanc doluisse deam.
Pallade conspecta, natum de crimine uirgo sustulerit quare, quaeret, Erichthonium.
Venerit in magni templum, tua munera, Martis, stat Venus Vltori iuncta, uir ante fores.
Isidis aede sedens, cur hanc Saturnia, quaeret, egerit Ionio Bosphorioque mari?
In Venerem Anchises, in Lunam Latmius heros, in Cererem Iasion, qui referatur, erit.
Omnia peruersas possunt corrumpere mentes stant tamen illa suis omnia tuta locis.
Et procul a scripta solis meretricibus Arte summouet ingenuas pagina prima manus.
Quaecumque erupit, qua non sinit ire sacerdos, protinus huic dempti criminis ipsa rea est.
Nec tamen est facinus uersus euoluere mollis, multa licet castae non facienda legant.
Saepe supercilii nudas matrona seueri et Veneris stantis ad genus omne uidet.
Corpora Vestales oculi meretricia cernunt, nec domino poenae res ea causa fuit.
at cur in nostra nimia est lasciuia Musa, curue meus cuiquam suadet amare liber?
Nil nisi peccatum manifesta que culpa fatenda est:
paenitet ingenii iudicii que mei.
Cur non Argolicis potius quae concidit armis uexata est iterum carmine Troia meo?
Cur tacui Thebas et uulnera mutua fratrum,

et septem portas, sub duce quamque suo?
Nec mihi materiam bellatrix Roma negabat, et pius est patriae facta referre labor.
Denique cum meritis inpleueris omnia, Caesar, pars mihi de multis una canenda fuit, utque trahunt oculos radiantia lumina solis, traxissent animum sic tua facta meum.
Arguor immerito. Tenuis mihi campus aratur:
illud erat magnae fertilitatis opus.
Non ideo debet pelago se credere, si qua audet in exiguo ludere cumba lacu.
Forsan (et hoc dubitem) numeris leuioribus aptus sim satis, in paruos sufficiamque modos:
at si me iubeas domitos louis igne Gigantas dicere, conantem debilitabit onus.
Diuitis ingenii est inmania Caesaris acta condere, materia ne superetur opus.
Et tamen ausus eram. Sed detractare uidebar, quodque nefas, damno uiribus esse tuis.
Ad leue rursus opus, iuuenalia carmina, ueni, et falso moui pectus amore meum.
Non equidem uellem: sed me mea fata trahebant, inque meas poenas ingeniosus eram.
Et mihi, quod didici! Cur me docuere parentes, litteraque est oculos ulla morata meos?
Haec tibi me inuisum lasciuiam fecit, ob Artes, quis ratus es uetitos sollicitare toros.
Sed neque me nuptae didicerunt furta magistro, quodque parum nouit, nemo docere potest.
Sic ego delicias et mollia carmina feci, strinxerit ut nomen fabula nulla meum.
Nec quisquam est adeo media de plebe maritus, ut dubius uitio sit pater ille meo.
Crede mihi, distant mores a carmine nostro (uita uerecunda est, Musa iocosa mea) magnaue pars mendax operum est et ficta meorum:

plus sibi permisit compositore suo.
Nec liber indicium est animi, sed honesta uoluntas:
plurima mulcendis auribus apta feres.
Accius esset atrox, conuiuia Terentius esset, essent pugnaces qui fera bella canunt.
Denique composui teneros non solus amores:
composito poenas solus amore dedi.
Quid, nisi cum multo Venerem confundere uino, praecepit lyrici Teia Musa senis?
Lesbia quid docuit Sappho, nisi amare, puellas?
Tuta tamen Sappho, tutus et ille fuit.
Nec tibi, Battiade, nocuit, quod saepe legenti delicias uersu fassus es ipse tuas.
Fabula iucundi nulla est sine amore Menandri, et solet hic pueris uirginibusque legi.
Ilias ipsa quid est aliud, nisi adultera, de qua inter amatorem pugna uirunique fuit?
Quid prius est illi flamma Briseidos, utque fecerit iratos rapta puella duces?
Aut quid Odyssea est, nisi femina propter amorem, dum uir abest, multis una petita procis?
Quis, nisi Maeonides, Venerem Martemque ligatos narrat in obsceno corpora prensa toro?
unde nisi indicio magni sciremus Homeri hospitis igne duas incaluisse deas?
Omne genus scripti grauitate tragoedia uincit:
haec quoque materiam semper amoris habet.
Numquid in Hippolyto, nisi caecae flamma nouercae?
Nobilis est Canace fratris amore sui.
Quid? Non Tantalides agitante Cupidine currus Pisaeam Phrygiis uexit eburnus equis?
Tingeret ut ferrum natorum sanguine mater, concitus a laeso fecit amore dolor.
Fecit amor subitas uolucres cum paelice regem, quaeque suum luget nunc quoque mater Ityn.
Si non Aeropem frater sceleratus amasset, auersos Solis non legeremus equos.

Inpia nec tragicos tetigisset Scylla coturnos, ni patrium crinem desecuisset amor.
Qui legis Electran et egentem mentis Oresten, Aegisthi crimen Tyndaridosque legis.
Nam quid de tetrico referam domitore Chimaerae, quem leto fallax hospita paene dedit?
Quid loquar Hermionen, quid te, Schoeneia uirgo, teque, Mycenaeano Phoebas amata duci?
Quid Danaen Danaesque nurum matremque Lyaei Haemonaque et noctes cui coiere duae?
Quid Peliae generum, quid Thesea, quiue Pelasgum Iliacam tetigit de rate primus humum?
Huc Iole Pyrrhique parens, huc Herculis uxor, huc accedat Hylas Iliacusque puer.
Tempore deficiat, tragicos si persequar ignes, uixque meus capiet nomina nuda liber.
Est et in obscenos commixta tragoedia risus, multaque praeteriti uerba pudoris habet.
Nec nocet auctori, mollem qui fecit Achillem, infregisse suis fortia facta modis.
Iunxit Aristides Milesia crimina secum, pulsus Aristides nec tamen urbe sua est.
Nec qui descripsit corrumpi semina matrum, Eubius, impurae conditor historiae, nec qui composuit nuper Sybaritica, fugit, nec qui concubitus non tacuere suos.
Suntque ea doctorum monumentis mixta uirorum, muneribusque ducum publica facta patent.
Neue peregrinis tantum defendar ab armis, et Romanus habet multa iocosa liber.
utque suo Martem cecinit grauis Ennius ore, Ennius ingenio maximus, arte rudis:
explicat ut causas rapidi Lucretius ignis, casurumque triplex uaticinatur opus:
sic sua lasciuo cantata est saepe Catullo femina, cui falsum Lesbia nomen erat;

nec contentus ea, multos uulgauit amores,
in quibus ipse suum fassus adulterium est.
Par fuit exigui similisque licentia Calui, detexit uariis qui sua furta modis.
Cinna quoque his comes est, Cinnaque procacior Anser, et leue Cornifici parque Catonis opus.
Quid referam Ticideae, quid Memmi carmen, apud quos rebus adest nomen nominibusque pudor, et quorum libris modo dissimulata Perilla est, nomine nunc legitur dicta, Metelle, tuo?
Is quoque, Phasiacas Argon qui duxit in undas, non potuit Veneris furta tacere suae.
Nec minus Hortensi, nec sunt minus improba Serui carmina. Quis dubitet nomina tanta sequi?
Vertit Aristiden Sisenna, nec obfuit illi, historiae turpis inseruisse iocos.
Non fuit opprobrio celebrasse Lycorida Gallo, sed linguam nimio non tenuisse mero.
Credere iuranti durum putat esse Tibullus, sic etiam de se quod neget illa uiro:
fallere custodes idem docuisse fatetur, seque sua miserum nunc ait arte premi.
Saepe, uelut gemmam dominae signumue probaret, per causam meminit se tetigisse manum, utque refert, digitis saepe est nutuque locutus, et tacitam mensae duxit in orbe notam et quibus e sucis abeat de corpore liuor, inpresso fieri qui solet ore, docet:
denique ab incauto nimium petit ille marito,
se quoque uti seruet, peccet ut illa minus.
Scit, cui latretur, cum solus obambulet, ipsas cui totiens clausas exscreet ante fores, multaque dat furti talis praecepta docetque qua nuptae possint fallere ab arte uiros.
Non fuit hoc illi fraudi, legiturque Tibullus et placet, et iam te principe notus erat.

Inuenies eadem blandi praecepta Properti:
    destrictus minima nec tamen ille nota est.
His ego successi, quoniam praestantia candor nomina uiuorum dissimulare iubet.
Non timui, fateor, ne, qua tot iere carinae, naufraga seruat omnibus una foret.
Sunt aliis scriptae, quibus alea luditur, artes (hoc est ad nostros non leue crimen auos) quid ualeant tali, quo possis plurima iactu figere, damnosos effugasue canes, tessera quos habeat numeros, distante uocato mittere quo deceat, quo dare missa modo, discolor ut recto grassetur limite miles,
    cum medius gemino calculus hoste perit, ut bellare sequens sciat et reuocare priorem, nec tuto fugiens incommitatus eat;
parua sit ut ternis instructa tabella lapillis,
    in qua uicisse est continuasse suos; quique alli lusus (neque enim nunc persequar omnes) perdere, rem caram, tempora nostra solent.
Ecce canit formas alius iactusque pilarum, hic artem nandi praecipit, ille trochi, composita est aliis fucandi cura coloris;
    hic epulis leges hospitioque dedit alter humum, de qua fingantur pocula, monstrat, quaeque, docet, liquido testa sit apta mero.
Talia luduntur fumoso mense Decembri, quae damno nulli composuisse fuit.
His ego deceptus non tristia carmina feci, sed tristis nostros poena secuta iocos.
Denique nec uideo tot de scribentibus unum, quem sua perdidit Musa, repertus ego.
Quid, si scripsissem mimos obscena iocantes, qui semper uetiti crimen amoris habent:
in quibus assidue cultus procedit adulter,

uerbaque dat stulto callida nupta uiro?
Nubilis hos uirgo matronaque uirque puerque spectat, et ex magna parte senatus adest.
Nec satis incestis temerari uocibus aures;
adsuescunt oculi multa pudenda pati:
cumque fefellit amans aliqua nouitate maritum plauditur et magno palma fauore datur; quoque minus prodest, scaena est lucrosa poetae, tantaque non paruo crimina praetor emit.
Inspice ludorum sumptus, Auguste, tuorum:
empta tibi magno talia multa leges.
Haec tu spectasti spectandaque saepe dedisti (maiestas adeo conlis ubique tua est) luminibusque tuis, totus quibus utitur orbis, scaenica uidisti lentus adulteria.
Scribere si fas est imitantes turpia mimos, materiae minor est debita poena meae.
An genus hoc scripti faciunt sua pulpita tutum, quodque licet, mimis scaena licere dedit?
Et mea sunt populo saltata poemata saepe, saepe oculos etiam detinuere tuos.
Scilicet in domibus nostris ut prisca uirorum artificis fulgent corpora picta manu, sic quae concubitus uarios Venerisque figuras exprimat, est aliquo parua tabella loco:
utque sedet uultu fassus Telamonius iram, inque oculis facinus barbara mater habet, sic madidos siccat digitis Venus uda capillos, et modo maternis tecta uidetur aquis.
Bella sonant alii telis instructa cruentis, parsque tui generis, pars tua facta canunt.
Inuida me spatio natura coercuit arto, ingenio uires exiguasque dedit et tamen ille tuae felix Aeneidos auctor contulit in Tyrios arma uirumque toros, nec legitur pars ulla magis de corpore toto,

quam non legitimo foedere iunctus amor.
Phyllidis hic idem teneraeque Amaryllidis ignes bucolicis iuuenis luserat ante modis.
Nos quoque iam pridem scripto peccauimus isto:
supplicium patitur non noua culpa nouum;
carminaque edideram, cum te delicta notantem praeteriit totiens inreprehensus eques.
Ergo quae iuuenis mihi non nocitura putauit scripta parum prudens, nunc nocuere seni.
Sera redundauit ueteris uindicta libelli, distat et a meriti tempore poena sui.
Ne tamen omne meum credas opus esse remissum, saepe dedi nostrae grandia uela rati.
Sex ego Fastorum scripsi totidemque libellos, cumque suo finem mense uolumen habet, idque tuo nuper scriptum sub nomine, Caesar, et tibi sacratum sors mea rupit opus;
et dedimus tragicis scriptum regale coturnis, quaeque grauis debet uerba coturnus habet;
dictaque sunt nobis, quamuis manus ultima coeptis defuit, in facies corpora uersa nouas.
Atque utinam reuoces animum paulisper ab ira, et uacuo iubeas hinc tibi pauca legi, pauca, quibus prima surgens ab origine mundi in tua deduxi tempora, Caesar, opus:
aspicies, quantum dederis mihi pectoris ipse, quoque fauore animi teque tuosque canam.
Non ego mordaci destrinxi carmine quemquam, nec meus ullius crimina uersus habet.
Candidus a salibus suffusis felle refugi:
nulla uenenato littera mixta ioco est.
Inter tot populi, tot scriptis, milia nostri, quem mea Calliope laeserit, unus ero.
Non igitur nostris ullum gaudere Quiritem auguror, at multos indoluisse malis;
nec mihi credibile est, quemquam insultasse iacenti, gratia candori si qua relata meo est his, precor, atque aliis possint tua numina flecti, o pater, o patriae cura salusque tuae!

Non ut in Ausoniam redeam, nisi forsitan olim, cum longo poenae tempore uictus eris, tutius exilium pauloque quietius oro, ut par delicto sit mea poena suo.

LIBER TERTIUS

I

“Missus in hanc uenio timide liber exulis urbem da placidam fesso, lector amice, manum;
neue reformida, ne sim tibi forte pudori:
nullus in hac charta uersus amare docet.
Haec domini fortuna mei est, ut debeat illam infelix nullis dissimulare iocis.
Id quoque, quod uiridi quondam male lusit in aeuo, heu nimium sero damnat et odit opus.
Inspice quid portem: nihil hic nisi triste uidebis, carmine temporibus conueniente suis.
Clauda quod alterno subsidunt carmina uersu, uel pedis hoc ratio, uel uia longa facit;
quod neque sum cedro flauus nec pumice leuis, erubui domino cultior esse meo;
littera suffusas quod habet maculosa lituras, laesit opus lacrimis ipse poeta suum.
Siqua uidebuntur casu non dicta Latine,
in qua scribebat, barbara terra fuit.
Dicite, lectores, si non graue, qua sit eundum, quasque petam sedes hospes in urbe liber.”
Haec ubi sum furtim lingua titubante locutus, qui mihi monstraret, uix fuit unus, iter.
“Di tibi dent, nostro quod non tribuere poetae, molliter in patria uiuere posse tua.
Duc age, namque sequar, quamuis terraque marique longinquo referam lassus ab orbe pedem.”
Paruit, et ducens “haec sunt fora Caesaris,” inquit, “haec est a sacris quae uia nomen habet, hic locus est Vestae, qui Pallada seruat et ignem, haec fuit antiqui regia parua Numae.” Inde petens dextram “porta est” ait “ista Palati, hic Stator, hoc primum condita Roma loco est.” Singula dum miror, uideo fulgentibus armis conspicuos postes tectaque digna deo.

“Et louis haec” dixi “domus est?” Quod ut esse putarem, augurium menti querna corona dabat.
Cuius ut accepi dominum, “non fallimur,” inquam, “et magni uerum est hanc louis esse domum.
Cur tamen opposita uelatur ianua lauro, cingit et augustas arbor opaca comas?
Num quia perpetuos meruit domus ista triumphos, an quia Leucadio semper amata deo est?
Ipsane quod festa est, an quod facit omnia festa?
Quam tribuit terris, pacis an ista nota est?
utque uiret semper laurus nec fronde caduca carpitur, aeternum sic habet illa decus?
Causa superpositae scripto est testata coronae:
seruatos ciuis indicat huius ope.
Adice seruatis unum, pater optime, ciuem, qui procul extremo pulsus in orbe latet,
in quo poenarum, quas se meruisse fatetur,
non facinus causam, sed suus error habet.
Me miserum! Vereorque locum uereorque potentem, et quatitur trepido littera nostra metu.
Aspicias exsanguis chartam pallere colore?
Aspicias alternos intremuisse pedes?
Quandocumque, precor, nostro placere parenti isdem et sub dominis aspiciare domus!” Inde tenore pari gradibus sublimia celsis ducor ad intonsi candida templa dei, signa peregrinis ubi sunt alterna columnis, Belides et stricto barbarus ense pater, quaeque uiri docto ueteres cepere nouique pectore, lecturis inspicienda patent.
Quaerebam fratres, exceptis scilicet illis,
quos suus optaret non genuisse pater.
Quaerentem frustra custos e sedibus illis praepositus sancto iussit abire loco.

Altera templa peto, uicino iuncta teatro:
haec quoque erant pedibus non adeunda meis.
Nec me, quae doctis patuerunt prima libellis, atria Libertas tangere passa sua est.
In genus auctoris miseri fortuna redundat, et patimur nati, quam tulit ipse, fugam.
Forsitan et nobis olim minus asper et illi euictus longo tempore Caesar erit.
Di, precor, atque adeo (neque enim mihi turba roganda est)
Caesar, ades uoto, maxime diue, meo.
Interea, quoniam statio mihi publica clausa est, priuato liceat delituisse loco.
Vos quoque, si fas est, confusa pudore repulsae sumite plebeiae carmina nostra manus.

II

Ergo erat in fatis Scythiam quoque uisere nostris, quaeque Lycaonio terra sub axe iacet:
nec uos, Pierides, nec stirps Letoia, uestro docta sacerdoti turba tulistis opem.
Nec mihi, quod lusi uero sine crimine, prodest, quodque magis uita Musa iocata mea est:
plurima sed pelago terraque pericula passum ustus ab assiduo frigore Pontus habet.
Quique, fugax rerum securaque in otia natus, mollis et inpatiens ante laboris eram, ultima nunc patior, nec me mare portibus orbum perdere, diuersae nec potuere uiae; sufficit atque malis animus; nam corpus ab illo accepit uires, uixque ferenda tulit.
Dum tamen et terris dubius iactabar et undis, fallebat curas aegraque corda labor:
ut uia finita est et opus requieuit eundi, et poenae tellus est mihi tacta meae, nil nisi flere libet, nec nostro parciior imber lumine, de uerna quam niue manat aqua.
Roma domusque subit desideriumque locorum, quicquid et amissa restat in urbe mei.
Ei mihi, quo totiens nostri pulsata sepulcri ianua, sed nullo tempore aperta fuit?
Cur ego tot gladios fugi totiensque minata obruit infelix nulla procella caput?
Di, quos experior nimium constanter iniquos, participes irae quos deus unus habet, exstimulate, precor, cessantia fata meique interitus clausas esse uetate fores!

III

Haec mea si casu miraris epistula quare alterius digitis scripta sit, aeger eram.
Aeger in extremis ignoti partibus orbis, incertusque meae paene salutis eram.
Quem mihi nunc animum dira regione iacenti inter Sauromatas esse Getasque putes?
Nec caelum patior, nec aquis adsueuimus istis, terraque nescioquo non placet ipsa modo.
Non domus apta satis, non hic cibus utilis aegro, nullus, Apollinea qui leuet arte malum, non qui soletur, non qui labentia tarde tempora narrando fallat, amicus adest.
Lassus in extremis iaceo populisque locisque, et subit adfecto nunc mihi, quicquid abest.
Omnia cum subeant, uincis tamen omnia, coniunx, et plus in nostro pectore parte tenes.
Te loquor absentem, te uox mea nominat unam;
nulla uenit sine te nox mihi, nulla dies.
Quin etiam sic me dicunt aliena locutum, ut foret amenti nomen in ore tuum.
Si iam deficiam, subpressaue lingua palato uix instillato restituenda mero, nuntiet huc aliquis dominam uenisse, resurgam, spesque tui nobis causa uigoris erit.
Ergo ego sum dubius uitae, tu forsitan istic iucundum nostri nescia tempus agis?
Non agis, adfirmo. Liquet hoc, carissima, nobis, tempus agi sine me non nisi triste tibi.
Si tamen inpleuit mea sors, quos debuit, annos, et mihi uiuendi tam cito finis adest, quantum erat, o magni, morituro parcere, diui, ut saltem patria contumularer humo?

Vel poena in tempus mortis dilata fuisset, uel praecepisset mors properata fugam.
Integer hanc potui nuper bene reddere lucem;
exul ut occiderem, nunc mihi uita data est.
Tam procul ignotis igitur moriemur in oris, et fient ipso tristia fata loco;
nec mea consueto languescunt corpora lecto, depositum nec me qui fleat, ullus erit;
nec dominae lacrimis in nostra cadentibus ora accedent animae tempora parua meae;
nec mandata dabo, nec cum clamore supremo labentes oculos condet amica manus; sed sine funeribus caput hoc, sine honore sepulcri indeploratum barbara terra teget.
Ecquid, ubi audieris, tota turbabere mente, et feries pauida pectora fida manu?
Ecquid, in has frustra tendens tua brachia partes, clamabis miseri nomen inane uiri?
Parce tamen lacerare genas, nec scinde capillos:
non tibi nunc primum, lux mea, raptus ero.
Cum patriam amisi, tunc me periisse putato:
et prior et grauior mors fuit illa mihi.
Nunc, si forte potes (sed non potes, optima coniunx) finitis gaude tot mihi morte malis.
Quod potes, extenua forti mala corde ferendo, ad quae iampridem non rude pectus habes.
Atque utinam pereant animae cum corpore nostrae, effugiatque auidos pars mihi nulla rogos.
Nam si morte carens uacua uolat altus in aura spiritus, et Samii sunt rata dicta senis, inter Sarmaticas Romana uagabitur umbras, perque feros Manes hospita semper erit.
Ossa tamen facito parua referantur in urna:
sic ego non etiam mortuus exul ero.
Non uetat hoc quisquam: fratrem Thebana peremptum supposuit tumulo rege uetante soror.

Atque ea cum foliis et amomi puluere misce, inque suburbano condita pone solo;
quosque legat uersus oculo properante uiator, grandibus in tituli marmore caede notis: “hic ego qui iaceo tenerorum lusor amorum ingenio perii Naso poeta meo;
at tibi qui transis ne sit graue quisquis amasti dicere “Nasonis molliter ossa cubent”” hoc satis in titulo est. Etenim maiora libelli et diuturna magis sunt monimenta mihi, quos ego confido, quamuis nocuere, daturus nomen et auctori tempora longa suo.
Tu tamen extincto feralia munera semper deque tuis lacrimis umidaserta dato.
Quamuis in cineres corpus mutauerit ignis sentiet officium maesta fauilla pium.
Scribere plura libet: sed uox mihi fessa loquendo dictandi uires siccaque lingua negat.
Accipe supremo dictum mihi forsitan ore,
quod, tibi qui mittit, non habet ipse, “uale”.

IV

O mihi care quidem semper, sed tempore duro cognite, res postquam procubuere meae:
usibus edocto si quicquam credis amico,
uiue tibi et longe nomina magna fuge.
Viue tibi, quantumque potes praelustria uita:
saeuum praelustri fulmen ab arce uenit.
Nam quamquam soli possunt prodesse potentes,
non prosit potius, si quis obesse potest.
Effugit hibernas demissa antemna procellas, lataque plus paruis uela timoris habent.
Aspicias, ut summa cortex leuis innatet unda, cum graue nexa simul retia mergat onus.
Haec ego si monitor monitus prius ipse fuissem,
in qua debebam forsitan urbe forem.
Dum tecum uixi, dum me leuis aura ferebat,
haec mea per placidas cumba cucurrit aquas.
Qui cadit in plano (uix hoc tamen euenit ipsum) sic cadit, ut tacta surgere possit humo.
At miser Elpenor tecto delapsus ab alto occurrit regi debilis umbra suo.
Quid fuit, ut tutas agitaret Daedalus alas,
Icarus inmensas nomine signet aquas?
Nempe quod hic alte, demissius ille uolabat:
nam pennas ambo non habuere suas.
Crede mihi, bene qui latuit bene uixit, et intra fortunam debet quisque manere suam.
Non foret Eumedes orbus, si filius eius stultus Achilleos non adamasset equos:
nec natum in flamma uidisset, in arbore natas, cepisset genitor si Phaethonta Merops.
Tu quoque formida nimium sublimia semper, propositique, precor, contrahe uela tui.

Nam pede inoffenso spatium decurrere uitae dignus es et fato candidiore frui.
Quae pro te ut uoueam, miti pietate mereris haesuraque fide tempus in omne mihi.
Vidi ego te tali uultu mea fata gementem, qualem credibile est ore fuisse meo.
Nostra tuas uidi lacrimas super ora cadentes, tempore quas uno fidaque uerba bibi.
Nunc quoque summotum studio defendis amicum, et mala uix ulla parte leuanda leuas.
Viue sine inuidia, mollesque inglorius annos exige, amicitias et tibi iunge pares, Nasonisque tui, quod adhuc non exulat unum, nomen ama: Scythicus cetera Pontus habet.

IV B

Proxima sideribus tellus Erymanthidos Vrsae me tenet, adstricto terra perusta gelu.
Bosporos et Tanais superant Scythiaequae paludes uix satis et noti nomina pauca loci.
ulterius nihil est nisi non habitabile frigus.
Heu quam uicina est ultima terra mihi!
At longe patria est, longe carissima coniunx, quicquid et haec nobis post duo dulce fuit.
Sic tamen haec adsunt, ut quae contingere non est corpore: sunt animo cuncta uidenda meo.
Ante oculos errant domus, urbsque et forma locorum, acceduntque suis singula facta locis.
Coniugis ante oculos, sicut praesentis, imago est.
Illa meos casus ingrauat, illa leuat:
ingrauat hoc, quod abest; leuat hoc, quod praestat amorem inpositumque sibi firma tuetur onus.
Vos quoque pectoribus nostris haeretis, amici, dicere quos cupio nomine quemque suo.
Sed timor officium cautus compescit, et ipsos in nostro poni carmine nolle puto.
Ante uolebatis, gratique erat instar honoris, uersibus in nostris nomina uestra legi.
Quod quoniam est anceps, intra mea pectora quemque alloquar, et nulli causa timoris ero.
Nec meus indicio latitantes uersus amicos protrahit. Occulte siquis amabat, amet.
Scite tamen, quamuis longe regione remotus absim, uos animo semper adesse meo.
Et qua quisque potest, aliqua mala nostra leuate, fidam proiecto neue negate manum.

Prospera sic maneat uobis fortuna, nec umquam contacti simili sorte rogetis idem.

V

Vsus amicitiae tecum mihi paruus, ut illam non aegre posses dissimulare, fuit, nec me complexus uinclis propioribus esses naue mea uento, forsan, eunte suo.
ut cecidi cunctique metu fugere ruinam, uersaque amicitiae terga dedere meae, ausus es igne louis percussum tangere corpus et deploratae limen adire domus:
idque recens praestas nec longo cognitus usu,
quod ueterum misero uix duo tresue mihi.
Vidi ego confusos uultus uisosque notauī, osque madens fletu pallidiusque meo:
et lacrimas cernens in singula uerba cadentes ore meo lacrimas, auribus illa bibi;
brachiaque accepi presso pendentia collo, et singultatis oscula mixta sonis.
Sum quoque, care, tuis defensus uiribus absens (scis carum ueri nominis esse loco), multaque praeterea manifestaue signa fauoris pectoribus teneo non abitura meis.
Di tibi posse tuos tribuant defendere semper, quos in materia prosperiore iuues.
Si tamen interea, quid in his ego perditus oris (quod te credibile est quaerere) quaeris, agam:
spe trahor exigua, quam tu mihi demere noli, tristia leniri numina posse dei.
Seu temere exspecto, siue id contingere fas est, tu mihi, quod cupio, fas, precor, esse proba, quaeque tibi linguae est facundia, confer in illud, ut doceas uotum posse ualere meum.
Quo quisque est maior, magis est placabilis irae,

et faciles motus mens generosa capit.
Corpora magnanimo satis est prostrasse leoni, pugna suum finem, cum iacet hostis, habet:
at lupus et turpes instant morientibus ursi et quaecumque minor nobilitate fera.
Maius apud Troiam forti quid habemus Achille?
Dardanii lacrimas non tulit ille senis.
Quae ducis Emathii fuerit clementia, Porus Dareique docent funeris exsequiae.
Neue hominum referam flexas ad mitius iras,
Iunonis gener est qui prius hostis erat.
Denique non possum nullam sperare salutem, cum poenae non sit causa cruenta meae.
Non mihi quaerenti pessumdare cuncta petitem Caesareum caput est, quod caput orbis erat:
non aliquid dixiue, elataue lingua loquendo est, lapsaque sunt nimio uerba profana mero:
inscia quod crimen uiderunt lumina, plector, peccatumque oculos est habuisse meum.
Non equidem totam possum defendere culpam:
sed partem nostri criminis error habet.
spes igitur superest facturum ut molliat ipse mutati poenam condicione loci.
Hos utinam nitidi Solis praenuntius ortus afferat admisso Lucifer albus equo!

VI

Foedus amicitiae nec uis, carissime, nostrae, nec, si forte uelis, dissimulare potes.
Donec enim licuit, nec te mihi carior alter, nec tibi me tota iunctior urbe fuit;
isque erat usque adeo populo testatus, ut esset paene magis quam tu quamque ego notus, amor:
quique est in caris animi tibi candor amiciscognita sunt ipsi, quem colis, ista uiro.
Nil ita celabas, ut non ego conscius essem, pectoribusque dabas multa tegenda meis:
cuique ego narrabam secreti quicquid habebam, excepto quod me perdidit, unus eras.
Id quoque si scisses, saluo fruerere sodali, consilioque forem sospes, amice, tuo.
Sed mea me in poenam nimirum fata trahebant.
Omne bonae claudent utilitatis iter?
Siue malum potui tamen hoc uitare cauendo, seu ratio fatum uincere nulla ualet, tu tamen, o nobis usu iunctissime longo, pars desiderii maxima paene mei, sis memor, et si quas fecit tibi gratia uires, illas pro nobis experiare, rogo, numinis ut laesi fiat mansuetior ira, mutatoque minor sit mea poena loco.
Idque ita, si nullum scelus est in pectore nostro, principiumque mei criminis error habet.
Nec breue nec tutum, quo sint mea, dicere, casu lumina funesti conscia facta mali:
mensque reformidat, ueluti sua uulnera, tempus illud, et admonitu fit nouus ipse pudor:
sed quaecumque adeo possunt afferre pudorem,

illa tegi caeca condita nocte decet.
Nil igitur referam nisi me peccasse, sed illo praemia peccato nulla petita mihi, stultitiamque meum crimen debere uocari, nomina si facto reddere uera uelis.
Quae si non ita sunt, alium, quo longius absim, quaere, suburbana est hic mihi terra locus.

VII

Vade salutatum, subito perarata, Perillam, littera, sermonis fida ministra mei.
Aut illam inuenies dulci cum matre sedentem, aut inter libros Pieridasque suas.
Quicquid aget, cum te scierit uenisse, relinquet, nec mora, quid uenias quidue, requiret, agam.
Viuere me dices, sed sic, ut uiuere nolim, nec mala tam longa nostra leuata mora:
et tamen ad Musas, quamuis nocuere, reuerti, aptaque in alternos cogere uerba pedes.
“Tu quoque” dic “studiis communibus ecquid inhaeres, doctaque non patrio carmina more canis?
Nam tibi cum fatis mores natura pudicos et raras dotes ingeniumque dedit.
Hoc ego Pegasidas deduxi primus ad undas, ne male fecundae uena periret aquae;
primus id aspexi teneris in uirginis annis, utque pater natae duxque comesque fui.
Ergo si remanent ignes tibi pectoris idem, sola tuum uates Lesbia uincet opus.
Sed uereor, ne te mea nunc fortuna retardet, postque meos casus sit tibi pectus iners.
Dum licuit, tua saepe mihi, tibi nostra legebam;
    saepe tui iudex, saepe magister eram:
aut ego praebebam factis modo uersibus aures, aut, ubi cessares, causa ruboris eram.
Forsitan exemplo, quia me laesere libelli,
    tu quoque sis poenae fata secuta meae.
Pone, Perilla, metum. Tantummodo femina nulla neue uir a scriptis discat amare tuis.
Ergo desidiae remoue, doctissima, causas,

inque bonas artes et tua sacra redi.
Ista decens facies longis uitiabitur annis, rugaque in antiqua fronte senilis erit, inicietque manum formae damnosa senectus,
    quae strepitus passu non faciente uenit.
Cumque aliquis dicet “fuit haec formosa” dolebis, et speculum mendax esse querere tuum.
Sunt tibi opes modicae, cum sis dignissima magnis:
    finge sed inmensis censibus esse pares, nempe dat id quodcumque libet fortuna rapitque, Irus et est subito, qui modo Croesus erat.
Singula ne referam, nil non mortale tenemus pectoris exceptis ingeniique bonis.
En ego, cum caream patria uobisque domoque, raptaque sint, adimi quae potuere mihi, ingenio tamen ipse meo comitorque fruorque:
    Caesar in hoc potuit iuris habere nihil.
Quilibet hanc saeuo uitam mihi finiat ense, me tamen extincto fama superstes erit, dumque suis uictrix omnem de montibus orbem prospiciet domitum Martia Roma, legar.
Tu quoque, quam studii maneat felicior usus, effuge uenturos, qua potes, usque rogos!”

VIII

Nunc ego Triptolemi cuperem consistere curru, misit in ignotam qui rude semen humum;
nunc ego Medae uellem frenare dracones, quos habuit fugiens arce, Corinthe, tua;
nunc ego iactandas optarem sumere pennas, siue tuas, Perseu, Daedale, siue tuas:
ut tenera nostris cedente uolatibus aura aspicerem patriae dulce repente solum, desertaeque domus uultus, memoresque sodales, caraque praecipue coniugis ora meae.
Stulte, quid haec frustra uotis puerilibus optas, quae non ulla tibi fertque feretque dies?
Si semel optandum est, Augusti numen adora, et, quem sensisti, rite precare deum.
Ille tibi pennasque potest currusque uolucres tradere. Det reditum, protinus ales eris.
Si precer hoc (neque enim possum maiora rogare)
    ne mea sint, timeo, uota modesta parum.
Forsitan hoc olim, cum iam satiauerit iram, tum quoque sollicita mente rogandus erit.
Quod minus interea est, instar mihi muneris ampli, ex his me iubeat quolibet ire locis.
Nec caelum nec aquae faciunt nec terra nec aerae;
    ei mihi, perpetuus corpora languor habet!
Seu uitiant artus aegrae contagia mentis, siue mei causa est in regione mali, ut tetigi Pontum, uexant insomnia, uixque ossa tegit macies nec iuuat ora cibus; quique per autumnum percussis frigore primo est color in foliis, quae noua laesit hiems, is mea membra tenet, nec uiribus alleuor ullis,

et numquam queruli causa doloris abest.
Nec melius ualeo, quam corpore, mente, sed aegra est utraque pars aequae binaeque damna fero.
Haeret et ante oculos ueluti spectabile corpus astat fortunae forma legenda meae:
cumque locum moresque hominum cultusque sonumque cernimus, et, qui sim qui fuerimque, subit, tantus amor necis est, querar ut cum Caesaris ira, quod non offensas uindicet ense suas.
At, quoniam semel est odio ciuilitate usus, mutato leuior sit fuga nostra loco.

IX

Hic quoque sunt igitur Graiae (quis crederet?) urbes inter inhumanae nomina barbariae?
Huc quoque Mileto missi uenere coloni, inque Getis Graias constituere domos?
Sed uetus huic nomen, positaque antiquius urbe, constat ab Absyrti caede fuisse loco.
Nam rate, quae cura pugnacis facta Mineruae per non temptatas prima cucurrit aquas, impia desertum fugiens Medea parentem dicitur his remos applicuisse uadis.
Quem procul ut uidit tumulo speculator ab alto, “hospes,” ait “nosco, Colchide, uela, uenit.”
Dum trepidant Minyae, dum soluitur aggere funis, dum sequitur celeres ancora tracta manus, conscia percussit meritorum pectora Colchis ausa atque ausura multa nefanda manu;
et, quamquam superest ingens audacia menti, pallor in attonitae uirginis ore fuit.
Ergo ubi prospexit uenientia uela “tenemur, et pater est aliqua fraude morandus” ait.
Dum quid agat quaerit, dum uersat in omnia uultus, ad fratrem casu lumina flexa tulit.
Cuius ut oblata est praesentia, “uicimus” inquit:
“hic mihi morte sua causa salutis erit.”
Protinus ignari nec quicquam tale timentis innocuum rigido perforat ense latus, atque ita diuellit diuulsaque membra per agros dissipat in multis inuenienda locis.
Neu pater ignoret, scopulo proponit in alto pallentesque manus sanguineumque caput, ut genitor luctuque nouo tardetur et, artus

dum legit extinctos, triste moretur iter.
Inde Tomis dictus locus hic, quia fertur in illo membra soror fratris consecuisse sui.

X

Siquis adhuc istic meminit Nasonis adempti, et superest sine me nomen in urbe meum.
suppositum stellis numquam tangentibus aequor me sciat in media uiuere barbaria.
Sauromatae cingunt, fera gens, Bessique Getaeque, quam non ingenio nomina digna meo!
Dum tamen aura tepet, medio defendimur Histro:
ille suis liquidis bella repellit aquis.
At cum tristis hiems squalentia protulit ora, terraque marmoreo est candida facta gelu, dum prohibet Boreas et nix habitare sub Arcto, tum patet has gentes axe tremente premi.
Nix iacet, et iactam ne sol pluuiaeque resoluant, indurat Boreas perpetuamque facit.
Ergo ubi delicuit nondum prior, altera uenit, et solet in multis bima manere locis;
tantaque commoti uis est Aquilonis, ut altas aequet humo turres tectaque rapta ferat.
Pellibus et sutis arcent mala frigora braxis, oraque de toto corpore sola patent.
Saepe sonant moti glacie pendente capilli, et nitet inducto candida barba gelu;
nudaque consistunt, formam seruantia testae, uina, nec hausta meri, sed data frustra bibunt.
Quid loquar, ut uincti concrecant frigore riui, deque lacu fragiles effodiantur aquae?
Ipse, papyrifero qui non angustior amne miscetur uasto multa per ora freto, caeruleos uentis latices durantibus, Hister congelat et tectis in mare serpit aquis; quaque rates ierant, pedibus nunc itur, et undas frigore concretas ungula pulsat equi; perque nouos pontes, subter labentibus undis, ducunt Sarmatici barbara plaustra boues.

Vix equidem credar, sed, cum sint praemia falsi nulla, ratam debet testis habere fidem.
Vidimus ingentem glacie consistere pontum, lubricaque inmotas testa premebat aquas.
Nec uidisse sat est. Durum calcauimus aequor, undaque non udo sub pede summa fuit.
Si tibi tale fretum quondam, Leandre, fuisset, non foret angustae mors tua crimen aquae.
Tum neque se pandi possunt delphines in auras et quamuis Boreas iactatis insonet alis, fluctus in obsesso gurgite nullus erit;
inclusaeque gelu stabunt in marmore puppes,
nec poterit rigidas findere remus aquas.
Vidimus in glacie pisces haerere ligatos, sed pars ex illis tum quoque uiua fuit.
Siue igitur nimii Boreae uis saeua marinas, protinus aequato siccis Aquilonibus Histro inuehitur celeri barbarus hostis equo; hostis equo pollens longeque uolante sagitta uicinam late depopulatur humum.
Diffugiunt alii, nullisque tuentibus agros incustoditae diripiuntur opes, ruris opes paruae, pecus et stridentia plaustra, et quas diuitias incola pauper habet.
Pars agitur uinctis post tergum capta lacertis, respiciens frustra rura Laremque suum:
pars cadit hamatis misere confixa sagittis:
nam uolucris ferro tinctile uirus inest.
Quae nequeunt secum ferre aut abducere, perdunt, et cremat insontes hostica flamma casas.
Tunc quoque, cum pax est, trepidant formidine belli, nec quisquam presso uomere sulcat humum.
Aut uidet aut metuit locus hic, quem non uidet, hostem;

cessat iners rigido terra relictā situ.
Non hic pampinea dulcis latet uua sub umbra, nec cumulant altos feruida musta lacus.
Poma negat regio, nec haberet Acontius, in quo scriberet hic dominae uerba legenda suae.
Aspiceres nudos sine fronde, sine arbore, campos:
heu loca felici non adeunda uiro!
Ergo tam late pateat cum maximus orbis,
haec est in poenam terra reperta meam.

XI

Si quis es, insultes qui casibus, inprobe, nostris, meque reum dempto fine cruentus agas, natus es e scopulis et pastus lacte ferino, et dicam silices pectus habere tuum.
Quis gradus ulterior, quo se tua porrigat ira, restat? Quidue meis cernis abesse malis?
Barbara me tellus et inhospita litora Ponti cumque suo Borea Maenalis Vrsa uidet.
Nulla mihi cum gente fera commercia linguae:
omnia solliciti sunt loca plena metus.
utque fugax audis ceruus deprensus ab ursis, cinctaue montanis ut pauet agna lupis, sic ego belligeris a gentibus undique saeptus terreor, hoste meum paene premente laterus.
utque sit exiguum poenae, quod coniuge cara, quod patria careo pignoribusque meis:
ut mala nulla feram nisi nudam Caesaris iram, nuda parum est nobis Caesaris ira mali?
Et tamen est aliquis, qui uulnera cruda retractet, soluat et in mores ora diserta meos.
In causa facili cuius licet esse diserto, et minimae uires frangere quassa ualent.
Subruere est arces et stantia moenia uirtus:
quamlibet ignaui praecipitata premunt.
Non sum ego quod fueram. Quid inanem proteris umbram?
quid cinerem saxi bustaque nostra petis?
Hector erat tunc cum bello certabat; at idem uinctus ad Haemonios non erat Hector equos.
Me quoque, quem noras olim, non esse memento:
ex illo superant haec simulacra uiro.
Quid simulacra, ferox, dictis incessis amaris?

Parce, precor, Manes sollicitare meos.
Omnia uera puta mea crimina, nil sit in illis, quod magis errorem quam scelus esse putes, pendimus en profugi (satia tua pectora) poenas exilioque graues exiliique loco.
Carnifici fortuna potest mea flenda uideri:
et tamen est uno iudice mersa partum.
Saeuior es tristi Busiride, saeuior illo, qui falsum lento torruit igne bouem, quique bouem Siculo fertur donasse tyranno, et dictis artes conciliasse suas: “munere in hoc, rex, est usus, sed imagine maior, nec sola est operis forma probanda mei.
Aspicias a dextra latus hoc adapertile tauri?
Hac tibi, quem perdes, coniciendus erit.
Protinus inclusum lentis carbonibus ure:
mugiet, et ueri uox erit illa bouis.
Pro quibus inuentis, ut munus munere penses, da, precor, ingenio praemia digna meo.” Dixerat. At Phalaris “poenae mirande repertor, ipse tuum praesens imbue” dixit “opus”.
Nec mora, monstratis crudeliter ignibus ustus exhibuit geminos ore gemente sonos.
Quid mihi cum Siculis inter Scythiamque Getasque?
Ad te, quisquis is es, nostra querela redit.
utque sitim nostro possis explere cruore, quantaque uis, auido gaudia corde feras, tot mala sum fugiens tellure, tot aequore passus, te quoque ut auditis posse dolere putem.
Crede mihi, si sit nobis collatus Vlixes, Neptunine minor quam Iouis ira fuit?
Ergo quicumque es, rescindere crimina noli, deque graui duras uulnere tolle manus;
utque meae famam tenuent obliuia culpae, facta cicatricem ducere nostra sine;
humanaeque memor sortis, quae tollit eosdem et premit, incertas ipse uerere uices.

Et quoniam, fieri quod numquam posse putauit, est tibi de rebus maxima cura meis,
non est quod timeas: fortuna miserrima nostra est, omne trahit secum Caesaris ira malum.
Quod magis ut liqueat, neue hoc ego fingere credar, ipse uelim poenas experiare meas.

XII

Frigora iam Zephyri minuunt, annoque peracto longior antiquis uisa Maeotis hiems, inpositamque sibi qui non bene pertulit Hellen, tempora nocturnis aequa diurna facit.
Iam uiolam puerique legunt hilaresque puellae, rustica quae nullo nata serente uenit;
prataque pubescunt uariorum flore colorum, indocilique loquax gutture uernat auis;
utque malae matris crimen deponat hirundo sub trabibus cunas tectaque parua facit;
herbaque, quae latuit Cerealibus obruta sulcis, exit et expandit molle cacumen humo;
quoque loco est uitis, de palmite gemma mouetur:
nam procul a Getico litore uitis abest;
quoque loco est arbor, turgescit in arbore ramus:
nam procul a Geticis finibus arbor abest.
Otia nunc istic, iunctisque ex ordine ludis cedunt uerbosi garrula bella fori.
usus equi nunc est, leuibus nunc luditur armis, nunc pila, nunc celeri uoluitur orbe trochus;
nunc ubi perfusa est oleo labente iuuentus, defessos artus Virgine tingit aqua.
Scaena uiget studiisque fauor distantibus ardet, proque tribus resonant terna theatra foris.
O quantum et quotiens non est numerare, beatum, non interdicta cui licet urbe frui!
At mihi sentitur nix uerno sole soluta, quaeque lacu durae non fodiantur aquae:
nec mare concrescit glacie, nec, ut ante, per Histrum stridula Sauromates plaustra bubulcus agit.
Incipient aliquae tamen huc adnare carinae, hospitaque in Ponti litore puppis erit.

Sedulus occurram nautae, dictaque salute, quid ueniat, quaeram, quisue quibusue locis.
Ille quidem mirum ni de regione propinqua non nisi uicinas tutus ararit aquas.
Rarus ab Italia tantum mare nauita transit, litora rarus in haec portubus orba uenit.
Siue tamen Graeca scierit, siue ille Latina uoce loqui (certe gratior huius erit; fas quoque ab ore freti longaeque Propontidos undis huc aliquem certo uela dedisse Noto), quisquis is est, memori rumore uoce referre et fieri famae parsque gradusque potest.
Is, precor, auditos possit narrare triumphos Caesaris et Latio reddita uota Ioui, teque, rebellatrix, tandem, Germania, magni triste caput pedibus supposuisse ducis.
Haec mihi qui referet, quae non uidisse dolebo, ille meae domui protinus hospes erit.
Ei mihi, iamne domus Scythico Nasonis in orbe est?
Iamque suum mihi dat pro Lare poena locum?
di facite ut caesar non hic penetrare domumque, hospitium poenae sed uelit esse meae.

XIII

Ecce superuacuus (quid enim fuit utile gigni?) ad sua natalis tempora noster adest.
Dure, quid ad miseros ueniebas exulis annos?
debueras illis inposuisse modum.
Si tibi cura mei, uel si pudor ullus inesset, non ultra patriam me sequerere meam, quoque loco primum tibi sum male cognitus infans, illo temptasses ultimus esse mihi, inque relinquendo, quod idem fecere sodales,
tu quoque dixisses tristis in urbe "uale".
Quid tibi cum Ponto? Num te quoque Caesaris ira extremam gelidi misit in orbis humum?
Scilicet exspectas soliti tibi moris honorem, pendeat ex umeris uestis ut alba meis, fumida cingatur florentibus ara coronis, micaque sollemni turis in igne sonet, libaque dem proprie genitale notantia tempus, concipiamque bonas ore fauente preces.
Non ita sum positus, nec sunt ea tempora nobis, aduentu possim laetus ut esse tuo.
Funeris ara mihi, ferali cincta cupresso, conuenit et structis flamma parata rogis.
Nec dare tura libet nil exorantia diuos,
in tantis subeunt nec bona uerba malis.
Si tamen est aliquid nobis hac luce petendum,
in loca ne redeas amplius ista, precor, dum me terrarum pars paene nouissima, Pontus, Euxinus falso nomine dictus, habet.

XIV

Cultor et antistes doctorum sancte uirorum, quid facis ingenio semper amice meo?
Ecquid, ut incolumem quondam celebrare solebas, nunc quoque ne uidear totus abesse, caues?
Conficis exceptis ecquid mea carmina solis Artibus, artifici quae nocuere suo?
Immo ita fac, quaeso, uatum studiose nouorum, quaque potes, retine corpus in urbe meum.
Est fuga dicta mihi, non est fuga dicta libellis, qui domini poenam non meruere sui.
Saepe per externas profugus pater exulat oras, urbe tamen natis exulis esse licet.
Palladis exemplo de me sine matre creata carmina sunt; stirps haec progeniesque mea est.
Hanc tibi commendo, quae quo magis orba parente est, hoc tibi tutori sarcina maior erit.
Tres mihi sunt nati contagia nostra secuti:
cetera fac curae sit tibi turba palam.
Sunt quoque mutatae, ter quinque uolumina, formae,
carmina de domini funere rapta sui.
Illud opus potuit, si non prius ipse perissem, certius a summa nomen habere manu:
nunc incorrectum populi peruenit in ora,
in populi quicquam si tamen ore mei est.
Hoc quoque nescioquid nostris appone libellis, diuerso missum quod tibi ab orbe uenit.
Quod quicumque leget (si quis leget) aestimet ante, compositum quo sit tempore quoque loco.
Aequus erit scriptis, quorum cognouerit esse exilium tempus barbariamque locum:
inque tot aduersis carmen mirabitur ullum ducere me tristi sustinuisse manu.

Ingenium fregere meum mala, cuius et ante fons infecundus paruaque uena fuit.
Sed quaecumque fuit, nullo exercente refugit, et longo periit arida facta situ.
Non hic librorum, per quos inuiter alarque, copia: pro libris arcus et arma sonant.
Nullus in hac terra, recitem si carmina, cuius intellecturis auribus utar, adest.
Non quo secedam locus est. Custodia muri sum mouet infestos clausaque porta Getas.
Saepe aliquod quaero uerbum nomenque locumque, nec quisquam est a quo certior esse queam.
Dicere saepe aliquid conanti (turpe fateri)
uerba mihi desunt dididicique loqui.
Threicio Scythicoque fere circumsonor ore, et uideor Geticis scribere posse modis.
Crede mihi, timeo ne sint inmixta Latinis inque meis scriptis Pontica uerba legas.
Qualemcumque igitur uenia dignare libellum.
Sortis et excusa condicione meae.

LIBER QUARTUS

I

Siqua meis fuerint, ut erunt, vitiosa libellis, excusata suo tempore, lector, habe.
exul eram, requiesque mihi, non fama petita est,
mens intenta suis ne foret usque malis.
hoc est cur cantet vinctus quoque compede fossor, 5 indocili numero cum grave mollit opus.
cantat et innitens limosae pronus harenae, adverso tardam qui trahit amne ratem;
quique refert pariter lentos ad pectora remos, in numerum pulsa brachia iactat aqua. 10 fessus ubi incubuit baculo saxove resedit pastor, harundineo carmine mulcet oves.
cantantis pariter, pariter data pensa trahentis, fallitur ancillae decipiturque labor.
fertur et abducta Lyrneside tristis Achilles 15 Haemonia curas attenuasse lyra.
cum traheret silvas Orpheus et dura canendo saxa, bis amissa coniuge maestus erat.
me quoque Musa levat Ponti loca iussa petentem:
sola comes nostrae perstitit illa fugae; 20
sola nec insidias, nec Sinti militis ensem, nec mare nec ventos barbariamque timet.
scit quoque, cum perii, quis me deceperit error, et culpam in facto, non scelus, esse meo, scilicet hoc ipso nunc aequa, quod obfuit ante, 25 cum mecum iuncti criminis acta rea est.
non equidem vellem, quoniam nocitura fuerunt, Pieridum sacris inposuisse manum.
sed nunc quid faciam? vis me tenet ipsa sacrorum, et carmen demens carmine laesus amo. 30 sic nova Dulichio lotos gustata palato illo, quo nocuit, grata sapore fuit.

sentit amans sua damna fere, tamen haeret in illis, materiam culpae persequiturque suae.
nos quoque delectant, quamvis nocuere, libelli, 35 quodque mihi telum vulnera fecit, amo.
forsitan hoc studium possit furor esse videri, sed quiddam furor hic utilitatis habet:
semper in obtutu mentem vetat esse malorum, praesentis casus immemoremque facit. 40
utque suum Bacche non sentit saucia vulnus, dum stupet Idaeis exululata iugis, sic ubi mota calent viridi mea pectora thyrsos, altior humano spiritus ille malo est.
ille nec exilium, Scythici nec litora ponti, 45
ille nec iratos sentit habere deos.
utque soporiferae biberem si pocula Lethes, temporis adversi sic mihi sensus abest.
iure deas igitur veneror mala nostra levantes, sollicitae comites ex Helicone fugae, 50 et partim pelago, partim vestigia terra vel rate dignatas vel pede nostra sequi.
sint, precor, hae saltem faciles mihi! namque deorum cetera cum magno Caesare turba facit, meque tot adversis cumulant, quot litus harenas, 55
quotque fretum pisces, ovaque piscis habet.
vere prius flores, aestu numerabis aristas, poma per autumnum frigoribusque nives, quam mala, quae toto patior iactatus in orbe, dum miser Euxini litora laeva peto. 60 nec tamen, ut veni, levior fortuna malorum est:
huc quoque sunt nostras fata secuta vias;
hic quoque cognosco natalis stamina nostri, stamina de nigro vellere facta mihi.
utque neque insidias capitisque pericula narrem, 65 vera quidem, veri sed graviora fide, vivere quam miserum est inter Bessosque Getasque illum, qui populi semper in ore fuit!

quam miserum est, porta vitam muroque tueri, vixque sui tutum viribus esse loci! 70 aspera militiae iuvenis certamina fugi, nec nisi lusura movimus arma manu;
nunc senior gladioque latus scutoque sinistram, canitiem galeae subicioque meam.
nam dedit e specula custos ubi signa tumultus, 75
induimus trepida protinus arma manu.
hostis habens arcus imbutaque tela venenis, saevus anhelanti moenia lustrat equo;
utque rapax pecudem, quae se non texit ovili, per sata, per silvas fertque trahitque lupo, 80 sic, siquem nondum portarum saepe receptum barbarus in campis repperit hostis, habet:
aut sequitur captus coniectaque vincula collo accipit, aut telo virus habente perit.
hic ego sollicitae iaceo novus incola sedis: 85 heu nimium fati tempora longa mei!
et tamen ad numeros antiquaque sacra reverti sustinet in tantis hospita Musa malis.
sed neque cui recitem quisquam est mea carmina, nec qui auribus accipiat verba Latina suis. 90 ipse mihi — quid enim faciam? — scriboque legoque, tutaque iudicio littera nostra meo est.
saepe tamen dixi ‘cui nunc haec cura laborat?
an mea Sauromatae scripta Getaeque legent?’
saepe etiam lacrimae me sunt scribente profusae, 95 umidaque est fletu littera facta meo, corque vetusta meum, tamquam nova, vulnera novit, inque sinum maestae labitur imber aquae.
cum, vice mutata, qui sim fuerimque, recordor et, tulerit quo me casus et unde, subit, 100 saepe manus demens, studiis irata sibique, misit in arsuos carmina nostra rogos.
atque ita, de multis quoniam non multa supersunt,

cum venia facito, quisquis es, ista legas.
tu quoque non melius, quam sunt mea tempora, carmen, 105 interdicta mihi, consule, Roma, boni.

II

iam fera Caesaribus Germania, totus ut orbis, victa potest flexo succubuisse genu, altaque velentur fortasse Palatia sertis, turaque in igne sonent inficiantque diem, candidaque adducta collum percussa securi 5 victima purpureo sanguine pulset humum, donaque amicorum templis promissa deorum reddere victores Caesar uterque parent;
et qui Caesareo iuvenes sub nomine crescunt, perpetuo terras ut domus illa regat, 10 cumque bonis nuribus pro sospite Livia nato munera det meritis, saepe datura, deis; et pariter matres et quae sine crimine castos perpetua servant virginitate focos; plebs pia cumque pia laetetur plebe senatus, 15
parvaque cuius eram pars ego nuper, eques.
nos procul expulsos communia gaudia fallunt, famaque tam longe non nisi parva venit.
ergo omnis populus poterit spectare triumphos, cumque ducum titulis oppida capta leget, 20 vinclaque captiva reges cervice gerentes ante coronatos ire videbit equos, et cernet vultus aliis pro tempore versos, terribiles aliis inmemoresque sui.
quorum pars causas et res et nomina quaeret, 25 pars referet, quamvis noverit illa parum:
'hic, qui Sidonio fulget sublimis in ostro, dux fuerat belli, proximus ille duci.
hic, qui nunc in humo lumen miserabile fixit, non isto vultu, cum tulit arma, fuit. 30 ille ferox et adhuc oculis hostilibus ardens hortator pugnae consiliumque fuit.

perfidus hic nostros inclusit fraude locorum, squalida promissis qui tegit ora comis.
illo, qui sequitur, dicunt mactata ministro 35
saepe recusanti corpora capta deo.
hic lacus, hi montes, haec tot castella, tot amnes plena ferae caedis, plena cruoris erant.
Drusus in his meruit quondam cognomina terris, quae bona progenies, digna parente, tulit. 40 cornibus hic fractis viridi male tectus ab ulva decolor ipse suo sanguine Rhenus erat.
crinibus en etiam fertur Germania passis, et ducis invicti sub pede maesta sedet, collaque Romanae praebens animosa securi 45 vincula fert illa, qua tulit arma, manu.’
hos super in curru, Caesar, victore veheris purpureus populi rite per ora tui, quaque ibis, manibus circumplaudere tuorum, undique iactato flore tegente vias. 50 tempora Phoebæ lauro cingetur ‘io’ que miles ‘io’ magna voce ‘trumphe’ canet.
ipse sono plausuque simul fremituque calentes quadriugos cernes saepe resistere equos.
inde petes arcem, delubra faventia votis, 55 et dabitur merito laurea vota Iovi.
haec ego summotus, qua possum, mente videbo:
erepti nobis ius habet illa loci;
illa per immensas spatiat libera terras, in caelum celeri pervenit illa fuga; 60
illa meos oculos mediam deducit in Urbem, immunes tanti nec sinit esse boni;
invenietque animus, qua currus spectet eburnos;
sic certe in patria per breve tempus ero.
vera tamen capiet populus spectacula felix, 65
laetaque erit praesens cum duce turba suo.
at mihi fingendo tantum longeque remotis auribus hic fructus percipiendus erit, aque procul Latio diversum missus in orbem qui narret cupido, vix erit, ista mihi. 70 is quoque iam serum referet veteremque triumphum:

quo tamen audiero tempore, laetus ero.
illa dies veniet, mea qua lugubria ponam, causaque privata publica maior erit.

III

Magna minorque ferae, quarum regis altera Graias,

altera Sidonias, utraque sicca, rates, omnia cum summo positae videatis in axe, et maris occiduas non subeatis aquas, aetheriamque suis cingens amplexibus arcem 5 vester ab intacta circulus extet humo, aspicite illa, precor, quae non bene moenia quondam dicitur Iliades transiluisse Remus, inque meam nitidos dominam convertite vultus, sitque memor nostri necne, referte mihi. 10

ei mihi, cur nimium quae sunt manifesta, requiro?
cur iacet ambiguo spes mea mixta metu?

crede quod est et vis, ac desine tuta vereri, deque fide certa sit tibi certa fides, quodque polo fixae nequeunt tibi dicere flammae, 15 non mentitura tu tibi voce refer,

esse tui memorem, de qua tibi maxima cura est, quodque potest, secum nomen habere tuum.

vultibus illa tuis tamquam praesentis inhaeret, ~teque remota procul~ si modo vivit, amat. 20

ecquid, ubi incubuit iusto mens aegra dolori, lenis ab admonito pectore somnus abit?

tunc subeunt curae, dum te lectus locusque tangit et oblitam non sinit esse mei, et veniunt aestus, et nox inmensa videtur, 25

fessaque iactati corporis ossa dolent?

non equidem dubito, quin haec et cetera fiant, detque tuus maesti signa doloris amor, nec cruciere minus, quam cum Thebana cruentum Hectora Thessalico vidit ab axe rapi. 30

quid tamen ipse precer dubito, nec dicere possum, affectum quem te mentis habere velim.
tristis es? indignor quod sim tibi causa doloris:
non es? at amisso coniuge digna fores.
tu vero tua damna dole, mitissima coniunx, 35 tempus et a nostris exige triste malis, fleque meos casus: est quaedam flere voluptas;
expletur lacrimis egeriturque dolor.
atque utinam lugenda tibi non vita, sed esset mors mea, morte fores sola relictæ mea! 40 spiritus hic per te patrias exisset in auras, sparsissent lacrimæ pectora nostra piaë, supremoque die notum spectantia caelum texissent digiti lumina nostra tui, et cinis in tumulo positus iacuisset avito, 45 tactaque nascenti corpus haberet humus;
denique, ut et vixi, sine crimine mortuus essem:
nunc mea supplicio vita pudenda suo est.
me miserum, si tu, cum diceris exulis uxor, avertis vultus et subit ora rubor! 50 me miserum, si turpe putas mihi nupta videri!
me miserum, si te iam pudet esse meam!
tempus ubi est illud, quo te iactare solebas coniuge, nec nomen dissimulare viri?
tempus ubi est, quo te — nisi non vis illa referri — 55 et dici, meminî, iuvit et esse meam?
utque probæ dignum est, omni tibi dote placebam:
addebat veris multa faventis amor.
nec, quem praeferres — ita res tibi magna videbar — quemque tuum malles esse, vir alter erat. 60 nunc quoque ne pudeat, quod sis mihi nupta, tuusque non debet dolor hinc, debet abesse pudor.
cum cecidit Capaneus subito temerarius ictu, num legis Euadnen erubuisse viro?
nec quia rex mundi compescuit ignibus ignes, 65
ipse suis Phaethon infitiandus erat.

nec Semele Cadmo facta est aliena parenti, quod precibus periit ambitiosa suis.
nec tibi, quod saevis ego sum Iovis ignibus ictus, purpureus molli fiat in ore pudor. 70
sed magis in curam nostri consurge tuendi, exemplumque mihi coniugis esto bonae, materiamque tuis tristem virtutibus imple:
ardua per praeceps gloria vadit iter.
Hectora quis nosset, si felix Troia fuisset? 75 publica virtuti per mala facta via est.
ars tua, Tiphys, vacet, si non sit in aequore fluctus:
si valeant homines, ars tua, Phoebæ, vacet.
quæ latet inque bonis cessat non cognita rebus, apparet virtus arguiturque malis. 80 dat tibi nostra locum tituli fortuna, caputque conspicuum pietas qua tua tollat, habet.
utere temporibus, quorum nunc munere facta est et patet in laudes area magna tuas.

IV

O qui, nominibus cum sis generosus avorum, exsuperas morum nobilitate genus, cuius inest animo patrii candoris imago,
non careat numeris candor ut iste suis, cuius in ingenio est patriae facundia linguae, 5 qua prior in Latio non fuit ulla foro:
quod minime volui, positis pro nomine signis dictus es: ignoscas laudibus ipse tuis.
nil ego peccavi; tua te bona cognita produnt;
si, quod es, appares, culpa soluta mea est. 10 nec tamen officium nostro tibi carmine factum principe tam iusto posse nocere puto.
ipse pater patriae — quid enim est civilius illo? — sustinet in nostro carmine saepe legi; nec prohibere potest, quia res est publica Caesar, 15 et de communi pars quoque nostra bono est.
Iuppiter ingeniis praebet sua numina vatium, seque celebrari quolibet ore sinit.
causa tua exemplo superiorum tuta deorum est, quorum hic aspicitur, creditur ille deus. 20 ut non debuerim, tamen hoc ego crimen habebō:
non fuit arbitrii littera nostra tui.
nec nova, quod tecum loquor, est iniuria nostra, incolumis cum quo saepe locutus eram.
quo vereare minus ne sim tibi crimen amicus, 25
invidiam, siqua est, auctor habere potest.
nam tuus est primis cultus mihi semper ab annis — hoc certe noli dissimulare — pater, ingeniumque meum (potes hoc meminisse) probabat plus etiam quam me iudice dignus eram; 30 deque meis illo referebat versibus ore,

in quo pars magnae nobilitatis erat.
non igitur tibi nunc, quod me domus ista recepit, sed prius auctori sunt data verba tuo.
nec data sunt, mihi crede, tamen, sed in omnibus actis, 35

ultima si demas, vita tuenda mea est.
hanc quoque, qua perii, culpam scelus esse negabis, si tanti series sit tibi nota mali.

aut timor aut error nobis, prius obfuit error.

ah! sine me fati non meminisse mei; 40 neve retractando nondum coeuntia rumpam vulnera: vix illis proderit ipsa quies.

ergo ut iure damus poenas, sic afuit omne peccato facinus consiliumque meo;

idque deus sentit; pro quo nec lumen ademptum, 45
nec mihi detractas possidet alter opes.

forsitan hanc ipsam, vivam modo, finiet olim, tempore cum fuerit lenior ira, fugam.

nunc precor hinc alio iubeat discedere, si non nostra verecundo vota pudore carent. 50

mitius exilium pauloque propinquius opto, quique sit a saevo longius hoste locus.

quantaque in Augusto clementia, si quis ab illo hoc peteret pro me, forsitan ille daret.

frigida me cohibent Euxini litora Ponti: 55 dictus ab antiquis Axenus ille fuit.

nam neque iactantur moderatis aequora ventis, nec placidos portus hospita navis adit.

sunt circa gentes, quae praedam sanguine quaerunt;
nec minus infida terra timetur aqua. 60

illi, quos audis hominum gaudere cruore, paene sub eiusdem sideris axe iacent, nec procul a nobis locus est, ubi Taurica dira caede pharetratae spargitur ara deae.

haec prius, ut memorant, non invidiosa nefandis 65
nec cupienda bonis regna Thoantis erant.

hic pro supposita virgo Pelopeia cerva sacra deae coluit qualiacumque suae.
quo postquam, dubium pius an sceleratus, Orestes exactus Furiis venerat ipse suis, 70 et comes exemplum veri Phoceus amoris, qui duo corporibus, mentibus unus erant, protinus evincti tristem ducuntur ad aram, quae stabat geminas ante cruenta fores.
nec tamen hunc sua mors, nec mors sua terruit illum; 75 alter ob alterius funera maestus erat.
et iam constiterat stricto mucrone sacerdos, cinxerat et Graias barbara vitta comas, cum vice sermonis fratrem cognovit, et illi pro nece complexus Iphigenia dedit. 80 laeta deae signum crudelia sacra perosae transtulit ex illis in meliora locis.
haec igitur regio, magni paene ultima mundi, quam fugere homines dique, propinqua mihi est;
aque mea terra prope sunt funebria sacra, 85
si modo Nasoni barbara terra sua est.
o utinam venti, quibus est ablatas Orestes, placato referant et mea vela deo!

V

O mihi dilectos inter pars prima sodales, unica fortunis ara reperta meis, cuius ab adloquiis anima haec moribunda revixit, ut vigil infusa Pallade flamma solet;
qui veritus non es portus aperire fideles       5 fulmine percussae confugiumque rati;
cuius eram censu non me sensurus egentem, si Caesar patrias eripuisset opes:
temporis oblitum dum me rapit impetus huius, excidit heu nomen quam mihi paene tuum!       10 tu tamen agnoscis, tactusque cupidine laudis ‘ille ego sum’ cuperes dicere posse palam.
certe ego, si sineres, titulum tibi reddere vellem, et raram famae conciliare fidem.
ne noceam grato vereor tibi carmine, neve       15 intempestivus nominis obstet honor.
quod licet et tutum est, intra tua pectora gaude meque tui memorem teque fuisse pium, utque facis, remis ad opem luctare ferendam, dum veniat placido mollior aura deo;       20 et tutare caput nulli servabile, si non qui mersit Stygia sublevet illud aqua; teque, quod est rarum, praesta constanter ad omne indeclinatae munus amicitiae.
sic tua processus habeat fortuna perennes,       25
sic ope non egeas ipse iuvesque tuos;
sic aequet tua nupta virum probitate perenni, incidat et vestro rara querela toro;
diligat et semper socius te sanguinis illo, quo pius affectu Castora frater amat;       30 sic iuvenis similisque tibi sit natus, et illum moribus agnoscat quilibet esse tuum;

sic faciat socerum taeda te nata iugali, nec tardum iuveni det tibi nomen avi.

VI

Tempore ruricolae patiens fit taurus aratri, praebet et incurvo colla premenda iugo;
tempore paret equus lentis animosus habenis, et placido duros accipit ore lupos;
tempore Poenorum compescitur ira leonum,      5 nec feritas animo, quae fuit ante, manet; quaeque sui monitis obtemperat Inda magistri belua, servitium tempore victa subit.
tempus ut extensis tumeat facit uva racemis, vixque merum capiant grana quod intus habent;      10 tempus et in canas semen producit aristas, et ne sint tristi poma sapore cavet.
hoc tenuat dentem terras renovantis aratri, hoc rigidas silices, hoc adamanta terit;
hoc etiam saevas paulatim mitigat iras,      15
    hoc minuit luctus maestaque corda levat.
cuncta potest igitur tacito pede lapsa vetustas praeterquam curas attenuare meas.
ut patria careo, bis frugibus area trita est, dissiluit nudo pressa bis uva pede.      20 nec quaesita tamen spatio patientia longo est, mensque mali sensum nostra recentis habet.
scilicet et veteres fugiunt iuga saeva iuveni, et domitus freno saepe repugnat equus.
tristior est etiam praesens aerumna priore:      25
    ut sit enim sibi par, crevit et aucta mora est.
nec tam nota mihi, quam sunt, mala nostra fuerunt;
    nunc magis hoc, quo sunt cognitiora, gravant.
est quoque non nihilum vires afferre recentes, nec praeconsumptum temporis esse malis.      30
fortior in fulva novus est luctator harena, quam cui sunt tarda brachia fessa mora.

integer est melior nitidis gladiator in armis,
quam cui tela suo sanguine tincta rubent.
fert bene praecipites navis modo facta procellas: 35
quamlibet exiguo solvitur imbre vetus.
nos quoque vix ferimus (tulimus patientius ante) quae mala sunt longa multiplicata die.
credite, deficio, nostrisque, a corpore quantum auguror, accedent tempora parva malis. 40 nam neque sunt vires, nec qui color esse solebat:
vix habeo tenuem, quae tegat ossa, cutem.
corpore sed mens est aegro magis aegra, malique in circumspectu stat sine fine sui.
Vrbis abest facies, absunt, mea cura, sodales, 45 et, qua nulla mihi carior, uxor abest.
vulgus adest Scythicum bracataque turba Getarum:
sic me quae video non videoque movent.
una tamen spes est quae me soletur in istis,
haec fore morte mea non diuturna mala.

VII

Bis me sol adiit gelidae post frigora brumae, bisque suum tacto Pisce peregit iter.
tempore tam longo cur non tua dextera versus quamlibet in paucos officiosa fuit?
cur tua cessavit pietas scribentibus illis,       5 exiguus nobis cum quibus usus erat?
cur, quotiens alicui chartae sua vincula dempsi, illam speravi nomen habere tuum?
di faciant ut saepe tua sit epistula dextra scripta, sed e multis reddita nulla mihi.       10 quod precor, esse liquet: credam prius ora Medusae Gorgonis anguineis cincta fuisse comis, esse canes utero sub virginis, esse Chimaeram,
a truce quae flammis separet angue leam, quadrupesque hominis cum pectore pectora iunctos, 15 tergeminumque virum tergeminumque canem, Sphingaque et Harpyias serpentipedesque Gigantas, centimanumque Gyen semibovemque virum.
haec ego cuncta prius, quam te, carissime, credam mutatum curam deposuisse mei.       20 innumeri montes inter me teque viaeque fluminaque et campi nec freta pauca iacent:
mille potest causis, a te quae littera saepe missa sit, in nostras rara venire manus; mille tamen causas scribendo vince frequenter,       25
excusem ne te semper, amice, mihi.

VIII

iam mea cycneas imitantur tempora plumas, inficit et nigras alba senecta comas.
iam subeunt anni fragiles et inertior aetas, iamque parum firmo me mihi ferre grave est.
nunc erat, ut posito deberem fine laborum 5 vivere cor nullo sollicitante metu, quaeque meae semper placuerunt otia menti carpere et in studiis molliter esse meis, et parvam celebrare domum veteresque Penates et quae nunc domino rura paterna carent, 10 inque sinu dominae carisque sodalibus inque securus patria consenuisse mea.
haec mea sic quondam peragi speraverat aetas;
hos ego sic annos ponere dignus eram.
non ita dis visum est, qui me terraque marique 15
actum Sarmaticis exposuere locis.
in cava ducuntur quassae navalia puppes, ne temere in mediis dissoluantur aquis.
ne cadat et ~multas palmas inhonestet adeptus~ languidus in pratis gramina carpit equus. 20 miles ubi emeritis non est satis utilis annis, ponit ad antiquos, quae tulit, arma Lares.
sic igitur, tarda vires minuente senecta, me quoque donari iam rude tempus erat;
tempus erat nec me peregrinum ducere caelum, 25
nec siccam Getico fonte levare sitim, sed modo, quos habui, vacuos secedere in hortos, nunc hominum visu rursus et Vrbe frui.
sic animo quondam non divinante futura optabam placide vivere posse senex. 30 fata repugnarunt, quae, cum mihi tempora prima mollia praebuerint, posteriora gravant.

iamque decem lustris omni sine labe peractis, parte premor vitae deteriore meae;
nec procul a metis, quas paene tenere videbar, 35
curriculo gravis est facta ruina meo.
ergo illum demens in me saevire coegi, mitius inmensus quo nihil orbis habet, ipsaque delictis victa est clementia nostris, nec tamen errori vita negata meo est, 40 vita procul patria peragenda sub axe Boreo, qua maris Euxini terra sinistra iacet?
hoc mihi si Delphi Dodonaque diceret ipsa, esse videretur vanus uterque locus.
nil adeo validum est, adamas licet alliget illud, 45
ut maneat rapido firmitus igne Iovis;
nil ita sublime est supraque pericula tendit non sit ut inferius suppositumque deo.
nam quamquam vitio pars est contracta malorum, plus tamen exitii numinis ira dedit. 50
at vos admoniti nostris quoque casibus este, aequantem superos emeruisse virum.

IX

Si licet et pateris, nomen facinusque tacebo, et tua Lethaeis acta dabuntur aquis, nostraque vincetur lacrimis sententia seris, fac modo te pateat paenituisse tui;
fac modo te damnes cupiasque eradere vitae 5 tempora, si possis, Tisiphonaea tuae.
sin minus, et flagrant odio tua pectora nostri, induet infelix arma coacta dolor.
sim licet extremum, sicut sum, missus in orbem, nostra suas isto porriget ira manus. 10
omnia, si nescis, Caesar mihi iura reliquit, et sola est patria poena carere mea.
et patriam, modo sit sospes, speramus ab illo:
saepe Iovis telo quercus adusta viret.
denique vindictae si sit mihi nulla facultas, 15 Pierides vires et sua tela dabunt.
quod Scythicis habitem longe summotus in oris, siccaque sint oculis proxima signa meis, nostra per immensas ibunt praeconia gentes, quodque querar notum qua patet orbis erit. 20
ibit ad occasum quicquid dicemus ob ortu, testis et Hesperiae vocis Eous erit.
trans ego tellurem, trans altas audiar undas, et gemitus vox est magna futura mei;
nec tua te sontem tantummodo saecula norint, 25
perpetuae crimen posteritatis eris.
iam feror in pugnas et nondum cornua sumpsi, nec mihi sumendi causa sit ulla velim.
Circus adhuc cessat; spargit iam torvus harenam taurus et infesto iam pede pulsat humum. 30

hoc quoque, quam volui, plus est: cane, Musa, recessus, dum licet huic nomen dissimulare suum.

X

Ille ego qui fuerim, tenerorum lusor amorum, quem legis, ut noris, accipe posteritas.
Sulmo mihi patria est, gelidis uberrimus undis, milia qui novies distat ab Vrbe decem.
editus hic ego sum nec non ut tempora noris, 5 cum cecidit fato consul uterque pari.
si quid id est, usque a proavis vetus ordinis heres,
non modo fortunae munere factus eques.
nec stirps prima fui; genito sum fratre creatus, qui tribus ante quater mensibus ortus erat. 10 Lucifer amborum natalibus affuit idem:
una celebrata est per duo liba dies;
haec est armiferae festis de quinque Minervae, quae fieri pugna prima cruenta solet.
protinus excolimur teneri, curaque parentis 15
imus ad insignes Urbis ab arte viros.
frater ad eloquium viridi tendebat ab aevo, fortia verbosi natus ad arma fori;
at mihi iam puero caelestia sacra placebant, inque suum furtim Musa trahebat opus. 20
saepe pater dixit 'studium quid inutile temptas?
Maeonides nullas ipse reliquit opes.'
motus eram dictis, totoque Helicone relicto scribere temptabam verba soluta modis.
sponte sua carmen numeros veniebat ad aptos, 25 et quod temptabam scribere versus erat.
interea tacito passu labentibus annis liberior fratri sumpta mihiq̄ue toga est, induiturque umeris cum lato purpura clavo, et studium nobis, quod fuit ante, manet. 30
iamque decem vitae frater geminaverat annos, cum perit, et coepi parte carere mei.

cepimus et tenerae primos aetatis honores, eque viris quondam pars tribus una fui.
curia restabat: clavi mensura coacta est; 35
maius erat nostris viribus illud onus.
nec patiens corpus, nec mens fuit apta labori,
sollicitaeque fugax ambitionis eram, et petere Aoniae suadebant tuta sorores otia, iudicio semper amata meo. 40 temporis illius colui fovique poetas, quotque aderant vates, rebar adesse deos.
saepe suas volucres legit mihi grandior aevo, quaeque necet serpens, quae iuvet herba, Macer.
saepe suos solitus recitare Propertius ignes 45
iure sodalicii, quo mihi iunctus erat.
Ponticus heroo, Bassus quoque clarus iambis dulcia convictus membra fuere mei.
et tenuit nostras numerosus Horatius aures, dum ferit Ausonia carmina culta lyra. 50 Vergilium vidi tantum, nec avara Tibullo tempus amicitiae fata dedere meae.
successor fuit hic tibi, Galle, Propertius illi;
quartus ab his serie temporis ipse fui.
utque ego maiores, sic me coluere minores, 55 notaque non tarde facta Thalia mea est.
carmina cum primum populo iuvenilia legi, barba resecta mihi bisve semelve fuit.
moverat ingenium totam cantata per Urbem nomine non vero dicta Corinna mihi. 60 multa quidem scripsi, sed, quae vitiosa putavi, emendaturis ignibus ipse dedi.
tunc quoque, cum fugerem, quaedam placitura cremavi iratus studio carminibusque meis.
molle Cupidineis nec inexpugnabile telis 65
cor mihi, quodque levis causa moveret, erat.
cum tamen hic essem minimoque accenderer igni, nomine sub nostro fabula nulla fuit.

paene mihi puero nec digna nec utilis uxor est data, quae tempus perbreve nupta fuit. 70 illi successit, quamvis sine crimine coniunx, non tamen in nostro firma futura toro.
ultima, quae mecum seros permansit in annos, sustinuit coniunx exulis esse viri.
filia me mea bis prima fecunda iuventa, 75
sed non ex uno coniuge, fecit avum.
et iam complerat genitor sua fata novemque addiderat lustris altera lustra novem.
non aliter flevi, quam me fleturus adempto ille fuit; matri proxima iusta tuli. 80 felices ambo tempestiveque sepulti, ante diem poenae quod periere meae!
me quoque felicem, quod non viventibus illis sum miser, et de me quod doluere nihil!
si tamen extinctis aliquid nisi nomina restat, 85 et gracilis structos effugit umbra rogos, fama, parentales, si vos mea contigit, umbrae, et sunt in Stygio crimina nostra foro, scite, precor, causam (nec vos mihi fallere fas est) errorem iussae, non scelus, esse fugae. 90 manibus hoc satis est: ad vos, studiosa, revertor, pectora, qui vitae quaeritis acta meae.
iam mihi canities pulsus melioribus annis venerat, antiquas miscueratque comas, postque meos ortus Pisaea vinctus oliva 95 abstulerat deciens praemia victor equus, cum maris Euxini positos ad laeva Tomitas quaerere me laesi principis ira iubet.
causa meae cunctis nimium quoque nota ruinae indicio non est testificanda meo. 100 quid referam comitumque nefas famulosque nocentes?
ipsa multa tuli non leviora fuga. indignata malis mens est succumbere seque praestitit invictam viribus usa suis; oblitusque mei ductaeque per otia vitae      105 insolita cepi temporis arma manu;

totque tuli terra casus pelagoque quot inter occultum stellae conspicuumque polum.
tacta mihi tandem longis erroribus acto iuncta pharetratis Sarmatis ora Getis.      110 hic ego, finitimis quamvis circumsoner armis, tristia, quo possum, carmine fata levo.
quod quamvis nemo est, cuius referatur ad aures, sic tamen absumo decipioque diem.
ergo quod vivo durisque laboribus obsto,      115 nec me sollicitae taedia lucis habent, gratia, Musa, tibi: nam tu solacia praebes, tu curae requies, tu medicina venis.
tu dux et comes es, tu nos abducis ab Histro, in medioque mihi das Helicone locum;      120 tu mihi, quod rarum est, vivo sublime dedisti nomen, ab exequiis quod dare fama solet.
nec, qui detrectat praesentia, Livor iniquo ullum de nostris dente momordit opus.
nam tulerint magnos cum saecula nostra poetas,      125
    non fuit ingenio fama maligna meo, cumque ego praeponam multos mihi, non minor illis dicor et in toto plurimus orbe legor.
si quid habent igitur vatum praesagia veri, protinus ut moriar, non ero, terra, tuus.      130
sive favore tuli, sive hanc ego carmine famam, iure tibi grates, candide lector, ago.

LIBER QUINTUS

I

Hunc quoque de Getico, nostri studiose, libellum litore praemissis quattuor adde meis.
Hic quoque talis erit, qualis fortuna poetae:
inuenies toto carmine dulce nihil.
Flebilis ut noster status est, ita flebile carmen, materiae scripto conueniente suae.
Integer et laetus laeta et iuuenalia lusi:
illa tamen nunc me composuisse piget.
ut cecidi, subiti perago praeconia casus, sumque argumenti conditor ipse mei.
utque iacens ripa deflere Caystrius ales dicitur ore suam deficiente necem, sic ego, Sarmaticas longe proiectus in oras, efficio tacitum ne mihi funus eat.
Delicias siquis lasciuaque carmina quaerit, praemoneo, non est scripta quod ista legat.
Aptior huic Gallus blandique Propertius oris, aptior, ingenium come, Tibullus erit.
Atque utinam numero non nos essemus in isto!
ei mihi, cur umquam Musa iocata mea est?
Sed dedimus poenas, Scythicique in finibus Histri ille pharetrati lusor Amoris abest.
Quod superest, animos ad publica carmina flexi, et memores iussi nominis esse mei.
Si tamen ex uobis aliquis tam multa requiret, unde dolenda canam, multa dolenda tuli.
Non haec ingenio, non haec componimus arte:
materia est propriis ingeniosa malis.
Et quota fortunae pars est in carmine nostrae?
Felix, qui patitur quae numerare potest!
Quot frutices siluae, quot flauas Thybris harenas, mollia quot Martis gramina campus habet, tot mala pertulimus, quorum medicina quiesque nulla nisi in studio est Pieridumque mora.

“Quis tibi, Naso, modus lacrimosi carminis?” inquis:
idem, fortunae qui modus huius erit.
Quod querar, illa mihi pleno de fonte ministrat, nec mea sunt, fati uerba sed ista mei.
At mihi si cara patriam cum coniuge reddas, sint uultus hilares, simque quod ante fui.
Lenior inuicti si sit mihi Caesaris ira, carmina laetitiae iam tibi plena dabo.
Nec tamen ut lusit, rursus mea littera ludet:
sit semel illa ioco luxuriata meo.
Quod probet ipse, canam. Poenae modo parte leuata barbariam rigidos effugiamque Getas.
Interea nostri quid agant, nisi triste, libelli?
Tibia funeribus conuenit ista meis.
“At poteras” inquis “melius mala ferre silendo, et tacitus casus dissimulare tuos.” Exigis ut nulli gemitus tormenta sequantur, acceptoque graui uulnere flere uetas?
Ipse Perilleo Phalaris permisit in aere edere mugitus et bouis ore queri.
Cum Priami lacrimis offensus non sit Achilles, tu fletus inhibes, durior hoste, meos?
Cum faceret Nioben orbam Latonia proles, non tamen et siccas iussit habere genas.
Est aliquid, fatale malum per uerba leuare:
hoc querulam Procnem Halcyonenque facit.
Hoc erat, in gelido quare Poeantius antro uoce fatigaret Lemnia saxa sua.
Strangulat inclusus dolor atque exaestuat intus, cogitur et uires multiplicare suas.
Da ueniam potius, uel totos tolle libellos, sic mihi quod prodest si tibi, lector, obest.
Sed neque obesse potest, ulli nee scripta fuerunt nostra nisi auctori perniciosa suo.

“At mala sunt.” Fateor. Quis te mala sumere cogit?
Aut quis deceptum ponere sumpta uetat?
Ipse nec emendo, sed ut hic deducta legantur; non sunt illa suo barbariora loco.
Nec me Roma suis debet conferre poetis:
inter Sauromatas ingeniosus eram.
Denique nulla mihi captatur gloria, quaeque ingeniis stimulos subdere fama solet.
Nolumus assiduis animum tabescere curis, quae tamen irrumpunt quoque uetantur eunt.
Cur scribam, docui. Cur mittam, quaeritis, isto?
uobiscum cupio quolibet esse modo.

II

Ecquid ubi e Ponto noua uenit epistula, palles, et tibi sollicita soluitur illa manu?
Pone metum, ualeo; corpusque, quod ante laborum inpatiens nobis inualidumque fuit, sufficit, atque ipso uexatum induruit usu.
An magis infirmo non uacat esse mihi?
Mens tamen aegra iacet, nec tempore robora sumpsit, affectusque animi, qui fuit ante, manet.
Quaeque mora spatioque suo coitura putau uulnera non aliter quam modo facta dolent.
Scilicet exiguis prodest annosa uetustas;
grandibus accedunt tempore damna malis.
Paene decem totis aluit Poeantius annis pestiferum tumido uulnus ab angue datum.
Telephus aeterna consumptus tabe perisset, si non, quae nocuit, dextra tulisset opem.
Et mea, si facinus nullum commisimus, opto, uulnera qui fecit, facta leuare uelit, contentusque mei iam tandem parte doloris exiguum pleno de mare demat aquae.
Detrahat ut multum, multum restabit acerbi, parsque meae poenae totius instar erit.
Litora quot conchas, quot amoena rosaria flores, quotue soporiferum grana papauer habet, silua feras quot alit, quot piscibus unda natatur, quot tenerum pennis aera pulsat auis, tot premor aduersis: quae si conprendere coner, Icariae numerum dicere coner aquae.
utque uiae casus, ut amam pericula ponti, ut taceam strictas in mea fata manus, barbara me tellus orbisque nouissima magni sustinet et saeuo cinctus ab hoste locus.

Hinc ego traicerer (neque enim mea culpa cruenta est)
    esset, quae debet, si tibi cura mei.
Ille deus, bene quo Romana potentia nixa est, saepe suo uictor lenis in hoste fuit.
Quid dubitas et tuta times? Accede rogaque:
    Caesare nil ingens mitius orbis habet.
Me miserum! Quid agam, si proxima quaeque relinquunt?
    Subtrahis effracto tu quoque colla iugo?
Quo ferar? unde petam lassis solacia rebus?
    Ancora iam nostram non tenet ulla ratem.
Videris. Ipse sacram, quamuis inuisus, ad aram confugiam: nullas summouet ara manus.
Alloquor en absens absentia numina supplex, si fas est homini cum Ioue posse loqui.
Arbiter imperii, quo certum est sospite cunctos Ausoniae curam gentis habere deos, o decus, o patriae per te florentis imago,
    o uir non ipso, quem regis, orbe minor (sic habites terras et te desideret aether, sic ad pacta tibi sidera tardus eas) parce, precor, minimamque tuo de fulmine partem deme: satis poenae, quod superabit, erit.
Ira quidem moderata tua est, uitamque dedisti, nec mihi ius ciuis nec mihi nomen abest, nec mea concessa est aliis fortuna, nec exul edicti uerbis nominor ipse tui.
Omniaque haec timui, quia me meruisse uidebam;
    sed tua peccato lenior ira meo est.
Arua relegatum iussisti uisere Ponti, et Scythicum profuga scindere puppe fretum.
Iussus ad Euxini deformia litora ueni aequoris (haec gelido terra sub axe iacet) nec me tam cruciat numquam sine frigore caelum, glabraeque canenti semper obusta gelu, nesciaque est uocis quod barbara lingua Latinae,

Graecaque quod Getico uicta loquela sono est, quam quod finitimo cinctus premor undique Marte, uixque breuis tutum murus ab hoste facit.
Pax tamen interdum est, pacis fiducia numquam.
Sic hic nunc patitur, nunc timet arma locus.
Hinc ego dum muter, uel me Zancleae Charybdis deuoret atque suis ad Styga mittat aquis, uel rapidae flammis urar patienter in Aetnae, uel freta Leucadii mittar in alta dei.
Quod petimus, poena est: neque enim miser esse recuso, sed precor ut possim tutius esse miser.

III

Illa dies haec est, qua te celebrare poetae, si modo non fallunt tempora, Bacche, solent, festaque odoratis innectunt tempora sertis, et dicunt laudes ad tua uina tuas.
Inter quos, memini, dum me mea fata sinebant,
non inuisa tibi pars ego saepe fui, quem nunc suppositum stellis Cynosuridos Vrsae iuncta tenet crudis Sarmatis ora Getis.
Quique prius mollem uacuumque laboribus egi in studiis uitam Pieridumque choro, nunc procul a patria Geticis circumsonor armis, multa prius pelago multaue passus humo.
Siue mihi casus siue hoc dedit ira deorum, nubila nascenti seu mihi Parca fuit, tu tamen e sacris hederæ cultoribus unum numine debueras sustinuisse tuo.
An dominae fati quicquid cecinere sorores, omne sub arbitrio desinit esse dei?
Ipse quoque aetherias meritis inuectus es arces, quo non exiguo facta labore uia est.
Nec patria est habitata tibi, sed adusque niuosum Strymona uenisti Marticolamque Geten, Persidaque et lato spatiantem flumine Gangen, et quascumque bibit decolor Indus aquas.
Scilicet hanc legem nentes fatalia Parcae stamina bis genito bis cecinere tibi.
Me quoque, si fas est exemplis ire deorum,
ferrea sors uitae difficilisque premit.
Illo nec leuius cecidi, quem magna locutum reppulit a Thebis Iuppiter igne suo.
ut tamen audisti percussum fulmine uatem, admonitu matris condoluisse potes, et potes aspiciens circum tua sacra poetas “nescioquis nostri” dicere “cultor abest.”

Fer, bone Liber, opem: sic altera degraue ulmum uitis et incluso plena sit uua mero, sic tibi cum Bacchis Satyrorum gnaua iuuentus adsit, et attonito non taceare sono, ossa bipenniferi sic sint male pressa Lycurgi, impia nec poena Pentheos umbra uacet, sic micet aeternum uicinaque sidera uincat coniugis in caelo clara corona tuae:
huc ades et casus releues, pulcherrime, nostros, unum de numero me memor esse tuo.
Sunt dis inter se commercia. Flectere tempta Caesareum numen numine, Bacche, tuo.
Vos quoque, consortes studii, pia turba, poetae,
haec eadem sumpto quisque rogate mero.
Atque aliquis uestrum, Nasonis nomine dicto, opponat lacrimis pocula mixta suis, admonitusque mei, cum circumspexerit omnes, dicat “ubi est nostri pars modo Naso chori?” Idque ita, si uestrum merui candore fauorem, nullaque iudicio littera laesa meo est,
si, ueterum digne ueneror cum scripta uirorum, proxima non illis esse minora reor.
Sic igitur dextro faciatis Apolline carmen:
quod licet, inter uos nomen habete meum.

IV

Litore ab Euxino Nasonis epistula ueni, lassaque facta mari lassaque facta uia, qui mihi flens dixit "tu, cui licet, aspice Romam.
Heu quanto melior sors tua sorte mea est!"
Flens quoque me scripsit: nec qua signabar, ad os est ante, sed ad madidas gemma relata genas.
Tristitiae causam siquis cognoscere quaerit, ostendi solem postulat ille sibi, nec frondem in siluis, nec aperto mollia prato gramina, nec pleno flumine cernit aquam;
quid Priamus doleat, mirabitur, Hectore raptio, quidue Philoctetes ictus ab angue gemat.
Di facerent utinam talis status esset in illo, ut non tristitiae causa dolenda foret!
Fert tamen, ut debet, casus patienter amarus, more nec indomiti frena recusat equi.
Nec fore perpetuam sperat sibi numinis iram, consciis in culpa non scelus esse sua.
Saepe refert, sit quanta dei clementia, cuius se quoque in exemplis adnumerare solet:
nam, quod opes teneat patrias, quod nomina ciuis, denique quod uiuat, munus habere dei.
Te tamen (o, si quid credis mihi, carior illi omnibus) in toto pectore semper habet; teque Menoetiaden, te, qui comitatus Oresten, te uocat Aegiden Euryalumque suum.
Nec patriam magis ille suam desiderat et quae plurima cum patria sentit abesse sibi, quam uultus oculosque tuos, o dulcior illo melle, quod in ceris Attica ponit apis.
Saepe etiam maerens tempus reminiscitur illud, quod non praeuentum morte fuisse dolet;

cumque alii fugerent subitae contagia cladis, nec uellent ictae limen adire domus, te sibi cum paucis meminit mansisse fidelem, si paucos aliquis tresue duosue uocat.
Quamuis attonitus, sensit tamen omnia, nec te se minus aduersis indoluisse suis.
Verba solet uultumque tuum gemitusque referre, et te flente suos emaduisse sinus:
quam sibi praestiteris, qua consolatus amicum sis ope, solandus cum simul ipse fores.
Pro quibus affirmat fore se memoremque piūque, siue diem uideat siue tegatur humo, per caput ipse suum solitus iurare tuūque, quod scio non illi uilius esse suo.
Plena tot ac tantis referetur gratia factis, nec sinet ille tuos litus arare boues.
Fac modo, constanter profugum tueare: quod ille, qui bene te nouit, non rogat, ipsa rogo.

V

Annus assuetum dominae natalis honorem exigit: ite manus ad pia sacra meae.
Sic quondam festum Laertius egerat heros forsan in extremo coniugis orbe diem.
Lingua fauens adsit, nostrorum oblita malorum, quae, puto, dedidicit iam bona uerba loqui:
quaeque semel toto uestis mihi sumitur anno,
sumatur fatis discolor alba meis;
araque gramineo uiridis de caespite fiat, et uelet tepidos nexa corona focos.
da mihi tura, puer, pingues facientia flammis, quodque pio fusum stridat in igne merum.
Optime natalis! Quamuis procul absumus, opto candidus huc uenias dissimilisque meo, si quod et instabat dominae miserabile uulnus sit perfuncta meis tempus in omne malis; quaeque graui nuper plus quam quassata procella est,
quod superest, tutum per mare nauis eat.
Illa domo nataque sua patriaque fruatur (erepta haec uni sit satis esse mihi) quatenus et non est in caro coniuge felix pars uitae tristi cetera nube uacet.
Viuat, ametque uirum, quoniam sic cogitur, absens, consumatque annos, sed diuturna, suos.
Adicerem et nostros, sed ne contagia fati corrumpant timeo, quos agit ipsa, mei.
Nil homini certum est. Fieri quis posse putaret, ut facerem in mediis haec ego sacra Getis?
Aspice ut aum tamen fumos e ture coortos in partes Italas et loca dextra ferat.
Sensus inest igitur nebulis, quas exigit ignis:

consilio fugiunt aethera, Ponte, tuum.
Consilio, commune sacrum cum fiat in ara fratribus, alterna qui periere manu, ipsa sibi discors, tamquam mandetur ab illis, scinditur in partes atra fauilla duas.
Hoc, memini, quondam fieri non posse loquebar, et me Battiades iudice falsus erat:
omnia nunc credo, cum tu non stultus ab Arcto terga uapor dederis Ausoniamque petas.
Haec ergo lux est, quae si non orta fuisset,
nulla fuit misero festa uidenda mihi.
Edidit haec mores illis heroisin aequos, quis erat Eetion Icariusque pater.
Nata pudicitia est, uirtus probitasque, fidesque, at non sunt ista gaudia nata die, sed labor et curae fortunaque moribus inpar, iustaque de uiduo paene querela toro.
Scilicet aduersis probitas exercita rebus tristi materiam tempore laudis habet.
Si nihil infesti durus uidisset Vlixes,
Penelope felix sed sine laude foret.
Victor Echionias si uir penetrasset in arces, forsitan Euadnen uix sua nosset humus.
Cum Pelia genitae tot sint, cur nobilis una est?
Nempe fuit misero nupta quod una uiro.
Effice ut Iliacas tangat prior alter harenas, Laudamia nihil cur referatur erit.
Et tua, quod malles, pietas ignota maneret, implerent uenti si mea uela sui.
Di tamen et Caesar dis accessure, sed olim, aequarint Pylios cum tua fata dies, non mihi, qui poenam fateor meruisse, sed illi parcite, quae nullo digna dolore dolet.

VI

Tu quoque, nostrarum quondam fiducia rerum, qui mihi confugium, qui mihi portus eras, tu quoque suscepti curam dimittis amici, officiiue pium tam cito ponis onus?
sarcina sum, fateor, quam si non tempore nostro depositurus eras, non subeunda fuit.
Fluctibus in mediis nauem, Palinure, relinquis?
Ne fuge, neue tua sit minor arte fides.
Numquid Achilleos inter fera proelia fidi deseruit leuitas Automedontis equos?
Quem semel excepit, numquam Podalirius aegro promissam medicae non tulit artis opem.
Turpius eicitur, quam non admittitur hospes quae patuit, dextrae firma sit ara meae.
Nil nisi me solum primo tutatus es; at nunc me pariter serua iudiciumque tuum, si modo non aliqua est in me noua culpa, tuamque mutarunt subito crimina nostra fidem.
Spiritus hic, Scythica quem non bene ducimus aura, quod cupio, membris exeat ante meis, quam tua delicto stringantur pectora nostro, et uidear merito uilior esse tibi.
Non adeo toti fatis urgemur iniquis, ut mea sit longis mens quoque mota malis.
Finge tamen motam, quotiens Agamemnone natum dixisse in Pyladen improba uerba putas?
Nec procul a uero est quin et pulsarit amicum:
mansit in officiis non minus ille suis.
Hoc est cum miseris solum commune beatis, ambobus tribui quod solet obsequium:
ceditur et caecis et quos praetexta uerendos uirgaque cum uerbis inperiosa facit.

Si mihi non parcis, fortunae parcere debes:
non habet in nobis ullius ira locum.
Elige nostrorum minimum minimumque laborum, isto, quod reris, grandius illud erit.
Quam multa madidae celantur harundine fossae, florida quam multas Hybla tuetur apes, quam multae gracili terrena sub horrea ferre limite formicae grana reperta solent, tam me circumstat densorum turba malorum.
Crede mihi, uero est nostra querela minor.
His qui contentus non est, in litus harenas,
in segetem spicas, in mare fundat aquas.
Intempestiuos igitur compesce tumores, uela nec in medio desere nostra mari.

VII

Quam legis, ex illa tibi uenit epistula terra, latus ubi aequoreis additur Hister aquis.
Si tibi contingit cum dulci uita salute, candida fortunae pars manet uria meae.
Scilicet, ut semper, quid agam, carissime, quaeris, quamuis hoc uel me scire tacente potes.
Sum miser, haec breuis est nostrorum summa malorum, quisquis et offenso Caesare uiuit, erit.
Turba Tomitanae quae sit regionis et inter quos habitem mores, discere cura tibi est?
Mixta sit haec quamuis inter Graecosque Getasque, a male pacatis plus trahit ora Getis.
Sarmaticae maior Geticaeque frequentia gentis per medias in equis itque reditque uias.
In quibus est nemo, qui non coryton et arcum telaque uipereo lurida felle gerat.
Vox fera, trux uultus, uerissima Martis imago, non coma, non ulla barba resecta manu, dextera non segnis fixo dare uulnera cultro,
quem iunctum lateri barbarus omnis habet.
Viuit in his heu nunc, lusorum oblitus amorum, hos uidet, hos uates audit, amice, tuus:
atque utinam uiuat non et moriatur in illis, absit ab inuisis et tamen umbra locis.
Carmina quod pleno saltari nostra teatro, uersibus et plaudi scribis, amice, meis, nil equidem feci (tu scis hoc ipse) theatris, Musa nec in plausus ambitiosa mea est.
Non tamen ingratum est, quodcumque obliuia nostri impedit et profugi nomen in ora refert.
Quamuis interdum, quae me laesisse recordor, carmina deuoueo Pieridasque meas, cum bene deuoui, nequeo tamen esse sine illis uulneribusque meis tela cruenta sequor, quaeque modo Euboicis lacerata est fluctibus, audet Graia Capheream currere puppis aquam.

Nec tamen, ut lauder, uigilo curamque futuri nominis, utilius quod latuisset, ago.
Detineo studiis animum falloque dolores,
experior curis et dare uerba meis.
Quid potius faciam desertis solus in oris, quamue malis aliam quaerere coner opem?
Siue locum specto, locus est inamabilis, et quo esse nihil toto tristius orbe potest, siue homines, uix sunt homines hoc nomine digni, quamque lupi, saeuae plus feritatis habent.
Non metuunt leges, sed cedit uiribus aequum, uictaque pugnaci iura sub ense iacent.
Pellibus et laxis arcent mala frigora braxis, oraque sunt longis horrida tecta comis.
In paucis remanent Graecae uestigia linguae,
haec quoque iam Getico barbara facta sono.
unus in hoc nemo est populo, qui forte Latine quaelibet e medio reddere uerba queat.
Ille ego Romanus uates (ignoscite, Musae) Sarmatico cogor plurima more loqui.
En pudet et fateor, iam desuetudine longa uix subeunt ipsi uerba Latina mihi.
Nec dubito quin sint et in hoc non pauca libello barbara: non hominis culpa, sed ista loci.
Ne tamen Ausoniae perdam commercia linguae, et fiat patrio uox mea muta sono, ipse loquor mecum desuetaque uerba retracto, et studii repeto signa sinistra mei.
Sic animum tempusque traho, sic meque reduco
a contemplatu summoueoque mali.

Carminibus quaero miserarum obliuia rerum:
praemia si studio consequar ista, sat est.

VIII

Non adeo cecidi, quamuis abiectus, ut infra te quoque sim, inferius quo nihil esse potest.
Quae tibi res animos in me facit, improbe? Curue casibus insultas, quos potes ipse pati?
Nec mala te reddunt mitem placidumque iacenti nostra, quibus possint inlacrimare ferae;
nec metuis dubio Fortunae stantis in orbe numen, et exosae uerba superba deae.
Exigit a dignis ultrix Rhamnusia poenas:
inposito calcas quid mea fata pede?
Vidi ego naufragium qui risit in aequora mergi, et "numquam" dixi "iustior unda fuit."
Vilia qui quondam miseris alimenta negarat, nunc mendicato pascitur ipse cibo.
Passibus ambiguis Fortuna uolubilis errat et manet in nullo certa tenaxque loco, sed modo laeta uenit, uultus modo sumit acerbos, et tantum constans in leuitate sua est.
Nos quoque floruimus, sed flos erat ille caducus, flammaque de stipula nostra breuisque fuit.
Neue tamen tota capias fera gaudia mente, non est placandi spes mihi nulla dei, uel quia peccaui citra scelus, utque pudore non caret, inuidia sic mea culpa caret, uel quia nil ingens ad finem solis ab ortu illo, cui paret, mitius orbis habet.
Scilicet ut non est per uim superabilis ulli, molle cor ad timidas sic habet ille preces, exemploque deum, quibus accessurus et ipse est,
cum poenae uenia plura roganda dabit.
Si numeres anno soles et nubila toto, inuenies nitidum saepius isse diem ergo ne nimium nostra laetere ruina, restitui quondam me quoque posse puta:

posse puta fieri lenito principe uultus ut uideas media tristis in urbe meos, utque ego te uideam causa grauiore fugatum,
    haec sunt a primis proxima uota meis.

IX

O tua si sineres in nostris nomina poni carminibus, positus quam mihi saepe fores!
Te canerem solum, meriti memor, inque libellis creuisset sine te pagina nulla meis.
Quid tibi deberem, tota sciretur in urbe, exul in amissa si tamen urbe legor.
Te praesens mitem nosset, te serior aetas, scripta uetustatem si modo nostra ferunt, nec tibi cessaret doctus bene dicere lector:
    hic te seruato uate maneret honor.
Caesaris est primum munus, quod ducimus auras;
    gratia post magnos est tibi habenda deos.
Ille dedit uitam; tu, quam dedit ille, tueris, et facis accepto munere posse frui.
Cumque perhorruerit casus pars maxima nostros, pars etiam credi pertimuisse uelit, naufragiumque meum tumulo spectarit ab alto, nec dederit nanti per freta saeua manum, seminecem Stygia reuocasti solus ab unda.
    Hoc quoque, quod memores possumus esse, tuum est.
Di tibi se tribuant cum Caesare semper amicos:
    non potuit uotum plenius esse meum.
Haec meus argutis, si tu paterere, libellis poneret in multa luce uidenda labor; nunc quoque se, quamuis est iussa quiescere, quin te nominet inuitum, uix mea Musa tenet.
utque canem puidae nactum uestigia ceruae latrantem frustra copula dura tenet, utque fores nondum reserati carceris acer nunc pede, nunc ipsa fronte lacessit equus, sic mea lege data uincta atque inclusa Thalia per titulum uetiti nominis ire cupit.

Ne tamen officio memoris laedaris amici, parebo iussis (parce timere) tuis.
At non parerem, nisi me meminisse putares.
Hoc quod non prohibet uox tua, gratus ero.
Dumque (quod o breue sit!) lumen uitale uidebo, seruiet officio spiritus iste tuo.

X

Vt sumus in Ponto, ter frigore constitit Hister, facta est Euxini dura ter unda maris.
At mihi iam uideor patria procul esse tot annis, Dardana quot Graio Troia sub hoste fuit.
Stare putes, adeo procedunt tempora tarde, et peragit lentis passibus annus iter.
Nec mihi solstitium quicquam de noctibus aufert, efficit angustos nec mihi bruma dies.
Scilicet in nobis rerum natura nouata est,
cumque meis curis omnia longa facit.
An peragunt solitos communia tempora motus, stantque magis uitae tempora dura meae?
Quem tenet Euxini mendax cognomine litus, et Scythici uere terra sinistra freti.
Innumerae circa gentes fera bella minantur, quae sibi non rapto uiuere turpe putant.
Nil extra tutum est: tumulus defenditur ipse moenibus exiguis ingenioque loci.
Cum minime credas, ut aues, densissimus hostis aduolat, et praedam uix bene uisus agit.
Saepe intra muros clausis uenientia portis per medias legimus noxia tela uias.
Est igitur rarus, rus qui colere audeat, isque hac arat infelix, hac tenet arma manu.
Sub galea pastor iunctis pice cantat auenis, proque lupo puidae bella uerentur oues.
Vix ope castelli defendimur; et tamen intus mixta facit Graecis barbara turba metum.
Quippe simul nobis habitat discrimine nullo barbarus et tecti plus quoque parte tenet.
Quorum ut non timeas, possis odisse uidendo pellibus et longa pectora tecta coma.

Hos quoque, qui geniti Graia creduntur ab urbe, pro patrio cultu Persica braca tegit.
Exercent illi sociae commercia linguae:
per gestum res est significanda mihi.
Barbarus hic ego sum, qui non intellegor ulli, et rident stolidi uerba Latina Getae;
meque palam de me tuto mala saepe loquuntur, forsitan obiciunt exiliumque mihi.
utque fit, in me aliquid ficti, dicentibus illis abnuerim quotiens annuerimque, putant.
Adde quod iniustum rigido ius dicitur ense, dantur et in medio uulnera saepe foro.
O duram Lachesin, quae tam graue sidus habenti fila dedit uitae non breuiora meae!
Quod patriae uultu uestroque caremus, amici, atque hic in Scythicis gentibus esse queror:
utraque poena grauis. Merui tamen urbe carere, non merui tali forsitan esse loco.
Quid loquor, a! Demens? Ipsam quoque perdere uitam, Caesaris offenso numine. Dignus eram.

XI

Quod te nescioquis per iurgia dixerit esse exulis uxorem, littera questa tua est.
Indolui, non tam mea quod fortuna male audit, qui iam consueui fortiter esse miser, quam quod cui minime uellem, sum causa pudoris, teque reor nostris erubuisse malis.
Perfer et obdura; multo grauiora tulisti, eripuit cum me principis ira tibi.
Fallitur iste tamen, quo iudice nominor exul:
mollior est culpam poena secuta meam.
Maxima poena mihi est ipsum offendisse, priusque uenisset mallem funeris hora mihi.
Quassa tamen nostra est, non mersa nec obruta nauis, utque caret portu, sic tamen exstat aquis.
Nec uitam nec opes nec ius mihi ciuis ademit, qui merui uitio perdere cuncta meo.
Sed quia peccato facinus non affuit illi, nil nisi me patriis iussit abesse focus.
utque aliis, quorum numerum comprehendere non est Caesareum numen sic mihi mite fuit.
Ipse relegati, non exulis utitur in me nomine: tuta suo iudice causa mea est.
Iure igitur laudes, Caesar, pro parte uirili carmina nostra tuas qualiacumque canunt:
iure deos, ut adhuc caeli tibi limina claudant,
teque uelint sine se, comprecor, esse deum.
Optat idem populus; sed, ut in mare flumina uastum, sic solet exiguae currere riuus aquae.
At tu fortuna, cuius uocor exul ab ore, nomine mendaci parce grauate meam.

XII

Scribis, ut oblectem studio lacrimabile tempus, ne pereant turpi pectora nostra situ.
Difficile est quod, amice, mones, quia carmina laetum sunt opus, et pacem mentis habere uolunt.
Nostra per aduersas agitur fortuna procellas, sorte nec ulla mea tristior esse potest.
Exigis ut Priamus natorum funere plaudat, et Niobe festos ducat ut orba choros.
Luctibus an studio uideor debere teneri, solus in extremos iussus abire Getas?
Des licet in ualido pectus mihi robore fultum, fama refert Anyti quale fuisse reo, fracta cadet tantae sapientia mole ruinae:
plus ualet humanis uiribus ira dei.
Ille senex, dictus sapiens ab Apolline, nullum scribere in hoc casu sustinisset opus.
ut ueniant patriae, ueniant obliuia uestri, omnis ut amissi sensus abesse queat,
at timor officio fungi uetat ipse quietum:
cinctus ab innumero me tenet hoste locus.
Adde quod ingenium longa rubigine laesum torpet et est multo, quam fuit ante, minus.
Fertilis, assiduo si non renouetur aratro, nil nisi cum spinis gramen habebit ager.
Tempore qui longo steterit, male curret et inter carceribus missos ultimus ibit equus.
Vertitur in teneram cariem rimisque dehiscit, siqua diu solitis cumba uacauit aquis.
Me quoque despera, fuerim cum paruus et ante,
illi, qui fueram, posse redire parem.
Contudit ingenium patientia longa malorum,

et pars antiqui nulla uigoris adest.
Siqua tamen nobis, ut nunc quoque, sumpta tabella est, inque suos uolui cogere uerba pedes, carmina nulla mihi sunt scripta, aut qualia cernis digna sui domini tempore, digna loco.
Denique "non paruas animo dat gloria uires, et fecunda facit pectora laudis amor."
Nominis et famae quondam fulgore trahebar, dum tulit antemnas aura secunda meas.
Non adeo est bene nunc ut sit mihi gloria curae:
si liceat, nulli cognitus esse uelim.
An quia cesserunt primo bene carmina, suades scribere, successus ut sequar ipse meos?
Pace, nouem, uestra liceat dixisse, sorores:
uos estis nostrae maxima causa fugae.
utque dedit iustas tauri fabricator aeni, sic ego do poenas artibus ipse meis.
Nil mihi debebat cum uersibus amplius esse,
at, puto, si demens studium fatale retemptem, hic mihi praebebit carminis arma locus.
Non liber hic ullus, non qui mihi commodet aurem, uerbaque significant quid mea, norit, adest.
Omnia barbariae loca sunt uocisque ferinae, omniaque hostilis plena timore soni.
Ipse mihi uideor iam dedidicisse Latine:
nam didici Getice Sarmaticeque loqui.
Nec tamen, ut uerum fatear tibi, nostra teneri
a componendo carmine Musa potest.
Scribimus et scriptos absumimus igne libellos:
exitus est studii parua fauilla mei.
Nec possum et cupio non nullos ducere uersus:
ponitur idcirco noster in igne labor, nec nisi pars casu flammis erepta doloue ad uos ingenii peruenit ulla mei.
Sic utinam, quae nil metuentem tale magistrum perdidit, in cineres Ars mea uersa foret!

XIII

Hanc tuus e Getico mittit tibi Naso salutem, mittere si quisquam, quo caret ipse, potest.
Aeger enim traxi contagia corpore mentis, libera tormento pars mihi ne qua uacet.
Perque dies multos lateris cruciatibus utor;
scilicet inmodico frigore laesit hiems.
Si tamen ipse uales, aliqua nos parte ualemus:
quippe mea est umeris fulta ruina tuis.
Quid, mihi cum dederis ingentia pignora, cumque per numeros omnes hoc tueare caput, quod tua me raro solatur epistula, peccas, remque piam praestas, sed mihi uerba negas?
Hoc, precor, emenda: quod si correxeris unum, nullus in egregio corpore naeuus erit.
Pluribus accusem, fieri nisi possit, ut ad me littera non ueniat, missa sit illa tamen.
Di faciant, ut sit temeraria nostra querela, teque putem falso non meminisse mei.
Quod precor, esse liquet: neque enim mutabile robur credere me fas est pectoris esse tui.
Cana prius gelido desint absinthia Ponto, et careat dulci Trinacris Hybla thymo, inmemorem quam te quisquam conuincat amici.
Non ita sunt fati stamina nigra mei.
Tu tamen, ut possis falsae quoque pellere culpa crimina, quod non es, ne uideare, caue.
utque solebamus consumere longa loquendo tempora, sermoni deficiente die, sic ferat ac referat tacitas nunc littera uoces, et peragant linguae charta manusque uices.
Quod fore ne nimium uidear diffidere, sitque uersibus hoc paucis admonuisse satis, accipe quo semper finitur epistula uerbo, (atque meis distent ut tua fata!) "uale".

XIV

Quanta tibi dederim nostris monumenta libellis, o mihi me coniunx carior, ipsa uides.
Detrahat auctori multum fortuna licebit, tu tamen ingenio clara ferere meo;
dumque legar, mecum pariter tua fama legetur, nec potes in maestos omnis abire rogos;
cumque uiri casu possis miseranda uideri, inuenies aliquas, quae, quod es, esse uelint, quae te, nostrorum cum sis in parte malorum, felicem dicant inuideantque tibi.
Non ego diuitias dando tibi plura dedissem:
nil feret ad Manes diuitis umbra suos.
Perpetui fructum donauit nominis idque, quo dare nil potui munere maius, habes.
Adde quod, ut rerum sola es tutela mearum, ad te non parui uenit honoris onus, quod numquam uox est de te mea muta tuique indiciis debes esse superba uiri.
Quae ne quis possit temeraria dicere, persta, et pariter serua meque piamque fidem.
Nam tua, dum stetimus, turpi sine crimine mansit, et tantum probitas inreprehensa fuit.
Area de nostra nunc est tibi facta ruina;
conspicuum uirtus hic tua ponat opus.
Esse bonam facile est, ubi, quod uetet esse, remotum est, et nihil officio nupta quod obstet habet.
Cum deus intonuit, non se subducere nimbo, id demum est pietas, id socialis amor.
Rara quidem uirtus, quam non Fortuna gubernet, quae maneat stabili, cum fugit ilia, pede.
Siqua tamen pretium sibi uirtus ipsa petitum, inque parum lactis ardua rebus adest, ut tempus numeres, per saecula nulla tacetur, et loca mirantur qua patet orbis iter.

Aspicias ut longo teneat laudabilis aevo nomen inextinctum Penelopea fides?
Cernis ut Admeti cantetur et Hectoris uxor ausaque in accensos Iphias ire rogos?
ut uiuat fama coniunx Phylaceia, cuius Iliacam celeri uir pede pressit humum?
Morte nihil opus est pro me, sed amore fideque:
non ex difficili fama petenda tibi est.
Nec te credideris, quia non facis, ista moneri:
uela damus, quamuis remige puppis eat.
Qui monet ut facias, quod iam facis, ille monendo laudat et hortatu comprobat acta suo.

I. BRVTO

Naso Tomitanae iam non nouus incola terrae hoc tibi de Getico litore mittit opus.
Si uacat, hospitio peregrinos, Brute, libellos excipe dumque aliquo, quolibet abde modo.
Publica non audent intra monimenta uenire, 5 ne suus hoc illis clausurit auctor iter.
A, quotiens dixi: 'Certe nil turpe docetis, ite, patet castis uersibus ille locus.'
Non tamen accedunt, sed, ut aspicias ipse, latere sub lare priuato tutius esse putant. 10
Quaeris ubi hos possis nullo componere laeso?
Qua steterant Artes, pars uacat illa tibi.
Quid ueniant nouitate roges fortasse sub ipsa.
Accipe quodcumque est, dummodo non sit amor.
Inuenies, quamuis non est miserabilis index, 15
non minus hoc illo triste quod ante dedi.
Rebus idem titulo differt, et epistula cui sit non occultato nomine missa docet.
Nec uos hoc uultis, sed nec prohibere potestis Musaque ad inuitos officiosa uenit. 20 Quicquid id est, adiunge meis; nihil inpedit ortos exule seruatis legibus Vrbe frui.
Quod metuas non est: Antoni scripta leguntur doctus et in promptu scrinia Brutus habet.
Nec me nominibus furiosus confero tantis: 25
saeua deos contra non tamen arma tuli.
Denique Caesareo, quod non desiderat ipse,
non caret e nostris ullus honore liber.
Si dubitas de me, laudes admitte deorum et carmen dempto nomine sume meum. 30 Adiuuat in bello pacatae ramus oliuae

proderit auctorem pacis habere nihil?
 Cum foret Aeneae ceruix subiecta parenti, dicitur ipsa uiro flamma dedisse uiam.
 Fert liber Aeneaden, et non iter omne patebit? 35
 At patriae pater hic, ipsius ille fuit.
 Ecquis ita est audax ut limine cogat abire iactantem Pharia tinnula sinistra manu?
 Ante deum Matrem cornu tibicen adunco cum canit, exiguae quis stipis aera negat? 40 Scimus ab imperio fieri nil tale Dianae;
 unde tamen uiuat uaticinator habet.
 Ipsa mouent animos superiorum numina nostros turpe nec est tali credulitate capi.
 En, ego pro sistro Phrygiique foramine buxi 45
 gentis luleae nomina sancta fero.
 Vaticinor moneoque: locum date sacra ferenti;
 non mihi, sed magno poscitur ille deo, nec, quia uel merui uel sensi principis iram,
 a nobis ipsum nolle putate coli. 50
 Vidi ego linigerae numen uiolasse fatentem Isidis Isiacos ante sedere focos.
 Alter ob huic similem priuatus lumine culpam clamabat media se meruisse uia.
 Talia caelestes fieri praeconia gaudent, 55
 ut sua quid ualeant numina teste probent.
 Saepe leuant poenas ereptaque lumina reddunt, cum bene peccati paenituisse uident.
 Paenitet, o! si quid miserorum creditur ulli, paenitet et facto torqueor ipse meo. 60 Cumque sit exilium, magis est mihi culpa dolori estque pati poenam quam meruisse minus.
 Vt mihi di faueant, quibus est manifestior ipse, poena potest demi, culpa perennis erit.
 Mors faciet certe ne sim, cum uenerit, exul; 65
 ne non peccarim mors quoque non faciet.
 Non igitur mirum, si mens mea tabida facta

de niue manantis more liquescit aquae.
Estur ut occulta uitiata teredine nauis, aequorei scopulos ut cauat unda salis,      70
roditur ut scabra positum rubigine ferrum, conditus ut tineae carpitur ore liber, sic mea perpetuos curarum pectora morsus, fine quibus nullo conficiantur, habent.
Nec prius hi mentem stimuli quam uita relinquet      75 quique dolet citius quam dolor ipse cadet.
Hoc mihi si superi, quorum sumus omnia, credent, forsitan exigua dignus habebor ope,
inque locum Scythico uacuum mutabor ab arcu.
    Plus isto duri si precer oris ero.

II. FABIO MAXIMO

Maxime, qui tanti mensuram nominis inples et geminas animi nobilitate genus, qui nasci ut posses, quamuis cecidere trecenti, non omnis Fabios abstulit una dies, forsitan haec a quo mittatur epistula quaeras, 5 quisque loquar tecum certior esse uelis.
Ei mihi! quid faciam? Vereor ne nomine lecto durus et auersa cetera mente legas!
Videris! Audebo tibi me scripsisse fateri < . . . . . > 10
qui, cum me poena dignum grauiore fuisse confiteor, possum uix grauiora pati.
Hostibus in mediis interque pericula uersor, tamquam cum patria pax sit adempta mihi.
Qui, mortis saeuo geminent ut uulnere causas, 15
omnia uipereo spicula felle linunt.
His eques instructus perterrita moenia lustrat more lupi clausas circumeuntis oues, at semel intentus neruo leuis arcus equino uincula semper habens inresoluta manet; 20 tectata rigent fixis ueluti uelata sagittis portaque uix firma submouet arma sera.
Adde loci faciem nec fronde nec arbore tecti et quod iners hiemi continuatur hiems.
Hic me pugnantem cum frigore cumque sagittis 25
cumque meo fato quarta fatigat hiems.
Fine carent lacrimae, nisi cum stupor obstitit illis et similis morti pectora torpor habet.
Felicem Nioben, quamuis tot funera uidit, quae posuit sensum saxea facta mali! 30 Vos quoque felices, quarum clamantia fratrem

cortice uelauit populus ora nouo!
Ille ego sum lignum qui non admittar in ullum;
ille ego sum frustra qui lapis esse uelim.
Ipsa Medusa oculis ueniat licet obuia nostris, 30 amittet uires ipsa Medusa suas.
Viuimus ut numquam sensu careamus amaro, et grauior longa fit mea poena mora.
Sic inconsumptum Tityi semperque renascens non perit, ut possit saepe perire, iecur. 40
At, puto, cum requies medicinaque publica curae somnia adest, solitis nox uenit orba malis.
Somnia me terrent ueros imitantia casus et uigilant sensus in mea damna mei.
Aut ego Sarmaticas uideor uitare sagittas 45 aut dare captiuas ad fera uincla manus aut, ubi decipior melioris imagine somni, aspicio patriae tecta relicta meae et modo uobiscum, quos sum ueneratus, amici, et modo cum cara coniuge multa loquor. 50 Sic ubi percepta est breuis et non uera uoluptas, peior ab admonitu fit status iste boni.
Siue dies igitur caput hoc miserabile cernit, siue pruinosi Noctis aguntur equi, sic mea perpetuis liquefiunt pectora curis, 55
ignibus admotis ut noua cera solet.
Saepe precor mortem, mortem quoque deprecor idem, ne mea Sarmaticum contegat ossa solum.
Cum subit, Augusti quae sit clementia, credo mollia naufragiis litora posse dari. 60 Cum uideo quam sint mea fata tenacia, frangor spesque leuis magno uicta timore cadit, nec tamen ulterius quicquam sperouae precor quam male mutato posse carere loco.
Aut hoc aut nihil est pro me temptare modeste 65
gratia quod saluo uestra pudore queat.
Suscipe, Romanae facundia, Maxime, linguae

difficilis causae mite patrocinium.
Est mala, confiteor, sed te bona fiet agente:
    lenia pro misera fac modo uerba fuga.      70 Nescit enim Caesar, quamuis deus omnia norit, ultimus hic qua sit condicione locus.
Magna tenent illud numen molimina rerum,
    haec est caelesti pectore cura minor, nec uacat in qua sint positi regione Tomitae      75 quaerere — finitimo uix loca nota Getae — aut quid Sauromatae faciant, quid lazyges acres cultaque Oresteae Taurica terra deae quaeque aliae gentes, ubi frigore constitit Hister, dura meant celeri terga per amnis equo.      80
Maxima pars hominum nec te, pulcherrima, curat, Roma, nec Ausonii militis arma timet.
Dant illis animos arcus plenaque pharetrae quamque libet longis cursibus aptus equus quodque sitim didicere diu tolerare famemque      85 quodque sequens nullas hostis habebit aquas.
Ira uiri mitis non me misisset in istam, si satis haec illi nota fuisset humus.
Nec me nec quemquam Romanum gaudet ab hoste meque minus, uitam cui dabat ipse, capi.      90 Noluit, ut poterat, minimo me perdere nutu:
    nil opus est ullis in mea fata Getis.
Sed neque cur morerer quicquam mihi comperit actum, et minus infestus quam fuit esse potest.
Tunc quoque nil fecit, nisi quod facere ipse coegi;      95
    paene etiam merito parcior ira meo est.
Di faciant igitur, quorum iustissimus ipse est, alma nihil maius Caesare terra ferat.
Vtque diu sub eo, sic sit sub Caesare terra perque manus huius tradita gentis eat.      100
At tu tam placido quam nos quoque sensimus illum iudice pro lacrimis ora resolue meis.
Non petito ut bene sit, sed uti male tutius utque exilium saeuo distet ab hoste meum, quamque dedere mihi praesentia numina uitam, 105

non adimat stricto squalidus ense Getes, denique, si moriar, subeam pacatius aruum ossa nec a Scythica nostra premantur humo nec male compositos, ut scilicet exule dignum, Bistonii cineres ungula pulset equi, 110 et ne, si superest aliquis post funera sensus, terreat et manes Sarmatis umbra meos.
Caesaris haec animum poterant audita mouere,
Maxime, mouissent si tamen ante tuum.
Vox, precor, Augustas pro me tua molliat aures, 115 auxilio trepidis quae solet esse reis, adsuetaque tibi doctae dulcedine linguae
aequandi superis pectora flecte uiri.
Non tibi Theromedon crudusque rogabitur Atreus quique suis homines pabula fecit equis, 120 sed piger ad poenas princeps, ad praemia uelox, quique dolet, quotiens cogitur, esse ferox, qui uicit semper, uictis ut parcere posset, clausit et aeterna ciuica bella sera, multa metu poenae, poena qui pauca coercet, 125 et iacit inuita fulmina rara manu.
Ergo tam placidas orator missus ad aures ut propior patriae sit fuga nostra roga.
Ille ego sum qui te colui, quem festa solebat inter conuiuas mensa uidere tuos, 130 ille ego qui duxi uestros Hymenaeon ad ignes et cecini fausto carmina digna toro, cuius te solitum memini laudare libellos exceptis domino qui nocuere suo, cui tua nonnumquam miranti scripta legebas, 135
ille ego de uestra cui data nupta domo est.
Hanc probat et primo dilectam semper ab aeuo est inter comites Marcia censa suas inque suis habuit matertera Caesaris ante;

quarum iudicio si quam probata, proba est. 140
Ipsa sua melior fama laudantibus istis Claudia diuina non eguisset ope.
Nos quoque praeteritos sine labe peregrimus annos:
proxima pars uitae transilienda meae.
Sed de me ut sileam, coniunx mea sarcina uestra est: 145 non potes hanc salua dissimulare fide.
Confugit haec ad uos, uestras amplectitur aras — iure uenit cultos ad sibi quisque deos — flensque rogat precibus lenito Caesare uestris busta sui fiant ut propiora uiri.

III. RVFINO

Hanc tibi Naso tuus mittit, Rufine, salutem, qui miser est, ulli si suus esse potest.
Reddita confusae nuper solacia menti auxilium nostris spemque tulere malis.
Vtque Machaoniis Poeantius artibus heros 5 lenito medicam uulnere sensit opem, sic ego mente iacens et acerbo saucius ictu admonitu coepi fortior esse tuo et iam deficiens sic ad tua uerba reuixi, ut solet infuso uena redire mero. 10 Non tamen exhibuit tantas facundia uires ut mea sint dictis pectora sana tuis.
Vt multum demas nostrae de gurgite curae,
non minus exhausto quod superabit erit.
Tempore ducetur longo fortasse cicatrix: 15
horrent admotas uulnera cruda manus.
Non est in medico semper releuetur ut aeger:
interdum docta plus ualet arte malum.
Cernis ut e molli sanguis pulmone remissus ad Stygias certo limite ducat aquas. 20 Adferat ipse licet sacras Epidaurius herbas, sanabit nulla uulnera cordis ope.
Tollere nodosam nescit medicina podagram nec formidatis auxiliatur aquis.
Cura quoque interdum nulla medicabilis arte 25
aut, ut sit, longa est extenuanda mora.
Cum bene firmarunt animum praecepta iacentem sumptaque sunt nobis pectoris arma tui, rursus amor patriae ratione ualentior omni quod tua fecerunt scripta retexit opus. 30 Siue pium uis hoc, seu uis muliebri uocari, confiteor misero molle cor esse mihi.

Non dubia est Ithaci prudentia, sed tamen optat fumum de patriis posse uidere focus.
Nescio qua natale solum dulcedine cunctos 35
ducit et inmemores non sinit esse sui.
Quid melius Roma? Scythico quid frigore peius?
Huc tamen ex ista barbarus urbe fugit.
Cum bene sit clausae cauea Pandione natae, nititur in siluas illa redire suas. 40 Adsuetos tauri saltus, adsueta leones — nec feritas illos inpedit — antra petunt.
Tu tamen exilii morsus e pectore nostro fomentis speras cedere posse tuis.
Effice uos ipsi ne tam mihi sitis amandi, 45
talibus ut leuius sit caruisse malum.
At, puto, qua genitus fueram tellure carenti in tamen humano contigit esse loco:
orbis in extremi iaceo desertus harenis, fert ubi perpetuas obruta terra niues. 50 Non ager hic pomum, non dulces educat uuas, non salices ripa, robora monte uirent.
Neue fretum laudes terra magis, aequora semper uentorum rabie solibus orba tument.
Quocumque aspicias, campi cultore carentes 55
uastaque quae nemo uindicat arua iacent.
Hostis adest dextra laeuaque a parte timendus uicinoque metu terret utrumque latus:
altera Bistonias pars est censura sarisas, altera Sarmatica spicula missa manu. 60
I nunc et ueterum nobis exempla uirorum qui forti casum mente tulere refer et graue magnanimi robur mirare Rutili non usi reditus condicione dati.
Zmyrna uirum tenuit, non Pontus et hostica tellus, 65
paene minus nullo Zmyrna petenda loco.
Non doluit patria Cynicus procul esse Sinopeus, legit enim sedes, Attica terra, tuas.

Arma Neoclides qui Persica contudit armis Argolica primam sensit in urbe fugam.       70 Pulsus Aristides patria Lacedaemona fugit, inter quas dubium quae prior esset erat.
Caede puer facta Patroclus Opunta reliquit Thessalicamque adiit hospes Achillis humum.
Exul ab Haemonia Pirenida cessit ad undam       75 quo duce trabs Colcha sacra cucurrit aqua.
Liquit Agenorides Sidonia moenia Cadmus, poneret ut muros in meliore loco.
Venit ad Adrastum Tydeus Calydone fugatus et Teucrum Veneri grata recepit humus.       80 Quid referam ueteres Romanae gentis, apud quos exulibus tellus ultima Tibur erat?
Persequar ut cunctos, nulli datus omnibus aeuis tam procul a patria est horridiorue locus.
Quo magis ignoscat sapientia uestra dolenti:       85
    quae facit ex dictis, non ita multa, tuis.
Nec tamen infitior, si possint nostra coire uulnera, praeceptis posse coire tuis.
Sed uereor, ne me frustra seruare labores nec iuuer admota perditus aeger ope,       90 nec loquor hoc quia sit maior prudentia nobis, sed sum quam medico notior ipse mihi.
Vt tamen hoc ita sit, munus tua grande uoluntas ad me peruenit consuliturque boni.

IV. VXORI

Iam mihi deterior canis aspergitur aetas iamque meos uultus ruga senilis arat, iam uigor et quasso languent in corpore uires nec iuueni lusus qui placuere iuuant nec, si me subito uideas, agnoscere possis, 5 aetatis facta est tanta ruina meae.
Confiteor facere hoc annos, sed et altera causa est, anxietas animi continuusque labor;
nam mea per longos si quis mala digerat annos, crede mihi, Pylio Nestore maior ero. 10 Cernis ut in duris — et quid boue firmius? — aruis fortia taurorum corpora frangat opus.
Quae numquam uacuo solita est cessare nouali fructibus adsiduis lassa senescit humus.
Occidet, ad circi si quis certamina semper 15 non intermissis cursibus ibit equus.
Firma sit illa licet, soluetur in aequore nauis quae numquam liquidis sicca carebit aquis.
Me quoque debilitat series inmensa malorum ante meum tempus cogit et esse senem. 20 Otia corpus alunt, animus quoque pascitur illis, inmodicus contra carpit utrumque labor.
Aspice, in has partis quod uenerit Aesone natus, quam laudem a sera posteritate ferat.
At labor illius nostro leuiorque minorque est, 25
si modo non uerum nomina magna premunt.
Ille est in Pontum Pelia mittente profectus qui uix Thessaliae fine timendus erat: Caesaris ira mihi nocuit, quem solis ab ortu solis ad occasus utraque terra tremit. 30 Iunctior Haemonia est Ponto quam Roma Sinistro et breuius quam nos ille peregit iter.

Ille habuit comites primos telluris Achiuae,
at nostram cuncti destituere fugam.
Nos fragili ligno uastum sulcauimus aequor, 35
quae tulit Aesoniden, densa carina fuit.
Nec mihi Tiphys erat rector nec Agenore natus quas fugerem docuit quas sequererque uias.
Illum tutata est cum Pallade regia Iuno:
defendere meum numina nulla caput. 40 Illum furtiuae iuuenere Cupidinis artes quas a me uellem non didicisset amor.
Ille domum rediit, nos his moriemur in aruis, perstiterit laesi si grauis ira dei.
Durius est igitur nostrum, fidissima coniunx, 45
illo quod subiit Aesone natus opus.
Te quoque, quam iuuenem discedens Vrbe reliqui, credibile est nostris insenuisse malis.
O! ego — di faciant! — talem te cernere possim, caraque mutatis oscula ferre comis 50 amplectique meis corpus non pingue lacertis et 'Gracile hoc fecit' dicere 'cura mei' et narrare meos flenti flens ipse labores sperato numquam conloquioque frui turaque Caesaribus cum coniuge Caesare digna, 55 dis ueris, memori debita ferre manu!
Memnonis hanc utinam, lenito principe, mater quam primum roseo prouocet ore diem!

V. COTTAE MAXIMO

Ille tuos quondam non ultimus inter amicos ut sua uerba legas, Maxime, Naso rogat, in quibus ingenium desiste requirere nostrum, nescius exilii ne uideare mei.

Cernis ut ignauum corrumpant otia corpus,       5 ut capiant uitium, ni moueantur, aquae.
Et mihi si quis erat ducendi carminis usus, deficit estque minor factus inerte situ.

Haec quoque quae legitis, si quid mihi, Maxime, credis, scribimus inuita uixque coacta manu.       10

Non libet in talis animum contendere curas nec uenit ad duros Musa uocata Getas.
Vt tamen ipse uides, luctor deducere uersum, sed non fit fato mollior ille meo.

Cum relego, scripsisse pudet, quia plurima cerno       15 me quoque, qui feci, iudice digna lini.

Nec tamen emendo; labor hic quam scribere maior mensque pati durum sustinet aegra nihil.

Scilicet incipiam lima mordacius uti et sub iudicium singula uerba uocem.       20

Torquet enim fortuna parum, nisi Lixus in Hebrum confluat et frondes Alpibus addat Atho.

Parcendum est animo miserabile uulnus habenti:
subducunt oneri colla perusta boues.

At, puto, fructus adest, iustissima causa laborum,       25 et sata cum multo fenore reddit ager.

Tempus ad hoc nobis, repetas licet omnia, nullum profuit — atque utinam non nocuisset! — opus.

Cur igitur scribam miraris. Miror et ipse et tecum quaero saepe quid inde petam.       30

An populus uere sanos negat esse poetas sumque fides huius maxima uocis ego qui, sterili totiens cum sim deceptus ab aruo, damnosa persto condere semen humo?

Scilicet est cupidus studiorum quisque suorum 35
tempus et adsueta ponere in arte iuuat.
Saucius eiurat pugnam gladiator et idem inmemor antiqui uulneris arma capit.
Nil sibi cum pelagi dicit fore naufragus undis et ducit remos qua modo nauit aqua. 40 Sic ego constanter studium non utile seruo et repeto nollem quas coluisse deas.
Quid potius faciam? Non sum qui segnia ducam otia: mors nobis tempus habetur iners.
Nec iuuat in lucem nimio marcescere uino 45 nec tenet incertas alea blanda manus.
Cum dedimus somno quas corpus postulat horas, quo ponam uigilans tempora longa modo?
Moris an oblitus patrii contendere discam Sarmaticos arcus et trahar arte loci? 50
Hoc quoque me studium prohibent adsumere uires mensque magis gracili corpore nostra ualet.
Cum bene quaesieris quid agam, magis utile nil est artibus his quae nil utilitatis habent.
Consequor ex illis casus obliuia nostri: 55
hanc messem satis est si mea reddit humus.
Gloria uos acuat; uos, ut recitata probentur carmina, Pieriis inuigilate choris.
Quod uenit ex facili satis est componere nobis, et nimis intenti causa laboris abest. 60
Cur ego sollicita poliam mea carmina cura?
An uerear ne non adprobet illa Getes?
Forsitan audacter faciam, sed glorior Histrum ingenio nullum maius habere meo.
Hoc ubi uiuendum est, satis est, si consequor aruo, 65 inter inhumanos esse poeta Getas.
Quo mihi diuersum fama contendere in orbem?

Quem fortuna dedit, Roma sit ille locus.
Hoc mea contenta est infelix Musa theatro.
Hoc merui, magni sic uolueri dei. 70
Nec reor hinc istuc nostris iter esse libellis quo Boreas penna deficiente uenit.
Diuidimur caelo quaeque est procul urbe Quirini aspicit hirsutos comminus ursa Getas.
Per tantum terrae, tot aquas uix credere possum 75
indiciū studii transiluisse mei.
Finge legi, quodque est mirabile, finge placere:
auctorem certe res iuuat ista nihil.
Quid tibi, si calidae, prosit, laudare Syenae aut ubi Taprobanen Indica tingit aqua? 80 Altius ire libet? Si te distantia longe Pleiadum laudent signa, quid inde feras?
Sed neque peruenio scriptis mediocribus istuc famaque cum domino fugit ab Vrbe suo, uosque, quibus perii, tunc cum mea fama sepulta est, 85
nunc quoque de nostra morte tacere reor.

VI. GRAECINO

Ecquid, ut audisti — nam te diuersa tenebat terra — meos casus, cor tibi triste fuit?
Dissimules metuasque licet, Graecine, fateri, si bene te noui, triste fuisse liquet.
Non cadit in mores feritas inamabilis istos      5 nec minus a studiis dissidet illa tuis.
Artibus ingenuis, quarum tibi maxima cura est, pectora mollescunt asperitasque fugit;
nec quisquam meliore fide complectitur illas, qua sinit officium militiaeque labor.      10 Certe ego cum primum potui sentire quid essem, — nam fuit attonito mens mea nulla diu — hoc quoque fortunam sensi quod amicus abesses, qui mihi praesidium grande futurus eras.
Tecum tunc aberant aegrae solacia mentis      15
magnaque pars animi consiliique mei.
At nunc, quod superest, fer opem, precor, eminus unam adloquioque iuua pectora nostra tuo, quae, non mendaci si quicquam credis amico, stulta magis dici quam scelerata decet.      20 Nec breue nec tutum peccati quae sit origo scribere: tractari uulnera nostra timent.
Qualicumque modo mihi sunt ea facta, rogare desine; non agites, si qua coire uelis.
Quidquid id est, ut non facinus, sic culpa uocanda est:      25
omnis an in magnos culpa deos scelus est?
Spes igitur menti poenae, Graecine, leuandae non est ex toto nulla relicta meae.
Haec dea, cum fugerent sceleratas numina terras,
in dis inuisa sola remansit humo.      30 Haec facit ut uiuat fossor quoque compede uinctus liberaque a ferro crura futura putet.

Haec facit ut, uideat cum terras undique nullas, naufragus in mediis brachia iactet aquis.
Saepe aliquem sollers medicorum cura reliquit      35 nec spes huic uena deficiente cadit.
Carcere dicuntur clausi sperare salutem atque aliquis pendens in cruce uota facit.
Haec dea quam multos laqueo sua colla ligantis non est proposita passa perire nece.      40 Me quoque conantem gladio finire dolorem arguit iniecta continuitque manu:
'Quid' que 'facis? lacrimis opus est, non sanguine', dixit,
'saepe per has flecti principis ira solet'.
Quamuis est igitur meritis indebita nostris,      45 magna tamen spes est in bonitate dei.
Qui ne difficilis mihi sit, Graecine, precare confer et in uotum tu quoque uerba meum.
Inque Tomitana iaceam tumulatus harena, si te non nobis ista uouere liquet.      50 Nam prius incipient turris uitare columbae, antra ferae, pecudes gramina, mergus aquas quam male se praestet ueteri Graecinus amico.
Non ita sunt fatis omnia uersa meis.

VII. MESSALINO

Littera pro uerbis tibi, Messaline, salutem quam legis a saeuis attulit usque Getis.
Indicat auctorem locus? An nisi nomine lecto haec me Nasonem scribere uerba latet?
Ecquis in extremo positus iacet orbe tuorum,         5 me tamen excepto, qui precor esse tuus?
Di procul a cunctis qui te uenerantur amantque huius notitiam gentis habere uelint.
Nos satis est inter glaciem Scythicasque sagittas uiuere, si uita est mortis habenda genus.         10 Nos premat aut bello tellus aut frigore caelum truxque Getes armis, grandine pugnet hiems, nos habeat regio nec pomo feta nec uuis et cuius nullum cesset ab hoste later.
Cetera sit sospes cultorum turba tuorum,         15
    in quibus, ut populo, pars ego parua fui.
Me miserum, si tu uerbis offenderis istis nosque negas ulla parte fuisse tuos!
Idque sit ut uerum, mentito ignoscere debes.
    Nil demit laudi gloria nostra tuae.         20
Quis se Caesaribus notus non fingit amicum?
    Da ueniam fasso, tu mihi Caesar eras.
Nec tamen inrumpe quo non licet ire satisque est atria si nobis non patuisse negas.
Vtque tibi fuerit mecum nihil amplius, uno         25
    nempe salutaris quam prius ore minus.
Nec tuus est genitor nos infitatus amicos, hortator studii causaque faxque mei, cui nos et lacrimas, supremum in funere munus, et dedimus medio scripta canenda foro.         30 Adde quod est frater, tanto tibi iunctus amore quantus in Atridis Tyndaridisque fuit:

is me nec comitem nec dedignatus amicum est,
si tamen haec illi non nocitura putas;
si minus, hac quoque me mendacem parte fatebor: 35
clausa mihi potius tota sit ista domus.
Sed neque claudenda est et nulla potentia uires praestandi ne quid peccet amicus habet.
Et tamen ut cuperem culpam quoque posse negari, sic facinus nemo nescit abesse mihi. 40 Quod nisi delicti pars excusabilis esset, parua relegari poena futura fuit.
Ipse sed hoc uidit, qui peruidet omnia, Caesar, stultitiam dici crimina posse mea.
Quaque ego permisi quaque est res passa pepercit 45 usus et est modice fulminis igne sui.
Nec uitam nec opes nec ademit posse reuerti, si sua per uestras uicta sit ira preces.
At grauitur cecidi. Quid enim mirabile, si quis a loue percussus non leue uulnus habet? 50 Ipse suas etiam uires inhiberet Achilles, missa grauis ictus Pelias hasta dabat.
Iudicium nobis igitur cum uindicis adsit,
non est cur tua me ianua nosse neget.
Culta quidem, fateor, citra quam debuit illa est, 55
sed fuit in fati hoc quoque, credo, meis.
Nec tamen officium sensit domus altera nostrum:
hic illic uestro sub lare semper eram.
Quaeque tua est pietas, ut te non excolat ipsum, ius aliquod tecum fratris amicus habet. 60 Quid quod, ut emeritis referenda est gratia semper, sic est fortunae promeruisse tuae?
Quod si permittis nobis suadere quid optes, ut des quam reddas plura precare deos.
Idque facis, quantumque licet meminisse, solebas 65 officii causa pluribus esse dati.
Quo libet in numero me, Messaline, repone, sim modo pars uestrae non aliena domus, et mala Nasonem, quoniam meruisse uidetur, si non ferre doles, at meruisse dole.

VIII. SEVERO

A tibi dilecto missam Nasone salutem accipe, pars animae magna, Seuere, meae.
Neue roga quid agam. Si persequar omnia, flebis:
summa satis nostri si tibi nota mali.
Viuimus adsiduis expertes pacis in armis 5 dura pharetrato bella mouente Geta.
Deque tot expulsis sum miles in exule solus:
tuta — nec inuideo — cetera turba latet.
Quoque magis nostros uenia dignere libellos,
haec in procinctu carmina facta leges. 10
Stat uetus urbs, ripae uicina binominis Histri, moenibus et positu uix adeunda loci.
Caspus Aegisos, de se si credimus ipsis, condidit et proprio nomine dixit opus.
Hanc ferus Odrysiis inopino Marte peremptis 15
cepit et in regem sustulit arma Getes.
Ille memor magni generis uirtute quod auget, protinus innumero milite cinctus adest nec prius abscessit merita quam caede nocentum
..... 20
At tibi, rex aeuo, detur, fortissime nostro, semper honorata sceptrā tenere manu, teque, quod et praestat — quid enim tibi plenius optem? — Martia cum magno Caesare Roma probet.
Sed memor unde abii, queror, o iucunde sodalis, 25
accedant nostris saeua quod arma malis.
Vt careo uobis, Stygias detrusus in oras, quattuor autumnos Pleias orta facit.
Nec tu credideris urbanae commoda uitae quaerere Nasonem: quaerit et illa tamen. 30 Nam modo uos animo, dulces, reminiscor, amici, nunc mihi cum cara coniuge nata subit, aque domo rursus pulchrae loca uertor ad Urbis cunctaque mens oculis peruidet illa suis.

Nunc fora, nunc aedes, nunc marmore tecta theatra, 35
nunc subit aequata porticus omnis humo, gramina nunc Campi pulchros spectantis in hortos stagnaue et euripi Virgineusque liquor.
At, puto, sic Urbis misero est erepta uoluptas, quolibet ut saltem rure frui liceat! 40 Non meus amissos animus desiderat agros ruraue Paeligno conspicienda solo nec quos piniferis positos in collibus hortos spectat Flaminiae Clodia iuncta uiae, quos ego nescio cui colui, quibus ipse solebam 45 ad sata fontanas, nec pudet, addere aquas, sunt ubi, si uiuunt, nostra quoque consita quaedam, sed non et nostra poma legenda manu.
Pro quibus amissis utinam contingere possit hic saltem profugo glaeba colenda mihi! 50 Ipse ego pendentis, liceat modo, rupe capellas, ipse uelim baculo pascere nixus oues.
Ipse ego, ne solitis insistant pectora curis, ducam ruricolas sub iuga curua boues et discam Getici quae norunt uerba iuueni 55 adsuetas illis adiciamque minas.
Ipse manu capulum pressi moderatus aratri experiar mota spargere semen humo.
Nec dubitem longis purgare ligonibus herbas et dare iam sitiens quas bibat hortus aquas. 60 Vnde sed hoc nobis minimum quos inter et hostem discrimen murus clausaque porta facit?
At tibi nascenti, quod toto pectore laetor, nerunt fatales fortia fila deae.
Te modo Campus habet, densa modo porticus umbra, 65
nunc in quo ponis tempora rara forum;
Vmbria nunc reuocat nec non Albana petentem

Appia feruenti ducit in arua rota.
Forsitan hic optes ut iustam subprimat iram
Caesar et hospitium sit tua uilla meum. 70
A! nimium est quod, amice, petis, moderatius opta et uoti quaeso contrahe uela tui.
Terra uelim propior nullique obnoxia bello detur: erit nostris pars bona dempta malis.

IX. COTTAE MAXIMO

Quae mihi de rapto tua uenit epistula Celso protinus est lacrimis umida facta meis, quodque nefas dictu fieri nec posse putauī, inuitis oculis littera lecta tua est.

Nec quicquam ad nostras peruenit acerbius aures,      5 ut sumus in Ponto, perueniatque precor.
Ante meos oculos tamquam praesentis imago haeret et extinctum uiuere fingit amor.
Saepe refert animus lusus grauitate carentes, seria cum liquida saepe peracta fide.      10 Nulla tamen subeunt mihi tempora densius illis quae uellem uitae summa fuisse meae, cum domus ingenti subito mea lapsa ruina concidit in domini procubuitque caput.
Adfuit ille mihi, cum me pars magna reliquit,      15
Maxime, Fortunae nec fuit ipse comes.
Illum ego non aliter flentem mea funera uidi ponendus quam si frater in igne foret.
Haesit in amplexu consolatusque iacentem est
cumque meis lacrimis miscuit usque suas.      20 O quotiens uitae custos inuisus amarae continuit promptas in mea fata manus!
O quotiens dixit: 'Placabilis ira deorum est:
uiue nec ignosci tu tibi posse nega!'
Vox tamen illa fuit celeberrima: 'Respice quantum      25 debeat auxilium Maximus esse tibi.
Maximus incumbet, quaque est pietate, rogabit ne sit ad extremum Caesaris ira tenax, cumque suis fratris uires adhibebit et omnem, quo leuius doleas, experietur opem.'      30
Haec mihi uerba malae minuerunt taedia uitae:

quae tu ne fuerint, Maxime, uana caue.
Huc quoque uenturum mihi se iurare solebat non nisi te longae ius sibi dante uiae.
Nam tua non alio coluit penetralia ritu 35
terrarum dominos quam colis ipse deos.
Crede mihi, multos habeas cum dignus amicos, non fuit e multis quolibet ille minor, si modo non census nec clarum nomen auorum, sed probitas magnos ingeniumque facit. 40 Iure igitur lacrimas Celso libamus adempto, cum fugerem, uiuo quas dedit ille mihi;
carmina iure damus raros testantia mores,
ut tua uenturi nomina, Celse, legant.
Hoc est quod possum Geticis tibi mittere ab aruis; 45 hoc solum est istic quod licet esse meum.
Funera non potui comitare nec ungere corpus atque tuis toto diuidor orbe rogis.
Qui potuit, quem tu pro numine uiuus habebas, praestitit officium Maximus omne tibi. 50 Ille tibi exequias et magni funus honoris fecit et in gelidos uertit amoma sinus diluit et lacrimis maerens unguenta profusis ossaque uicina condita textit humo.
Qui quoniam extinctis quae debet praestat amicis, 55 et nos extinctis adnumerare potest.

X. FLACCO

Naso suo profugus mittit tibi, Flacce, salutem, mittere rem si quis qua caret ipse potest.
Longus enim curis uitiatum corpus amaris non patitur uires languor habere suas.
Nec dolor ullus adest nec febribus uror anhelis 5 et peragit soliti uena tenoris iter.
Os hebes est positaeque mouent fastidia mensae et queror, inuisi cum uenit hora cibi.
Quod mare, quod tellus adpone, quod educat aer, nil ibi quod nobis esuriatur erit. 10 Nectar et ambrosiam, latices epulasque deorum, det mihi formosa gnaua luuenta manu, non tamen exacuet torpens sapor ille palatum stabit et in stomacho pondus inerte diu.
Haec ego non ausim, cum sint uerissima, cuiuis 15
scribere, delicias ne mala nostra uocet.
Scilicet is status est, ea rerum forma mearum deliciis etiam possit ut esse locus!
Delicias illi precor has contingere, si quis ne mihi sit leuior Caesaris ira timet. 20 Is quoque qui gracili cibus est in corpore somnus non alit officio corpus inane suo, sed uigilo uigilantque mei sine fine dolores,
quorum materiam dat locus ipse mihi.
Vix igitur possis uisos agnoscere uultus 25
quoque ierit quaeras qui fuit ante color.
Paruus in exiles sucus mihi peruenit artus membraque sunt cera pallidiora noua.
Non haec inmodico contraxi damna Lyaeo:
scis mihi quam solae paene bibantur aquae. 30 Non epulis oneror, quarum si tangar amore, est tamen in Geticis copia nulla locis.

Nec uires adimit Veneris damnosa uoluptas:
non solet in maestos illa uenire toros.
Vnda locusque nocent et causa ualentior istis, 35
anxietas animi, quae mihi semper adest.
Haec nisi tu pariter simili cum fratre leuares, uix mens tristitiae nostra tulisset onus.
Vos estis fracto tellus non dura phaselo quamque negant multi uos mihi fertis opem. 40 Ferte, precor, semper, quia semper egebimus illa, Caesaris offensum dum mihi numen erit.
Qui meritam nobis minuatur, non finiat iram, suppliciter uestros quisque rogate deos.

I. GERMANICO

Huc quoque Caesarei peruenit fama triumphi, languida quo fessi uix uenit aura Noti.
Nil fore dulce mihi Scythica regione putau:
iam minus hic odio est quam fuit ante locus.
Tandem aliquid pulsa curarum nube serenum 5
uidi fortunae uerba dedique meae.
Nolit ut ulla mihi contingere gaudia Caesar, uelle potest cuiuis haec tamen una dari.
Di quoque, ut a cunctis hilari pietate colantur, tristitiam poni per sua festa iubent. 10 Denique, quod certus furor est audere fateri, hac ego laetitia, si uetet ipse, fruar.
Iuppiter utilibus quotiens iuuat imbribus agros, mixta tenax segeti crescere lappa solet.
Nos quoque frugiferum sentimus inutilis herba 15
numen et inuita saepe iuuamur ope.
Gaudia Caesareae mentis pro parte uirili sunt mea: priuati nil habet illa domus.
Gratia, Fama, tibi per quam spectata triumphi incluso mediis est mihi pompa Getis! 20 Indice te didici nuper uisenda coisse innumeras gentes ad ducis ora sui, quaeque capit uastis inmensum moenibus orbem, hospitiis Romam uix habuisse locum.
Tu mihi narrasti, cum multis lucibus ante 25
fuderit adsiduas nubilus auster aquas, numine caelesti solem fulsisse serenum cum populi uultu conueniente die atque ita uictorem cum magnae uocis honore bellica laudatis dona dedisse uiris 30 claraque sumpturum pictas insignia uestes

tura prius sanctis inposuisse focis Iustitiamque sui caste placasse parentis, illo quae templum pectore semper habet, quaque ierit, felix adiectum plausibus omen 35 saxaque roratis erubuisse rosis;
protinus argento uersos imitantia muros barbara cum pictis oppida lata uiris fluminaque et montes et in altis proelia siluis armaque cum telis in strue mixta sua 40 deque tropaeorum quod sol incenderet auro aurea Romani tecta fuisse fori totque tulisse duces captiuos addita collis uincula paene hostis quot satis esse fuit.
Maxima pars horum uitam ueniamque tulerunt, 45
in quibus et belli summa caputque Bato.
Cur ego posse negem minui mihi numinis iram, cum uideam mitis hostibus esse deos?
Pertulit hic idem nobis, Germanice, rumor oppida sub titulo nominis isse tui 50 atque ea te contra nec muri mole nec armis nec satis ingenio tuta fuisse loci.
Di tibi dent annos! A te nam cetera sumes, sint modo uirtuti tempora longa tuae.
Quod precor eueniet — sunt quaedam oracula uatum — , 55
nam deus optanti prospera signa dedit.
Te quoque uictorem Tarpeias scandere in arces laeta coronatis Roma uidebit equis matturosque pater nati spectabit honores gaudia percipiens quae dedit ipse suis. 60 Iam nunc haec a me, iuuenum belloque togaque maxime, dicta tibi uaticinante nota.
Hunc quoque carminibus referam fortasse triumphum, sufficiet nostris si modo uita malis, inbuero Scythicas si non prius ipse sagittas 65
abstuleritque ferox hoc caput ense Getes.

Quae si me saluo dabitur tua laurea templis, omina bis dices uera fuisse mea.

II. MESSALINO

Ille domus uestrae primis uenerator ab annis pulsus ad Euxini Naso Sinistra freti mittit ab indomitis hanc, Messaline, salutem, quam solitus praesens est tibi ferre, Getis.
Ei mihi, si lecto uultus tibi nomine non est 5 qui fuit et dubitas cetera perlegere!
Perlege nec mecum pariter mea uerba relega:
Urbe licet uestra uersibus esse meis.
Non ego concepi, si Pelion Ossa tulisset, clara mea tangi sidera posse manu, 10 nec nos Enceladi dementia castra secuti in rerum dominos mouimus arma deos, nec, quod Tydidae temeraria dextera fecit, numina sunt telis ulla petita meis.
Est mea culpa grauis, sed quae me perdere solum 15
ausa sit et nullum maius adorta nefas.
Nil nisi non sapiens possum timidusque uocari:
haec duo sunt animi nomina uera mei.
Esse quidem fateor meritam post Caesaris iram difficilem precibus te quoque iure meis, 20 quaeque tua est pietas in totum nomen Iuli, te laedi, cum quis laeditur inde, putas.
Sed licet arma feras et uulnera saeua mineris,
non tamen efficies ut timeare mihi.
Puppis Achaemeniden Graium Troiana recepit, 25
profuit et Myso Pelias hasta duci.
Confugit interdum templi uiolator ad aram nec petere offensi numinis horret opem.
Dixerit hoc aliquis tutum non esse: fatemur, sed non per placidas it mea nauis aquas. 30 Tuta petant alii: fortuna miserrima tuta est;

nam timor euentu deterioris abest.
Qui rapitur . . . . .
porrigit <et> spinas duraque saxa . . . . .
accipitremque timens pennis trepidantibus ales 35
audet ad humanos fessa uenire sinus, nec se uicino dubitat committere tecto quae fugit infestos territa cerua canes.
Da, precor, accessum lacrimis, mitissime, nostris nec rigidam timidis uocibus obde forem 40 uerbaque nostra fauens Romana ad numina perfer non tibi Tarpeio culta Tonante minus mandatique mei legatus suscipe causam, nulla meo quamuis nomine causa bona est.
Iam prope depositus, certe iam frigidus, aeger 45 seruatus per te, si modo seruor, ero.
Nunc tua pro lassis nitatur gratia rebus principis aeterni quam tibi praestat amor, nunc tibi et eloquii nitor ille domesticus adsit quo poteras trepidis utilis esse reis. 50 Viuit enim in uobis facundi lingua parentis et res heredem repperit illa suum.
Hanc ego non ut me defendere temptet adoro:
non est confessi causa tuenda rei.
Num tamen excuses erroris origine factum 55
an nihil expediat tale mouere uide.
Vulneris id genus est quod, cum sanabile non sit,
non contrectari tutius esse puto.
Lingua, sile! Non est ultra narrabile quicquam.
Posse uelim cineres obruere ipse meos. 60
Sic igitur, quasi me nullus deceperit error,
uerba fac, ut uita quam dedit ipse fruar.
Cumque serenus erit uultusque remiserit illos qui secum terras imperiumque mouent, exiguam ne me praedam sinat esse Getarum 65
detque solum miserae mite precare fugae.
Tempus adest aptum precibus. Valet ille uidetque quas fecit uires, Roma, ualere tuas.

Incolumis coniunx sua puluina seruat, promouet Ausonium filius imperium. 70 Praeterit ipse suos animo Germanicus annos nec uigor est Drusi nobilitate minor.
Adde nurus neptesque pias natosque nepotum ceteraque Augustae membra ualere domus.
Adde triumphatos modo Paeonas, adde quietis 75
subdita montanae brachia Dalmatiae.
Nec dedignata est abiectis Illyris armis Caesareum famulo uertice ferre pedem.
Ipse super currum placido spectabilis ore tempora Phoebæ uirgine nexa tulit, 80 quem pia uobiscum proles comitauit euntem, digna parente suo nominibusque datis, fratribus adsimilis quos proxima templa tenentis Diuus ab excelsa Iulius aede uidet.
His Messalinus quibus omnia cedere debent 85 primum laetitiae non negat esse locum.
Quicquid ab his superest uenit in certamen amoris, hac hominum nulli parte secundus erit.
Hanc colet ante diem qua, quae decreta merenti, uenit honoratis laurea digna comis. 90 Felices quibus o licuit spectare triumphos et ducis ore deos aequiperante frui!
At mihi Sauromatae pro Caesaris ore uidendi terraque pacis inops undaque uincta gelu.
Si tamen haec audis et uox mea peruenit istuc, 95 sit tua mutando gratia blanda loco.
Hoc pater ille tuus primo mihi cultus ab aeuo, si quid habet sensus umbra diserta, petit.
Hoc petit et frater, quamuis fortasse ueretur seruandi noceat ne tibi cura mei. 100 Tota domus rogat hoc nec tu potes ipse negare et nos in turbae parte fuisse tuae.
Ingenii certe quo nos male sensimus usos

Artibus exceptis saepe probator eras, nec mea, si tantum peccata nouissima demas, 105
esse potest domui uita pudenda tuae.
Sic igitur uestrae uigeant penetralia gentis curaque sit superis Caesaribusque tui.
Mite, sed iratum merito mihi numen adora, eximar ut Scythici de feritate loci. 110 Difficile est, fateor, sed tendit in ardua uirtus et talis meriti gratia maior erit.
Nec tamen Aetnaeus uasto Polyphemus in antro accipiet uoces Antiphatesue tuas, sed placidus facilisque parens ueniaequae paratus 115 et qui fulmineo saepe sine igne tonat, qui, cum triste aliquid statuit, fit tristis et ipse cuique fere poenam sumere poena sua est.
Victa tamen uitio est huius clementia nostro uenit et ad uires ira coacta suas. 120 Qui quoniam patria toto sumus orbe remoti nec licet ante ipsos procubuisse deos, quos colis ad superos haec fer mandata sacerdos, adde sed et proprias ad mea uerba preces.
Sic tamen haec tempta, si non nocitura putabis. 125
Ignosces: timeo naufragus omne fretum.

III. COTTAE MAXIMO

Maxime, qui claris nomen uirtutibus aequas nec sinis ingenium nobilitate premi, culte mihi — quid enim status hic a funere differt? — supremum uitae tempus adusque meae, rem facis adflictum non auersatus amicum 5 qua non est aeuo rarior ulla tuo.
Turpe quidem dictu, sed — si modo uera fatemur — uulgius amicitias utilitate probat.
Cura quid expediat prius est quam quid sit honestum, et cum fortuna statque caditque fides. 10 Nec facile inuenias multis in milibus unum, uirtutem pretium qui putet esse sui.
Ipse decor recte facti, si praemia desint,
non mouet et gratis paenitet esse probum.
Nil nisi quod prodest carum est, et detrahe menti 15
spem fructus auidae, nemo petendus erit.
At reditus iam quisque suos amat et sibi quid sit utile sollicitis subputat articulis.
Illud amicitiae quondam uenerabile nomen prostat et in quaestu pro meretrice sedet. 20 Quo magis admiror non ut torrentibus undis communis uitii te quoque labe trahi.
Diligitur nemo, nisi cui Fortuna secunda est.
Quae simul intonuit, proxima quaeque fugat.
En ego non paucis quondam munitus amicis, 25
dum flauit uelis aura secunda meis, ut fera nimbo tumuerunt aequora uento,
in mediis lacera naue relinquer aquis.
Cumque alii nolint etiam me nosse uideri, uix duo proiecto tresue tulistis opem. 30 Quorum tu princeps: neque enim comes esse, sed auctor nec petere exemplum, sed dare dignus eras.

Te nihil exacto nisi nos peccasse fatentem, sponte sua probitas officiumque iuuat.
Iudice te mercede caret per seque petenda est 35
externis uirtus incommitata bonis.
Turpe putas abigi, quia sit miserandus, amicum, quodque sit infelix, desinere esse tuum.
Mitius est lasso digitum subponere mento mergere quam liquidis ora natandis aquis. 40 Cerue quid Aeacides post mortem praestet amico:
instar et hanc uitam mortis habere puta.
Pirithoum Theseus Stygias comitauit ad undas:
a Stygia quantum mors mea distat aqua?
Adfuit insano iuuenis Phoeceus Orestae: 45 et mea non minimum culpa furoris habet.
Tu quoque magnorum laudes admitte uirorum, ut facis, et lapso quam potes adfer opem.
Si bene te noui, si, qui prius esse solebas, nunc quoque es atque animi non cecidere tui, 50 quo Fortuna magis saeuit, magis ipse resistis, utque decet, ne te uicerit illa caues, et, bene uti pugnes, bene pugnans efficit hostis:
sic eadem prodest causa nocetque mihi.
Scilicet indignum, iuuenis carissime, ducis 55 te fieri comitem stantis in orbe deae.
Firmus es et, quoniam non sunt ea qualia uelles, uela regis quassae qualiacumque ratis.
Quaeque ita concussa est ut iam casura putetur, restat adhuc umeris fulta ruina tuis. 60 Ira quidem primo fuerat tua iusta nec ipso lenior offensus qui mihi iure fuit, quique dolor pectus tetigisset Caesaris alti,
illum iurabas protinus esse tuum.
Vt tamen audita est nostrae tibi cladis origo, 65
diceris erratis ingemuisse meis.
Tum tua me primum solari littera coepit et laesum flecti spem dare posse deum.

Mouit amicitiae tum te constantia longae ante tuos ortus quae mihi coepta fuit, 70 et quod eras aliis factus, mihi natus amicus quodque tibi in cunis oscula prima dedi, quod cum uestra domus teneris mihi semper ab annis cultata sit, esse uetus me tibi cogit onus.
Me tuus ille pater, Latiae facundia linguae, 75
quae non inferior nobilitate fuit, primus ut auderem committere carmina famae inpulit: ingenii dux fuit ille mei.
Nec quo sit primum nobis a tempore cultus contendo fratrem posse referre tuum. 80 Te tamen ante omnis ita sum complexus ut unus quolibet in casu gratia nostra fores.
Ultima me tecum uidit maestisque cadentes excepit lacrimas Aethalis Ilua genis, cum tibi quaerenti num uerus nuntius esset 85 adtulerat culpae quem mala fama meae, inter confessum dubie dubieque negantem haerebam pauidas dante timore notas exemploque niuis quam mollit aquaticus auster, gutta per attonitas ibat oborta genas. 90 Haec igitur referens et quod mea crimina primi erroris uenia posse latere uides, respicis antiquum lassis in rebus amicum fomentisque iuuas uulnera nostra tuis.
Pro quibus, optandi si nobis copia fiat, 95
tam bene promerito commoda mille precor.
Sed, si sola mihi dentur tua uota, precabor ut tibi sit saluo Caesare salua parens.
Haec ego, cum faceres altaria pingua ture, te solitum memini prima rogare deos.

IV. ATTICO

Accipe conloquium gelido Nasonis ab Histro, Attice iudicio non dubitande meo.
Ecquid adhuc remanes memor infelicis amici deserit an partis languida cura suas?
Non ita di mihi sint tristes ut credere possim 5 fasque putem iam te non meminisse mei.
Ante oculos nostros posita est tua semper imago et uideor uultus mente uidere tuos.
Seria multa mihi tecum conlata recordor nec data iucundis tempora pauca iocis. 10 Saepe citae longis uisae sermonibus horae, saepe fuit breuior quam mea uerba dies.
Saepe tuas uenit factum modo carmen ad auris et noua iudicio subdita Musa tuo est.
Quod tu laudaras, populo placuisse putabam 15
— hoc pretium curae dulce recentis erat — utque meus lima rarus liber esset amici, non semel admonitu facta litura tuo est.
Nos fora uiderunt pariter, nos porticus omnis, nos uia, nos iunctis curua theatra locis. 20 Denique tantus amor nobis, carissime, semper quantus in Aeacide Nestorideque fuit.
Non ego, si biberes securae pocula Lethes, excidere haec credam pectore posse tuo.
Longa dies citius brumali sidere noxque 25 tardior hiberna solstitialis erit nec Babylon aestum nec frigora Pontus habebit caltaque Paestanas uincet odore rosas quam tibi nostrarum ueniant obliuia rerum:
non ita pars fati candida nulla mei est. 30 Ne tamen haec dici possit fiducia mendax

stultaque credulitas nostra fuisse caue constantique fide ueterem tutare sodalem qua licet et quantum non onerosus ero.

V. SALANO

Condita disparibus numeris ego Naso Salano praeposita misi uerba salute meo.
Quae rata sit cupio rebusque ut comprobet omen, te precor a saluo possit, amice, legi.
Candor, in hoc aeuo res intermortua paene, 5
exigit ut faciam talia uota tuus.
Nam fuerim quamuis modico tibi iunctus ab usu, diceris exiliis indoluisse meis, missaque ab Euxino legeres cum carmina Ponto, illa tuus iuuat qualiacumque fauor 10 optastique breuem salui mihi Caesaris iram, quod tamen optari, si sciat, ipse sinat.
Moribus ista tuis tam mitia uota dedisti nec minus idcirco sunt ea grata mihi, quoque magis moueare malis, doctissime, nostris, 15 credibile est fieri condicione loci:
uix hac inuenies totum, mihi crede, per orbem quae minus Augusta pace fruatur humus.
Tu tamen hic structos inter fera proelia uersus et legis et lectos ore fauente probas 20 ingenioque meo, uena quod paupere manat, plaudis et e riuo flumina magna facis.
Grata quidem sunt haec animo suffragia nostro,
uix sibi cum miseros posse placere putes.
Dum tamen in rebus temptamus carmina paruis, 25 materiae gracili sufficit ingenium.
Nuper, ut huc magni peruenit fama triumphi, ausus sum tantae sumere molis opus.
Obruit audentem rerum grauitasque nitorque nec potui coepti pondera ferre mei. 30 Illic quam laudes erit officiosa uoluntas, cetera materia debilitata iacent.

Qui si forte liber uestras peruenit ad aures, tutelam, mando, sentiat ille tuam.
Hoc tibi facturo, uel si non ipse rogarem, 35
accedat cumulus gratia nostra leuis.
Non ego laudandus, sed sunt tua pectora lacte et non calcata candidiora niue, mirarisque alios, cum sis mirabilis ipse, nec lateant artes eloquiumque tuum. 40
Te iuuenum princeps, cui dat Germania nomen, participem studii Caesar habere solet.
Tu comes antiquus, tu primis iunctus ab annis ingenio mores aequiperante places.
Te dicente prius studii fuit impetus illi 45 teque habet elicias qui sua uerba tuis.
Cum tu desisti mortaliaque ora quierunt tectaque non longa conticuere mora, surgit luleo iuuenis cognomine dignus, qualis ab Eois Lucifer ortus aquis, 50 dumque silens adstat, status est uultusque disert spemque decens doctae uocis amictus habet.
Mox, ubi pulsa mora est atque os caeleste solutum, hoc superos iures more solere loqui atque 'Haec est' dicas 'facundia principe digna': 55 eloquio tantum nobilitatis inest.
Huic tu cum placeas et uertice sidera tangas, scripta tamen profugi uatis habenda putas.
Scilicet ingeniis aliqua est concordia iunctis, et seruat studii foedera quisque sui: 60 rusticus agricolam, miles fera bella gerentem, rectorem dubiae nauita puppis amat.
Tu quoque Pieridum studio, studiose, teneris ingenioque faues, ingeniose, meo.
Distat opus nostrum, sed fontibus exit ab isdem 65
artis et ingenuae cultor uterque sumus.
Thyrsus abest a te gustata et laurea nobis,

sed tamen ambobus debet inesse calor, utque meis numeris tua dat facundia neruos, sic uenit a nobis in tua uerba nitor. 70 Iure igitur studio confinia carmina uestro et commilitii sacra tuenda putas.
Pro quibus ut maneat de quo censeris amicus comprecor ad uitae tempora summa tuae succedatque suis orbis moderator habenis: 75 quod mecum populi uota precantur idem.

VI. GRAECINO

Carmine Graecinum, qui praesens uoce solebat, tristis ab Euxinis Naso salutatur aquis.
Exulis haec uox est: praebet mihi littera linguam et, si non liceat scribere, mutus ero.
Corripis, ut debes, stulti peccata sodalis 5 et mala me meritis ferre minora doces.
Vera facis, sed sera meae conuicia culpae:
aspera confesso uerba remitte reo.
Cum poteram recto transire Ceraunia uelo, ut fera uitarem saxa monendus eram. 10 Nunc mihi naufragio quid prodest discere facto qua mea debuerit currere cumba uia?
Brachia da lasso potius prendenda natanti nec pigeat mento subposuisse manum.
Idque facis faciasque precor: sic mater et uxor, 15 sic tibi sint fratres totaque salua domus, quodque soles animo semper, quod uoce precari, omnia Caesaribus sic tua facta probes.
Turpe erit in miseris ueteri tibi rebus amico auxilium nulla parte tulisse tuum, 20 turpe referre pedem nec passu stare tenaci, turpe laborantem deseruisse ratem, turpe sequi casum et Fortunae accedere amicum et, nisi sit felix, esse negare suum.
Non ita uixerunt Strophio atque Agamemnone nati, 25 non haec Aegidae Pirithoique fides.
Quos prior est mirata, sequens mirabitur aetas,
in quorum plausus tota theatra sonant.
Tu quoque per durum seruato tempus amico dignus es in tantis nomen habere uiris, 30 dignus es, et, quoniam laudem pietate mereris,

non erit officii gratia surda tui.
Crede mihi, nostrum si non mortale futurum est carmen, in ore frequens posteritatis eris.
Fac modo permaneas lasso, Graecine, fidelis 35
duret et in longas impetus iste moras.
Quae tu cum praestes, remo tamen utor in aura, nec nocet admissio subdere calcar equo.

VII. ATTICO

Esse salutatum uult te mea littera primum a male pacatis, Attice, missa Getis, proxima subsequitur quid agas audire uoluntas, et si, quicquid agis, sit tibi cura mei.
Nec dubito quin sit, sed me timor ipse malorum 5 saepe superuacuos cogit habere metus.
Da ueniam, quaeso, nimioque ignosce timori.
Tranquillas etiam naufragus horret aquas.
Qui semel est laesus fallaci piscis ab hamo omnibus unca cibis aera subesse putat; 10 saepe canem longe uisum fugit agna lupumque credit et ipsa suam nescia uitat opem; membra reformidant mollem quoque saucia tactum uanaque sollicitis incitat umbra metum.
Sic ego Fortunae telis confixus iniquis 15
pectore concipio nil nisi triste meo.
Iam mihi fata liquet coeptos seruantia cursus per sibi consuetas semper itura uias.
Obseruare deos ne quid mihi cedat amice uerbaque Fortunae uix puto posse dari. 20 Est illi curae me perdere, quaeque solebat esse leuis, constans et bene certa nocet.
Crede mihi, si sum ueri tibi cognitus oris — nec planis nostris casibus esse puter — Cinyphiae segetis citius numerabis aristas 25 altaque quam multis floreat Hybla thymis et quot aues motis nitantur in aere pennis quotque natent pisces aequore certus eris quam tibi nostrorum statuatur summa laborum quos ego sum terra, quos ego passus aqua. 30 Nulla Getis toto gens est truculentior orbe, sed tamen hi nostris ingemuere malis.

Quae tibi si memori coner perscribere uersu,
Ilias est fati longa futura mei.
Non igitur uerear quo te rear esse uerendum, 35
cuius amor nobis pignora mille dedit, sed quia res timida est omnis miser et quia longo est tempore laetitiae ianua clausa meae.
Iam dolor in morem uenit meus, utque caducis percussu crebro saxa cauantur aquis, 40 sic ego continuo Fortunae uulneror ictu uixque habet in nobis iam noua plaga locum.
Nec magis adsiduo uomer tenuatur ab usu nec magis est curuis Appia trita rotis pectora quam mea sunt serie caecata malorum, 45 et nihil inueni quod mihi ferret opem.
Artibus ingenuis quaesita est gloria multis, infelix perii dotibus ipse meis.
Vita prior uitio caret et sine labe peracta est:
auxilii misero nil tulit illa mihi. 50
Culpa grauis precibus donatur saepe suorum:
omnis pro nobis gratia muta fuit.
Adiuuat in duris aliquos praesentia rebus:
obruit hoc absens uasta procella caput.
Quis non horruerit tacitam quoque Caesaris iram? 55
Addita sunt poenis aspera uerba meis.
Fit fuga temporibus leuior: proiectus in aequor Arcturum subii Pleiadumque minas.
Saepe solent hiemem placidam sentire carinae:
non Ithacae puppi saeuior unda fuit. 60 Recta fides comitum poterat mala nostra leuare:
ditata est spoliis perfida turba meis.
Mitius exilium faciunt loca: tristior ista terra sub ambobus non iacet ulla polis.
Est aliquid patriis uicinum finibus esse: 65 ultima me tellus, ultimus orbis habet.
Praestat et exulibus pacem tua laurea, Caesar:

Pontica finitimo terra sub hoste iacet.
Tempus in agrorum cultu consumere dulce est:
non patitur uerti barbarus hostis humum. 70 Temperie caeli corpusque animusque iuuatur:
frigore perpetuo Sarmatis ora riget.
Est in aqua dulci non inuidiosa uoluptas:
aequoreo bibitur cum sale mixta palus.
Omnia deficiunt. Animus tamen omnia uincit; 75 ille etiam uires corpus habere facit.
Sustineas ut onus, nitendum uertice pleno est aut, flecti neruos si patiere, cades.
Spes quoque posse mora mitescere principis iram uiuere ne nolim deficiamque cauet. 80 Nec uos parua datis pauci solacia nobis, quorum spectata est per mala nostra fides.
Coepta tene, quaeso, neque in aequore desere nauem meque simul serua iudiciumque tuum.

VIII. COTTAE MAXIMO

Redditus est nobis Caesar cum Caesare nuper, quos mihi misisti, Maxime Cotta, deos, utque tuum munus numerum quem debet haberet, est ibi Caesaribus Liuia iuncta suis.
Argentum felix omnique beatius auro, 5 quod, fuerit pretium cum rude, numen habet!
Non mihi diuitias dando maiora dedisses caelitibus missis nostra sub ora tribus.
Est aliquid spectare deos et adesse putare et quasi cum uero numine posse loqui. 10 Quantum ad te, redii, nec me tenet ultima tellus, utque prius, media sospes in Vrbe moror.
Caesareos uideo uultus, uelut ante uidebam:
uix huius uoti spes fuit ulla mihi.
Vtque salutabam numen caeleste, saluto. 15
Quod reduci tribuas, nil, puto, maius habes.
Quid nostris oculis nisi sola Palatia desunt?
Qui locus ablato Caesare uilis erit.
Hunc ego cum spectem, uideor mihi cernere Romam;
nam patriae faciem sustinet ille suae. 20 Fallor an irati mihi sunt in imagine uultus, toruaque nescio quid forma minantis habet?
Parce, uir inmenso maior uirtutibus orbe, iustaque uindictae supprime frena tuae.
Parce, precor, saeculi decus indelebile nostri, 25
terrarum dominum quem sua cura facit.
Per patriae numen, quae te tibi carior ipso est, per numquam surdos in tua uota deos perque tori sociam, quae par tibi sola reperta est, et cui maiestas non onerosa tua est, 30
perque tibi similem uirtutis imagine natum, moribus adgnosci qui tuus esse potest, perque tuos uel auo dignos uel patre nepotes qui ueniunt magno per tua iussa gradu, parte leua minima nostras et contrahe poenas 35

daque procul Scythico qui sit ab hoste locum.
Et tua, si fas est, a Caesare proxime Caesar, numina sint precibus non inimica meis!
Sic fera quam primum pauido Germania uultu ante triumphantis serua feratur equos, 40 sic pater in Pylios, Cumaeos mater in annos uiuant et possis filius esse diu!
Tu quoque, conueniens ingenti nupta marito, accipe non dura supplicis aure preces!
Sic tibi uir sospes, sic sint cum prole nepotes, 45
cumque bonis nuribus quod peperere nurus!
Sic quem dira tibi rapuit Germania Drusum pars fuerit partus sola caduca tui!
Sic tibi mature fraterni funeris ultor purpureus niueis filius instet equis! 50 Adnite o! timidis, mitissima numina, uotis;
praesentis aliquid prosit habere deos.
Caesaris aduentu tuta gladiator harena exit et auxilium non leue uultus habet.
Nos quoque uestra iuuat quod, qua licet, ora uidemus, 55
intrata est superis quod domus una tribus.
Felices illi qui non simulacra, sed ipsos quique deum coram corpora uera uident!
Quod quoniam nobis inuidit inutile fatum, quos dedit ars uultus effigiemque colo. 60 Sic homines nouere deos, quos arduus aether occulit, et colitur pro loue forma Iouis.
Denique, quae mecum est et erit sine fine, caute ne sit in inuiso uestra figura loco.
Nam caput e nostra citius ceruice recedet 65 et patiar fossis lumen abire genis quam caream raptis, o publica numina, uobis:

uos eritis nostrae portus et ara fugae.
Vos ego complectar, Geticis si cingar ab armis, utque meas aquilas, <sic mea> signa sequar. 70 Aut ego me fallo nimioque cupidine ludor aut spes exilii commodioris adest; nam minus et minus est facies in imagine tristis uisaque sunt dictis adnuere ora meis.
Vera precor fiant timidae praesagia mentis 75 iustaque, quamuis est, sit minor ira dei.

IX. COTYI REGI

Regia progenies, cui nobilitatis origo nomen in Eumolpi peruenit usque, Coty, Fama loquax uestras si iam peruenit ad aures me tibi finitimi parte iacere soli, supplicis exaudi, iuuenum mitissime, uocem, 5 quamque potes, profugo — nam potes — adfer opem.
Me fortuna tibi — de qua quod non queror hoc est —
tradidit, hoc uno non inimica mihi.
Excipe naufragium non duro litore nostrum, ne fuerit terra tutior unda tua. 10 Regia, crede mihi, res est succurrere lapsis conuenit et tanto quantus es ipse uiro.
Fortunam decet hoc istam, quae maxima cum sit,
esse potest animo uix tamen aequa tuo.
Conspicitur numquam meliore potentia causa 15
quam quotiens uanas non sinit esse preces.
Hoc nitor iste tui generis desiderat, hoc est a superis ortae nobilitatis opus.
Hoc tibi et Eumolpus, generis clarissimus auctor, et prior Eumolpo suadet Erichthonius. 20 Hoc tecum commune deo est quod uterque rogati supplicibus uestris ferre soletis opem.
Numquid erit quare solito dignemur honore numina, si demas uelle iuuare deos?
Iuppiter oranti surdas si praebeat auris, 25 uictima pro templo cur cadat icta louis?
Si pacem nullam pontus mihi praestet eunti, inrita Neptuno cur ego tura feram?
Vana laborantis si fallat arua coloni, accipiat grauidae cur suis exta Ceres? 30 Nec dabit intonso iugulum caper hostia Baccho, musta sub adducto si pede nulla fluent.

Caesar ut imperii moderetur frena precamur, tam bene quod patriae consulit ille suae.
Vtilitas igitur magnos hominesque deosque 35
efficit auxiliis quoque fauente suis.
Tu quoque fac prosis intra tua castra iacenti,
o Coty, progenies digna parente tuo.
Conueniens homini est hominem seruare uoluptas et melius nulla quaeritur arte fauor. 40 Quis non Antiphaten Laestrygona deuouet aut quis munifici mores improbat Alcinoi?
Non tibi Cassandreuus pater est gentisue Pheraeae quiue repertorem torruit arte sua, sed quam Marte ferox et uinci nescius armis, 45 tam numquam facta pace cruoris amans.
Adde quod ingenuas didicisse fideliter artes emollit mores nec sinit esse feros.
Nec regum quisquam magis est instructus ab illis mitibus aut studiis tempora plura dedit. 50 Carmina testantur quae, si tua nomina demas, Threiciuui iuuenem composuisse negem.
Neue sub hoc tractu uates foret unicus Orpheus, Bistonis ingenio terra superba tuo est.
Utque tibi est animus, cum res ita postulat, arma 55
sumere et hostili tingere caede manum, atque ut es excusso iaculum torquere lacerto collaque uelocis flectere doctus equi, tempora sic data sunt studiis ubi iusta paternis atque suis humeris forte quieuit opus, 60 ne tua marcescant per inertis otia somnos, lucida Pieria tendis in astra uia.
Haec quoque res aliquid tecum mihi foederis adfert:
eiusdem sacri cultor uterque sumus.
Ad uatem uates orantia brachia tendo, 65
terra sit exiliis ut tua fida meis.
Non ego caede nocens in Ponti litora ueni mixtae sunt nostra dira uenena manu, nec mea subiecta conuicta est gemma tabella mendacem linis inposuisse notam. 70 Nec quicquam, quod lege uetor committere, feci:

est tamen his grauior noxa fatenda mihi.
Neue roges quae sit, stultam conscripsimus Artem.
Innocuas nobis haec uetat esse manus.
Ecquid praeterea peccarim quaerere noli, 75 ut lateat sola culpa sub Arte mea.
Quicquid id est, habuit moderatam uindicis iram, qui nisi natalem nil mihi dempsit humum.
Hac quoniam careo, tua nunc uicinia praestet, inuiso possim tutus ut esse loco.

X. MACRO

Ecquid ab impressae cognoscis imagine cerae haec tibi Nasonem scribere uerba, Macer, auctorisque sui si non est anulus index,
cognitane est nostra littera facta manu?
An tibi notitiam mora temporis eripit horum 5 nec repetunt oculi signa uetusta tui?
Sis licet oblitus pariter gemmaeque manusque, exciderit tantum ne tibi cura mei.
Quam tu uel longi debes conuictibus aevi, uel mea quod coniunx non aliena tibi est, 10 uel studiis quibus es quam nos sapientius usus, utque decet, nulla factus es Arte nocens.
Tu canis aeterno quicquid restabat Homero, ne careant summa Troica bella manu.
Naso parum prudens Artem dum tradit amandi, 15
doctrinae pretium triste magister habet.
Sunt tamen inter se communia sacra poetis, diuersum quamuis quisque sequamur iter.
Quorum te memorem, quamquam procul absumus, esse suspikor et casus uelle leuare meos. 20
Te duce magnificas Asiae perspeximus urbes, Trinacris est oculis te duce uisa meis;
uidimus Aetnaea caelum splendescere flamma, subpositus monti quam uomit ore gigans Hennaeosque lacus et olentia stagna Palici, 25 quamque suis Cyanen miscet Anapus aquis.
Nec procul hinc nympha est quae, dum fugit Elidis amnem, tectata sub aequorea nunc quoque currit aqua.
Hic mihi labentis pars anni magna peracta est.
Eheu! quam dispar est locus ille Getis! 30 Et quota pars haec sunt rerum quas uidimus ambo, te mihi iucundas efficiente uias, seu rate caeruleas picta sulcauimus undas, esseda nos agili siue tulere rota.

Saepe breuis nobis uicibus uia uisa loquendi 35
pluraque, si numeres, uerba fuere gradu.
Saepe dies sermone minor fuit inque loquendum tarda per aestiuos defuit hora dies.
Est aliquid casus pariter timuisse marinos iunctaque ad aequoreos uota tulisse deos, 40 et modo res egisse simul, modo rursus ab illis, quorum non pudeat, posse referre iocos.
Haec tibi cum subeant, absim licet, omnibus annis ante tuos oculos, ut modo uisus, ero.
Ipse quidem certe cum sim sub cardine mundi 45 qui semper liquidis altior extat aquis, te tamen intueor, quo solo pectore possum,
et tecum gelido saepe sub axe loquor.
Hic es et ignoras et ades celeberrimus absens inque Getas media iussus ab Vrbe uenis. 50 Redde uicem et, quoniam regio felicitior ista est, istic me memori pectore semper habe.

XI. RVFO

Hoc tibi, Rufe, breui properatum tempore mittit Naso, parum faustae conditor Artis, opus, ut, quamquam longe toto sumus orbe remoti, scire tamen possis nos meminisse tui.

Nominis ante mei uenient obliuia nobis 5 pectore quam pietas sit tua pulsa meo, et prius hanc animam uacuas reddemus in auras quam fiat meriti gratia uana tui.

Grande uoco lacrimas meritum quibus ora rigabas, cum mea concreto sicca dolore forent. 10

Grande uoco meritum maestae solacia mentis, cum pariter nobis illa tibi que dares.

Sponte quidem per seque mea est laudabilis uxor,
admonitu melior fit tamen illa tuo.

Namque, quod Hermionae Castor fuit, Hector Iuli, 15 hoc ego te laetor coniugis esse meae.

Quae, ne dissimilis tibi sit probitate, laborat seque tui uita sanguinis esse probat.

Ergo, quod fuerat stimulis factura sine ullis, plenius auctorem te quoque nanta facit. 20

Acer et ad palmae per se cursurus honores, si tamen hortaris, fortius ibit equus.

Adde quod absentis cura mandata fideli perficis et nullum ferre grauaris onus.

O, referant grates, quoniam non possumus ipsi, 25 di tibi, qui referent, si pia facta uident, sufficiatque diu corpus quoque moribus istis, maxima Fundani gloria, Rufe, soli!

I. VXORI

Aequor Iasonio pulsatum remige primum quaeque nec hoste fero nec niue, terra, cares, ecquod erit tempus quo uos ego Naso relinquam,
    in minus hostili iussus abesse loco?
An mihi barbaria uiuendum semper in ista      5
    inque Tomitana condar oportet humo?
Pace tua, si pax ulla est tua, Pontica tellus, finitimus rapido quam terit hostis equo, pace tua dixisse uelim: 'Tu pessima duro pars es in exilio, tu mala nostra grauas.      10 Tu neque uer sentis cinctum florente corona, tu neque messorum corpora nuda uides, nec tibi pampineas autumnus porrigit uuas, cuncta sed inmodicum tempora frigus habent.
Tu glacie freta uincta tenes, et in aequore piscis      15
    inclusus tecta saepe natauit aqua.
Nec tibi sunt fontes, laticis nisi paene marini, qui potus dubium sistat alatne sitim.
Rara, neque haec felix, in apertis eminent aruis arbor et in terra est altera forma maris.      20 Non auis obloquitur, nisi siluis si qua remota aequoreas rauco gutture potat aquas.
Tristia per uacuos horrent absinthia campos conueniensque suo messis amara loco.
Adde metus et quod murus pulsatur ab hoste      25
    tinctaque mortifera tabe sagitta madet, quod procul haec regio est et ab omni deuia cursu nec pede quo quisquam nec rate tutus eat.
Non igitur mirum finem quaerentibus horum altera si nobis usque rogatur humus.      30 Te magis est mirum non hoc euincere, coniunx,

inque meis lacrimas posse tenere malis.
Quid facias quaeris? Quaeras hoc scilicet ipsum, inuenies, uere si reperire uoles.
Velle parum est: cupias ut re potiaris oportet 35 et faciat somnos haec tibi cura breues.
Velle reor multos: quis enim mihi tam sit iniquus optet ut exilium pace carere meum?
Pectore te toto cunctisque incumbere neruis et niti pro me nocte dieque decet. 40 Vtque iuuent alii, tu debes uincere amicos uxor et ad partis prima uenire tuas.
Magna tibi inposita est nostris persona libellis:
coniugis exemplum diceris esse bonae.
Hanc caue degeneres, ut sint praeconia nostra 45
uera; uide Famae quod tuearis opus.
Vt nihil ipse querar, tacito me Fama queretur, quae debet fuerit ni tibi cura mei.
Exposuit memet populo Fortuna uidendum et plus notitiae quam fuit ante dedit. 50 Notior est factus Capaneus a fulminis ictu, notus humo mersis Amphiaras equis.
Si minus errasset, notus minus esset Vlixes, magna Philoctetae uulnere fama suo est.
Si locus est aliquis tanta inter nomina paruis, 55 nos quoque conspicuos nostra ruina facit.
Nec te nesciri patitur mea pagina, qua non inferius Coa Bittide nomen habes.
Quicquid ages igitur, scena spectabere magna et pia non paucis testibus uxor eris. 60 Crede mihi, quotiens laudaris carmine nostro, qui legit has laudes, an mereare rogat.
Vtque fauere reor plures uirtutibus istis, sic tua non paucae carpere facta uolent.
Quarum tu praesta ne liuor dicere possit: 65
“Haec est pro miseri lenta salute uiri”.
Cumque ego deficiam nec possim ducere currum,

fac tu sustineas debile sola iugum.
Ad medicum specto uenis fugientibus aeger:
ultima pars animae dum mihi restat, ades, 70
quodque ego praestarem, si te magis ipse ualerem, id mihi, cum ualeas fortius ipsa, refer.
Exigit hoc socialis amor foedusque maritum.
Moribus hoc, coniunx, exigis ipsa tuis.
Hoc domui debes de qua censeris, ut illam 75
non magis officiis quam probitate colas.
Cuncta licet facias, nisi eris laudabilis uxor,
non poterit credi Marcia culta tibi.
Nec sumus indigni nec, si uis uera fateri, debetur meritis gratia nulla meis. 80 Redditur illa quidem grandi cum fenore nobis nec te, si cupiat, laedere rumor habet, sed tamen hoc factis adiunge prioribus unum,
pro nostris ut sis ambitiosa malis, Vt minus infesta iaceam regione labora, 85
clauda nec officii pars erit ulla tui.
Magna peto, sed non tamen inuidiosa roganti, utque ea non teneas, tuta repulsa tua est.
Nec mihi suscense, totiens si carmine nostro quod facis ut facias teque imitere rogo. 90 Fortibus adsueuit tubicen prodesse suoque dux bene pugnantis incitat ore uiros.
Nota tua est probitas testataque tempus in omne:
sit uirtus etiam non probitate minor.
Nec tibi Amazonia est pro me sumenda securis 95 aut excisa leui pelta gerenda manu.
Numen adorandum est, non ut mihi fiat amicum,
sed sit ut iratum quam fuit ante minus.
Gratia si nulla est, lacrimae tibi gratia fient:
hac potes aut nulla parte mouere deos. 100 Quae tibi ne desint, bene per mala nostra cauetur meque uiro flendi copia diues adest;
utque meae res sunt, omni, puto, tempore flebis:

has fortuna tibi nostra ministrat opes.
Si mea mors redimenda tua, quod abominor, esset, 105
Admeti coniunx quam sequereris erat.
Aemula Penelopes fieres, si fraude pudica instantis uelles fallere nupta procos.
Si comes extincti manes sequerere mariti, esset dux facti Laudamia tui. 110 Iphias ante oculos tibi erat ponenda uolenti corpus in accensos mittere forte rogos.
Morte nihil opus est, nihil Icarotide tela:
Caesaris est coniunx ore precanda tuo quae praestat uirtute sua, ne prisca uetustas 115 laude pudicitiae saecula nostra premat, quae Veneris formam, mores Iunonis habendo sola est caelesti digna reperta toro.
Quid trepidas et adire times? Non inopia Progne filiae Aetiae uoce mouenda tua est, 120 nec nurus Aegypti, nec saeua Agamemnonis uxor, Scyllaque quae Siculas inguine terret aquas, Telegoniue parens uertendis nata figuris nexaque nodosas angue Medusa comas, femina sed princeps, in qua Fortuna uidere 125 se probat et caecae crimina falsa tulit, qua nihil in terris ad finem solis ab ortu clarius excepto Caesare mundus habet.
Eligito tempus captatum saepe rogandi, exeat aduersa ne tua nauis aqua. 130 Non semper sacras reddunt oracula sortis ipsaque non omni tempore fana patent.
Cum status Urbis erit qualem nunc auguror esse, et nullus populi contrahet ora dolor, cum domus Augusti Capitoli more colenda 135
laeta, quod est et sit, plenaque pacis erit, tum tibi di faciant adeundi copia fiat, profectura aliquid tum tua uerba putes.
Si quid aget maius, differ tua coepta caueque

spem festinando praecipitare meam. 140 Nec rursus iubeo, dum sit uacuissima, quaeras:
corporis ad curam uix uacat illa sui.
Omnia . . . . .
per rerum turbam tu quoque oportet eas.
Cum tibi contigerit uultum Iunonis adire, 145 fac sis personae quam tueare memor.
Nec factum defende meum: mala causa silenda est.
Nil nisi sollicitae sint tua uerba preces.
Tum lacrimis demenda mora est submissaque terra ad non mortalis brachia tende pedes. 150 Tum pete nil aliud saeuo nisi ab hoste recedam:
hostem Fortunam sit satis esse mihi.
Plura quidem subeunt, sed sunt turbata timore;
haec quoque uix poteris uoce tremente loqui.
Suspisor hoc damno fore non tibi: sentiet illa 155 te maiestatem pertimuisse suam.
Nec tua si fletu scindentur uerba, nocebit:
interdum lacrimae pondera uocis habent.
Lux etiam coeptis facito bona talibus adsit horaque conueniens auspiciumque fauens, 160 sed prius inposito sanctis altaribus igni tura fer ad magnos uinaque pura deos, e quibus ante omnes Augustum numen adora progeniemque piam participemque tori.
Sint utinam mites solito tibi more tuasque 165 non duris lacrimas uultibus aspiciant!

II. COTTAE

Quam legis a nobis missam tibi, Cotta, salutem, missa sit ut uere perueniatque precor.
Namque meis sospes multum cruciatibus aufers utque sit in nobis pars bona salua facis.
Cumque labent aliqui iactataque uela relinquunt, 5 tu lacerae remanes ancora sola rati.
Grata tua est igitur pietas, ignoscimus illis qui cum Fortuna terga dedere fugae.
Cum feriant unum, non unum fulmina terrent iunctaque percusso turba pauere solet. 10 Cumque dedit paries uenturae signa ruinae, sollicito uacuis fit locus ille metu.
Quis non e timidis aegri contagia uitat uicinum metuens ne trahat inde malum?
Me quoque amicorum nimio terrore metuque, 15
non odio quidam destituere mei.
Non illis pietas, non officiosa uoluntas defuit: aduersos extimere deos.
Vtque magis cauti possunt timidique uideri, sic adpellari non meruere mali. 20 Aut meus excusat caros ita candor amicos utque habeant de me crimina nulla fauet.
Sint hi contenti uenia signentque licebit purgari factum me quoque teste suum.
Pars estis pauci melior, qui rebus in artis 25
ferre mihi nullam turpe putastis opem.
Tunc igitur meriti morietur gratia uestri, cum cinis absumpto corpore factus ero.
Fallor et illa meae superabit tempora uitae, si tamen a memori posteritate legar. 30 Corpora debentur maestis exsanguia bustis, effugiunt structos nomen honorque rogos.

Occidit et Theseus et qui comitauit Orestem, sed tamen in laudes uiuit uterque suas.
Vos etiam seri laudabunt saepe nepotes 35
claraque erit scriptis gloria uestra meis.
Hic quoque Sauromatae iam uos nouere Getaeque, et tales animos barbara turba probat.
Cumque ego de uestra nuper probitate referrem
— nam didici Getice Sarmaticeque loqui — 40
forte senex quidam, coetu cum staret in illo, reddidit ad nostros talia uerba sonos:
'Nos quoque amicitiae nomen, bone, nouimus, hospes, quos procul a uobis Pontus et Hister habet.
Est locus in Scythia — Tauros dixere priores — 45 qui Getica longe non ita distat humo.
Hac ego sum terra — patriae nec paenitet — ortus.
Consortem Phoebi gens colit illa deam.
Templa manent hodie uastis innixa columnis perque quater denos itur in illa gradus. 50 Fama refert illic signum caeleste fuisse, quoque minus dubites, stat basis orba dea araque, quae fuerat natura candida saxi, decolor adfuso sanguine tincta rubet.
Femina sacra facit taedae non nota iugali, 55
quae superat Scythicas nobilitate nurus.
Sacrifici genus est, sic instituere parentes, aduena uirgineo caesus ut ense cadat.
Regna Thoas habuit Maeotide clarus in ora, nec fuit Euxinis notior alter aquis. 60 Sceptra tenente illo liquidas fecisse per auras nescio quam dicunt Iphigenian iter, quam leuibus uentis sub nube per aequora uectam creditur his Phoebe deposuisse locis.
Praefuerat templo multos ea rite per annos, 65
inuita peragens tristia sacra manu, cum duo uelifera iuuenes uenere carina presseruntque suo litora nostra pede.

Par fuit his aetas et amor, quorum alter Orestes, ast Pylades alter: nomina fama tenet. 70 Protinus inमितem Triuiaie ducuntur ad aram, euincti geminas ad sua terga manus.
Spargit aqua captos lustrali Graia sacerdos, ambiat ut fuluas infula longa comas, dumque parat sacrum, dum uelat tempora uittis, 75
dum tardae causas inuenit ipsa morae: “Non ego crudelis, iuuenes, ignoscite, dixit, sacra suo facio barbariora loco.
Ritus is est gentis. Qua uos tamen urbe uenitis quodue parum fausta puppe petistis iter?” 80 Dixit et audito patriae pia nomine uirgo consortes urbis comperit esse suae: “Alter ut e uobis, inquit, cadat hostia sacris, ad patrias sedes nuntius alter eat.”
Ire iubet Pylades carum periturus Orestem; 85
hic negat inque uices pugnat uterque mori.
Exitit hoc unum quo non conuenerit illis:
cetera par concors et sine lite fuit.
Dum peragunt iuuenes pulchri certamen amoris, ad fratrem scriptas exarat illa notas. 90
Ad fratrem mandata dabat, cuique illa dabantur,
— humanos casus aspice! — frater erat.
Nec mora, de templo rapiunt simulacra Dianae clamque per immensas puppe feruntur aquas.
Mirus amor iuuenum; quamuis abiere tot anni, 95
in Scythia magnum nunc quoque nomen habent.’ Fabula narrata est postquam uulgaris ab illo, laudarunt omnes facta piamque fidem.
Scilicet hac etiam, qua nulla ferocior ora est, nomen amicitiae barbara corda mouet. 100 Quid facere Ausonia geniti debetis in urbe, cum tangant duros talia facta Getas?
Adde quod est animus semper tibi mitis et altae indiciū more nobilitatis habent quos Volesus patrii cognoscat nominis auctor, 105 quos Numa maternus non neget esse suos adiectique probent genetiuā ad nomina Cottae, si tu non esses, interitura domus.

Digne uir hac serie, lasso succurrere amico conueniens istis moribus esse puta.

III. FABIO MAXIMO

Si uacat exiguum profugo dare tempus amico, o sidus Fabiae, Maxime, gentis, ades, dum tibi quae uidi refero, seu corporis umbra seu ueri species seu fuit ille sopor.
Nox erat et bifores intrabat luna fenestras, 5 mense fere medio quanta nitere solet.
Publica me requies curarum somnus habebat fusaque erant toto languida membra toro, cum subito pennis agitatus inhorruit aer et gemuit paruo mota fenestra sono. 10 Territus in cubitum releuo mea membra sinistrum, pulsus et e trepido pectore somnus abit.
Stabat Amor, uultu non quo prius esse solebat, fulcra tenens laeua tristis acerna manu, nec torquem collo neque habens crinale capillo 15
nec bene dispositas comptus ut ante comas.
Horrida pendebant molles super ora capilli et uisa est oculis horrida penna meis, qualis in aerae tergo solet esse columbae tractatam multae quam tetigere manus. 20 Hunc simul agnoui — neque enim mihi notior alter — talibus adfata est libera lingua sonis:
'O puer, exilii decepto causa magistro, quem fuit utilius non docuisse mihi, huc quoque uenisti, pax est ubi tempore nullo 25 et coit adstrictis barbarus Hister aquis?
Quae tibi causa uiae, nisi uti mala nostra uideres, quae sunt, si nescis, inuidiosa tibi?
Tu mihi dictasti iuuenalia carmina primus, adposui senis te duce quinque pedes. 30 Nec me Maeonio consurgere carmine nec me

dicere magnorum passus es acta ducum.
Forsitan exiguas, aliquas tamen, arcus et ignes ingenii uires comminuere mei.
Namque ego dum canto tua regna tuaeque parentis, 35
in nullum mea mens grande uacauit opus.
Nec satis hoc fuerat: stulto quoque carmine feci Artibus ut posses non rudis esse meis.
Pro quibus exilium misero est mihi reddita merces, id quoque in extremis et sine pace locis. 40
At non Chionides Eumolpus in Orphea talis, in Phryga nec Satyrum talis Olympus erat, praemia nec Chiron ab Achille talia cepit, Pythagoraeque ferunt non nocuisse Numam.
Nomina neu referam longum collecta per aeuum, 45 discipulo perii solus ab ipse meo.
Dum damus arma tibi, dum te, lasciue, docemus,
haec te discipulo dona magister habet.
Scis tamen et liquido iuratus dicere possis non me legitimos sollicitasse toros. 50 Scripsimus haec illis quarum nec uitta pudicos contingit crines nec stola longa pedes.
Dic, precor, ecquando didicisti fallere nuptas et facere incertum per mea iussa genus?
An sit ab his omnis rigide submota libellis 55
quam lex furtiuos arcet habere uiros?
Quid tamen hoc prodest, uetiti si lege seuera credor adulterii composuisse notas?
At tu — sic habeas ferientes cuncta sagittas, sic numquam rapido lampades igne uacent, 60 sic regat imperium terrasque coerceat omnis Caesar, ab Aenea est qui tibi fratre tuus — effice sit nobis non inplacabilis ira meque loco plecti commodiore uelit.’
Haec ego uisus eram puero dixisse uolucris, 65 hos uisus nobis ille dedisse sonos: ‘Per mea tela, faces, et per mea tela, sagittas, per matrem iuro Caesareumque caput nil nisi concessum nos te didicisse magistro Artibus et nullum crimen inesse tuis. 70

Vtque hoc, sic utinam defendere cetera possem!
Scis aliud quod te laeserit esse magis.
Quidquid id est, — neque enim debet dolor ipse referri, nec potes a culpa dicere abesse tua — tu licet erroris sub imagine crimen obumbres, 75 non grauior merito iudicis ira fuit.
Vt tamen aspicerem consolarerque iacentem, lapsa per inmensas est mea penna uias.
Haec loca tum primum uidi cum matre rogante Phasias est telis fixa puella meis. 80
Quae nunc cur iterum post saecula longa reuisam tu facis, o castris miles amice meis.
Pone metus igitur: mitescet Caesaris ira et ueniet uotis mollior aura tuis.
Neue moram timeas, tempus quod quaerimus instat 85
cunctaque laetitiae plena triumphus habet.
Dum domus et nati, dum mater Liuia gaudet, dum gaudes, patriae magne ducisque pater, dum sibi gratatur populus totamque per Urbem omnis odoratis ignibus ara calet, 90 dum faciles aditus praebet uenerabile templum, sperandum est nostras posse ualere preces.
Dixit et aut ille est tenues dilapsus in auras, coeperunt sensus aut uigilare mei.
Si dubitem faueas quin his, o Maxime, dictis, 95
Memnonio cygnos esse colore putem.
Sed neque mutatur nigra pice lacteus umor, nec quod erat candens fit terebinthus ebur.
Conueniens animo genus est tibi; nobile namque pectus et Herculeae simplicitatis habes. 100 Liuor, iners uitium, mores non exit in altos utque latens ima uipera serpit humo.
Mens tua sublimis supra genus eminent ipsum grandius ingenio nec tibi nomen inest.

Ergo alii noceant miseris optentque timeri      105
    tinctaque mordaci spicula felle gerant.
At tua supplicibus domus est adsueta iuuandis, in quorum numero me, precor, esse uelis.

IV. RVFINO

Haec tibi non uanam portantia uerba salutem Naso Tomitana mittit ab urbe tuus, utque suo faueas mandat, Rufine, Triumpho, in uestras uenit si tamen ille manus.
Est opus exiguum uestrisque paratibus inpar: 5 quale tamen cumque est, ut tueare, rogo.
Firma ualent per se nullumque Machaona quaerunt;
ad medicam dubius confugit aeger opem.
Non opus est magnis placido lectore poetis:
quemlibet inuitum difficilemque tenent. 10 Nos, quibus ingenium longi minuere labores aut etiam nullum forsitan ante fuit, uiribus infirmi uestro candore ualemus;
quod mihi si demas, omnia rapta putem.
Cunctaque cum mea sint propenso nixa fauore, 15 praecipuum ueniae ius habet ille liber.
Spectatum uates alii scripsere triumphum:
est aliquid memori uisa notare manu.
Nos ea uix auidam uulgo captata per aurem scripsimus atque oculi fama fuere mei. 20 Scilicet adfectus similis aut impetus idem rebus ab auditis conspicuisque uenit!
Nec nitor argenti quem uos uidistis et auri quod mihi defuerit purpuraque illa queror, sed loca, sed gentes formatae mille figuris 25 nutrissent carmen proeliaque ipsa meum, et regum uultus, certissima pignora mentis, iuuissent aliqua forsitan illud opus.
Plausibus ex ipsis populi laetoque fauore ingenium quoduis incaluisse potest, 30 tamque ego sumpsissem tali clamore uigorem

quam rudis audita miles ad arma tuba.
Pectora sint nobis niuibus glacieque licebit atque hoc quem patior frigidiora loco, illa ducis facies in curru stantis eburno 35
excuteret frigus sensibus omne meis.
His ego defectus dubiisque auctoribus usus ad uestri uenio iure fauoris opem.
Nec mihi nota ducum nec sunt mihi nota locorum nomina: materiam non habuere manus. 40 Pars quota de tantis rebus, quam fama referre aut aliquis nobis scribere posset, erat?
Quo magis, o lector, debes ignoscere, si quid erratum est illic praeteritumue mihi.
Adde quod adsidue domini meditata querelas 45 ad laetum carmen uix mea uersa lyra est.
Vix bona post tanto quaerenti uerba subibant et gaudere aliquid res mihi uisa noua est, utque reformidant insuetum lumina solem, sic ad laetitiam mens mea segnis erat. 50 Est quoque cunctarum nouitas carissima rerum gratiaque officio quod mora tardat abest.
Cetera certatim de magno scripta triumpho
iam pridem populi suspicor ore legi.
Illa bibit sitiens lector, mea pocula plenus. 55
Illa recens pota est, nostra tepebit aqua.
Non ego cessauit nec fecit inertia serum:
ultima me uasti sustinet ora freti.
Dum uenit huc rumor properataque carmina fiunt factaque eunt ad uos, annus abisse potest. 60 Nec minimum refert intacta rosaria primus an sera carpas paene relictas manu.
Quid mirum lectis exhausto floribus horto si duce non facta est digna corona suo?
Deprecor hoc: uatum contra sua carmina ne quis 65
dicta putet! pro se Musa locuta mea est.
Sunt mihi uobiscum communia sacra, poetae,

in uestro miseris si licet esse choro, magnaue pars animae mecum uixistis, amici:
    hac ego uos absens nunc quoque parte colo.       70 Sint igitur uestro mea commendata fauore carmina, non possum pro quibus ipse loqui.
Scripta placent a morte fere, quia laedere uiuos liuor et iniusto carpere dente solet.
Si genus est mortis male uiuere, terra moratur       75 et desunt fatis sola sepulcra meis.
Denique opus curae culpetur ut undique nostrae, officium nemo qui reprehendat erit.
Vt desint uires, tamen est laudanda uoluntas:
    hac ego contentos auguror esse deos.       80 Haec facit ut ueniat pauper quoque gratus ad aras et placeat caeso non minus agna boue.
Res quoque tanta fuit quantae subsistere summo Aeneidos uati grande fuisset onus.
Ferre etiam molles elegi tam uasta triumphis       85
    pondera disparibus non potuere rotis.
Quo pede nunc utar dubia est sententia nobis:
    alter enim de te, Rhene, triumphus adest.
Inrita uotorum non sunt praesagia uatum.
    Danda loui laurus, dum prior illa uiret.       90
Nec mea uerba legis, qui sum submotus ad Histrum, non bene pacatis flumina pota Getis.
Ista dei uox est: deus est in pectore nostro;
    haec duce praedico uaticinorque deo.
Quid cessas curram pompamque parare triumphis,       95
    Liua? Dant nullas iam tibi bella moras.
Perfida damnatas Germania proicit hastas:
    iam pondus dices omen habere meum.
Crede, breuique fides aderit. Geminabit honorem filius et iunctis ut prius ibit equis.       100 Prome quod incias umeris uictoribus ostrum:
    ipsa potest solitum nosse corona caput.
Scuta sed et galeae gemmis radientur et auro stentque super uinctos trunca tropaea uiros.

Oppida turritis cingantur eburnea muris 105

fictaque res uero more putetur agi.

Squalidus inmissos fracta sub harundine crines

Rhenus et infectas sanguine portet aquas.

Barbara iam capti poscunt insignia reges textaque fortuna diuitiora sua 110

< . . . . .

. . . . . >

et quae praeterea uirtus inuicta tuorum saepe parata tibi saepe paranda facit.

Di, quorum monitu sumus euentura locuti, 115

uerba, precor, celeri nostra probate fide.

V. COTTAE MAXIMO

Quam legis unde tibi mittatur epistula, quaeris?
Hinc ubi caeruleis iungitur Hister aquis.
Vt regio dicta est, succurrere debet et auctor, laesus ab ingenio Naso poeta suo.
Qui tibi quam mallet praesens adferre salutem 5 mittit ab hirsutis, Maxime Cotta, Getis.
Legimus, o iuuenis patrii non degener oris, dicta tibi pleno uerba diserta foro.
Quae quamquam lingua mihi sunt properante per horas lecta satis multas, pauca fuisse queror. 10 Plura sed haec feci relegendo saepe nec umquam non mihi quam primo grata fuere magis.
Cumque nihil totiens lecta e dulcedine perdant, uiribus illa suis, non nouitate placent.
Felices quibus haec ipso cognoscere in actu 15 et tam facundo contigit ore frui!
Nam, quamquam sapor est adlata dulcis in unda, gratius ex ipso fonte bibuntur aquae.
Et magis adducto pomum decerpere ramo quam de caelata sumere lance iuuat. 20
At nisi peccassem, nisi me mea Musa fugasset, quod legi tua uox exhibuisset opus, utque fui solitus, sedissem forsitan unus de centum iudex in tua uerba uiris, maior et inplesset praecordia nostra uoluptas, 25 cum traherer dictis adnueremque tuis.
Quem quoniam fatum patria uobisque relictis inter inhumanos maluit esse Getas, quod licet, ut uidear tecum magis esse legendo, saepe, precor, studii pignora mitte tui 30 exemploque meo, nisi dedignaris id ipsum, utere, quod nobis rectius ipse dares.

Namque ego, qui perii iam pridem, Maxime, uobis, ingenio nitor non periisse meo.
Redde uicem, nec rara tui monimenta laboris 35
accipiant nostrae grata futura manus.
Dic tamen, o iuuenis studiorum plene meorum, ecquid ab his ipsis admoneare mei.
Ecquid, ubi aut recitas factum modo carmen amicis aut, quod saepe soles, exigis ut recitent, 40 quaeror, ut interdum tua mens, oblita quid absit, nescioquid certe sentit abesse sui, utque loqui multum de me praesente solebas,
nunc quoque Nasonis nomen in ore tuo est?
Ipse quidem Getico peream uiolatus ab arcu 45
— et sit periuri quam prope poena uides — , te nisi momentis uideo paene omnibus absens!
Gratia quod menti quolibet ire licet.
Hac ubi perueni nulli cernendus in Urbem, saepe loquor tecum, saepe loquente fruor. 50 Tum mihi difficile est quam sit bene dicere quamque candida iudiciis illa sit hora meis.
Tum me, si qua fides, caelesti sede receptum cum fortunatis suspicor esse deis.
Rursus ubi huc redii, caelum superosque relinquo, 55
a Styge nec longe Pontica distat humus.
Vnde ego si fato nitor prohibente reuerti, spem sine profectu, Maxime, tolle mihi.

VI. AD AMICVM CELATO NOMINE

Naso suo — posuit nomen quam paene! — sodali mittit ab Euxinis hoc breue carmen aquis.
At si cauta parum scripsisset dextra quis esses, forsitan officio parta querela foret.
Cur tamen hoc aliis tutum credentibus unus      5 adpellent ne te carmina nostra rogas?
Quanta sit in media clementia Caesaris ira, si nescis, ex me certior esse potes.
Huic ego quam patior nil possem demere poenae, si iudex meriti cogerer esse mei.      10 Non uetat ille sui quemquam meminisse sodalis nec prohibet tibi me scribere teque mihi.
Nec scelus admittas, si consoleris amicum mollibus et uerbis aspera fata leues.
Cur, dum tuta times, facis ut reuerentia talis      15 fiat in Augustos inuidiosa deos?
Fulminis adflatos interdum uiuere telis uidimus et refici non prohibente loue, nec, quia Neptunus nauem lacerarat Vlixis, Leucothee nanti ferre negauit opem.      20
Crede mihi, miseris caelestia numina parcunt nec semper laesos et sine fine premunt.
Principe nec nostro deus est moderatior ullus:
iustitia uires temperat ille suas;
nuper eam Caesar facto de marmore templo,      25
iam pridem posuit mentis in aede suae.
Iuppiter in multos temeraria fulmina torquet qui poenam culpa non meruere pati.
Obruerit cum tot saeuus deus aequoris undis, ex illis mergi pars quota digna fuit?      30 Cum pereant acie fortissima quaeque, uel ipso

iudice delectus Martis iniquus erit.
At si forte uelis in nos inquirere, nemo est qui se quod patitur commeruisse neget.
Adde quod extinctos uel aqua uel Marte uel igni 35
nulla potest iterum restituuisse dies.
Restituit multos aut poenae parte leuauit
Caesar et in multis me precor esse uelit.
At tu, cum tali populus sub principe simus, adloquio profugi credis inesse metum? 40 Forsitan haec domino Busiride iure timeres aut solito clausos urere in aere uiros.
Desine mitem animum uano infamare timore.
Saeua quid in placidis saxa uereris aquis?
Ipse ego, quod primo scripsi sine nomine uobis, 45 uix excusari posse mihi uideor.
Sed pauor attonito rationis ademerat usum, cesserat omne nouis consiliumque malis, fortunamque meam metuens, non uindicis iram terrebar titulo nominis ipse mei. 50 Hactenus admonitus memori concede poetae ponat ut in chartis nomina cara suis.
Turpe erit ambobus, longo mihi proximus usu si nulla libri parte legere mei.
Ne tamen iste metus somnos tibi rumpere possit, 55 non ultra quam uis officiosus ero teque tegam qui sis, nisi cum permiseris ipse.
Cogetur nemo munus habere meum.
Tu modo, quem poteras uel aperte tutus amare, si res est anceps ista, latenter ama.

VII. AD AMICOS

Verba mihi desunt eadem tam saepe roganti iamque pudet uanas sine carere preces.
Taedia consimili fieri de carmine uobis, quidque petam, cunctos edidicisse reor.
Nostraque quid portet iam nostis epistula, quamuis 5 charta sit a vinculis non labefacta suis.
Ergo mutetur scripti sententia nostri, ne totiens contra quam rapit amnis eam.
Quod bene de uobis speraui, ignoscite, amici:
talia peccandi iam mihi finis erit. 10 Nec grauis uxori dicar, quae scilicet in me quam proba tam timida est experiensque parum.
Hoc quoque, Naso, feres, etenim peiora tulisti:
iam tibi sentiri sarcina nulla potest.
Ductus ab armento taurus detrectet aratrum 15 subtrahat et duro colla nouella iugo.
Nos, quibus adsuerit fatum crudeliter uti, ad mala iam pridem non sumus ulla rudes.
Venimus in Geticos fines: moriamur in illis, Parcaque ad extremum qua mea coepit eat! 20
Spem iuuat amplecti, quae non iuuat inrita semper, et, fieri cupias si qua, futura putes.
Proximus huic gradus est bene desperare salutem seque semel uera scire perisse fide.
Curando fieri quaedam maiora uidemus 25
uulnera, quae melius non tetigisse fuit.
Mitius ille perit, subita qui mergitur unda, quam sua qui tumidis brachia iactat aquis.
Cur ego concepi Scythicis me posse carere finibus et terra prosperiore frui? 30
Cur aliquid de me speraui lenius umquam?

An fortuna mihi sic mea nota fuit?
Torqueor en grauius repetitaque forma locorum exilium renouat triste recensque facit.
Est tamen utilius studium cessasse meorum 35
quam, quas admorint, non ualuisse preces.
Magna quidem res est, quam non audetis, amici,
sed si quis peteret, qui dare uellet erat.
Dummodo non nobis hoc Caesaris ira negarit, fortiter Euxinis inmoriemur aquis.

VIII. FABIO MAXIMO

Quae tibi quaerebam memorem testantia curam dona Tomitanus mittere posset ager.
Dignus es argento, fuluo quoque dignior auro, sed te, cum donas, ista iuuare solent.
Nec tamen haec loca sunt ullo pretiosa metallo: 5 hostis ab agricola uix sinit illa fodi.
Purpura saepe tuos fulgens praetexit amictus, sed non Sarmatico tingitur illa mari.
Vellera dura ferunt pecudes et Palladis uti arte Tomitanae non didicere nurus. 10 Femina pro lana Cerealia munera frangit subpositoque grauem uertice portat aquam.
Non hic pampineis amicitur uitibus ulmus, nulla premunt ramos pondere poma suos.
Tristia deformes pariunt absinthia campi 15
terraque de fructu quam sit amara docet.
Nil igitur tota Ponti regione Sinistri quod mea sedulitas mittere posset erat.
Clausa tamen misi Scythica tibi tela pharetra:
hoste, precor, fiant illa cruenta tuo. 20 Hos habet haec calamos, hos haec habet ora libellos, haec uiget in nostris, Maxime, Musa locis!
Quae quamquam misisse pudet, quia parua uidentur, tu tamen haec, quaeso, consule missa boni!

IX. BRVTO

Quod sit in his eadem sententia, Brute, libellis, carmina nescio quem carpere nostra refers,
nil nisi me terra fruar ut propiore rogare et quam sim denso cinctus ab hoste loqui.
O! quam de multis uitium reprehenditur unum! 5
Hoc peccat solum si mea Musa, bene est.
Ipse ego librorum uideo delicta meorum, cum sua plus iusto carmina quisque probet.
Auctor opus laudat: sic forsitan Agrius olim Thersiten facie dixerit esse bona. 10
Iudicium tamen hic nostrum non decipit error, nec quicquid genui protinus illud amo.
Cur igitur, si me uideo delinquere, peccem et patiar scripto crimen inesse rogas?
Non eadem ratio est sentire et demere morbos: 15
sensus inest cunctis, tollitur arte malum.
Saepe aliquod uerbum cupiens mutare reliqui, iudicium uires destituuntque meum.
Saepe piget — quid enim dubitem tibi uera fateri? — corrigere et longi ferre laboris onus. 20 Scribentem iuuat ipse labor minuitque laborem cumque suo crescens pectore feruet opus.
Corrigere ut res est tanto minus ardua quanto magnus Aristarcho maior Homerus erat, sic animum lento curarum frigore laedit 25 et cupidi cursus frena retentat equi.
Atque ita di mites minuant mihi Caesaris iram ossaque pacata nostra tegantur humo, ut mihi conanti nonnumquam intendere curas fortunae species obstat acerba meae, 30 uixque mihi uideor faciam qui carmina sanus inque feris curem corrigere illa Getis.

Nil tamen e scriptis magis excusabile nostris quam sensus cunctis paene quod unus inest.
Laeta fere laetus cecini, cano tristia tristis:     35 conueniens operi tempus utrumque suo est.
Quid nisi de uitio scribam regionis amarae, utque loco moriar commodiore precer?
Cum totiens eadem dicam, uix audior ulli uerbaque profectu dissimulata carent.     40 Et tamen haec eadem cum sint, non scripsimus isdem unaque per plures uox mea temptat opem.
An, ne bis sensum lector reperiret eundem, unus amicorum, Brute, rogandus eras?
Non fuit hoc tanti, confesso ignoscite, docti!     45
    Vilior est operis fama salute mea.
Denique materiam quam quis sibi finxerit ipse, arbitrio uariat multa poeta suo.
Musa mea est index nimium quoque uera malorum atque incorrupti pondera testis habet.     50 Nec liber ut fieret, sed uti sua cuique daretur littera, propositum curaque nostra fuit.
Postmodo conlectas utcumque sine ordine iunxi:
    hoc opus electum ne mihi forte putes.
Da ueniam scriptis, quorum non gloria nobis     55
    causa, sed utilitas officiumque fuit.

LIBER QVARTVS

I. SEX. POMPEIO

Accipe, Pompei, deductum carmen ab illo debitor est uitae qui tibi, Sexte, suae.
Qui seu non prohibes a me tua nomina poni, accedet meritis haec quoque summa tuis, siue trahis uultus, equidem peccasse fatebor, 5 delicti tamen est causa probanda mei.
Non potuit mea mens quin esset grata teneri:
sit precor officio non grauis ira pio.
O, quotiens ego sum libris mihi uisus ab istis inpius, in nullo quod legerere loco! 10 O, quotiens, alii uellem cum scribere, nomen rettulit in ceras inscia dextra tuum!
Ipse mihi placuit mendis in talibus error et uix inuita facta litura manu est.
'Viderit ad summam, dixi, licet ipse queratur! 15 a! pudet offensam non meruisse prius.'
Da mihi, si quid ea est, hebetantem pectora Lethen, oblitus potero non tamen esse tui, idque sinas, oro, nec fastidita repellas uerba nec officio crimen inesse putes, 20 et leuis haec meritis referatur gratia tantis;
si minus, inuito te quoque gratus ero.
Numquam pigra fuit nostris tua gratia rebus nec mihi munificas arca negauit opes.
Nunc quoque nil subitis clementia territa fatis 25
auxilium uitae fertque feretque meae.
Vnde, rogas forsitan, fiducia tanta futuri sit mihi? Quod fecit, quisque tuetur opus.
Vt Venus artificis labor est et gloria Coi, aequoreo madidas quae premit imbre comas, 30 arcis ut Actaeae uel eburna uel aerea custos bellica Phidiaca stat dea facta manu, uindicat ut Calamis laudem quos fecit equorum, ut similis uerae uacca Myronis opus, sic ego sum rerum non ultima, Sexte, tuarum     35 tutelaeque feror munus opusque tuae.

II. SEVERO

Quod legis, o uates magnorum maxime regum, uenit ab intonsis usque, Seuere, Getis, cuius adhuc nomen nostros tacuisse libellos,
si modo permittis dicere uera, pudet.
Orba tamen numeris cessauit epistula numquam 5 ire per alternas officiosa uices.
Carmina sola tibi memorem testantia curam non data sunt: quid enim quae facis ipse darem?
Quis mel Aristaeo, quis Baccho uina Falerna, Triptolemo fruges, poma det Alcinoos? 10 Fertile pectus habes interque Heliconae colentes uberius nulli prouenit ista seges.
Mittere ad hunc carmen frondes erat addere siluis.
Haec mihi cunctandi causa, Seuere, fuit.
Nec tamen ingenium nobis respondet ut ante, 15
sed siccum sterili uomere litus aro.
Scilicet ut limus uenas excaecat in undis laesaque subpresso fonte resistit aqua, pectora sic mea sunt limo uitata malorum et carmen uena pauperiore fluit. 20 Si quis in hac ipsum terra posuisset Homerum, esset, crede mihi, factus et ille Getes.
Da ueniam fasso, studiis quoque frena remisi ducitur et digitis littera rara meis.
Inpetus ille sacer qui uatum pectora nutrit, 25 qui prius in nobis esse solebat, abest.
Vix uenit ad partes, uix sumptae Musa tabellae inponit pigras paene coacta manus, paruaque, ne dicam scribendi nulla uoluptas est mihi nec numeris nectere uerba iuuat, 30 siue quod hinc fructus adeo non cepimus ullos, principium nostri res sit ut ista mali, siue quod in tenebris numerosos ponere gestus quodque legas nulli scribere carmen idem est:

excitat auditor studium laudataque uirtus 35
crescit et inmensum gloria calcar habet.
Hic mea cui recitem nisi flauis scripta Corallis quasque alias gentes barbarus Hister habet?
Sed quid solus agam quaque infelicia perdam otia materia subripiamque diem? 40 Nam quia nec uinum nec me tenet alea fallax per quae clam tacitum tempus abire solet nec me — quod cuperem, si per fera bella liceret — oblectat cultu terra nouata suo, quid nisi Pierides, solacia frigida, restant, 45 non bene de nobis quae meruere deae?
At tu, cui bibitur felicius Aonius fons, utiliter studium quod tibi cedit ama sacraque Musarum merito cole, quodque legamus huc aliquod curae mitte recentis opus.

III. AD INGRATVM

Conquerar an taceam? Ponam sine nomine crimen an notum qui sis omnibus esse uelim?
Nomine non utar, ne commendere querela, quaeraturque tibi carmine fama meo.
Dum mea puppis erat ualida fundata carina, 5 qui mecum uelles currere primus eras.
Nunc, quia contraxit uultum Fortuna, recedis, auxilio postquam scis opus esse tuo.
Dissimulas etiam nec me uis nosse uideri quisque sit audito nomine Naso rogas. 10 Ille ego sum, quamquam non uis audire, uetusta paene puer puero iunctus amicitia, ille ego qui primus tua seria nosse solebam et tibi iucundis primus adesse iocis, ille ego conuictor densoque domesticus usu, 15
ille ego iudiciis unica Musa tuis, ille ego sum qui nunc an uiuam, perfide, nescis, cura tibi de quo quaerere nulla fuit.
Siue fui numquam carus, simulasse fateris, seu non fingebas, inueniere leuis. 20
Aut age, dic aliquam quae te mutauerit iram.
Nam nisi iusta tua est, iusta querela mea est.
Quod te nunc crimen similem uetat esse priori?
An crimen, coepi quod miser esse, uocas?
Si mihi rebus opem nullam factisque ferebas, 25
uenisset uerbis charta notata tribus.
Vix equidem credo, sed et insultare iacenti te mihi nec uerbis parcere fama refert.
Quid facis, a! demens? Cur, si Fortuna recedat, naufragio lacrimas eripis ipse tuo? 30
Haec dea non stabili quam sit leuis orbe fatetur,

quae summum dubio sub pede semper habet.
 Quolibet est folio, quavis incertior aura.
 Par illi leuitas, improbe, sola tua est.
 Omnia sunt hominum tenui pendentia filo      35 et subito casu quae ualuere ruunt.
 Diuitis audita est cui non opulentia Croesi?
 Nempe tamen uitam captus ab hoste tulit.
 Ille Syracosia modo formidatus in urbe uix humili duram reppulit arte famem.      40 Quid fuerat Magno maius? Tamen ille rogauit submissa fugiens uoce clientis opem, cuique uiro totus terrarum paruit orbis
 . . . . .
 Ille Iugurthino clarus Cimbroque triumpho,      45 quo uictrix totiens consule Roma fuit, in caeno Marius iacuit cannaque palustri pertulit et tanto multa pudenda uiro.
 Ludit in humanis diuina potentia rebus et certam praesens uix feret hora fidem.      50
 'Litus ad Euxinum' si quis mihi diceret 'ibis et metues arcu ne feriare Getae',
 'I, bibe' dixissem 'purgantes pectora sucos quicquid et in tota nascitur Anticyra.'
 Sum tamen haec passus nec, si mortalia possem,      55 et summi poteram tela cauere dei.
 Tu quoque fac timeas et quae tibi laeta uidentur, dum loqueris, fieri tristia posse puta.

IV. SEX. POMPEIO

Nulla dies adeo est australibus umida nimbis, non intermissis ut fluat imber aquis;
nec sterilis locus ullus ita est, ut non sit in illo mixta fere duris utilis herba rubis.
Nil adeo fortuna grauis miserabile fecit     5 ut minuant nulla gaudia parte malum.
Ecce domo patriaque carens oculisque meorum, naufragus in Getici litoris actus aquas, qua tamen inueni uultum diffundere causa possim fortunae nec meminisse meae.     10 Nam mihi cum fulua solus spatiarer harena, uisa est a tergo penna dedisse sonum.
Respicio nec erat corpus quod cernere possem, uerba tamen sunt haec aure recepta mea:
'En ego laetarum uenio tibi nuntia rerum,     15
Fama per inmensas aere lapsa uias:
consule Pompeio, quo non tibi carior alter, candidus et felix proximus annus erit!'
Dixit et, ut laeto Pontum rumore repleuit, ad gentes alias hinc dea uertit iter,     20
at mihi dilapsis inter noua gaudia curis excidit asperitas huius iniqua loci.
Ergo ubi, lane biceps, longum reseraueris annum pulsus et a sacro mense December erit, purpura Pompeium summi uelabit honoris,     25
ne titulis quicquam debeat ille suis.
Cernere iam uideor rumpi paene atria turba et populum laedi deficiente loco templaque Tarpeiae primum tibi sedis adiri et fieri faciles in tua uota deos,     30 colla boues niueos certae praebere securi,

quos aluit campis herba Falisca suis,
cumque deos omnes, tum quos inpensius aequos esse tibi cupias, cum loue Caesar erunt.
Curia te excipiet patresque e more uocati 35
intendent aures ad tua uerba suas.
Hos ubi facundo tua uox hilarauerit ore, utque solet, tulerit prospera uerba dies egeris et meritas superis cum Caesare grates — qui causam, facias cur ita saepe, dabit! — , 40 inde domum repetes toto comitante senatu officium populi uix capiente domo.
Me miserum, turba quod non ego cernar in illa nec poterunt istis lumina nostra frui!
Quod licet, absentem qua possum mente uidebo; 45
aspiciet uultus consulis illa sui.
Di faciant aliquo subeat tibi tempore nostrum nomen et 'Heu!' dicas 'quid miser ille facit?'
Haec tua pertulerit si quis mihi uerba, fatebor protinus exilium mollius esse meum.

V. SEX. POMPEIO

Ite, leues elegi, doctas ad consulis aures uerbaque honorato ferte legenda uiro.
Longa uia est nec uos pedibus proceditis aequis tectaque brumali sub niue terra latet.
Cum gelidam Thracen et opertum nubibus Haemum 5 et maris Ionii transieritis aquas, luce minus decima dominam uenietis in Urbem, ut festinatum non faciatis iter.
Protinus inde domus uobis Pompeia petatur:
non est Augusto iunctior ulla foro. 10
Si quis, ut in populo, qui sitis et unde requiret, nomina decepta quaelibet aure ferat.
Vt sit enim tutum, sicut reor esse, fateri uera, minus certe ficta timoris habent.
Copia nec uobis nullo prohibente uidendi 15 consulis, ut limen contigeritis, erit:
aut reget ille suos dicendo iura Quirites, conspicuum signis cum premet altus ebur, aut populi reditus positam componet ad hastam et minui magnae non sinet urbis opes, 20 aut, ubi erunt patres in Iulia templa uocati, de tanto dignis consule rebus aget, aut feret Augusto solitam natoque salutem deque parum noto consulet officio tempus et his uacuum Caesar Germanicus omne 25 auferet: a magnis hunc colit ille deis.
Cum tamen a turba rerum requieuerit harum, ad uos mansuetas porriget ille manus quidque parens ego uester agam fortasse requiret.
Talia uos illi reddere uerba uolo: 30
'Viuit adhuc uitamque tibi debere fatetur

quam prius a miti Caesare munus habet.
Te sibi, cum fugeret, memori solet ore referre barbariae tutas exhibuisse uias.
Sanguine Bistonium quod non tepefecerit ensem, 35
effectum cura pectoris esse tui.
Addita praeterea uitae quoque multa tuendae munera, ne proprias attenuaret opes.
Pro quibus ut meritis referatur gratia, iurat se fore mancipii tempus in omne tui. 40 Nam prius umbrosa carituros arbore montes et freta ueliuolas non habitura rates fluminaque in fontes cursu reditura supino gratia quam meriti possit abire tui.'
Haec ubi dixeritis, seruet sua dona rogate! 45
Sic fuerit uestrae causa peracta uiae.

VI. BRVTO

Quam legis, ex illis tibi uenit epistula, Brute, Nasonem nolles in quibus esse locis, sed tu quod nolles, uoluit miserabile fatum.
Ei mihi! plus illud quam tua uota ualet.
In Scythia nobis quinquennis olympias acta est; 5
iam tempus lustris transit in alterius.
Perstat enim Fortuna tenax uotisque malignum opponit nostris insidiosa pedem.
Certus eras pro me, Fabiae laus, Maxime, gentis, numen ad Augustum supplice uoce loqui. 10 Occidis ante preces causamque ego, Maxime, mortis — nec fuero tanti! — me reor esse tuae.
Iam timeo nostram cuiquam mandare salutem;
ipsum morte tua concidit auxilium.
Coeperat Augustus deceptae ignoscere culpae, 15
spem nostram terras deseruitque simul.
Quale tamen potui, de caelitate, Brute, recenti uestra procul positus carmen in ora dedi.
Quae prosit pietas utinam mihi sitque malorum iam modus et sacrae mitior ira domus! 20 Te quoque idem liquido possum iurare precari, o mihi non dubia cognite Brute nota.
Nam cum praestiteris uerum mihi semper amorem, hic tamen aduerso tempore creuit amor, quique tuas pariter lacrimas nostrasque uideret 25
passuros poenam crederet esse duos.
Lenem te miseris genuit natura nec ulli mitius ingenium quam tibi, Brute, dedit, ut, qui quid ualeas ignoret Marte forensi, posse tuo peragi uix putet ore reos. 30 Scilicet eiusdem est, quamuis pugnare uidentur, supplicibus facilem, sontibus esse trucem.

Cum tibi suscepta est legis uindicta seuerae,
uerba uelut tinctum singula uirus habent.
Hostibus eueniat quam sis uiolentus in armis 35 sentire et linguae tela subire tuae quae tibi tam tenui cura limantur ut omnes istius ingenium corporis esse negent.
At si quem laedi fortuna cernis iniqua, mollior est animo femina nulla tuo. 40 Hoc ego praecipue sensi, cum magna meorum notitiam pars est infitiata mei.
Inmemor illorum, uestri non inmemor umquam qui mala solliciti nostra leuatis ero.
Et prius hic nimium nobis conterminus Hister 45
in caput Euxino de mare uertet iter, utque Thyesteae redeant si tempora mensae, Solis ad Eoas currus agetur aquas, quam quisquam uestrum qui me doluistis ademptum arguat ingratum non meminisse sui.

VII. VESTALI

Missus es Euxinas quoniam, Vestalis, ad undas, ut positis reddas iura sub axe locis, aspicis en praesens quali iaceamus in aruo,
nec me testis eris falsa solere queri.
Accedet uoci per te non inrita nostrae, 5
Alpinis iuuenis regibus orte, fides.
Ipse uides certe glacie concrecere Pontum, ipse uides rigido stantia uina gelu;
ipse uides onerata ferox ut ducat lazyx per medias Histri plaustra bubulcus aquas. 10 Aspicis et mitti sub adunco toxica ferro et telum causas mortis habere duas.
Atque utinam pars haec tantum spectata fuisset, non etiam proprio cognita Marte tibi!
Tendisti ad primum per densa pericula pilum, 15
contigit ex merito qui tibi nuper honor.
Sit licet hic titulus plenus tibi fructibus, ingens ipsa tamen uirtus ordine maior erit.
Non negat hoc Hister, cuius tua dextera quondam puniceam Getico sanguine fecit aquam. 20 Non negat Aegisos, quae te subeunte recepta sensit in ingenio nil opis esse loci.
Nam, dubium positu melius defensa manune, urbs erat in summo nubibus aequa iugo.
Sithonio regi ferus interceperat illam 25
hostis et ereptas uictor habebat opes, donec fluminea deuecta Vitellius unda intulit exposito milite signa Getis.
At tibi, progenies alti fortissima Donni, uenit in aduersos impetus ire uiros. 30 Nec mora, conspicuus longe fulgentibus armis, fortia ne possint facta latere caues ingentique gradu contra ferrumque locumque saxaque brumali grandine plura subis.

Nec te missa super iaculorum turba moratur 35 nec quae uipereo tela cruore madent.
Spicula cum pictis haerent in casside pennis parsque fere scuti uulnere nulla uacat.
Nec corpus cunctos feliciter effugit ictus, sed minor est acri laudis amore dolor. 40 Talis apud Troiam Danais pro nauibus Ajax dicitur Hectoreas sustinuisse faces.
Vt propius uentum est admotaque dextera dextrae resque fero potuit comminus ense geri, dicere difficile est quid Mars tuus egerit illic 45
quotque neci dederis quosque quibusque modis.
Ense tuo factos calcabas uictor aceruos inpositoque Getes sub pede multus erat.
Pugnat ad exemplum primi minor ordine pili multaque fert miles uulnera, multa facit. 50 Sed tantum uirtus alios tua praeterit omnes ante citos quantum Pegasus ibat equos.
Vincitur Aegisos testataque tempus in omne sunt tua, Vestalis, carmine facta meo.

VIII. SVILLIO

Littera sera quidem, studiis exculte Suilli, huc tua peruenit, sed mihi grata tamen, qua pia si possit superos lenire rogando gratia, laturum te mihi dicis opem.
Vt iam nil praestes, animi sum factus amici 5 debitor et meritum uelle iuuare uoco.
Inpetus iste tuus longum modo duret in aeuum, neue malis pietas sit tua lassa meis!
Ius aliquod faciunt adfinia uincula nobis, quae semper maneant inlabefacta precor. 10 Nam tibi quae coniunx, eadem mihi filia paene est, et quae te generum, me uocat illa uirum.
Ei mihi, si lectis uultum tu uersibus istis ducis et adfinem te pudet esse meum!
At nihil hic dignum poteris reperire pudore 15
praeter Fortunam, quae mihi caeca fuit.
Seu genus excutias, equites ab origine prima usque per innumeros inueniemur auos;
siue uelis qui sint mores inquirere nostri, errorem misero detrahe, labe carent. 20
Tu modo si quid agi sperabis posse precando, quos colis exora supplice uoce deos.
Di tibi sint Caesar iuuenis: tua numina placa!
hac certe nulla est notior ara tibi.
Non sinit illa sui uanas antistitis umquam 25
esse preces: nostris hinc pete rebus opem!
Quamlibet exigua si nos ea iuuerit aura, obruta de mediis cumba resurget aquis.
Tunc ego tura feram rapidis sollempnia flammis, et ualeant quantum numina testis ero. 30 Nec tibi de Pario statuam, Germanice, templum marmore: carpsit opes illa ruina meas.

Templa domus facient uobis urbesque beatae,
Naso suis opibus, carmine gratus erit.
Parua quidem fateor pro magnis munera reddi, 35 cum pro concessa uerba salute damus.
Sed qui quam potuit dat maxima, gratus abunde est et finem pietas contigit illa suum.
Nec quae de parua pauper dis libat acerra, tura minus grandi quam data lance ualent 40 agnaque tam lactens quam gramine pasta Falisco uictima Tarpeios inficit icta focos.
Nec tamen officio uatum per carmina facto principibus res est aptior ulla uiris.
Carmina uestrarum peragunt praeconia laudum 45 neue sit actorum fama caduca cauent.
Carmine fit uiuax uirtus expersque sepulcri notitiam serae posteritatis habet.
Tabida consumit ferrum lapidemque uetustas nullaque res maius tempore robur habet. 50 Scripta ferunt annos: scriptis Agamemnona nosti et quisquis contra uel simul arma tulit.
Quis Thebas septemque duces sine carmine nosset et quicquid post haec, quicquid et ante fuit?
Di quoque carminibus, si fas est dicere, fiunt 55
tantaque maiestas ore canentis eget.
Sic Chaos ex illa naturae mole prioris digestum partes scimus habere suas; sic adfectantes caelestia regna Gigantes ad Styga nimbifero uindicis igne datos; 60 sic uictor laudem superatis Liber ab Indis, Alcides capta traxit ab Oechalia, et modo, Caesar, auum, quem uirtus addidit astris, sacrarunt aliqua carmina parte tuum.
Si quid adhuc igitur uiui, Germanice, nostro 65
restat in ingenio, seruiet omne tibi.
Non potes officium uatis contemnere uates:

iudicio pretium res habet ista tuo.
Quod nisi te nomen tantum ad maiora uocasset, gloria Pieridum summa futurus eras. 70 Sed dare materiam nobis quam carmina maius, nec tamen ex toto deserere illa potes.
Nam modo bella geris, numeris modo uerba coerces, quodque aliis opus est, hoc tibi lusus erit.
Vtque nec ad citharam nec ad arcum segnis Apollo est, 75
sed uenit ad sacras neruus uterque manus, sic tibi nec docti desunt nec principis artes, mixta sed est animo cum loue Musa tuo.
Quae quoniam nec nos unda submouit ab illa, ungula Gorgonei quam caua fecit equi, 80 prosit opemque ferat communia sacra tueri atque isdem studiis inposuisse manum.
Litora pellitis nimium subiecta Corallis ut tandem saeuos effugiamque Getas, clausaque si misero patria est, ut ponar in ullo 85
qui minus Ausonia distat ab urbe loco, unde tuas possim laudes celebrare recentes magnaque quam minima facta referre mora.
Tangat ut hoc uotum caelestia, care Suilli, numina, pro socero paene precare tuo.

IX. GRAECINO

Vnde licet, non unde iuuat, Graecine, salutem mittit ab Euxinis hanc tibi Naso uadis missaque, di faciant, auroram occurrat ad illam bis senos fascis quae tibi prima dabit, ut, quoniam sine me tanges Capitolia consul 5 et fiam turbae pars ego nulla tuae, in domini subeat partis et praestet amici officium iusso littera nostra die.
Atque, ego si fatis genitus melioribus essem et mea sincero curreret axe rota, 10 quo nunc nostra manus per scriptum fungitur, esset lingua salutandi munere functa tui gratatusque darem cum dulcibus oscula uerbis nec minus ille meus quam tuus esset honor.
Illa, confiteor, sic essem luce superbus 15 ut caperet fastus uix domus ulla meos, dumque latus sancti cingit tibi turba senatus, consulis ante pedes ire iuberer eques
et, quamquam cuperem semper tibi proximus esse, gauderem lateris non habuisse locum 20 nec querulus, turba quamuis eliderer, essem, sed foret a populo tum mihi dulce premi.
Prospicerem gaudens quantus foret agminis ordo densaque quam longum turba teneret iter, quoque magis noris quam me uulgaria tangant, 25
spectarem qualis purpura te tegeret.
Signa quoque in sella nossem formata curuli et totum Numidi sculptile dentis opus.
At cum Tarpeias esses deductus in arces, dum caderet iussu uictima sacra tuo, 30 me quoque secreto grates sibi magnus agentem audisset media qui sedet aede deus turaque mente magis plena quam lance dedissem ter quater imperii laetus honore tui.

Hic ego praesentes inter numerarer amicos, 35
mitia ius Urbis si modo fata darent, quaeque mihi sola capitur nunc mente uoluptas, tunc oculis etiam percipienda foret.
Non ita caelitibus uisum est, et forsitan aequis.
Nam quid me poenae causa negata iuuet? 40
Mente tamen, quae sola loco non exulat, utar, praetextam fasces aspiciamque tuos.
Haec modo te populo reddentem iura uidebit et se secretis finget adesse tuis, nunc longi reditus hastae subponere lustris 45 credet et exacta cuncta locare fide, nunc facere in medio facundum uerba senatu publica quaerentem quid petat utilitas, nunc pro Caesaribus superis decernere grates albae opimorum colla ferire bouum. 50 Atque utinam, cum iam fueris potiora precatus, ut mihi placetur principis ira roges!
Surgat ad hanc uocem plena pius ignis ab ara detque bonum uoto lucidus omen apex!
Interea, qua parte licet, ne cuncta queramur, 55
hic quoque te festum consule tempus agam.
Altera laetitiae est nec cedens causa priori:
successor tanti frater honoris erit.
Nam tibi finitum summo, Graecine, Decembri imperium Iani suscipit ille die, 60 quaeque est in uobis pietas, alterna feretis gaudia, tu fratris fascibus, ille tuis.
Sic tu bis fueris consul, bis consul et ille, inque domo binus conspicietur honor.
Qui quamquam est ingens et nullum Martia summo 65 altius imperium consule Roma uidet, multiplicat tamen hunc grauitas auctoris honorem et maiestatem res data dantis habet.

Iudiciis igitur liceat Flaccoque tibi que talibus Augusti tempus in omne frui. 70 Quod tamen ab rerum cura propiore uacabit, uota, precor, uotis addite uestra meis, et si quem dabit aura sinum, iactate rudentis, exeat e Stygiis ut mea nauis aquis.
Praefuit his, Graecine, locis modo Flaccus et illo 75
ripa ferox Histri sub duce tuta fuit.
Hic tenuit Mysas gentis in pace fideli, hic arcu fisos terruit ense Getas.
Hic raptam Troesmin celeri uirtute recepit infecitque fero sanguine Danuuium. 80 Quaere loci faciem Scythicique incommoda caeli et quam uicino terrear hoste roga, sintne litae tenues serpentis felle sagittae, fiat an humanum uictima dira caput, mentiar, an coeat duratus frigore Pontus 85 et teneat glacies iugera multa freti.
Haec ubi narrarit, quae sit mea fama require,
quoque modo peragam tempora dura roga.
Non sumus hic odio nec scilicet esse meremur, nec cum fortuna mens quoque uersa mea est. 90 Illa quies animi quam tu laudare solebas, ille uetus solito perstat in ore pudor.
Sic ego sum longe, sic hic, ubi barbarus hostis ut fera plus ualeant legibus arma facit, rem queat ut nullam tot iam, Graecine, per annos 95
femina de nobis uirue puerue queri.
Hoc facit ut misero faueant adsintque Tomitae,
haec quoniam tellus testificanda mihi est.
Illi me, quia uelle uident, discedere malunt, respectu cupiunt hic tamen esse sui. 100 Nec mihi credideris: extant decreta quibus nos laudat et inmunes publica cera facit.
Conueniens miseris et quamquam gloria non sit,

proxima dant nobis oppida munus idem.
Nec pietas ignota mea est: uidet hospita terra 105
in nostra sacrum Caesaris esse domo.
Stant pariter natusque pius coniunxque sacerdos, numina iam facto non leuiora deo.
Neu desit pars ulla domus, stat uterque nepotum, hic auiae lateri proximus, ille patris. 110
His ego do totiens cum ture precantia uerba, Eoo quotiens surgit ab orbe dies.
Tota, licet quaeras, hoc me non fingere dicet officii testis Pontica terra mei.
Pontica me tellus, quantis hac possumus ara, 115
natalem ludis scit celebrare dei.
Nec minus hospitibus pietas est cognita talis,
Misit in has si quos longa Propontis aquas.
Is quoque quo Laeuus fuerat sub praeside Pontus audierit frater forsitan ista tuus. 120 Fortuna est inpar animo talique libenter exiguas carpo munere pauper opes.
Nec uestris damus haec oculis procul Vrbe remoti, contenti tacita sed pietate sumus.
Et tamen haec tangent aliquando Caesaris aures: 125
nil illi toto quod fit in orbe latet.
Tu certe scis haec, superis adscite, uidesque, Caesar, ut est oculis subdita terra tuis, tu nostras audis inter conuexa locatus sidera, sollicito quas damus ore, preces. 130 Perueniant istuc et carmina forsitan illa quae de te misi caelite facta nouo!
Auguror his igitur flecti tua numina nec tu inmerito nomen mite Parentis habes.

X. ALBINOVANO

Haec mihi Cimmerio bis tertia ducitur aestas litore pellitos inter agenda Getas.
Ecquos tu silices, ecquod, carissime, ferrum duritiae confers, Albinouane, meae?
Gutta cauat lapidem, consumitur anulus usu, 5 attingitur pressa uomer aduncus humo.
Tempus edax igitur praeter nos omnia perdet:
cessat duritia mors quoque uicta mea.
Exemplum est animi nimium patientis Vlixes iactatus dubio per duo lustra mari, 10 tempora solliciti sed non tamen omnia fati pertulit et placidae saepe fuere morae.
An graue sex annis pulchram fouisse Calypson aequoreaue fuit concubuisse deae?
Excipit Hippotades qui dat pro munere uentos, 15
curuet ut impulsos utilis aura sinus.
Nec bene cantantis labor est audire puellas nec degustanti lotos amara fuit.
Hos ego qui patriae faciant obliuia sucos parte meae uitae, si modo dentur, emam. 20 Nec tu contuleris urbem Laestrygonos umquam gentibus obliqua quas obit Hister aqua, nec uincet Cyclops saeuum feritate Piacchen;
qui quota terroris pars solet esse mei?
Scylla feris trunco quod latret ab inguine monstris, 25
Heniochae nautis plus nocuere rates.
Nec potes infestis conferre Charybdin Achaeis, ter licet epotum ter uomat illa fretum;
qui quamquam dextra regione licentius errant, securum latus hoc non tamen esse sinunt. 30 Hic agri infrondes, hic spicula tincta uenenis, hic freta uel pediti peruia reddit hiems, ut, qua remus iter pulsus modo fecerat undis, siccus contempta naue uiator eat.

Qui ueniunt istinc uix uos ea credere dicunt. 35
Quam miser est qui fert asperiora fide!
Crede tamen, nec te causas nescire sinemus horrida Sarmaticum cur mare duret hiems.
Proxima sunt nobis plaustri praebentia formam et quae praecipuum sidera frigus habent. 40 Hinc oritur Boreas oraeque domesticus huic est et sumit uires a propiore loco.
At Notus, aduerso tepidum qui spirat ab axe, est procul et rarus languidiorque uenit.
Adde quod hic clauso miscentur flumina Ponto 45
uimque fretum multo perdit ab amne suam.
Huc Lycus, huc Sagaris Peniusque Hypanisque Calesque influit et crebro uertice tortus Halys Partheniusque rapax et uoluens saxa Cynapses labitur et nullo tardior amne Tyras, 50 et tu, femineae Thermodon cognite turmae et quondam Graiis Phasi petite uiris, cumque Borysthenio liquidissimus amne Dyraspes et tacite peragens lene Melanthus iter, quique duas terras, Asiam Cadmique sororem, 55
separat et cursus inter utramque facit, innumerique alii, quos inter maximus omnis cedere Danuuius se tibi, Nile, negat.
Copia tot laticum, quas auget, adulterat undas nec patitur uires aequor habere suas. 60 Quin etiam stagno similis pigraeque paludi caeruleus uix est diluiturque color.
Innatat unda freto dulcis leuiorque marina est,
quae proprium mixto de sale pondus habet.
Si roget haec aliquis cur sint narrata Pedoni 65
quidue loqui certis iuuerit ista modis:
'Detinui, dicam, curas tempusque fefelli.

Hunc fructum praesens attulit hora mihi.
Abfuimus solito, dum scribimus ista, dolore in mediis nec nos sensimus esse Getis.'      70
At tu, non dubito, cum Thesea carmine laudes, materiae titulos quin tueare tuae, quemque refers, imitere uirum: uetat ille profecto tranquilli comitem temporis esse fidem.
Qui quamquam est factis ingens et conditur a te      75
    uir tanto quanto debuit ore cani, est tamen ex illo nobis imitabile quiddam inque fide Theseus quilibet esse potest.
Non tibi sunt hostes ferro clauaque domandi, per quos uix ulli peruius Isthmos erat,      80
sed praestandus amor, res non operosa uolenti.
    Quis labor est puram non temerasse fidem?
Haec tibi, qui praestas indeclinatus amico,
    non est quod lingua icta querente putes.

XI. GALLIONI

Gallio, crimen erit uix excusabile nobis carmine te nomen non habuisse meo; tu quoque enim, memini, caelesti cuspidē facta fouisti lacrimis uulnera nostra tuis.
Atque utinam rapti iactura laesus amici      5 sensisses ultra quod quererere nihil!
Non ita dis placuit, qui te spoliare pudica coniuge crudeles non habuere nefas.
Nuntia nam luctus mihi nuper epistula uenit lectaque cum lacrimis sunt tua damna meis.      10 Sed neque solari prudentem stultior ausim uerbaque doctorum nota referre tibi, finitumque tuum, si non ratione, dolorem ipsa iam pridem suspicor esse mora.
Dum tua peruenit, dum littera nostra recurrens      15
    tot maria ac terras permeat, annus abit.
Temporis officium est solacia dicere certi,
    dum dolor in cursu est et petit aeger opem.
At cum longa dies sedauit uulnera mentis, intempestiue qui mouet illa nouat.      20 Adde, quod — atque utinam uerum mihi uenerit omen! — coniugio felix iam potes esse nouo.

XII. TUTICANO

Quo minus in nostris ponaris, amice, libellis, nominis efficitur condicione tui;
aut ego non alium prius hoc dignarer honore,
    est aliquis nostrum si modo carmen honor.
Lex pedis officio fortunaque nominis obstat     5 quaque meos adeas, est uia nulla, modos.
Nam pudet in geminos ita nomen scindere uersus, desinat ut prior hoc incipiatque minor,
et pudeat, si te, qua syllaba parte moratur, artius adpellem Tuticanumque uocem.     10 Et potes in uersum Tuticani more uenire, fiat ut e longa syllaba prima breuis, aut ut ducatur quae nunc correptius exit et sit porrecta longa secunda mora.
His ego si uitiis ausim corrumpere nomen,     15
    ridear et merito pectus habere neger.
Haec mihi causa fuit dilati muneris huius, quod meus adiecto fenore reddet amor, teque canam quacumque nota, tibi carmina mittam, paene mihi puero cognite paene puer,     20 perque tot annorum seriem quot habemus uterque non mihi quam fratri frater amate minus.
Tu bonus hortator, tu duxque comesque fuisti, cum regerem tenera frena nouella manu.
Saepe ego correxi sub te censore libellos,     25 saepe tibi admonitu facta litura meo est, dignam Maeoniis Phaeacida condere chartis cum te Pieriae perdocuere deae.
Hic tenor, haec uiridi concordia coepta iuuenta uenit ad albentis inlabefacta comas.     30 Quae nisi te moueant, duro tibi pectora ferro

esse uel inuicto clausa adamante putem.
Sed prius huic desint et bellum et frigora terrae, inuisus nobis quae duo Pontus habet, et tepidus Boreas et sit praefrigidus Auster, 35 et possit fatum mollius esse meum quam tua sint lasso praecordia dura sodali.
Hic cumulus nostris absit abestque malis.
Tu modo per superos, quorum certissimus ille est quo tuus adsidue principe creuit honor, 40 effice constanti profugum pietate tuendo, ne sperata meam deserat aura ratem.
Quid mandem quaeris? Peream, nisi dicere uix est, si modo periit, ille perire potest.
Nec quid agam inuenio nec quid nolimue uelimue, 45 nec satis utilitas est mihi nota mea.
Crede mihi, miseros prudentia prima relinquit et sensus cum re consiliumque fugit.
Ipse, precor, quaeras qua sim tibi parte iuuandus quoque uiam facias ad mea uota uado.

XIII. CARO

O mihi non dubios inter memorande sodales, qui quod es, id uere, Care, uocaris, aue!
Vnde salutaris, color hic tibi protinus index et structura mei carminis esse potest, non quia mirifica est, sed quod non publica certe est: 5
qualis enim cumque est, non latet esse meam.
Ipse quoque, ut titulum chartae de fronte reuellas, quod sit opus uideor dicere posse tuum.
Quamlibet in multis positus noscere libellis perque obseruatas inueniere notas. 10 Prodent auctorem uires quas Hercule dignas nouimus atque illi quem canis ipse pares.
Et mea Musa potest proprio deprensa colore insignis uitiis forsitan esse suis.
Tam mala Thersiten prohibebat forma latere 15
quam pulchra Nireus conspiciendus erat.
Nec te mirari, si sint uitiosa, decebit carmina quae faciam paene poeta Getes.
A! pudet et Getico scripsi sermone libellum structaque sunt nostris barbara uerba modis: 20 et placui — gratare mihi! — coepique poetae inter inhumanos nomen habere Getas.
Materiam quaeris? Laudes: de Caesare dixi!
Adiuta est nouitas numine nostra dei.
Nam patris Augusti docui mortale fuisse 25 corpus, in aetherias numen abisse domos, esse parem uirtute patri qui frena rogatus saepe recusati ceperit imperii, esse pudicarum te Vestam, Liuia, matrum, ambiguum nato dignior anne uiro, 30 esse duos iuuenes, firma adiumenta parentis, qui dederint animi pignora certa sui.

Haec ubi non patria perlegi scripta Camena, uenit et ad digitos ultima charta meos, et caput et plenas omnes mouere pharetras, 35 et longum Getico murmur in ore fuit, atque aliquis 'Scribas haec cum de Caesare' dixit
'Caesaris imperio restituendus eras.'
Ille quidem dixit, sed me iam, Care, niuali sexta relegatum bruma sub axe uidet. 40 Carmina nil prosunt, nocuerunt carmina quondam primaque tam miserae causa fuere fugae.
At tu, per studii communia foedera sacri, per non uile tibi nomen amicitiae, — sic capto Latiis Germanicus hoste catenis 45 materiam uestris adferat ingeniis, sic ualeant pueri, uotum commune deorum, quos laus formandos est tibi magna datos! — quanta potes, praebe nostrae momenta saluti quae nisi mutato nulla futura loco est.

XIV. TVTICANO

Haec tibi mittuntur, quem sum modo carmine questus non aptum numeris nomen habere meis, in quibus, excepto quod adhuc utcumque ualemus, nil te praeterea quod iuuet inuenies.
Ipsa quoque est inuisa salus suntque ultima uota, 5 quolibet ex istis scilicet ire locis.
Nulla mihi cura est terra quo mittar ab ista, hac quia, quam uideo, gratior omnis erit:
in medias Syrtes, mediam mea uela Charybdin mittite, praesenti dum careamus humo. 10 Styx quoque, si quid ea est, bene commutabitur Histro, si quid et inferius quam Styga mundus habet.
Gramina cultus ager, frigus minus odit hirundo, proxima Marticolis quam loca Naso Getis.
Talia succensent propter mihi uerba Tomitae 15
iraque carminibus publica mota meis.
Ergo ego cessabo numquam per carmina laedi plectar et incauto semper ab ingenio?
Ergo ego, ne scribam, digitos incidere cunctor telaque adhuc demens quae nocuere sequor? 20 Ad ueteres scopulos iterum deuertor et illas in quibus offendit naufraga puppis aquas?
Sed nihil admisi, nulla est mea culpa, Tomitae, quos ego, cum loca sim uestra perosus, amo.
Quilibet excutiat nostri monimenta laboris: 25 littera de uobis est mea questa nihil!
Frigus et incursus omni de parte timendos et quod pulsetur murus ab hoste queror.
In loca, non homines uerissima crimina dixi:
culpatis uestrum uos quoque saepe solum. 30 Esset perpetuo sua quam uitabilis Ascra ausa est agricolae Musa docere senis, et fuerat genitus terra qui scripsit in illa, intumuit uati tamen Ascra suo.

Quis patriam sollerte magis dilexit Vlixē? 35
Hoc tamen asperitas indice docta loci est.
Non loca, sed mores scriptis uexauit amaris Scepsius Ausonios actaque Roma rea est; falsa tamen passa est aequa conuicia mente obfuit auctori nec fera lingua suo. 40
At malus interpres populi mihi concitat iram inque nouum crimen carmina nostra uocat.
Tam felix utinam quam pectore candidus essem!
Extat adhuc nemo saucius ore meo.
Adde quod, Illyrica si iam pice nigrior essem, 45 non mordenda mihi turba fidelis erat.
Molliter a uobis mea sors excepta, Tomitae, tam mites Graios indicat esse uiros.
Gens mea Paeligni regioque domestica Sulmo non potuit nostris lenior esse malis. 50 Quem uix incolumi cuiquam saluoque daretis, is datus a uobis est mihi nuper honor:
solus adhuc ego sum uestris inmundis in oris exceptis, si qui munera legis habent; tempora sacrata mea sunt uelata corona, 55
publicus inuito quam fauor inposuit.
Quam grata est igitur Latonae Delia tellus, erranti tutum quae dedit una locum, tam mihi cara Tomis, patria quae sede fugatis tempus ad hoc nobis hospita fida manet; 60 di modo fecissent, placidae spem posset habere pacis et a gelido longius axe foret.

XV. SEX. POMPEIO

Si quis adhuc usquam nostri non inmemor extat quidue relegatus Naso requirit agam, Caesaribus uitam, Sexto debere salutem me sciat. A superis hic mihi primus erit.
Tempora nam miserae complectar ut omnia uitae, 5
a meritis eius pars mihi nulla uacat.
Quae numero tot sunt quot in horto fertilis arui punica sub lento cortice grana rubent, Africa quot segetes, quot Tmolia terra racemos, quot Sicyon bacas, quot parit Hybla fauos. 10 Confiteor: testere licet. Signate, Quirites!
Nil opus est legum uiribus, ipse loquor.
Inter opes et me, paruam rem, pone paternas, pars ego sum census quantulacumque tui.
Quam tua Trinacria est regnataque terra Philippo, 15
quam domus Augusto continuata foro, quam tua, rus oculis domini, Campania, gratum, quaeque relicta tibi, Sexte, uel empti tenes, tam tuus en ego sum, cuius te munere tristi non potes in Ponto dicere habere nihil. 20 Atque utinam possis et detur amicus aruum remque tuam ponas in meliore loco!
Quod quoniam in dis est, tempta lenire precando numina perpetua quae pietate colis.
Erroris nam tu uix est discernere nostri 25
sis argumentum maius an auxilium.
Nec dubitans oro, sed flumine saepe secundo augetur remis cursus euntis aquae.
Et pudet et metuo semperque eademque precari, ne subeant animo taedia iusta tuo. 30 Verum quid faciam? res inmoderata cupido est:

da ueniam uitio, mitis amice, meo.
Scribere saepe aliud cupiens delabor eodem:
ipsa locum per se littera nostra rogat.
Seu tamen effectus habitura est gratia, seu me 35 dura iubet gelido Parca sub axe mori, semper inoblita repetam tua munera mente et mea me tellus audiet esse tuum.
Audiet et caelo posita est quaecumque sub ullo, transit nostra feros si modo Musa Getas, 40 teque meae causam seruatoremq; salutis meque tuum libra norit et aere minus.

XVI. AD INVIDVM

Inuide, quid laceras Nasonis carmina rapti?
Non solet ingeniis summa nocere dies famaque post cineres maior uenit et mihi nomen tum quoque, cum uiuis adnumerarer, erat, cumque foret Marsus magnique Rabirius oris 5 Iliacusque Macer sidereusque Pedo et qui lunonem laeisset in Hercule, Carus, lunonis si iam non gener ille foret, quique dedit Latio carmen regale, Seuerus et cum subtili Priscus uterque Numa, 10 quique uel inparibus numeris, Montane, uel aequis sufficis et gemino carmine nomen habes, et qui Penelopae rescribere iussit Vlixem errantem saeuo per duo lustra mari, quique suam Troezena imperfectumque dierum 15
deseruit celeri morte Sabinus opus, ingeniique sui dictus cognomine Largus, Gallica qui Phrygium duxit in arua senem, quique canit domito Camerinus ab Hectore Troiam, quique sua nomen Phyllide Tuscus habet, 20 ueliulique maris uates, cui credere posses carmina caeruleos composuisse deos, quique acies Libycas Romanaque proelia dixit, et scriptor Marius dexter in omne genus, Trinacriusque suae Perseidos auctor et auctor 25
Tantalidae reducis Tyndaridosque Lupus, et qui Maeoniam Phaeacida uertit, et, une Pindaricae fidicen, tu quoque, Rufe, lyrae, Musaque Turrani tragicis innixa coturnis et tua cum socco Musa, Melisse, leui; 30 cum Varius Graccusque darent fera dicta tyrannis,

Callimachi Proculus molle teneret iter, Tityron antiquas Passerque rediret ad herbas aptaque uenanti Grattius arma daret, Naidas a satyris caneret Fontanus amatas, 35 clauderet inparibus uerba Capella modis, cumque forent alii, quorum mihi cuncta referre nomina longa mora est, carmina uulgus habet, essent et iuuenes, quorum quod inedita cura est, adpellandorum nil mihi iuris adest. 40
Te tamen in turba non ausim, Cotta, silere, Pieridum lumen praesidiumque fori, maternos Cottas cui Messalasque paternos, Maxime, nobilitas ingeminata dedit.
Dicere si fas est, claro mea nomine Musa 45
atque inter tantos quae legeretur erat.
Ergo submotum patria proscindere, Liur, desine neu cineres sparge, cruenta, meos!
Omnia perdidimus, tantummodo uita relicta est, praebeat ut sensum materiamque mali. 50
Quid iuuat extinctos ferrum demittere in artus?
Non habet in nobis iam noua plaga locum.

The Biography

THE LIFE AND WORKS OF OVID by Arthur Leslie Wheeler

The works of Ovid himself, and especially the autobiography (Tristia. iv. 10), supply most of the material for a sketch of his life. His fame, however, caused him to be mentioned often by later writers, and these, taken together, add not a little to the information derived from his own poems.

His full name was Publius Ovidius Naso, and he was born on March twentieth, 43 B.C., at Sulmo, the chief town of the Paeligni, about ninety miles by road east of Rome. The family was of old equestrian rank, and inscriptions prove that the name Ovidius was common only in the region of Ovid's birthplace. In Sulmo, now Sulmona, the tradition of the poet still flourishes. The townspeople point out to the infrequent tourist his statue in the court of the Collegio Ovidio, the chief school of the town, and the remains of his villa, the Villa Ovidio, on the slopes of a neighbouring mountain. The main street of the town, the Corso Ovidio, preserves his name, and the letters S.M.P.E. ("Sulmo mihi patria est," T. iv. 10. 3) are inscribed on the façades of monuments and at the head of public documents. In folklore also and popular song his name survives.

But though the statue is mediaeval, though the ruins are probably not connected with him, and the traditions are fancy, the beautiful country on which Ovid must have looked is true to his description. Sulmona lies in one of the loveliest vales of Italy, surrounded by towering mountains and watered, as Ovid himself says, by cold streams. As one views it from the mountain slopes the valley, carefully tilled and dotted with vineyards and fruit trees, is like a vast garden. Here lay those paternal fields of which the poet speaks, and here he passed the years of his boyhood.

Ovid's father, like the father of Horace, was ambitious for his sons and destined them for an oratorical career. While they were still very young Ovid and his brother, who was exactly one year older than the poet, were taken to Rome to receive a proper training. The brother displayed a decided gift for pleading, but Ovid found the legal grind distasteful. He tried to conform to his father's practical advice but the inborn impulse was too strong. "Whatever I tried to write," he says, "was verse," and the quaint anecdote told in one of the late Lives probably hits off the situation very well. Once when Ovid was being chastised by his angry father, says the Life, the squirming boy cried out (in verse!), "Parce mihi! numquam versificabo, pater!"

But though "he lisped in numbers," he nevertheless persisted half-heartedly in his preparation for a practical career until he held certain minor offices which were preliminary to the quaestorship. He became a triumvir capitalist i e one of the board of three officials who had charge of prisons and executions and possessed judicial powers in petty cases. Ovid was probably not over twenty-one at this time. He also speaks of having been a member of viii the centumviral court (which dealt with questions of inheritance) and of having served as a single judge, i e as a sort of referee in private lawsuits. As a triumvir he was directly in line for the quaestorship and seems to have had a right to quaestorial privileges, but his tastes and frail constitution led him to renounce a public career.

Ovid's thorough education under such distinguished teachers as the rhetoricians Arellius Fuscus and Porcius Latro was not wasted, although it was not applied to the end which his hard-headed father had urged. Rhetoric and literature formed the major part of the training of those who were qualifying themselves for public life, and the young poet, as we learn from Seneca the Elder, became a brilliant declaimer. Poetry was much studied in the rhetorical schools of the day, and the training which Ovid received undoubtedly laid the foundation of that wide familiarity with myth and literature which he displays in his work. In fact Seneca tells us that Ovid transferred to his own verse many of the pointed remarks of his teacher Latro. Even his legal training was not entirely wasted, for there are traces of it in his work.

Ovid studied at Athens, as Horace and many other young Romans had done, and travelled in Sicily and in Asia Minor. It is probable that his sojourn in Athens occurred while he was still a student, but it is not certain that the other journeys belong to the same period.

Even before his education was finished he had won fame as a poet of love. He was giving public recitations of his Amores, he tells us, when his "beard had been cut but once or twice" (T. iv.10. — 55 f.). Undoubtedly the popularity of these youthful poems did much to establish the conviction which he often expresses that his bent was erotic elegy; he considered himself the lineal successor of Galus, Tibullus, and Propertius, and posterity has accepted him at his word. Thus the foundation of that fame which he was destined to deplore so bitterly was laid in his early youth.

In these youthful days Ovid made the acquaintance of many poets. His relations with Vergil and Tibullus were apparently not intimate, but he was only twenty-four when these poets died (19 B.C.), and it is probable that for some years before that date both had been in poor health and had seldom been seen in Rome. Ovid admired Horace but does not assert that he knew that poet personally. Propertius, however, he knew well, and he mentions him, together with Aemilius Macer, Ponticus, and Bassus, as a member of his own circle. He names besides a large number of fellow poets, many of whom were friends. To us they are hardly more than names, but they serve to illustrate the breadth of Ovid's literary interests, for these men worked in all departments of poetic composition. Ovid was always a generous critic, but in his remarks during his exile about these contemporaries there is the additional reason for generosity that he naturally wished to speak well of anybody who might help him.

Apart from literary men, professional or dilettanti, Ovid had a very wide acquaintance with Roman society in general. He came from a country town and he was not noble, but his rank was inherited and his fortune was considerable. With these advantages it was easy for a man of his brilliant talent and agreeable personality to know everybody worth knowing, and the poems from exile contain the names of many statesmen, officials, and soldiers — fewer, certainly, than he must have known since he is careful not to name any to whom seeming connexion with an exile might have brought offence. Moreover, many of those whom he must have known in his youth had died before the period of his exile, and these are mentioned as a rule only when they are connected in some way with the living to whom he made his appeals.

To the members of Rome's great families Ovid stood rather in the relation of a client to patrons, although this relation did not preclude intimacy. Among these patrons the most distinguished man was Marcus Valerius Messalla Corvinus, the statesman, general, and orator, whose house was the centre of a literary circle in which the most prominent member was Tibullus. To this circle Ovid also undoubtedly belonged. Messalla died not long before Ovid was exiled, perhaps in the very year of his exile (A.D. 8), and he had probably been incapacitated by illness for several years before his death. It was Ovid's appeal to the great man's sons that led him to mention the father. To the house of Messalla he had been devoted from his earliest years, and Messalla himself had been the first to encourage him to publish his verse — undoubtedly some of those erotic poems which later helped to ruin the poet. Messalla was, in Ovid's phrase, “the guide of his genius,” and the poet wrote a tribute to him at his death.

Messalla had been one of Augustus’ right-hand the same station in life as himself, and many of these are named in the Pontic Epistles. Since at the time Ovid was writing the Tristia he did not venture to name his friends, the question arises whether it is possible to identify any of the unnamed recipients of the Tristia with friends who are named in the Pontic Epistles. There are seventeen poems of the Tristia which are addressed to friends or patrons. Three of these, as the tone shows, are addressed to patrons, i e to men who were superior to Ovid in rank, twelve to friends of his own status or of such status that they were at least not his superiors, while in the case of two the tone supplies no good evidence for placing them in one class rather than the other. Now Ovid asserts several times that “only two or three” of his friends showed themselves really faithful at the time when disaster befell him (T. i. 5. 33, “vix duo tresve”; cf. iii. — 5. 10; v. 4. 36, etc.). Examination of the Pontic Epistles shows that these few faithful ones were probably Brutus, Atticus, Celsus, and possibly Carus. To these we should add his patron-friend Cotta Maximus. By comparing the Pontic Epistles in which these men are addressed or named with the seventeen Tristia we may assign to Brutus T. iii. 4 (cf. P. i. 1, iii. 9; iv. 6); to Atticus T. v. 4 (cf. P. ii. 4 and 7); to Celsus T. i. 5, iii. 6 (cf. P. i. 9); to Carus T. iii. 5 (cf. P. iv. 13); to Cotta Maximus T. iv. 5, v. 9 (cf. P. i. 5 and 9; ii - 3 and 8, iii. 2 and 5, iv. — 16. 41 ff.); to Messalinus T. iv. 4 (cf. P. i. 7, and ii. 3). The reproach, T. i. 8, is very possibly addressed to Macer (cf. P. ii. 10). Even if these identifications are accepted there remain eight poems whose recipients have not been satisfactorily identified. Of these eight six (T. i. 7, iv. 7, v. 6, 7, 12, 13) are addressed to men who were apparently friends, two (T. i. 9, iii. 14) are uncertain, though the tone of T. i. 9 is perhaps better suited to a young man of rank, and that of T. iii. 14 to a poet-friend of greater age than Ovid.

Numerous other friends and acquaintances — poets, rhetoricians, officials, soldiers — appear in the Pontic Epistles, but among them there is nobody whom we may regard as the probable recipient of any poem among the Tristia. About some of them we know only what Ovid tells us, about others we can glean a few meagre facts from other sources. It is particularly unfortunate that, with the exception of Cotta Maximus, the poet's best friends, Celsus, Atticus, Brutus, and Carus, are known only from Ovid. All efforts to identify them with men of the same names mentioned elsewhere have proved unavailing.

There is no good evidence that Ovid had ever been intimate with any member of the imperial household. The approval of the Emperor to which he alludes (T. ii. 89 and 98, cf. 542) consisted merely in allowing Ovid to retain his rank as a knight. In his references to Augustus the poet assumes the tone of an abject suppliant appealing to a deity immeasurably removed. Even if there had been any former intimacy it would have been difficult to harmonize it with such an attitude as this and it would have been carefully suppressed. The references to Tiberius and his son Drusus, to Germanicus and his sons, permit the same general inference: that Ovid had probably never been intimate with any of them. The character of Germanicus was so affable and kindly that if Ovid had ever known him well one might expect a reference to the fact. But the passages in which Germanicus is addressed or mentioned show that Ovid's hopes in this direction were based upon the intercessions of mutual friends — Salanus (P. ii. 5), Sextus Pompey (P. iv. 5), Suillius (P. iv. 8), etc.

The method of appeal to the Empress Livia Augusta is similar. Ovid hoped to influence her through his wife and through Marcia, wife of Paullus Fabius Maximus, who was Augusta's close friend. Another possible approach to Augusta lay in the fact that Ovid's wife knew intimately the Emperor's maternal aunt, Atia Minor. This seems to have been the only real link between the poet's household and the palace.

At the time when Ovid was ordered into exile (A.D. 8) the only members of his immediate family who were in Rome were his wife and step-daughter. His own daughter, who must have been the daughter of his first or second wife, had married a second time and was absent in Libya, but we know neither her name nor that of her husband at the time. His only brother had died years before when he had just turned twenty, i. e. in 24 B.C. Both of the poet's parents also had passed away, his father at the advanced age of ninety.

Ovid himself was married three times. He speaks of his first wife whom he married when he was "almost a boy," as "unworthy and useless." The marriage lasted but a short time and may have ended in divorce. The second wife was "blameless," but this marriage also was broken off by death or divorce. The poet does not tell us the xvi names of these ladies, but he indicates that one of them came from Falerii (Am iii. 13. 1). Ovid's third wife was "from the house" of the Fabii (P. i. 2. 136), but it is not certain that her name, which Ovid does not give, was Fabia. She may have been a poor relative (or a relative who had lost her parents) who had lived in the protection of the Fabian household. She was a widow (or divorced?) with one daughter, Perilla, when Ovid married her, but the marriage seems to have been childless. Upon her devolved the care of the poet's property after he was exiled, and upon her efforts he rested in large measure his hopes of pardon. Many passages bear witness to his tender love for her; he draws a most affecting picture of their mutual despair at parting, and if at times after years of exile he became somewhat peevish, we must pity rather than condemn. The poor lady seems to have been always faithful to his interests and no doubt she did all within her power to secure a mitigation of his sentence.

But neither family connexions nor influential friends were able to save Ovid from his fate. After more than thirty years of popularity, at the age of fifty, he was suddenly ordered to leave that Rome which was the very breath of life to men of his stamp and take up his abode on the very edge of the wilderness in a little town of which he had probably never heard. The order emanated from the authority of the Emperor and was never brought before the Senate or a court. Ovid was not called an exul, but was “relegated” (relegatus). Relegatio was milder than the exilium of the late republic in that the poet’s property was not confiscated and his civic rights were not taken from him, but it was harsher, in Ovid’s case, in that he was ordered to stay in one designated locality. The exul of the republican period might wander where he would provided he kept beyond a prescribed radius from Rome. On the other hand, to judge from Cicero’s case, the friends of an exile of that period subjected themselves to penalties if they aided him, whereas Ovid’s friends freely assisted him and wrote to him. Even the fear of being publicly known as his friends, which prevailed at the time he was writing the Tristia, had vanished from the minds of all but one or two when the Pontic Epistles were written, and Ovid himself states openly (P. iii. 6. 11 f.) that the Emperor forbade neither mention of him nor correspondence with him.

The sins which led Augustus to banish Ovid have been endlessly discussed. The poet himself refers to them again and again, but his references are so vague that it is impossible to arrive at the whole truth, and of course the lips of his contemporaries were sealed. He was constantly hoping that his penalty might be revoked or at least mitigated by permission to change his place of exile, and he left no stone unturned to effect one or the other of these results. If we had his prose correspondence with friends in Rome and elsewhere — a correspondence to which he frequently refers — it would be easier to solve the problem, but in the poems from exile we have only such evidence as could be made public without injuring the exile's chances of pardon or involving his friends. In weighing this evidence it is necessary to allow for a double distortion — an overemphasis on the charges which could be publicly argued and a corresponding reticence about those which it seemed impolitic to discuss in public. Moreover, the poet based his hope of pardon very largely on confession of guilt; he threw himself on the mercy of the court which consisted, in this case, of a single judge, the Emperor. Naturally, therefore, he did not argue his case as completely as he could have done if he had been free to use" all the arguments at his disposal. He was aware that the mere presentation of evidence could avail him nothing. There was no appeal from the judge's verdict, but the judge himself might be induced to relent.

Ovid asserts that there were two charges against him, a poem and a mistake (T. ii. 207, "duo crimina, carmen et error") of which the poem was the first in time. In many passages he makes the same distinction between his sins, and it will be advisable, even though they may have been connected, to discuss them separately in order to determine the poet's own attitude.

The poem was the Ars Amatoria which was published c. 1 B.C. This Art, as the poet often calls it, is no more immoral than other erotic works, among which Ovid mentions those of Tibullus and Propertius, but it is explicitly didactic. It gathers up and systematizes the erotic precepts which had gradually been developed (largely under Greek influence) by the Roman poets, especially Gallus, Tibullus, Propertius, and Ovid himself. It taught love explicitly, and Ovid became known as the chief erotic expert (praeceptor amoris). Erotic teaching had appeared often enough in Greek and Latin, but there had been no handbook like this. The Art was the culmination, the shining example, for it presented the subject as a didactic system, and it was this aspect of the book, not the erotic content per se, that angered Augustus. In his eyes and in the eyes of all those who hoped to regenerate Roman morals Ovid was the arch offender, and the Art was his chief sin. When the poet was exiled the Art was expelled from the public libraries and placed under a ban.

The charge of pernicious influence through the medium of the Art could be publicly discussed, and since Ovid presents his case in the second book of the Tristia, not to mention many other briefer passages, the discussion need not be repeated here. It is sufficient to say that he denied any intention of immoral influence, proving that the Art was explicitly restricted to affairs with courtesans, and that he was no more blameworthy than countless other writers if readers had made a perverse use of his work. He complained truly that he was the only erotic poet who had ever been punished for his compositions. In view of ancient standards in such matters it must be admitted that, so far as the Art was concerned, he was harshly treated. But whatever the merits of the case the poet bitterly regretted that he had ever written erotic verse, even at times that he had ever attempted verse of any kind. Augustus had condemned the Art, and Ovid had perforce to admit that he had sinned.

In Ovid's eyes then the Art was the earliest cause of his exile and an important cause, but he says that there was a later cause which "had injured him more" (P. iii. 3. 72). Since the latter could not be discussed publicly, the poet speaks of it in very general terms. It was not a crime (scelus), not illegal, but rather a fault (culpa, vitium) which he admitted to be wrong (peccatum, delictum, noxa). He had not been guilty wittingly, but through chance (fortuna, casus). There had been no criminal action (jacinus) on his part, but he had laboured under a misunderstanding, he had blundered (error). He had been stupid (stultus), thoughtless (imprudens, non sapiens), over ingenuous (simplicitas); he had been ashamed (pudor) and afraid (timor, timidus).

From the passages in which he speaks most fully of this fault we infer that the affair with which it was connected had a considerable history, or at least that a full account of it would have been a long one. It began with a misunderstanding on Ovid's part of something that he had seen by chance (T. iii. 6. 27 AT.; ii. 103 ff.), but he must soon have comprehended its import, for he began to be afraid. He harboured it as a secret when advice might have saved him.

He speaks of that which his eyes had seen as something wrong, but not as a crime. He had not at first considered it to be wrong, and perhaps his later confession that it was wrong is due to the fact that he was punished for it; at least confession of guilt was in this matter, as in the case of the Ars Amatoria, a necessary part of his appeal to Augustus. It was necessary also for him to represent his friends, however sympathetic they were, as siding with Augustus, and so we hear that Cotta Maximus, Messalinus, and Graecinus condemned or reproved the poet's sins; they believed that Ovid had sinned but that his sin was rather foolish than criminal. The thing was an offence, a wound to Augustus, and he had used harsh words about it, but there is no proof that the wound concerned his private affairs. In fact the sin did not, according to Ovid, involve others but had ruined the poet alone. He advances his original error as a partial excuse, not as a defence, for his sin. This is his only plea, but it is fairly clear that if the question could have been argued he would have made a strong defence.

What had Ovid seen? Why, after he realized its import, had he been afraid to reveal his knowledge? To the second question one may answer that he was afraid of that which actually befell him, the Emperor's anger, for he must have been aware that he was disliked by Augustus. But to the first question there is with our present evidence no satisfactory answer although it has afforded a tempting field for surmise. Nevertheless such evidence as we have makes it possible to define approximately the nature of the thing, to say at least in some degree what it was not, and so to eliminate certain favourite hypotheses.

Ovid characterizes the affair as no crime, and we may accept this statement because he would not have ventured to misname it nor could he have misunderstood it if it had been criminal. Ovid himself could not discuss it because the case had been closed by the Emperor's verdict, but his statement is supported by the fact that he alludes to it many times without rebuke, that everybody knew it, and that the Emperor made no attempt to hush it up. It seems, therefore, very improbable that the evil of which he became cognizant was anything so heinous as the profligacy of the younger Julia, who was banished at about the same time as the poet. Ovid refers, it is true, to his fault as an offence against Augustus, as a "wound," an "injury" to him, but such phrases need not imply that the offence concerned the imperial household. Any offence against the state, or that which Augustus regarded as the interest of the state, was an injury to the ruler.

Augustus's own attitude, as shown by Ovid, indicates that the poet's sin was not a very heavy one. To say nothing of the comparatively mild conditions of Ovid's relegatio, which he himself urges as a proof of the Emperor's estimate, the poet and his friends were allowed to correspond freely, and he was allowed to publish poetry appealing openly to Augustus and to many others. It is plain that Augustus and after his death Tiberius, who continued so religiously the policies of his predecessor, were quite satisfied merely to have Ovid out of the way. Ovid's fault was serious enough to serve as a pretext, that is all. It was the exciting cause of his exile, and so he can speak of it as having "injured him more" than the Ars Amatoria, but the latter — all his erotic verse in fact — which had given him so great and unsavoury a reputation as the purveyor of wanton titbits, was the predisposing cause. His fault must have been something that enhanced the poet's pernicious influence by lowering his personal reputation. With the Emperor it was the final straw. Without it Ovid might never have been exiled, for he was turning to more dignified work, the Metamorphoses, the Fasti, but he could not escape the notoriety of that earlier work which was still so popular with his "host of readers."

Augustus himself was no prude. He had a weakness for mimes and he liked his little joke. It was not the content of the Ars Amatoria but rather its pernicious influence that angered him. If that work had merely been the talk of a day it would be impossible to understand why the Emperor allowed eight or nine years to pass before punishing its author. Everything indicates, however, that time only increased the vogue of the book, and when at an age that should have brought him wisdom the poet made that final stupid blunder, the Emperor became convinced that the question involved more than mere literature; it had passed into the sphere of public policy. In brief, from the point of view of Augustus, the ruler and reformer, Ovid had been a nuisance for many years and had given fresh proof of his incorrigibility by making a fool of himself. The thing was too much. "I am sick of this fellow," he decided. "Naviget!"

When the blow fell Ovid was in Elba, probably in the suite of his friend Cotta Maximus, for the latter heard of Ovid's sin, and Ovid has described the interview in which he stammeringly confessed to Cotta that the report was true. This must have been in the summer or early autumn of A.D. 8. Ovid returned to Rome and arranged his affairs as best he could. In his despair he contemplated suicide, but he was not of the stuff of which suicides are made. Moreover, he cherished hopes of pardon, and he prevailed on his wife to remain behind to work for this object. His parting from her and the events of his dismal journey are described in Tristia i., all of which, save possibly the proem, was written before he reached Tomis. The account of the journey does not begin until he has boarded ship, at which time we find him storm-tossed on the Adriatic, and so it is uncertain whether he followed the Appian Way to Capua and its extension to Brundisium, the customary route for travellers bound to the East, or whether he embarked at some port nearer Rome, for example, Ostia. At any rate he sailed to Corinth, crossed the Isthmus from Lechaeum to Cenchreae and boarded a second ship which carried him to Imbros and Samothrace. This ship completed her voyage to Tomis, but the poet preferred to cross from Samothrace to Tempyra near the Thracian coast and so to finish his journey by land. He must have journeyed slowly, for he received news from home on the way, and it is probable that he did not cross the Thracian mountains to Tomis until the spring or summer of A.D. 9, since he alludes to no discomfort from cold, although after his arrival in Tomis this is a hardship on which he dwells insistently.

Tomis! Outlandish name! With what bitterness the storm-tossed poet speaks of "the Tomitans, situate in some corner of the world"! We cannot expect from a poet, much less from an exiled poet, an adequate description of the town. It was his interest to paint a gloomy picture. And yet if we allow for his exaggeration of the hardships there are details enough with which to form a fairly good conception of the poet's hostelry of calamity.

Tomis (the modern Constantza) lay on an elevated and rocky part of the coast, about sixty-five miles south-west of the nearest mouth of the Danube, in that part of Roumania now called the Dobrudja. The townspeople were a mixed crowd of half-breed Greeks and full-blooded barbarians. The latter were in the majority and were chiefly of Getic, hence Indo-European, stock. They dressed in skins, wore their hair and beards long, and went about armed. They were fine horsemen and experts with the bow. Apart from trade the chief occupation of the region was grazing, for border warfare made agriculture difficult. It was a rude community. Latin was almost never heard and the people spoke some hybrid Greek, but Getic and Sarmatian were so much in use that Ovid was forced to learn these languages. He even wrote a poem in Getic.

The coastal region is often called by Ovid "Pontus" after the Pontus Euxinus, the modern Black Sea, which washed its shores. Sometimes he speaks of it as Pontus Laevus or Sinister, "Pontus-on-the-Left" (as one enters the Black Sea), to distinguish it from the kingdom of Pontus in Asia Minor, but at times these epithets seem to mean "ill-omened." Tomis itself was an ancient colony of Miletus and was in ancient as in modern times an important port. Because of the silt in the outlets of the Danube much freight passed to and from the river, in ancient times, by way of Tomis. The country about the town is in general flat and treeless, often marshy. Ovid often speaks of this and also of the bad water which, together with the rough fare, may have caused the frequent illnesses which he mentions. He suffered from indigestion, fever, insomnia, "an aching side." He dwells on the extreme cold. Snow lies all winter, the Danube and the sea are frozen hard, even wine freezes in the jar and is served in pieces! The hair of the barbarians "tinkles with ice." This picture, as modern evidence proves, is not overdrawn. Although the latitude of Tomis is about the same as that of Florence, the winters are very severe. The temperature in the flat country sinks at times to 20° or even 30° below zero (Fahrenheit), and the Danube is sometimes icebound for three months. Violent winds, as Ovid also observed, are prevalent.

Since Tomis was a border town it was subject to raids by the wild tribes from across the Danube, and this constant peril was in Ovid's eyes one of his worst misfortunes. The shepherds wore helmets as they tended their flocks. When the barbarians swooped down they destroyed or carried away everything that could not be brought within the walls. Poisoned arrows fell thickly within the town and even the elderly poet was called upon to aid in the defence. We are reminded of the tales of colonial America and the warfare of the settlers against the savages.

Such is the picture that Ovid paints. No wonder that he regarded Tomis as “the worst element in his cruel lot,” for it would be difficult to conceive of a place more distasteful to a man of his type. And yet even in his account there are some bright spots. The people were rough but they were kind to him. They realized how hard it was for such a man to live a virtual prisoner among them. They honoured him by a decree exempting him from taxation and they listened sympathetically when he told them of his appeals to be restored to his native land. For all this the poet was grateful, and when his wild hosts became aware of his attacks upon their land and showed their indignation, he was almost in despair. They could hardly be expected to accept the distinction that he made between his gratitude to them and his detestation of their country.

There was nothing of Roman sternness about Ovid. Physically he was not strong and, even if the portrait which he draws of himself in exile — his emaciation, his pallor and whitening hair, his frequent illnesses — is exaggerated, it is clear that he was not one who cared for the strenuous life. His tastes were all against it. He did not care for exercises in arms, though he professes that he had to don a helmet to aid in the defence of Tomis. Archery, the favourite sport of the barbarians, had no attractions for him. In fact the only form of outdoor occupation that he cared for was gardening. This he had practised in Italy and he would have liked to continue it at Tomis if such a thing had been possible. He liked the ordinary inactive amusements, dice-playing, etc., as little as he did physical exercises. “Games,” he said, “are wont to waste that precious thing, our time!”

He was abstemious. Eating and drinking as mere pleasures did not appeal to him; “You know,” he writes to Flaccus, “that water is almost my only drink.” In his younger days his heart had not been impregnable to Cupid’s darts, although he asserts that no scandal had ever been attached to his name, but advancing years and the sorrows of exile had removed this susceptibility.

There was little of the philosopher or the scientist in Ovid and nothing at all of the explorer. What a chance he had during his long residence at Tomis to study the geography and ethnology of that almost unknown region! What a chance for excursions into the wild country and among tribes still wilder! Probably such excursions would not have been contrary to the decree of relegatio. But he was not a Varro or a Pliny, and his only attempt at science (aside from his effort to explain the freezing of the Pontus) seems to have been his Haliutica, a disquisition, of which only a fragment remains, on the fishes and animals of the Pontus. Nowhere in all his verses is there an adequate description of the many interesting barbarian tribes with which he became so familiar. Such details as he gives are almost always part of his effort to paint his lot in the darkest colours.

But we cannot reproach him for the lack of qualities which he did not possess. His interests were in that humanity whose life centred in the great metropolis. His feeling was that of Catullus, "that is my settled abode, there do I pluck the blooms of life," or of Cicero, "I am gripped by a marvellous love of the city." But unlike his two great predecessors he was forced to doubt whether he was ever to behold that loved city again. No wonder that the longing to return became with him an obsession, no wonder that to a man of his tastes Tomis was the hardest element in his fate.

A few congenial companions would have greatly lightened the tedium of his exile. He had been a brilliant declaimer and undoubtedly an equally brilliant conversationalist. If there had only been some friend with whom he could have whiled away the lagging hours in those endless talks which he recalls so pleasantly! But he was forced to talk with his friends by letter and in imagination. Cut off thus from his friends and from everything that he held dear, unable to find or to create for himself any real interest in his surroundings, he found his chief solace in writing. Poetry had ruined him, but he could not lightly abandon his very nature and the practice of a lifetime. He was a born poet and he felt an irresistible impulse to write. Poetic composition not only comforted him and hastened the dragging hours, but although it had injured him he had hoped that, perhaps, like Telephus of old, he would be healed by the very weapon that had wrought him harm; he sought no fame, but poetry was the best means in his power of making a personal effort in his own behalf. Therefore he wrote, and the verse of this period, apart from its references to others, throws interesting lights upon his own work and his own methods.

Ovid was a very careful artist, severe in selfcriticism, although he was a generous critic of others. Occasionally he speaks of hurried composition, but his habit was quite the opposite. He toiled over his work, and his verse smells of the lamp. Before his exile he had followed the practice, common at the time, of reading his poetry to discerning friends in order to profit by their advice, and to revise it carefully before publication. In Tomis he complains that there was nobody to whom he could read it; he had to be his own critic, and he shrank from the task of revision. Moreover, all the conditions favourable for good work were lacking — an untroubled mind, peaceful surroundings, abundant books, the stimulus of an audience (P. iv. 2. 29 ff.). He has so little opportunity to speak Latin that he fears lest barbarisms creep into his work. His talent is broken and the stream of his inspiration is dried up. He recognizes the faults of his work and admits that it is poor stuff, not better than his lot. Again and again he asks indulgence for it.

Poetry written by such a man amid such surroundings was inevitably monotonous and aroused criticism. The almost unvarying sadness of its tone, the constant repetition of the same appeal were criticized. He admits the charge; his poetry is conditioned by his lot and by his purpose, and he regards possible advantage to himself as preferable to fame; if he could be restored to his home he would be gay as of old, though he would never again attempt wanton verse.

And yet, although his work of necessity fell short of his ideals, he was conscious that it was good enough to be read, for the host of readers of which he boasts must have included many who were not interested solely in the work of his happier years. His great reputation also must have interested many in the poetry of a fallen idol, even if from mere curiosity to discover how that idol comported himself in exile. He affirms, moreover, that to be named in his verse was to receive fame. This affirmation was not mere convention, nor was it entirely for the purpose of propaganda that he published these poems. He believed that they were worth publishing. And he was right. They are too pervasively gloomy, although the reader will find not a few exceptions to the rule, and their purpose is too obviously pressed. Nevertheless as human documents they possess great interest in spite of the author's weakness and slavish fawning.

Their chief interest, however, lies in their art. Ovid possessed remarkable powers over language: he was a great phrase-maker. He was also one of the greatest of metricians. These are high qualities, and in the poems from exile they are scarcely impaired at all, in spite of the fact that here as elsewhere in Ovid they often degenerate into mere juggling with words. But when the poet is at his best there is the old skill in the use of a remarkably simple vocabulary, the old simplicity of structure, the same limpid clearness and skilful arrangement, the same sweetness and melody in the verse. No translation can hope to render all this. It cannot be separated from the Latin. But the translator can at least use simple English; he can try to be clear and to hint at the beauties of the order. He can do little else. Ovid destroyed much that he wrote, he tells us, and the Tristia and Epistulae ex Ponto are the cream of his years of exile. Considering the fact that they represent eight or nine years of work their bulk is not great. Because of the monotony of their content and tone and the almost constant obtrusion of mere rhetorical trickery they will never be popular, and yet they contain much that is admirable. To those who can be patient with Ovid, who like good writing for its own sake, the poems from exile will always make a strong appeal.
